We have also to take into account the greatness of the kingdoms arising upon the fall of Rome, and, in some senses, exhibiting a continuation of her political life. The transient Empires of Charlemagne, Otho the Great, Henry IV., Rodolph of Hapsburg, of the Saracens, and Napoleon, are in evidence, together with the more permanent kingdoms which have followed them, and continue to the present time. And we have also to remember one of the greatest and over-shadowing events of all history, namely the destruction of Jerusalem and

THE DISPERSION OF THE JEWISH RACE.

Now, it is manifest that in the promise given by our Lord to the apostles, that the Holy Spirit should "show them things to come," we have the assurance that events of so colossal a character affecting His Church must have appeared in their prophetic vision of "things to come." Speaking by the Spirit, when portraying dynastic changes in Egypt, the prophet Ezekiel uses these words (Ezek. xxxii. 7) in regard to the fall of Pharaoh:

"When I put thee out, I will cover the heaven and make the stars thereof dark. I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light."

Again, in Isaiah's vision of the overthrow of Babylon by the Medes (xiii. 9):

"The day of the Lord cometh, cruel with wrath and fierce anger; the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light, the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine."

Again, Hosea representing the invasion of Shalmanezer upon Israel (x. 8).

"They shall say to the mountains, Cover us, and to the hills, Fall on us."

If these prophetic representations have been used by the Spirit of God in the case of events of such comparatively moderate dimensions, what manner of language becomes appropriate to events of much vaster magnitude, as the dynastic changes which destroyed the Pagan Empire of Rome, and finally the Empire itself, as she beheld "her glories, star by star expire." Gibbon writes: "The ruin of the Pagan religion is described by the sophists as a dreadful and amazing prodigy, which covered the earth with darkness and restored the ancient dominion of chaos and of night."

We have, therefore, the very highest warranty, namely, that of the Word of God itself, for the appropriateness of the language of the Book of Revelation in depicting decisive occurrences in national histories, and the stupendous events through which the Church of God has continued her testimony and her warfare since the close of the canon of Scripture.

To the uninstructed, the superficial observer, or the prejudiced inquirer, the prophetic representation may seem to have no adequate fulfilment in the history of the Church; but when the Bible makes it manifest that it is using the language of Oriental and hieroglyphic imagery, of which it gives us the clearest and most manifest illustrations, it is our duty humbly to accept its instructions, and to follow the interpretations supplied by Scripture itself.

We may all be "Futurists," in regard to the most interesting portions of the Book of Revelation, which have yet to be fulfilled; and in allowing it to be possible that one greater than all in profanity, and in all deceivableness of unrighteousness, may yet arise in the line of anti-Christ. And we should all be of the "Historicist School," in regard to the long eras through which the Church has been passing; being very sure that God has not left Himself without witness regarding the most stupendous events of all history.

Almost all schools of prophetic research must surely agree in taking the periods given us by Daniel—namely, 2300, 1260, 1290, 1335, to be year-periods under the symbolism of days; and they will agree also in regarding these periods as having so run their course as to have arrived at an era when they are beginning to be fulfilled. The prophet having given us the numbers 2300, and seven weeks and threescore and two weeks, in year-day periods, we must be right in believing the other numbers to have the same signification.

CRITICAL TIMES FOR THE PAPACY.

The Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh* has, in common with others, recorded the interesting fact that Fleming, so long ago as 1701, pointed forward to the years 1794 and 1848 as critical periods in the downfall of the Papacy. Others long since indicated 1866-70 as a terminus of Papal dominion. These dates were arrived at by adding the "time, times and a half," of Revelation (or 1,260 years) to important dates in the foundation of the Papacy, and all these dates thus forecast from Revelation were critical times in the history of the Papacy. This was so with the "Reign of Terror in 1794, which led to the suspension of Roman Catholicism in France, to the temporary overthrow of the Papal Government in Italy, and the captivity of the Pope."

1848 saw another violent revolution, the prelude to great events, initiated by the battle of Sadowa in 1866, and completed through the battle of Sedan in 1870, and the fall of the Papal temporal power.

SO WITH MOHAMMEDANISM.

Similarly, in regard to Islamism, the 1260 day-years from the Hegira era brought the history of Mohammedanism to 1844-5 as a critical time in the lapse of the independence of the Ottoman Empire. Dr. Grattan Guinness, writing in 1887 of the Moslem power, says:—"The remaining solar termination is still ten years distant, 1897. What is it likely to witness? Some more final and fatal fall of Ottoman power? or some more distinct stage of Jewish restoration? or both? Time will declare."†

The year 1897 came and went, and we have seen that in that year there was a further fall in Ottoman power by the fall of Crete, and that in the same year the Zionist movement was founded, and has developed immensely, for the expressed object of the restoration of the Jewish people to their own land. We may, therefore, read with much interest the following words of this now aged prophetic student, when he says: "The Word of God leaves no room for doubt that we are living in the last days of this dispensation, and have well nigh reached the close of the existing state of things. It leaves no room to doubt that a change—a change greater than any the world has ever seen—is impending."

Now, of this we have the most confident expectation; and among other important and interesting elements in the approaching changes to which we are hastening, I have been much impressed with the following. Seldom have I the privilege of attending the May missionary meetings, being otherwise engaged at this season. However, this year's gatherings gave me the opportunity, and it so happened that I heard three returned missionaries, who knew well the Moslem peoples of Western Asia and Eastern Europe. All these bore witness to the important fact, that if the dominion of the Turk were destroyed, one-half of the Moslem population in these lands would turn from Mohammed to Christ.

Is it not our duty then to pray that God may bring to an end this dreadful apostasy, which for over twelve centuries has rioted in murderous rapine, pillage, robbery, unspeakable outrage and unthinkable cruelty? Like Daniel, we "see by the books" that the time is fulfilled; let us also, like him, be urgent in prayer for God to accomplish that which He has so clearly promised. How much is contingent upon prayer! "Pray," said our Lord, "that your flight be not in the winter," that is from Jerusalem. No doubt they did pray, because, as a matter of history, the flight of the Christians from the desolations of Jerusalem and Judea was not in the winter.

Among other mighty changes will be the repopulating and resettling of these rich lands, rivalling in beauty and glory all the countries of the earth. The air of these sweet Syrian lands is so perfect that as Warburton has said, "To live is to be happy." Their fertility is unapproached. The Romans were charmed with their beauty and the rich productiveness of the soil. They occupied their cities, added their own temples, theatres, and houses. To-day the ruined column, Roman arch, temple, and theatre proclaim their high appreciation of these good lands. And it is not too much to say that the Transvaal and Orange Free State, upon which we are now spending millions, and to which so many are hurrying, possess only a fraction of the fertility of these Syrian lands.

The days are upon us when emigration will turn its tide and flow Eastward, with the Jew in the van, for "the Lord shall set His hand the second time to recover the remnant of His people . . . and assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."

Beginnings.

I.

Begin with Christ. Be this our life-long motto:
The truth which breathes the Spirit's earliest breath,
Which quells our mightiest foes in life's great battle,
And shouts eternal victory in death.

Begin with Christ: all earthly light transcending—
Electric flash, or flaming star, or sun;
The light that makes high noon at darkest midnight—
God manifest; the light that still shines on.

Begin with Christ. Though night and chaos wrap us,
Still God is present, brooding o'er the flood,
To bring forth life and to reveal His glory;
Now, as it was in the beginning, God.

Begin with Christ. To break sin's deadly fetters
Defies all man can work, or plan, or feel;
The tiniest bond of Satan is too mighty;
His silken threads are strong as chains of steel.

Begin with Christ. O let us in His freedom
Rise like the lark and sing at heaven's door!
Himself alone Life-giver, Ransom, Title,
At our new birth, and now, and evermore.

II.

Begin with Christ. Speak first with Him each morning;
Let Him the rose leaves of your heart unroll;
Inhale the freshest fragrance of your spirit,
And drink the earliest dewdrops of the soul.

Begin with Christ, what time most sorely smitten;
He waits to save, when other hopes lie dead,
His heart and hand remaining true and tender
As when they blessed you first—as when they bled.

Begin with Christ, when baffled and despairing
To lead a brother from the night of sin;
Preach Christ the Light, Redeemer, All-sufficient;
Preach Christ to him, and let him there begin.

Begin with Christ. Ah! would we purge the churches
Of breathless forms—the idols worshipped still—
First we must cleanse ourselves! Then He will lead us
In paths we had not planned, to work His will.

Begin with Christ. Though we stood all day idle,
At eve He calls, we come at His request;
And now—Oh, grace of God, so vast!—He takes us,
At the last hour, and treats us as His best.

Friend and Philanthropist.

Mr. JOSEPH STORRS FRY.

AN honoured and prominent place among the citizens of Bristol is occupied by Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry, who was born in 1826, in a house in Union Street forming part of the premises occupied by the chocolate and cocoa manufactory of J. S. Fry and Sons, Limited—a firm with a world-wide reputation, and then a century old. Mr. Fry is brother to the Right Hon. Sir Edward (formerly Lord Justice) Fry, and the Right Hon. Lewis Fry, formerly member of Parliament for the city.

Mr. Fry belongs to a worthy and long-lived family, and like his ancestors, is a member of the Society of Friends. His commercial interests have all his life been bound up with those of the great cocoa industry, which, during his time of association with it, have assumed colossal proportions. To the success of this enterprise, his sound judgment, business capacity, and devoted attention have unquestionably contributed.

Though well advanced in years, nine o'clock in the morning usually finds him at business, at which hour the workpeople—with whom his relations are of the happiest character, as is evidenced by the framed addresses presented to him at various times, and which hang in the offices — gather in nine different rooms for a devotional service which lasts about twenty minutes. At the largest of these gatherings, in a handsome and lofty hall seating 1,500, Mr. Fry usually presides. The plans for the enormous new factory now in course of erection include a still larger reading-room, to hold about 2,000. As a business man, Mr. Fry is remarkable for his combination of breadth of view with painstaking attention to the minutest detail, great questions being treated with calmness and courage, while the smallest matters are not overlooked.

It is, however, as a Christian philanthropist that Mr. Fry is most widely known. A society having for its aim and object the helping forward in any way of the Kingdom of Christ is sure to find a friend in him. For the past twenty-five years he has been president of the Bristol Y.M.C.A., and during the recent jubilee gatherings his wise words made a profound impression on the delegates and other visitors who had gathered for the Conference. "What a noble spirit your president has!" was the remark of one who sat near Mr. Fry, when he presided at the great Colston Hall meeting. It was his generosity, too, that made possible the erection of a splendidly-equipped branch Y.M.C.A. in the Totterdown suburb of Bristol.

Besides being president of the Bristol Temperance Society and of the Bristol City Mission, Mr. Fry is in some way or other identified with nearly all the benevolent and philanthropic work of the city and neighbourhood. His intense sympathy for the sick and suffering is manifested in the interest he takes in the work of the Bristol General Hospital. He recently undertook the position of chairman of the Board of Directors, and he has not only initiated many schemes for the improvement of the institution, but has helped them forward in a most generous manner. The Convalescent Home on Durdham Downs, which was opened by the late Queen Victoria, has had in Mr. Fry a true and constant friend from its commencement, one noble gift amounting to £10,000.

Living in a truly simple manner, as a bachelor, at Clifton, facing the lovely Downs, those who are privileged to see Mr. Fry within his own home are impressed with the beautiful spirit manifested there—kindness of heart, and thoughtfulness as to the welfare of others, being a noteworthy feature of his life.

The clergy and ministers of all denominations find in him a wise and good friend. As a speaker at Sunday-school anniversaries, Mr. Fry is in great request. Occasionally, he has occupied the pulpit at one or two Nonconformist chapels. He is usually to be found on Sunday morning and evening attending worship with the Society of Friends in the centre of Bristol, the members of which regard him as one of their foremost supporters. His gifts, especially to the Friends' Foreign Missionary Association, of which he is treasurer, are exceedingly liberal.

Many are the prayers offered that God may long continue to preserve such a noble life to the city of Bristol. The late Rev. Urijah R. Thomas, who knew Mr. Fry so well, fitly described him as "an ideal citizen."

Bible Banners.

Lift up Thy Royal Banner,
Dear Saviour, over me,
There is no other like it,
In earth or sky or sea,
It is a Blood-stained Banner
Emblazonèd with Love,
Oh, keep it floating o'er me
Until I rest above.
(Song of Sol. ii. 4.)

A Banner Thou has given
To them that fear Thy name,
"The Truth" inscribed upon it,
From heaven to earth it came.
Thou art the Truth, Lord Jesus,
May we the Truth display;
Unfurled in blessèd service
For Thee from day to day.
(Psa. lx. 4.)

O Lord, in Thy Salvation,
We will rejoice and sing,
And triumph ever onward
O'er every evil thing.
We will set up our Banners
In God's most holy name,
Our God—the God of Jacob,
Eternally the same.
(Psa. xx. 5, A.V. and R.V.)

Rome in Ireland.

THE Roman Catholic Archbishop of Tuam, who was a member of the recent Commission on University Education, recently delivered a lecture in Westport on "St. Patrick." Here are one or two extracts taken from the Irish Catholic:—

Patrick prayed against the demons which covered the mountain in the form of vast flocks of hideous black birds. He groaned in spirit, and bitter tears coursed down his cheeks; and still prayers and tears were in vain. Then he rang his bell loudly against the demons, and by its mysterious power they gave way and fled; and to complete their rout, he flung the blessed bell itself rolling down the mountain. From excessive ringing, it had a piece broken out of its edge, but the angel brought it back to Patrick. . . .

In the might of God, and by the power of God, Patrick drove off the demons from the Reek and from the West, let us hope, for ever. He was victorious, but worn out after the long conflict, and the angel suggested that he might now leave the sacred hill and return to Aughagower to celebrate Easter; and to console Patrick, the whole mountain summit was filled with beautiful white birds, which sang most melodious strains, and the voices of the mountain and the sea were mingled with their melody. So the Reek became, as it were, for a time, the paradise of God, and gave the saint a foretaste of the joys of heaven.

Such is the spiritual food supplied to our Roman Catholic people. Poor Ireland! While her papers are full of political strife, and superstitious nonsense about saints and priests, they are silent as to the Saviour and His message of love to poor sinners. "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land. The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and My people love to have it so; and what will ye do in the end thereof?"

Yet another instance of clerical influence in secular affairs is furnished by Mr. Frank Hugh O'Donnell, M.A., in his book on "The Ruin of Irish Education." Mr. O'Donnell is a Roman Catholic, but opposed to a "priests' university." At page 127 he tells us that the Poor Law Guardians of Glenties Union, co. Donegal, wanted a master for the workhouse. The district is an Irish-speaking one, and an Irish-speaking applicant was decided upon. This should have got clerical sanction, as the Roman priesthood are everywhere advocating the revival of the Irish tongue. But no. A nephew of the bishop of the diocese was a candidate running, so the Irish speaker had to give way.

THE IRISH UNIVERSITY QUESTION.

Writing in opposition to the proposed University Conference, in the Irish Times, October 1, Mr. McCarthy, author of "Priests and People," &c., says, among other things: "We Catholics are pampering a sacerdotal monster, which is eating our vitals away. Ecclesiasticism has devoured all the education of Catholic Ireland. Ecclesiasticism has built up and maintained a Maynooth for its own progeny, with Government funds to a certain extent, but to a larger extent with the subscriptions of our deceived people. The pecuniary interests of the Catholic ecclesiastics have always been the insuperable bar to friendship between all Christians in Ireland. It is the Maynooth system of education, a black discipline of narrow bigotry, that the priests want established in the new university." (It must be remembered that Mr. McCarthy is himself a Roman Catholic.)

Lord Erne, one of the suggested members for the University Conference, has refused to touch the matter. As Grand Master of the Orange body his decision will be far-reaching. "The Irish University Question," he writes, "is one in which, to my mind, there can be neither compromise nor concession. The Roman Catholic hierarchy claim, practically, absolute control over the education of the rising generation, and ask for State aid to enable them to carry out their purpose."

South London's Needs.

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

ANOTHER of the great mission enterprises which are being inaugurated by Wesleyan Methodists in the Metropolis and provinces was floated at Deptford on Thursday, when the splendid pile of buildings to be known as Victoria Hall was opened and dedicated. From far and near Methodists rallied in large contingents, and the occasion was full of inspiration to all who recognise the unique service which these centres are rendering to the cause of Christianity in the evangelization of the masses.

At different stages in the proceedings of the day, Rev. Jabez Ingram (treasurer) reported the progress of the Building Fund. For the premises to be opened free of debt, over £2,000 was required to be raised on Thursday; after the luncheon, less than £700 was needed, and before the evening gathering dispersed the announcement was made, to the joy and satisfaction of the great company present, that the whole amount, £27,317 16s., had been raised.

Methodism in Deptford dates back to the time of John Wesley, and in his diary under date of September 27, 1739, is to be found the record of a visit to the place. For many years the Methodist Chapel was known as Mary Ann Buildings. It was in a back street, and its scope was exceedingly limited. A plot of ground was eventually purchased in the High Street, and the old chapel was sold to the Salvation Army. At the time, a small hall was all that could be built at the back of this plot of ground. Here the work of the church has been carried on until now, and it is here in this congregation of some 250 that the workers for the new enterprise have been found. A clearance of slum dwellings by the London County Council left a site which was at once seen to be far more suitable than the plot of ground in High Street. Negotiations with the Council resulted in the land being purchased for the erection of the Victoria Hall, Rev. J. Gregory Mantle being in charge of the work, for which his experience admirably qualifies him.

The splendid block of premises stand at the junction of five important thoroughfares. A wide and lofty entrance leads to the vestibule, thence to the Great Hall, with its accommodation for 2,000. On the right of the porch, swing doors directly into the lecture hall or Sunday-school, which will seat 500 adults; on the left, other doors lead to class-rooms, Mr. Mantle's vestry, and a staircase to the gallery of the great hall and to further class-rooms, of which there are no fewer than seventeen. The Great Hall itself is a compact structure of octagonal shape, with decorations of a quiet order, and is so arranged that every hearer, apart from the choir and orchestra at the rear of the rostrum, has full view of the preacher.

Passing out from the main gallery door, the infants' schoolroom is seen on the left. The class-rooms will be used for the old-time "class" meetings, boys' and girls' clubs, and for the special benefit of working men and women. One of the best rooms is fitted up as a cosy drawing-room for young people, for whom so many snares abound in the district. At Brighton Mr. Mantle held a meeting weekly in his study for young men, which had an average attendance of sixty, all of whom had been brought to it from his theatre services. This success has been repeated at Deptford, where Mr. Mantle has conducted crowded services at the Broadway Theatre.

REACHING THE WORKING MEN.

Chief among the efforts to reach working men in the district will be the "brotherhood" to meet in the hall on Sunday afternoons, and the superintendent is looking for a fruitful field of work in this direction, intent as he is on reaching the 800 men for whom the County Council has provided accommodation in a block of buildings near by. From time to time, in addition to the ordinary services of the Sabbath, it is proposed to hold late evening services, the novelty of which it is believed will attract those who are tired of parading up and down the thoroughfare, and who cannot be persuaded to enter a chapel at the usual hour of worship. Agencies of a philanthropic nature are also being promoted, and no energy will be spared in the endeavour to cause the influence of the Victoria Hall to permeate the entire locality. Mr. Mantle and his band of helpers are assured that it is the will of the Lord for their work to be the means by which the Holy Spirit of God shall turn many from the paths of iniquity into the ways of righteousness and peace. Hence the enthusiasm with which the movement was inaugurated at

THE OPENING CEREMONY.

Punctually at eleven o'clock a hymn was announced, and the large crowd that had gathered in the street joined fervently in the singing petition:—

> O Father, deign these walls to bless,
> Fill with Thy love their emptiness;
> And let this door a gate-way be
> To lead us from ourselves to Thee.

After prayer had been offered by Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, the doors were opened by Mr. Walford Davis Green, M.P., on behalf of Mrs. Walford Green. A dedicatory service in the Great Hall followed, conducted by Rev. Jabez Ingram (chairman of the district). There were no addresses at this stage, but the time was spent in prayer and praise. The supplications and thanksgivings of the congregation were voiced by Mr. James E. Vanner, Revs. Isaiah Parker, Wm. Middleton, and others. Each and all of the prayers were charged with breathings of heartfelt gratitude to God for the wonderful way in which He had owned and honoured the faith of His people in this undertaking.

THE TRUE WORK OF THE CHURCH.

By noon the Great Hall was nearly filled for the service conducted by Dr. Campbell Morgan, who preached a sermon singularly fitting to the occasion. Taking as his subject 1 Cor. xv. 39, he gave a lucid and impressive exposition of what the Apostle Paul enjoined when he wrote "Therefore my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, inasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord." Mr. Morgan commenced by setting the text in its relation to the context, and showed how the "Therefore" went back to the first chapter of the Epistle, and brings into the embrace of this one verse all that is set forth in the intervening chapters—the unifying law of the Spirit, the unfailing law of love, and the triumph of the Resurrection.

Passing on to the consideration of what the Apostle meant, the speaker affirmed that in this word he does not enjoin us to think out any new plan, or attempt to copy the spirit of any age. His word is "Be . . . in the work of the Lord." The work of the Church is the work of the Lord. What is that work? To seek and to save that which is lost. We cut the nerve of Christian service when we forget that it is the work of the Church to seek and save the lost; and when the Church ceases to be the instrument through which Christ accomplishes His work, she fails. Using Luke xv. as an illustration of the function of Christ as the Saviour of men, the work of the Holy Spirit searching through the Church, and the Father's welcome and reward, Dr. Morgan impressed upon his hearers the necessity of sharing in the sufferings of Christ, if any part is to be had in the joy of the Father. It is at the point of sacrifice that men and women are won. It is not till virtue passes out of us that victory passes into another soul. Fellowship with His triumph must be preceded by fellowship in His suffering.

CIVIC RECOGNITION.

Mr. Walford Davis Green, M.P., presided over the luncheon, which was held in the Lecture Hall. On behalf of the borough, the Mayor of Deptford welcomed this noble venture on the part of the Wesleyan Methodist Church. He considered it to be the duty of a municipality to hold out a helping hand to those who take upon themselves the burden of training of character, and the redemption of those who had gone astray. He was glad to associate himself with a work which he believed would become one of the brightest ornaments in the life of Deptford.

The Chairman made touching reference to the close interest with which the erection of the Victoria Hall was followed by his late father (Dr. Walford Green), who had determined that this should not be a small scheme, but should be in some measure commensurate with the needs of the district. He (the chairman) was glad that the plan followed was on this scale, and rejoiced that Mr. Mantle was in charge of the movement, for they were confident that the true Evangel only would be preached in the hall by the superintendent. Moreover, Mr. Mantle was well fitted for his position in other respects. He was a man of sanctified audacity, and is never overcome by modesty when facing difficulties.

Mr. James E. Vanner recalled his early associations with Deptford and the small beginnings of the work. Referring to the prayerful spirit in which all their plans had been devised and developed, he said: "If it had not been for praying men and women we should have been landed in failure." A few words were added by Dr. Campbell Morgan, Mr. T. A. Denny, and Rev. Isaiah Parker.

The Bible-reading in the afternoon by Rev. Thomas Champness was

A HOMELY AND HELPFUL SERVICE.

The beloved veteran evangelist related the account of Jonathan, unknown to his father, smiting the Philistines' garrison (1 Sam xiii., xiv.), and applied the lessons of heroism and faith in the unfailing promise of God, in a manner that captivated and heartened the workers. He pointed out the danger of all the heroes disappearing from our midst, and denounced the spirit of ease and complacency which has made its way into the hearts and lives of so many Christians, who seem possessed of a great fear lest their names appear in the obituary column!

As the day advanced, the number of visitors increased, and ultimately every part was thronged with friends and well-wishers from all parts of the Metropolis. So great, indeed, was the assembly in the evening that not only was the Great Hall crowded, but the Lecture Hall, in which an overflow meeting had been arranged, was also filled to the doors. The principal speakers—Revs. Dr. Campbell Morgan, Thomas Champness, and F. Luke Wiseman—addressed both audiences. In the Great Hall, Mr. James E. Vanner made a sympathetic chairman. He referred to the wide scope of ministry before the Mission. Men and women will come to this hall with burdened hearts, and hear the message of God's love; those with the burden of sin will hear the Gospel of restoration and forgiveness. When he thought of all the possibilities of their work his heart was overjoyed.

In the course of his address, Rev. J. Gregory Mantle said he and his colleagues were confidently expecting that every Sunday in the hall the shout of triumph will be heard, the result of sinners finding release from the fetters which have bound them. "We have some 172 public-houses in our district, and every Saturday evening we intend making a tremendous onslaught on the drink traffic." As soon as possible it is intended to provide a counter-attraction to the public-house by erecting an institute for the use of working-men.

Rev. F. Luke Wiseman (of the Birmingham Mission) followed with a breezy and happy discourse. He denied a statement made by Cotter Morrison that Christianity only has a message for high-toned men and women. Christianity goes to the very bottom, to men without moral sense, because its Author came to seek and save the lost. He paid a tribute to Mr. Mantle's sound Evangelical preaching, and trusted the same blessing that had attended his ministry in other places would be seen in even fuller measure in his present sphere.

Rev. Thos. Champness added words of cheer and encouragement to the workers, exhorting them to remember that whoever fails them, God remains. The last speaker was Dr. Campbell Morgan, whose weighty and impressive words brought to a close a day that will be memorable in the annals of Deptford Methodism.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, October 25. Proverbs x.

IT is almost impossible to discover the connecting thought of any one of these chapters. These sententious pearl-like maxims seem to be noted down without the link which, in our modern literature, would be necessary to string them together. It would be an instructive exercise to set down under certain comprehensive headings all the scattered maxims from all parts of the Book which properly belong to them.

Wealth. You may get money by fraud, but it will not profit; whereas, for those that serve Him, God will secure a port of refuge in the hour of storm (2). This is still further explained in the following verse (3). And the contrast between the hands of listless labour and of the diligent fitly closes the triplet. The defence afforded by wealth, the inability of the poor to ward off the blows of misfortune (15), the enrichment caused by the blessing of the Lord (22), still further work out the thought, that wealth may be legitimately sought for and used by the good man; but he must not count it as his best or highest asset.

Home Nurture. How necessary that parents should rightly discharge their duties that they may win the precious reward of "a wise son" (1, 5).

Irreproachable Goodness. Blessings crown the head of the just (6); his memory is blessed (5); he will receive instruction with all humility (8); his steps will be sure (9); his speech is like a living fountain in a thirsty land and as choice silver (11, 20, 30, 31); his love covers sins with the mantle of forgiveness (12); he lays up knowledge (14); his labour tends to life (16); he refrains his lips (19); his desire will be granted (24); he will be based on eternal foundations (25): his days will be long, his hope will be gladness, he will be hidden in God's stronghold, and shall never be removed (27-30).

MONDAY, October 26. Proverbs xi.

The Proverbs repeat in all kinds of lights the great truth, that wickedness is always, in the long run, a mistake, a source of perpetual weakness and insecurity, and certain to end at last in ruin and death; while righteousness is in itself a perpetual blessing, even apart from any material benefits it may bring in its train.

Wickedness.—Transgressors are destroyed by their perverseness (3, 5, 6, 27) in spite of all their wealth (4), their hopes deceive them (7), they come under the blow of trouble, with none to deliver (8), and no one pities (11). The effect of the speech of the wicked is highly pernicious (9, 11). Their work is treachery and deceit (18). Confederacies of wicked men cannot withstand the day of wrath (21). All their days they live in fear of the punishment which they know they deserve (23). Their ultimate punishment is inevitable (31).

Goodness and Righteousness. How just (1)! How beautiful in lowly humility (2)! How safe (4, 6, 8, 9, 21)! How universally beloved (10)! How safe to trust (13)! When they adorn a woman, how honourable and honoured she is (16)! When they adorn a man, how merciful, how peaceful and blessed (17)! How dear to God (18)! The righteous flourish as a branch (28), and the fruit of their life is sweet and wholesome eating for young and old (30).

Generosity. The law of Nature, indeed of all life around us, is not merely to receive, but to give out.

"Heaven doth with us as we with torches do,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not."

Therefore the Proverbs are always exhorting to liberality, and we must ponder well that group of three verses which enshrine the perpetual law of the blessed life, which is blessed because it lives to bless (24, 25, 26).

TUESDAY, October 27. Proverbs xii.

This may fairly be called the the chapter of the tongue. Notice "the words of the wicked" (6); the transgression of the lips (13); "the fruit of the mouth" (14); a fool's vexation is openly known (16); "he that uttereth truth" (17); he that speaketh rashly (18); the tongue of the wise (18); "the lip of truth" (19); "lying lips" (22); "the heart of fools proclaimeth foolishness" (23); "a good word maketh glad" (25). Speech is the vibration of the waves of air caused by tongue, teeth, and lips; but there is no greater power in human life. How fruitful a source of discord and quarrelling is the tongue! Words are often as sparks to wood, or coals to fire. What an awful licence there is given by the tongue of the wicked to lying. Then flattery, whispering, rashness, and the revealing of secrets, the perpetual leakage of the soul in gossip and unprofitable talk—all these are sins of the tongue. Set a watch, O God, on the door of our lips! But what blessing lies in the right use of speech! Gentleness turns away wrath, sympathy revives the drooping spirit, good wholesome words are as carbolic to microbes of corruption. We all have the power of scattering gold-coins by our kind and considerate speech to servants, children, and dependents. Go through this day scattering seeds of kindness, and speaking words which will be words in season to sustain those who are weary, in the power of the Holy Spirit, that speaketh in the soul.

WEDNESDAY, October 28. Proverbs xiii.

Beware of Pride. It cuts a man off from the salutary effects of reproof and good counsel (1). A great Florentine sculptor, at one time of his life, went to live at Padua, where he was loaded with approbation and honour; but he soon declared his intention of returning to Florence, because the sharp assaults and cutting criticism which always assailed him there were more favourable to his art. Let us always hear what our critics say, for if we know that their criticism is not based on reason, we can but ignore it.

Pride also generates strife (10). Directly a man is inflated with self-satisfaction, he is exposed to bitter annoyance from anyone like Haman, who does not do him due reverence, or outshines him. Then come rivalries, heart-burnings, and strife. The haughty spirit is a curse to everyone, and specially to itself. It has been compared to an acid. It mars lives that might otherwise be useful, poisons the simplicity and freedom of friendship, and plunges rival nations into war.

It involves sorrow, poverty, and shame (14, 18). The consciousness of not being clever, and a diffidence in our own judgment, will make us thankful to learn from others and save us from the follies of artfulness; thus the humble will often distance their competitors, who were much more brilliant than they.

Beware also of talking too much and too freely (2, 3); of laziness (4); lying (5); of boasting your wealth (7); of fools and folly (16, 20); and of sparing the rod of correction (24).

Ask that the Holy Spirit may form within you the meekness, gentleness, and holiness of Jesus, that you may fulfil the positive side of these prohibitions; then naturally you will avoid all that is unworthy of the highest code of Christian morality.

THURSDAY, October 29. Proverbs xiv.

This chapter may be called the All Fools' chapter. In verses 1, 3, 7, 8, 9, 16, 18, 24, 29, 33 there are references to Fools and Folly.

The word, as used in this Book, stands for many traits of character. Sometimes it is used of the weak, ignorant, and sapless soul, which is always dwelling in fond and baseless hopes, sure that everything will turn out right, though taking no means to secure the desired result. Sometimes of the self-confident temper that eschews advice, and will have its own insensate way. Sometimes the morally gross and dense, whose perceptions are utterly blunted, so that he has no knowledge of God, no sense of the moral fitness and rightness of things; and of this character there is no model on the page of history like that of Nabal. Sometimes, also, it stands for consummate and determined wickedness. God keep us from having children who manifest any of these traits, and from manifesting them ourselves!

But note the contrasts of this chapter. The upright walk, the lip of wisdom, the favour of God (R.V. marg.), the inward satisfaction, the departure from evil, the respect which goodness extracts even from the wicked, the strong confidence in God, the tranquil heart (R.V. marg.), the hope that rises victorious over death. Who would not seek the wisdom that cometh from above, which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good works (James iii. 17)?

FRIDAY, October 30. Proverbs xv.

This is the chapter of passionate temper; it speaks of the grievous word that stirs up anger (1), of the perverseness that breaks the spirit (4), of the contention stirred up by wrath (18). However peaceful a family or community may be, it is remarkable how soon a conflagration will break out if a man of a quarrelsome and contentious spirit is introduced. The passionate man is often led to say and do things which, in his sober mind, he bitterly regrets. Let us keep clear of people of passionate dispositions, and give them a wide berth, asking the Lord to give us meek and quiet spirits, which act strongly and decisively on occasions when wrong is being perpetrated, but without the heat of selfish passion.

There are a number of gems in this chapter. The prayer of the upright giving delight to our Heavenly Father (8, 29); the righteous as objects of His love (9); the wisdom and helpfulness of having a heart at leisure from itself (13, 15); the preciousness of the fear of the Lord (16); the path of the righteous which presently becomes a highway for others (19); the value of a word in season (23); the pleasant words spoken by the pure (26, R.V. marg.); the wisdom of hearing reproof, and the value of humility (32, 33)—how valuable these suggestions are! May the Holy Spirit make them living realities!

SATURDAY, October 31. Proverbs xvi.

This chapter groups together a series of sayings in which the name of the Lord constantly occurs. See verses 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 20, 33. We must always make God the first thought of our mind, and the first love of our heart. However self-satisfied we may be with our ways, however convinced of our own goodness and integrity, we must ever bring our conduct and motives to Him, that He may search and winnow them. What a beautiful injunction it is to roll all our works on Him, committing them to Him who is willing to stoop to the care of the smallest anxiety or burden which we commit to Him!

Take God with you into your home, your store (11), your daily round and common task, the society in which you move, that words and works and ways may please Him. (Compare 2 and 7). Then the Lord will direct your steps (9).

Be lowly and humble (19), wise in heart and sweet in life; speak pleasant words, and rule your spirit in His fear and love. Above all, let the love and grace of Christ constrain you not to live to self but to Him. F. B. M.

Training of Sunday-School Teachers.—Rev. F. B. Meyer has arranged to set apart two hours every Saturday for the help of Sunday-school teachers. The scheme is being carried out under the auspices of the Sunday-School Union Teachers' Training College. From 5 to 5.45 a lecture will be given on Bible Study, Evidences, Ethics, or kindred topics, followed by half an hour's tea and social intercourse, which will be utilized for questions upon difficulties in teaching. From 6.15 to 7 Mr. Meyer will give an exposition of the current International Sunday-School Lesson. Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson gave the opening lecture on Bible Study on October 3. It is believed that many teachers living in the suburbs will gladly embrace this opportunity of better equipment in their work. The meetings are held in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, every Saturday until Christmas. Among the lecturers assisting Mr. Meyer are Professor John Adams, of London University, Rev. J. W. Ewing, Rev. F. W. Aveling, Mr. W. H. Groser, B.Sc., and Mr. Alfred Sir[illegible].

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

GLEANINGS FROM THE PAST AND THE PRESENT.

Splendid Work at Dundee.

AFTER the opening services reported in our last issue, the meetings at Dundee were crowned with success. At one of the morning meetings about two-thirds of the audience stood up to acknowledge that there was something wrong in their life that kept back the answer to their prayers. The noonday prayer meeting was a sight never to be forgotten, men and women sobbing on their knees before God. Prayer for the open-air meeting that the weather might be fair was most beautifully answered, the sun shining brightly for the hour. Between 1,500 and 2,000 of a crowd heard the Gospel preached, and those choruses and hymns sung which have such a wonderful power of clinging to the memory. It rained before and after, but there was sunshine without and within at the open-air gathering.

From the outset there were crowds in the afternoons. When Dr. Torrey spoke on "Soul Winning" a farmer had brought all his helpers, and was heard whispering to workers, "Pray for them, watch and speak to them."

At the meetings for business men in St. Andrew's U.F. Church the audiences grew day by day in interest and numbers. The subjects were handled with the grip of one who understood them. The arguments in their cumulative strength showed the rock foundation of the Christian faith. He called upon men to accept the authority of Jesus Christ, and if they were logical they must.

DANCERS WHO CHANGED THEIR PLANS.

At the evening gatherings the stairs and passages were completely full. The children had to be gathered together in another hall that every seat might be available for adults. Young men as they stood in the crowds that gathered in the passages whispered approval of the clear and powerful reasoning. When the call that was the goal in view throughout the whole discourse came, some who would not go out and confess Christ lingered between the persuasion of the Saviour and the spell of the Tempter. Some who said they were intending to go to a late dance after the meeting, seemed too deeply under conviction of sin to dance any that night.

As the days passed quite a number of young men of an intellectual type came out and decided for Christ. Whole families were being brought into the kingdom, in some cases all in one evening. From the very lowest dens men and women were brought. One house-factor went to his tenants and got fifteen of them out to the meeting. Young ladies, and even those not very able physically, are going through the streets inviting labourers, porters, and others to the meetings. One went to a place that few, under ordinary circumstances, would care to enter, and got a young man of the very lowest class to come to Kinnaird Hall. He did not decide, but came next night bringing six others with him.

On Sunday morning last week Dr. Torrey's subject was "Conditions of success in soul-winning," based upon Ps. cxxvi. 6. The words were rich in heavenly wisdom, born of the light of the Holy Spirit and earnest service that gave the knowledge of experience. The memory could not fail to grasp those axioms: You cannot lift anyone higher than you have been lifted yourself. The pastor never has his people rise higher than his own experience. The condition then is that you must be truly converted: that means you must put away all known sin. There must be absolute surrender to God. Again, there must be a resting entirely on the finished work of Christ for acceptance with God. There must be certainty of assurance of salvation, and compassionate love. "Jesus wept." Wisdom bristled throughout the whole address, and to it was joined a spirit of true compassion.

In Dundee drink is a terrible fact. In a certain strata of society a young woman who is an abstainer is quite the exception. Vice has destroyed the glory of womanhood, and even in those who are outwardly respectable there is much that those who do not know the facts would be astonished to find. "God save the young women of our city" is a prayer every true Christian will respond to with a fervent "Amen."

There was much power in the meeting. The subject of Dr. Torrey's address was: "A Hiding Place." Stories were told that went to the heart of a woman who, although in good social position, was yet the slave of drink and other sins, but with tenderness to the story of sin was added the story of Jesus, a hiding place for all who will seek Him. The Spirit was sending the thrusts at sin home, and souls were feeling it was evident to all the need of a Saviour.

BLESSING IN A BIBLE CLASS.

Many came out for Christ. God is working mightily. Mr. Stewart of the Y.M.C.A. was telling his Bible class that five young men of the class had confessed Christ at one of Dr. Torrey's meetings; and that a young man had come to him at the office, and said, "I want to decide for Christ." Another had sent a letter, saying, "I could not wait to tell you, and so send this letter to say I have decided for Christ."

The evening meeting was perhaps the largest meeting of men that has ever been in the Kinnaird Hall. The subject was, "Fools make a mock at sin," and with manly straightforwardness, social impurity, drink, and the other vices of men were dealt with. Many a one heard more plain truth than ever before.

AMONG FREETHINKERS.

A band of freethinkers were determined to do what they could to hinder, and stood mocking and jeering just outside the door; but their jests were drowned by the swelling voices of a crowd of men singing, "There's power in the blood," and other choruses. Even the way home was filled by little bands with song, so that windows were opened to see what was the matter.

On Tuesday evening a great number, specially of young men and women, came forward and professed; yet the anxious were vastly more numerous, and scattered all over the hall, but they were not prepared to say, "I take Jesus as my Saviour, Lord, and Master."

Wednesday was a blessed day. The requests at noon were various, and told the sorrow of many a home. "Pray for a brother who once professed to be a Christian," for "a wandering boy," for "a brother whose besetting sin is drink," "a young husband and wife who are the slaves of drink." In the afternoon little groups with beaming faces were everywhere talking of fresh light they had received and vows they had made. Jute merchants with their moments that meant money, and old, bent men, young men and housewives were all there, and happy.

The evening saw young men from the Technical Institute and other evening classes standing alongside cabmen and others; even the fourpenny nightly lodger was represented.

At noon on Thursday, Dr. Torrey read a letter from an Aberdeen sailor who had spent £50 (his all) in debauchery; and when penniless and without even decent clothing, he was met by a lady, helped and brought to the meeting, got converted, and had now given evidence of its worth by sending back the money he had received and these written words of grateful praise.

On Thursday evening the truth went home so that there were few faces that were unconcerned in their look. One working-man freethinker was there, but could not remain to argue as was his wont. He could only say as he passed a Christian worker he knew, "He has not told us where hell is." Just a little way off was a spiritualist who sat as if puzzled. About fifty came out to confess Christ. Many Christians who love the Bible are thankful for the manly utterance of God's servant.

A TERRIBLE CONFESSION.

On Friday evening Dr. Torrey startled the audience by pulling a letter from his pocket which he had received that day. The writer said, "I have committed two awful sins—murder and adultery; shall I confess and be hanged? I am willing to do anything to find peace with God." A sermon of Dr. Torrey on "The Judgment" had been read by this haunted one in a religious paper, and could not be got over.

About the close of his address the preacher said he was convinced that the Spirit of God was working in Dundee, and they would see the result before many days. The invitation was more spontaneously responded to than on any previous night; many came forward to acknowledge Christ. One missionary in the city had had three members of his family converted, and is overflowing with joy. The other night, while going home in the rain he saw a poor lad whose shoes were bad. He was about to offer him share of his umbrella, when he saw the lad change a card from one pocket to another to keep it dry. It was one of the decision cards from the mission. They talked of the Saviour, and then the lad told that he was an orphan, and had no clothes but what he wore. He is a sample of many who are coming to the meetings; there is a reaching of all classes such as is not common in Gospel services. Even staid Christians are becoming impulsive as they view the rising tide of blessing. God is truly in our midst in the spirit of power.

The Importance of Prayer.

By Dr. TORREY.

Our Lord was pre-eminently a Man of prayer. In Romans viii. 26 we have a passage which has made a deep impression upon my heart as emphasising the importance of prayer. We have seen that the chief occupation of His life on earth; and the chief occupation of His life in the Glory, is intercession. The chief occupation of the Holy Spirit is also intercession. There are many offices that He performs, but this verse sets Him forth as the Spirit of prayer. He is called the Spirit of grace, but He is pre-eminently the Spirit of intercession, the praying Spirit. One of the indications that people have received the Holy Spirit is that they are very much given to prayer. It is vain to talk about being filled with the Spirit if one is not filled with prayer.

PRAYER IN THE MINISTRY.

In Acts vi. 4 we read, "But we will continue steadfastly in prayer, and in the ministry of the Word." The Apostle says: "We have just two kinds of business in this world, as apostles in the Church—prayer and the ministry of the Word." And he puts prayer first. The chief business of the preacher is praying. These are the two things to which he should give himself—to prayer and the ministry of the Word, and first of all to prayer. I wonder how many of us in the ministry have realized that? I think we have thought our first and important business is preaching. Some have thought that their important business was to attend to all the good things in the community, being active in all kinds of philanthropies and charities. All the men of God in the Bible were men of prayer. The Apostle Paul was a man of intense and unceasing activity. Study his life as set forth in the Acts of the Apostles and in the Epistles. While he was a man of intense and untiring activity (perhaps the most untiring man that has ever represented Jesus Christ upon earth), yet he was a man of intense, untiring, and unceasing prayer.

PAUL'S PERPETUAL PRAYER.

For example, read Rom. i. 9. Here he mentions that he was praying for the saints in Rome without ceasing. In Ephes. i. 16, he said the same thing of the saints of Ephesus. In Col. i. 9, he was praying for those in Colosse without ceasing. In 1 Thess. iii. 10, "night and day praying exceedingly." In 2 Tim. i. 3, it is mentioned that Timothy is an individual for whom Paul prayed day and night without ceasing. When you put these various passages side by side, for the saints in Rome, in Ephesus, in Colosse, in Thessalonica, "praying night and day without ceasing," and for Timothy, one is led to say Paul must have spent most of his time praying. He did—he spent whole nights in prayer, in watchings, in vigils, in prayers and fastings. The time that he was so sorely beaten and misused in Philippi and put into an inner dungeon, with his back all torn and bleeding, in the middle of the night, you could hear him and Silas singing praises and praying to God. They said, "This is a strange thing, here is a man who has been beaten; he is not groaning and crying, but singing hymns and praying."

How many of us, writing to the churches in which we have been interested, of which we may have been pastors, or in which we may have been members, could say: "I am remembering you unceasingly day and night in prayer"? If more of us could say that, we would have more revivals. This Book exalts prayer above every other activity. Preaching is important, personal work more important, but the one thing this Book exalts above all other is prayer.

POWER COMES BY PRAYER.

It is by prayer we receive that power which Jesus Christ has in the Glory. Read John xiv. 12. It is as if He says, "I am going to the Father, to the very treasury of His omnipotent power. I am going there as your representative. Your real position will be there with me in the treasury of God's power, in the Glory, and greater works than these shall ye do." There were only a few hundred converted during Christ's public ministry. The thirteenth and fourteenth verses tell us how to appropriate this power. Your real position and mine is not down here. Our real position is above. We ascended with Christ. We died with Him, we were buried with Him, we rose with Him, and we have ascended with Him. If we are united to Christ by a living faith, our citizenship is up there, and we are up there in Him.

How can we appropriate this power? It is in Christ; we are simply the branches, and the vine bears its fruit, and bears all its fruit through the branches. We are the branches through which Jesus Christ bears His fruit, and wherever there is a Christian united to Christ by living faith, and looking to Him through prayer, Christ is in that Christian to work. When there is one in a home who has a real living faith in Jesus Christ, Christ is in that home to work in that home through that believer.

This fulness of His power comes in answer to prayer. You say, "I don't think there has been very much of a manifestation of the Christ in my home." How much time have you spent in appropriating this power? Remember the words, "Ask and ye shall receive," and "Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name." All the power of the risen and exalted Christ (not the power He had down here in His humiliation, but the power He has in the Glory), His unbounded power, is at your disposal and mine. But you say, "I am so insignificant, I am so uncultivated, so ignorant." It is not a question of what you are, but a question of what He is. It is not the question of your power at all; it is the question of His power through you. All the power He has is at our disposal, and we get it through prayer. We get so little, but we might have so much. It is not a question of what you are naturally; it is a question of what you might become supernaturally in answer to prayer. This is the key to the whole situation, and yet how small an estimate the average Church and Christian put on prayer to-day! If there is a revival, the crowds come out; if there is a leeture on infidelity, the crowds come out; but if it is "only a prayer-meeting," the faithful few come. And yet the prayer-meeting is the heart of a mission—this place, and the place of secret prayer. We are here to-day to appropriate God's power. Shall we appropriate largely?

*Teaching the Bible.

By Miss GRACE SAXE.

For the past six years I have been engaged in conducting large Union Bible-classes in towns in America, following up united missions. At the close of such a mission there are always a large number of people, young and old, who have been awakened to the necessity and importance of knowing the Bible, and are eager to enter classes for the study of God's Word.

These classes are open to all, the work being union, arranged by a committee representing all the Evangelical denominations.

There are various classes, one for boys and girls from about ten to fifteen years of age, another for young people, afternoon classes for ladies, and evening classes for men and women. These are conducted on the lecture method; but are not merely lectures. They are classes where the lesson is assigned each time, and each enrolled member is expected to study it before the next meeting according to directions given. The great object is to induce people to study the Bible for themselves.

THE SYNTHETIC METHOD.

In the adult classes, the method which has proved most popular is the synthetic—that is, "the study of the Bible as a whole, and each book as a whole, and as seen in its relation to the other books." In another class we follow the chapter summary method as arranged by Dr. Torrey and emphasized strongly in the Moody Bible Institute at Chicago.

This method may be briefly stated as follows:—After reading the chapter carefully and prayerfully, we ask the following five questions regarding it, and call for written answers:—(1) What is the principal subject of this chapter? (2) What is the leading lesson? (3) Which is the best verse? (4) Who are the persons mentioned? (5) What does it teach about Jesus Christ?

In all the classes large maps and charts are used, as well as the blackboard, to illustrate the teaching, so that the truth may enter through the eye as well as the ear.

POPULARITY OF BIBLE STUDY.

In many places this Bible Study following a mission has been taken up most enthusiastically by large numbers of Christians and non-professors. The churches sometimes have been too small to accommodate the crowds which desired to attend the classes. Many who had not opened their Bibles for years, and perhaps came to the classes at first out of curiosity, have had their interest aroused, and become devout students of God's Word. Others who entered the classes with the intention of studying the Bible for its literary interest alone, have found Christ, and accepted Him as their Lord and Master. Ladies' literary clubs, Shakespeare circles, history societies, &c., have been turned into Bible Study classes, the members having been led by the Spirit to see that the Book of books contains the truest history, the most sublime poetry, the most instructive letters, the grandest prophecies ever written, and, above all, the Way of Life,

* Miss Saxe is a former student of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, and has been conducting great classes for Bible Study in different parts of the States with much success. She is now on a visit to Great Britain.

Following up at Glasgow.

A TALK WITH Mr. OATTS.

Glasgow, as befits the second city in the Empire, has set a fine example as to how a mission should be followed up. Immediately the Torrey-Alexander Mission (which reached 150,000 people in Glasgow last March) concluded, a system of consolidating the good results was started. I went specially to Glasgow last week to have a chat with Mr. W. M. Oatts, who was the life and soul of the mission, and has been the "head-centre" of the Fellowship Meeting which was commenced to help the converts.

"In Glasgow," said Mr. Oatts, "we believe in following up a mission. For twenty-seven years we kept a weekly prayer-meeting going as a sequel to the great work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. So, when our hearts were gladdened by seeing thousands confessing Christ in St. Andrew's Hall last March, we determined to spare no effort in following up the visit of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander."

GROWING EVERY WEEK.

"Has the Fellowship Meeting stood the test of time, Mr. Oatts?" "It certainly has. Every week we add fresh names to our roll, which already numbers over 1,500 members. We have not missed a week, even in the summer, for our Monday meeting, and we get an attendance of about 800 or so every time. On the Summer Holiday I hardly expected our members would have mustered many, for there was a big picnic of Y.M.C.A. and other friends, in addition to other attractions. But when I reached the hall there were 400 present. That proves, I think, the loyalty of the members. Many of the converts were young people, and we have found a great need for simple, practical teaching. They have sent many questions which reveal their inexperience, but also their earnest desire to do what is right. For instance, one member wrote, asking,

"IS IT RIGHT TO SING SCOTCH SONGS?"

Some of the songs he meant were those which are mostly associated with drinking, and he felt as a Christian he ought not to sing them. I said that there were so many good songs for Christians that we could well afford to leave the others alone. I quoted Miss Havergal's lines:

Take my voice and let it sing
Ever, only, for my King.

We have always many requests for special prayer—often thirty different requests on one evening—and these reveal the temptations and trials in home and business life which several of the converts have to face.

THE STYLE OF THE MEETINGS.

"Will you give me an outline of your usual methods of conducting the meeting?"

"Well, we precede the meeting with a short service of praise, singing old favourites which Mr. Alexander taught us to love, and new hymns like Mr. Harkness' arrangement of 'Never Lose Sight of Jesus.' They have, that at almost every meeting. Mrs. Oatts conducts this preliminary praise service. We have a children's choir to add an effect to the singing. Then I read the special requests for prayer, and gather the petitions up. After that, we often have verses of Scripture read or repeated by thirty or forty people. Any questions which call for a public answer I deal with to the best of my ability. A short practical address from either a special speaker or myself follows, and we keep the whole proceedings bright and punctual. We have had visits from Lord Overtoun and other directors of the United Evangelistic Association, and they have been impressed very happily by the large audiences. A proof of how many outsiders were reached by the mission is the fact that the great majority of the members were absolute strangers to us who know Glasgow congregations so well.

"To give you an idea of how we vary the meetings, here is a list of our arrangements for October and November. We have a missionary address by Rev. J. H. M'Lean, of Madras; a blackboard lesson by Mr. J. W. Arthur; addresses by Mr. R. B. Stewart, Rev. J. E. Houston, and myself; a meeting to initiate a week of prayer for young people; and a praise meeting. We have a short prayer meeting in the platform room before every meeting.

IN THE OPEN-AIR.

"Then every Thursday we have an open-air service, and two or three times Rev. John McNeill has delighted us by preaching. On those occasions a great crowd assembled immediately, and Mr. McNeill gave them of his very best. He is never happier, in my opinion, than when he preaches in the open-air. I think I have said enough to show that our Fellowship work is fully justifying its existence."

I am sure my readers will agree with me in wishing that every evangelistic mission were succeeded by such a helpful and valuable work as Glasgow owes to the energy and sympathy of Mr. and Mrs. Oatts and their helpers. The lasting results of missions are largely affected by what follows the visit of the evangelists, and I commend the methods of the Glasgow Fellowship to all Christian workers. It has been systematic from the commencement, and I was delighted to see the full register of names and addresses of over 1,500 members. D. W.

Incidents of the Missions.

PERSONAL WORK.

At the mission in Liverpool, one of the most noticeable facts was that all did their best to try and bring somebody else, and if they did not succeed in bringing them to the meeting, they made it a point to speak to them about their souls.

PRAYING IN THE ENGINEERING SHOP.

At a big engineering shop in Liverpool, there were one or two Christian men who prayed that there might be a revival in the works. They got several of their number to go to the Mission, and about twenty of the men were converted. Now they are having services in their works in the middle of the day.

CONVERTED TO SERVE.

A young fellow in Birkenhead used to write to one of the leading papers articles against the Young Men's Christian Association and the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. During the recent mission he was converted. Now they call him "Sunny Jim," and he is the secretary of the Bible-class of the Y.M.C.A.

A CHANGED PROSPECT.

The Y.M.C.A. secretary was speaking the other night of the work at Birkenhead, and said: "Six months ago the outlook was of the blackest, and I prayed that God would, if it was His will, move me out to some other place. I prayed that He would work in that Y.M.C.A. through Mr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander. He has moved me in a different way from that which I thought, and has moved the Y.M.C.A., too."

HOTEL SERVANTS CONVERTED.

One of the workers in the Mission in Dundee said that a barmaid came to visit Dundee for the week-end, and stayed over the autumn holiday. She came to the Mission, and was converted. She wrote back home that she could not go back to her position, for she had been converted. In Dundee a man who worked in a hotel came to the meetings on the autumn holiday, was converted, and sent word to his employer that he could not come back, as he had given his heart to God.

THE RAILWAY GUARD'S WORK.

The other day there were some people talking in the railway carriage, and one woman said she did not have assurance of salvation. The guard overheard this, and so at the next station as he noticed that all the people got out excepting the lady, he said to himself, "I wonder if that lady would think it impertinent if I went and talked with her." He went to her carriage, got out his Bible, and showed her the way of life and how to have assurance. Before they got to the end of the journey, she was happy in the knowledge of Jesus Christ as her personal Saviour.

THE EFFECT OF A HYMN.

At the close of the Fellowship Meeting, a mission worker told the following story of what happened in a meeting subsequent to the Torrey-Alexander Mission in Liverpool:—A great, big fireman got up while the preacher was speaking and said, "I want to give myself up." They talked to him, and that night he gave himself to Christ. The next day he said he had written home to tell his people what he had done, and that he wanted them to do the same. We asked him what it was that had spoken to him during that meeting, and he said, "When they were singing that hymn, 'Tell mother I'll be there,' it just broke me down."

A BOY LED TO CHRIST.

In Dundee, a Cambridge man, who came up to the meetings for two days, got hold of a very interesting case. He is a worker among young lads, and has a weekly class of 500 boys. Almost everyone had left the hall, but he remained in close conversation with half-a-dozen boys. One of these had been deeply impressed, but when urged to come to a decision replied, "No, I must go home and count the cost." The gentleman made an appointment to meet the boy at his hotel early next evening. The boy came. His difficulties were all cleared away, and he is happy in the consciousness of sins forgiven, with a new life opening before him.

ANOTHER BLESSED BY A HYMN.

"I got a blessing to my soul from that beautiful hymn, 'There's not a Friend like the lowly Jesus.' I had to pass through deep affliction; my brother died after ten minutes' illness, and this verse was specially precious to me at that time—

There's not an hour when He is not near us,
No, not one! no, not one!
No night so dark, but His love can cheer us,
No, not one! no, not one!

I have been teaching these hymns to children in villages, and I believe that people can be won by the singing of the Gospel who cannot be won by preaching." (From Dundee.)

SINGING ON THE SEA.

A Dundee friend writes:—On Saturday a party of about thirty friends who were in Dundee for the annual Scottish Conference of the Telegraph Messengers' Christian Association, went to St. Andrews for the day. We hired two North Sea fishing-smacks and went for a sail, during which we sang the "Glory Song" and other hymns to the delight of the crew. The skipper kept saying, "Keep it going," and I believe was impressed. In the train one of the messengers (unknown to any at the time), decided for Christ during the singing of "There's not a friend like the lowly Jesus." Fourteen of the messengers have since professed conversion. One had to leave the theatre, he was so deeply convicted.

"GET RIGHT WITH GOD."

A young man who had been living in sin, and who was a hard drinker, came to the Y.M.C.A. Hall recently and testified as follows: "I was converted at the recent Mission. I was one of those who stood up in front. The next day I met a friend whom I had not seen for ten months. He asked me to have a drink. 'No thank you,' says I, 'I have given up that now.' My friend tried to persuade me to have a drink, but I refused again and said, 'You did not offer me a drink when I was out of work.' My friend replied, 'Well, if you are going to get angry with me, we will not talk.' I replied, 'I do not want to be unfriendly with you. I want to remain friends with you; but this is what I have done.'" He took off his hat, and showed on the inside the words, "Get right with God."

EXPELLING THE DEVIL.

A worker in Liverpool has written to Dr. Torrey recently:—On the closing night of your mission here a man stood up towards the back of the audience and shouted that there was no devil. Your reply was that there was a devil, and that he possessed this poor man. Mrs. A. was on one side of this man, and Miss B. on the other. Mrs. A. said to him, "May God shake the devil out of you," and both women silently prayed for him as you went on with your address. Miss B. came to tell me on Tuesday night last at the Fellowship Meeting that God had done it; the devil had been shaken out of the poor fellow, who had been an infidel, and the Lord Jesus Christ had taken complete possession of him. The man is a milk-dealer in the city, and is well known. When an ungodly woman heard that this man was saved, she exclaimed, "Well, he'll be a real Christian! None of your milk and water kind! There'll be no water put in his milk!"

A YOUNG MAN CONVERTED.

"On Monday night, October 12, at the close of Dr. Torrey's address in the Kinnaird Hall," writes a correspondent, "I asked a young man if he had accepted Christ as his own personal Saviour. He replied that he thought I was too personal and had no right to ask people such questions. I said, 'Did he not think that if I believed it to be a matter of life and death, it was my bounden duty to ask such questions?' to which he assented. I asked him if he would not accept Christ then, if he thought it was the right thing to do, but he said it was too serious a matter to settle then without thinking it over. I asked him if he would allow me to point out to him the way of salvation from God's Word, to which he reluctantly agreed. After pointing out the way of eternal life, he said it was all so wonderful he wanted to think about it. I could not persuade him to decide then, and on his rising to go, the hall by this time being nearly empty except for a few of the workers, one of them offered up a prayer. About six of us got on our knees and formed a circle of prayer around him, he standing. As soon as the prayers were over, he made straight for the door without a word, but I followed and took him by the hand and said as he would not make the decision then before us, would he not just let his heart go out to God on his way home and settle it before he went to sleep that night? He grasped my hand tightly, and said he would think of it. I prayed he would come again the next night having decided. Praise God, he did; stood up boldly and confessed publicly that Jesus Christ was his Lord and Saviour, and went away saying what a gloriously wonderful salvation it was."

ECHOES FROM DR. TORREY.

Everyone away from God is getting worse.

Conscience sometimes sleeps, but never dies.

Bible study and prevailing prayer always go together.

Sin and death, as righteousness and life, are inseparably connected.

Christ is a hiding-place from the accusations of an accusing conscience.

Jesus Christ is a hiding place from the just displeasure of a holy God.

When we do what God tells us to do, He will do what we ask Him to do.

It is the truth which is real to you that will have power with other people.

Let us learn our Master's secret of taking rest by communion with God.

The more work we have to do, the more time we need to take for prayer.

Oftentimes there is more refreshment for a tired body in prayer than in sleep.

Often one single verse in the Bible will turn a man out of sin unto righteousness.

The best way to learn how to win souls for Christ is just to set about and do it.

There is a hiding-place in Jesus Christ from the power of the fiercest temptation.

All man's speculations about the future are worthless. I want God's word for it.

Every father and mother ought to have the joy of leading their children to Christ.

Keep dwelling on the love of Jesus Christ for you, and you will learn to love Him.

If we are to have power with God in prayer, we must seek to please Him in everything.

You cannot go on in the path of sin without going over the dead body of the Son of God.

The Bible does not hold out a single ray of hope for men and women who die impenitent.

Your tears and your sympathy will do more than your arguments in winning souls to Christ.

When you have a heart full of love to Jesus Christ, then you will have power to win others to Him.

Sin puts out the eyes of men's souls, blinding them to all that is morally and spiritually beautiful.

Hell was never prepared for man, but for the devil and his angels, and it is man's own fault if he goes there.

Crutches and Kindness.

LATELY, I believe, many of you have been receiving Certificates, and I can imagine how pleased you were with them, for they were tokens of successful efforts on your part.

This week I want to tell you of another kind of Certificate, which is within the reach of all, old or young, wise or dull. It is not a Certificate of Merit, but a Certificate of Pity. It has to do with "Crutches" and "Kindness," and it brings about wonderful things, of which I will tell you presently. Here is the wording of it:—

This is to certify that.....has been enrolled a member of the Crutch and Kindness League, and promises to write at least once a month to some Poor Cripple put into.....charge for that purpose, and for Pity's sake to do what.....can to make the young sufferer's life a little brighter and better.

Now for the wonderful things which happen on receipt of this certificate. I will imagine that one comes to a little girl who is living in happy circumstances, surrounded by loving friends. The first thing she does is to hang it up in her bedroom, where it will serve as a constant reminder, for, unlike other certificates, it refers to something not yet done. After reading it through, this little girl gets some note paper (and she is careful to select a piece with pretty flowers on it), pen, and ink, and starts to write to the little cripple child now under her care. On referring to the letter which came with the certificate, she finds that this cripple is ten years old, that she is often in great pain, and has to spend much time lying on her back. Now and again she is able to get about by means of a crutch, but her life is a very cheerless one, as she is very poor.

Our little friend wonders what she shall write! She bites the end of her pen, but though this makes a big dent, it does not cause the words to flow out the other end! Next she fetches a dictionary and a book on "composition;" but these do not help her. Then she does a very wise thing—she asks her mother! The mother suggests that her little daughter should try to put herself in the place of that lonely, suffering child, and think what sort of a letter she would like under such circumstances. It is not an easy matter to put yourself in the place of one less fortunate; in fact, it needs a big effort to do so, and many people never try. But this little girl did try, and in a short time her pen was scratching over the paper as she told her cripple friend just such things as children love to tell one another—about the funny ways of a pet dog, the games she had with her brothers and sisters, and what she did at her birthday party. But that was not quite all. She concluded by saying—

Dear little girl, I am so sorry you are ill and poor, and I am going to be your friend and love you. I would like to send you my pet dog, but mother says he is too naughty; so I am sending you a picture-book father gave me, and some toffee I made myself, and I hope you will eat it and soon get better.—Your Loving Friend.

A few hours later the letter, addressed to "Miss Jemima Brown," was on its way, and the writer was happier than ever in her life before, because she was learning the blessedness of "giving."

So much for the "Kindness."

What of the "Crutch"? Well, the owner of it was having a very bad day. Suffering does not always make folks patient, and Jemima Brown was not only in pain, but in a very bad temper. The room was close, and it seemed to get hotter as she tossed her head from side to side on the pillow. Her father and mother were out at work, and the fretful child was not a very pleasant companion for the other children, who had gone out into the court to play.

Suddenly the door burst open, and her brother Johnny rushed into the room. She raised her head angrily, but was stopped from speaking by his saying, "'Ere's a letter addressed to Miss Jemima Brown. I suppose that's you, ain't it?"

With trembling fingers she opened the packet. Out fell a sticky lump of toffee, next came a picture-book, and last of all the letter. Jemima had to read it several times before she could take in its meaning; but when she did, she fell to laughing and crying at the same time, kissing first the toffee and then her brother, who thought her mad, but who altered his opinion when she shared the toffee with him. Jemima's temper vanished for that day at least. The picture-book wiled away the weary time, and the letter she refused to part with; she kept it under her pillow, "it holds my 'ead still," she said, and now and again she would stroke it gently, as if it were a hand held out in the darkness. Kindness and Crutch had met.

It was the first of many such letters and gifts that found their way to Jemima Brown. I think if the little writer of the letters had been a "Searcher" she would also have cut out and sent Uncle Tom's "Talks" sometimes, don't you? The beautiful part of it was that Jemima never knew when anything was coming, and we all like surprises!

Ah! if only Crutches and Kindness could meet more often. It was this wish which led Rev. J. Reid Howatt to start the Crutch and Kindness League, and Mr. John Kirk, of the Ragged School Union, 32, John Street, Bedford Row, is helping the work forward. He will be glad to enrol old and young in this glad service, for there are in London alone over 6,000 cripple children, and in other towns where you may live you will find many more. If a letter through the post is such a delight to you, how much must it mean to a lonely, poor, and suffering child! In such quiet ways as these you may become God's little ministers to those in need, and thus you will help to make the crooked places straight, and the rough places plain.

Systematic and Proportionate Giving.

IT is most striking to notice that the Apostle puts his appeal for the collection at the close of one of the most splendid outbursts of inspired eloquence in the whole Scriptures. He has just exclaimed, "O death, where is thy sting?" and now turns to speak of the collection. He shrank, however, from urging the Corinthian Christians to some great and stupendous effort. He shrank from the great donations that might be given under the impulse of his magnetic presence, and wished that week by week there should be a ssytematic storage of money in littles.

There can be no doubt that this is the true principle. Nothing would be more productive of prosperity to all our Christian enterprises, and of blessing to individual Christians, than the adoption of the principle here alluded to, that whenever Christian disciples receive their wages or income, they should set aside a certain proportion for the cause of Christ, that they might always have a secret fund to go to for meeting any special collection that may be made. From my own experience for many years I can commend this plan, which has always made it pleasant and easy to give, and in my experience I have invariably found that as in times of plenty or scarcity, I have persistently followed this principle, my personal needs have always been supplied. It seems to me that what you give in this way, without grudging, is banked to your credit in the Unseen, and that a revenue accrues from it according to the heavenly rate of interest.

Let us realize that all we are and have is Christ's, for we are His slaves. Let us determine that we will set aside at least a tenth of all our income. It may be said that this is Jewish, and I grant it, but even Jews gave much more than the majority of Christians, and when we have given that, we may give as much more as we choose. Let us also look on all that is over in our annual income, after deducting our maintenance, and in addition to the tenth, as Christ's, to be administered beneath His eye, and for His glory.

We have none of us reached the point of giving as He gave for us, when He became so poor that He had not where to lay His head, and needed to be laid in a borrowed tomb. As He gave all to us, let us give all to Him. And as we give God will make all grace abound toward us, that we may always have a sufficiency in all things, and abound unto every good work. Those who give get. They who give up their five barley loaves and two small fish get twelve baskets full. As you sow bountifully your coins in the furrows of human need, you will reap bountifully a harvest of return. Provide yourselves, therefore, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not and in bags that wax not old, and you shall be the millionaires of eternity. Do as many foreign princes do, when they send their treasures and money over to our English banks, that they may be secure in case of revolution.

Ponder, in this connection, that remarkable verse which tells us that God will minister seed to those who sow, i.e., He will supply your hand with money to sow for Him if only He can trust you with it, and be sure that it will not stick to your palms. He also will supply bread for your food, so long as you will act as His husbandman, and be faithful, for it is unreasonable to expect men to work for you and then starve them. In addition He will take the seed you sow, and though it seem lost, will guard and multiply it by His blessing, so that it shall accomplish results of which you never dreamt. To crown all, He will enrich you in everything to all bountifulness, so that you shall abound in every good work. What a God is ours, and how hopelessly many are missing the secret of success by concentrating all their thoughts on themselves.

Golden Text—Ex. xx. 19.

TIME. In the thirty-second year of King David's reign, and about twelve years after he had been restored to Divine favour, the consequences of his sin worked out in domestic and national troubles. He reaped as he had sown—sword, treachery, rebellion (2 Sam. xii. 10). His youngest child died (v. 18); his only daughter was dishonoured; his eldest son murdered; his third son, the murderer, took refuge in the home of his heathen grandfather, Talmai, king of Geshur (xiii. 37), a small principality in the Lebanons, for three years, brought back to Jerusalem by the policy and kindness of Joab towards his king (xiv. 1, 23); but not fully restored to his father's favour until two years later (vv. 28, 33).

While Absalom's cheek was receiving his father's reconciled kiss, his heart was planning his king's ruin. Immediately after the show of loyalty came the show of royalty, to eclipse his father—King David used a royal mule (1 Kings i. 33), avoided Egyptian display (Deut. xvii. 16; Ps. xx. 7), horses and chariots. Next the show of justice (vv. 3, 5), show of piety (vv. 7, 12), and show of accession—but that bubble burst.

Absalom the handsomest man in Israel (2 Sam. xiv. 25 (marg.) with 1 Sam. xv. 7; Is. i. 6), his qualifications and actions.—Good looks, attractive manners, and a winning tongue. Clever, brilliant, tactful. Persevering, even industrious (xv. 2, xiv. 30) for his own ends, selfish and self-centred, unscrupulous in his ambitions and aims, with lack of all noble principle.

Sullen in anger, deceitful, revengeful, and vindictive; conceited and fond of show. A versatile actor—as a brave companion, as offending son anxious for his father's pardon, as heir-apparent in right regal grandeur, as a pattern judge and righter of the people's wrongs, as a very pious man, as a smart and cunning leader of men, as a teachable prince under the king's counsellors, as a brave general at the head of his army.

1. Traitor to father and king.
2. Flatterer and false-promiser.
3. Adept at intrigue and evil design.
4. Plausible deceiver to all.
5. Whited sepulchre, appearing righteous.
6. Rebel son to a loving father.

(1) xv. 10. (2) v. 4. (3) xiii. 26, 28; xiv. 29; xv. 11, 12. (4) xv. 2—6, 11. (5) vv. 7, 8, 11. (6) xiii. 37, 39; xviii. 5.

12. Even Ahithophel came under invitation for the religious festival.

The plot was laid very minutely—first the father's kiss as a passport; the hearts of the people won by stealth; his father's blessing won by deceit; 200 of the best men in Jerusalem inveigled unwittingly into the scheme; spies sent out as heralds; and Bathsheba's grandfather invited for consultation and advice. But Absalom left God out of his reckoning.

David was "the Lord's anointed," and David's God answers prayer (xv. 31). Ahithophel's counsel, though it were as in xvi. 23, became foolishness under the wisdom of God through David's true and loyal "friend" (xv. 37; 1 Chron. xxvii. 33). How quick was Absalom's eye to detect, as he thought, double-dealing on another man's part (xvi. 17).

Special Points.

1. David's heart yearned over his erring banished son, and loved him even when he was in open rebellion (xiii. 39; xviii. 5). So God commendeth His love towards us (Rom. v. 8-10). "Sinners," "enemies," "dead in trespasses" (Eph. ii. 5). "Come, I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty" (2 Cor. vi. 17-18).

2. Poison berries are attractive and bright, but dangerous to play with and fatal to eat. These 200 men discovered too late that there was a trap for conspiracy against their acknowledged king hidden under a fair-sounding invitation to a religious service. The enemy of souls is still as clever to entangle us. Watch.

3. Absalom worked on the pious hopes of his father, and hoodwinked him under a cloak of religion. If our parents are blinded to our faults by love, more reason for us to be sincere and honest with such. "God is not mocked."

4. Hushai. The Lord can teach His servants to "be wise as serpents," as well as "harmless as doves"; and "the old serpent" (Rev. xii. 9) "deceiveth the whole world" (Matt. x. 16).

5. Joab won the kiss of reconciliation for Absalom, was it much wonder he acted as he did? He did all for David's sake.

6. It was a traitor's kiss that Judas gave to Christ the Anointed of God. Does my heart ring true to Jesus in love and gratitude when my lips acknowledge Him as my Lord and Saviour?

BASE INGRATITUDE.

When, some years ago, Prince Alexander was forcibly deposed from the throne of Bulgaria he grieved bitterly at the ingratitude of the people. His removal at night time was carried out with needless harshness. At first the prince was placed in a miserable convent, and it is said certain of the officers looked for a place in a forest where they could shoot him. Afterwards Alexander declared that the terrors and fatigues of the journey were as nothing to the harassing thought of the ingratitude of the people for whom he had worked day and night and the ingratitude of the army whom he had led to victory and triumph. Absalom, when he stole the hearts of the men of Israel (6) displayed a similar spirit.

A SHAM PIETY.

The sham jewellery to be seen everywhere nowadays is a fitting illustration of the false religion of Absalom. When he said unto the king, "I pray thee let me go and pay my vow to the Lord at Hebron" (7), the piety was altogether spurious. The jewels that deck the "imitation" shops sparkle and flash as if they were real gems. Brilliant lights are turned upon the scene, and the defects of the jewellery are not seen by the unsuspecting. By similar means Absalom, who had but an outward religion, endeavoured by artificial means to wean the people from devotion to the king. Such shams will not stand the test of God's inspection, and we should be warned by the downfall of Absalom to eschew all that is unreal.

SELF-DESTRUCTION.

It is said that a bee, in stinging anyone, causes its own death by leaving the sting behind. When Absalom sent spies throughout all the tribes of Israel to announce that he reigned in Hebron (10), he intended to bring about the downfall of his own father. Instead, though he did pain King David, he eventually caused his own downfall. In lifting up his hand against his father, he sinned against God, and God punished him for his double rebellion. In doing wrong to our parents we commit sin against our Heavenly Father, and we know from His own Word that "the wages of sin is death."

A BEAUTIFUL CHARACTER.

When William I. of Germany was crowned Emperor, he decided to govern his life on principles of godliness and truth. He placed on record that his companions should be among those who were true-minded and sincerely religious. Above all he determined to begin every morning of his life with devotion to God. So did the Emperor make his character really beautiful, and his life was consecrated to the service of the King of kings. We know that Absalom was beautiful of face and comely to look upon. Yet as a young man he sought out bad companions, and used base and deceitful means to overthrow the sovereignty of his father. An old proverb tells us that "handsome is that handsome does," and the Lord requires that we should live beautiful lives, and desires truth in the inward parts. We may only cultivate such beauty by consecrating ourselves to the service of God.

Dublin Medical Mission.—Owing to the lack of funds, the secretary, Dr. J. Perceval Barnes, was compelled to send in his resignation, which was, after due consideration, reluctantly accepted. The committee unanimously requested Mrs. E. J. Figgis to take up the duties of hon. secretary temporarily, which post she has consented to fill with the help of Mr. S. Taylor Wood as assistant secretary, Mr. W. R. Wigham kindly consenting to act as hon. treasurer, pro tem. Several amounts have already been promised or received towards paying off the debt, which amounts to £500; and a subscriber has promised to pay the salary of a second doctor for six months, rather than have the door closed against any patient, as has been the case during the last three or four weeks at almost every dispensary, it having been decided for the present to rely on voluntary medical help instead of incurring further expense in salaries. The chairman is Mr. J. Fielding, 6, Chancery Place, Dublin.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

WISHAW.

NEVER in Wishaw has there been such a temperance movement as that initiated by Dr. Henry. God has surprised and shamed our trembling faith by the large answer of His revealed might. Our Town Hall has been filled every night with many who seldom hear decided Christian temperance preaching. Twelve hundred adult and two hundred juvenile pledges have been taken. This out of a total population of twenty-one thousand is eloquent testimony to the success of the Mission. Dr. Henry has endeared himself to many by his whole-souled advocacy of total abstinence as a necessary feature of the redeemed life. His clear, unsparing presentation of the facts of the case, his insistence on the need for abstinence in the interests of the nation, his lofty moral and Christian appeals to what is best in his audience, found ready response, and the result is that the interest of Churches in the cause has been aroused as never before, while many people have been led not only out of drink, but into Christ.

The singing of Mr. Armon Jones proved a powerful attraction. Many were brought by it to the meetings who would not have come otherwise. Mr. Jones touched and roused all our hearts. We part from our friends with deepest regret; but as a result of their visit we go forward in the Lord's work here with new hope and fresh faith.

James Adam, Congregational Minister.

ABERDEEN.

After an effective close to the mission at Crieff, Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones had a magnificent reception meeting at Aberdeen, attended by 400 representative people. At no place have the missioners been more cordially welcomed.

The Aberdeen Journal says, in the course of a hearty report:—

"The campaign was opened by a special meeting for children, which was held in the Music Hall on Saturday afternoon—Mr. G. F. Duthie, Woodside, presiding. The attendance was good, and Dr. Henry, in a way all his own, spoke encouraging words to the 'bairns,' which they are not likely soon to forget; while the singing of Mr. Jones gave great pleasure, as was evidenced by the delighted faces and the applause which occasionally broke out.

"In the evening a reception to meet Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones took place in the Art Gallery. Mr. J. A. Smith welcomed Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones to Aberdeen in a speech in which he brought out the fact that Aberdeen was cursed with 360 licensed houses, or one to every 450 of the population. He asked all present to reconsecrate themselves to the service of temperance. Councillor Middleton and Rev. W. Mackintosh Mackay followed with rousing temperance speeches, after which Dr. Henry thanked all present on behalf of himself and Mr. Jones for the cordial welcome which had been extended to them by the citizens of Aberdeen.

"On Sunday morning Dr. Henry preached to a large congregation in Torry United Free Church, and in the afternoon made a welcome appearance at the P.S.A. meeting in the Trades Hall, Belmont Street. In the evening a mass meeting was held in the Music Hall, which was crowded in every part. Mr. Adam Maitland presided, and asked for unstinted support to Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones.

"Dr. Henry gave a powerful evangelical discourse, having, of course, special reference to the temperance cause. All social regeneration, he maintained, was to be found and obtained in their right relations towards God, and the tocsin sounded and the clarion cry rang out, 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God.' The joy to be found in Jesus Christ never cloyed; it increased the peace and contentment of the people, while the kingdom that was represented by drink was a kingdom that alienated them from God, and despoiled them of their purity and truth.

"The fervour and power with which Dr. Henry delivered his address made a great impression on the audience, and he was ably assisted in his crusade for converts to the cause by Mr. Jones, whose solos were listened to with much appreciation."

Some hundreds of pledges have already been secured, and there is every prospect of a fruitful mission.

Obituary.

MR. WILLIAM QUARRIER.

IN the early morning of Friday, 16th inst., in his 76th year, after ten days' serious illness, as the result of a paralytic shock, William Quarrier, the founder of the Orphan Homes of Scotland, departed this life to be with the Lord whom he had loved so long and served so well. His last public appearance in Glasgow was at the inaugural meeting of the current session of the Bible Training Institute on Thursday, September 18, when he gave a brief address full of force and interest. His text on that occasion was, "The memory of the just is blessed," with reference to the lady who left a legacy towards founding the institute. And now his memory alone remains, over and above the great institution he founded, the courageous personality that so long battled on behalf of the needy having gone hence. He will be sorely missed for many a day to come. As showing in what great esteem he was held, it may be mentioned that the Lord Provost and magistrates of Glasgow expressed a desire to attend the funeral in their official capacity, a request cordially acceded to. Mrs. Quarrier and family are being wonderfully upheld. They would value the prayers of God's people.

The body was laid to rest in the little cemetery within the precincts of the children's village on Tuesday.

We hope to give a fuller account of Mr. Quarrier's career, with portrait, in an early issue. J. C.

MR. T. C. GRUBB.

Death has removed a loyal and devoted member of the Church of Ireland in the person of Mr. Thomas Cambridge Grubb, of Clonmel. The sad intelligence of his demise caused sorrow to rise in the hearts of a multitude in Ireland, by whom he was esteemed and beloved. A large-hearted and reliable friend, he had endeared himself to citizens of almost every shade of thought, and wherever he was known his loss is keenly felt.

The benevolent disposition of Mr. Grubb was continually being demonstrated. A firm and faithful adherent of his Church, in whose councils he took a deep interest and an active part, he was a generous contributor to the funds of its different organizations. For many years he was a Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. He was one of the founders of the Young Men's Christian Association in Clonmel, and took part in the various Bible classes connected with it. Numbers of young men in all parts of Ireland look back with thankfulness to these opportunities, and testify that his example as much as his teaching led them to decide for Christ. The funeral was attended by some hundreds of sorrowing friends, the remains being interred in Killeshin churchyard.

At the graveside an impressive service was conducted by Rev. G. C. Grubb (cousin), based on 1 Cor. xv. 57. Referring to the Christian worker whose body was being laid to rest that day, Mr. Grubb said he was one of the most hospitable of men. "Being an extensive reader, there were few subjects on which he had not thought deeply, and could speak on them accurately and wisely. But whatever the subject of conversation, his heart constantly reverted to the two themes uppermost in his thoughts, a present salvation in Christ, and the second coming and glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. For many years he was an earnest student of Prophetic truth, and often sought to interpret passing events in the light of 'that day.' Some fifty-five years have passed since he learned to know Jesus Christ as his own personal Saviour and Friend. He was particularly fond of the verse, 'Verily, verily I say unto you, he that heareth My word, and believeth in Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life.' Now with sorrow, but with joyful hope, we leave him with his God and Saviour, whom he loved."

Preaching at Cahir Church the following Sunday, the Archdeacon of Waterford referred to the loss the Church of Ireland had sustained in the death of Mr. Grubb. From the time of the Disestablishment he took his place as one of its most earnest supporters with other laymen. In synod, council, and vestry he laboured to keep the light of the Gospel shining in the land. A man of true piety, he held with unswerving faith the great verities of the Christian religion. An affectionate tribute to Mr. Grubb's life was paid by Rev. J. H. Leslie at St. Paul's Church, Clogheen. Having preached from the words of Gal. iii. 24, the rector added, "Mr. Grubb was a well known figure in this parish. His active life was a true illustration which the law serves in leading to Him who is its great end—Jesus Christ. With great simplicity, and yet with great firmness, the salient features of the Law and Gospel were held by him. In later years Mr. Grubb frequently worshipped with us in this sanctuary, and to us was such an example of faith in the Unseen as we shall not soon forget. He held strong and well-grounded opinions, and was possessed of spiritual convictions nothing could shake—the outcome of the simplicity of his faith in Christ. In the dark and trying days which followed the disestablishment of our Church, he was a prominent figure in all her councils, and shared with other notable men the burden of directing her future course." Mr. Grubb had reached the advanced age of seventy-nine years.

Christian Soldiers.

THE quarterly meeting of the Soldiers' Christian Association, held at the Gosport Soldiers' Home a few days ago, was of a special character. Between forty and fifty were present, including two officers, the Army Scripture-reader, some lady workers, and others. Mr. Couchman (late of the Wiltshire Regiment), explained the working of the Army and Navy Missionary Union, and was so successful in stirring up interest that there are now twenty-five members of this Union in connection with the Home.

Mr. Edgar Faithfull, who has been working for three years in the South Africa General Mission, also gave very earnest addresses at the afternoon and evening meetings. He told of the lonely life of a missionary in the Zambesi River district, and showed how, in that country at any rate, the popular idea is incorrect: "A missionary sitting comfortably under the shade of a palm tree surrounded by an eager crowd of listening natives." He said a missionary must be a hard-working practical man, in the wilds of Central Africa, able to build his own house, and work with hands as well as brain. He earnestly pleaded for prayer for himself and his fellow-workers, and for native converts.

The new members have warmly taken up the idea suggested, which is, that all should read about missionary work, one taking up Africa, another India, China, Egypt, and so on. It is proposed to have a monthly meeting, and that the members in turn should read or tell of the work in the country they have selected for "their own," and that more definite prayer should constantly be made for this great cause.

M. S. Ridout,
Hon. Lady Superintendent.

A Call to Prayer.—Some who feel the need of deeper communion with our Lord, and of greater power for His service, propose to gather with their fellow servants in His presence, waiting on Him for His teaching, His guidance, and His strength, at the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street (near Victoria Station, S.W.), Friday, October 30. Prayer 7 a.m.—8 a.m. Waiting on God, 10 a.m.—6 p.m. (Interval about 1 p.m.) Calls to the service of God, 8 p.m.

Garden Cities and Drink.

DEAR SIR,—There will be widespread regret and disappointment with regard to "the proposed garden city" and strong drink. Perhaps no single cause renders such a system a necessity, and to place the temptation of public-houses, however guarded, within its precincts must work deterioration, and inevitably prevent the best people from residing there.

One naturally thinks of a garden city as a place of refuge, protection, and safety for the family; but the presence of what Lord Cairns called "man-traps" can only be hurtful. As a resident for many years in the temperance town of Bessbrook, co. Armagh, and at present living near Bournville, Birmingham, from both of which drink-shops have been beneficially excluded, I am persuaded that it would be going backward rather than forward to permit them in the coming new "city." Both morally and commercially it would be a mistake.

Are not the following Biblical quotations apropos?—"And ye shall be ashamed of your revenues because of the fierce anger of the Lord" (Jer. xii. 13); "Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood and establisheth a city by iniquity" (Hab. ii. 12); "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbour drink" (Hab. ii. 15).

If over wide areas of America and Canada intoxicating drink is inadmissable, to the immense advantage of the people, and the sentiment is rapidly growing of further great limitation of the evil, surely the authorities will wisely determine that "the only foe England has reason to fear" shall have no foothold in the new garden city.—Yours truly,

WILLIAM HOBSON.

153, Villa Street, Birmingham.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

ANOTHER October Term has commenced, and with it another academic year. Once more hundreds of Freshmen, enjoying the sensation of comparative independence, are in our midst facing the temptations and dangers of university life, as well as its privileges and opportunities. Probably only those who have been Freshmen can realize the great need there is for prayer from God's people that these young men may be kept firm in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, or may be so influenced as to accept Him as their Saviour and Master. The importance of the work of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union cannot be exaggerated. The daily prayer meeting, the weekly Bible reading, and the Sunday evening meeting have been to many a means of lasting blessing. May they, through God's grace, be more so this year than ever before. On November 1 (as already stated in the Requests for Prayer) Preb. Webb-Peploe will commence an eight-days mission in connection with this Union.

Personalia.

Mrs. A. B. FISHER (née Ruth Hurditch) was safely delivered of a son on September 5 at Kabarole, Central East Africa. Friends of the parents will pray that this young life may be consecrated to the service of God.

We are sorry to hear that Mrs. STEPHEN MENZIES, of Liverpool, is laid aside, suffering apparently from the effects of overwork. She will need to seek rest and change out of England, and has therefore been compelled to give up all work for the present.

The many friends who have been following with prayerful interest the news regarding Mrs. SPURGEON, sen., and Mrs. THOMAS SPURGEON, will learn with regret that the latest intelligence regarding the former is such as to cause the gravest concern, and that the latter is still seriously ill.

Many friends will learn with regret that Mr. OPIE RODWAY, of Stroud, is still very ill. He writes:—"I do not expect to be here much longer. Pray that I may love God and man more and more!

"'Tis mercy, mercy every day;
'Tis mercy, mercy all the way.'"

Field Lane Refuges Ragged Schools.—Mr. Peregrine Platt writes from Vine Street, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.:—"We are badly in need of an organist (American organ) for our mission service (at which some 400 poor people are regularly in attendance) on Tuesday evening from eight to nine o'clock, and also for one for our Ragged Church service (at which about the same number are always in attendance) on Sunday from twelve to one o'clock."

Scottish Notes.

IN view of the prospect of a military camp near Hawick, Rev. W. A. P. Johnman has voiced a loud call to the Y.W.C.A. to take such steps as will protect the womanhood and manhood of the town from the contamination which too often follows such additions to the population.

The Bible Booth in connection with the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland finished its work for the season at Lanark Races last week. At Glasgow, Greenock, Kilmarnock, Paisley, Dumbarton, Ayr, and Lanark, 427 Bibles, 2,170 New Testaments, a large number of copies of "The Pilgrim's Progress," and other books of an Evangelical nature were sold. About 20,000 tracts were distributed.

The programme for the coming session of the Church of Scotland Deaconness House, Edinburgh, includes lectures on "The Four Methods of Evangelizing at Home and Abroad," by Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming, dealing with (1) "Christian Preaching"—the Missionary Evangelist; (2) "Christian Teaching"—the Mission School; (3) "Christian Healing"—the Medical Mission; (4) "Christian Reading"—the Printing Press as a Missionary Agency. The next course will be one on "Personal Dealing with Souls at Home and Abroad," as exemplified in our Lord's conversation, by Rev. Robert Stevenson, and will include our Lord's conversations (1) with Nicodemus; or, dealing with a soul that is interested; (2) with the woman at Jacob's Well; or, dealing with a soul that is indifferent; (3) with Zacchæus; or, dealing with an open-minded soul; (4) with the Syro-Phœnician woman; or, dealing with the soul of the heathen and the outcast. A course of lectures will deal with "The Mission-Fields of the Church of Scotland," the lecturers including Prof. Kennedy, D.D., Rev. R. M'Cheyne Paterson, Rev. W. S. Sutherland, and Rev. A. J. Kesting.

Welsh Notes.

THE memory of the late Rev. T. Rees, D.D., of Swansea, is to be honoured at Brecon College, by the institution of a special theological prize bearing his name. For years Dr. Rees was one of the most distinguished of Welsh Congregational ministers. In addition to his fame as a preacher, he was widely known as an author, and his work dealing with "The History of Nonconformity in Wales" is of great value.

At the recent annual meetings of the North Wales Temperance Association held at Abergele, it was stated that nearly sixty public-houses had been closed by the various Licensing Sessions of North Wales at the beginning of the present year. The need of further effort in the same direction was made manifest by a statement which showed the number of public-houses in some of the leading towns in North Wales, also the proportion that should exist on the basis of one public-house for every 750 inhabitants as suggested by the recent Royal Commission.

The annual conference of the South Wales and Monmouthshire Temperance Association was held at Ferndale on October 8. A resolution was passed asking electors in the forthcoming General Election to put the temperance question in the forefront, and to support those candidates who are pledged to further temperance legislation. It was unanimously decided to appoint a deputation to wait upon certain Welsh members of Parliament, who, by advocating at brewster sessions the claims of applicants for licences, used their position (for which they are largely dependent upon temperance people) in furtherance of the drink traffic. The deputation will endeavour to secure promises of amendment in the case of barristers.

A gift of exceptional magnitude has just been bestowed upon the Foreign Missionary Society of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists. The generous donor is Mr. R. Davies of Boddlondeb, North Wales, and the sum contributed amounts to £135,000. For several years there has been an annual deficit of £5,000. Were it not for the Jubilee Fund of the Society the work in Assam would have been seriously crippled. Mr. Davies's munificent donation will now enable the Calvinistic Methodists to carry on their work in the foreign field as before.

Until recently the districts of Cadoxton and Barry in Glamorganshire were strongholds of evangelical churchmanship. With the advent of clergymen belonging to a different school of thought and practice a change for the worse is taking place. Already a new church has been opened, bearing the name of the "Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary." This and other symptoms of Romeward tendencies are not allowed to manifest themselves without protest and opposition. At the Merthyr-Dovan Church, Barry, on Sunday morning, September 27, one of the churchwardens publicly extinguished the lighted candles which had been placed for the first timeon the communion table.

The Y.M.C.A.

REV. DR. ROWLAND was one of the principal speakers at the autumn conference of the North Metropolitan District Union, held at Crouch End on the 3rd inst. He dealt sympathetically and most helpfully with the subject, "How the Y.M.C.A. may better show its loyalty to the Churches." The new rooms of the Crouch End Association were much admired by the visitors from the other associations in the district.

The foundation-stone of the new Y.M.C.A., which is in course of erection in Longmarket Street, Pietermaritzburg, has been laid by Mr. W. E. Bale, father of Sir Henry Bale, Chief Justice of Natal, and ex-President of the South African Council of Y.M.C.A.'s. Among those who were present were the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Sir Albert Hime, Sir Liege and Lady Hulett, and the Mayor. A large scheme is contemplated which will provide for the Association very handsome and commodious equipment.

The Ealing Association, which not long since entered premises of its own, has derived great advantage from a scheme for the improvement of adjacent property, and the opening up of a new and important thoroughfare. By the transfer of its present premises, which are hampered with a heavy mortgage, it will derive not only considerable pecuniary return, but will enter into the free possession of a new building offering much greater accommodation, and quite as well situated as are the rooms it now occupies.

The handsome new building of the St. Helen's Y.M.C.A. was publicly opened on the 15th inst. by the Earl of Aberdeen. The Lord Bishop of Liverpool subsequently delivered an address in the Gymnasium, following which a reception was given in the Association Hall by the Mayor and Mayoress. A large and enthusiastic meeting took place in the evening, at which addresses were given by the Earl of Aberdeen, Sir Henry Seton-Karr, M.P., and others.

The total membership of the Montreal Association is reported at 2,177, being a gain of sixty-two on the twelve months. The religious work shows a decided gain in the attendance at the men's meetings, an increase in the number of Bible classes, and also an encouraging increase in the results secured. One hundred and eighty young men definitely expressed a desire to lead a Christian life. Of this number, 146 names with particulars were sent to city pastors, together with the names of seventy-six other young men who had recently come to the city. Thus 222 young men were introduced directly to city churches during the year.

The Year Book of the Y.M.C.A.'s of North America reports the existence of 1,736 Associations, as compared with 1,575 Associations a year ago, and a membership of 350,455 against 323,224. Of this gross total 45,035 are juniors. No fewer than 1,729 men are at work as general secretaries and other paid officers, being an increase under this head of over 100. The American Associations are undertaking a great educational work this winter. Last year 30,600 students were enrolled. A few years ago the classes were designed specially for young men engaged in commercial pursuits, but attention is now being given to classes for men engaged in industrial occupations.

A united meeting of members of Metropolitan Associations took place at Exeter Hall a few days ago by invitation of the president, Sir George Williams, who occupied the chair. Nearly 300 men, about equally representing the six London district Unions, were present, and an enthusiastic welcome was accorded to Sir George, who has just celebrated his eighty-second birthday. Mr. J. H. Putterill, General Secretary of the London Central Y.M.C.A., read an able and suggestive paper upon the subject, "The Call Presented by the Recent Religious Census to the Associations of Larger London." In the greater Metropolitan area, he estimated, there was a population of 1,185,700 young men, of whom it might be affirmed, calculating upon the basis of the recent census results, no fewer than 889,000 absented themselves from public worship. By the aid of the census the Association had been enabled to measure, with some approach to accuracy, the field in which it was called to labour; and he indicated a variety of ways in which the Associations might rise to the occasion and accomplish vastly more than they were at present achieving in winning for Christ numbers of this indifferent multitude.

Bayswater Convention.—The meetings of the Bayswater Convention will be held next week at Paddington Baths Hall, Queen's Road, W. On Monday evening the speakers will be Revs. E. H. Hopkins and C. G. Moore. From Tuesday till Friday Rev. J. Stuart Holden will speak each day at 11.30 a.m., and Mrs. Penn-Lewis at 6 p.m. The speakers at 3 and 8 p.m. include also Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe, F. Paynter, W. Fuller Gooch, J. Gregory Mantle, R. Wright Hay, S. A. McCracken, and F. S. Webster.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Gipsy Smith in Dublin.

AN eight-days' mission has just been held in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, by Gipsy Smith. The Christian people of this city had long desired a visit from this honoured servant of the Lord, and were much gratified when it became possible. Preparation had been carefully made, and much prayer had been offered. We believe it can be truthfully said that by no other movement has the city been so deeply stirred since Mr. Moody's first memorable visit.

Mr. Smith met the workers, members of the choir, stewards, inquiry-room workers, and others on Saturday evening, October 10. About 200 were present, and a pleasant time of conference, fellowship, and prayer was enjoyed.

From the first the evangelist got a strong hold in the community. Night after night the resources of the building, holding 3,000 persons, were taxed to the utmost. The earnest and powerful appeals of the speaker made a deep impression. About 400 persons passed through the enquiry room, and many more stood up in the meeting to signify their decision for Christ.

The Irish Times of last Monday says :—

"On Saturday evening the evangelist delivered his lecture 'From Gipsy Tent to Pulpit.' Mr. William Fry presided. Every part of the spacious building was crowded. Mr. Smith is a born orator, and for two hours he held the rapt attention of the large audience. Laughter and tears, tender pathos, and earnest appeal followed one another throughout the lecture. Yesterday afternoon the building was crowded a considerable time before the hour announced for the commencement of the service, and numbers were unable to obtain admission. Mr. Smith gave a powerful address from St. Luke v. 4, on the miraculous draught of fishes. At the evening service the building was again crowded at an early hour. Mr. Smith delivered a very earnest appeal from the words of Jeremiah viii. 20 'Not Saved.'"

Ministers and leading members of all the Protestant churches took part in the services. There was a general feeling of regret that the mission was so short.

The Evangelization Society.

The tent missions of the Evangelization Society have come to a close for 1903. Not a few of the tents have suffered during the recent gales, as the record just issued by the Society reports. On September 12 intelligence was received of the wrecking of no fewer than seven tents. Other testimony of the same character followed later.

The report says:—"At least £500 will be required to replace and reinstate the forty-one tents which we have for some years possessed. Partly, no doubt, by reason of the discouraging weather, we have only supplied seven other tents this season, making a total of forty-eight, in which about two hundred missions have been taken. Some of these missions have suffered greatly, others have been, if possible, more successful than the average of former years.

"Steps have been taken to provide a tent more weather proof and more stable even than the best bell tent ever made. We have no reason to fear disappointment, for the one trial tent designed to meet the exigencies of the situation has done twelve weeks' work to our entire satisfaction. We are therefore encouraged to give the principle on which this tent is built a further trial. The initial expense will probably be about £5 extra for every one hundred people provided for, but the moving will be a much simpler and less expensive matter, and the 'life' of the tent will, we hope, be greatly extended.

"Some of the tents have been in large and populous cities, including London, Liverpool, and Glasgow; others in small and remote country villages; whilst one has had conspicuous success in seaside watering places. It is a pleasure to record the fact that the sixty or seventy evangelists who have had the privilege of taking these missions have been preserved spiritually, and to a large extent in bodily health.

"Many have worked extremely hard, one evangelist having taken seventy meetings in the month of August, which would be at the rate of over eight hundred in the year. During the last four years nearly twenty thousand meetings have been held under canvas; and we are quite safe in saying that hundreds, have been brought to God as a result."

Gordon Evangelistic Mission, Aberdeen.

At the commencement of the season we solicited the prayers of the Lord's people on behalf of the tent work in these northern counties, and we would now invite the many who have borne the Word in their hearts to unite in giving God thanks. The frequent heavy rain made it in some respects one of the most trying in our experience, yet it has been one of the most fruitful.

Throughout the three months' effort in Aberdeen, much fruit was gathered in, and specially was this the case during the closing missions, conducted by Mr. W. D. Dunn and Mr. Malcolm Ferguson. Mr. John G. Smith and Mr. Wm. Shand experienced wide-spread blessing at Insch and Bucksburn. Mr. John Esson and Mr. George Dyke had much cheering work in various places, closing with large gatherings at Cairnie, many coming nightly long distances to the meetings.

Mr. Wm. Gilmour and Mr. D. M. Simpson visited Mintlaw and several other places in that vicinity, and letters from there testify that new witnesses for the Lord have been raised up. Will the Lord's people pray that these young converts may be kept and used?

J. A. Smith.

The Open-Air Mission.

A ten-days' campaign has been carried out in Chesterfield and vicinity by four evangelists from the above mission. There is a large population including many colliers, who are held in bondage by drink and "sport."

In all the places visited by the brethren the streets were well missioned during the day, and many tracts distributed, and a good meeting followed in the evening. The places visited were Chesterfield, Brampton, Brimington, Hasland, Grassmoor, New Whittington, Temple Normanton, and Holmwood. The visit to Hasland was timed for the village feast, and on the Sabbath evening as many as 500 people were estimated to have stood listening to the preachers. Inquirers' cards were taken at most of the evening meetings. Some remarkable meetings were held; notably one, when the people stood in pouring rain for about an hour listening to the Word; also on the second Sabbath in the Chesterfield market place, where a gracious spirit of hearing was manifested by a body of men who evidently were non-church-goers.

The methods of the mission in sending a sufficiently strong band of workers to carry on the meetings, in providing lamp, hymn sheets and organ, and especially the inquirers' or converts' cards, as also the absence of the collection, are to be commended; and any community of Christians would do well to invite such a contingent of workers to needy centres of population.

Herbert A. Hall.

"The Church on Wheels."

A twenty-five weeks' evangelistic tour with the "John Wesley" Mission Car has just been concluded by Rev. W. J. Mehew (Connexional evangelist, U.M. Free Churches), who has had encouraging experiences among people who are seldom if ever found in a place of worship. Although boisterous weather prevailed during the greater part of the time, the meetings were largely attended, crowds listening with rapt attention to the Gospel story sung and spoken by the missioner. During the tour Mr. Mehew addressed 160 meetings, and it is estimated that in all more than 60,000 people heard the message. There were more than 400 inquirers after the Way of Life, and many signified their personal acceptance of the Saviour. Moreover, nearly 1,000 people took the mission consecration card, while over 200 signed the total abstinence pledge. Mr. Mehew has been impressed by the readiness of the masses to give a reverential hearing to the Gospel.

Mr. T. B. Knapman, of Exeter, thus describes a sojourn with Mr. Mehew and the car:—"I have spent a most happy week. Night after night, in most unfavourable weather, crowds of 400 and 500 people, composed of fully 50 per cent. of the very people we cannot otherwise reach, gathered to hear the grand old Gospel sung and spoken. The interest of the hearers was manifest by many of them coming night after night and remaining for the full hour and a half's service. I wish I could describe the scene to be witnessed every night as the crowd, heedless of the turmoil of the busy streets, listened with rapt attention to glorious words of hope and solemn words of warning.

The car is now housed for the winter months, and the evangelist is fully engaged with the Lord's work in the churches in various parts of the country.

Requests for Prayer.

A Christian asks prayer for a brother that he may be converted.

A Christian asks prayer for his wife and children, that they may be truly converted.

For Mr. James Marchant's work in connection with the National Vigilance Association.

For a special mission service on Lord's Day next at Wood Green, by Mr. W. T. Main.

For blessing on a week's mission to be conducted in Tollcross, Glasgow, from October 26.

For a mission in connection with the Bathgate Christian Union by Mr. Samuel McKenzie, lasting till November 1.

For a mission now proceeding at the Congregational Church, Barton Hill, Bristol, conducted by Paddy Norman.

That the work of an aged lady this coming season may result in much good, and that she herself may be spiritually blessed.

Rev. F. Hart asks for prayer on a mission to be conducted by him at Broadwater Church, Worthing, October 26 to November 5.

A lady asks prayer that an operation she is to have may be safely performed, and that God would make her calm and enable her to rest in Him.

For the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in the mission meetings to be conducted by Mr. George Clarke in the Victoria Hall, Weston-super-Mare, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. from November 1-16.

 Owing to great pressure upon space several reports, including those of Rev. John McNeil's mission at Exeter and Mr. F. Weaver at Houghton-le-Spring, are unavoidably held over.

About Books.

The troubled days of Lady Jane Grey's closing year are touchingly described for youthful readers in A Queen of Nine Days, by Edith C. Kenyon. There is a sad ring about the story, but it is well told, and brings home some of the best lessons of the struggle for religious freedom. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

Substitution: Is it a Bible Truth? The object of the author of this booklet is to investigate and set forth the proof that the fact of substitution is found in the Scriptures. The inquiry is conducted in an able and honest manner, and should clear away much of the misunderstanding which often surrounds this subject. Objections to the need and advantage of substitution are effectively met. (3d. Wheeler.)

To the series of helps published by the British College Christian Union, Mr. J. H. Oldham, M.A., has added Studies on the Teaching of Jesus, as Recorded in the Synoptic Gospels. (1s. net. 22, Warwick Lane, E.C.) Full advantage has been taken of the results of devout scholarship; and experience has shown that outsiders, as well as members of College Bible circles who follow such hints and notes closely, find such study interesting and edifying.

Two little works by Lady Hope are deserving of special mention. Sunrise Gleams furnishes a brief homily for each morning in the month; while Sunset Rays is a collection of quiet talks on passages suitable for evening devotions, covering a like period. The author's style is simple and impressive. Precious truths are stated with living freshness and spiritual force, and in these meditations many will find solace for the time of trouble and strength for the hour of weakness, because they tell of the only Source from which both can proceed. (9d. each. Thynne.)

Busy workers who are on the look out for sketches and outlines to form the groundwork of sermons, addresses, and Bible-readings will find abundance of such material in Handfuls on Purpose, by Pastor James M. Smith (Coalsnaughton). In the latest volume, which comprises the third series, the author seeks to fulfil the Apostle's injunction: "Let him that is taught in the Word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." Many whose time for deeper study and preparation is limited will warmly welcome this collection, and be able to turn it to good account. (3s. 6d. Pickering & Inglis.)

Christ's Foreview of This Age is the title of a small volume by Pastor W. Y. Fullerton, and is an exposition of Matt. xiii. (collated with Mark iv. and Luke viii. and xiii.). The author's treatment of the parables presented in these passages will add to the reputation he has already gained as a resourceful Bible student and an able exponent of evangelical truth. It is not surprising to learn that the discourses aroused considerable interest when delivered to the Church worshipping in Melbourne Hall, Leicester, and others besides members of the congregation will be glad to have them in this permanent form. (1s. 6d. Stockwell.)

War can never be anything short of the greatest calamity that can visit a nation; yet gleams of light were shed through the dark cloud that hung so long over South Africa by the Christian work which was done in the field. To those at home who have ministered to the spiritual need by contribution and prayer, such records as The Bible in the Battle Field, by F. C. Vernon-Harcourt (3s. 6d. net. Marshall Brothers), must bring joy and satisfaction. The story is told with a graphic power that makes the reader feel almost as though he were living through the period. "God moves in a mysterious way;" and in His own marvellous fashion He used the surroundings of fire and sword to win souls to Himself.

For evangelistic and Sunday-school workers one of the most useful annuals is that of "The Herald of Mercy" and "The Revival," published under the title Hoist your Colours and Other Readings (1s. Morgan & Scott). The attractive "get up" of the volume, its abundant illustrations, and the brightness of the stories, articles, and poems which it contains, will attract even the careless. On every page the good tidings of salvation are made known, so that he who runs may read. After the book has been used in complete form, it may be set out on a new career of usefulness by being cut to pieces, when each leaf will be found to constitute an excellent illustrated Gospel tract. Among special features this year are portraits of Dr. R. A. Torrey, Mr. Charles Alexander, and Miss Fanny Crosby, with a short account of what God has wrought through each of those honoured servants. The boys and girls are well kept in mind; and the large type texts on every page will catch the eye of those who may not be disposed to do more than look at the pictures. The book makes an admirable gift for old or young, at very small cost.

The Churches.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Durham has consecrated the new Church of St. Chad, Bensham, Gateshead. There was a crowded congregation, and a large gathering of the local clergy. The new church has cost £26,000, the whole of which was given by Miss Easton, a lady well known in Newcastle Church circles.

The foundation stone of St. John's Church, Palmer's Green, N., in the parish of Southgate, was laid on Saturday afternoon by Mr. V. E. Walker, who has given the site. At present only one portion of the church is being erected, at a cost of £8,500, to accommodate 450 people. The second portion will cost £5,000 and further accommodation will be provided for 350. The Archdeacon of London congratulated the parishioners on being able to start two new churches in the district within a week. Palmer's Green was rapidly developing, and he had been informed that 1,000 more houses were to be erected.

One of the opening services of the Church Congress, with sermon by the Bishop of Truro, was held at the Ritualistic Church of All Saints', Clifton. It took the form of "A Solemn Celebration of the Holy Eucharist." Such was the description of it by the church officials, but it was to all intents and purposes a service of High Mass of a most ornate character. The Record says: "Nothing more scandalous than this service at All Saints' has disgraced the proceedings of a Church Congress since the days when the Congress attended High Mass at St. Mary's, Cardiff, in 1889."

Congregational.

A new Congregational Church at St. Albans, erected at a cost of £11,400, has been opened by Sir George Williams. It provides seating accommodation for a congregation of 760 persons, together with schoolroom and other accommodation necessary for the work of the church. An address, based upon 1 Cor. xv. 24, was delivered by Rev. C. Silvester Horne.

The stone-laying ceremony in connection with the new church at Purley took place on Thursday last. Mr. Henry Sell gave an interesting account of the rise and progress of the work, and among other speakers were Messrs. J. Carvell Williams, Arnold Pye-Smith, J.P., and Alderman Evan Spicer. The sum of £1,550 is still required to free the building of debt.

Rev. A. James has completed twenty-five years in the pastorate of the Humberstone Road Church, Leicester. During Mr. James's ministry the church has grown from a membership of twenty-seven to 260, and the Sunday-school now numbers 760. A new church was opened some years ago, and to-day all the organizations of the church are in a flourishing condition.

Mr. Charles E. Conder, at a meeting of the Congregational Chapel Building Society, held at Bournemouth, tendered his resignation of the secretariat, a position he has filled for many years, he being the oldest official at the Memorial Hall. A resolution appreciative of his long service was passed, and Mr. Arthur W. Dorling was appointed interim secretary pending the proposed alterations in the constitution of the Congregational Union.

The unusual spectacle of a congregation of men sitting in church in their shirt-sleeves was witnessed at Carr's Lane Church, Birmingham, on a recent Lord's Day. Over 500 of the adult scholars of the Clark Street early morning school marched in procession through drenching rain to the service. Their clothes were wet through, and most of the men took off their coats and hung them over a rail at the end of the church. Rev. J. H. Jowett abbreviated the service, so that the men might get home and change their clothing. He spoke of their commendable endurance in suffering so unpleasant an experience in order to attend church.

Baptist.

Rev. G. T. Bailey, of Leyton, has accepted the pastorate of Mitcham Lane Church, Streatham, S.W. Mitcham Lane Church has been built by the London Baptist Association, and will be opened on October 29.

"Orphan Home Sunday" was celebrated on October 11 at the East London Tabernacle. Addresses were given by Pastor Edwin H. Ellis, who writes:—"The God of the fatherless has sent in day by day all that is needed for this work of faith."

In view of the damage inflicted on the Baptist churches and missions in Jamaica, estimated at £15,000, three of their missionaries have come to England to lay the condition of the work before the home churches, namely, Revs. William Pratt, Ellis Fray, and C. Chapman.

The seventh anniversary of the settlement of Rev. D. H. Moore has been celebrated at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, W.C., with much enthusiam. Revs. W. Y. Fullerton, W. Darlow Sarjeant, and C. B. Sawday took part in the meetings. The membership stands at 603, a net increase on the year of 41.

After nearly seventeen years of service, Pastor Frank M. Smith has tendered his resignation of the pastorate at Peckham Tabernacle, S.E. The church and congregation have heartily requested the pastor to take, if necessary, a long holiday at their expense, and in any case to reconsider his decision and retain the pastorate until the end of the year.

Methodist.

Rev. Thos. and Mrs. Champness have greatly improved in health since they retired to Lutterworth. Mr. Champness has written a very effective leaflet for use by visitors canvassing for a Sunday-school. It is in the form of a letter from the minister and the officers of the school.

Rev. James Poleworth, of Harrogate, treasurer of the Primitive Methodist Connexional Fund, has been compelled to retire from his office by failing health. With regret the general Committee has accepted his resignation, and requested Rev. R. Bryant, general book steward, temporarily to fill the position until the meeting of the Conference, when a permanent appointment will be made.

The question of the erection of a new orphanage, which has been before the Primitive Methodist Connexion for some years, is approaching settlement. The committee entrusted by the Conference with the matter has decided in favour of a site at Harrogate containing nearly eleven acres, and in every respect meeting the requirements of the Conference. The general committee authorized its purchase for £5,500.

A letter has been received by Rev. W. Chapman, one of the African missionaries of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, in which King Lewanika refers to his visit last year to England. He says that it became clear to him that the only thing for the coloured man to do is to learn. He promises to urge every chief with whom he comes into contact to have a school opened in his district and the children sent to it.

In Tottenham Wesleyan circuit meetings have been held at the four places for the deepening of spiritual life. Revs. R. W. Hopewell, T. Gladding, and J. F. Edwards took part. At each meeting there was much prayer, a Bible reading, and two brief addresses, one by a minister, the other by a layman or a lady. The topics allotted to the four evenings were "Humiliation and Confession," "Personal Consecration," "Equipment for Service," and "Intercession." The meetings were largely attended, and, from the first, marked by Divine power.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Joseph Rorke, who resigned his charge at Heaton to undertake the duties of church extension agent of the Newcastle Presbytery, has been inducted to his new sphere of work.

The meeting in Upper Norwood Church (Rev. J. G. Train) to bid farewell to missionaries, was a great success. Rev. A. Connell presided, and the valedictory address was delivered by Rev. William Watson.

In a recent issue it was stated that Dr. Gray, of Boston, was to deliver Bible lectures under the auspices of the evangelistic committee of the Presbyterian Church. The church referred to is, of course, not that of England, but of America, in which country the lectures are to be given this autumn and winter.

Last Lord's Day was, in accordance with the request of the Synod, observed as "Children's Day." Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson, as convener of the "Instruction of Youth Committee," issued an address, which was read in many of the churches, in which he raised the question as to whether the Presbyterian Church as a whole realized the importance of the work among the young.

By the withdrawal of Rev. John More from active work the church loses a minister whose services have been of a conspicuous character. The fragrance of his name still lingers in the dark places of Birmingham and Dudley, and in Cheltenham, where he spent many happy years. His congregation at New Road, Woolwich, with whom he is still to retain a titular connection, have recognised, with great reluctance, that the state of his health precludes the possibility of active work, and they part from him with deep affection and sincere regret.

Society of Friends.

Dr. H. T. Hodgkin's visit to Reading was very helpful. Among other engagements he spoke to the Men's School on "The Apologetic Value of Foreign Missions," which they much appreciated. At a Scripture instruction meeting he spoke on "The Evangelization of the World in this Generation."

At East Harling a new meeting-house was opened a short time ago. Several Friends from a distance took part. The increased accommodation elicited the expression of warm appreciation of the kindness of the many Friends who have assisted in providing it. The new building was crowded to its utmost capacity, and on the first day it was again filled. At a lecture on Friends and their tenets, the building was again crowded.

On the 1st inst. a meeting for worship was held in the meeting-house, Wray, Lancaster. Quite a large number of the villagers attended, and seemed grateful for the opportunity thus given them of attending a mid-week meeting for worship. William Knowles, Thomas Lupton, Ellen Lupton, S. Ford, and E. Evans all found acceptable service. Many Friends present hoped that similar meetings might be held in villages during the coming winter months.

The autumn meetings of the Women's Total Abstinence Union held in Sheffield, October 10-14, were characterized by a spirit of earnestness and enthusiasm. Over sixty meetings were addressed, including Bible classes, P.S.A. meetings for nurses, deaconesses, teachers, and employees in works and railway mess rooms. Two public conferences were held. Miss M. E. Docwra gave an account of some of the work done by W.T.A.U. Societies, and Miss Forsaith (London) spoke on the employment of women as barmaids.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. EDWARD MOUNSEY, J.P. By his death the Baptist denomination loses a staunch supporter, and one who had rendered a life-long service to its interests. He was for over half a century officially associated with Myrtle Street Chapel, Liverpool, as deacon, treasurer, and Sunday-school superintendent. — The Baptist church at West Green, South Tottenham, has just lost through death one of the most active workers in the person of Mr. T. O. CLARKE, at the age of fifty-six.—Aged seventy-six, Rev. HENRY BELL, Congregationalist, of Houghton, Hunts. He entered the ministry somewhat late in life, serving first for five years as evangelist to the villages around Guildford.—Blackburn Methodists have lost one of their most prominent men in the person of Mr. THOMAS SHUTT, aged sixty-four.

A Northamptonshire Village Work.—Two ladies who have carried on evangelistic work in a needy village of Northamptonshire are desirous that some friend will now come in and relieve them. Despite opposition the Gospel has been proclaimed and souls won for Christ. Arrangements can be made for taking over the house in which the gatherings are held. Address, G. O. H., care of office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

 Messrs. Morgan & Scott receive, acknowledge in The Christian, and transmit, donations sent to them in aid of any accredited Societies and Missions. No charge of any kind is ever made on such donations.

A Call to Prayer. A prayer in which all will heartily unite is that our God may graciously stay the rain, and grant fine weather. And that a spirit of humility, and of grace and supplication, and of thanksgiving for countless blessings received, may be given to our whole nation.

Enduring Evangelism. We commend to our readers the noteworthy survey of the recent Liverpool Mission, by Rev. Dr. Macphail, Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England (p. 16). We are also pleased to note that the Liverpool Methodist Council commenced its new season's work by considering the nature and the results of the recent Torrey-Alexander Mission in that city. A thoughtful paper was read by one of the ministers, analysing the whole work.

"The Christian" Almanac. With this week's issue we have pleasure in furnishing our readers with "The Christian" Almanac for 1904. To subscribers in the home lands it comes two months before it can be brought into use, but it is published thus early in order to reach friends in the more remote parts of the world in time for the opening of the New Year. It is by united waiting upon God that blessing will come down upon the efforts reported in our columns, and it is by continual study of the Word of God that we shall be so taught of the Spirit as to be able to pray in the spirit, so acquiring power with God and man. A striking testimony to the value of the daily texts came from the conference of ministers held at Oxford last month. One who was present wrote that users of the Almanac who attended the gathering could not fail to notice how the texts set down for September 7-11, seemed to fit in with the needs of each day, so much so indeed that it would have been difficult for the compilers to have chosen more appropriate Scriptures, even with the Conference in view.

The Christian Statesman. It will not be offensive to say that among Christian men of all parties there was some anxiety to know how Mr. John Morley would treat the Christian faith of Mr. Gladstone, whose biography he was writing. It was thought that a professed unbeliever could not appreciate the chief factor in that great statesman's life. Now that the monumental work has appeared, we are all agreeably surprised to find how delicately and even sympathetically this part of the work has been done. Gladstone the statesman, with his victories and his mistakes, is severely second to Gladstone the Christian, whose simple and firm faith in Christ appears in these pages. We have been profoundly impressed with some of the memoranda left by Mr. Gladstone, and which appear in the great biography for the first time. The springs of the man's life were all in God. Politics aside, we should like to see the youth of our generation mastering the secret of such a life as this. It is rare to-day to hear from the lips of politicians sentences which in every accent recognize God. Had men prayed more, we should not at this hour have been involved in bitter controversy.

The Purity of Public Life. Many eyes have been turned towards Sheffield awaiting the report of the Special Committee of inquiry into the alleged corruption of certain members of the Council. Happily the committee reports that there "has been no corrupt or improper motive" in the transactions which led to the inquiry being instituted; but certain technical offences have been committed, and some of the officials are censured for carelessness. It is gratifying to be assured that the serious charges preferred cannot be sustained; but it is a pity that even a censure has to be administered. All public men, like Cæsar's wife, should be above suspicion. Even carelessness ought not to be permitted in public affairs. Society is so welded together that doubt about the leaders produces ill-effects amongst the rank and file. There is evidently a growing determination in the country, judging from several recent events, that not a breath of suspicion shall attach to any public man in municipal life. This is a great improvement upon what used to be.

The Future of Evangelicalism in the Church of England. Do the Evangelical men in the Church of England ever ask themselves what are the prospects for their successors in the next generation? Their sons are in some cases adopting Ritualistic and often Romanistic views and practices, because they see no future for them in Evangelicalism. As a matter of self-preservation and of continuous testimony to the truth, it would seem to be their wisdom to cultivate brotherly fellowship and co-operation with Evangelical and spiritual men who are not Churchmen; and so to form a body of Christians zealous for the truth in Jesus, without reference to denominationalism of any kind. Failing this, Evangelical life and teaching will, humanly speaking, be forgotten in the Church of England in the near future.

The Temperance Manifesto. The manifesto to the nation of the friends of temperance, published last week, is a very important pronouncement. Already, however, it is clear that some of the foremost workers will not accept it because it concedes too much. Mr. Arthur Chamberlain is one of these. But the point to consider is whether we ought to aim at a moderate thing at first as the commencement of something more stringent, or aim at the whole thing and risk losing it. The temper of the country at present is not favourable we fear, to the carrying out of the complete temperance p og amme. In the end we must firmly resist compensation at all, but as a means to that end we might consent to the proposals of this manifesto and make them a basis for legislation. Compensation as the publicans and brewers propose it, and as Mr. Balfour and Mr. Joseph Chamberlain promise it to them, is entirely unjust, and it is astonishing that responsible statesmen can have flattered liquor sellers into believing that it will ever be granted. But compensation provided out of funds raised by the trade itself is just to them, and the public purse is left untouched. We must begin somewhere, and we might as well begin here. It is a people's question, and it is well that the nation at large has been appealed to.

The Brewers' Counting House. Mr. T. W. Russell, M.P., speaking at the United Kingdom Alliance Jubilee meetings in Manchester, naturally had some strong things to say in regard to the ravages of the dread drink traffic. After asserting a fact, of which he had ample confirmation when he was at the Local Government Board, that if the drink bill could be reduced one-half "the nearly dead bones of twelve millions of people would vigorously live," he said that in Parliament—

> Affairs are dominated by the great brewers. My blood boils when I see them in the House of Commons treating that assembly as if it were a counting house of their breweries.

Alcoholism in France. The French Chamber is arousing itself to action with regard to the ravages of alcoholism in the country. The first step taken is in an "interpellation" relating to the liquor traffic. At the same time the National Congress against Alcoholism meets in Paris, and its sessions are being held during this week. The leading men of France are behind this Congress, and its decisions will be fateful for the liquor business. France is being driven to face the situation. Scientists have proved that the alarming decrease in population, and the equally alarming increase in lunacy, are due to this same cause. In certain parts of Normandy the adult population consumes a quart of brandy per head per day, while among women especially spirit drinking has assumed frightful proportions. A country must save itself from these terrors, or lose itself entirely. The remedy would be simple were it not for vested interests, selfishness, and greed. And all this equally applies to ourselves.

Dean Lefroy on Ritualism. The Dean of Norwich does not place Ritualism upon a very high platform, and, although he does not exactly say so, he would seem to be of the opinion that a deal of it is traceable to the want of higher employment. Speaking recently at a meeting of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, Dean Lefroy protested against a popular idea that it was his preaching that filled "the ugliest church in Liverpool" with the largest congregation in that city, expressing his conviction that the large gatherings were due to "pastoral work:"

> Where this pastoral work is thoroughly done there need be no fear of incense or nonsense, of flection or genuflection, or any of the new-fangled ideas that came from Italy.

The Dean is not alone in his views as to the value of house-to-house visitation, and it is certainly possible that the falling off in the attendance at public Divine worship is largely due to the neglect by ministers of all branches of the Christian Church of this important part of the pastoral office.

Nuns at Work. A correspondent, in a communication to a daily contemporary, points out that members of the Roman Catholic Orders expelled from France are busily engaged in this country "trading on the sympathy even of Protestants on the ground of the wicked persecution (?) in France." He states that in Brighton—

Certain nuns have just started an educational establishment, and are sending circulars to householders, pleading that children may be sent to them, and that, through the small fees they will charge, they may be able to secure maintenance until the ceasing of the "religious persecution" in France enables them to return to their own land.

Mr. Channing aptly says it is desirable people should know the true "inwardness" of this move, for he fears that through feelings of sympathy parents may, by the specious pleadings of these intruders, be "induced to place their children in an atmosphere that will be alien alike to patriotism, Protestantism, and evangelical faith." Doubtless the warning is equally applicable to other towns than the one in question.

A Noble Mayor. The retirement of the Mayor of Southwark, who, owing to his wife's ill-health, is leaving London, should not be allowed to take place without emphasis being laid upon the illustration which his life affords of what may be done by those who in noble-hearted devotion to the Master take up the duties which lie nearest to them. Mr. Tom Bryan, M.A., was a working stockinger, and after saving up a few pounds he went to Glasgow, and worked at that trade and in a shipyard. Entering the university there, he took a scholarship. Removing to London he took an earnest part in public life, and was ultimately elected working-man Mayor of Southwark. He and his devoted wife have for years been engaged in mission work, both social and spiritual, among the poor of Walworth, at Browning Hall, where their loss will be keenly felt. But Birmingham will gain all that Walworth loses, if, as we pray may be the case, Mrs. Bryan's health should be thoroughly restored at Bourneville.

An Excellent Motto. One of the very best mottoes a Christian youth or maiden can take for life is this—to do the greatest possible good to the greatest possible number of people. The Apostle Peter was inspired to write of our Lord one sentence that summed up His life: "He went about doing good" That included everything He did, even His atoning work, which brought the greatest good of all to the whole world. Christian life can only be a very poor thing if it is content with receiving much and doing little. To each of us, as to John Wesley, the world should be our parish, so far as the extent of our sympathy and desire is concerned. To adopt the motto we have suggested would mean the solution of the Missionary Problem at home and abroad. Less than this motto is unworthy of an earnest Christian. We wish it could be burned into the conscience of the Church.

True Prayer. The sermon on Prayer preached by Rev. J. H Jowett recently at Highbury Quadrant, was most timely. In an age when much is said about fixed natural laws and the futility of prayer, it is invigorating to come upon a simple, yet deeply intellectual, statement of faith in direct communion with God. After giving scientific and other illustrations of physiological and mental miracles within our own power, Mr. Jowett said:—

I can perform a miracle, inasmuch as I am able, by means of something which the scientists take no notice of, to redistribute the energies of my body. If I am able to do that, is it incredible that God, with all His power, can redistribute the energies of His larger world? . . . I therefore am going to leave nothing out of my prayer that I want to talk about with God . . . I come to the presence of my Father and pray for Love, but God is Love. I pray for Truth, but God is Truth. I pray for Light, but God is Light. I pray that I may become pure, but He is pure. Then I say, What He is, I will be. Many people pray for things and never think of taking them. Say: Lord give me Thy Spirit of Life. Thou art giving it to me, and I will take it.

The German Church. Judging from the report of the Synod of the Prussian Evangelical State Church—whose meetings have just been held in Berlin—there is need in Germany for a religious revival, no less than in our own country. For instance: one resolution expresses the "concern of large bodies of German Protestants that the entire Bible is in use amongst school children. They demand an expurgated edition." Almost the next thing we read is that the number of theological students at the Universities has diminished fifty per cent. during the last decade. If this decrease continues "in a few years the Church will be face to face with empty pulpits." This is hardly surprising when we learn that "the best theological chairs in the Universities" are occupied "by men who are either avowed or secret Freethinkers." Better empty pulpits than such men to occupy them. The time for evangelical teaching will come again—let us not fear that. People cannot live upon stones for ever. When they hunger for bread they will demand once again what alone can satisfy them.

What Spiritualists Sing. Some idea of the true inwardness of modern spiritualism may be gleaned from a study of the hymnology of the sect. A book compiled for their use which lies before us contains many familiar hymns, most of which are altered and adapted to harmonise with their tenets. In only one have we found the name of Jesus, and of course no allusion to His atoning work. Ethical teaching for the present, and hazy hope for the future, are the only ideas promulgated, while the promises of God, which form the original substance of many hymns, are attributed to angels and departed friends, on whose efforts, coupled with our own, our future destiny is made to depend—truly a creed of husks, satisfying the longing soul seeking the peace which can only emanate from the Cross of Christ.

What They Believe. Here are some of the tenets set forth in an appendix, and quoted from the Arcana of Spiritualism:—

The spirit there [in the other world], as here, works out its own salvation.

Salvation is only attainable through growth.

There is no arbitrary decree, final judgment, or atonement for wrong, except through the suffering of the guilty.

Progressive evolution of intellectual and moral force is the endless destiny of individual spirits.

Hell and heaven are not places, but conditions of mind. Inharmony is hell; harmony, heaven.

Every individual must be a law unto himself, and draft his own creed.

The Functions of Spirits. As to these, the following extracts are specific. It is well to know that "spiritual communications are liable to err!"—

The departed, whatever may have been their moral or intellectual condition, can return and communicate through properly endued mediums. Their influence may be for evil as well as for good. Communications from spirits must thus be fallible, partaking of the nature of their source.

Curious Christians. It is amazing that any Christians who profess belief in the Bible as the Word of God can mix themselves up with such a hotch-potch of error. To any who dabble in spiritualism from ignorance or curiosity, the above sentences should prove conclusively what a travesty of revealed religion it really is. We have known some earnest people to urge that spiritualism gives them a means to convince the unbeliever of the reality of another world. But God does not need the devil's weapons to do His work with. The teaching of Scripture is unmistakably clear:—

Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God.

Hereby know we the Spirit of God; every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God; this is that spirit of anti-Christ.

They are of the world; therefore the world heareth them. We are of God. Hereby know we the Spirit of Truth and the spirit of error.

Dowieism. We wish to say as little as possible concerning the pitiful exhibition which New York is being treated to by the "prophet" Dowie. We would say nothing at all but for the fact that the man has succeeded, by means of emissaries and pamphlets, in disturbing the minds of a large number of people in this country. The best answer to his preposterous claims is the gilded palace car in which he rides, the sumptuous hotel where he resides, the costly jewels worn by his wife, the abusive language he uses towards those who differ from him, and his perpetual cry for money. New York is treating the whole affair with derision. An attack is to be next made upon London. For the honour of our Lord and of our common sense we hope that all serious people will leave the movement severely alone. It would die to-morrow if this were so.

South American Missionary Convention.

IN our special Missionary Association issue of October 8th, we intimated that it was proposed to hold a Missionary Convention, to consider all that is at present being done, and all that ought to be done by the Church of Christ, for the evangelisation of South America.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the Missionary Association, it was decided that the Conference should extend over three days, and that it should be held in the Lower Exeter Hall, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, December 9 to 11.

There will be two sessions on each day, the one in the afternoon from three to five, and the other in the evening from seven to nine. A programme of subjects and speakers is being arranged. All the British missionary organizations at present working in South America have already expressed a desire to take part in this convention. It is proposed to devote one entire session to Bible Society work in South America, one to the work of the South American Missionary Society, one to the work of the various American societies having agents in South America, one to "What Harley House has done for South America," and the other sessions to the various smaller missionary organizations and individual effort.

As it is desirable to have the whole subject dealt with as exhaustively as possible, and as there may be at work in South America or interested in missionary effort there many whose names and addresses are unknown to us, we shall be glad if all such will kindly communicate with Mr. Robert Caldwell, hon. secretary of the Missionary Association, 6, Colonial Avenue, Minories, London, E.

Fellowship with Christ.—1.

By Rev. F. J. HORSEFIELD, Bristol.

WITH multiplied conventions for the promotion of practical holiness, we hear and read much of the blessed walk with God that is the privilege, and ought to be the experience, of all His children.

Yet surely few expressions are more misunderstood, even by many who "profess and call themselves Christians," than the one that forms the title of this article; others by whom the meaning of the phrase has been clearly grasped, realize the great desirableness of the experience, but it appears to them to be quite unattainable; greatly yearning for it, they yet continually come short of it.

What is it, then, that is really meant when we speak of Fellowship with Christ? The question is an important one, and we need to get a clear conception of its true signification. It does not refer, certainly, to that high ecstatic condition of spiritual life of which we sometimes read in the biographies of the saints who have gone before us. Such mountain-top glory is but fleeting in its character, though transcendent in its nature, and but few have such rapturous experiences. Nor, on the other hand, are we thinking of that life of seclusion lived by some who vainly dream that behind the walls of monastery or convent they will be safe from the perturbations of the outside world, and able to enjoy a serene and holy fellowship with the Most High.

But the fellowship to which we are called is the habit of close, intimate, and continuous intercourse with God—an intercourse that does not take our feet out of the path of the world's toil, but brightens and hallows all life's journey. It is the lifting up of the heart while the brain toils on, or the hands are engaged in strenuous labour. It is the seeking for constant direction in the midst of all perplexities, and the drawing of all needful power from the one Source of strength.

CONSIDER THE BENEFITS

that spring from this communion with the Master.

(1) It gives stability to Christian character. We are told that on the surface of the western ocean float continually the leaves of some large marine plants. They are constantly carried to and fro by the heaving, rolling billows; swept hither and thither on the face of the great deep; yet, as the surging waves pass, their displacement is merely temporary, and they are drawn back again by some unseen power to their normal position. Far down in the depths their roots lie hidden, and have gripped with tremendous tenacity the living rock that never moves; and no matter how the tempests rage and swell above, no matter how high they are lifted by the on-rushing wave, or how low they sink when it has passed, clinging to the rock they still abide stedfast and secure. So, when in the deepest depths of our nature, our faith clings to the hidden but the Eternal and Unchanging Christ, let the storm-winds howl, let the mighty billows as they roll threaten to sweep us from our place—whether elevated by a passing wave of popularity or prosperity, or sunk into the dark depths of humiliation or suffering, or even death itself—we shall not be moved. Joy or sorrow, cloud or sunshine, success or failure, will have no power to move us, so long as our communion with Christ be unbroken.

(2) It leads to development in Christian experience. He who day by day walks with Christ will ever be going forward and upward. The walk of Elisha with his great Master has been used to illustrate this truth (2 Kings ii 1-6). See these two as they set forward on that ever-memorable journey, which was to end in the servant being endued with a double portion of his master's spirit. They start from Gilgal—the place where the reproach was "rolled away" (Josh. v. 9). All communion with our Lord must begin where our reproach has been rolled away, even at the Cross. Calvary is the Christian's Gilgal, and if we would walk in happy fellowship with our Eli-Jah we must begin there. But whilst, in a sense, we can never leave the shadow and shelter of the Cross, yet in another sense, Gilgal must be left behind, and we must press forward. Whither will the Master lead us? To Bethel—the place of revelation—with its opened heaven, its wondrous ladder, its ministering angels, and its consciousness of the nearness and protection of God (Gen. xxviii.). This always comes after blood-stained Gilgal in Christian experience—never before it. Little shall we regard the dreariness of our pathway, the loneliness of our lot, or the hardness of our pillow, with such visions as these.

But even Bethel is not the end of our journey. The Master still goes forward, and walking by His side, firmly determined not to leave Him, we shall be brought to Jericho—the place of victory by faith (Josh. vi.). Even when walking with Jesus, we shall come face to face with difficulties that will seem insurmountable; with calls to take possession, in the name of the Lord, of lands that are "walled up to heaven," and that have giants for their inhabitants. But even there shall we "shout, for the Lord hath given us the city"—we shall see the Lord fight for us, and by faith the walls of our Jericho will yet fall down. Such victory can only follow upon the spiritual Gilgal and Bethel. He who has never passed the gate of the Cross, and been with his Lord to Bethel, and had the vision of God poured upon his soul, will never reach the place of assured victory.

Surely the walk may end here! Is not this a fitting place for the servant to receive the Spirit-baptism? Not so; keeping with Elijah we are brought to Jordan—the place of separation. For the children of Israel the Jordan meant the end of their wilderness-life, and, crossing it, they passed over into the land that God had promised them—the land flowing with milk and honey. For us, too, it has a deep meaning—a death unto self and to the world, and a passing into a new state of life and liberty, of victory and rest, of blessedness and power, far exceeding all our largest thoughts. In the company of Jesus we cross the Jordan dry-shod, and then comes the glorious realization of the Spirit of our Master.

(3) It means transformed lives. It was while He held communion with His Father that Jesus was transfigured; and if we are much in prayer, dwelling daily in closest fellowship with Christ, we shall share this experience. Or, to use another illustration, would we have the shining face of Moses? It is only to be obtained by climbing up the mountain side, and tarrying with our Lord. Yet, remember that Moses "knew not that his face shone." If we seek communion only to get the glory that others may be dazzled by us, or that, seeing us, they may speak well of us rather than of our Master, then we shall find our Lord's face turned from us.

But if we seek fellowship with Christ because we love to be near Him, to hear His voice, and to do His bidding, then when at His command we go down again into the valley, lo, we shall, though all unconsciously, carry with us the very marks of the Lord's presence.

THE UNVEILING.

THE SEVEN TRUMPETS.—II.

IF, as is generally recognized, the first four Trumpets usher in God's judgments on men, not (with one exception, viii. 11) in their own persons, but in their environment—the earth, the sea, the rivers and fountains of water, and the heavenly bodies—we should expect that those which follow, announced as Woes, would be on the persons of men themselves. This is what we find in the introduction to the vision of the latter three Trumpets. These do not announce inflictions on the outward elements, but on the men who have not the seal of God on their foreheads (vii., xiv.).

Where should such judgments begin, but on the consciences of men? These three Woes coincide with the operation of the Holy Ghost upon the world: "He shall convict the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. For (1) every sin carries its sting in its own tail; (2) sin is righteously judged by God in the present life; (3) the judgment of the great white throne is final and complete.

The vision of the Second Trumpet reminds us of the mountain of Jer. li. 25, and Zech. iv. 7, of which Cyril says: "The words seem all but to rebuke the great mountain, i.e., Satan." In the vision of the Third Trumpet, a great Star was seen which had fallen out of the Heaven, burning as it were a lamp. It is generally agreed that this also is Satan. Do we find any corroboration of this in the Old Testament? Isaiah replies, "How art thou fallen from Heaven, O Lucifer (radiant one), son of the morning!"

But it may be objected, "Lucifer is the King of Babylon." True. So is King Solomon the King's Son of Psa. lxxii. But all agree that a Greater King than Solomon is there, and a Greater Sufferer than David in other Messianic Psalms. So also behind the King of Babylon, the King of Tyre, and other Princes of this world, the opened eye will discern the Prince of this world; as our Lord discerned him when he used Peter as mouthpiece, and Jesus said, "Get thee behind me, Satan" (Isa. xiv.; Ezek. xxviii.; 1 Cor. ii. 8; Matt. xvi. 23).

But would the introduction here of the Great Enemy be in harmony with the structure and tenor of this prophecy of the Unveiling? Surely, yes. We have the Three Persons of the Godhead brought before us in various relationships; we have angels and men; the bride and the harlot; the Wild Beasts inspired by Satan; and Satan himself: in other visions; and we have heard our Lord exclaim in the Gospel, "I beheld Satan like lightning fall from heaven." It is, therefore, quite according to scale, and according to the tenor of these consecutive visions (not necessarily consecutive events—indeed, evidently not so) that Lucifer should be seen as the burning mountain cast into the sea; as the falling star like a burning lamp, whose name is Wormwood; and again, under the Fifth Trumpet, as the star which had fallen, to whom was given the key of the bottomless pit.

SYMBOLS IN REVELATION VIII.

The third of the earth, etc. The third—a large proportion, but less than half—seems to signify a severe but far short of an exhaustive judgment. For our God does not willingly afflict or grieve the children of men. Mercy rejoices against judgment.

A great mountain burning with fire cast into the sea. The burnt mountain of Jer. li. 25; the great mountain of Zech. iv. 7, that before Zerubbabel shall become a plain—Satan.

A great star which fell out of the Heaven burning as a lamp. Lucifer—the radiant one—of Isa. xiv. 12:

"How art thou fallen from Heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning."—Satan.

Three Woe Trumpets. Signals of severer judgments, not on men's surroundings, but on men themselves—those not having the seal of God on their foreheads (vii. xiv.).

The late Mrs. D. L. Moody.

RECALLING the death of Mrs. D. L. Moody we have been privileged with a few particulars of her fragrant life. Her sister, Mrs. Sharp, of South Woodford, informs us that her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Revell, were both devoted Christians. The former was in business as a boat builder at Battersea. The family (with the exception of the daughter who is now Mrs. Sharp, who remained with an aunt) went to the United States when Emma was but six years of age.

Emma was always full of variety and good spirits, and at the same time thoughtful for everybody's welfare, and "a born peace-maker." A joy of that quiet home, she grew up in an atmosphere of spirituality, and from childhood manifested a desire to take part in Christian work.

While filling a position as teacher in the High School at Chicago, Miss Revell was also occupied with Sunday-school work; and it was at the North Star Mission in Chicago that she first met her future husband. Married at the age of nineteen, she found, of course, multiplied opportunities for witnessing, both at Chicago and, later, at Northfield in connection with the labours for Christ of which the life of Mr. Moody was so full. The couple were admirably matched: he, the embodiment of force and acuteness, she of quiet wisdom and sympathy. After her husband passed to his rest she continued, until health failed, not only to maintain a prime interest in all that has made "Northfield" a household word, but to carry on those classes which were peculiarly her own. She taught her Sunday-school class up till last month, and had not long felt compelled by growing weakness to give up the women's meetings at her own house, which had been times of refreshment and encouragement. Her Bible-classes were frequently attended by ministers of various denominations. Among all who knew her, her memory will remain as that of a gracious lady of simple habits of life and practical piety, of a sweet disposition and transparent Christian character.

APPRECIATION By Dr. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

When in 1862 Dwight L. Moody married Emma C. Revell, there was consummated one of those unions which perfectly realised the late Joseph Cook's dictum that "True marriage is the result of supreme affection between two." In such union as this, there is exemplified the glory of love's young dream, not fading into the dull grey of the commonplace, but growing from the first flush of morning to the full radiance of noontide light and heat.

I have no hesitation in saying that next to the abandonment of his life to Christ, the most influential factor for good in the career of the great evangelist, was his marriage.

Mrs. Moody was in many respects the counterpart of her husband, and, therefore, the most fitting companion and helpmeet for him through all the busy years of his strenuous life and service. She was his closest comrade, in all the profoundest senses of the sacred word, fulfilling that highest function of creating Home. In her presence he ever seemed at rest, and none could fail to note the quiet light and peace, manifest in his face, when in her presence.

And now, not quite four years after his translation, she also has crossed the bar, and free from all the limitations of the earth life, has passed to the limitless life, to join him in the fellowship of that service which is perfect and unceasing.

To those who have observed her since the passing of her beloved, it has been evident that her heart was elsewhere. Not that she has repined, for nothing was more marked than the quiet dignity and strength with which she bore her sorrow, being ever ready to speak with her more intimate friends of the loved one gone before. Neither had she lost interest in all the affairs of the schools, Bible institutes, and conferences. To the last she was devoted to their welfare, and in council entered into the burden of their continued prosperity. And yet, there was a sacred aloofness which forbade intrusion, and one ever felt that the present was characterized by some memories which were ever merging into the joy of a great hope.

While, therefore, to-day our heart is sad for our friends, her beloved children, we cannot but be glad for her that she has gone home to her Lord, and in His presence found again the one "loved long since and lost awhile."

Mrs. Moody was a woman of queenly grace, beautiful by nature in face and character, and yet beautified more exceedingly by the grace of God. There was ever about her the atmosphere of motherliness. Her solicitous look at those in sorrow, her gentle touch of sensitive sympathy, and the music of a voice restful and tender, made her just such a woman as one would naturally turn to in troublous times. Yet with all, she was characterized by great soundness of judgment, and a keen sense of humour. The first was never obtruded, and the last never boisterous. Where help was sought, however, her judgment was rarely at fault, and her appreciation of humour rendered her views singularly sane, and free from the slightest suspicion of fanaticism. She was of such natural refinement that anything loud or vulgar seemed almost impossible in her presence.

Her husband expressed the truth concerning her most beautifully when, after apportioning to his children their work, and being asked "what of her?" he replied, "Oh, she is like Eve, the mother of us all."

Her passing makes us conscious anew of the burdens and responsibilities resting upon her children, and to them our hearts go out to-day in tenderness and sympathy. The life-work of D. L. Moody was so great as to create heavy burdens for those upon whom devolved the oversight of the institutions so closely connected with his name; and now they are not only without the guidance of his strong mind and splendid will, but also without the restful sympathy and wise direction of her tender love. Yet we have no fear; for, from such parentage as this, children have come who are proving their fitness for responsibilities so great; and, above all, we rejoice to remember that they are still led, and will be sustained, by that God out of whose Infinite being such fatherhood and motherhood both came. It is for us, who in the outer circle of friendship loved those that have gone, to enter into fellowship in prayer with those who remain.

The Overcoming Life.

BIBLE READINGS.—III.

THE rich inheritance of overcoming saints both here and hereafter. This is sevenfold:—

No hard and fast line of separation in Spiritual things between the Here and the Hereafter. Death does not divide, it only amplifies.

(1) Eternal life (John x. 28). Sustained by fruit of Tree of Life (Rev. ii. 7; xxii. 2, 14).

(2) Kingship over life and death (Rev. i. 6; v. 10). Through faithful endurance (Rev ii. 10).

(3) Priesthood (Rev. i. 6; v. 10. (a) Sustained by hidden bread (Rev. ii. 17; see also John vi. 35). (b) Right of access into holiest of all (see Heb. x. 19, 20), by white stone—Urim and Thummim, i.e., lights and perfections (see Deut. xxxiii. 8). (c) A New Name because New born (Rev. ii. 17).

(4) Victory over error and sin, heralding in the Reign of Eternal Truth, Righteousness, and Love (Rev. ii. 26, 28).

(5) Perfect purity and public recognition of Sonship (Rev. iii. 5).

(6) Supporter of God's Sanctuary. Security—Heavenly Citizenship and Sonship. As additional honor, given Christ's Own New Name. Compare (3c) A new name (Rev. iii. 12).

(7) Share Christ's honor and glory (Rev. iii. 21).

These are all gathered up into one splendid promise of possessing God himself, inheriting all these things, and being God's Son (Rev. xxi. 7).

Village Pastors' Conference.

THIS conference is looked forward to as eagerly by the Church at Abbey Road as by the pastors attending, if one may judge by the warmth of feeling displayed on both sides. It differs from most, in that the wives are invited and the "fares" supplied.

Impressed with the loneliness of many a village pastor, the conference was called into existence some eight or nine years since, and has furnished quite a centre of quiet joy to those invited from the home counties and East Anglia—pastors whose salaries would vary from £60 to £90 per year.

The first day's conference, after a season of devotion, concerned "The Business Side of Church Life," introduced in a wise and pungent address by Pastor Andrews, from Drayton Parslow. One learned how dependent a village church may be upon one man as to the orderliness, carefulness, and generosity in church life. That man may be a deacon or the pastor, and either may be far from businesslike themselves. Strong emphasis was laid upon the necessity in rural districts of the minister not touching the moneys of the church. He may have to do all the arranging, in a word, all the business, yet should not handle the moneys. In some hamlets this presented great difficulty, for the pastor is the man most trusted by the Church. It is the tongue of the outsider, the sneer of those who would use any stick to beat an honest worker, that makes mischief.

The afternoon was spent in quite another direction, Pastor T. Varley's theme being "Tact and Adaptability in Preaching." He led the assembly to the absolute necessity of complete dependence upon the Spirit of God in preparation and deliverance of the message; he instanced the knowledge the village pastor has of his congregation; the difference the absence or presence of some may make; and the necessity not to leave out of his message some suitable truth for those who may be unexpectedly among his hearers. To do this wisely, reliance upon the guidance of the Holy Spirit is the worker's only hope. Rev. James Douglas (Brixton) added words of counsel, much enjoyed.

On the second day, Pastor F. H. White (Talbot Tabernacle) gave an address. In tender and intensely earnest tones he led thought to the pastoral epistles, and with swift insight showed the subtle enmity of the adversary in trying to weaken faith in the Word of God. To see pastor and wife drinking in the truth unfolded with eagerness on every feature, was proof how timely was his message.

"What are the Texts that have Best Served us?" was introduced by Pastor Byard in the afternoon. Some remarkable statements were made as to the different results arising from the same sermon preached under changed conditions. One text and sermon preached in one chapel, with, as far as could be known, no results, was preached in another chapel, and over one hundred trace their conversion thereto. The evening meeting, presided over by Mr. Councillor Green, was devoted to the effect of the Education Act in villages. The chairman and every speaker had their goods either awaiting distraint or already sold. Pastor Sarson (Offord) came straight from the sale of his goods for the rate.

Thursday opened with the ever-present subject of "Visiting." Pastor J. Barnes threw fresh light upon an old theme, and again one felt how different the position of the village pastor was from those in towns. Pastor Gooding handled with skill and great sense the question of "What Evangelistic Services were Best Suited to the Village?" The consensus of opinion was that the pastor was the best evangelist, and he ought to keep at it all the year round, calling to his aid such help as would widen the circle of his influence. The evening meeting was presided over by Mr. D. Clarke, J.P. (High Wycombe). After his helpful and stimulating address, Pastors Hurditch and Curtis spoke, the latter dealing with "The Lord's Supper; its Proper Place in our Churches"—a most refreshing and heart-searching word, at the close of which we gathered around the table of our Lord.—S.

Other Lands.

Field-Work in South Africa.

THE wonderful work organized and carried out during the war in South Africa by Mr. and Mrs. Osborn Howe is described in brief in an illustrated report, with statement of accounts, just issued. With the assistance of a staff of workers, the troops were helped in a variety of ways; and while comforts were distributed in many centres, much was done to bring the men under the power of Gospel truth and Christian influence.

To give extracts from the booklet seems like recalling an oft-told tale, but in some particulars the story is well worth repetition. We read of the superintendents of the Camp Homes, that they served and worked with their assistants and orderlies, and in addition they had their own often difficult and responsible tasks. "None were appointed to fill the post of superintendent who were not able to conduct the nightly meeting and give a simple Gospel address. Of this duty we ourselves relieved them during the weeks or days spent in each camp. For the hospitals especially we valued the help of these workers. They provided the patients with books, writing materials, handkerchiefs, and other comforts, and carried to them God's messages of hope and peace. The hospitals were always open to workers from the Camp Homes, and we have a grateful recollection of the kindness and courtesy invariably received by ourselves and our staff from the medical authorities, as well as from the superintending and nursing sisters.

"For some months we had the valued help of our friend, Rev. Gelson Gregson. He visited several of the Camp Homes in succession. As he was known to have had long experience in temperance and mission work among soldiers in India, the men came readily to his meetings, and many recognized him as their Indian friend. Some of the Homes had a short visit occasionally from Rev. David Russell, and other colonial ministers, as well as from Army chaplains. Several of the Army Scripture Readers also came; they, like all our other guests, were made honorary members of the workers' mess, having in addition the shelter of a tent; and often remained for some weeks, doing their own special work in the hospitals during the day, and conducting our meetings in the evening."

OUR READERS' GIFTS.

In a letter to ourselves, Mr. and Mrs. Howe say:—"You do not know what the sums your readers sent meant in the first year of the work—a year of great privation. The donations enabled us to go on till we secured the strong position we afterwards did with the military." From the proceeds of the work Mr. and Mrs. Howe gave £6,294 11s. 6d. to other missions to soldiers. The donations and subscriptions received by them amounted to £3,237 7s. 1d.; but the proceeds of the work amounted to so large a sum that they were able to give away more than they in the first instance received; hence they are able to say: "We paid for all the work of the twenty-seven Homes, and gave away over £3,000 to others. Surely unique! But we only were able to do this because of your help. We thank God, and we thank you."

Lyons Y.M.C.A.—Friends who have interested themselves in the cause of young men in Lyons have the satisfaction of seeing the Y.M.C.A. in the city continue to flourish. The number of members is increasing and their activities growing in useful directions. Young men who undoubtedly would have gone astray amid the multifarious temptations of the city have found in the homely rooms of the Association protection and help and Christian fellowship. Some of the local supporters having recently passed away, it is hoped that others elsewhere will be found ready to take their places, since the work of the Association is being attended with so many encouraging results. The president is Mons. Th. Blanc, 5, Cours Lafayette, Lyons.

Bible-Work in Georgia.

THREE Northfield missionaries, Mrs. Barker, Miss McNaughton, and Miss E. Jones, have been itinerating in the Southern States, labouring at Camden and Lucknow, S.C. Many souls were won for the Master.

Mrs. Barker was impressed by the opportunities for extension of the Northfield work in the south. An organization was started, with the approval of Northfield, for finding a suitable location and launching the scheme.

Mrs. Barker now writes: "We were led to come to Toccoa, Ga., to look at a location for the proposed Industrial and Bible-Training School, for which we have been praying for the last two years. In South Carolina alone there are eleven thousand persons over the age of ten years who can neither read nor write, and there are men and women who do not know who Jesus is. In Georgia the condition is equally sad, and we feel something must be done. The property is valued at 25,000dols., and of this sum 12,000dols. are already promised. We look for the rest to others who feel that we should secure this place for the education and evangelization of these poor people."

If, as is hoped, the plan comes to fruition, Dr. C. I. Scofield, long identified with Northfield, and Miss Hitchcock will be in immediate charge of the conferences. The Atlanta News, in commenting upon Mrs. Barker's efforts, says: "If the school is established, its influence will extend not only through Georgia, but through the whole south."

Our Young Men Abroad.

AFTER some five years work among young men in Burma, I have come home with the conviction that the need for this work is not realized by the Christian public as it ought to be. There is danger that amidst the splendid missionary activity of the present day, we forget our obligations towards the young men of these countries, who leave our shores in increasing numbers every year.

If in the homeland, where churches and Christian institutions abound, and where there is the influence of home and mother and sister and friend, there is yet need for a special effort among young men, what must the need be for a similar work in the foreign cities, where none of these influences are to be found, but in their place influences which tend to demoralise and drag down?

I know of no organization more fitted to meet this need than the Young Men's Christian Association: and I am borne out in this statement not only by the testimony of officials and residents in the East, but by the unqualified commendations accorded at the late Decennial Conference in Madras. A well-equipped, well-officered association planted in the foreign city is not only a home and place of refuge for our young men who go abroad, but becomes a centre of ever-widening Christian influence, the value of which it is hard to exaggerate.

I am appealing to home friends for the sum of £6,000 to put up much-needed premises in Rangoon. The growth of the work, the crowded state of the present premises and their unsuitability, the exorbitant rent of over £400, all force us to a forward movement which we dare not hesitate to take. The people of Rangoon have already given nearly £2,000, and the Government of Burma have not only given a good site on reasonable terms, but in recognition of the work have given a cash grant of over £500 towards the building.

Bible Study by Business Men.—Under the title of "The Merchantman," the annual report of Spiers and Pond's Staff Bible-Class has been issued. In addition to meetings for study of the Word, which are fairly well attended, a branch of the International Bible-Reading Association has been formed, and practical interest is taken in such beneficent institutions as the Bible Society and Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

To Help Converted Priests.

THE many friends who aided the inauguration of the Home-Refuge for Converted Priests in Rome will rejoice that the object of the promoters is being attained in an encouraging degree. Each succeeding year emphasizes anew the need which exists in Italy's capital for a door to be open to priests throwing off the yoke of Rome. Last year was the most satisfactory in the history of the institution, and applications for admission have been more numerous than ever. Unfortunately a large number have been refused on account of the limited accommodation.

A well-attended meeting was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday last in the interests of the Home, and to meet Rev. Cav. W. Burt, D.D., and Signor B. Cozza, an ex-priest. Mrs. W. R. ARBUTHNOT (president of the Women's Protestant Union) occupied the chair, and spoke in sympathetic terms of what is being accomplished for converted priests. Signor COZZA gave a vigorous address in Italian, which was interpreted by Dr. Burt. Speaking as one who has gone through the entire curriculum and taken the orders of a priest, he dealt with their disadvantages and limitations in the matter of experience and knowledge, with the result that they were without means of earning a livelihood when free from Rome.

There are many who have been enlightened by the Holy Spirit who earnestly desire to leave the Roman Catholic Church for the liberty of the Gospel, as found in the Evangelical Churches. When they take this step they realize the poverty of their studies, and, having learnt no trade or profession, they are at a loss to know what course to take. It is then that the Home-Refuge opens its door, providing them with shelter and taking steps to fit them for some employment.

In the course of an informing address, Dr. BURT pointed to the contrast which Italy presents to-day compared with what she was thirty-five years ago. He spoke of the independence and prosperity which are now enjoyed. Referring to the Home-Refuge in Rome, he urged the need for immediate steps being taken to secure a suitable house to provide accommodation for at least twenty-five ex-priests.

Miss BARBOUR, who came directly from Connemara, related recent experiences in the conflict with Rome in the West of Ireland, telling of steady progress in spite of difficulties.

Open Doors in Argentina.

WRITING recently from Cardoba, Mr. John Linton tells of many open doors in Argentina, and gives the following particulars which reveal something of the spiritual desolation of this part of South America. "In this republic there are thirteen provinces with scarcely any Gospel work being done. Entre Rios, with a population of 240,000, has only one city occupied. Corrientes also has a population of 240,000. One city may have a resident worker, but I was offered the vacancy there, and am not sure whether it has been filled. This province is nearly an island, and has railways and large towns; but needs heralds of the King.

"Santa Fè has 350 colonies without the Gospel. Its large city, Rosario, has a number of workers; but in the province little is done. Cardoba has 350,000 inhabitants; while its capital is occupied, the eight towns on the railways are not. San Lius and Santiago del Estero are both without a witness for Christ. Tucuman is a small, rich province with great need for workers; Mendoza, with eleven towns, each with an average of over 7,000 souls, but no evangelistic work organized.

Beside these, are five large provinces, with a population of over 400,000, with no witnesses for Christ among them, and the same is the case in many towns in Buenos Ayres."

Mr. Linton appeals to friends to give the Gospel to those who have it not, and adds: "The Church of Rome is warning the people against us and the Bible, in vigorous terms." Mr. B. F. Babcock, 4, Water Street, Liverpool, will be glad to give information to friends interested in the "Neglected Continent."

SUNDAY, November 1. Proverbs xvii.

MAXIMS for the Home. The dry morsel with peace contrasted with the feasting and strife is very suggestive! The value of a wise servant and his recompense (2); the merry prattle of the grandchildren, and the pleasure of their grandparents (6); the different methods of correcting faults (10); the sorrow that a child of depraved or obstinate disposition may introduce into a home (21, 25); the value of a merry heart and of a cool and collected spirit (22, 27)—all these are elements that distinguish ill or well-ordered homes, as much in our own land to-day, as in Palestine in the days of Solomon.

Friendship (9, 17). Friends, in these verses, are such as are joined to one another, or are associated in familiar and loving bonds. Needless to say, the decisive test of friendship is the day of adversity. When the dark clouds lower over us, false friends make excuses and leave us, and we begin to discover who is a friend indeed. Let us make much of friends like this, not stinting our words of loving gratitude through any motives of modesty or reserve. Let us remember that friendship may be nipped by a night's frost or a day's east wind; and once hurt in its heart, it can never be quite the same. Above all, the love of Jesus will never fail. He, indeed, "loveth at all times"; is nearest when our need is worst.

Maxims of the Outer World. Do not listen to mischievous speech, or be glad at another man's calamity. Cover transgressions against yourself, and do not harp on disagreeable matters. Never reward good with evil; stop contention at the very commencement, lest the trickling stream eat away the dyke, and the tide rush in on the land; spare your words, and do not talk about subjects with which you are imperfectly acquainted. Let these maxims regulate our life and speech.

MONDAY, November 2. Proverbs xviii.

The Use and Abuse of the Tongue. How much our life, and the happiness or otherwise of our homes, are affected by our use of the royal gift of speech! The fruits that grow on the tongue-tree are death and life. The tongue yields death to those who misuse it, as well as to those who are addressed, whilst it yields life to those who use it aright, besides imparting life to others (4, 21). As for the fool, his state of heart is revealed by his foolish talk (2); and he greatly aggravates his condition by the licence he gives to his speech. Men are condemned by their own lips, and they inflict their own sentence. Speech is here likened to deep waters and a flowing brook (4), the fool's mouth (6, 7), the words of the whisperer (8), the effect of a plausible way of putting things (17), the fruit of a man's mouth (20), the mighty issues of speech (21), the rough answer of the rich (23). Evidently the Hebrews paid more attention to the shades of language, than we are for the most part accustomed to do. We do not sufficiently realize the marvellous opportunities of speech for good or evil.

The Processes of the Law. Throughout the Proverbs there is a frequent glimpse of the assize courts of the time. Here we have allusions to the acquittal of the wicked as against the condemnation of the righteous before an unrighteous tribunal (5); the folly of pronouncing on only one side of a case (13, 17); the effect of a bribe (16); the oppression of the poor man by the rich, and his bitter pleadings (23). The Easterns are very litigious.

The Best Defence of Life. Every man needs a stronghold. Happy are they who make their refuge in the name and character of Jehovah—who run there from every storm of temptation or sorrow for safety. But many would far prefer a handsome balance at the bank (10, 11)! When will the unseen and eternal be more precious than the ephemeral possessions which can be stolen by thieves and eaten by rust!

TUESDAY, November 3. Proverbs xix.

We boast and use our freedom, and as we review the steps of our life in the past, we know that there has been no compulsion to evil; we have followed the devices and desires of our own hearts. Some evil thing solicited from outside, conscience dissuaded from within, the balance hung evenly between the two, until we cast the weight of our choice into the scale.

2. Here is the man who acts without due knowledge, and by impulse—he misses his way (R.V., marg.). How often we have made great mistakes by our headstrong resolve to have our own way, and complete disregard of the prudent counsels which our friends have offered! To be still before God is the highest prudence.

8. There is a way of life and salvation which is open to every man. It is our own blindness and wilfulness which are our ruin. If we would pay heed, if only we were serious and thoughtful, if we would set ourselves to find the highest wisdom and understanding, we should secure the salvation of our souls.

20. The command of this chapter is, Hear counsel, i.e., look well round a matter, let it be discussed from various standpoints, ask the advice of friends. "Every purpose is established by counsel."

21. The one source of counsel which never deceives or fails us, is in God. It is useless to lay our plans, and then ask Him to bless them; it becomes us rather to ask what His plans are, and then keep step with Him, helping to the realization of His holy will.

23. To allow one's life to be ruled by the will of God is to be satisfied. Ah, what rest and peace it is when one has no will but His! Christ is the Way on which no lion or ravening beast is found.

29. But for those who live after their own counsels, there are judgments and strifes, by an inevitable Nemesis.

WEDNESDAY, November 4. Proverbs xx.

What a striking picture we have in Proverbs of the characters and interests of the people of that age! They are presented in thumbnail sketches. The brawling drunkard, filling the street with noise (1); the group of quarrellers at the tavern, from whom the good man keeps aloof (3); the slothful, who procrastinates his ploughing, because he says the weather is unsuitable, and whose fields are bare in harvest (4); the just man who, as he walks along the street, elicits salutations of respect from all, and whose children follow in his steps (7); the store, where there are false measures and weights (10, 23); the boy, whose eyes look you in the face, and whose doings evince the simplicity and purity of his disposition (11); the buyer who depreciates the salesman's goods and pretends not to need them, that he may bring down the price, and then boast of his bargain (14); the unsophisticated man, who is foolish enough to be surety for a stranger, and has to smart for it (10); the gossiping talebearer, of whom you need to beware (19); the man who wants to take the law into his own hands, and avenge himself (22); the rash man, who under the impulse of the moment makes vows that he cannot or will not keep (25); the young in their glorious strength, the old with their venerable white hair (29)—all these pass before us, as we stand in the porch of the House of Wisdom. Life then was much the same as it is to-day.

Let us take with us as our motto that wonderful 27th verse, and ask God's Spirit to light up the candle of our souls. Men are like rows of unlit candles till the Spirit touches them with the Divine Fire; then they become burning and shining lights.

THURSDAY, November 5. Proverbs xxi.

The Inner and the Outward Life interjoin in the opening verses—the king's heart (1), the weighed heart (2), the proud heart (4), the thoughts of the diligent (5), the pure heart (8). Then the doing of justice and judgment, which are more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice (3), as contrasted with the way of him who is laden with guilt (5).

The Peaceful Heart is also described, which retires into the corner of the housetop to give a wide berth to a shrewish tongue (9), and chooses rather a desert and uninhabited land than the fret of daily contention (19). The best way for keeping calm in the midst of inevitable confusion and strife, is also given in ver. 23.

The Lot of the Wicked is also frequently referred to. They get treasures, but they vanish away as a vapour or meteor (6); their violence presently generates an avalanche that sweeps them away (7); they desire to aggrandise themselves at the expense of others (10); they are ultimately overthrown (12, 18); they often become the ransom of the righteous (18); they are spendthrift of treasure (20); their religious observances are distasteful to the Almighty (27); and they harden their hearts and faces, and think to prevail against God with their horses and chariots; but they are overthrown in the heart of the sea, as Pharaoh was (29-31).

Pity and Goodness are Insisted on. Note verse 13, and ponder verses 30, 31. Victory is from the Lord (see R.V.). Who is he that overcometh, save that he has received the all-conquering Lord to live in his heart!

FRIDAY, November 6. Proverbs xxii.

How to behave to the poor is a recurring note in this chapter (see vv. 2, 7, 9, 16, 22, 23). There are some to whom life is a continuous struggle. They have no margin to fall back on in case of sickness or disaster. Theirs is casual employment, from which at any moment they may be discharged. If they keep themselves above want, the margin between them and it is a very narrow one. Such are God's peculiar charge. (Compare v. 28, and xxiii. 10, 11.) To oppress the poor is to reproach his Maker; but he that hath mercy on the destitute honoureth Him. (Compare xiv. 31 and xvii. 5.) To have pity on the poor is to lend to the Lord, with the certainty that He will repay (xix. 17). This is the result of long experience, embodied in a proverbial saying, and endorsed by the Holy Spirit. God's special interest is elicited by the mute cry of need, which goes up to Him from the creatures which He has made, and for whom He is therefore responsible.

But if God favours the cause of the poor, He will surely act as their champion, and whenever ill treatment, injustice, and neglect are meted out to them by the rich or avaricious, He becomes their avenger. Wait to see how these "corners" thrive, which run up the prices of the necessaries of life—for by the laws of the universe their promoters will come to beggary! Wait, and you will see how God will avenge the crofters, driven out of their holdings to make room for the butchery of God's innocent live creatures! Widows and orphans who read these words, take your need and complaints to God!

SATURDAY, November 7. Proverbs xxiii.

The Pleasures of the Table. First, beware of gluttony (1-3, 6-8). Probably as many men have been slain by over-eating as by over-drinking. Take care to eat only to support and nourish strength, that you may do God's work in the world, and avoid anything that would clog and impair digestion. Next, beware of drunkenness (29-35). It breeds sorrows and wounds; pleasant as it is to the taste, it begets an appetite that becomes insatiable; it fills the mind with strange fancies; it imperils a man's life as though he were to sleep on the top of a mast; it makes him oblivious to shame and pain. The ancient Egyptians used cups at the bottom of which a serpent was depicted, so that as the draught was emptied, the fangs of the serpent threatened the drunkard. How true this is in actual life!

The Instruction of the Young (12-26). No sphere of influence is to be compared with that of a parent. Carlyle said: "I am the eldest child, and trace deeply in myself the character of both parents, also the upbringing and example of both." We must as parents do our uttermost duty, not sparing severity where grievous faults require it, but for the most part moulding and influencing by our love and consistent character. Pray that your young folk may listen to the pleading love of God, who asks that they should give Him their hearts (26).

Protecting the Innocent.

THE Purity Campaign which Mr. James Marchant is pursuing, in advocacy of the objects of the National Vigilance Association, is making good progress. After addressing meetings in various parts of the provinces with much acceptance, Mr. Marchant came to London last week and spoke to an interested audience at Greenwich.

Rev. S. Martyn Bardsley, Vicar of Greenwich, who presided, urged the need to arouse the consciences of the people regarding the condition of the streets. We live in a fool's paradise, closing our eyes to the evil that is around. To a large extent the law is on the side of purity, but public opinion does not properly support the authorities. We must make the standard of purity the same for men as for women. How unjust that a betrayed girl should be treated as an outcast, while the villain responsible for her downfall goes "scot free"! We need an equal treatment to prevail in society. As to the legalization of vice, it must not be countenanced, since awful harm results from the official recognition of sin in encouraging men in wrong-doing.

Mr. Marchant, who followed, dwelt on the necessity to uplift the standard of righteousness in the interests of the rising generation. There should be no place on our hoardings for demoralizing posters, no place in any town for resorts of vice, no place on any bookstall for impure literature, no place in any country for the carrying on of the "White Slave" traffic. Much has been wrought through the Purity agitation. The Billposters' Censorship Association destroyed considerable quantities of posters in a single year, rather than sanction their being exhibited. Large quantities of improper photographs and picture post-cards have also been destroyed through the action of the National Vigilance Association.

Proceeding, Mr. Marchant gave a vivid description of the "White Slave" traffic, and showed that the slavers have a network of organization on the Continent and at home for the purpose of alluring and securing victims. Happily, the interest aroused by Mr. W. A. Coote's visits to European capitals has led to a better understanding, and the question is being taken up with energy by the various Governments. In telling words Mr. Marchant appealed for public sympathy and support in the Association's endeavours to suppress the traffic, and gave striking descriptions of the effectual efforts made by their representatives to shield helpless girls, and protect them from the decoys who frequent our railway stations and streets.

Other speakers were Rear-Admiral May, Mr. R. S. Jackson (Mayor of Greenwich), and Mr. J. H. Benn.

Mr. Marchant has also addressed five influential meetings at Woolwich. Three were for men, at the Polytechnic, when the large hall was crowded, and the audiences deeply moved; and one at Woolwich Tabernacle (Rev. John Wilson's), when a large congregation assembled to help forward the purity cause.

Pauper Burials.—At a recent meeting of the Greenwich Board of Guardians statements were made as to the burial of paupers which almost make one doubt if we are living in a Christian country:—"People cried 'Shame' when the coffin was brought along. The ends of the coffin had been sawn and not planed. The name plate was not decipherable. The 'boxes' were shaped like coffins, but there was a space under the lid, and people could see the daylight through." The clergyman who conducted the funeral in question said he had "got used to that kind of thing," although when he first saw these boxes they struck him "as being in accord with workhouse traditions of the worst kind." Can we wonder at the aversion of the deserving poor to the workhouse!

Friendless and Fallen.

SOME striking instances of rescue and encouragement are given by Mr. W. J. Taylor in the October "Notes" of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution.

"About three months ago a lady called at the office of the Institution respecting the admission of two girls in whom she was interested. Before leaving she told the secretary of another woman, W. M., who was an inmate of one of the Homes nearly fifteen years ago. She is now happily married, and fulfilling the duties of a virtuous wife and mother. The lady who made the report has been in touch with the girl ever since she left the Home, and related the incident as an encouragement to the supporters of this Mission, and also to show that efforts made on behalf of young women and girls often bear good fruit 'after many days.'

"'Unless she goes to a home for training and discipline she will have to go to prison, and it is desirable to save her from this.' These words, quoted from the case of L.M.A., must be interpreted to mean that the magistrates before whom she was charged with a very serious offence were willing to treat her mercifully, by discharging her for the purpose of entering a Home if she was willing to do so. Otherwise they would be obliged to commit her for the offence for which she was before them. She was only sixteen years of age, and she came to one of the Homes. Subsequently she was placed in service, and has done well ever since.

"B. S. had been very cruelly ill-treated before her admission to the Home. Her mother was a drunken, depraved woman, and in the habit of beating the poor child; while her father also had so ill-used and kicked her about, that she had to go to a hospital for treatment. The poor girl had been in several places of service, but lost them through her parents, who got money from her. She was placed in service at no very great distance from the Home, and in a letter received from her by the matron, she says: 'I thank you for being so good to me. I do not know how and what would have come of me if you had not looked after me.'"

The central office of this good work is at 200, Euston Road, N.W.

Evangelizing in Ireland.

THE past eight months have witnessed a new evangelistic movement in the south and west of Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims have been devoting themselves to Gospel work in these districts, and, in all, sixteen places have been visited.

An open door from the Lord has been given, and a wonderful spirit of hearing was manifested wherever the meetings were held. Again and again it was stated that numbers of those in attendance had never been in a Gospel service before, while in many places it was found that the Protestants only formed from one-tenth to one-fourth of the audience.

Hundreds of Roman Catholics listened with the deepest attention to the Gospel, even where the priest denounced the services, and paraded with his curate in front of the hall to keep the people away. "It has been remarkable," says Mr. Sims, "when the priest has interfered in one place how the Lord has opened up a wider door in another. In a village where from sixty to eighty had attended for several nights, the priest and his curate stood before the gateway on either side the street and turned the people back. The following two nights we went to a hall two miles distant and had an attendance of from 130 to 150 Roman Catholics in a country district, the farmers and their families coming from miles around."

It is encouraging to know that doors are opening everywhere for the evangelists. In some places the market-houses, holding 700 to 800 people, have been offered at a moderate rent. The evangelists hope to proceed from village to village as the way opens up, giving attention to those districts which have not been visited with lantern services in the past.

Suffering and Sin.—Settle this principle in your heart, as that which you will never depart from: that it is better for you to fall into any suffering than into the least sin. Suffering is but an external and temporal evil, but sin is a universal internal and everlasting evil.—Flavel.

Sailors at Canning Town.

INSTITUTIONS having as their object the promotion of the highest well-being of seafaring men, are always sure of a measure of practical sympathy from the Christian public, for the shares by which seamen are encountered in our ports are well-known and as widely deplored. The Welcome Home for Sailors at Canning Town ranks as one of the most valuable of such institutions. It constitutes all that its name implies, for here the sailor finds a home, a welcome, and a resting-place. When once they have reached it, seamen are surrounded by good and helpful influences. Here they can spend their time in reading or writing, meals are provided, friendly intercourse is sought, and sleeping accommodation is offered when necessary. Nor is this all.

Those who have come to know the grace of God are well aware that these sailor-men have a deeper need than any temporal ministry can supply. And this deeper need is recognised by Miss Child, whose aim is to bring those who use the home to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. Gospel meetings are held every evening and on Sundays. Then there are the daily readings of the Word of God, followed by prayer, after breakfast and tea.

Ever since its commencement this homely family worship has been a feature of the work, and the spiritual results have been seen again and again. A minister who frequently visits the Home writes:—"Some come among us who have been sadly addicted to drink and other evil habits; but prayer and effort work wonders, and many are the miracles of grace we have the joy of seeing God work in our midst. Some of the men are thoroughly destitute, having indeed been in the 'far country' and spent all in riotous living; but we thank God as we see the devil's outcasts transformed and made new creatures in Christ Jesus."

Better Days for Working People.

AT the invitation of Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the R.S.U., a large number of the voluntary teachers in the Ragged Schools of the Metropolis recently met to hear from Dr. Tolman, one of the directors of the American Institute of Social Service, something of the scope and intention of that organization. Its field of operation is the United States; but the information which it is its business to collect may be drawn from any quarter of the world.

There are now so many individual efforts being made in Christian philanthropic and social circles everywhere that it has been considered necessary that their special objects, plans of work, and results should be collected, tabulated, and placed at public disposal. This would enable any student in search of special information to become acquainted with it in its fullest detail, by calling at the chief office in New York. Already there is a staff of no fewer than forty assistants engaged in the work there. But that is not all; it is intended to open offices in all the large cities of the States, both for collection and publication. A student from the Old Country would be made free to all this information; he might even be guided to apartments of a moderate rent if he wished to remain for a time.

In the early spring of this year Dr. Tolman was deputed to visit Great Britain and the Continent to gather in details of work, and during his lecture he threw on the screen nearly 200 pictures, including the Garden City at Bournville, and its sister at Port Sunlight, together with the various institutions established for the comfort and recreation of the men and women employed. Similar model villages were shown that had been built for their employés by manufacturers in France, Germany, Belgium, and the United States.

A valuable discussion followed. One of the results of the meeting may be a further interchange of information between the United States and England, by the two Institutions that were represented at the meeting.

United Christian Evidence Brigade.—Classes for the study of Christian Evidences are being conducted by Mr. Edward Baker (founder and leader of the Brigade) on Monday evenings at Stratford Conference Hall, and on Thursday evenings at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse. The opening lecture on "The Value of Christian Evidence Study" was a well-considered and thoughtful statement of the need for such study on the part of Christian believers, to fit them for facing the conflict with unbelief.

A Liverpool Retrospect.

By Rev. S. R. MACPHAIL, D.D.,
Moderator, Presbyterian Church of England.

SOME years previous to Dr. Torrey's visit to this country, I had become acquainted with his writings, and thus learned his attitude to Scripture, to the leading doctrines of grace, to the fundamental requirement of regeneration in order to the manifestation of a Divine life, and to the evangelistic methods whereby men are brought face to face with the necessity of conversion in its scientific sense of placing an object into the power of an intelligence able to evolve out of it a new product corresponding to the will and skill of the wielder of the converting power.

In all this I felt my own life experience was in agreement with Dr. Torrey. I found also in what I read much and varied evidence that the Holy Ghost was upon him, and used him to become His vessel, through whom He was ministered unto men for newness of life.

In consequence of these convictions, I was prepared to welcome Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander on their proposed visit to this city. Our local preparations were disappointing in several respects, and the services had to struggle through influences and indifference which might well have become serious had our God not rendered them innocuous.

REMARKABLE RESPONSES.

One night one-tenth of the entire audience responded to the summons to make an avowal of having there and then accepted God's salvation. This was in a meeting entirely composed of men and boys.

If, however, some of the methods of drawing in the net were felt to be trying, there was, on my part at least, no feeling but one of profoundest satisfaction and profit under the manifold presentation of Scripture truth—that less popular equally with that most popular. One felt as if again sitting under the searching old-fashioned preaching of some Highland minister deeply versed in Bible knowledge and scientific theology. It is true the words and the positions taken were winged with telling life-sketches, mostly of personal experience, and in that they recalled corresponding preaching in the days of such apostolic men as were household names, and, sometimes, household presences, in the days of youth.

There was an almost cruel thoroughness in probing conscience as to those things which could be indulged in, consistent with a real purpose to act without grieving the Spirit. But those of us who had passed through revival times and knew, by direct contact, the heart-searchings and the life-prunings of such times, felt that these piercings "to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, the joints and marrow," were no more than the voice of God's Word driven home by the hand of one who had personally known and felt what was demanded to put life into close and sufficient relations to the powers of the invisible world.

It was a great surprise to find the marvellous response such solid, massive, and dogmatical teaching secured. This feeling was no doubt the result of mere human judgment, in a temporary oblivion that "not enticing words of man's wisdom," but demonstration of the Spirit and of power, are the instruments whereby God meets and saves men. The fundamental requisites of the Atonement and of conversion were as firmly driven home as they had ever been in the writings of Evangelical teachers in past times. The suitableness of these great provisions to restore life and character from the thraldom of years of sin, as well as from the natural erring of early years, was visible in the impression made in every service upon the hearts of those, of all ages, who came forward as having resolved no more to live as before, but to take Jesus Christ henceforth as Lord and Master.

IN OVER FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE

of work of this kind, I have never seen so much pains taken with inquirers to instruct them from Scripture regarding the import and the conditions of the step taken in professing to receive Jesus Christ. This was done at the close of every service at which inquirers were asked to proclaim their presence. A point of considerable importance was noted in these services, which reflects somewhat on one of our common contentions at present. It is frequently said that we cannot expect young persons, as boys and girls, to profit by our pulpit ministry, unless we introduce a specially-prepared portion for them. It was not so proved under Dr. Torrey's teaching. Every service drew out a large number of boys and girls to make confession, as well as those of riper years. And now, some weeks after the mission has closed, there were some hundreds of these present at the new converts' meetings which continue to be held.

DEALING WITH BACKSLIDERS.

Those of us who took part in dealing with inquirers were struck with the large number who described themselves as backsliders. As usual, these were the most difficult to persuade of the Divine provision for their case. Among such there have been some remarkable instances, not only of "return," but of energetic effort, already largely blessed, in seeking others.

While the specifically evangelistic services were the source of blessing to thousands, according to their own profession, those meetings in which Christians were more particularly tried and stimulated by Bible truth were certainly not less helpful and corrective. Dr. Torrey seemed to be always reaching his greatest strength the more he entered into truth pertaining to Christian life and service. More searching and stimulating addresses, every sentence of which seemed cased in Scripture armour, one could not hear; and the secret places of the soul's life with God seemed to be brought under a search-light which was often much more convincing than comfortable.

SOME OF US MINISTERS

will never forget the hour we spent apart with Dr. Torrey; and many felt grateful to Dr. Whyte, of Edinburgh, whose letter regarding Dr. Torrey's words to ministers in his city had led several of our ministry here to attend that meeting. He oft refreshed my own spirit and strengthened my faith, but that hour was supreme in its brotherly contact with need in many regions of soul-conflict and life-disquiet.

A very great responsibility rests on us here regarding all this work now begun. We need some Barnabas, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, who would come and see this grace of God and rejoice in it, and who would be able through the Holy Ghost to persuade these thousands among us "with purpose of heart to cleave unto the Lord."

MR. ALEXANDER'S MINISTRY.

I have written this as though Dr. Torrey alone had been the instrument to attract and to win for our Lord those who for three weeks and a half came and were found of the Lord. Mr. Alexander was in every way a most delightful coadjutor. He won his way to all hearts, and left on all his choir of nearly 1,400 voices a deep impress of his skill in choir training, on us all a sense of how much more power and beauty our praise service might contain, and by both his singing and his little bright, direct sermonettes, a consciousness that he, too, was in the Master's hand a sharp arrow to bring men into subjection unto the King.

WORK FOR THE FUTURE.

The time was all too short, and the space was all too small to secure all which seemed to have come to us of God's power and deliverance through these His servants. But if we can fold safely and well all whom God has handed over to us ministers in this city and neighbourhood full of new interest in Divine things, then there should be in Liverpool this winter an energy for God and our fellows such as few of us have ever seen. Many of us testify that God has revived our own spirits and our own life, and I for one can testify that my calls to service in many directions have been inspired with a spirit I have not known for many years. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but to Thy name be the glory."

A Letter to Ministers
Who do not Believe in Revivals.

By Rev. Dr. TORREY.

ANYONE who studies the history of the Church with candour will soon discover that all the great movements in the Church have been the outcome of genuine revival. Where would the Church of Jesus Christ be to-day, if it were not for the revivals under Huss, Wycliffe, Martin Luther, Wesley, Whitefield, Jonathan Edwards, Finney, Moody, and many others who might be mentioned?

Personally, I was not converted in a revival. Everything was moving along in the even tenor of its way, and very slowly at that, when God woke me up in the middle of the night, aroused in me a sense of my need of Christ, and brought me to surrender my will to Him.

While I was converted thus alone by myself, the great majority of the most active and aggressive workers that I know were brought to Christ in special seasons of evangelistic effort. Everywhere we have gone in our tour around the world, very many of the most successful workers that we have met, both in foreign mission fields and in the home churches, told me that they were converted under D. L. Moody. If we should take out of the church and philanthropic life of Great Britain and Ireland all who were converted in the Moody and Sankey revival meetings, what a tremendous gap would be left! The minister who holds aloof from a true evangelistic movement in a city or town will do so to the great detriment of his own spiritual life, and to the great harm of the church over which he presides.

One of the strange facts about the ministers who hold aloof from revival meetings is this, that they will make slighting remarks about the work, do all that they can to discourage, if not to hinder, it—and then wonder why the converts do not come to them! In after months and years they will say they have proof that the movement amounted to nothing because they got no accessions from it; but in the name of reason and common-sense, why should they expect accessions from it? Those who are converted in a true awakening are not likely to go for spiritual advice and help to the men who opposed it.

It will not do to say that these movements bear no lasting fruit, for the undeniable facts in the case prove that this is not true. That some of those who profess to be converted may fall away is quite likely. The New Testament clearly shows us that many of those who professed conversion in Apostolic times fell away grievously; but he would be a shallow thinker, indeed, who argued for this reason that the movement was not of God. And while some of those who seem to make a start in the Christian life, during revival times, fall away, a still larger proportion of those who are brought in by the ordinary, quiet work of the Church afterwards fall into coldness, indifference, worldliness, and even open unbelief.

How can any converted minister who loves God and loves his fellow-men hold aloof from a movement that, beyond all honest question, is rescuing drunkards, and redeeming fallen women to lives of purity and holiness, transforming homes from veritable hells on earth into miniature heavens, rescuing the young of both sexes by thousands from lives of selfish ease and worldliness to lives of devotion to God and service to their fellows, affecting leaders in social, business, and political life, purifying the social, domestic, and commercial life of whole communities? That the present movement going on in Great Britain is doing this I could abundantly show by illustrations from actual life. There is every indication that we are on the eve of one of the great religious forward movements, and every true man of God, and especially every man who is called to preach the Gospel, should do all that he can to aid in the movement. If any man holds back, while he may impede the movement to some extent, he will injure no one else as much as he does himself, both in his own life and in his work.

A Friend of the Black Man.

REV. H. J. SHIRLEY.

LIKE several more of our best-known ministers, Rev. H. J. Shirley (who is to be introduced next Lord's Day to the pastorate of Markham Square Church, Chelsea) did not pass through any special course of training for the ministry. Born at Harpenden, he came to London as an assistant schoolmaster, but with a strong inclination to become a preacher of the Gospel. Having no definite denominational views, he entered himself at King's College; but while studying there, his health broke down, and he was compelled to seek an outdoor occupation. When matters improved he presented himself at a Civil Service examination, and was successful in obtaining an Inland Revenue appointment.

At this point Mr. Shirley practically gave up the thought of entering the stated ministry, but preserved with all its freshness his desire to make good use of every opportunity for the preaching of the Gospel. Through a personal friendship with Rev. James Crabtree (late governor of Didsbury College) he was introduced as a local preacher in the Wesleyan Circuit at Finsbury Park, and for a considerable time he experienced great pleasure in this work.

Coming into close and regular contact with various organizations led the young preacher to look more carefully than he had previously done into the positions of the churches. From intercourse with Rev. William Pierce, then minister of New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, he came to the conclusion that Congregationalism was best suited to his individual temperament, and appealed most strongly to his sympathies. Consequently from conviction he became a Congregationalist, which—as all his people were Wesleyan Methodists, his only brother being at the present time a much-respected minister of that Connexion at Manchester—meant a certain amount of separation from early associations.

While taking an active share in aggressive work at Tollington Park, Mr. Shirley was asked to act as substitute at Dawes Road Chapel, Fulham, for a minister who found himself unable to keep an appointment. The people were drawn to him; and, after he had been requested to repeat his visit, he was asked whether he would entertain a call to the pastorate. This proposal took him entirely by surprise. He had good prospects in the Government service, where he was looked on as one of the coming men, and realised that as a voluntary worker he had found a wide sphere of Christian usefulness. At the same time he had too strong a sense of the leading of God to give a hasty answer, and so proposed that he should preach for two Sundays more, and attend some of the week-evening meetings, spending as much time as possible in contact with the people, that he might come to know more of them and they of him. The result was a unanimous call, which he felt to be of God; and great blessing attended his ministry there in which he not only recognised the Divine hand, but also gratefully appreciated the hearty co-operation of his people.

What was probably the most important crisis in Mr. Shirley's career came to him again through Mr. Pierce, while they were attending the autumnal meetings of the denomination at Bristol in 1899. Mr. Pierce had just returned from a visit to British Guiana with Rev. George Cousins, as a deputation from the Congregational Union. The story they had to tell of the work of God among the black population, touched many hearts. It is greatly to the credit of the Congregational churches that they were the first to carry the Gospel to the slaves in that part of the British Empire, and it is still mainly left to them and the Wesleyans to provide for the Negro population. Mr. Pierce explained in private that the deputation were charged with a commission to secure a minister for the largest of these congregations, that at New Amsterdam; and pressed the matter on Mr. Shirley's attention.

This was as great a surprise as the call to Fulham, but he did not dare to dismiss the proposal without inquiring whether the hand of God were in it. There came back to his mind a day when, at ten or twelve years of age, he heard Dr. Punshon deliver one of his great missionary addresses. Long before the service was finished the boy was praying, "O Lord, make me a missionary." When it would have cost him nothing to go, the call did not come; but when it meant real giving up and separation, it took definite shape. While he was pondering over the subject, a pressing invitation came direct from New Amsterdam. Mr. Shirley was at that time unmarried, but the desirability of taking out a helpmeet was strongly urged upon him. The lady who is now Mrs. Shirley was full of the missionary spirit, and the two went forward to their arduous task in the strength of God.

REV. H. J. SHIRLEY.

Asked a few days ago what was the nature of his first impressions, Mr. Shirley said that he went to the colony with an unbiassed mind on the colour and political question; but that his sentiments on first realizing the condition of the people were those of extreme indignation at what he felt, and still feels, to be the injustice of the laws by which the masses are governed, and at the callous neglect of their welfare and development which one Administration after another has shown. So great is the danger of true-minded men becoming accustomed to the state of affairs, and so ceasing to realize its seriousness, that even he continually found it necessary to recur to the sensations he experienced at the outset.

While admitting the possibility of his view being partial, Mr. Shirley is of opinion that had it not been for the persistent efforts of the representatives of the London Missionary Society, who were zealous educationalists, the education of the masses would not have been even what it is. It is far below what it should be, but not from lack of intelligence on the part of either scholars or teachers. All the teachers are descendants of emancipated slaves, some of them being men of real parts, and the whole staff forms a tribute to the black man's powers of self-improvement. There had been a social and political awakening among them before Mr. Shirley's arrival. For ten years previously splendid public-spirited work had been done by his predecessor, Rev. Laurence Crookall (now of Wigan), whose name is still a very sweet one to thousands. Improvement had been going on, but there was still sufficient indifference in the general attitude of the white man to the black to arouse keen indignation.

The case is exceedingly difficult, and Mr. Shirley points out that Christian workers often have such statements as his contradicted from official sources, but he tells what he has seen with his own eyes. Nominally, public offices are open irrespective of colour; but, practically, prejudice excludes the black or coloured man from any of the desirable positions, with the exception of one or two light-skinned gentlemen of colour, whose offices are made the most of in the endeavour to show the non-existence of prejudice. But prejudice is there, deep, and deadly to the coloured man's interests. The Negroes and their descendants are to be found in the poorly paid departments—such as the police and the post-office, where their rate of pay is about sixteen dollars a month.

On the subject of the spiritual condition of the people, Mr. Shirley finds both lights and shadows in the outlook. Broadly speaking, the working-people are church-going in much larger proportion than the working-people of England. Religious conviction may not be always so deep as in cases of conversion in this country; yet many men and women are the subjects of profound spiritual experience, and are moved by the highest principle. There is undoubtedly a great and simple "trust in 'the Man above,' and in the Heavenly Father." While it remains a complete mystery how one-third of the black congregation procure the barest subsistence, their own constant reply to inquiries is that they live by the grace of God. Even more than at home the poor are the best friends of the poor, and there is a neighbourliness and readiness to share things which might well be copied. A black woman who is without home or shelter will be made welcome to share the humble dwelling of any other family, until she can be brought into touch with her own relatives, or procure assistance in some other way.

The Evangelical outlook remains, however, somewhat distressing; and calls for whole-hearted, Gospel-loving, and Gospel-devoted ministry. There are splendid possibilities, but much fallow ground remains to be broken up by the Gospel ploughshare. When it is remembered that object-lessons of shameless vice and open immorality have been before the eyes of the people for generations, the instructors in evil being those who were supposed to have been civilized for centuries, it is matter for congratulation that some are learning to disregard these leaders, and in many instances live in such a fashion as to put to shame some of the whites who regard themselves as superior Given equal privileges, given a gradual disappearance of colour prejudice, given such earnest and devoted ministry as our English people enjoy, there is every reason to believe that the black people of British Guiana would very soon be English people in all but skin.

When Mr. Shirley reached the colony the greatness of the need took possession of his intense nature, with the result that the effects of overwork have obliged him to relinquish his post, and to return to England. His record of work accomplished for the betterment of the condition of the down-trodden is one well fitted to inspire all who come after him. The lot of many a poor family is more comfortable because he has sojourned near them, and the Gospel of the grace of God has received a new beauty through his preaching by word and life. The People—a bi-weekly newspaper which he founded and conducted while his hands were filled with many other matters—in bidding him good-bye, said:

He will ever be regarded as one who, conceiving it to be the duty of the Christian minister to give himself utterly to mankind, did it with his whole soul, and heart and strength, . . . In the midst of what seemed political and social absorptions, Mr. Shirley preserved a highly spiritual ministry, and many are the testimonies of its effects in improved lives and homes. He has sought to make good citizens by making good men. He has honestly tried to set an example by living the truth he preached, he has won the love of many and the esteem of all whose esteem is of any worth.

The suspicion and opposition with which his first advances were met by the white community were disarmed by the earnestness of the man. There are many signs that the colony is being roused to a sense of righteous dealing between man and man. But social work and the assertion of political rights will not do what is wanted. Evangelical men of high and holy purpose are wanted in increasing numbers to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

Such is the need everywhere, and Mr. Shirley will find ample scope for earnest work in Chelsea. His invitation to Markham Square was again quite unexpected. He was still at his work in British Guiana, when by the return of Rev. Frederick Hastings to a pastorate he had previously held, Markham Square became vacant, and it was unanimously agreed to request Mr. Shirley to accept the pastorate. But New Amsterdam Church, with its fine building capable of accommodating 2,000 people, is thus left pastorless. Its members are daily praying earnestly and looking eagerly for the coming of a man of God from this side of the Atlantic. Their faith in God and in their English brethren is very touching in its simple certainty; and we shall rejoice to hear of some good man, sound in constitution, and with heart touched by God, being constrained to say, "Here am I, send me."

Gospel Mission Work in Pirbright.—The evangelistic operations which are carried on at the Pirbright Providence Mission Chapel reach out to almost the entire community in the village and its surroundings. During the year there have been many indications that the labours of the leader (Mr. R. Fifield) and his helpers are bearing fruit. In some cases men have been persuaded to join the ranks of total abstainers, and in others they have been led to count the cost of a life of sin, and have yielded themselves to Christ. The Sunday-school maintains its large membership, and the progress made in other branches of the mission gives promise of development and increased usefulness. Unfortunately the members, being all of the working classes, are unable to bear the entire cost of maintaining the work, and are compelled to seek aid from outside friends. Mr. Fifield's address is 2, Commercial Road, Woking, Surrey.

Obituary.

REV. J. J. KENDON, GOUDHURST.

REV J. J. KENDON, of Goudhurst, Kent, who passed away on the 17th inst. at the age of seventy-three, was for many years a city missionary in the East End of London, and during recent years the honorary pastor of the Baptist church at Goudhurst. His labours in East London broke down his health, and retiring from the work about forty years ago, he founded the Hop-pickers' Mission in the year 1869, and for the first twenty-one years of its existence nursed it into strength. He was the founder and first principal of Bellamy House School, an establishment that has passed into the commercial and industrial world more than 1,000 students.

MRS. HUNTLEY, GEORGETOWN.

A well-known missionary worker of Georgetown, Demerara, Mrs. Charity Anne Huntley, passed away on Monday, October 5, at the age of seventy-six. Mrs. Huntley was the widow of Mr. John G. Huntley, who for many years was engaged in the colony in missionary work, in connection with the Christian Brethren Mission. Mrs. Huntley arrived in the colony with her husband nearly half a century ago to enter upon the work. Despite countless difficulties and discouragements, they achieved that success which their labours merited, and won the esteem and affection of their flock. For twenty-nine years they conducted this missionary enterprise, labouring for the most part on the Berbice and Demerara Rivers, and only when considerations of health weighed upon them were they induced to reside in town. But both still entertained a partiality for work in the river regions, and to the end of their days devoted a considerable portion of their time to it. The Mission in Georgetown prospered greatly. A substantial and commodious mission house was built.

After the death of her husband, which occurred in November, 1886, Mrs. Huntley continued her unwearied missionary labours, working in season and out of season for the conversion and the uplifting of the heathen and the fallen. The more adequately to superintend her work, Mrs. Huntley had constructed a very useful addition to the mission buildings for her accommodation during her residence in town. Even declining health did not deter her from pursuing her labours of love. For weeks at a time she would be absent in the interior teaching Indian children to read, and it was only when her health broke down completely that she reluctantly abandoned these self-imposed duties. She retained consciousness to the last, bidding farewell to friends and referring to her burial. She was laid to rest beside her husband.

MR. GEORGE HENDER FREAN.

Many will hear with regret of the passing away at his residence, Blackheath, on the 16th, of Mr. G. H. Frean, in his eightieth year. The son of the late George Frean, of Plymouth, who was, as a contemporary stated "well-known for his business enterprise and his probity," he inherited the same qualities. Mr. Frean became a Christian in early life, and threw himself with ardour into various branches of Church and Sunday-school work, teaching twice on the Lord's Day, as well as attending the early morning prayer-meeting. Though much engaged in business, he made a point during the week of attending two evening services, beside conducting a meeting in a very poor neighbourhood. One who knew him in those early days, testifies to the good influence of his life at home and in his business.

When only sixteen years old, in the absence of his father, Mr. Frean conducted family worship in a most helpful manner. In that household—a very busy one—family worship was never neglected either morning or evening. In the early fifties Mr. Frean removed to London, where the firm of Peek and Frean soon became well known, and at Lewisham and Blackheath, in quiet, unostentatious ways, he carried on Christian work and giving.

He was for many years deacon and Sunday-school superintendent, and a director of the London Missionary Society. It should also be mentioned that Mr. Frean was one of the founders of the S.S. Union in Devon and Cornwall. E. F. E.

MRS. C. H. SPURGEON.

On Thursday last, Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon, widow of the late, and mother of the present pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, passed peacefully to her rest. Although bulletins for some time past had been of a grave character, it was not anticipated that the end was so near. On the Tuesday she rallied somewhat, but the next day a change for the worse took place, and early on Thursday the end came. A notice was posted outside the Tabernacle soon after eleven o'clock, stating that "Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon entered heaven at 8.30 this morning."

Mrs. Spurgeon was the daughter of the late Mr. Robert Thompson, of Falcon Square, E.C. She was induced by a relative to attend New Park Street Chapel on the evening when Charles Haddon Spurgeon, "the young man from Waterbeach," preached his first sermon in that historic building. She was not particularly struck with his pulpit power, but was impressed with the earnestness of the preacher, and when he became the pastor of the church she joined the membership, and became an enthusiastic worker. In 1856 she married the pastor. The ceremony was performed by Dr. Fletcher, an old friend of Miss Thompson's. Their subsequent life was an ideally happy one.

When the Metropolitan Tabernacle was built in 1859, Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon took a house in New Kent Road, and here she decided to organize a Book Fund for the supply of commentaries and other Biblical works to needy ministers of all denominations. This agency has been of immense service. By its aid she has sent out many thousands of books each year; and after the fund had been in operation for about ten years she issued a dainty little volume entited "Ten Years of My Life in the Service of the Book Fund." This she followed recently with another volume giving the results of the work up to date.

She went into comparative retirement after her husband's decease in 1892, only leaving her seclusion at rare intervals. She was, indeed, an invalid for over thirty years. Yet from her sick room she conducted a vast correspondence, and watched over the details of her Book Fund with careful solicitude.

As our readers will be aware, Mrs. Spurgeon leaves twin sons—Thomas, pastor of the Tabernacle, and Charles, who, after a ministry of twenty-five years at Greenwich, recently accepted the pastorate at Cheltenham. Deep sympathy will be felt with these brethren, especially with Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, who, in addition to his own indifferent health, has the additional sorrow of watching the illness of his wife.

Howard Street Gospel Mission, S.W.—Mr. E. Moffat Soames forwards the annual report of this mission. After recording a great amount of Gospel and temperance work, attention is called to the fact that premises have been secured for a Country Holiday Home for poor children, and that a scheme has been launched for building a much larger hall, to hold 800 people, with class rooms and a model soup kitchen. The hon. treasurer is Mr. Percy M. Thornton, M.P., Battersea Rise House, Clapham Common, S.W.

British and Foreign Bible Society.—The ninety-ninth report of the British and Foreign Bible Society tells of the circulation of 5,943,775, copies or parts of Scripture, bringing the total from the foundation of the Society up to 180,982,740 copies. The average number of colporteurs employed throughout the year was 850; while no fewer than 658 native Christian Bible-women were supported in Eastern lands, with 107 more in other parts. Translation goes steadily forward, the number of languages now used being 370. By the grace of God great things have been accomplished, but much yet remains to be done. The great fact must be faced that even in this centenary year there are dialects spoken among men which have yet to be reduced to writing, and the Gospel translated into them; while in many more only a fraction of the Word of God has been printed.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

ABERDEEN.

THE commencement of the second week's mission of Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones in the "granite city" on Sabbath last, marked a red letter day in the annals of the temperance movement in Aberdeen.

The day's work began with a service in Hilton U.F. Church, when a congregation of at least a thousand persons assembled to hear the missioners. At three o'clock, Dr. Henry was the speaker at one of the Palace Theatre Gospel temperance meetings (now being carried on for the third year in succession by Mr. Joseph Robertson, of the Scottish Permissive Bill and Temperance Association. Dr. Henry had a splendid audience of nearly 2,000, largely composed of young men and women, who followed with rapt attention the soul-stirring address upon "Partnership with the Publican." At the close Mr. Jones sang two solos very effectively. He also sang at the P.S.A. service in the Trade Hall.

In the evening the usual service in the Palace Theatre had to be commenced an hour before the advertised time, and hundreds failed to gain admission. Dr. Henry held the great audience as he spoke forcibly on Christian duty with regard to the liquor traffic. Mr. Jones again sang with much acceptance. Upwards of five hundred pledges have already been secured. C.

One of the meetings addressed by Dr. Henry was for women only. Mrs. Milne, who presided, extended a hearty welcome to the missioner, who, she said, "came from a land that refused to permit women to stand behind liquor bars." In his address Dr. Henry spoke on the necessity for training boys and girls in temperance principles. He urged that women should combine against the drink, for the sanctity of the home, the purity of childhood, and the maintenance of love and affection. Referring to grocers' licences, Dr. Henry said that since 1887 such licences have increased to just double what they were at that time. Since then, drinking and drunkenness have increased among men forty-three per cent., but among women 104 per cent. Delirium tremens among women has increased fifty per cent. in the last ten years.

Another notable gathering was that in which Dr. Henry (says the Aberdeen Journal) "traced to the curse of strong drink the large increase in insanity and in the number of feeble-minded children. Statistics proved that of the children of drinking and drunken parents only 12 per cent. were normal in both body and mind. Drink also stood in the closest relationship with grossness and the lowest forms of indulgence, with scepticism and infidelity, with national paralysis and inefficiency. The time had come when the rank and file of God's children must take the right ground, and stand in serried rank, strong to fight the evil to the death."

Moravian Missions.—A recent report shows that the Moravian Brethren have no fewer than 402 foreign missionaries with 98,599 people under their charge; 19,917 scholars in the Sunday-schools, and 24,198 in the day schools. In addition they have 26 ordained native ministers and 1,803 native helpers. Last year, it is stated, there was a net increase of 1,794 in the baptized membership of the native congregations. Commenting upon these soul-stirring statistics, the Moravian body being comparatively a small one, Rev. John Stewart, of Madras, has remarked: "If the other Churches of Christendom sent forth their missionaries in the same proportion as the Moravian Church there would be on the field 400,000 instead of 14,000." It is a fact far from creditable to the Church of Christ to-day that at present the missionaries are in touch with "less than a two-hundredth part of those for whom Jesus died."

Motherwell Convention.

THE Motherwell Convention for the deepening of spiritual life has just been held under the auspices of the Lanarkshire Christian Union. The speakers were Revs. Dr. George Wilson, John Riddell, J. Stuart Holden, C. G. Moore, A. Allen, and John M'Cracken. Mr. Walter B. Sloan took the chair.

The usual preliminary meeting for prayer was held in the Christian Institute on Monday night, and from Tuesday till Friday meetings were held each afternoon and evening. On Saturday afternoon a large audience gathered, and an open-air demonstration was followed by an evangelistic meeting. By invitation of Mrs. Colville, of Cleland, the Board-school teachers of Motherwell went for tea and a short meeting on Wednesday, and a similar gathering of the ministers of the district took place on Thursday.

A solemn stillness characterized all the meetings, and the presence of the Holy Spirit was manifested in the searching and forcible manner in which the various speakers were enabled to present the truth. After-meetings were not held every night; but on Thursday, when an opportunity was given for any who were seeking the fulness of the Spirit to give expression to their desire, brief, earnest petitions were offered from all parts of the hall.

Ealing Convention.

THE annual Convention at Ealing was well attended by Christians from all parts of the Metropolis, and the numerous addresses, dealing with the conditions and privileges of fruitful service for God, were edifying and refreshing. Rev. H. G. Thwaites preached the opening sermon, expounding in helpful fashion some of the incidents in the life of Gideon. Throughout the Convention Colonel Douglas Jones presided, and his opening remarks at each meeting were fitting and thoughtful.

Two addresses were given by Rev. S. A. Selwyn. Speaking on Ephes, iv. 30, he showed what is meant by grieving the Spirit, and in expounding Heb. vi., set forth the legitimate aim of the Christian. Rev. Preb. Webb-Peploe spoke with much earnestness on 2 Pet. i., emphasizing the fact that in order to increase in the glorious knowledge of God we must flee from corruption. Rev. J. G. Train showed how the Epistle to the Ephesians deals with the attitude of the believer: (1) he is seen to be seated—the attitude of repose; (2) his attitude to his fellows—walking worthy in love and in light towards the world; (3) at the close we have the third attitude—standing.

Having insisted on the importance of exercising care in the matter of hearing and giving heed to the Word, Rev. J. P. Clark emphasized four certainties of Scriptnre: (1) The finished work of Christ; (2) a seeking Saviour for every sinful soul; (3) everlasting sonship; (4) the abiding presence. Other speakers included Revs. F. S. Webster, H. G. Thwaites, F. W. Ainley, and N. F. Duncan. An interesting account of Gospel effort among Jews was given by Dr. Goldstein, and Dr. Whitfield Guinness described the work of the China Inland Mission.

Hoddesdon Convention.—A convention for the deepening of the spiritual life was held at Hoddesdon, October 5-9. The various denominations in the town united earnestly in prayer and effort to make it a time of blessing to the neighbourhood. Captain Chapman, of Windermere, presided throughout the convention, and his introductory readings and expositions were much appreciated. The speakers were Revs. F. W. Ainley, B. F. Buxton, W. Fuller Gooch, and Stuart Holden. The largest hall in the town was from the first well filled. The early prayer meeting drew a good attendance each morning. Both the Bible-readings in the afternoons, and the addresses at the general meeting in the evenings, were most helpful. The weather was not favourable. We thank God for many signal tokens of His blessing, and have reason to believe that very many of His people in the town and neighbourhood received a quickening and strengthening of their spiritual life.

Starving Macedonians.

WE give the following extracts from three communications by the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, from writers in two separated districts of Macedonia and Bulgaria, dated October 16:—

"The recent outbreak in Razlog was in a district where our work is strongest. We have not the particulars yet as to who suffered there. Some probably did in the town of Mehomia. That district is so near the border that many were able to flee to Bulgaria, and whatever relief is given them will be distributed there. Some in Turkish prisons are badly off, but we do not know how many are in prison at Mehomia. Probably most of the males who did not flee. . . To-day I start for Resna, eighteen miles from here. In that district some nineteen villages are reported burned wholly or in part. Probably some 700 houses are destroyed. Our first work will be to distribute flour and blankets. The gratitude of leading men from there who have learned of our plan—their gratitude to England and to the Mission—is quite remarkable."

"Peasants about Formie are living in mortal terror of the soldier guards. It seems to be as much as one's life is worth to venture ten minutes' walk from a village. A half-dozen wood-choppers of the village Neolani were fired upon in the woods where they were at work; but they escaped with their lives. Yudino (Kirchevo), a village of thirty-six houses, was looted and burned by Turks this week, only three houses remaining. Last Wednesday two women of the burnt village Dyavata, while crossing the fields on the way to the village Sapari, where they were sojourning, were attacked by Bashi-Bazouks. One woman was killed and the other wounded. We now have many refugee women at work, spinning, knitting, and making underclothes for village women. The refugees in this city are comparatively well off, and yet the majority are most uncomfortably and unwholesomely crowded together, some occupying cellars. With few exceptions they are without change of clothing, and at night they lie down, sick and well, huddled together, sometimes seventeen in one small stuffy room, with no bed covering whatever."

"The need is greater than it is possible to state or imagine. By careful and reliable statistics there are now 50,000 refugees destitute of shelter, of homes, without food and clothing, many of them still in the mountains, and winter coming on so fast. You may have seen the report of a driver of a pack horse who passed through one of those regions. He saw a dead child, with grass in its mouth, which evidently had died of hunger. With all the aid which can be given and can reach the refugees, there must be terrible sufferings all through that region. In 1877-78 I saw thousands of those who had fled from the Turkish atrocities. They were exceedingly in need of food, clothing, blankets, &c., for the night; the need now is many times greater, and the difficulties also. Doubtless there are 10,000 more in other parts of Macedonia, aside from the 5,000 or more who have fled over the mountains forty and sixty miles to Samokov, Dubnitza, the Rilo Monastery, &c. Pastor —— spent a night in the forest with about 6,000 refugees who had been driven out of their homes unexpectedly, men, women, and children being shot down as they escaped from their burning houses. A party of all ages and both sexes were pursued and all cut off. The soldiers turned their cannon upon the burning villages instead of fighting the insurgents in the mountains. . . . I write these things in Bulgaria, for there is great, very great, need of aid here also. The suffering this winter for needful clothing, blankets, and shelter must be very great. We hear that some of those agencies sending aid from England will send only to Macedonians. There is very great need in Bulgaria as well. If you can give us a share of their aid, we shall be able to save from much suffering those who will not be otherwise aided. The need is for clothing, and blankets, and shelter; possibly for means to cultivate their fields in the spring."

For Good or Evil.

By Lieut.-Col. Seton Churchill.

[We do not often have such good fortune as a talk by a "Lieutenant-Colonel" in this page; so instead of writing to you myself this week, I am giving you some notes of an address delivered to the Boys' Brigade at the Church Congress, at Bristol, the other day. It is all good, and both boys and girls will, I am sure, profit by this interesting talk. —Uncle Tom.]

I ONCE heard of a schoolmaster who always took off his hat as he entered his school. When asked why he did so, he replied that he should certainly do so if he met the Premier of England, and how was he to know that, from among his boys, there was not going to be one who would rise to that high and influential position? Now boys, I feel like that schoolmaster to-night! When I look at an audience of upwards of 3,000 boys, I cannot but think of the grand possibilities that lie before you. It is a most inspiring sight to see such a mass of bright young faces before me, and I only wish that I could rise to the occasion in speaking to you. I will do my best.

There was once a farmer who was much troubled with rats, and he offered sixpence for every rat brought to him dead or alive. One boy on his farm found a whole nest of little rats, but he was half afraid that the farmer would not give the full price for these. "Of course I will!" said the farmer; "those young rats will do more harm than the older ones; they have a longer life to live. The big ones have done their mischief, but the small ones have yet got this to do."

This principle can be applied in a good or in a bad direction. You boys have, I hope, long lives to live, and I earnestly hope that you may be able to do a lot of good; but, alas! it must not be forgotten that you also may do a lot of harm. It is in the hope that you will be able to throw your influence into all that is noble and good, and that you will wage war with all that is bad and corrupt, that we appeal to you.

Each of you individually will probably experience many influences for good and for evil in your young life. A friend of mine who had travelled in the Rocky Mountains told me that once he stood on a rock sloping to the east and to the west. There was a trickling stream which fell on to that rock from a hill above, and he could see the water coming down. It all depended on the way the wind blew at that particular time whether the water fell this side or that of the ridge in the rock. If it fell on one side it joined a little trickling stream which carried it into a river, which ultimately reached the Atlantic on the East; but if the wind blew in an opposite direction, the water was carried to the great ocean on the West. As it was with that stream, so it is with us in life. Which way does the wind blow? Which way are we being influenced? Is it for good or for evil? Is it for heaven or for hell? Cultivate for all you are worth the good influences of life. Avoid those influences which are for evil, as they will tend to wreck and ruin your bright young lives.

Englishmen have many names in English history of which to be proud, such as those of Sir Henry Havelock, Lord Lawrence, Sir Henry Lawrence, General Gordon, Archbishop Tait, Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Cairns, Wilberforce, Captain Hedley Vicars, and others. Remove such names from English history, and we should darken the pages of history by so doing. Yet almost all those men I have mentioned were converted to Christ when they were quite boys, or very young men. O boys, do not believe the devil's lie when he suggests to you that you must do as others do. These noble heroes speak to us and tell us of the power that God gives to make us more than conquerors in the battle of life against the world, the flesh, and the devil.

You boys have, no doubt, often taken a caterpillar and shut it up in a box. You know the process through which it passes as well as I do. It becomes a chrysalis, and one day you open your box, and out flies a beautiful butterfly. Yet you put in a caterpillar which could only grovel along the ground. Now you have a new creature, with a new power. It is the old creature which has passed through one of Nature's conversions. As in the natural kingdom so in the spiritual kingdom, you and I have inherited a sinful nature, a corrupt heart, with a strong tendency to evil. But by the power of the Holy Spirit He is able to make us new creatures with a new power. That is what we call conversion. We want every one of you to know what it is to experience that new birth, and to obtain that new power over sin and self.

The British boy is the grandest material in the world, and when the rough diamond is properly worked up, as God meant him to be, he becomes one of the brightest diadems in the universe. We have had many such in the Church, and we are justly proud of them; but this great empire of ours needs many more such gems.

When I was in South Africa in 1881, during the first Boer war, we were one day at church parade in the open air. The troops had formed a hollow square, with the chaplain, the band, and the drums in the centre, and we were singing. An intelligent Kaffir connected with our transports said to the English officer in charge of the cattle, "Why are they making all that noise?" He replied, "They are worshipping God." "Who is God?" said the Kaffir, for they know nothing about a God. "God made this world," said the officer, "and they worship God because they want to go to heaven, which is a very good place." "Heaven is a very good place," said the Kaffir, "then why English not annex heaven!"

This Kaffir thought that the English annexed everything good, and therefore ought to annex heaven. His idea seems to have been to have annexed heaven to this earth, but Christ set up His Cross on Calvary as the sign that He had annexed this world to heaven. O boys, we want to enlist you as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, to help in carrying out that annexation of this world for Christ. I trust that there is a grand future for each of you, and that, by a living faith in Christ, you will take Him to be the Captain of your salvation, and thus get power to bring into subjection all that is vile, bad, and corrupt, and to develop all that is noble, good, and pure, and to God shall be all the praise.

Lessons from David (Psa. lxxxix. 19-29).

DAVID'S character and career have always exercised a marvellous fascination over the hearts of the generations, as they have in turn heard of the shepherd boy whom God made the shepherd of His people.

The beauty and grace of his physical appearance were in beautiful harmony with the noble and generous characteristics of his soul. Habituated to the hills and valleys of his home; able, as he says in one of his Psalms, to run through a troop or leap over a wall; to sling a stone with unerring accuracy; lithe, alert, full of buoyant health, with a charm of beauty in eyes and face, and with a heart unsullied and pure; greatly gifted with musical genius, and with a nature that quivered with quick response to every passing scene. Athlete, poet, musician, soldier, spiritually led and taught, and filled with the Divine Spirit, what more could be necessary to make David the favourite of his people?

There is peculiar significance in the words, "I have found David, My servant" (v. 20). It was as though the Divine Spirit had been seeking for one who should be the exponent of His purpose and the instrument through which to fulfil His plan, and finally had alighted upon the young shepherd lad. 'The Father seeketh such." The following verses indicate how much of David's success was due to the Divine interposition, he must be strong on whom God's hand rests, and he is strengthened by the Divine arm (v. 21). He must be successful whose adversaries are beaten down before him by his Almighty Friend and Defender (v. 23). He must have dominion who is put forward by the mercy and power of his Divine Father and Friend (vv. 27-29). Yet what is true in each case of David may to an extent be verified in the history of each reader of these words. There is no life, however humble, which is not of interest to God, nor one so lowly through which He does not wish to pour the fulness of His grace.

As one briefly reviews David's career, these characteristics stand before us. His courage. What could be more splendid than his challenge to Goliath, based as it was upon his simple faith in God. Here is the source of true courage, to be sure that men are your enemies because they are enemies to God, and that He is with you for their destruction. His loyalty to his friends. Years after he showed himself true to Jonathan in the adoption of his son. No true nature can perfectly develop without friends, and no noble mind will ever ignore their claims. His mercifulness. Twice his greatest enemy, Saul, was in his hand; but the noble chivalry of his nature refused to take advantage of his sleeping and defenceless form. It was enough for David to know that God would some day fulfil His promise, and it was needless for him to do a wrong thing to secure the position which the Divine veracity had guaranteed. His zeal. God was ever first with him, except for that one terrible occasion when passion mastered his soul and swept it as in a torrent before it. He was a man after God's own heart because the interest of God's Kingdom were his main object. His repentance and confession. Happy is he who goes through life without the terrible and disgraceful failure with which the name of David must always be blemished; but if we are overcome, and fall before the mighty adversary of souls, what can be more befitting than to turn to Him against whom we have sinned with an unwavering faith in the greatness of His mercy, the tenderness of His pity, and the fulness of His pardon? David might despair of himself, but he had good reason to believe in Him who would not only forgive sin, but create within him a clean heart, and restore unto him the joy of salvation.

C.E. NOTES.

There are two Christian Endeavour Societies in connection with the cathedral at Gibraltar. Archdeacon Govett is most interested in this work among the young people.

David's Grief over Absalom (2 Sam. xviii. 24-33). Golden Text (Prov. xvii. 25).

AS soon as Absalom's plans were matured in Hebron and his guests bound to him by the laws of hospitality, the promised signal was given, trumpets echoed from hill to hill, and hired heralds proclaimed throughout the tribes of Israel, "Absolom reigneth in Hebron" (xv. 10). The mantle of piety and secrecy was cast aside, and the supposed worshipper of God stood revealed as a leader of conspiracy against his own father (vv. 7, 8). Adherents flocked around the standard of the usurper, and the battle-march turned towards Jerusalem (v. 12). Meanwhile, David's heart followed his beloved Absalom with joyful hope and thankfulness that his erring and wilful son had at last turned to serve the Lord (v. 8).

News of the rebellion came as a staggering blow to the warrior David and a heart-stab to the father-king. Surprise, disappointment, bitter grief, to which conscience may have added the sting, that Absalom's mother was the daughter of a heathen (forbidden Joshua xxiii. 12, 13). With the alertness of a soldier David laid plans for his city and his people; but his tears flowed freely, and his people wept with him. Jerusalem vacated rather than be allowed to become the scene of a civil war. The king, his household and faithful servants, his devoted body guard (1 Sam. xxii. 2; xxiii. 13; xxv. 13; xxvii. 2), a well-disciplined army, with the high priest and Levites bearing the Ark of the Covenant; but the symbol of God's presence was sent back to Jerusalem (vv. 25-29). The Lord Himself sustained David.

David's Journey over the Mount of Olives.

1. The king led the procession in funeral garb, barefoot and weeping (v. 30). The road, rough and steep, David, aged and stricken with grief. News of Ahitophil's desertion (Ps. iii. lv. 12-16) met with prayer. 2. At the top of the Mount a halt called for evening worship (Ps. iv.). Here Hushai showed sympathy and proved "a friend in need" (xvii. 5-16). 3. Ziba met David with a present and words of deceit and slander, for selfish ends (xvi. 4; xix. 26, 27). 4. Shimei cursed David at Bahurim; this evil was met with submissive trust in God's will. 5. A secret despatch from Hushai, and David's company crossed the Jordan and reached Mahanaim. 6. Shobi, Machir, Barryillai supplied food and comforts.

Absalom's Journey from Hebron to Ephraim.

At Jerusalem Absalom invited the counsels of Ahitophel and Hushai, increased his army, assumed regal state, and was anointed king (xix. 10); crossed the Jordan, "pitched in the land of Gilead," and encountered the armies of David in the "wood of Ephraim" (xviii. 6). Absalom's plans reversed. (1) To kill his father (xvii. 2-12, but xviii. 14). (2) To reign in his stead, with crown and kingdom, palace and robes, and royal mule. (3) He raised a pillar to keep his "name in remembrance," but xviii. 17, and to-day every faithful Jew casts a stone and a curse at the heap of stones that marks the burial place of "the rebellious son" in the woods of Ephraim.

Special Points.

Verse 15. True servants of the Lord Jesus are "ready to do," but not always whatsoever their King chooses for them. Some great whatsoevers are given to little folk, and seeming small ones to great men, with mighty results.

(2) David's anxiety (xviii. 5, 24, 29, 32) and grief (xvi. 11, xviii. 33, xix. 4) were tokens of his love for his erring child. The tokens of God's love to sinners are the price He willingly gave for our redemption (John iii. 16).

(3) Absalom lived for the world and its passing honours. He gave one hand to self, the other to "pride of life," his brain to worldly schemes, his heart to riches, and thus he rushed through time into eternity, Godless. And yet his father's God would have been his God for the seeking (Ez. xxxiii. 11).

S.S. Lesson Illustrations.

DOING THE RIGHT THING.

In the notable biography of Mr. Gladstone, lately published, it is said that the great statesman always aimed at doing the right thing, without regard to the popularity or unpopularity of the step. On one occasion, when commencing a new policy, he wrote to his son to the effect that it was of greater importance to be right than to be successful. It is, of course, a great thing to be popular or to preserve a majority in Parliament, but it is always greater still to be right. In our lesson David displayed a real anxiety to do the right thing. He was troubled as a father on account of his son, and perplexed as a king by reason of Absalom's rebellion. His bitter cry: "Is the young man Absalom safe?" (v. 29) showed the right spirit of the father.

BASE INGRATITUDE.

Though Savonarola devoted himself to the oppressed people of Florence, he was at last deserted by the multitude. Being arrested, he was thrown into prison, and after a month's captivity, sentenced to be strangled and burnt. At his execution Savonarola betrayed no signs of doubt or fear, but bade his friends continue steadfast in his doctrine. We who condemn the ingratitude of Absalom and of various nations should beware lest we treat God in exactly the same way. In withstanding His offer of pardon, we are grieving Him, and by refusing to be reconciled we are, to all intents and purposes, rebels. Let us not be ungrateful of the mighty love of God towards us.

A MIGHTY LOVE.

A London paper recently reported the release from prison of a man who had been imprisoned for twenty-seven years. He, with another man, was charged with the murder of a gamekeeper. He completely exonerated his companion from all blame, and on his own confession was condemned to death. However, owing to many petitions on his behalf, the unhappy man was sentenced to penal servitude for life, and now, on his release, he tells a sensational story. It was the other man who shot the gamekeeper, but there was a woman whose heart would have been broken, and whose children would have been left fatherless. The one who suffered was alone in the world, and so he took the whole guilt upon himself and has just emerged from enduring the punishment. Such a willingness to die for another was not unlike the wish of David when he cried, "Oh, my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee" (v. 33).

Personalia.

We regret to learn that the Rev. B. Harvey-Jellie, of St. John's Presbyterian Church, Hartlepool, and Mrs. Harvey-Jellie, are laid aside with scarlet fever. The doctor states that they will be confined to the house for some weeks to come.

Among the passengers by the Kildonan Castle, which reached Southampton on Saturday last, were Mr. T. B. Miller, chairman, and Mr. H. W. Maynard, treasurer, of the South Africa General Mission. As its deputation they have visited Cape Colony, the Transvaal, Natal, Swaziland, and Zululand.

Mr. William Soltau, of the M'All Mission in France, is now residing in London, his address being 42, Onslow Gardens, Highgate, N. After nearly twenty years' residence in Paris, Mr. Soltau has returned to England. He is still a member of the Paris committee of the mission, and is seeking to help forward its interests in connection with its London Auxiliary, the address of which is 112, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

Books for Country Ministers.—Rev. G. Coates, Willington, Durham, writes from Western House: "Permit me, through your paper, to appeal for help to supply country ministers and necessitous lay preachers with a few helpful books. Hundreds of these worthy brethren are not able to obtain such assistance in their work as a few good books can give, and many of them never make their wants known. I have thought about this for a long time, and I am sure there are many of your readers who would be willing to render a little help in this way. If any lay preacher or country minister care to apply I will supply as far as the means placed at my disposal will allow."

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Dr. Torrey at Dundee.

THE importance which Dr. Torrey attaches to the holding of meetings for ministers has been more than justified once more at Dundee. The announcement of such a gathering brought together about 150 ministers, and will bear fruit in the highest possibilities of the ministry wherever it has been sincerely responded to. It was outspoken and yet courtly. The deep desire of the speaker was caught in a suppressed pleading that stole out in a voice that is far from belonging to one who submits to any of the trickery of emotionalism. He recalled Count Zinzendorf and his motto, "I have one passion; it is He, and He only." The passion for souls, the yearning desire for the lost, are the dynamic of all these strenuous labours. Phrases came to us such as, "The first purpose of the ministry is to save souls," "If you are not seeking to save the lost, you are a failure as a minister of the Gospel," "We live in an age of specialists, and every minister of the Gospel ought to be a specialist in the Word of God." Vows made and broken, ideals that had passed away, must have risen again in many hearts; and as the appeal for absolute surrender to God came, the words said of Tauler, "the friend of God," came to the writer "the Spirit of God breathed through him as sweet music through a lute," is not this our ideal, and it was the message and prayer from the desk.

GROWING POWER AMONG WORKERS.

With every opening day there seems to come to the Christians growing power and desire to serve. Fires that have long burned low have leaped into flame. John Wesley's ideal for his followers seems to be realised with us, "At it, all at it, and always at it." Some citizens who profess interest in us, and do their service through the newspapers, are really, they say, shocked at the length things have gone to. "It has really gone too far," they say. Christians that seemed utterly beyond the possibility of any enthusiasm are seen night by night seeking the anxious. Men and women are being pointed to the Saviour at the very street-corners, blessing has come so mightily upon our souls that the term "infra dig." has been much contracted. The "Get right with God" cards have been circulated in grand style. One young woman who used to know the seamy side of life went to her former haunts and distributed these cards with a prayer in place of the oaths that would have been heard in old days. One man writes as aggrieved, because he has got a card with a message on the back written in something like Sir Isaac Pitman's phonetic spelling; but whatever the writer may have known of that, his question was a most pertinent one.

We are learning precious truths as we hear in the afternoon Bible reading the message of the Word of God on the Holy Spirit. Night by night power is with us, and men and women of every class are coming to the front. Some of the worst characters in the city have been out, and professed faith in the Lord Jesus. A consecrated woman with the gift of lucid speech, and the quiet grace of womanhood, to which is joined real knowledge of Scripture fundamentals, is indeed a sharp instrument in the hand of God. Miss Saxe has done good service in her words to the children in their special meetings, and in the minute messages she has given in Kinnaird Hall. Night by night the streets are paraded by a large band of men and women, young and old, who sing of the grace that has saved them, and give invitations to the meetings. The work is not confined to the mission proper, but is spreading over the whole city and sending the Christians out to do personal work. One man in the meeting for men only asked a Christian worker to go and visit his wife who was anxious, which he did the next day, and while there, met also the daughter-in-law, and both decided for the Saviour.

AMONG THE POOR AND OUTCASTS.

One can gather something of the extent of the work when they hear of a young man converted, who had been forsaken by his mother at nine months old and brought up at the public expense, one of the type that fitted, if any ever did, the terrible phrase of Dean Swift's, "damned into existence." He told me that the night after the meeting at which he said "yes" to the Saviour, he knelt in prayer for the first time in his life. A true picture that speaks more than many words, is a little room about ten feet square, where a company of three men and a young woman sit with such a tiny lamp, scarcely more than a candle, burning on a rough table, by the light of which the female voice reads out John's Gospel, the first chapter, lingering on such words as: "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." Every inmate, in the significance which every worker among the poor and outcast understands, has a history. The room has known not so long ago something of card playing and betting, and drunken carouse, but she, who was once enslaved, has become, like the woman of Samaria, a messenger of glad tidings. Her Saviour is worthy, she feels in the glad responsiveness of her heart, of the alabaster box of love. The shame of sin has changed for the clinging love of the forgiven.

Tuesday was a day of victory. At the business men's meeting, the subject of the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead was dealt with. We are to assume nothing, was the remark that prefaced the points of evidence. The records were shown to be unmistakably by ex-witnesses. The artlessness of the narratives, the little facts and phrases they dropped, the accidental details were unconscious testimony to their genuineness. It was clear that the writers were not skilled in fiction, but were writing the truth just as they saw it.

The evening meetings are increasing night by night, and the power of the Spirit is with the message. One saintly lady, who had a seat on the platform, burst into tears as she saw the sea of faces with their deep solemnity, and said the picture of the judgment day would rise before her.

A great event of the week was the children's meeting, and such a meeting, there were 3,000 in Kinnaird Hall, and about 2,000 in the halls of the Y.M.C.A. Dr. Torrey made the children feel just at home by his kindly manner of questioning them. Mr. Alexander made the children in the choir sing, "Never lose sight of Jesus," and as one looked at the youthful faces with the roundness of opening life, and heard the sweet voices, it seemed as if we were listening to a choir of angels, for if there were not the aureolas, there were faces transfigured with the glory of song. It stole over the heart like the warm breath of summer. Who could have said as they saw it that the Gospel was not for children? One little boy had a clear answer to the question of children's salvation. Dr. Torrey said a child can be a Christian. What did Christ say? The reply came quickly, "Suffer little children to come unto Me."

The story of the good Bishop of Smyrna, Polycarp, was told; how he was urged by the Proconsul to revile Christ, but made answer, as he stood in the dignity of honoured age, "Eighty and six years have I served Him, and He never did me wrong; how can I blaspheme my King who has saved me?" Saved at nine years of age, and what a noble testimony he has given of what child salvation may mean. The flames of his martyrdom in the amphitheatre, and his life of honoured service, bore testimony to the reality of what took place in childhood. Two hundred and fifty children confessed Christ that afternoon.

In the evening the meeting was packed to the street, and even then there was supply for an overflow meeting in Willison Church, while an open-air meeting was held at West Port. The address was one of great power and simplicity. The hollowness of the reasons why men delay were shown. The peril of losing the priceless jewel of the soul was most graphically described. As the speaker went from point to point the clearness of the message was irresistible.

ROMAN CATHOLICS FORGETTING PREJUDICE.

There were some Roman Catholics that had to forget their prejudice in the power of the word spoken, and we trust they will be like some during the past week, who came out to confess Christ. The young Christians are standing fire well. In every workshop persecution is doing its best, but such a reply as "you can't laugh me out of it" is the glad rejoinder. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander are discussed by the old men who sit on the park seats, by the mechanics in the meal hour, by the hurrying factory girls with the noise of the boomer in their ears, and at the afternoon social and tea hour in the parlour. The general opinion by friend and enemy is that there is more stir than there has been for many a year. Little boys and girls who have been converted at the children's meeting are practising Christian importunity. We feel that we shall have seeking souls for many a long day after our friends have gone, for the scoffer of yesterday is again and again the Christian of to-day.

We have indeed seen men who came to scoff remain to pray.

Unquestionably the mission has been, in the best sense, a success. It is with joy that one meets little bands on the streets speaking the things of the Kingdom. Yesterday I passed a butcher's boy, with his basket on his back, urging and pointing a soul to the Saviour, and as I watched from a hidden corner I was glad to see it was not resented, for there was quite a cordial hand shake. Dr. Torrey's addresses on the Baptism of the Holy Ghost are with power given to the afternoon gathering, and we are praying that the experience may be found as a reality by many. God is faithful who hath promised. These days are a beginning. We all feel that the best is yet to be.

Rev. John McNeill at Portsmouth.

FIRST WEEK.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

On Sunday, 18th inst., under the auspices of the Free Church Council, Rev. JOHN MCNEILL began a promising fortnight's mission in this old commercial town, fashionable watering place, and first Naval port of the Empire. The ground had been well prepared by a large and enthusiastic committee under the presidency of Rev. W. E. Clegg, Congregationalist, and with the able assistance of Rev. John Kemp, Baptist, as secretary. Both these ministers have done good work in the district, the latter having been for many years the recognised organizer and leader in social and spiritual enterprise. Portsmouth is not an easy place for an evangelist to work; difficulties abound, and the indifference of the people is hard to break down. But when Mr. McNeill stepped on to the platform of the large and handsome Town Hall, every seat was occupied, and an earnest spirit of prayer and expectation seemed to rest upon the people. At the outset he made it clear that he was going to conduct the mission in his own way. He was there as the Lord's servant in the Lord's message to work and speak as God's Holy Spirit should alone lead and direct.

At the evening service he dealt with the words, "Lord, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest," and made an earnest appeal for immediate decision for Christ. The very essence of being a Christian was decision for Christ; saying in the deep places of the heart, "Yes, I will follow Thee," and parting with every other friendship which would hinder this one. Jesus is not a kill-joy and the upsetter of one's life. He alone fills the life and makes it worth living. Mr. McNeill called for immediate decision to "be done with facing both ways," and to say, "Yes, I will."

One of the local papers described it as "a humorous opening"; but the humour is of the right sort, and not to be either despised or criticized, and his addresses are pre-eminently one long Gospel peal and appeal.

Unfortunately the Mission Committee were unable to secure the Town Hall for the first five week nights, so the evening meetings were transferred to the Lake Road Baptist Chapel, which is situated somewhat in a corner of the town, and to a stranger not very easily discovered. The chapel, however, is large and commodious, and the officials most courteous, hospitable, and kind.

"We are in a corner here," said Mr. MCNEILL, "and the people have not yet found out where we are, but you must tell them. Knowing how backward you are in speaking to people in Portsmouth, I have had an advertisement printed on a card which you can take away and put into somebody's hand."

The meetings grew on Tuesday, and on Wednesday the chapel was quite full, with 1,400 people. How many of these began to think on their ways and turn to the Lord, it is impossible for me to say, but the noble ideal and attractions of the Christian calling were worthily and powerfully set forth, and deep, and I trust, lasting impressions were made. The most eloquent and effective address of the week was given to a smaller audience on Thursday night, when the missioner dealt with the subject of Christ standing and knocking at the closed door of the heart. I have heard many preachers and many addresses, but I have never heard anything so powerful, so solemn, so stinging, and yet so persuasive. It was humbling, indeed, for some of us who try to preach, and made us feel, at least for the time, that perhaps we had missed our vocation. But God uses the tongue that stumbles and stutters as well as the tongue of fire and eloquence, so we may thank God, and take courage.

Each afternoon from 400 to 500 people gathered in the Wesleyan Chapel, Victoria Road, Southsea, where perhaps a different class of people were reached. Day by day the attendance increased, and great things are hoped for from these afternoon meetings.

One of the special features of the mission has been the large open-air in the dinner-hour at the Unicorn Gate. This is a difficult task at any time, as many a preacher has found when he has tried to tackle there cool, clever, hard-headed Government men on their own ground. But Mr. McNeill has won the respect and esteem of even those who differ with him and most strenuously interrupt.

On the whole it has been a grand week, which has closed firm and strong. But there is more to follow.

MR. McNEILL AT EXETER.

By the cordial invitation of the Council of the Exeter Free Churches, Rev. J. McNeill held a Gospel Mission in Exeter from October 4 to 16. He began by services in the morning and afternoon of Lord's Day, October 4, at the largest Congregational Church of Exeter, Southernhay, when large congregations were delighted and profited by his powerful ministrations. At 8.15 p.m., by kind permission of Mr. Hayman Wreford, a public service was held in the Victoria Hall. The first Sabbath well inaugurated the mission.

The next afternoon, Mr. McNeill gave a pithy address to the fraternal meeting of ministers of the city and district in the Palace Gate Baptist schoolroom by invitation of Rev. J. C. Hughes, B.D. From Monday to Friday evening services were held in Southernhay Church, and were well attended and their influence blessed.

Afternoon services were also held in the Public Rooms, with increasing numbers, despite the heavy rains. On Sunday, 11th, Mr. McNeill preached in the Baptist Chapel, South Street, in the morning and Southernhay Congregational Church afternoon and evening. From the 12th to 16th powerful services were held each evening in the Mint Wesleyan Church, the audiences growing each evening. Open-air gatherings and processions, with singing by Christian Endeavour Societies, helped the movement on several evenings of the second week, and on the last evening the Salvation Army and band kindly lent their aid.

Gracious influence rested on the gatherings, and though no inquiry room was used, there can be no doubt the effect was deep and powerful.

S. Naish, Congregational Minister.

Gipsy Smith in Dublin.

Far too brief was the mission conducted by this evangelist in the Metropolitan Hall, which concluded on Sunday, 18th inst. From the first day many anxious souls came forward fearlessly, and made their way up the long stairway to the inquiry room. Night after night during those nine days a mighty work for God was done. By far the larger number of inquirers ranged from fifteen to thirty years of age; but, thank God, some aged and white-haired men and women were broken down under a sense of sin, and they, too, cast their burdens on the great Burden-Bearer. A special feature of the work was the numbers who were professing Christians, and even Sunday-school teachers and workers, who found out their lives were not right with God, and came seeking the Saviour. They came from every denomination, deeply convicted of sin. One night I dealt with three such cases. One an Episcopalian, another a Presbyterian, while a third was a Methodist. Amongst other cases where conviction was deep, was a young man who had stolen some money from his employer two years ago, and had never confessed it. The work of the Holy Spirit was so deep and real with him, that he went to his master, confessed his sin, told him he had given his heart to God, and was going to live for Him. His master graciously forgave him, and now, with the burden of sin gone, forgiven by his heavenly and earthly masters, he is confessing Christ boldly.

One night I met three young friends together, longing for salvation, and their joy was great, as they left the inquiry room with beaming faces, rejoicing in their newly found Saviour. On Friday night a young lady sought Christ, but had not peace, for she was waiting for some wonderful feeling; ere many hours had passed (as she told me) she found her mistake and on Sunday, returned with her twin brother, who decided that night. They went on their way, rejoicing together.

The last Sunday evening meeting, announced to commence at 8.30, was well under way at 7 o'clock, hundreds being turned from the doors even at that hour. The mighty power of God fell on the crowded house. Men, women, and children were wiping away their tears; and hundreds rose that night to say they would accept Christ as their Lord and Saviour.

A Worker.

Mr. Henry Varley at Reading.

The ten days' mission in the large Town Hall was brought to a close on Monday night. The afternoon Bible studies in the Abbey Hall have proved to be seasons of remarkable help to the goodly companies of all classes assembled day by day. Mr. Varley certainly invests Scripture exposition with a measure of light and information that holds in closest attention students of the Word of God. Many tell of definite blessing received, and of real establishment in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The evening meetings, open to all, have been attended by hundreds of men, who have listened with deep interest to the subjects chosen for meditation. These have embraced "Proofs of Inspiration of the Word of God," "Cain and Abel, or Rationalism versus Revelation," "The Atonement Proved to be an Absolute Necessity," "The Condition of the Dead," "The Resurrection of Christ," "A Common-sense View of the Fall of Man," "The Coming Great Revolution," and "Christ's Second Coming."

The stirring themes have set many thinking, and the Bible has become invested with a charm and interest for which the many workers and helpers are deeply thankful. Indifference has been shown the door in large numbers of cases, and many are now aroused to real spiritual anxiety.

On Saturday night last at least 1,200 men gathered to hear one of Mr. Varley's invaluable lectures to men. It was a remarkable meeting, and produced spiritual concern in many minds and hearts.

Sunday was a memorable day, the great company at night being profoundly impressed with the earnest appeals and strong arguments used by the missioner.

The devoted efforts of a large company interested in the mission has borne much fruit, and the untiring energy of Mr. John Line, sen., the hon. sec., has been graciously recognised.

We give God thanks and commend the Lord's servant whose untiring energy and sanctified commonsense have been so largely used of God in this vigorous and hallowed mission. He leaves us, having made many new friendships in Reading.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

Mr. R. S. Bradbrook has held a very successful mission in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E. Mr. Bradbrook is not a stranger here, having during the last two seasons lectured with dissolving views, and also given temperance addresses, but this was his first definitely evangelistic mission.

Much blessing was experienced. Christians were encouraged and strengthened, and not a night passed but men and women entered the inquiry room, convinced of sin, and many were those who left the hall realizing the new-born love of a Saviour's grace in their hearts. Some very interesting cases of backsliders being restored were among those who were found on their knees seeking restoration. God abundantly blessed the faithful preaching of the missioner, and there are homes in Mile End made brighter and happier for his visit.

Rev. John Jameson has conducted impressive mission services at Widnes. A prominent feature was a series of gatherings at noon in the large workshops.

Mr. W. Sampson, the Cornish evangelist, has held a mission in the Tent Mission Hall, Queen's Road, Battersea. Mr. B. Headlam writes: "Night after night there were souls seeking Christ, and prodigals returning to the fold. The mission was continued by Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, singing evangelists. The mission was powerful, and many were awakened. The work here has been started only six months, but in that time we have received many blessings. We are a small band of workers, but there is a great work to be done. Pray for us!"

Mr. Frank Weaver at Houghton-le-Spring.

A fortnight's mission has recently been held at Houghton-le-Spring, conducted by Mr. F. Weaver. A great amount of interest has been created, and a good work done. There were increasing congregations up to the last night of the mission. The services were characterized by great power, and many professed to give themselves unto the Lord. About eighty persons, including young and old, handed in their names to the secretary. Some are senior scholars in the school, and a number connected with our own families. The mission was arranged by the C.E. Society. The Church as a whole has worked with unity and enthusiasm, and a powerful influence has been exercised. On the last night Mr. Weaver lectured on the "Life of My Father" to a crowded congregation, and a collection was made on behalf of the Aged Nurses' Homes. There is a bright prospect that the work will grow. The congregations at the ordinary services are excellent, and the services of a high spiritual tone.

Joseph Tweddle, Minister.

Mr. Thos. Payne at St. Clements, Liverpool.

Mr. Thos. Payne has held services at the reopening of St. Clements Mission Hall, after painting and general restoration. The services have been much owned of God in the salvation of souls. At his last mission held at St. Clement's a man much given to drink was pointed to Christ, and since has been wondrously kept by the power of God in spite of the fact that his greatest difficulty was from his own wife at home, who did all in her power to hinder him. Now during this mission the wife, thank God! was brought by her husband to the meetings and has been savingly converted, and the change therefore in that house is one for which we may well thank God. At the closing meeting several testified that they had accepted Christ during the mission.

C. Musgrave Brown, Vicar.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Queen's Park.

Mr. W. R. Lane has been conducting a ten days' mission at Queen's Park Congregational Church, Harrow Road. This building is one of the most capacious in the west of London, and the membership of the church is over 900. There is also a large number of flourishing institutions in connection with the place, and many hundreds of young people are linked with it in various ways. It is a splendid centre for a religious mission, and Mr. Lane has been greatly blessed in his ministry.

Despite the unfavourable weather, the attendance throughout has been large, and towards the end of the mission the services became intensely impressive, and were attended with great blessing.

The most impressive, perhaps, of all the meetings was the one held on Sunday evening, the 18th inst., when the building was packed with people. Mr. Lane's solemn appeal on this occasion made a profound impression, and by its influence many hundreds stayed to the after-meeting. Not a few were enabled to make their decision for Christ and His service.

Broxburn, N.B.

Rev. Mark N. Robson has concluded a mission here. The meetings have been well attended, especially by young men and women. On the Sabbath afternoons Mr. Robson conducted two very interesting and profitable meetings, specially for young men, which were largely attended and much appreciated. His Bible readings and expositions for Christian people, to which a short time at each service was devoted, plain, simple, and illuminating as they were, were very helpful. Besides being an attractive speaker, Mr. Robson possesses a fine musical voice, which he uses with effect in singing the Gospel. The mission has not been without definite fruits in decisions for Christ, and Christian men and women have been braced and quickened by it. (Rev.) R. Erskine.

Rev. James Lyall in Ceylon.

Rev. James Lyall's meetings in Colombo were held in the Public Hall. From the very first the great hall has been packed night after night, the greater part of the audiences consisting of young people. During the first week about 150 persons have passed through the inquiry room, and many others decided to take their stand for Christ. There were several interesting cases of conversion among the members of one or two well-known families. Truly God was working mightily through His servant, who speaks with great power. Many think that Colombo, which needs the Gospel badly, has never been so stirred. Besides the great night meetings, Mr. Lyall gave Bible readings on several mornings each week. These were well attended, and were a source of great help to many. G.

Rev. Barclay Buxton at Hoddesdon.

The recent Convention at Hoddesdon was followed by a week of special mission services conducted by Rev. Barclay F. Buxton, assisted by Mr. Spencer Johnson. A meeting for children was held early each evening, followed by the mission service for adults. The attendance was throughout most gratifying, and numbers both of the children and adults have professed a new-born love to the Saviour, and a desire to live in Him and for Him. We thank God for the mission, and feel sure that Mr. Buxton's earnest appeals, and Mr. Johnson's sweet singing of Gospel hymns, have been used of God for the awakening of many souls. We earnestly ask the prayers of your readers that the new converts may be established in faith and holiness, and that all here who name the name of Christ may "follow after to apprehend that for which they have been apprehended of Christ Jesus."

P. E. S. Holland, Vicar of Hoddesdon.

We also hear from Rev. C. F. Lester, pastor of the Baptist Church, of the blessing that was given:—"The one regret is that the mission was so short. It was giving promise of still greater results. The brief sojourn of these brethren will long be cherished.

At Mr. E. J. Beaumont's mission at Peckham Park, S.E., "the services," writes Mr. L. Wood, "were marked by power and blessing, many were brought to Christ, and God's people were revived."

Blessing has been manifested at the open-air meetings held on Kingsland Green, N., on Saturdays in September, in connection with the Mildmay auxiliary of the Open-Air Mission. The friends rejoice that souls have been brought to decision.

A three days' mission has just been held at Exmouth by Mr. Thos. Hogben. It has been a time of much encouragement. God's own people have learned to view the prayer life from a truer standpoint. The meetings were also productive of good among the unconverted. The attendances increased each day, and much interest was manifested. The power of the Spirit was present, and He was indeed a searcher of hearts. H. S. G.

Rev. D. H. Ritchie Snaddon, of the Scottish Country Towns Mission, paid a visit to Perth recently in connection with the local branch of the Railway Mission. On the Sabbath forenoon he occupied the pulpit of the parish church, and preached to fully 1,000 persons on "Christ the Mediator." The Spirit of God was very manifestly present, and much blessing was received. At the united meeting for Christians, in the afternoon, he spoke on "A Speaking Life." The evening service, which was very largely attended, was a solemn season, and at the close several decided for Christ.

A lantern Gospel Mission, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims, began on October 6, in the "Welcome" Mission Hall, Lisburn, which has a seating capacity for 400. Mr. and Mrs. Sims being quite strangers, and very few even having heard of their work in Ireland, the first meeting was poorly attended, as the mission was hurriedly arranged and short intimation given. However, the character and attractiveness of the first meeting were quite enough to draw a full house the second and subsequent nights during the week, until hundreds had to be turned away, so that the Orange Hall had to be engaged. Mr. Sims' talks on the texts which are put on the screen, are delivered with great earnestness, and attentively listened to.

Miss Glover has been labouring for three weeks in connection with Trinity United Free Church of Scotland (Rev. Norman Macpherson), East End, Glasgow. Her first appearance produced a favourable impression; that impression deepened as the mission went on. Miss Glover's addresses reveal a familiarity with Scripture fact and doctrine which is refreshing to the believing heart. Though the weather broke seriously during the third week, yet the interest so deepened that the audiences were largely increased, and the fruits correspondingly multiplied. Many Christians who have been helped, and those just brought into the new life will long remember and thank God for the times of blessing during this mission. N. M.

Under the auspices of the Newbridge Free Church Council, Mr. Henry Thorne has conducted a mission, commencing with a meeting for workers. Bible-readings, held every afternoon, were highly appreciated, and proved most helpful to those attending. Notwithstanding the unfavourable weather the chapel was well filled every evening; the mission band, under the leadership of Mr. James Hopes, holding open-air meetings prior to the Gospel services. On Sunday, the 11th, a meeting for men only was held at three, and the usual Gospel service in the evening. On the closing night Mr. Thorne gave the story of his life, "From the Stage to the Cross," and the chapel was crowded. Much good will assuredly result from the services.

A Gospel Male Choir composed of some seventy of the missionaries of the London City Mission has during the past few months done an immense amount of open-air preaching all over London as well as at races and fairs elsewhere. At almost every meeting it was demonstrated that audiences can be gathered in the open-air, and that these audiences will listen attentively when there is something being said that is really worth listening to. In various neighbourhoods meetings were held week after week, and in each case with increasing acceptance. There can be no doubt that the resonant singing of good male voices has a very helpful effect in the open-air, but it was also abundantly evident that the manly tone adopted by the missionaries in their addresses gained for them and for their work the respect and attention which they received. John Galt.

Requests for Prayer.

For evangelistic work among farmers in County Down.

For the mission at Bradley, Staffs., of Rev. Dr. Morris, of Brighton.

A Christian asks prayer that a suffering relative may be raised from a sick bed.

For a mission by Major Hanson-Tapp at Cage Lane Mission, Plumstead, November 15-29.

For blessing at a mission at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Torquay, November 18-24, by Rev. J. H. Irwin, of Berwick.

For mission services to be held, from November 1 to 8, at the Workmen's Hall, Woodford Green, conducted by Messrs. Pickard and Jackson.

On behalf of an elderly Christian in the West of England, who has met with a severe accident, that he may be restored to his wife and family.

For a seven-days' mission for children at Cleveland Hall, Ilford, commencing November 1, conducted by Mr. C. W. Rogers, Children's Special Service Mission.

For God's rich blessing on fifty large Scripture texts now being posted on the hoardings in the city of Exeter, that the Holy Spirit may use them to the conversion of sinners.

Praise.

For prayer answered in the case of a lady who was anxious about her soul, and who has now decided for Christ.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Bethnal Green Free Library, E.—Lady L., £2.

National Blind Relief Society—5s. from a lady in Switzerland.

National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic. — This hospital in Queen's Square, Bloomsbury, the largest of its kind in the empire, is devoted exclusively to nervous diseases. Last year over a thousand in-patients were treated, and there were 38,773 attendances at the out-patients' department. In a large number of cases the hospital has not only prevented patients from becoming incurable, but in many instances sufferers thought to be incurable have speedily regained their health. A child was taken to the hospital with all her limbs paralyzed after a fall from a swing. There seemed little hope of a successful recovery, but in less time than appears credible she returned to her home cured. Patients attend daily for free electrical and massage treatment, which they could not possibly pay for, and many have been able to resume their various occupations after a course of these special treatments. The Earl of Harrowby is treasurer.

JOHN A. GROOM, Superintendent, 8, Sekforde Street, E.C.

Blindness and Acute Suffering.

An Old Man, 74 years of age, blind through cancer in the eyes, which is now spreading all over the face. In addition to this sad affliction he is also suffering from an internal disease. He and his aged wife are greatly in need of assistance, as apart from the little their married children are able to give them they have nothing at all to depend on except charity. Who will help to make their old age free from anxiety? Surely pain and blindness are terrible enough without poverty.

The National Blind Relief Society.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, The Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE RAILWAY MISSION

. . AND ITS . .

CONVALESCENT HOMES.

ABOUT 15,000 RAILWAY MEN are injured every year in the United Kingdom by accidents on the line.

Many of these men suffer amputation of one or more limbs, and after discharge from Hospital require nourishing food and fresh air to restore their strength.

THE RAILWAY MISSION CONVALESCENT HOMES at St. Leonard's and Southport provide for the men in their time of weakness.

The Homes urgently need funds. Contributions will be gratefully received by S. G. Sheppard, Esq., Hon. Treasurer, 57, Old Broad Street, E.C., or by Richard Nixon, Secretary, 1, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C., who will send collecting boxes in which thank-offerings for journeying mercies may be put for the Homes.

God and the Nation. It is not popular nowadays to speak of national calamities as "God's judgments." Men regard the idea as obsolete—a mere relic of superstition belonging to a bygone age. On page 17 appears a letter suggesting that the failure of this year's harvest is due to our thinking only of our human interests, even in the sowing of our seed, and giving no thought to the claims of God. In Haggai i. 9 we find the same spirit described, and its result :—

> Ye looked for much, and lo, it came to little ; and when ye brought it home, I did blow it away. Why? saith the Lord of hosts. Because of Mine house that lieth waste, while ye run every man to his own house.

What of the forsaken sanctuary, the disregarded Sabbath, the haste of men to be rich by fair means or foul, the neglect of the poor, the ravaging of the drink trade? Are not these subjects enough for God to have a controversy with our nation? Truly Haggai's message is a timely one to-day, and calls for humiliation and "strong crying with tears!"

The Education Problem. The Archbishop of Canterbury has done well to approach the Nonconformists on the working of the Education Act. He proposes a conference, in the hope of attaining such an understanding as will remove existing causes of offence. In a letter to Dr. Horton, he wisely says that "such an endeavour, whether it succeed or fail, seems to me to be practically obligatory upon us as Christian men." This is doubtless true; but many will not cease to regret that the consideration which is now proposed was not advanced two years ago, before the embers of strife were stirred into the flame which is now so destructive of peace and goodwill in our midst. We give the Archbishop full credit for sincerity in trying to bring about a modus vivendi, but the conditions which he lays down will require some extension before a conference can be reckoned on as possible, or as promising useful results.

Prayer and its Counterfeit. Having recently confounded the power of prayer with "the dynamic force that is in concentrated thought," Archdeacon Wilberforce has now argued for the immortality of the soul by advocating prayers for the dead as a point of "simple duty." Many a time we have shown that such a practice is altogether wanting in Divine sanction, and opposed to the definite teaching of Holy Scripture. The discourse of the Archdeacon is, moreover, specially hurtful by reason of the confident manner in which it misrepresents the position of Christ. When he says: "Every time our Lord preached in the synagogue, He must have taken part in prayers for the dead," the Archdeacon not only associates himself with an extraordinary assumption as to the extent of our Lord's preaching in synagogues, but he speaks with unseemly assurance on a keenly-controverted question regarding Jewish theology in the time of Christ. With more care to expound the Scriptures, there would be less temptation to present counterfeits of the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith.

A Perverted Gospel. We have remarked that in many of the polemics directed against the Gospel, it is truth corrupted that men attack, under the impression that they are combatting truth itself. Emile Zola's bitter attack on "Christianity" was not an attack upon Christian Faith at all; it was an attack upon French Catholicism, which to him was synonymous with the Gospel, but which is an entire perversion of it. And now—from Zola's country—another attack on "Christianity" comes, in which the same mixture of truth and error known as Catholicism is confounded with the pure truth of the Gospel, and attacked on the side of its superstition.

Revitalized Truth. Dr. W. T. Davison, the scholarly president of Handsworth College, made a much-needed distinction, a few nights ago, at Bradford, between a reconstructed and a revitalized creed. The former, he truly contended, was not only not necessary, it was fatal; the latter is what the Church needs. The people of Bradford in particular need to have this distinction pointed out to them, for the most popular pulpit of that city is, unhappily, noted for its persistent advocacy of the reconstruction of Christian teaching. Reconstruction, however, means, in that pulpit, the banishment of nearly everything that is distinctly Evangelical; and the surrender of these truths is advertised as a great gain for freedom, and a complete answer to the quibblings of such men as Mr. Blatchford. We have yet to learn that the surrender to our opponents of all that is distinctive in our faith can in any sense be called a victory. Dr. Davison, who had the courage to speak in the presence of his opponent, pleaded for a revitalization of the old truths which alone can save a sinful world. "Revitalization" is the exact word needed. The most perfect of Evangelical truths reduced to Shibboleths can effect nothing, but when they live in men, and through them, God makes them the instrument of salvation.

The Critical Reaction. It is refreshing to find that Dr. Horton stands his ground and refuses to withdraw his reference, made at Bournemouth recently, to the fanciful theories promulgated by the critics who figure so largely in the "Encyclopædia Biblica." Dr. Horton himself has written certain books on Biblical Criticism which we cannot help deeply regretting, and which we think that one day he may be glad to withdraw, or modify. But the fact that he has had sympathy with the critical school makes his present attitude the more emphatic and striking. All but a mere handful of extremists will agree with Dr. Horton that the insertion of articles in a modern Biblical Encyclopædia, which take from us the Gospels and Epistles, is "monstrous" as a representation of the results of Christian scholarship. We think that this epithet will yet be applied to certain other theories which are at present accepted by some. The critical reaction has already set in. People are beginning to see that methods which naturally end in the destruction of the most sacred experiences of history and life must be fundamentally wrong. It is impossible that the Holy Ghost has misled the Church for nineteen centuries.

Character-Making. A recent writer, taking as his text the opinion of Herbert Spencer that "of all the ends to be kept in view by the egislator, all are unimportant compared to the end of character-making, which alone is national education," points out that not only are legislators to blame for neglect in this respect, but also many parents. He says that, especially in the matter of choosing schools for their children—

> Parents too often quite overlook the question o character, simply selecting those establishments where the richest people send their sons, or which are most likely to train a boy for his profession. . . . In all probabilty it has never occurred to them that education has anything to do with character at all.

The censure unhappily is not without ground, for in only too many cases the one thing thought about is temporal success—the higher spiritual wellbeing being quite overlooked, while the brain is forced at the cost of the soul.

A Great Problem. It is a very healthy sign that so many consciences are being awakened to the supreme importance of the Sunday-school and its work. It is generally agreed that there is room for reconstruction and amendment in many directions. The great falling off in the number of teachers in recent years, and the terrible gulf between school and church in the matter of membership, both call for the most earnest thought. One correspondent, who has a right to be heard by reason of his service, pleads for a closer connection between the ordinary home life of the children and the teachers; and he argues, justly, that the impression made upon the children by an interview of one hour per week on the Sunday cannot be deep enough to be permanent. The emphasis should be taken off the word "school" so far as it suggests a task to be submitted to. But this suggestion can never be fully carried out unless the teacher finds in the parents of the children loving and loyal co-operation. It is with the parents, after all, that the balance of power lies, for good or for evil, so far as influence over the children is concerned.

The Teacher's Preparation. Then again, we notice that much is being said concerning the aptitude of the teacher for his work. It is hardly possible to say too much about this, for the Sunday-school has, surely, no raison d'être, unless the teaching given is true, and the teachers who give it have a vocation for their office. Yet, one great difficulty—ever increasing—is to obtain teachers of the right sort, and too often the young and inexperienced are called in, to save appearances. Many suggestions are offered by way of remedying this. We do not believe it will be satisfactorily remedied until two things are done. First, the congregations from which teachers are drawn must be taught congregations—i.e., more than sermon hearers—they must be Bible students. The preaching, on Sunday mornings at least, needs to be more expository than it often is. Many congregations are not well-instructed in the Bible. We cannot have satisfactory teachers unless they first are taught in the Word. The second thing is, that the New Testament ideal of a Christian, as a worker with God, needs recovering, the WHOLE membership to realize its responsibility to work for God. When these things are restored to us, there will be no lack of prepared teachers; the Church will naturally produce them.

Pulpit Prayer. Rev. Dr. Wolff calls attention to the habitual failure on the part of many pastors to make preparation for their public prayers. He urges that the sermon intended for human ears receives the most careful and painstaking attention; but, too often, the prayer addressed to the Divine ear bears no mark of having received the slightest premeditation. In many cases, Professor Wolff says, this omission of preliminary thought results in positive profanation of public prayer. To avoid this, it is essential that the pastor should have a full consciousness of the overpowering reality of his office, and that feeling of reverential awe which impelled Moses to take off his shoes at the burning bush. He says:—

> Nothing tends so much to fit a man for public prayer as habitual private prayer. The minister's closet is his best school for the pulpit. To be much with God in secret, trains a man to appear before Him in public, voicing the worship of his congregation. . . . . A devout hearing of the Divine Word is undoubtedly acceptable worship; but in the nature of things something must be given back to God.

Reservation. The Bishop of Exeter's decision in regard to Reservation of the Sacrament has at any rate the merit of clearness, and it will undoubtedly mark a line in the history of the Ritualistic movement. The Church Times admits that the question "is exactly one of those matters which it is a bishop's province to regulate." Our contemporary, however, whilst rejoicing over the permission to reserve for the communion of the sick, as likely to have "far-reaching consequences, not in the restriction, but in the extension of the practice," professes to be unable to understand the grounds of the bishop's refusal to allow "public reservation." To the ordinary mind, however, there can be no such difficulty, when it is remembered that in the Romish communion the practice has its adjuncts of adoration and benediction of the elements, a ceremony which, unhappily, has been introduced in certain High Church services.

Cruel Research. The recent protest of a large gathering of Birmingham citizens against the application of the authorities of the Birmingham University Laboratory for a licence to experiment upon animals, forcibly draws attention to the pressing question of scientific research plus cruelty. In a communication to the Daily News, the Hon. Stephen Coleridge deals with the figures of the Registrar-General's returns for 1901, just issued, and shows, undeniably, that the death-rate continues to decline year after year just in those diseases for which the vivisection professors have nothing to offer, and that it goes up steadily in those in the treatment of which their serums are made use of! Diphtheria, for instance, has risen from 173 to 273, although the anti-toxin of the vivisectionists has been in use since 1894. Mr. Coleridge, therefore, strenuously urges those who care nothing for suffering dogs, but who have some regard for the welfare of their fellowmen, to look into the matter for themselves.

Gambling and Bad Trade. A leading London newspaper, which carefully records all racing and betting news, seriously asked, a few days ago, whether there was not a connection between the present bad trade and the growth of the gambling habit. It quoted the experience of an expert London modiste, to the effect that not for thirty years had things been so unsatisfactory as at present, and the cause was attributed to the gambling which goes on in high circles. Titled ladies, and others belonging to the upper circles, she declared, are so compromised with betting that they cannot pay their just debts, and sometimes a £600 account has to be compounded for with a paltry £130. Trade is beginning to suffer through this sort of thing. These people are blind to the moral side of the question—what room, indeed, is there for morality in the face of these undischarged obligations?—but the business side of it will, sooner or later, hit them heavily. In the nature of things, the unnaturalness of gambling is bound, sooner or later, seriously to affect the whole life—commercial, mental, and moral. And if anything, the madness grows rather than diminishes.

The Reply of the Congo Officials. The astonishing reply which the Officials of the Congo Free State have thought fit to make to the British Circular Note regarding the atrocities committed in that Dominion, will have the opposite effect to that which they intend. For evasiveness and impertinence their letter is unique, but neither England nor any of the other Great Powers can accept such a document as a reply to the questions demanded in the name of humanity. To speak of "specific aims" in the face of the accumulated mass of testimony (through independent and unbiassed witnesses) concerning unmentionable atrocities committed by Congo officials, is wickedly grotesque. Europe has rung with the shameful news of their barbarities, and Europe must insist upon the trial and removal of the offenders, as also upon a new Government under which a repetition of these crimes will be impossible.

Man's Place in the Universe. The controversy raised by Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace in the Fortnightly Review some months ago, upon "Man's Place in the Universe," has entered upon another stage, in the publication of a volume by the same author and bearing the same title. Dr. Wallace maintains his position, and emphasizes its chief point. It is curious that he, of all men, should call a halt and challenge the assertion, made in the name of Science, that man is an insignificant creature in an insignificant world. But he does so in the name of Science, and he is a force to be reckoned with. As to the purely scientific side of the controversy, Dr. Wallace and his critics must fight the matter out. The world will look on with a mild interest. As to the religious issues involved, all the grandiloquent talk about the "infinitude of the universe" does not remotely touch the question of man's uniqueness in the plan of God. Size and quality are two different things. The late Dr. Parker described much of the grand talk indulged in by anti-Christian scientists as "mere gossip in polysyllables—getting importance by hugeness." Man's place in the universe is not determined mathematically, but morally. Over against the hypothesis concerning space and other worlds stand the facts of the Incarnation and the Cross, and these are the true measure—God's measure—of the value of man.

Mid-Week Services. The multiplication of mid-week services in populous centres is a good sign. The energies of the late Dr. Parker were spent without stint upon his Thursday sermon. Others are following in his footsteps. Rev. C. Silvester Horne has started a meeting every Wednesday, at 1.15, in the Central Mission (Whitefield) Chapel, Tottenham Court Road; and Rev. George Freeman another in Westbourne Grove Chapel, Bayswater, on Thursdays, 12 o'clock. We trust these efforts will redound to the glory of God in the midst of London's millions.

An Apt Analogy.

AN episode in the life of David and his men, recorded in 1 Sam. xxi. 1-9, has a striking counterpart to-day. They came to Nob, hungry and without supplies. David, without sword or spear, Ahimelech, not without some misgivings, gave them of the hallowed bread, and to David, the sword of Goliath, which the priest had by him, wrapped up in a cloth. It was a blade in which David had perfect confidence, having used it in cutting off the giant's head, and of it he said: "There is none like it; give it me."

Our Divine David and his servants daily eat of the hallowed bread (which, as David said, is in a manner common), and not only so, but they press upon men constantly the supreme importance of feeding upon the hallowed bread of the Word common to all, if they would grow in grace, and become 'stablished, strengthened, and settled in the faith of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Their exhortation is enforced by the reminder that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

We have in our midst men who arrogate to themselves the title of "priest," who, Ahimelech-like, but under very different circumstances, keep the sword of the spirit wrapped up in their cloth of ecclesiastical ceremonial, afraid lest the common people should become enlightened as to their unwarrantable assumption in attempting to come between the lowest and the lowliest of sinners, and their friend, the Friend of sinners, and Him who sent Him to seek and to save the lost.

Concerning the sharp two-edged sword, Dr. Torrey's discourses constantly echo his firm faith in Scripture, finding appropriate expression in David's telling words: "There is none like it; give it me." In answer to prayer, Dr. Torrey has got the sword, and skilfully wields this well-tried weapon, bringing down many of the King's enemies in humble, loyal, loving subjection to Him. He scatters with unshaken confidence and unstinted profusion the incorruptible seed of the Word, by which men are being born again, the Word of God which liveth and abideth for ever. There are "men of light and leading" who, in their pride of intellect, have blunted the edge and broken the force of the only instrument capable of dissecting the heart and conscience, to their own undoing and the confusion of those who blindly follow them. A Missionary in the Field to his Brother at Home.—"I am reading through the New Testament at the rate of a Gospel a day, or two Epistles. Rapid reading has advantages. Close study of minute portions has other advantages. All sorts of reading are valuable. Go for your Bible, brother. There is indeed more in it than ever you or I have yet seen. I am going for it both in Chinese and English, and it pays as nothing else does. In Jesus is all fulness. Supply yourself from Him. May the richest blessings be on you from Him! Heaven's ahead, brother Hurrah!"—JAMES GILMOUR.

THE UNVEILING.

THE SEVEN TRUMPETS.—III.

THE wonderful book which closes the canon of Scripture is not only a prophecy of things which were to come, but also an unveiling of their inwardness.

If a book were announced claiming to be An Unveiling of events which happened during the tenure of power by the present Government, we should expect not a mere statement of facts, as, e.g., the Jameson Raid, the South African War, the Education Act, the Fiscal Campaign, the changes in the Cabinet, &c. We should expect the veil to be taken off the motives and purposes, the ambitions and antagonisms, of the chief actors, who had brought these things about.

The word apocalypse signifies an uncovering, an unveiling, a disclosure, a revelation of one's whole mind. To illustrate this: The Queen of Sheba came to Solomon and "communed with him of all that was in her heart, and Solomon told her all her words [which may mean more than answering all her questions]. There was not anything hid from the king which he told her not."

"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him, and He will show them His covenant." "He made known His ways unto Moses, His acts unto the children of Israel."

The Apocalypse is the summing-up of the Word of God, which "is living and active, and quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart; and there is no creature which is not manifest in His sight; but all things are naked and laid open before the eyes of Him with whom we have to do." The Apostle James unveiled the history of the world when he asked, "Whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts which war in your members?"

It is remarkable that when expositors or teachers make reference to the historical records of persons and events in Old or New Testament Scripture, they invariably seek to apply the lessons found in them to the present time. But when they expound prophetic Scripture they almost as invariably deal only with events, real or imaginary, and seldom seek to unveil their inwardness. Whereas one of the chief uses of history, of prophecy that has become history, and of prophecy yet unfulfilled, is to unveil the hidden working of the principles and influences, good and evil, which have made history, and which lie beneath and within all prophetic revelations.

The things here foretold must, from that time, shortly come to pass, consequent upon the new conditions in heaven and earth. The Incarnation, Death, Resurrection, and Ascension through the heavens, of Jesus the Son of God, had taken place. Then necessarily followed the hurling down of the adversary, who had been accusing before God the brethren from Adam to Christ. For him and for his angels no more place was possible in the Court of Justice above, when the Atoner and Justifier had entered by virtue of His own blood, shed upon the cross for their and our sins. Well may the triumphant Apostle now challenge the universe: "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? Is it God that justifieth? Who is he that condemneth? Is it Christ that died: yea rather, that is risen again, Who is even at the right hand of God, Who also maketh intercession for us?"

The Fifth Trumpet sounds the signal for the vision of the first of the three Woes. That which distinguishes these from the judgments under the four previous Trumpets is that while these affected the earth, sea, rivers, and heavenly lights, the three Woes afflict men themselves—such as have not the seal of God on their foreheads.

The first result of the sounding of the Fifth Trumpet is the vision of the star fallen out of heaven unto the earth, and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit.

One of the essential principles of the symbolism which runs through all Scripture is the parallelism between our mother earth and us her children. For example: The Psalmist says: "Thou hast covered me in my mother's womb. My substance was not hid from Thee when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lower parts of the earth."

The bottomless pit is figured as being in the heart of the earth (Isa. xiv. 15, 19; Ezek. xxxi. 14; xxxii. 18). Jeremiah (xvii. 9) says: "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked; who can know it?" Hosea (vii. 4-6) rebukes his people as an oven heated by the baker. "They have made ready their heart like an oven; . . . in the morning it burneth as a flaming fire."

When our Lord asked the Samaritan woman for water, she said, "The pit is deep." Jesus replied: "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, it shall be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life." The woman speaks of the pit in the earth, Jesus speaks of the well in the man.

The essential bottomless pit is the deceitful, desperately wicked, unfathomable heart of fallen man. The key of this, in the vision, is committed to Satan, the fallen star. For temptation, testing, "is common to man," and Satan is a party in the process, from Adam, and Job, and Joseph, to Jesus, in whom he found nothing. For that which is of earth and that which is of heaven within us must be shaken, that that which cannot be shaken may remain. If there were no bottomless pit within, there would be no lake of fire into which those condemned for their evil works, those whose names are not written in the Lamb's book of life, should be cast.

The many Symbols under this Trumpet are necessarily postponed until next week. Meanwhile, it may be mentioned that the destruction of "the third of the ships" under the Fourth Trumpet seems to anticipate the utter destruction of Commercial Babylon (ch. xviii., cp. Ezek. xxvii.; Zech. v.). M.

EVERY child of God knows what it is to rise in the morning with the feeling that there is so much to be done it is impossible to get through it. When this is the case, we sometimes allow the thought of our work to worry and flurry us till we are quite unfit to do anything at all, or else we try to do half a dozen things at once, and end by doing nothing properly. Where we make the mistake is in looking at our task as a whole, instead of taking it piece by piece. God only asks us to live a moment at a time, and when we try to open our arms wide enough to take in the whole day, no wonder we fail. He who has prepared our work for us, and us for our work, knows exactly what we can do, and what time and strength we require for the purpose.

God's dealings with us are all on this system. He supplies His children with their "daily bread," not provisions for a month at a time. He gives us our nightly rest, not a winter sleep, like that of the dormouse. He sends the spring leaf by leaf, the rainfalls in drops, and the snow in flakes. Even the sunlight does not burst upon us all at once, but in the tender beauty of the dawn. Surely, since our Father's blessings fall thus lightly, we may be certain that He will not crush us with a burden too heavy for us to carry or a task too difficult for us to accomplish. Nora C. Usher.

Fellowship with Christ.—2.

By Rev. F. J. HORSEFIELD, Bristol.

THE thoughts embodied in last week's contribution lead on naturally to the next point, viz.:—

(4) Communion with Christ means Likeness to Himself. See what the Apostle says: "But we all, with unveiled face reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image" (2 Cor. 3-18 R.V.). It is a matter of common experience that we become like those with whom we dwell. A child, unwittingly, imitates in a thousand little ways the attitudes and looks and habits of a beloved parent, until they eventually become a very part of his own nature. If, as men or women, we forsake the company of God's people, and throw ourselves into the society of the worldly or openly wicked, we shall in due time become as vicious as they are, and show it in feature as well as in action. But, thank God, the contrary is just as true. If our hearts are filled with the blessed consciousness of God's love and presence, and we dwell with great delight beneath His shadow, we shall be changed into the image of Christ from glory to glory by the power of His Spirit.

(5) It Ensures Enduement with Power. The mill-stream may be flowing as fully and as freely as ever, but if the sluice-gates are closed, so that it only runs past the mill instead of over the wheel, the machinery within will be powerless and inert. But open the sluice, let the rushing water stream over the idle wheel, and at once the power is manifested, and all the machinery set in motion.

In the course of visiting lately, I stood by the door of a house where there was an electric bell. Obeying the injunction inscribed upon the little knob to "Push," I tried time after time to ring that bell, but all my pushing was fruitless, and awakened no response. Why? The connection was broken. The battery and the bell were in their proper places within, but the wire that ought to have conveyed the current was broken. So, unless men are maintaining a real connection with Christ, all the outward show of an apparent Christian life and all the apparatus of Church organization notwithstanding, there will be no response to the call for sympathy or service, for there is no power.

I have said nothing of the joy that comes from communion with Christ—a joy that is truer and fuller than aught that earth can afford; nor of the peace and rest the soul experiences even in the midst of all life's exigencies, whilst it is entertained in the King's banqueting-hall; nor of the strength that is imparted to those who lean upon their Beloved as they come up from the wilderness, and renewed to those who wait upon their Lord. These things are to be experienced and not described; and we pass on now to ask:

"How can this attitude of heart and mind be acquired and cultivated?" Let me briefly remind my readers of one or two self-evident truths.

The One with whom we walk must be recognised and believed in as our own personal, loving, living Lord, before our fellowship with Him can yield us any real gladness. The two disciples on the way to Emmaus had Christ by their very side, talking with them, and though, as they afterwards confessed, their hearts burned within them as He unfolded to them the Scriptures, yet because "their eyes were holden and they knew Him not," but thought He was still dead, they felt nothing of that rapture which such a walk would have afforded had they known Him at first.

Further, the power to hold this communion uninterruptedly is one of the gifts of God. It is not an experience that can be manufactured, or into which we can pass in and out at will and pleasure. Sometimes the Lord sees it needful to hide His face, and then the soul is troubled and can only cry out in loneliness and sorrow for the renewal of the light of His countenance. It is not by any amount of excitement or emotionalism that we can gain this, but by seeking it and receiving it as a gift from Him. Yea, though when we have earnestly sought to be brought so near to Him that we may walk in unbroken fellowship, there may still come seasons of depression and gloom, but we must believe that our prayer is not denied. A mist may fall upon the river and hide from our view the light that shines beyond, but the light is there, and soon the mist shall clear away, and we shall see it shining as brightly and as clearly as ever.

Let us not think that a period of sorrow or pain must necessarily put an end to the sweet delight of walking and talking with Jesus. The martyr's cell has been full often proved to be the very ante-chamber of Heaven. The caves and dens of earth, into which God's saints have been driven by the cruel persecution of Satan's emissaries, have echoed songs of triumph that might have awakened envy in the breasts of angels. The rack, the wheel, the fiery stake, are instruments which God has used to show how near He can come to poor humanity, and how greatly He can strengthen it. As for ourselves, we, too, may prove the vale of sorrow to be the King's Dale; the darkest night to be the brightest day. Would we see clearly the pictures God would throw upon the screen of our life?—the lights must first be turned low. Would we hear the song of the nightingale?—we must listen for it in the stillness of night, and not in the glare of noon.

But how shall they who are called neither to be martyrs nor sufferers maintain this spirit of communion? Chiefly by the cultivation of a prayerful spirit; by a regular habit of withdrawal from worldly things for seasons of converse with God. They who never find time for quiet fellowship with Christ can know but little of the secret of the Lord. "The wing that would soar into the serene air of the upper world, must shake from it all clods and fetters, and break away from whatever would tie it down to earth."

When Isaac wished to hold communion with God he went out in the quiet eventide, where in the free air and the music of nature—

> "While stars above seemed lamps of love,
> To light the temple of devotion"—

he could find what tended to elevate his soul. Seek to get alone with the Lord; away from the noisy distractions of the world and from the confusion of tongues; journey often from Babel to Bethel; "commune with thine own heart . . . and be still." So shall the soul expand and the heart be purified; and in the solemn stillness of holy fellowship, strength shall be renewed for all that may lie before us.

But more than this is needed. We ought to cultivate the habit of continually lifting up the heart, always and everywhere. If we are in the country, let all the harmonies around us—the singing of the birds as they trill their varied notes of praise, the rustle of the trees as they clap their hands, the gurgling of the stream or the thunder of the ocean, the sighing of the wind or the crash of the raging tempest—let all speak to us of Him by whom all things were made, that so, listening to their voices, we may catch in them His own accents of beneficence and power. If in the city streets or by the busy workshop, pressed by daily cares, harassed and troubled by life's perplexities, still let the glance of faith oft pierce the clouds; and let every letter written or received, every transaction attempted or completed, every act of the daily life, however insignificant in itself, all be hallowed by the thought that He knows, and cares, and watches, and waits to bless and help.

And oh! beware of all that would grieve so true a Friend. Watch against the secret sins—the little faults—the things that, right so far as others are concerned, are inexpedient for you. If your communion with him is already broken, go to Him at once and ask Him to show you wherein you have wounded His loving heart, and to pardon and restore you to His fellowship. Make sure that your earthly companionships, your pleasures, your pursuits, your ambitions are such that you can claim His blessing upon them. Guard against the beginnings of departure from Him. Respond promptly to every impulse that points to service for Him in however lowly a capacity.

And so, from the first conscious thought of the opening day to the last at night—or on through the watches of the night if sleep should be denied—there shall be the glad and constant realization of a love that is supreme, a care that is unfailing, a joy unspeakable, bringing foretastes of the blessed fellowship we shall have with Him in the eternal and cloudless glory of His own immediate Presence.

ON Sunday afternoon, October 18, Madison Square Garden, the largest building in the city, was packed with the biggest congregation that, I believe, ever assembled here to listen to an evangelistic address. There were about 15,000 people inside, and some said there were as many more outside. The service was the opening of a religious campaign entirely unprecedented in character. Some 4,000 people had been brought 900 miles (at their own expense) to engage in house-to-house visitation, and in a series of meetings having for their object the salvation—physical and spiritual—of the people of New York.

Dr. John Alexander Dowie ("Elijah the Restorer") and autocratic head of the "Christian Catholic Church in Zion," was supported on the platform by several hundreds of male and female officers, in addition to the large "white-robed choir," and a very fine band. The members of this choir wore white surplices and "mortar-boards," while the officers wore similar headgear with black gowns. Dr. Dowie himself wore a white surplice with very full sleeves, and a hood showing the "Zion" colours—blue, white and gold. Over his white surplice he wore a sleeveless robe, apparently of silk. Beside him sat Mrs. Dowie, a woman of dignified carriage.

The service proper was preceded by a "processional," in which the hundreds of singers and officers marched slowly down the sides of the floor of the great hippodrome and up the centre, to their places on the great platform. In such a huge building it was only natural that some hundreds of people could not hear properly when Dr. Dowie commenced reading the twenty-fourth Psalm, and they began to leave the building. This annoyed him, and he made the situation worse by impatient remarks. Still there was nothing like a stampede, and he held till the end one of the largest congregations that ever heard a preacher in this city.

The address itself was of an evangelistic type. At the conclusion Dr. Dowie asked all who "let the Saviour into their hearts," then and there to follow him in a prayer making surrender to God, but containing a promise that "If I have done wrong to any man, I will make full restitution." A Difficulty in Prayer.

"I READ with much interest some papers in The Christian on Prayer. I had been praying for M., repeating the promise, 'Believe that ye receive, and ye shall have.' But in one of the above papers the writer says (and I know it is true) that God does not compel men to be saved. Though I knew this, yet it came over me with great force, and made me depressed for a time."

So writes a friend in reference to prayers offered for nearly twenty years. And where is the loving, praying heart that has not been oppressed, in greater measure or in less, with the same grief? This "trial of our faith" cannot have its full solution while "we know in part." Nevertheless, there are counter considerations. The following thoughts may help other discouraged hearts, as well as the correspondent quoted above. Their purpose (need it be said?) is not controversy, but comfort, and they are left, for simplicity's sake, in the form of direct address:—

You are troubled by the thought that God does not compel men to be saved. But are you not mistaken in allowing this fact to have any hostile bearing upon your confidence in prayer for M. Examine the statement a little more closely. What do we intend when we say, "God does not compel men to be saved"? Just this, that salvation is a matter in which compulsion has no place, no meaning. You can compel physical changes, changes of place and of surroundings; but to talk of compelling moral and spiritual changes is to talk sheer nonsense. The words have no meaning, when taken literally and absolutely, in reference to moral and spiritual things. We overlook this, and hence our mental confusion.

On the other hand, God's prophecies and promises in the Word show beyond a doubt that God at least foresees human volitions. He who foresees human volitions, and who has also appointed prayer as one—perhaps the chief—of the methods of the co-working of His people with one another, and with Himself, never leads you to pray on a blind chance that M. perhaps may, and perhaps may not, be saved. Has not God helped you to pray? Is He not now helping you? Does He not again and again cause His peace which passeth all understanding to keep your heart after you have prayed? What place, then, is there for doubts, fears, uncertainties? It is God, who cannot lie, with whom you have to do.

Which of all God's great spiritual promises and prophecies does not turn, in the last development, upon the coalescence of the human will with the Divine? And though the transition from opposition to harmony be long deferred, be interrupted, be to our feeble sense marred, yet it comes. In thousands of cases, likely and unlikely to human reckoning, God has saved men for whom His children have offered persevering prayer. What we get in the very glow and glare of midday in the case of Saul of Tarsus, is happening in quiet and secrecy every hour.

Cease looking at the mystery. What have you to do with that? Look at the Promiser. "According to your faith, be it unto you."

F. W. S.

Psalm XLII.

"Why art thou cast down, O my soul?"
Does God seem far away?
If in thy heart He has control,
Thou shalt in Zion pray.

"Why art thou cast down, O my soul?"
Hast thou thy Lord forgot?
Trust thou in Him when surges roll:
Jehovah changes not.

"Why art thou cast down, O my soul?"
Thy prayer in song shall rise;
What others seek from pole to pole
Thy living Rock supplies.

"Why art thou cast down, O my soul?"
Thy Sun shall rise each day,
No more the evening bell shall toll,
For thou hast learnt to say,
My God.

Helping Poor Pastors.

THE LATE MRS. C. H. SPURGEON.

MANY hearts were touched in a special manner by the home-going of Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon. Her beautiful life had been full of Christian activity and usefulness. While she never obtruded her personality in public, but has ever remained behind her husband and her sons, those who knew her best put a very high value indeed on her share in their success as adviser and supporter in every good work. Testimony abounds to show that the life of that home in which her influence was paramount was most beautiful. To many it was an inspiration to enjoy familiar intercourse with the great preacher and his beloved wife. Those who experienced it in bygone years speak with gratitude of the warm and genial welcome received under that ever-hospitable roof.

As stated in our last issue, the friend whose form is now missing from among us was the daughter of the late Mr. Robert Thompson, of Falcon Square, E.C., and first came into contact with her future husband through being invited to attend New Park Street Chapel on the evening when he, described as "the young man from Waterbeach," preached his first sermon there. His pulpit gifts did not then make a deep impression on her, but she was much attracted by his earnestness. When he accepted the pastorate she at once cast in her lot with the cause of God there, and from the outset of her connection was an enthusiastic worker. The marriage ceremony was performed in 1856 by her old friend, Dr. Fletcher, and the joint life then begun has been truly described as ideally happy.

In after days she told how in the beginning of their wedded life Mr. Spurgeon was frequently obliged to be absent from home fulfilling preaching engagements, and she felt these separations as a heavy burden on her heart, though anxious never to be a hindrance to him in his work for God. One day her husband turned to her, and said, "Wifey, do you think that when any of the children of Israel brought a lamb to the Lord's altar, as an offering to Him, they stood and wept over it?" "Why, no," she replied, "certainly not; the Lord would not be pleased with a sacrifice grudgingly given." "Well," said he, "you are giving me to God, by letting me go to preach the Gospel to poor sinners; and do you think He likes to see you cry over your sacrifice?" And so she learned her lesson.

One evening when she was living at Brighton for reasons of health, Mr. Spurgeon arrived from London with a large package, which when uncovered proved to be a cage containing a lovely piping bullfinch. In her weakness she had been longing to possess such a bird, but without either of them making the wish known. Mr. Spurgeon had gone to visit a friend whose husband was seriously ill, and who asked him to take it to cheer Mrs. Spurgeon in her loneliness. His remark to her that evening was, "I think you are one of your Heavenly Father's spoiled children, and He just gives you whatever you ask for." And indeed she felt that the Lord over and over again met her wishes in a marvellous manner.

Ministers, missionaries, and other Christian workers in every part of the world think and speak with gratitude of the Book Fund with which Mrs. Spurgeon's name has been identified. This effort had a very simple beginning. She tells herself how that in the summer of 1875, when reading the proofs of the first volume of her husband's "Lectures to My Students," her answer to the question, "How do you like it?" was "I wish I could place it in the hands of every minister in England." "Then," was the ready response, "why not do so? how much will you give?" The arrow went home, and the Book Fund was unconsciously started with a sum she had laid aside, and which proved just sufficient to pay for 100 copies. The organization took definite shape in a few weeks, and the making known of the need led to a response so hearty that in the course of the following winter grants were made of "The Treasury of David" and the "Sermons." In twelve months the amount received was £500, which paid for 3,058 volumes. The only shadow on the movement was the revelation of the great need of so many country pastors, who, on almost incredibly small incomes, and surrounded by difficulties of many kinds, were faithfully holding forth the Word of Life to the poor of the land.

The benefits of the Fund were not limited to Baptists or Nonconformists, and at the end of ten years it was found that over 12,000 ministers of all denominations had been supplied with books. While at first only Mr. Spurgeon's own books were aimed at, this limitation was soon swept aside. In 1886, Mr. Spurgeon declared that the work was outgrowing his wife's physical powers, and that she could not possibly continue long to labour all day long, as she had been doing, at correspondence and book-keeping. The gratitude of the recipients was more than sufficient reward for all the toil; but there was another, and very much higher, in the consciousness that it was all done unto the Lord, and was honoured of Him.

THE LATE MRS. C. H. SPURGEON.

From Photograph by Mr. Emil Vieler, Bexhill.

On January 31, 1892, came the great sorrow of Mrs. Spurgeon's life, in the passing of her husband to be with the Lord. Describing their joint pilgrimage she wrote—

At last they came to a place on the road where two ways met; and here, amidst the terrors of a storm such as they had never before encountered, they parted company—the one being caught up to the invisible glory—the other, battered and bruised by the awful tempest, henceforth toiling along the road—alone.

But the brave spirit took up the additional burden and carried it. The Burden Bearer was ever with her, and heaven more real because her dear one had gone in through the portals.

Round the main Fund there grew up one for the translation of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons into foreign tongues and other purposes, called for "General Use in the Name of the Lord." Another, which is perhaps too little known, is the "Pastors' Aid Fund," the woes and wants of poor ministers pressing heavily on this sympathetic heart. In her last report she wrote—

I used to fret and worry over this state of things, and plead in my "reports" with all the energy I then possessed, hoping that someone in power and authority would come to the rescue; but my poor appeals were barren of result, and I became disheartened at the ill-success of my efforts to bring about a radical improvement in the condition of those for whom I felt so much sympathy. So at last I gave up hoping for great things, and took the advice of a writer who said: "Just do a thing, and don't talk about it."

Quietly and steadily she went forward in her ministry of love. In many a ministerial home life was brighter because of her help; and the service done for the Lord was full of testimony to His grace, because a "cup of water" had been supplied in time of need, and would not be forgotten.

Mrs. Spurgeon has done more than circulate the works of others. Her own three little books—A Carillon of Bells, A Cluster of Camphire, and A Basket of Summer Fruit (1s. 6d. each. Passmore & Alabaster)—have been a means of blessing to many. The weary saint has laid down all her tasks to enter on higher service, but all the fruit of her life on earth is not yet. The memory of her life for God is still eloquent, and her written testimony to the grace of God will go on to further usefulness.

Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon.

A little while she tarried here below,
To finish what her loved one left of all
His mighty work; and now how sweet to go,
Obedient to the Master's gracious call,
To Him of whom her loved one joyed to tell,
His Saviour God, of heavenly thousands chief,
His King, his Lord, his own Emmanuel.
She waited, longed, in ardent, fond belief;
And now her joy is full, she sees her Lord,
Her husband's Christ, and has her life's reward.

And were it true to say the loved on earth
Are all unknown, unrecognised above?
I think not so; but, with a holy mirth,
She meets again the object of her love;
Sees him whom she admired for faithful zeal,
Sees him who spent himself and all his pow'rs
Serving his God, and finds His Gospel real,
Earth's buds unfolding in unfading flow'rs;
And meets the crowds who from his lips first heard
Of sovereign grace, the pure eternal Word.

But ah! as they, united once again,
Look on the spotless beauties of His face;
As they together, free from earthly pain,
Behold the sinless glories of that place;
Methinks she whispers, "Thou didst do thy best,
To speak the praises of thy risen Lord,
And tell the rapture of the saints' sweet rest,
And all the wonders for God's chosen stored;
But, my beloved, not the half was told
Of what together now our eyes behold.
'Tis brighter, purer, and exceedeth far—
As the noon's sun outshines the evening's star."

The Open-Air Mission.

MR. F. COCKREM, secretary, writes of the summer campaign:—"God has been wonderfully blessing us, and there is rarely a single day in which we do not hear of souls being saved through the instrumentality of our evangelists, who are labouring earnestly in many fields.

"Great seaside missions were held in August, at which tens of thousands of persons heard the Word of God, often listening in dense masses for hours together, and paying earnest heed. Of these a great number have become the saved of the Lord, and many converts have communicated with us direct.

"At Doncaster and Ayr Races, and at Leicester, during September, multitudes of the ungodly have been brought under the sound of the glorious Gospel, not without immediate and striking effect in the happy conversion of many.

"The autumn fairs in the Midlands are now being visited by companies of men of God sent forth by this Mission, while village evangelization on a large scale lies before us all through the winter."

Under the title of "Blasts from our Jubilee Trumpet," the addresses lately delivered at the fiftieth anniversary celebration have been published in pamphlet form. The book contains striking testimony from leaders in Christian work, to the value of the operations carried on throughout the land. The address of the Mission is 11, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

Studies in the Psalms.

The Flight of David from Absalom.—I.

By Rev. J. Storjohann.

As continuing the series of papers contributed to The Christian a few years ago, on "The Great Answer to Prayer in the Last War with the Philistines," I hope now in a few chapters to set forth another episode in the life of the poet-king of Israel—"The flight of David from Jerusalem before Absalom, his son," and the Psalms relating to this event:—lxiii. and iii., xl., lxxi. and lxix.

The more convincing would it be of the correctness of the inscriptions heading the Psalms, if it could be proved, clearly and indisputably, that Paul is assuredly right as to Psalm lxix; it would be no less interesting if Psalm lxxi., in spite of the failing superscription, also could fill a blank in the life of David. These five Psalms might then give us the most vivid picture of the episode which, perhaps, was the most tragic in the life of the poet-king. It might also then be proved that if we only follow the course of the life of David attentively, we shall be enabled to find the lyric echo of his experiences in his Psalms.

ABSALOM AND THE PEOPLE.

Before we contemplate these five wonderful Psalms in their historic succession, it will be needful to throw a retrospective glance at the time of Absalom. Having for a space of four years prepared the mutiny against David, by stealing the heart of the people from him, Absalom intimated his intention of serving Jehovah, in compliance with a vow he made in exile, in the town of Hebron, his birthplace, the former royal city; when David said "Go in peace," he did not seem to suspect what was brewing. This pretended service of Jehovah, Absalom meant to celebrate by offering sacrifices (2 Sam. xv. 12); thus he aimed to give the mutiny a religious consecration, and he invited several hundreds of the young men who were grown up with him, "sons of the lofty," as they are called in several of the Psalms, who did not suspect the real purpose.

The mutiny was planned with such hypocritical cunning that it was quite impossible for David to meet it; when it was manifest to the world, it was too late to take any measures. It could then be said that: "The hearts of the men of Israel are after Absalom" (2 Sam. xv. 13).

DAVID IN A NET.

From this point we can follow David step by step in a series of Psalms, in which the development of the catastrophe clearly meets us. From Psalm xxv. 15 we see that David knew the net in which his feet were so entangled—that he could not act freely, and that he felt desolate (16). In Psalm xxvi. he calls the conspirators "men of blood" (9), a name which meets us again in three Psalms of this period. We meet it in Psalm cxxxix., David's grand Psalm of self-examination, where he speaks of "ye men of blood" (19) that rise up against God (21). In Psalm v. 6 it is no doubt Absalom whom he characterizes as "the bloodthirsty and deceitful man," and as one "in whose mouth there is no steadfastness" (9).

Unquestionally the followers of Absalom spoke peace, while mischief was in their hearts (Psa. xxviii. 3). Many of those who were most closely connected with David lost heart—"Who will show us any good" (Psa. iv. 6). In Psalm xi. 1, they rather coarsely advise him to "Flee as a bird to your mountain," which it seems they themselves did not want to do. "The foundations (of society) were destroyed" (3); compare Psa. lxxv. 3, "The land and all the inhabitants thereof are dissolved." In Psalm lxii. David fights the fight of desperation to be silent upon God; "the sons of the lofty have proved to be a lie" (9), i.e., liars. But in Psalm xxxix. he breaks down under the plague of sickness, which bodily fasting and mental disgrace had brought upon him. It concerns his life. "Spare me, that I may recover my strength, before I go hence, and be no more."

AHITHOPHEL'S DECEIT.

In Psalm xli. we meet Ahithophel in the sickroom by David's bed. He has come from his home at Giloh, from whence Absalom has sent him (2 Sam. xv. 12). While the enemies of David triumph over him—"When shall he die and his name perish?" (5)—Ahithophel still feigns friendship, but David perceives that "he hath lifted up his heel against me." Still David hopes that "God would raise him up, that he may requite them" (10). At the same time, as this proves impossible, the anathemas of the king still overtake them in the two Psalms lv. and cix. in which we are brought down into the growing storm and horror of the meeting. "Oh, that I had wings like a dove! Then would I fly away (lv. 6) from the windy storm and tempest" (8).

Ahithophel, that is the worst of it, "the companion and familiar friend," breaks the oath of allegiance and the covenant of friendship; "he profaned his covenant"; "His words are softer than oil, yet they are drawn swords" (21). In Psa. cix. the judgment which already, in Psa. lv. 15, is pronounced upon the bloodthirsty men, breaks out into dreadful anathemas, especially against Ahithophel. The knees of David "are weak through fasting, his flesh faileth of fatness" (24); "and when they see me, they shake their head" (25). But while Satan stands at the right hand of Ahithophel (6), David comforts himself in the thought that Jehovah stands at the right hand of the needy to save him (31). David understood that he would be driven away like a locust (23) and that flight was his only rescue.

PSALM XVI.

While we thus see David sink lower and lower, in fear and desperation and the danger of death, the two Psalms, lxiii. and iii., which David composed after his flight, the first and second morning in the wilderness of Judah, show the most perfect composure. How has this surprising change taken place? The situation and the circumstances in the wilderness were more threatening than ever before. Even if we may suppose that the plague of sickness was taken from him, for which he had prayed in Psa. xxxix. 13, this is not a sufficient explanation of the reaction in David's mind, and much less when we call to mind the exceedingly sad departure from Jerusalem.

But Psa. xvi. no doubt gives us the solution of the mystery. David's spirits have risen by the hope of resurrection! Jehovah is at his right hand (the same word with which he has finished Psa. cix. 31), and therefore he shall not be moved (Psa. xvi. 8); and at the right hand of Jehovah there are pleasures for evermore (11). On these two wings of intuition, David raises himself to the assurance of resurrection (10), yes, to the very fountain of the hope of resurrection! the resurrection of Christ, which he prophesies. "Speaking of himself, he speaks of Him." What he hopes for himself, he can only gain by a Greater One fulfilling the words on Himself.

That Psalm xvi. was composed in this period, helps us to a correct understanding of verse 4, which justly has been used against the authorship of David, if the usual reading is correct: "exchange Jehovah for another God." If any period was free from manifest idolatry, it was the time of David. Also verse 2 causes many difficulties by the usual reading. The four first verses no doubt read as follows:

1. Preserve me O God: for in Thee do I put my trust. I say unto Jehovah: Thou art my Lord; no good beyond Thee!

2. Unto the saints: Blessed in the land are these, and the excellent in whom is all my delight.

3. Many shall their griefs be. They have exchanged for another.

4. Their drink-offerings of blood will I not pour out, and I will not take their names on my lips.

David speaks of those who exchanged him as a king for another; and of the offerings, which now were made in Hebron by the rebels, he says, that they in reality are offerings of blood—for they aimed at his life.

DAVID'S HOPE.

To the same hope which David expresses in Psa. xvi. his contemporaries also cling—Asaph in Psa. lxxiii., and the Sons of Korah in Psa. xlix.; and they were first and foremost among those whom David called "the saints"—the blessed in the land, and "the excellent, in whom was all His delight."

We can easily imagine how these holy men talked together and comforted each other when the time of mutiny broke over Israel, and all was seemingly lost; though carrying their lives in their hand, they, in the most original manner, separately bore witness to the common hope of eternal life, in which they just now sought and found their refuge and rescue. On two former occasions Asaph and the Sons of Korah had mingled their voices with the voice of David, in the misery of the great war (Asaph, Psa. lxxx., and the Sons of Korah, Psa. xliv., and Psa. lx. by David); and in the victory over the Philistines during the famine (Asaph, Psa. lxxvi., and the sons of Korah, Pss. xlvi. and xlviii.). Here in the greatest distress they have raised themselves an eternal memorial by their joint expectation of victory over death and grave. Well may we exclaim with David (xvi. 3), "Blessed in the land are these, and the excellent, in whom is all my delight."

Hebrew Christian Testimony.

In view of the work of the coming winter, two prayer meetings were held last Friday in the hall of the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel, 189, Whitechapel Road, E. The chair was occupied in the afternoon by Mr. Arthur Boake. Rev. James Stephens (Highgate), gave an address based on the words "My heart's desire (prayer) is for Israel," pointing out that the love of the apostle was the more remarkable because it was not racial or the outcome of patriotism. In spite of all drawbacks here is a people loved for their fathers' sake. Paul knew that his prayer was in the line of God's mind and will. He knew that there was ever a "remnant" who were sharers with faithful Abraham, and who were the nucleus of the Church. We look beyond all temporal returns and colonization schemes to the time when all Israel should be saved. The controversy with God remains till Israel shall repent; but meantime there is ever a remnant according to grace. Paul was busy while he prayed; and he was asking wisdom and fidelity in bearing witness. It is easier to be valiant for doctrinal truth and accuracy, than to show it at the same time with the persuasiveness that wins men. "Pray for us: for we trust we have a good conscience" (Heb. xiii. 18), is a text which may encourage us much. Workers need to dwell near the fountains of spiritual power and refreshment for their own souls.

Rev. David Baron described Israel's condition as becoming year by year more hopeless apart from Christ. He and his colleagues in the work felt very much the need of Divine guidance, especially remembering the condition of the poor Jews of East London.

The Chairman explained that prayer was specially asked in the matter of finding employment for Jews converted to God, who are subjected to persecution on the part of their former co-religionists.

In the evening Mr. Baron pointed to the confidence in prayer which comes from a real understanding of the Name of God, and drew helpful lessons from the experience of His dealing in the life of Jeremiah. The prophet might well have been discouraged if he had looked only on the human side of the Jewish question in his day, but looking like him away from the apparent impossibilities, we, too, may see the right hand of the Most High.

After an absence of nearly five years in Hungary, Mr. Robert Feinsilber testified to the support he had experienced in his work through the prayers of God's people in England. Going first to north Russia for about four months, he passed on to Kischineff, and then settled in Hungary to carry on aggressive work among Jews and Gentiles, Roman Catholic superstition forming a great stumbling block in the way of inquirers. An urgent appeal was made for fresh efforts to win the Kischineff Jews for Christ.

"Rivers in a Dry Place."

A TRANSFORMATION.

THE remarkable work in progress at Claremont Chapel, Pentonville, N., affords cheering evidence of the effectiveness of the Gospel even in a sanctuary which had been left "high and dry" through the migration of its people under changed social conditions. Nearly a century ago Islington was a rather fashionable outer suburb, and Claremont Chapel, under the distinguished ministry of that light of Congregationalism, Rev. J. Blackburn, was crowded every Lord's Day. At length the slums of the great metropolis crept nearer, and the pleasant villas and meadows of Islington gradually became and ugly alleys. Thus fallen on difficult days, Claremont had to encounter chequered experiences. Congregations dwindled, while the incoming poor of the neighbourhood left the place severely alone. Ultimately, about four years ago, it was closed altogether.

Some prominent members of the denomination felt, however, that such a condition of affairs was a reflection on Christian enterprise. The London Congregational Union, and especially Mr. W. H. Brown, of Woodford, took the lead in inaugurating a new order, and after the expenditure of £4,000, the building, having undergone renovation and important improvements, was opened in October, 1902.

Of the progress made since that time, Rev. F. W. Newland (who took charge of the reopening) gave an encouraging account a few days ago to a representative of The Christian.

"The old 'Claremont' has been thoroughly transformed, Mr. Newland?"

"Yes, except that the front of the building remains practically intact. The interior has been

as you see, but the chief new feature is the Institute which has been erected at the rear. For this, an entrance has been made from the back; thus we place an open door before a dense population of the very poor. Charles Booth truly says that there is a patch of slumdom there which is equal, in poverty, to Bermondsey—which he places in the lowest depth of misery. We have some characteristic glimpses of poorer London in Chapel Street, the market thoroughfare, which, even on Sunday mornings, is densely crowded.

"Do you get the people in?"

"While not under-estimating the difficulties which have still to be surmounted, one may truly say that there has been a notable response to our efforts. Remember, a year ago we had practically nothing but the empty premises. As an illustration of our present position, I may quote the 'Women's Own,' conducted every Monday by Mrs. Newland. It was suggested that the smaller hall would be sufficient, but Mrs. Newland said she would require the larger one! There is a regular attendance of about 700 women at this Gospel service, which marks a

BRIGHT HOUR IN MANY A DREARY LIFE.

Many useful undertakings, social and philanthropic, have sprung from the 'Women's Own.'"

"As to the character of the services, Mr. Newland?"

"Primarily evangelistic. On Sunday nights, although there is nothing of a sensational order, we can now rely on a minimum congregation of 400 adults; this is considerably increased for special occasions, and there is also a well-attended children's service. As a rule, we have 600 to 700 in our congregations in all. Now let me show you the Institute."

Skilfully planned and in every respect suggestive of cheeriness and simple comfort, the building is a capital headquarters for an aggressive mission. Here are rooms for the men's club; a gymnasium (which proves a means of attracting the rougher youths with their passion for athletics); a cosy "workers' parlour," and a bright room for factory girls. Over these, again, is the smaller hall, while in the basement there is extensive accommodation for the busily-worked commissariat department. Passing into the large hall, or chapel, we are faced by a large red and white motto, "Lætus sorte mea," and accordingly deduce that a meeting of the Guild of Brave Poor Things is a feature of the mission.

"Yes, we have about ninety members who regularly attend," says Mr. Newland. They have tea; work and play; a brief talk, and FAMILY PRAYER AT THE END.

It is a pathetic sight. We have the crippled, blind, deaf and dumb, paralyzed—the disabled ones, in a word, children or adults. Some suffer terrible afflictions; they have to lie prostrate all the time, and are wheeled to and from their homes. Basket work is done by the blind, others do fret-work or blouse-making; all are cheerful. In fact, the "Poor Things" have perhaps the most vivacious meeting of any.

"What staff have you for all these departments of work?"

"By dint of prayer and hard work, we have secured about seventy workers, chiefly drawn from suburban churches, who come in to the various meetings; but, with the multiplication of opportunities, more are urgently needed."

"My personal history?" continued Mr. Newland. "Well, it sums up briefly in ten years at Canning Town and seven at Grimsby. Then I was chosen for Claremont. We have certainly an exacting task, for there is £1,000 per annum required to maintain the work, but, encouraged by manifest tokens of God's blessing, we go forward."

Irish Baptist Home Mission.

DURING the past summer months the work of the Irish Baptist Home Mission has been prosecuted with vigour and enthusiasm, and not without many evident and striking tokens of the Lord's favour and blessing. North and South, among Roman Catholics and Protestants alike, precious sheaves have been gathered.

One brother writes: "I have just had the joy of baptizing eleven converts as the result of the Gospel preached in the wooden hall in our neighbourhood."

Another says: "I have recently received into fellowship a man who was formerly an altar-boy in a Roman Catholic chapel in this city, while another, who had been a Roman Catholic, is to-day one of my best and most ardent helpers."

One of our most earnest workers in the North says: "We are having more conversions at present than at any time since I settled here." From a church in the heart of Roman Catholicism cheering tidings come: "The church membership is steadily increasing, and there never was a time when more attended the chapel. A mother, her eldest son, and two daughters recently put on the Lord in baptism, and all have joined the church."

Another says, "It pleased the Lord a few days ago to lead an old man of eighty years of age out of spiritual darkness into deep soul anxiety, and then to the happy enjoyment of assured salvation through faith in the precious blood of Christ. He is now rejoicing, and loves to tell to all the blessed change in his life."

Throughout the summer wooden halls and tents have been more largely used than ever; souls have been blessed and Christians quickened.

Three of our pastors, skilled in open-air work, have recently visited the South and West, preaching the Gospel in fairs and market places, and tell a wondrous story of how they were helped and sustained throughout an arduous campaign.

England's New Danger.

THE NEW PAPAL SECRETARY OF STATE.

By Rev. ALEX. ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

NO cleverer appointment has been made in Vatican circles, since Guiseppe Sarto was chosen as Pope, than that made a few days ago, when Monsignor Merry del Val was made his Secretary of State. Indeed, the appointment is even more important and more ominous for England than the Papal one.

In making it, two unwritten laws were broken through that have hitherto governed the appointment, namely, that the Secretary of State should be chosen from amongst the cardinals, and that he should be an Italian. Monsignor Merry del Val is too young to be raised, in ordinary circumstances, to the position of a cardinal (he is young for what he was, Archbishop of Nicea, for he is but thirty-eight). His mother was an English woman and his father a Spaniard.

He is of good family, and his father has held important diplomatic positions, having been secretary to the Spanish embassy in London, and then Spanish ambassador at the Vatican. Merry del Val was born in London, and educated there. His character was described in the Gazzetta de Venezia by a secretary of State at Madrid, as not by any means a genius, but a born diplomatist; impenetrable, patient, he can dissemble; he is serious; he never smiles; he tells little, but he asks much; he is ambitious, and an intransigeant, more from self-interest than from conviction.

The late Pope employed him, young though he was, on various missions extraordinary. He was sent to Canada to settle educational difficulties in Manitoba; to Berlin to represent the Pope at the funeral of the Emperor William I.; to England with the spurious bones of St. Edmund, which were deposited in the Fitzalan Chapel at Arundel Castle; and again to London to carry the Pope's congratulations to King Edward on his Coronation, though the sudden illness of the King prevented its being carried out. All his missions have been

TO PROTESTANT LANDS AND PEOPLES.

In that path one has the key to his appointment as Secretary of the State, to advance the interests of the Roman Catholic Church in Protestant lands. The Papal Church knows that Italy is lost to it, and that France is in danger of being so. It knows that its action is fettered in every Roman Catholic country in Europe, but that in England it has a rich field to exploit, where it can work without let or hindrance.

It is in favour in the Palace, in the Privy Council, in the House of Lords, in the Government, in the Commons, in the ritualistic section of the Church, and more or less throughout the land. It absolutely and completely rules Ireland, being recognised as what it is not—a religious institution, and not recognised as what it is—a political institution. There, under the cloak of religion, it can hoodwink the Government and people, and enrich itself, and strengthen itself, at their expense.

With a Pope reputed to be "religious" and non-political, the likelihood of Merry del Val's mission proving a success is immensely increased. He knows English perfectly. He knows the leading English Roman Catholic families. He is a favourite with most of those who in the House of Lords are the servants of the King and the servants of the Pope, and with whom it is morally impossible to keep their two positions distinct; and the new Secretary of State and his officials will see to it that they do not.

Both the election of Guiseppe Sarto as Pope, simple, kind-hearted, non-political, and the election of Raphaele Merry del Val, learned, cultured, and diplomatic, as his Secretary of State, will prove themselves to be, what the Jesuits design they should be, powerful agencies for the advance of Roman Catholicism in England. It is for the Protestants of England to be on their guard, and to take measures to frustrate these assaults upon the liberties, the progress, and the religion of the land.

Spiritual Needs of London.

"THE Spiritual Needs of London" was the general topic at a Home Mission meeting under the auspices of the London Presbyteries (North and South), held at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday evening of last week. In his opening address from the chair, Sir Samuel Chisholm, Bart., took for granted that the needs of the city were more or less thoroughly known, admitted, and realised; and put from different points of view and in most pointed fashion, the question "What, in these circumstances, do you mean to do?"

Taking a broad view of the situation, he referred to the multitudes at the foot of the social scale, whose birth, history, training, surroundings, and bitter daily struggle for mere bread have brought them to feel as if there were nothing higher than mere existence. Their life is led on a vastly lower plane, their outlook—mental, moral, and spiritual—is vastly more restricted and harassing than God Almighty made and meant them for. He found at the upper end of the human gamut other multitudes in whom prosperity, ease, affluence, and luxury have produced similar results. Between these there is yet a third multitude who are the slaves or victims of some darling vice—the drunkard, the glutton, the gambler, the debauchee—men and women across whose whole nature there has passed the hot searing iron of some selfish vice.

In view of these, he said the first thing to be done was undoubtedly to preach the Gospel; but if that meant that the ministers were to do all and the laymen nothing, he must decidedly demur. The Gospel needs not only to be preached but to be lived. The evil from which the churches suffer is that of sheer utter blank indifference. When the members realize that their obligations as fellow-citizens can no more be thrown off than any other, they will quickly discover lines of activity along which they will travel as far as their capacity admits.

If the membership of the Christian Church realized the need there would quickly be formulated demands which could not be gainsaid. Among many such would be (1) a demand that the kingdom of slumdom be destroyed, and that its re-erection should be put beyond possibility. This kingdom of slumdom is the triumph and the crowning glory of the drink traffic. (2) A demand that the drink traffic should follow in the wake of slumdom. No more should men, for the mere sake of amassing individual fortunes, be permitted to spread out temptations before their weak and erring brethren—temptations into which inevitably they must fall. (3) A demand that the appalling sacrifice of infant life, which is the disgrace of our modern civilization, should at once and for ever be prevented. When these things are obtained, and they will be obtained when the Church demands them, there will dawn such a day of triumph for the kingdom of God as has not been witnessed since the Resurrection of Christ.

Referring to the subject of "Local Home Mission Work," as illustrated by the establishment of mission centres by individual congregations, Rev. J. M. Wilson (Highbury) said it was beginning to be recognised that this has not always given the results which were hoped for. A committee is now making an attempt to grapple with the difficulties of the situation by linking strong congregations with weak ones, with a view to increasing the solidarity of the life of the Church. The Ladies' Settlement is in full working order; but extension is called for, and Mr. Wilson pled for the provision of more "clinical instruction" for the divinity student of the Church by the establishment of another settlement.

An impassioned address on "The Housing Problem" was given by Rev. A. Herbert Gray (Manchester), who found in it the closest possible connection with the Home Mission problem. In spite of all that has been done in the name of Christ, we have scarcely done more than scrape the surface of the latter, and in its immensity it remains unsolved. Mr. Gray called for the facing of the "one-roomed house," and of overcrowding generally, with the evils which are inevitably associated therewith. He pressed home the Christian duty of making through our cities and towns a highway for the Lord, by clearing out of His path such dens as are known to exist in great numbers; with the allied duty of Christian people taking their full share in local government, that righteousness may be introduced and maintained in all public councils. A new kind of citizen must be created in large numbers—men with a passion for spending themselves in public service without stint.

As Warden of Bermondsey Settlement, Rev. J. Scott Lidgett was welcomed as peculiarly fitted to deal with "Settlement Work." Taking up the note of the small results for Christian effort, he spoke very seriously on the allowing of conditions in public life which make expressions of concern scarcely fall short of hypocrisy. Tracing the growth in twenty years of the settlement idea, Mr. Scott Lidgett found proof that it appeals to a real and general need.

A closing appeal by Mr. John A. Stewart, on behalf of "the home-made heathen," was vividly illustrated from personal experience in slumdom.

Dublin Medical Mission.

A MEETING to commemorate the twelfth anniversary of the first prayer meeting in connection with this work was held a few days ago, Rev. J. Stewart, M.A., presiding. The Chairman of Committee, Major Fielding, J.P., in the course of his remarks gave some interesting statistics, stating among other things that the total number of attendances in eleven years were 110,509, and the doctors' visits during the same period, 23,854. The Mission is one of wonderful scope, and is carrying on its ministry of healing for body and soul in the midst of appalling need; but owing to a burden of debt the Committee decided to retrench expenditure and rely as much as possible on voluntary medical help. At one dispensary during last week, while some eighty patients were being treated inside, thirty or forty were pleading for admission. However, we are thankful to be able to state that in addition to £390 already received, one subscriber has offered to pay the salary for six months of a second doctor.

Cases of interest are numerous, and one of very many is that of a man who, with his wife and five children, was brought under the notice of the Mission by an old woman, a bright Christian, but a cripple. This man was a neighbour of hers, living in the same court. His wife and five children were all ill, the two youngest dying of bronchitis, the father had been out of work for three months and would have been turned out of his room in a few days as he was unable to pay his rent. Though all that were possible was done by the Mission doctor, the youngest child died in a few days. Some weeks after the father, whose thanks were unbounded, gave bright testimony to having taken the good Physician to be his own personal Saviour. He was subsequently helped to a good situation. This man still attends the evangelistic services in the Mission, and lives a truly Christian life.

The poverty and wretchedness, as well as the superstition and spiritual darkness of the people is beyond description. It is with confidence we commend this work, so like the Master's example, to the prayerful and practical sympathy of our friends.

E. Edith Figgis, Hon. Sec.

Destitute Children.—The Southwark Guardians have done well in recognising the unsuitability of the workhouses for children and young people. They have, therefore, bought four large houses in which destitute children will be kept until transferred to permanent homes, "boarding out," and otherwise. That the unfortunate little ones should be saved from the stigma of pauperism is much, but it is more that they should be kept from those morally destructive influences which unhappily are potent in many poor-houses. The excellent results attained by the boarding-out plan have been most encouraging, and surely the aim and end of all Poor Law work should be redemptive, at least in the case of children.

Dunoon College.

THE annual report of Dunoon College shows that during the year Principal Macgregor has had the assistance of four tutors. The session began with twenty-six students. The income was £760, and there is a balance on the right side of £7. The aim of the College is to afford young men who have evidently been called to the ministry an opportunity for systematic study and development.

The Principal lectured last session chiefly on Theology in Relation to Modern Thought, and on the Immortality of the Soul. The Bible studies were Luke, Acts, and Colossians in Greek; with Isaiah in Hebrew. The other tutors taught Greek and Hebrew grammar and composition, English literature, historical philosophy, the history of the Reformation of the Mediæval Church, and Old Testament Introduction. The attention of ministers is drawn to the College as affording an opportunity to young men who wish a general training for various kinds of Gospel work. While all students are expected to help with their own expenses, individual men are helped as required.

Special efforts are now to be made to direct the mind of the students to the foreign field. Two have recently gone to do pioneer work in Canada, another has gone to Africa, and it is hoped more will follow. Much prayer is being made that the full purchase money for the building will be provided.

Among the Sick Poor.

A LARGE gathering of workers of the Strangers' Friend Society recently assembled in the Lecture Hall of the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street, for a Conference, at which the chairman, Mr. Henry Swaffield, presided.

Many of the visitors who voluntarily serve the Society, furnished very interesting facts in regard to some of the cases sharing in the Society's benefactions. One was that of a widow living in the district of Clare Market. She was found to be very ill, as well as very poor. The visitor at once busied herself in giving relief, and in otherwise affording comfort; and, as usual, read a portion of the Word of God, and prayed with the woman before leaving. Conviction of sin followed, and she was later on led to realize the forgiveness of God. The Society obtained work for her, and the visitors also secured an allowance from another channel for the support of her youngest son, and she subsequently obtained a berth as caretaker. The weekly relief of the Society, she now says, was the key that unlocked for her the door to happiness and, to some extent, prosperity.

Another case was that of a man who for two years suffered with a diseased knee, amputation becoming necessary. He was visited, and also assisted from the Society's funds; and in other ways by the visitor, whom he speaks of as "his only earthly friend." An artificial leg having been procured, the man is now earning a fair living as a coffee-stall keeper.

The Society, through its 150 entirely unpaid visitors, is evidently still doing a vast amount of good, not only in meeting the physical necessities of the poor, but also in directing the thoughts of the people to the loving sacrifice made, on their behalf, by the Saviour of men.

The Conference was a means of stimulus to the assembly. Describing the operations of the organization, Mr. Swaffield subsequently wrote to the Secretary, 72, Finsbury Pavement.

"I wish the Strangers' Friend Society were more widely known. It is, I consider, splendidly organized, it covers the whole of London as its sphere of operations, it ministers to the necessities of the sick poor, irrespective of creed, nationality, or colour, and it has a band of Christian visitors, male and female, of which any society might be proud. It is to me especially gratifying that this Society, established so long ago as 1785, to which John Wesley himself was one of the subscribers, has survived the vicissitudes of the intervening 118 years, and seems to be renewing its youth and to have a prosperous future before it."

"A CHRISTIAN PARTY FOR PARLIAMENT."

SIR,—In your issue of September 10, appeared a letter from "S. C. F.," urging the formation of a Christian Party in Parliament on account of the gravity of the present position of things. I agree with all that the writer says about that gravity; but I am not sure that I can follow him in all that he writes.

I understand the demand to be, in particular, for a Protestant party; and that demand I venture to emphasize. For nearly twenty-five years I have uttered this cry; I utter it more loudly than ever. But I fear I do so with less hope to-day than yesterday. The Church Association and other Protestant organizations have been trying hard to make such a Protestant party out of the existing materials, but hitherto they have not been successful. But the want of success has not been without its benefits. It has shown, amongst other things, this very humiliating one, that such is the atmosphere of the House of Commons, that a Protestant party must be formed outside, and sent up.

Your correspondent rightly says that, as Protestants and patriots, our first duty is to pray. Only is there not a danger at present of confining ourselves to this imperative duty and happy privilege, while God says: "Why do ye cry unto Me?" (1) We are bound to do something in the name of the Lord, trusting Him. (2) We are equally bound to preface and to accompany "the praying and the working" with purification:—"Wash you, make you clean, saith the Lord, and put away the evil of your doings." That is an essential which cannot be dispensed with by God, and the absence of which will explain the gravity of our present state of things, as well as any future and further failures which may attend both our prayers and our efforts. In the case of Christians, I apprehend that the purification may not be so much directly moral, i.e., open breaches of the moral law. It may have to do with things such as your correspondent mentions, including "touching the unclean thing," and "having fellowship therewith."

"S. C. F." proposes a comprehensive Protestant party, one to be formed and sent to Parliament by "Evangelical Christians of the Free and Anglican Churches." Personally, I cannot see how there can be Christians who are not Evangelical, and so I prefer using the term, "all true believers, who are a new creation in Christ Jesus, no matter to what section of Christians they belong."

But is there any hope of combination or co-operation such as your correspondent desires? In other words, are Church Evangelicals likely to join Nonconformist Evangelicals in one united effort to make a Protestant party? I am afraid that I must answer "No." What was possible a decade ago is not so much so to-day as "S. C. F." seems to think. He says that "the doctrinal and liturgical differences between Evangelical Churchmen and Free Churchmen are trivial in comparison with the burning questions which demand an immediate solution in the interests of our country." So I think, but do others think so?

I ought to know something about this. For over thirty years I have had to be, much against my natural bias and bent, in the van and in the thick of it all. Few are the survivors now of the Evangelical section in the National Church who then commenced the Protestant conflict with me. My own time is nearly over. I know many things which make the wish of "S. C. F." by no means (humanly speaking) hopeful of early realization. But I confine myself to one — the greatest and gravest. Evangelical churchmanship is not what it was, either in doctrine or in spirit. It is much more Ecclesiastical; it is much less Evangelical. (1) Who are the most ardent supporters of the Education Bill? Sacerdotalists? No; but Evangelicals. (2) Who are the staunchest champions against the Liberation Society, and what many Nonconformists want? Not "high" Anglicans; but Evangelicals.

Let a conference be summoned; let Mildmay and Keswick invite thereto; let these two questions, with only one other, "A Protestant Party in Parliament," be the subjects of discussion and for decision. The Education Bill and the Establishment question will rend the assembly in two before the day closes. Those who are behind the scenes know this well. They know that, whatever Evangelical churchmanship would or might have done fifty years ago, it would, if forced into the choice now, range itself, even as it is tacitly and passively doing, with the advocates of established sacerdotalism, rather than have repeal of the Education Bill, or Disestablishment or Disendowment.

We need have neither mistake nor deception. I am willing to recant this conviction if a plebiscite of Evangelicals is found to witness otherwise. But we must all weigh all things, and not culpably shut our eyes to hard facts.

No combination such as "S. C. F." urges is possible; though something can and ought to be done. Let Protestant societies unite (1) to secure the necessary candidates, ignoring all present M.P.'s save about six; (2) organize the Protestant vote on this clear and definite issue; (3) circulate the necessary literature to instruct and inspire existing Protestantism; and (4) arrange the whole Christian sections, including Mildmay, Keswick, and all Evangelical societies and agencies, for public meetings and for PRAYER.

HOW TO DEAL WITH ROMANISM.

DEAR SIR,—I am convinced that there is only one way to deal with Romanism—one sure cure—"Not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord."

The Holy Spirit waits to revive the paralyzed Church, filling every member with life and vigour; taking away all the worldliness, and self-seeking, and love of ease, unkind thoughts of others who differ in some small point, all the respect of persons (which keeps so many away from places of worship).

The Spirit of Love is waiting to fill every member with love to each other, "that all the members shall have the same care one for another," and also overflowing love to those who are living without God, sitting in darkness and the shadow of death. He waits to fill each one with the Spirit of holiness, and zeal for the cause of Christ; so that if He says, "Take the message of salvation to that Roman Catholic family, or that Roman Catholic priest," there will be instant obedience, trusting Him to open the way and speak the word.

The last command of our Master, "Preach the Gospel to every creature," has been disregarded in England so far as Roman Catholics are concerned, and if we had given them the Gospel fifty years ago, we should not have had to-day to mourn over the sad condition of things in our land; the sacerdotalism, the Sabbath-breaking, the gambling, the greed; and triumph of might over right, as we see it exhibited in the unfair treatment of Dr. Long, of Limerick, and of Mr. J. Kensit, and in the Education Act.

But He calls for surrendered hearts, and wills, and lives. Let us have a glorious Reformation. Let us have praying bands in every town—men and women who will watch and pray, and courageously obey the Lord's voice, as did Gideon, throwing down the altar of Baal which has been reared in our midst. Let all who love the name of Jesus and the Word of God, in all the denominations, unite in prayer and work. Let all unite in prayer for a great revival. What an object-lesson it would be to Romanists to see all Evangelical denominations uniting in work in every town! They would see unity without uniformity, which would speak to them with a louder voice than uniformity could do. We need a special effort to take the Gospel to Romanists; the work is difficult, but not too difficult for the Spirit of God. The work is His, and He will give wisdom.

The Holy Spirit waits to fulfil the desire of Jehovah with regard to the Church. To make her righteousness go forth as brightness and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth (Isa. lxii. 1). May God grant that His people also may wait upon Him to do it for them; that men attracted to the Light may glorify our Father in heaven. (Miss) S. R. DUXFIELD.

"THAT BLESSED HOPE."

IN his first article on "The Glory of the Appearing," Rev. G. P. McKay made the observation, "Patience is born of hope, and courage also." To support the second assertion, he quoted the text, "Hope maketh not ashamed." The first assertion suggests (Rom. viii. 25), "If we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." (Conybeare and Howson add: "And steadfastly endure the present.") This text might well have been placed as a motto under the title of Mr. McKay's articles, for what is so ably written seems almost like an elucidation and enforcing of the truth it contains.

The text came with the force of a new revelation to the present writer a short time ago when reading Rom. viii. by a sick bed, and it has since ministered help and comfort to others. The "hope set before us" is sure and steadfast, entering into that within the veil. "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." If we have a hope well and truly grounded, which will surely be realized, of course we can with patience wait for it; and those can best wait, and work, and watch, and pray, and suffer, in all doing the will of God, whose faith most firmly grasps the "hope." "Lord, I have hoped for Thy salvation, and done Thy commandments" (Psa. cxix. 166). "It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord" (Lam. iii. 26). Is that specially written for aged disciples and patient sufferers?

Meditation on the life and sufferings of our blessed Lord, shows how perfectly He "patiently waited," sustained by hope, thus "leaving us an example that we should follow His steps" (see Ps. xl.; Ps. xxii., &c). "Let us run with patience . . . looking unto Jesus . . . who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen" (i.e., the hope). "That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire (ye have need of patience), might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ" (i.e., the hope). "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." D. S. D.

THE WET WEATHER.

SIR,—Any one who thinks at all must be distressed at the very wet weather we have been having in this country. But are many searching as to its cause? There must be a reason for it. The weather is in the hands of God, and while very unwilling to say it is coming to us in the way of judgment, one is naturally led to think there must be a "needs be."

It has been borne in on my mind very much that the secret is to be found in Psalm lxvii. 5-7. Have the farmers—have we Christians, whether farmers or no—taken God into account in the ploughing, manuring, and sowing of the grain? Has it not been my skill, my planning and scheming, all along? To my mind, a farmer's ledger may read on the one side—so much for rent, manure, ploughing, sowing, and reaping; and on the other side—Produce. No Word of God.

There should be rent, manure, ploughing, sowing—and God. Then the reaping would certainly come. According to this Psalm, if God were acknowledged, the earth would yield her increase, and God would bless us, and then the further result would be, all the ends of the earth would fear Him—i.e., a blessing would come in missions to the heathen.—Yours very sincerely, E. D. NICOL.

A Waldensian Valley.

By H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

THE Valley of Angrogne is no ordinary mountain gorge, but the Thermopylæ of the Waldensians, and leads to the home and sanctuary of persecuted generations of a people who have dwelt alone, and have not been numbered among the nations. The Valley takes its name from the torrent which rushes with a hoarse murmur throughout its length. On entering it by a sharp ascent from La Tour, a feeling of awe and astonishment comes over one as the mountains are seen approaching each other on either side of the torrent, as though to barricade the entrance by a succession of rocky slopes and precipices. Mile after mile these continue, until the central gates of this fortress are reached, beyond which a small upland valley opens, completely surrounded by protecting heights. We are here in the heart of the Vaudois Valleys. Here was the college of their Barbes, or pastors and evangelists, and here to-day, at the upper end of the Valley, is the church of Pré du Tour, with its holy associations and immortal memories.

An hour's drive from La Tour, through the winding Valley of Angrogne brought us to the village of St. Laurent. Here we were shown by the Vaudois pastor one of the precipices from which the "bloody Piedmontese," as Milton calls them in his well-known sonnet, "rolled mothers with infants." Strong men, and men tottering with age, for no crime but fidelity to the Word of God, were bound here with their heads between their legs, and rolled down the rocks into the abyss below. There is scarce a spot in all the length of the Valley that has not been similarly dyed with the blood of Protestant martyrs.

A MEMORABLE ESCAPE.

A short distance above St. Laurent, there is a remarkable cave, called in the native dialect La Ghiesa d' la Tana. Situated on the face of the mountain, close to the bed of a torrent, it is difficult to approach. Great rocks are crowded round the entrance, which is so narrow and low, as to admit of only one person at a time, crawling on hands and knees. As we clambered over the rocks to reach it, I had a memorable escape. A slip of the foot at a dangerous moment threw me head down to the edge of a precipice over which, had I fallen, death would have probably been instantaneous. When sliding downwards to the fatal edge, I caught the stem of a tree and hung there until help came. On reaching again a place of safety, one could not but shudder at the danger escaped. Death had been near indeed, but, thank God, His delivering hand was still nearer.

Climbing with care over the rocks, we reached the mouth of the cave, and, crawling into it, found ourselves in a long narrow chamber faintly illuminated by three small openings in its lofty roof. The floor was encumbered with rocks, and the appearance of the cave that of a gloomy crevasse. Two hundred persons might perhaps be crowded into this narrow chamber. A rock is pointed out which was used as a chair by the Vaudois pastors. We could not but lift our hearts and our voices in praise to God in this sacred spot, as we recalled the experience of saints of former days, forced to hold their meetings for worship in such "caves and dens of the earth—of whom the world was not worthy."

On descending from this cavern to Serre, we found the road had become too narrow and rough for the carriage. A walk of an hour and a-half brought to the entrance of the sequestered valley of Pré du Tour. Again the mountains seem to bar the way of approach. Enormous masses of rock, which have fallen from opposite cliffs, defend the passage as the gate of a fortress. Here a handful of mountaineers again and again stopped the advance of hostile armies, bent on slaughter and destruction; and here, built on a lofty rock, stands to-day a Vaudois Church, whose position recalls the memorable words of Christ: "On this rock will I build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

The Present Need of France.

FRANCE needs our prayers at this time in a very special manner. It is a time of crisis and of great solemnity. "The Republic is in the midst of one of those struggles for life," says Pastor M. Lelièvre in L'Evangeliste, "from which nations cannot escape, any more than can individuals. We believe that those who are at the head of the Government in this hour of peril merit, notwithstanding their mistakes and their faults, the sympathies of all large-hearted and liberty-loving men and women. Their defeat would thrust us back fifty years, into the full tide of clerical reaction."

As a consequence of the movement now going on, the separation of Church and State seems to be not far off. Whatever may be the manner in which this is regarded, it is certain that it would effect a great change in the condition of religious life. The majority of French Christians, probably, anticipate that it would be generally beneficial to the spiritual life of the churches; but the immediate effect would undoubtedly be to throw additional burdens on the members of those churches, the Reformed and the Lutheran, that are receiving State aid. Thus the leaders of the churches and the heads of evangelistic and philanthropic societies in France foresee difficulties in regard to the support and maintenance of their various works.

When we remember the great increase in the foreign missions of the French churches (that within a few years they have seen their requirements augmented threefold, chiefly by the great work in Madagascar thrust upon them), it is easy to understand that the probable withdrawal of Government support for churches and colleges will involve them in increased difficulties, at any rate for a time.

There are no less than eight schemes proposed for the severance of Church and State before the French Chambers; one of these is drawn up by M. Francis de Pressensé and one by M. Réveillaud. The question is a very complicated one, as may be supposed, and it is not yet clear which plan will be adopted by the majority of those who desire to press it upon the Government.

THE RAVAGES OF DRINK.

Another question of the greatest importance, a question truly of life or death, is that of the terrible increase of alcoholism in France. A National Congress was recently held in Paris to study the question. In the five Departments of Normandy the population is less by 150,000 than it was thirty years ago; the verdict of scientific experts is that alcoholism has been the chief cause of the diminution. Owing to the same cause, lunacy has been on the increase. There are places where the daily consumption of brandy amounts to rather more than a quart per head of the adult population. To take a "fairly temperate" canton, such as Tourouve, its average weekly consumption of raw spirits is about three-and-a-half quarts for each man, and a little over two quarts for grown-up women and young people.

All this has been long known to Christian workers in France, and they have been striving to bring the matter before the public, as well as to develop temperance and rescue work. We call attention to these things, as well as to the great increase of gambling and betting, another sore eating into the vitals of the nation, that Christians in Britain may come to the help of their brethren in France, especially by constant and persevering prayer, that the Lord will strengthen and guide them in the present great need. The opportunities of Gospel work are greater than ever, and the country districts, especially, are most accessible to the evangelist, although there too we now find organised forces of Atheists and Socialists, who are gathering around them the young people, men and women, and teaching them their destructive doctrines.

The drawing together of France and Britain is a most hopeful and cheering sign. May it be that the Christians in both countries will be constrained to draw still nearer to each other, and that the hand of loving help and sympathy may be once again stretched out across the Channel, so that by our prayers and by our practical sympathy, may we be helpers of each other, fighting together the battle, which is not ours, but our Lord's. W. Soltau.

Suffering Bulgarians.

FOLLOWING up the appeal which was recently addressed by the Protestant Churches of Bulgaria to the Christian Churches in Great Britain, the United States, and elsewhere, the treasurer and secretary of the Bulgarian Evangelical Society paid a brief visit to London last week on their way to America. Pastors Popoff, of Sophia, and Furnajieff, of Kustendil, are Bulgarians by race, and natives of the district of Macedonia which is at present being devastated by Bashi-Bazouks and other Turkish soldiers. Converted in their youth, they received their elementary education at the mission schools of the American Board, proceeded thereafter to the United States to study for the ministry, and have since the completion of their training been bearing a full share of the preaching of the Gospel in its fulness to their fellow-countrymen.

They have come now to plead the cause of the homeless, the starving, and the suffering. The district of Macedonia in which the atrocities are being committed is inhabited by Bulgarians. At least 25,000 men and women have fled over the mountains into Bulgaria, and have arrived in an almost indescribable condition of distress. As fugitives before a sudden attack, they were, in many cases, only half-clothed, in others almost naked. So hot was the pursuit that such clothing as they were able to take with them in some cases shows the marks of bullet-holes. Five children were born on the mountains, and taken forward wrapped in any available material. In many ways sufferings were endured by the innocent people which cannot be told in words, but a loud and bitter cry has gone up to God against the emissaries of the Mohammedan power.

Remaining in Macedonia there are over 200,000 persons destitute alike of shelter and means of livelihood. At least 125 villages have been utterly destroyed, and many more have only partially escaped. These people have lost their earthly all. They are without income, and are surrounded by pitiless enemies. Whatever other questions may have been raised, very many of them suffer

BECAUSE THEY BEAR THE CHRISTIAN NAME.

The Balkan Committee is already doing something to stretch out a helping hand. The Society of Friends has lost no time in instituting a special fund, and hopes to send out two experienced workers to administer the gifts received. Pastors Popoff and Furnajieff have been sent to ask Christians here and in America to remember specially their poor brethren in the faith. Protestant believers will be placed at a disadvantage wherever the influence of the priests of the Greek Orthodox Church is allowed sway. The charge of being unpatriotic is frequently hurled against Protestants; and it is the earnest desire of the Evangelical Society to give a fresh refutation of these by proving afresh in the present crisis that they care as much as any for the temporal as well as the spiritual needs of their brethren. Those who sympathize with this effort are asked to provide for supplies of Gospels, tracts, and books, to be given with relief; and they are assured that the poor and needy ones will be lovingly pointed to the Bread of Life.

Lord's Day of last week was spent by the deputation in Vienna, where the British American Presbyterian Church and two Bohemian Protestant congregations showed a liberality to the cause which was most cheering. On arriving in London, the brethren felt again that they had much reason to praise God on account of the way in which the hearts of His people were inclined to listen to the appeal.

Contributions sent to this office will be remitted to the senior American missionary in Bulgaria, who with his colleagues, and in consultation with the native Christian brethren, will take care that the Christian intention of the donors is carried out.

The Cyclone in Jamaica.

DESTRUCTION OF MISSION CHURCHES.

AUGUST 11, 1903, will stand out in the history of the West Indies as a day of dire calamity. The cyclone, which swept the island of Jamaica with such disastrous effect on that date, again concentrated the attention of the civilized world on this part of the globe, and in many lands there are those who grieve with the sufferers in their unprecedented distress. The various forms of Christian work in the Island have been dislocated, and most of the denominations have suffered the loss of property, and it is computed that £60,000 will be required to repair or replace the buildings that have been destroyed or damaged.

The churches in the Jamaica Baptist Union have been deprived of chapel accommodation for 13,000 people, and the loss is detailed as follows: "Thirty-three chapels destroyed and twenty damaged, six mission-houses destroyed and eleven damaged, seventeen schoolrooms and eight teachers' residences destroyed, four schoolrooms damaged, five out-stations and sixty class-houses destroyed. The loss cannot be less than £15,000."

More than this, some of the ministers have lost home and furniture, books and clothing, and in a number of cases they and the members of their families barely escaped with their lives. Being wholly dependent on the freewill offerings of a people who have been impoverished in many cases even to destitution, numbers of pastors have been deprived of their only means of support. It cannot be expected that help will come from the Government or General Relief Funds to meet these losses; and though the Jamaican Churches have already begun in a true spirit of devotion, and are putting forth strenuous efforts, it must of necessity be many years before they can, unaided, recover themselves, and carry on the work of God to fuller fruition.

The Executive of the Jamaica Baptist Union, feeling sure that English friends are ready to tender sympathy of a practical nature, have delegated Rev. Ellis Fray and Rev. William Pratt to visit the churches in Great Britain, for the purpose of representing the needs of their distressed brethren in the West Indies. Among those of sainted memory whose labours were so manifestly owned of God in the upbuilding of His Church in Jamaica, stands out the name of William Knibb, whose sufferings and eloquence also did much to bring about the emancipation of the slave. Rev. Ellis Fray is a grandson of William Knibb, and his successor in the pastorate of the church which he established. Born at Kettering, Jamaica, in 1861, young Fray was brought to England when twelve years of age. He was educated at the then famous school of the late Mr. Johnson at Cambridge, subsequently returning to the West Indies. Shortly afterwards he proceeded to the United States, and spent two years in business. It was at this time that, having been brought to a knowledge of the love of God, he confessed Christ and was baptized by Dr. R. S. MacArthur.

Continuing his sojourn in the States, our friend felt a growing conviction that God had a specific work for him to perform, and gave himself to study with a view to entering the Baptist ministry. On the death of his father, Mr. Fray returned to Jamaica, and succeeded him in the pastorate of Kettering, Refuge, Clarktown churches. The chapels built by his grandfather were in a dilapidated state, and the members at once began to raise money in order to erect new buildings. For fifteen years they laboured incessantly, determining not to get into debt, and asking no help from outside. The task was almost completed, when the terrible hurricane of August 11 visited the island, and its force may be gathered from the fact that stone chapels were totally destroyed. In two or three hours, the work of fifteen years was wrecked! On the following Sunday many of the congregations in the island were compelled to meet in the open-air. The service in connection with Refuge Church was one of singular pathos. The company of members gathered near the spot where their chapel had stood, and expressed the confidence and trust of their hearts by joining fervently in the hymn:—

O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come;
Our shelter from the stormy blast,
And our eternal home.

The members of the church are trying to help themselves by making great sacrifices. They have cleared away the débris, and have built a booth, giving their labour. But unless they are aided, it will be years before they can rebuild, as in addition to their own houses being wrecked, they have in many cases lost their crops. Employment on the sugar estates is being given to some, but the wages of many are not more than 3s. a week.

Not only have the Jamaican churches been independent of the Baptist Missionary Society, and entirely self-supporting since 1842, but they have been raising some £2,000 a year for their own missionary society. But now, in consequence of the hurricane, their mission work will be sadly diminished and retarded. Jamaica Baptists are thus constrained to appeal to British Christians to succour them in this time of need. Mr. Fray is accompanied by Rev. William Pratt, M.A., an English minister at Kingston, Jamaica. They will be glad of invitations to speak at Churches, Sunday Schools, and Christian Endeavour Societies, on the purpose of their visit to this country. Communications for them may be sent to Rev. L. Tucker, M.A., Baptist Mission House, 19, Furnival Street, Holborn, E.C.

Prayer.

The weary ones had rest, the sad had joy
That day; I wondered "how"!
A ploughman, singing at his work, had prayed,
"Lord, help them now!"

Away in foreign lands they wondered "how"
Their single word had power!
At home, the Christians, two or three, had met
To pray an hour!

Yes, we are always wondering, wondering "how,"
Because we do not see
Someone, unknown perhaps, and far away,
On bended knee!

The Phil-African Mission.

THE Phil-African Mission, which is working in the southern half of the Portuguese possession of Angola, West Africa, owes its origin to Mr. Héli Chatelain, a Swiss, who was one of the first missionaries in Angola.

Mr. Chatelain went from New York with Bishop William Taylor's first pioneering party, arriving in Loanda, Angola, in January, 1885. He reduced to writing the native language, Kimbundu, made a grammar, translated the Gospels of Luke and John, which were published by the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1888 and 1895.

During his travels in the interior of Africa, Mr. Chatelain suffered much in seeing the miseries of slavery and the slave-trade. After twelve years missionary experience and prayerful study of the slavery problem, he founded the Phil-African Mission, for the establishment of greatly needed missionary stations, or Christian villages, which might be refuges for liberated slaves, and centres of Christian influence and Evangelical teaching.

The first station, called Lincoln, after Abraham Lincoln, was begun the end of 1897, in a perfectly wild country among most degraded heathen, who had never been in contact with Christians. The Boer who brought the missionaries to the spot, about 150 miles south-east of the Port of Benguella, told them that, in two months time, there would be no trace left of them in the country.

Instead of that, Lincoln soon became a Home where many a famished, naked, homeless, sick one, found food, clothing, comfort and healing, according to Christ's command (Matt. xxv. 40), some coming from very great distances.

Before going to Angola, the Mission secured, from the Portuguese Government in Lisbon, official authority to protect such slaves as might apply to the Mission, in accordance with the Brussels Anti-Slavery Act, proclaimed in 1892. So the runaway slaves who take refuge at Lincoln can remain there. Raids and other violent acts have diminished, as the natives have come to the Mission for help and protection; and the authorities have always listened to mediation, so that several captives have been set free.

Mr. Chatelain writes, on April 27: "God makes me hear a Macedonian call from the South, where the tribes of Ngola, Cipungu, Lupolo, Citeve, Mulondo, Humbi, Xuambi, and Kuamati are still strangers to all evangelistic influence. All those tribes hold out their arms to us by their representatives, who never cease coming, in ever-increasing numbers, to seek work, or to settle at Lincoln.

THE MISSIONARY'S INFLUENCE.

"When I inquire of those rough savages, suddenly appearing, who has sent them, they frequently answer: 'Nobody.' 'Then how do you know me, as I have never been in your parts?' 'Your name is there—your name is everywhere.'

"But what is the use of that, if they do not know the Name by which alone we are saved? What is the use of these small beginnings, if they are not followed by continuous efforts? What is the use of my laying foundations, if others do not come to build on them?"

What gives such an influence to the missionary? What has enabled him cheerfully to work for nearly six years, without any rest, always having at least thirty natives to feed and to teach? He teaches them the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Ten Commandments, singing hymns, all of which they appreciate, also reading, writing, farming, building, &c.

The spiritual results are encouraging, though not as yet such as are earnestly prayed for. Lives have been transformed, men and women have turned from their evil ways, professing to be followers of Jesus Christ, and trying to obey His commands.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, November 8. Proverbs xxiv.

In praise of Wisdom. Using that word as standing for the fear and love of God, the soul which is truly wise has no need to be envious of evil men, for by following godliness, your household will be established on a lasting basis (3), the chambers of your soul will become stored with precious things (4), you will increase in might (5), you will be able to make successful war against the evil of your own heart and of the world (6). Wisdom is sweet, and its rewards are sure (13, 14).

In Praise of Mercy. It stands in direct contrast to the fool who is silent in the place of counsel, but loquacious in the private chamber where mischief is being hatched; and in contrast, also, to the deviser of mischief and the scorner. No man has a right to pass by on the other side, to feign ignorance, to be so occupied with his own affairs, that he has neither time nor thought for the miserable. The excuse, "Am I my brother's keeper?" is the apology of a murderer. Ah, it pains my heart to think of the return which England will have meted out to her in the day of her trouble for her neglect of the sorrows of Armenia, of Macedonia, of the Congo Free State, and of the native races done to death by gin and rum (12, 17, 18). Notice God's care of His saints, vv. 15, 16; and the punishment of evildoers, 19, 20.

In Praise of Diligence. Vv. 23-34 are a kind of appendix to the second part of this book, which closes at the end of this chapter. Notice specially vv. 30-34, which teach the constant need of watchfulness. Leave a house, and it will become uninhabitable: leave a garden, it will become a wilderness: leave a head or life, and they will become overrun by evil habits. Watch and pray!

Here begins the third part of this book, consisting of a selection of the 3,000 Proverbs of King Solomon, copied out nearly 300 years after his death by the men of Hezekiah (2 Kings xviii. 18).

The King and his Court (2-7). Throughout Hebrew literature and history, the king is looked upon as a type and foreshadowing of the Messiah who was to come; and the failure of all the kings to realize that ideal, to govern wisely, and to show mercy to the poor, led men to yearn with unutterable desire for the advent of the Divine King. It is of the ideal king that these Proverbs speak. He becomes the interpreter of the Divine Purpose and Will. To rebel against Him is the blackest treason, which cannot prosper (xxiv. 21, 22). Transfer all this to the King who died on the cross, and now sitteth at the right hand of power!

The Settlement of Disputes (8-12). What good advice is here. Even when your cause is just, do not divulge your side of it to a third party, but go direct to the principal; and before you enter on litigation, sit down to count the cost, and consider the end. Better to forbear and forgive (21, 22). Wise and loving speech is as refreshing as oranges in baskets of filigree work (see R.V. marg.).

Natural Images (13-28). Iced water in hot weather; clouds which carry no rain to thirsty lands; honey which must be tasted with the finger-tip or it will cloy the mouth; the broken tooth and disjointed ankle, which give way when used; the effervescence of vinegar and cider; the refreshment of cold water and the turbid waters of a muddy spring—all these are glimpses into the life and thought of that age, and show how natural images may enrich and enlighten speech! Here are "books in the running brooks," and God in everything!

TUESDAY, November 10. Proverbs xxvi.

The Fool (1-12). Fool and folly occur twelve times in these opening verses. What stupidity, what lack of common sense and common kindness, what failure to appreciate the significance and importance of events and things, reveal themselves not only in the lower classes, but in those who have a certain dignity assigned to them by the apparent accident of birth! That they should be so honoured seems as incongruous as snow in summer. It is certainly as hurtful as rain in harvest. As surely as the swallow after its long summer flight arrives at her appointed place, and the sparrow after flitting about all day returns to her nest at dusk, so the punishment of godless and senseless folly must light on the fool (see Matt. xiii. 15). Christ alone can transform and change such a nature, and make the heart of a fool become again pure and simple like that of a little child.

The Sluggard (13-16). We are introduced to him in bed, turning from side to side, like a door which swings to and fro. When at last he has risen, and sits down to table, he is too tired and lethargic even to eat. When the hour comes for him to go about his daily duties, he has a number of ingenious excuses why he should be excused from going. "There is a lion in the streets." If he is told that this is a delusion, he is quite angry, and prepared to argue the matter with seven men.

Maxims for the Discreet Man (17-28). Do not meddle with contention if you can help it. To lie in jest, is to suffer in earnest. Beware of whisperers and men of passionate temper. Give a wide berth to those whose religion is only like silver plating. Remember not to dig pits or set stones rolling. When once a man has injured you he will hate you, therefore be on your guard against him. By all these things God's servants may be warned and saved from many wrong and harmful ways.

WEDNESDAY, November 11. Proverbs xxvii.

The keynote of this chapter is struck in the opening verse. It has been truly said that we only begin to live in any right and satisfactory sense when we have learned to take each day by itself, and to use it as if it were our last. Life is like a mosaic, covering the wall or dome of some vast cathedral; only to be effectually wrought when, with minute and concentrated care, the little piece of coloured glass which we call To-day is duly and carefully fixed in its place.

They who live like this, are kept in perfect peace. Their hearts are at rest in God. They know that the morrow can hold nothing which God does not foresee, and for which He will not provide. There is nothing in their experience of the fool's vexation, and they are delivered from the cruelty of wrath or the flooding of anger (4). When we have handed over our lives to God, we are not angry at oppression nor envious of transgressors. We cannot boast of to-morrow, but our souls can always make their boast in God.

But this childlike trust is consistent with the prudent avoidances of evil, and with the prudent provision for the future, as when the husbandman sows in the autumn for the coming spring (12, 23-27).

Our one duty in the world is to mind the fig-tree—i.e., to do what we are set to do, however simple and humble. Our Master will see to it that our needs are abundantly met and satisfied, whilst they who seek their own satisfaction are like the bottomless pit—a veritable morass and bog (18, 20).

THURSDAY, November 12. Proverbs xxviii.

The Poor (3, 6, 8, 11, 27). The Hebrew commonwealth was full of kindliness to the poor. From the days of Moses provision was made for the poor to glean in harvest-field and olive-yard, and the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow were made partakers in all the good things that fell to the lot of the more prosperous. God was always represented as siding with the poor, and turning with indignation against their oppressors. To be on the side of the poor is therefore to be on the side which is dear to God, if, of course, poverty is not due to idleness or self-indulgence. Every well-to-do family ought to have its little circle of honest and respectable poor to whom the children and servants are taught to minister.

The Religious Life (1, 5, 9, 10, 13, 14, 18, 20, 25). When a man's heart is right with God, he is brave and strong; he understands all things in the Divine light that falls on them; his prayer is acceptable; whenever he is convinced of sin he turns to God with confession, and is forgiven and accepted; he is always fearful of offending against the Divine love; he abounds in blessings, and puts his trust in God. Note the contrasted lot of the wicked to each of these particulars, which, like a foil, sets off the advantage of godliness.

Greediness (8, 20, 22, 25). How many there are among us still who are never content! They are always grasping at the possessions of others, as Ahab at Naboth's garden. May God keep us simple and humble, content with what He gives, and resigned at what He takes away!

FRIDAY, November 13. Proverbs xxix.

The Discipline of Home (1, 3, 15, 17). The godly man is very careful of the upbringing of his children, not leaving them in the hands of others, nor passing over their faults; he gives himself any amount of trouble in their youth, checking each fault in its bud, that he himself may be saved sorrow in his old age.

The Sphere of Government (2, 4, 8, 12, 14, 16, 26, 27). It is of the utmost importance to a nation that its leaders be men of upright and prudent disposition; else the entire land will become demoralized, and drift to its destruction. It becomes good and right-thinking persons to exert their influence in local and national counsels, recording their votes as in God's sight on the behalf of those who are clear in life and single in their purpose. The kingdom of our Lord, as He said, did not originate in this world; it came down out of heaven, like the new Jerusalem; but having come, it touches all human institutions, to cause the wrong to wither, and to build up all things after the Divine model.

The Sphere of Society (5, 7, 10, 11, 20, 22, 27). Beware of flatterers; search out and help the cause of the poor; be prepared to be hated by evil men, whose opposition shows that you are on the right path; do not be too free with your speech; be sure that evil men will presently crash to ruin, like a rotten forest tree; keep out of the way of men of rash and hasty temper; do not be deflected from the path which conscience marks out by the fear of man, but be lowly, put your trust in God, and go straight on. You shall be "set on high" (25, R.V. marg.).

SATURDAY, November 14. Proverbs xxx.

Who Agur was, we cannot tell. This chapter is full of his sayings. He knew God and human life; and loves to group his reflections into picturesque quatrains. His Opening Cry (1-4) is full of pathetic interest. He knows that there is a God, but who and what? It seemed as though he became faint and weary in his quest. As yet there was none to say to him, "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father."

An Answer Comes (5-9). It is probably from his own heart. He says, Man cannot know God, save by the revelation He makes of Himself in His words (and we may add, in the Word, for is it not written that no man hath seen God at any time, but the Only-Begotten hath revealed Him?). But there are two conditions which must be fulfilled, if we would know God. First, we must be delivered from vanity and lies; and secondly, we must only seek that moderate sufficiency of this world's goods which will keep us from being unduly elated by prosperity or depressed by poverty. It is a beautiful prayer for us all!

11-14. Four kinds of men, to name whom secures their condemnation. 13-16. Four insatiable things. 17. The Divine curse on unfilial conduct.

18-20. Four incomprehensible mysteries, how an eagle mounts, a serpent glides, or a ship ploughs the deep, how love leaps from heart to heart, and the inveterate sin of the fallen. 21-23. Four intolerable conditions. 24-28. Four kinds of animals, which show that it is possible to be wise though insignificant.

29-31. Four things which have great stateliness of motion. Agur ends with good advice for self-control. May the Divine Spirit unfold the hidden thoughts which underlie this chapter.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

CLOSING AT DUNDEE: OPENING AT MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

Close of the Dundee Mission.

DR. TORREY said recently he believed Scotland was degenerating through neglect of the Bible, and whoever studies the general trend of things will endorse the remark. What we owe to our Covenanting ancestors, we owe because they loved the Bible. Surely it becomes us, in the very city beside which stands the ruins of the castle of the Grahams of Claverhouse, to recall what liberty has cost, what freedom to read the blessed Book cost in blood, and to take the words of warning given to heart, and hail whatever would restore Holy Writ to the place it should occupy in our national life. Dr. Torrey is outstandingly a man of one book. He is not by any means limited in culture, but he is a specialist in Bible study. Miss Saxe, who is conducting the afternoon Bible readings begun by the evangelist, has done excellent work which will bear, we believe, much good fruit, in that it will lead many, whose present method of reading the Bible is almost worthless, to study it indeed, and be able to have an intellectual grasp which will be indeed a synthesis of the Divine revelation. Little circles are being formed for this important study, and everyone who has a heart for the higher interests of life and the soul can understand that it is much more important, in spite of the mental stimulus of Browning Societies and such, that the words of life should be so known that they shall enter into the warp and woof of life.

BROTHERS AND SISTERS SEEKING ONE ANOTHER.

The stream of interest gathers volume with the days. Family after family are being brought in, first one member will come out for Christ, then another, and another. Letters are sent by the converted to their unconverted brothers and sisters in other places, and the number of saved is being thus added to. One young woman wrote to the South of Scotland, her sister accepted Christ as a result, and was the means of bringing a lad of eighteen, just on the precipice of dissipation, to surrender to Christ.

News comes of farmers and others making arrangements for, in some cases, long journeys, that they may hear Dr. Torrey speak in places where his stay is to be for a day only. The fame of God's working has spread abroad.

Two meetings are now being held nightly, one for women only in the Steeple Church, and one specially for men in the Kinnaird Hall. In the former, Dr. Torrey spoke a message that went powerfully to the hearts of those present, and Professor Towner's solo-singing was such as the Holy Spirit used to awaken thoughts of God and eternity.

DEALING WITH UNBELIEF.

At the men's meeting infidelity came in for such a handling as showed how really weak it is in spite of the bravado of its speech. Its causes, consequences, and cure were dealt with fearlessly. There was no shirking of the facts, as the speaker dealt with the misrepresentation of Christianity in the lives of the professed followers of Christ, and with the caricatured God, and false ethics that were preached from many a pulpit. Other causes were ignorance, conceit, sin. What were the consequences of infidelity?—anarchy, wretchedness, despair. Infidelity was responsible for more suicides than anything else except insanity.

The cure for this awful soul disease was in a surrendered will and the study of Bible. Men like Colonel Ingersoll did not know the Bible. All infidels cling to stock texts. As we left the hall a father full of joy breathed into our ear the unanswerable argument of experience; he said, "A few weeks ago I was anxious about my son's visits to the public-house, but now he is converted, and when I went to waken him as he desired, on Sunday morning, for the prayer-meeting, half asleep he was repeating,

Only One, the blessed, blessed Jesus."

About 2,000 women met in the Steeple Church on Wednesday evening. Then followed the men's meeting in the Kinnaird Hall, the subject being "The Drama of Life, in Three Acts." A deep impression was made on the audience, and if the response was not so large as might have been hoped for, the Spirit was felt to be most surely with us, and there were many all over the hall who stood up and confessed that they had taken Christ that night. Dr. Torrey told that one young man in the employment of the theatre had accepted Christ as his Saviour, and had just left to fulfil his engagement, but had promised to come back to-morrow night and confess publicly.

A man in good position, and at one time wealthy, who had wrecked all that was best in life through drink, and had to be separated from his wife after wounding her in a frenzied struggle, came out and acknowledged Christ as his Saviour. Through this man's confession quite a little circle have become interested in the Gospel.

CLOSING WORDS AND FAREWELLS.

The closing night was one never to be forgotten. Men and women confessed all over the hall, and the meeting would not break up although it had been packed from seven o'clock. The Gospel was presented with such simplicity that no one could fail to grasp it. Mr. Alexander's solo was full of sympathetic love and yearning desire for the lost; and as Prof. Towner sang of the Holy Spirit, we felt as if the mysteries that surround the soul's choice were opening through obscuring clouds; but ever and anon came the clear message of the power of the will to say the "yes" that linked human impotence to Divine omnipotence.

The memory lingers over the weeks that have gone all too quickly, and we rejoice that the Lord who gave is with us still. We feel many whose idea of the Christian religion has been narrow and mean, who have been subject to the bondage of fear all their life time, will enter into the joy that shares the purpose of God here on earth. We seem to hear the sound of the great sea of might and mercy behind the walls of our unbelief, clamouring to give itself away, that the naked stretches of godlessness may be bathed in its flow.

As the last company of our friends, including Prof. Towner, left, the station rang with the "Glory Song," and as the train steamed out, "God be with you—keep love's banner floating o'er you," followed them as the benediction of loving hearts.

Opening in Manchester.

The meetings opened last Lord's Day in Manchester with every promise of success. At eight o'clock in the morning a large number of workers gathered in the Y.M.C.A. Hall to receive their first words of counsel and instruction from Dr. Torrey, who opened the mission with a ringing message to Christians to go out into every part of Manchester and lead souls to Christ one by one—in their own homes, in the trams, in the public-houses, in the street, everywhere. The preacher may win a thousand or two thousand, but if all those who can get into St. James's Hall could each win one, there would be ten thousand won for Jesus Christ. If the St. James's Hall were packed there would be only 10,000 reached, and with a population of 700,000 there would be 690,000 outside.

The huge St. James's Hall was well filled at the afternoon meeting. This hall seats 6,000 people, and we should estimate that there were at least 400 or 500 standing at this service. A platform extending the whole width of the hall, with seats arranged in a crescent, rising in tiers from the front, held a choir of 1,000 voices, which did excellent work under the leadership of Mr. Alexander. The choir began by singing, "Shall we gather at the river?" And soon the immense audience was singing "The Glory Song." When Mr. Alexander asked the women to sing, the singing sounded so weak compared with the men, and then he announced that he noticed there were about three men to every woman.

Dr. Torrey spoke on Prov. xi. 30, "He that winneth souls is wise." He said, "If I should go to different classes of men in Manchester and ask this question, 'Who is wise?' I should get a variety of answers. From the banker it would probably be, 'The one who lays up money'; from the political man, 'the one who studies the political problems of the day, and rises until he is made a Member of Parliament, &c.'; but if I should look up to yonder throne of life and say, 'Oh, God, whom do you regard as a wise man?' I would get the answer in my text, 'He that winneth souls is wise.' That man and woman who go out among their fellows and win them to Christ and to the life eternal are wise; not that they enter the ministry or go as foreign missionaries; many men can win more souls to Christ in their regular line of business than they can if they go as preachers."

In the evening St. James's Hall was packed to its utmost capacity. The meeting started with a half-hour's song service. Dr. Torrey preached on the "Need of man for a hiding-place," and showed Jesus Christ to be the hiding-place to supply every need of man. Many rose in all parts of the building to say they needed a hiding-place, and would like to be prayed for, that they might find it in Jesus Christ.

God has wonderfully opened the work here, and we believe He is going to do a mighty work, while we all stand still and see the salvation of our God.

After the Edinburgh Mission.

It will interest our readers to hear how the Mission in Edinburgh, which was the first conducted in this country by Messrs. Torrey and Alexander, was followed up. Rev. John Wemyss, who displayed so much energy during the visit of the evangelists, writes: "Our special aim was to get the converts in touch with their own, or if they had none, with Evangelical ministers in town. We took down name, address, and church connection (if any) on cards. On the following morning I posted these cards to the ministers. I am glad to say that my request that they should, by calling or otherwise, do what they could to confirm the good which we hoped had been received, was very generally complied with—so much so that some of our ministers had a somewhat busy time. The names of Sunday-school children were forwarded to the superintendents."

INTEREST IN THE CONVERTS.

"It has been proved again and again how much the lasting value of an evangelistic mission depends on the immediate sympathy and practical interest shown by the ministers and churches towards the converts. The Edinburgh work was no exception to this rule. The churches which welcomed the new converts most warmly have been those which have benefited most by accessions of strength. Talking to Edinburgh ministers, one finds that where they took a real interest in the Mission, they themselves derived help, and caught the glow of zeal for the work.

CONVERTS' MEETINGS.

To help the converts, meetings were held weekly for some months after the departure of Messrs. Torrey and Alexander. They were addressed by Dr. George Wilson and other leading men. Dr. Alexander Whyte expressed his delight at the meetings, and urged their continuance." (Owing to the absence of the Rev. John Wemyss from Edinburgh, the meetings have ceased, although they will be resumed on the expression of any general desire.) "I am sure that most of the ministers whose churches the converts joined, are doing what they can to assist them, and have got them employed in Christian work," writes Mr. Wemyss. Mr. Wm. Robertson, superintendent of Carubbers' Close Mission, who was co-secretary, has kept closely in touch with many who gave their hearts to the Lord.

How I Was Led to Christ.

By GRACE SAXE.

About eight years ago I was converted in the city of St. Louis, Missouri, U.S.A., where I was doing stenographic reporting. Up to this time in my life, or at least since my early childhood, nothing in all this world interested me less than the things of the Kingdom of God. I was leading a worldly life, afar from God, and did not know that my soul was starving. But I realized that I was not happy, and sometimes wondered if those with whom I associated felt as I did underneath the laughter and gaiety, the hollowness and worthlessness and utter folly of living on as we were doing. I could not be induced to attend church services, excepting occasionally, when I was spending Sunday with some very godly cousins. On such occasions I went, but only out of courtesy to them, and occupied the time of the service with thoughts and plans of my own, always breathing a sigh of relief when the benediction was pronounced. I could not understand how these cousins, sane and intelligent on other subjects, could be so interested in church-going, Bible-reading, prayer-meetings and such things. The preaching of the Cross was to me foolishness, because I was perishing.

AN UNWILLING REPORTER.

But God has a way of waking up souls which are dead in trespasses and sins, and one day He met me and changed the whole course of my life. The messenger He first sent was a business man, a member of the church to which my cousins belonged, with whom I had a slight acquaintance. He came to my office one day, and asked if I could report for him ten nights of lectures. I was very busy at the time, and took the engagement without even inquiring the subject of the lectures. I was under the impression they were medical, as I had recently been reporting that sort of work. The evening of the first lecture arrived, and I was there at the appointed time. As I entered the hall, and passed up to the reporters' desk, I noticed that many of the audience were women, so I concluded they were not medical lectures I was to report after all. I remember I sat there wishing they would hurry with the programme, as I had other things I wished to do after I left there, when a man arose and said, "Let us pray." I cannot describe my feelings as I realized I was actually in a religious meeting, and must listen to every word for ten nights. I was indignant that I had been thus trapped, and blamed my cousins, thinking they had sent this man to engage me to report the meetings. However, I was fairly caught, and had to listen.

RELUCTANT TO BELIEVE.

The speaking began, and for the first time for years I listened to the preaching of the Gospel. It was necessary for me to give absolute attention in order to get a verbatim report, and as I transcribed my notes all the teaching had to pass through my brain again. For ten nights these godly men poured into my unwilling ears the fundamental truths of God's Word. At first I laughed at it all, and told the people who came into my office, and saw me writing up the lectures, that it was the report of some New York lunatics who were speaking up at Exposition Hall, and I had been engaged to take down their ravings. But God's Word never returns unto Him void. It was hard stony ground that the good seed fell upon, and there were plenty of birds of the air to snatch it away, but at last it did find root and sprang up unto eternal life. Before the ten nights' work had been finished, I was very uncomfortable. I knew if these men were right—and in my heart I felt they were—I was in awful peril, but it was not until six months afterwards that I yielded myself to God.

LIGHT AFTER DARKNESS.

Those six months were times of conflict. I went from church to church trying to get more light. At last I heard a man preach on the text, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." I saw the way clear enough that morning. I did not want the wrath of God to abide upon me, but the thought of eternal life did not appeal to me. It meant to me simply endless existence. I wanted to be saved from my sins in this life, and from hell in the next, but I did not want to live always. I was unhappy, and had lived already quite long enough to suit me. The devil kept me from seeing that the Christian life is something vastly different from the life I was then leading.

The very next day God answered my questioning, and sent me the verse through which the whole flood of glory burst in upon my soul. I was sitting in the park very early in the morning, thinking, thinking, thinking. I had in my hand a religious book, which I had been reading for the very beauty of the style. I opened it mechanically, not intending even to read. Just then my eyes fell on the verse, "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent." It was not only the written words which I saw. God Himself had spoken the words to my heart, and instantly, then and there, I surrendered myself to Him.

SERVICE AFTER SALVATION.

Immediately I commenced reading the Bible, but had difficulty in understanding it, and soon decided to go to the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago and make a thorough study of the Book. Accordingly I gave up my business for a time, expecting to spend only a few months there, but did eventually remain the two years, taking the entire course. At the close of the course I was sent out from the Institute to teach Bible classes in the towns and cities of the Western States, following large union missions, and this has been my constant work for the past six years.

Meeting Supposed "Contradictions."

Dr. Torrey received recently a letter to the following effect: "In reference to the story about the atheist who was unable to furnish you with a list of contradictions in the Bible, I take the liberty of appending a few of these for your information. Compare Matthew xxvii. 3-10 with Acts i. 18-20. There are many more contradictions, but if you wish a fuller list you should get —— (naming a book), which also contains most of the Bible absurdities, atrocities, broken promises, immoralities, &c."

To this letter Dr. Torrey sent the following reply: You say in reference to the story about the atheist who was unable to furnish me with the list of the contradictions in the Bible, "I take the liberty of appending a few of these for your information." In reply, I would say that if the atheist in question had produced these contradictions, I would have shown him at once that there was no contradiction except in his own mind. There is no need of going through the whole list, one example will suffice, the first one you give. You say the account in Matt. xxvii. 3-10 is contradicted by the account in Acts i. 18-20. Evidently you have not studied this very carefully—this is usually the case with supposed contradictions.

The one account tells us that Judas went and hanged himself; the other account tells us that "he purchased a field with the reward of iniquity and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out." To a superficial reader (and most atheists are superficial readers of the Bible) this would seem like a contradiction, but a few moments' honest thought would show him that if Judas had gone and hanged himself as stated in Matthew, and the rope had broken, the natural consequence would have been that he would have fallen headlong and burst asunder in the midst and all his bowels would have gushed out. All the other alleged contradictions in the Bible disappear upon investigation.

You advise me to get a particular book, and look at the contradictions given in that. This is quite unnecessary, as I have been discussing with infidels for years, and I am quite familiar with their stock of alleged contradictions. I have yet to meet the first infidel that could show me a supposed contradiction that I could not explain. If one should succeed in showing me one I could not explain, that would not prove it could not be explained, for I do not know everything, and someone who knew a little more than I might very easily explain the contradiction that I could not explain at all. The trouble with infidels is that if they cannot see the explanation they at once jump at the conclusion that there cannot be any. In other words, they imagine they are omniscient. Might I advise you, as you have advised me to get a certain book, to get my book on "The Divine Origin of the Bible," and read the chapter on "Difficulties in the Bible."

In closing, let me say that I will pray for you that God will open your eyes to His truth, and this God will do if you will only surrender yourself to the truth and obey it. Are you already obeying it as far as you know it? Remember that some day you must stand before the judgment seat of Christ and meet Him face to face. You cannot shelter yourself behind alleged contradictions in the Bible then.

Incidents of the Missions.

GIVING UP DANCING.

Three young men decided for Christ at the meetings in Dundee. They had intended going to a ball in Perth the following evening, but, of course, felt they could not go; and telegraphed to their sweethearts that they were converted, and so have taken a decided stand for God.

LETTING THE ASSISTANTS GO.

At Dundee one of the workers went into a shop to make a purchase, and inquired of the shopkeeper if he was enjoying the meetings. He replied that he was not able to attend very often himself, but that he had kept the shop and let his five assistants go over to the meeting early in order to secure seats.

THE FOREMAN'S INTEREST.

Great interest has been manifested in the factories and foundries of Dundee. In one foundry the foreman was so eager for the salvation of the men under his control, that he volunteered to stay one night and tend the furnace, in order that the fireman should go to the service in Kinnaird Hall. In that particular foundry five men were led to Christ.

A QUESTION FOR A MERCHANT PRINCE.

A Liverpool daily paper asked if Sir Alfred L. Jones, the great merchant, was not startled when, on opening a purely business letter the other morning, he found the following slip printed in red ink—"Get right with God." These words have reached thousands of men who never came to the meetings, and must have aroused many a heart to ponder as to its relation to God.

A FATHER'S PRAYERS.

A friend tells of the conversion of his married son through coming to the meetings at Kinnaird Hall. He had lived a very careless life, and given himself over to drunken habits. But he had been the subject of prayer for a long time. Now the father is full of praise to God, and continues in prayer that his son's wife may also be converted before the Mission is over.

A DRUNKARD RECLAIMED.

A notorious drunkard who was converted through Dr. Torrey's preaching at the Kinnaird Hall, had been in prison nineteen times for drunkenness, and now his friends and neighbours are amazed at the wonderful change in him. He has not only given up drink, but is living a transformed life, rejoicing in freedom from Satan's fetters, and testifying to everyone he meets of what God has done for him.

FAMILY PRAYERS ANSWERED.

While some members of a family came to the meeting, the rest who were Christians remained at home praying that God would bring them to Himself. Two sisters and one brother came to Christ that night. When they reached home the brother went to his mother's room and told her that he had accepted Christ. The mother arose, and they had a praise service together. This man began immediately to confess Christ as his Saviour in meetings and wherever he goes.

BRINGING OTHERS WITH HIM.

"On Wednesday, October 21, at Kinnaird Hall," writes a correspondent, "at the close of Dr. Torrey's address, I explained the way of eternal life to a young man who appeared to me to bear upon his face the stamp of one of God's wandering children. He was in great distress, being out of work, and having no money to pay for a night's lodging. He seemed clearly to see and grasp the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and accepted Him as his Saviour. The next night he came again bringing two companions, who also accepted Christ. The Lord had been good to him, having provided the bed he needed, with the next day's employment and a good warm coat."

A FISHING BAND.

A number of people in Dundee have formed themselves into "a fishing band," and they go out night after night inviting people to come in to the meetings. One night, one of these workers was going through the Overgate and spoke to a young girl there. She refused to come to the meeting; but, after the worker had talked with her for some time, she said she would accept Christ as her Saviour, and worker and seeker knelt in the street while they both prayed. The girl then promised to come to the meeting the next night. But she failed to appear, and the worker continued to pray for her. The night after she felt someone catch her by the sleeve, and when she looked around she found the girl happy in Jesus Christ. She gave her name to one of the Bible workers, and this lady invited the girl to come to her home, where she went and prayed simply and sweetly with her new friend.

GOOD WORK IN PRISON.

One of the workers gave a talk to the women in the prison, and afterwards visited some of the prisoners in their cells. One woman professed to accept Christ. Going again on the following Sunday to give another talk, the worker saw this woman still there, but apparently very much interested. On Monday night one of the pastors in Dundee called for workers to go out and sing the Alexander Hymns in the lowest portion of the city, and invite the people to the meeting. This worker went with the party, and they had not gone very far when the woman from the prison was met, and the worker who knew her invited her to attend the meeting. She very willingly came. As we were going to the meeting the woman was asked how she had got through the day. Her reply was: "I left the prison this morning. There have been many temptations, but Jesus has kept me."

"BY ALL MEANS."

One night in Kinnaird Hall, Dundee, after he had finished talking to the converts, Dr. Torrey called upon Mr. Alexander to speak. Mr. Alexander spoke for a short time on the different methods of reaching people, and quoted Paul's advice—"By all means to save some." He said from his experience with the Scotch people, he thought they had reversed the order and were reading it, "By some means save all," and suggested that they go back to Paul's plan. A few days after he received the following post-card which explains itself:—"One night a Christian was sitting in the Kinnaird Hall beside a man who was owing him 30s., and as he had asked a lawyer to try and recover the money for him, he felt he could not speak to the man about his soul. So he went to the lawyer next day and said, 'Let the money go, as I would rather lose it and feel free to speak.' Let us 'by all means save some.'"

A HAPPY HOLIDAY.

"My son and I came down here for a fortnight's holiday," writes a friend to Dr. Torrey, "during which time God has wonderfully used us, opening up our way to hold mission services, at the close of which twenty-seven children and about twenty men and women openly confessed to having taken Jesus as their Saviour. While thanking you and Mr. Alexander for the great help received during your visit to Birkenhead and Liverpool, we ask you to please return thanks to God for answering prayer, and using us to His glory in this place. To Him be all the praise. My son aged nineteen years, who accepted Jesus as his Saviour Lord and King during your visit to Birkenhead, says, 'There is no work like working for Jesus.' He never spent such a happy holiday in all his life. Our last service was held to-night in the mission room, and as we came out into the dark road (for there is no gas in this place), a small crowd of us walked along singing, 'Never lose sight of Jesus.'"

ALWAYS SOMETHING TO BE THANKFUL FOR.

At an afternoon meeting Mr. Alexander was urging the people to get up and tell some encouraging thing about the Mission for which to praise the Lord. This appeal did not at first meet with very hearty response, and Mr. Alexander told the following story: "An old coloured man in Chicago always came into one of the missions in the slums with a bright and shining face, no matter what happened. One day he came with his thumb tied up. They asked him what was the matter, and he replied, 'To-day I was fixing a box and I smashed my thumb, but praise the Lord I have my thumb yet.' A few nights after he came in with his face as bright as ever. They said, 'Well, uncle, what have you to praise the Lord for to-night?' 'Oh,' said he, 'I was coming down the street to-night with a big piece of beef-steak. I had spent all my money on that beef-steak, and I laid it down on the side-walk to tie my shoe, and while I was tying my shoe, a big dog came along and took that beef-steak and carried it off, praise the Lord!' A man said, 'Look here, uncle, what are you praising the Lord for about that?' The old coloured man answered, 'I'm praising the Lord 'cause I got my appetite left.'"

A TRAIN OF INFLUENCES.

"For eleven months two of us have been praying to our Father, that He would direct a young man to take the decisive step across the line betwixt halting and firm resolve to be enrolled under the banner of the Prince of Peace. Two or three days ago we heard from this young man's sister that he had come out at one of your meetings in Liverpool. Through God's guiding hand, he was compelled to give up his employment in a printing office because of ill-health, and took the duties of a steward on a West Indian (Jamaica) Line. On his second return home (about September 6) to Frome, he heard Rev. Carey Bonner speak at our Sunday-school anniversary, and throughout his discourse rang the words, 'Follow the Gleam.' This, through the Spirit's working, started the train of thought which culminated in Liverpool. For your part in this victory I desire, on behalf of his true friends here, to thank you, and I have praised and thanked our Father ever since I heard the news. I believe now the entire family of seven are united in the glorious hope of eternity with Jesus their Redeemer. We are all, in our family, following your movements, and I read all I can in The Christian every week. I like your book, 'How to Pray,' and have greatly benefited by it. We have learned ever so many hymns from Mr. Alexander's book, and are looking forward to and praying for the Mission in Bristol in April."

A REVIVAL WAVE IN A CLASS.

"I do not feel as if you were a stranger now," writes a Dundee correspondent, "so I want to add my note of praise and testimony to the grand work God is doing among us through you and Mr. Alexander. It is not alone the many who are being won for Jesus (we thank and praise the Lord for these), but the Christians are getting such a blessing that when God takes you away from amongst us, the work must continue. Personally, I know God has shown me the poorness of my life as a Christian, with the poverty of my prayers, and brought me back to the love and fervour of these days when first I gave myself to Jesus.

"To speak to unsaved souls, to talk of spiritual things to those who are not in sympathy, has been always a difficult thing for me to do, but God is helping me to do this now. It seems as if things which were impossible once (seemingly so) are made easy now. I have had the joy of leading souls to Jesus, especially amongst the young in my Sabbath-school classes and Bible classes. But for a year or two this has been the exception, not the rule. I have charge of a young people's meeting, and have felt sadly the lack of joy and power in service. It has all been so different since we have begun this session. Even before you came I felt the spirit of prayer at our after-meetings, and knew the blessing was coming. On our last meeting night there were seventy-five young men and women; our ordinary meetings vary from forty-five to over sixty, but we never had so many before. We turned the meeting into a thanksgiving one, and our hearts were filled with joy. We could not but feel that Jesus was in the midst. At the close, one girl sang, 'I surrender all,' and many of us surrendered all to Jesus.

"One of my young people, a Christian girl, told she had been speaking to a child in the meeting. The little one had been weeping, and when she accepted Jesus the choir began to sing, 'When the roll is called up yonder, I'll be there.' 'I'll be there, too,' said the little one, smiling through her tears. On Friday I asked a girl, one of my Bible class, to come to meeting with me. She did not come, and I felt so discouraged as I put Jane on my prayer list, for I had written to her personally on the question of her soul's salvation, and had prayed that she might be converted that night. Yesterday after the class, I asked her why she did not come. She replied she did not like to come. I said, Would she not speak to me then, I had plenty of time to wait? Her answer was just as if she had been waiting for me to invite her to speak with me, 'Mary wants to wait too.' I took them into the hall again, found another girl was waiting for them at the door, brought her in also, and after a quiet talk and prayer together they all accepted Christ. I asked for one, God gave me three. Does he not answer abundantly above our asking or thinking? I felt His presence and His power, and went away very much humbled and with this one desire, that not only these but every unsaved one in the class will be brought to Jesus."

ECHOES FROM DR. TORREY.

Every child of God should make soul winning the business of his life.

To be a follower of Christ is to have the same purpose in life that He had, to save souls.

If we accept the authority of Jesus Christ, we are driven to accept the Divine authority of the entire Old and New Testaments.

It is Christ and a whole Bible, or no Bible and no Christ.

The promises of God in the Bible regarding prayer are made to those who are united to Christ by a living faith, and who are living a life of loving obedience to His will.

If you are a child of God and do His will, when you meet with any of His promises in the the Bible, you can present your petition to Him in the name of Christ for its full face value, knowing you have it granted even while you ask.

If we ask according to God's promises in the Bible, we know that we ask Him for those things which are according to His will.

I believe the Bible to be the Word of God because of its fulfilled prophecies.

Revelation is the ripened fruit of what is found in Genesis.

God is delighted with that faith which will not take "No" for an answer.

It is no use trying to make yourself believe you believe what you do not believe; you must build on the sure foundation of God's Word.

Tricks, Temptations, and Tragedies.

A BOY rambling one day in a wood found a squirrel's nest in the fork of a tree. In it lay a hoard of nuts the little animal had collected for its winter's food supply. The boy liked nuts, too. So he filled his pockets with them, and put stones in their place. A week later he passed that way again, and found a starved, dead little squirrel at the foot of the tree.

Another boy "played a trick" on an old lady, sending her a live mouse in a box by post. When she opened the package, her heart, which was weak, stopped its beating and she fell—killed with the shock.

Why do I tell you this? So that you may be careful what "tricks" you play, and keep them within harmless and sensible limits. Remember that they may be either

FUNNY, FOOLISH,
FATAL.

All this is also true in our own lives and hearts.

SATAN PLAYS TRICKS WITH US.

Jesus said one day that no father, if his son asked for bread, would give him a stone; or, if he asked for a fish, would offer him a serpent (Luke xi. 11). But that is the sort of thing Satan will do. Every boy and girl needs spiritual food, and the tempter is always offering something else instead. He tempts us either with something useless, like a stone; or injurious like a serpent; the stone of worldly pleasure which gives no satisfaction; or the serpent of sin which bites and hurts. "At the last, it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder" (Prov. xxiii. 32); and like the locusts (Rev. ix. 10), which may be taken as a type of sin—"they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings on their tails; and their power was to hurt men."

How may we be delivered from these dreadful things—our love of the world, our evil habits, and our sins? Even Satan himself admitted that Jesus had power to "command that these stones be made bread" (Matt. iv. 3); and when he had tempted Eve in the Garden of Eden, God told him that, serpent though he was, "the seed of the woman (that is, Jesus) shall bruise thy head" (Gen. iii. 15). So you see Jesus is more than a match for Satan, however he may tempt us, if only we will seek His help to overcome.

Then there is another thought. I do not like to say that we "play tricks" with God, because our sins and failures are more serious than that. But we may truly speak of

THE WAY WE TREAT GOD.

We do not like it when people disappoint or grieve us, but do we often think of how we grieve Him?

Our Lord told once about a husbandman, who came to his vineyard and found a barren fig-tree. In spite of all he had done to cultivate it, it bore no fruit (Luke xiii. 7), and he found no SATISFACTION in it. Again, Jesus Himself was "hungry" on one of His journeys, and found a fig-tree with no fruit, only leaves (Matt. xxi. 18, 19). Unlike other trees, on a fig-tree the fruit appears before the leaves; so that if leaves are upon it, fruit is naturally looked for. It says, "the time of fruit was not yet," therefore no leaves were to be expected either. But this tree made an unusual show, with no reality. Jesus comes to us hungry for SINCERITY, and He cannot do with shams.

On yet another occasion He described a man who had had a talent given him by his master (Luke xix. 20), but instead of trading with it, and gaining more, he laid it up in a napkin, idly, so that it was of no use. God has given us our health and strength of body, time, intellect, and influence to use for Him, and we have no right to devote them only to ourselves, or deny Him our reasonable SERVICE. From these three incidents we learn that He comes to us hungry and longing for and we disappoint and grieve Him greatly if we do not give them.

SATISFACTION, SINCERITY,
SERVICE,

Let us try, then, not to let Satan play his deceitful tricks upon us, or yield to his temptations to cheat God out of His rights in our life, because, if we do, we shall find it will end in a dreadful tragedy when we stand before the judgment seat.

Personal.

Many thanks for the flowers. A sick woman was very grateful for them.

Readers of the article on the "Crutch and Kindness League" who sent letters of application for membership have doubtless been answered by Mr. John Kirk, Ragged School Union, 32, John Street, Bedford Row, to whom the letters were handed for attention.

GUTHRIE LARWILL.—I trust you will be successful.

MILDRED LONG.—Thank you for your letter.

Lessons from Elijah (1 Kings xix. 1-18).

ELIJAH'S name means Jehovah is my strength; and the results of his life proved that he was in alliance with God. No mortal strength would have availed in the long and bitter conflict which he was called to maintain with the over-weening idolatry and pride of Ahab and Jezebel.

But in this chapter we have the record of a remarkable lapse. Scripture does not flinch from telling us of the failure of its most representative characters. The Word of God holds the mirror up alternately to the weakness or sinfulness of the saints, and then to the redeeming love and mercy of God, that the one may set forth the exceeding greatness of the other. God's greatest heroes are but men at the best, and if there is a break, though only for a moment, in the union between them and the Lord, they will become weak as others. It is only by the grace of God that they are what they are.

The failure of Elijah's faith was the more remarkable when we consider the splendour of his achievements on the preceding day. He had stood apparently alone, and by his appeal, his prayer, and his determined front to the priests of Baal had secured a wonderful victory for righteousness. How did it befall that within a few hours he had fallen from the crest to the trough of the wave, and in the hours of the succeeding night had arisen to flee for his life (v. 3)?

Something may have been due to physical overstrain. There had been the strain of anticipation of that day on Carmel, the nervous tension of the day itself, the destruction of the priests of Baal, whose blood encrimsoned the Kishon river, and all these exhausting fatigues had culminated in the courier-run of eighteen miles ahead of Ahab's chariot, the token of his willingness to show deference to the head of the nation. All these strenuous efforts were bound to have a natural reaction, in which probably his whole nature was involved, for there is a mysterious union between soul and body. The one reacts on the other, and depressed spirits are often directly attributable to the depressed condition of our physical health. At times, when we are conscious of over-strain, we should be more than ever on our guard against the attack of the great enemy of souls.

Disappointment at the results of his work may also have preyed upon his faith (4). He had set his heart on a great revolution for God, and had expected that when even Jezebel heard of all that had happened, she would show signs of relenting; but she gave evidence in her angry message (2) that she was as inflexible as ever. Why was this? Why did not God show Himself stronger on the behalf of truth? Why were the results not more adequate and satisfactory? He turned from God to think of Jezebel, and to consider the meagre harvest of all the sowing, forgetting that there were harvests being reaped from fields of which he knew nothing (18).

The Sense of Loneliness was probably another tributary stream to this black lake of despair (10, 14). If only there had been some kindred soul to talk with, some Elisha, in addition to his boy (?) attendant (xvii. 23; xviii. 43; xix. 3), some heroic ally, another complexion might have been put on the other situation. But he was overwhelmed with a sense of loneliness and want of sympathy.

God knew how to deal with him, for he knoweth our frame, and remembereth that we are but dust. First He sent his servant refreshing sleep (5, 6); next He furnished him with a supply of wholesome food (6, 7); further, He rested him by expressing on the great organ of nature the moods that swept over his soul, saying things by the wind, the earthquake, and the fire, for which no words were adequate (11); and lastly, He provided him with still further work to perform for Him (15); and a friend, who should share his burdens and anxieties, till that blessed hour when he should pass up to heaven with horses and a chariot of fire (16; 2 Kings ii.).

Let us ask God to kindle in our hearts the flame of zealousy for His honour and glory (10, 14)! We think much of ourselves, of what man says for or against us, and of the success or failure of our little plans. Let us ask to be taken up to the high mountain where the horizon of God's kingdom breaks on the soul, and the supreme desire comes of seeing His Name hallowed and His will done. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTE.

The Christian Endeavour Society in connection with the Baptist Church in Rome has hitherto borne the name of "Dovero Christiano," but has now changed to "Societa di Attivita Christiana," so as to stand in line with the other societies in Italy. The secretary sends the good news that Christian Endeavour is now taking root in Italy. As the churches come to know its value, it is being more widely adopted.

David's Trust in God (Psa. xxiii.)

Golden Text (Psa. xxiii. 1).

THE shepherd-psalm written by the shepherd-king from his own experience on the hills of Bethlehem and in the woods of Ephraim. 1 Sam. xvii. 34; 2 Sam. xvii. 27, 29; Psa. iii. 5.

1. The pasturage of Judah, especially on the hill-tops, was dry, sterile and stony for long stretches; some parts of the year under snow, then the shepherds had to cut down branches of trees as food for their flocks.

2. Between the pastures were ravines, deep, dark and dangerous, in which wild beasts and robbers lurked; on the hillsides, gorges and precipices which called for skill, watchfulness, and patient care on the part of the shepherd over the sheep of his flock.

3. The paths were uncertain, tortuous, and unreliable, hence the shepherd needed knowledge of the country to lead the flock in straight ways. He goes before to prove as well as to lead the way; he fords the rivers first, crosses the gorges, and tests the valleys.

4. The shepherd must be strong, alert, courageous, gentle, wise, true, and patient. Robbers must be resisted, wild beasts fought, maimed sheep mended, sick ones tended, lambs carried, and wanderers chastened. All fed, watered, rested, protected, defended, guided, and brought safe into fold.

5. The staff for support and defence; the crook for reaching down the branches of high trees (Micah vii. 14), upholding the weak ones of the flock when in difficult places, and rescuing the fallen from pits, rocks, and brier bushes. The Eastern shepherd lives among his sheep for long periods at a time, calls each by name, knows their dispositions, strength and temper; he wins their trust, is companion and friend, as well as protector and guide to them. An attachment grows up between the obedient sheep and the Good Shepherd (1 John iv. 19).

6. The Sheep are defenceless against the wolf, helpless to provide food, timid and apt to wander (Isa. liii. 6). Some are content and happy, follow close to the Shepherd. Others are heedless and careless, they stray often. Some are restless and discontented and climb in bushes for other food, they sometimes eat poison berries and are sick, while others are reckless and daring. Is it any wonder they get torn and mangled or stolen and killed. They hear more of the lion's roar and the dog's bark than they do of the kind Shepherd's voice and song.

The Divine Host.

Verses 5, 6. One of the Good Shepherd's flock. An honoured guest at a royal banquet (Luke vii. 46).
Head anointed with gladness.
Before me—full table, brimming cup.
Around me—my enemies.
Attendants—goodness and mercy.
Over me—a Father's home.
In store for me—"No more out" (Rev. iii. 12, 21).

"Jesus is my Shepherd,
For the sheep He bled.
Every lamb is sprinkled
With the blood He shed."

I. The sheep and lambs who follow the Shepherd closest, learn to love Him most, because they know Him best. They get sweet sprigs from His own hand, and He tells them many a loving secret (Psa. xxv. 14).

II. The stragglers hear so much of the watch-dog's bark (like David, 2 Sam. xii. 7), and the lion's roar that they sometimes wonder if they belong to the flock or not.

III. The young juicy pasture the Lord would have His sheep feed on is His own Word, not fiction, for that does not feed or strengthen, rather poisons and weakens. The Water of Life refreshes and restores, is free to any (Rev. xxi. 6 and John iv. 14). The Holy Spirit.

IV. If your cup of blessing runneth over look around for the empty, poor, and needy who are near you. Aged ones to cheer with loving words and actions. Little ones, to share your sweets with. Boys and girls of your own age whose lives are more sad and lonely than you can guess, give them such sympathy as only one of their own age can. "Ministering children" are like the birds to the prophet (1 Kings xvii. 11)—"willing, happy, busy, signs to the banished one that God cared for him."

V. The river of death has been forded by the Good Shepherd (Josh. iii. 11). His promise for His sheep is Isa. xliii. 2. The valley has been tested by Him too. There is only a "shadow" now because Jesus bore the sting of death (1 Cor. xv. 55). Death opens the gate into the presence of "the Great Shepherd" (Heb. xiii. 20, vii. 25). Where "the Chief Shepherd shall appear" (1 Pet. v. 4). He has promised to bring them with Him (1 Thess. iv. 14). Keep close to Him as you go up the hillside (early life), and you will never fear the valley with Him (Heb. xiii. 20).

LED INTO STILL WATERS.

Some years ago, when Samoa was swept by a terrible storm, the British vessel, the Callispe, was successfully guided out of danger into a place of safety. Her officers were standing ready, and having powerful machinery, the man-of-war raised her anchors, and steamed out of the harbour into the open sea, where she safely outrode the storm. In the storms of our lives we may be as secure as was the Callispe if we have the Captain of our salvation on board. He is able and willing to guide our vessel out of any storm into a secure refuge. David was able to say, "He leadeth me beside the still waters" (v. 2).

BEING LED IN A SAFE PATH.

Anyone who has travelled across the moors of the north has seen the many sheep tracks along which the flocks are led to the fresh pastures where they are to browse. One may walk with safety in the paths of the shepherds, and many a visitor has learned to his cost that there is a danger in leaving the beaten tracks, and breaking across the apparently safe moor. Swamps and quagmires are often stumbled into, and then it is one realizes the advantage of the paths along which the shepherd leads the sheep. So in the spiritual world the Good Shepherd leadeth us in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake (v. 3).

AWAKING FROM THE SLEEP OF DEATH.

Mr. G. F. Watts, the artist, adopted as his motto in life the words, "The utmost for the highest." His gospel has been practically a war against the eager desire for wealth, and he admits that the subject of death has always had a remarkable fascination for him. He has ever regarded death as a kind nurse who from time to time is saying, "Now, then, children, you must go to bed and wake up in the morning." This simple faith in the Lord is akin to that of the Psalmist who could sing, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me" (v. 4). Such should be the confidence of us all, who have put our trust in the Lord.

Doers . . . not Hearers only.

A VERY practical sermon was preached on Sunday morning at the Cavendish Street Chapel, Ramsgate, by Rev. T. Hancocks, from Matt. ix. 35-38. The text automatically divided itself under two heads: (1) Labourers are wanted; (2) Labourers are wanted.

The first illustration was from his own experience. He was once invited to a town in Sussex, where he preached twice from the words "Be filled with the Spirit." He unfolded to them the promises which are all fulfilled in the Lord Jesus, and the possibilities of the Gospel to the believer, dead and risen in Christ, seated together with Him in the heavenly places, and filled with the Spirit for service here on earth.

His words met with much acceptance, and not a few seemed to have entered upon a new, a higher, and a determination to a more devoted life.

After a while he found himself there again, now on behalf of Home Missions. He as earnestly enforced the opportunities and responsibilities of Christian service, as before the privileges and blessings which are ours in Christ.

He found that his hearers were disappointed, they had expected to sit down to another feast of fat things full of marrow, instead of which they had received only exhortations to work. He was ashamed of them. They had not yielded themselves to become doers of the Word, and consequently his former visit had been largely in vain.

I came away asking myself might not the numerous conventions annually held be tested as to the results of the instruction and exhortation to which thousands have listened many times? Might it not be possible for the first speaker to set forth the truth of the Gospel and the second the work of the Gospel? When the Methodist preachers went forth two and two the first preached and the second exhorted; the one poured forth the oil, the other rubbed it in. God's purpose in His people being filled with the Spirit is that they may become and continue to be His witnesses by testimony, by good works, by labouring in prayer, by giving as He has prospered them, and by patient endurance of suffering. A Visitor.

"Books for Country Ministers."—In response to the appeal recently inserted in "The Christian," the Rev. George Coates has received a number of applications from country ministers and others greatly in need of suitable books. He says, however, that no financial help has reached him. Some may be able to send books suitable for the purpose in hand. Address, Rev. George Coates, Western House, Willington, Durham.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

ABERDEEN.

DESPITE adverse weather, Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones had a capital finish at Aberdeen. The meetings grew in power and influence as they proceeded. The Sabbath evening meetings were crowded out, and hundreds of people had to stand. During the campaign over one thousand pledges were taken, and the faith and intensity of the Temperance community were deepened and strengthened.

A large audience assembled for the final meeting. Mr. J. A. Smith (President of the Aberdeen Temperance Society, and convener of the United Temperance Committee who arranged the mission), occupied the chair, and said, in the course of his address :—

"I believe I am voicing the thoughts of a great many of those here present when I say that, though we are anticipating with much interest and pleasure listening to the voices of our friends, Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones, our pleasure is chastened by the thought that we are listening to them for the last time on the present mission. But though they are leaving Aberdeen there are hundreds here who will never forget them. Dr. Henry has done a great work in this city, the result of which will live long after he has left it. It has been our great privilege during the past fortnight to listen to fresh arguments against the manufacture, sale and consumption of alcoholic beverages, so that the man who says 'it is impossible to say anything fresh on the Temperance Question' has been completely silenced.

"These arguments have been so buttressed with solid and authoritative facts, and Dr. Henry's logic has been so convincing, and his eloquence and power so intense, that it has carried the truth home with irresistible force to the hearts and consciences of hundreds. And never have we heard the cause of temperance presented on such high moral and religious grounds. He has placed it on the high pedestal of Christian duty and Christian life, he has appealed to all that is loftiest in men and women. Work done in this spirit cannot be estimated by earthly standards nor tabulated by outward and tangible signs, but it is there, and remains. I have the authority of many more experienced in temperance work in Aberdeen than myself for saying that this has been the most successful temperance mission they have ever known. We thank Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones for coming here. I think it is my duty publicly, on behalf of the United Temperance Committee who arranged this mission, to express our great satisfaction at the way Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones have conducted it, and our gratitude to God for the results accomplished."

Mr. M. Edwards (secretary) also sends an interesting account of the mission. "At the end of last year the directors of the Aberdeen Temperance Society were fortunate in securing the services of Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones for a fortnight's mission. They at once asked the co-operation of the other eight organizations in the 'granite city.'" After enumerating the various gatherings in connection with the mission, Mr. Edwards says :—"We have never had such able, eloquent, and effective advocacy of our question, and lasting good must have been done."

DUNDEE.

The mission in Dundee began on Saturday last. The Dundee Advertiser says :—"The success of his former visit to the city ensured Dr. Henry a warm welcome on his return, but there were grounds for apprehension that the long series of evangelistic meetings which had just closed would prejudicially affect the attendance. The large crowds which filled the Kinnaird Hall, however, dispelled these fears, and the enthusiastic reception accorded him augurs well for his subsequent meetings. Dr. Henry has come to the city under the auspices of the Dundee Gospel Temperance Union, and on Saturday evening Bailie Martin, the president of that organization, occupied the chair."

On Sabbath evening "Dr. Henry, in his address, dealt with the damage wrought by drink. He said it went into the home with poverty, pauperism, cruelty, neglect, and brutality. It destroyed family life. Not only did it affect the family, but the drunken home and the drunken citizen became the centre of corrupting influence, affecting the neighbourhood, the Church, and the community, till commerce and industry were threatened, good citizenship debauched, and the whole of organized society in every sense was assailed. They had only to take a walk up Overgate to find tragedy enough and hell enough to convert the most stubborn of men, if he was willing to be converted. The Bible said that no drunkard would inherit the Kingdom of God. That ought to be enough to strike terror into every Christian heart, and to inspire all with enthusiasm for that great work. In the course of the meetings Mr. T. Armon Jones sang a number of solos, which were highly appreciated, while a large choir conducted by Mr. R. C. Robertson led the praise."

A correspondent writes of the Sabbath meetings : "In the afternoon at least 2,000 were present, and in the evening all standing room was taken and many were turned away. Up till Sabbath night 676 new pledges were taken, and a profound spiritual impression was made."

Farewell to Mr. W. B. Sloan.

AT Exeter Hall, on Monday evening, a large gathering of friends of foreign mission work assembled to bid God-speed to Mr. Walter B. Sloan, who is about to visit China. Mr. Theodore Howard occupied the chair, and in the course of a few fitting words asked that prayer should be made to God to open up the way of His servant in the East, according to His will and purpose. Mr. Sloan was going out to confer with the brethren, and was looking to God for grace which shall enable him to be a refreshment to the missionaries to whom he will minister. The chairman assured Mr. Sloan of the love and sympathy of the friends and well-wishers assembled, and went on to urge, in searching terms, the need for sharing individually the burden of giving the Gospel to those who are without it.

Rev. J. J. Luce spoke feelingly of the object of the meeting, and appreciatively of the services of the one to whom they were saying good-bye for a time. Turning to Col. iv. 7, he likened Mr. Sloan to Tychicus, who was "a beloved brother and faithful servant of the Lord." He goes to minister to those who are crying to God for a fuller manifestation of the Spirit's power, hoping to be a comfort, help, and support to those who are in the forefront of the battle.

Directing attention to 2 Cor. i. 11, "Ye also helping together by prayer," Rev. S. A. McCracken said there was a great need for those who had met together, as the people of God, to bear some of the burden which lay on the heart of their friend, and was urging him to make the sacrifice of leaving loved ones in order to visit China. He prayed that they might hear the groanings of the fallen humanity of that vast country. If they would plead powerfully with God on behalf of Mr. Sloan, they must have confidence in Him and know that He was ordering the steps of the one who, in a few days, would be leaving them.

Having acknowledged the hearty expressions of goodwill represented by the gathering, Mr. Sloan spoke of the assurance which had been given him by the Holy Spirit's leading that it was God's time for him to undertake the tour he was now contemplating. He recalled previous visits to China in 1891 and 1900, and the greatly changed circumstances under which mission work is now carried on. While they have not been able to fill up all the vacancies caused by the Boxer rising, the C.I.M. now has 190 stations and 763 missionaries. He was hoping to be able to give attention to many matters of administration which needed to be considered, and trusted that in some humble way he might be the means of helping those who needed encouragement and cheer. The cry of the missionaries is not for more organization, but for a fuller manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power in their midst. Rev. C. G. Moore and Dr. Howard Taylor followed, expressing much hopefulness of the outcome of Mr. Sloan's tour.

Obituary.

MR. THOMAS LIVINGSTONE-LEARMOUTH.

THE home-call to the presence of the Father has come to Mr. Thomas Livingstone-Learmouth, of Parkhall, at the ripe age of eighty-five years. He was well known throughout Stirlingshire and other districts as a philanthropist, and as one who waited for the Kingdom of God. He and his wife were among the earliest influential supporters of the Salvation Army in Scotland, a corps of which was, through his instrumentality, established at a village near his home, over twenty years ago.

Parkhall is dear to many for the deepening of spiritual life Conventions held there, which were largely attended, and were a means of rich blessing. Mr. Livingstone-Learmouth was a native of Edinburgh, and purchased the Parkhall estate thirty years ago.

MRS. BOOTH-TUCKER.

The sad intelligence reached London last Thursday that Mrs. Booth-Tucker had died early on that day at Marcelline, Missouri, U.S.A. It appears that she was injured in an accident on the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fé line at Dean Lake, Missouri, and died in the relief train which was sent to the scene, without regaining consciousness. Death was due to a fractured skull and internal injuries. She was to have met her husband, Commander Booth-Tucker, at Chicago.

Emma Moss Booth was the second daughter of General Booth. Formerly she was head of the Salvation Army Women's Training Home at Clapton. On her marriage to Commander Tucker, then in charge of the work in India, she proceeded to that country, where she travelled much and conducted a great number of meetings with much acceptance. Later, she and her husband were appointed to the United States.

In the course of a message to Salvationists, General Booth says :—"I am suddenly prostrated with grief in the presence of what appears at the moment to be an indescribable calamity and an unfathomable mystery. I can only look up and say to my Heavenly Father, 'Thy will be done.' My daughter was, after her mother, first among the many noble and consecrated women I have been permitted to know during fifty years of public life. Her loss is irreparable. But so much the more need for me, for you, for us all, to go on with our work for God and the blessing of our fellow-men. This, however my heart may bleed, is my purpose so long as He is pleased to prolong my life. The blow will fall with intense severity upon Commander Booth-Tucker and on my officers and soldiers in America, for whom my daughter has fought and toiled so long. In the midst of my own sorrow, my heart goes up to God in their behalf."

Quiet Day at Eccleston Hall.—A Quiet Day was held last Friday at Eccleston Hall, S.W., on the invitation of Lord Radstock. The attendance was not large, perhaps affected by the Bayswater Convention, but the tone was high. We get close to God, and therefore closer to one another, at these smaller meetings, which become real conferences open to all present, and to which many if not all contribute. We should be glad to hear that meetings of this kind became general. No special leaders or speakers are necessary—the more conversational the gatherings are the better.

AMONG THE . . .

Opium Cultivators of Behar.

HERE at Siwan, on the frontier of heathenism, we are but a small company of feeble folk; but, thank God, we are in touch with the armies of the Great King.

Our little town passed through another cruel ordeal of plague in the early months of this year. Not only in the town, but in the surrounding villages, the mortality was terrible, and our hearts were heavy, for we could not stay the reign of death. While plague was stalking unchallenged through the land, we turned to the 91st Psalm, and understood it as we had never done before. Our School did not escape, one of the healthiest boys being smitten down, and dead ere we had time to realize what had happened. The awful and increasing death-rate from plague is one of the most pressing problems in India. In 1902 no less than 577,000 people died from that cause alone, and undoubtedly that number will be exceeded this year. The Indian as we find him here is very apathetic in the presence of death. Plague breaks out and carries off one of his loved ones, but unless the victim is a favourite son, the days of mourning are soon ended. It is fate, he says, as he resumes his toil again.

Siwan is the centre of a large opium-growing district. There is a government warehouse, and two resident European Opium Superintendents here. Once a year, generally during March and April, the cultivators, who are the tenant farmers or peasants of Saran, come into Siwan at the rate of from two to three thousands a day, to have their opium weighed, valued, and paid for. They usually camp in the outskirts of the town, and remain for a period of three days. It was my privilege to preach twice daily in one or other of these encampments, and never in all my travels have I found such good-natured and attentive listeners, as amongst these simple villagers. They heard the word gladly, and many of them for the first time.

IN A MANGO GROVE.

Suppose you visit an encampment with me, selecting one in a large Mango Grove, so near the Mission House, that the sound of its busy life breaks continually on our ears. Starting out in the early morning, a short walk brings us to the scene. Your opium-cultivator rises with the dawn, so is sure to be prepared. The first thing that strikes you is the absence of women about the camp—it is a purely masculine concern. Further, you note that the opium traveller apparently dislikes encumbrances; he brings a brass drinking pot, a cooking basin; an old piece of cloth, a walking stick, and the inevitable "hookah" (pipe)—only these and nothing more. Mother earth provides him with a bed, and he does not even use a stone for his pillow. Happy primitive Indian brother, could we but wander as unencumbered! Our arrival in the Mango Grove is sufficient to ensure an audience, since the Sahib is ever a source of attraction to the unlettered Indian villager. Selecting the shade of a convenient tree, we take a stand while the people crowd round. At first, everybody invites everybody to sit down, and there is a general appeal for silence. Things, however, gradually right themselves, a ring is formed, the inner circle of which sit down in that peculiar Indian fashion, at once the admiration and despair of Europeans. As we view the crowd serious thoughts possess us. It is an interesting toil-stained, smallpox-marked audience of old and young men: some listen with a smile of derision, but the majority are apparently eager to catch some word that will help them in life's rough battle. Admitted that their horizon is circumscribed, their ambition unawakened, their soul kept in the dark, these men are the offspring of God, meant for nobler things than mere considerations of food and money. Face to face with them how grateful we are that we have a gospel of hope to proclaim. For such an occasion, and such an audience, there is but one message—even that gospel which is the power of God unto salvation. It is not a time for theological distinctions or grammatical niceties, we must speak from the heart concerning sin and salvation, oppressed with the feeling that we may never have such an opportunity again. They listen well, these peasants, as we tell of One Mighty to save. They may not understand much, for our speech is still uncertain, and they view sin and salvation from other standpoints than ours, but if we set them thinking we do much. Preaching thus, how often have I thanked God for the Gospel. Were I called to preach science or politics to them, I would soon tire of the business, and so would they I fancy. But who ever tires of the Gospel? The more I preach it, even in imperfect Hindi, the more I want to give the message again and again.

BOOK-SELLING INCIDENTS.

"The seed is the word," the Master said, and it is our duty to scatter the seed by every means in our power. Realising that, after all, our preaching is but imperfect sowing, we do our utmost to get the people to buy Christian literature. Let it be said to the credit of Bible and Tract Societies that we are able to offer the New Testament in Hindi for sale at 2d. and Gospels at ½d.! In addition to these we have an unending supply of Christian booklets, ranging in price from the widow's mite to one penny. It is our custom to offer these books for sale at our meetings, and although only a small percentage of the people can read, the gospels are in great demand. During the time of the opium invasion especially, our colporteur does good business. In his manner of buying books the Indian shows many characteristics. He invariably wants to bargain, since to him it seems incredible that we should ask the proper price. Again, quantity rather than quality appeals to him: finding a large book at a small price he pays cheerfully, yea, even triumphantly! Colour is another important factor. A Gospel dressed in "hodden grey" has no charms, but the same gospel arrayed in brilliant red or blue at once arrests attention, and commands a purchaser. Hymn books are greatly in demand. As a rule honesty prevails, but occasionally a customer will depart omitting to tender the price of a book he has appropriated. One afternoon while Jonas and myself were conducting a Service among the opium people, some enterprising, but unknown villager made off with a twopenny Testament, and we saw it no more. Being as it happened the most expensive book in our collection that day, my old friend was greatly perturbed over its disappearance, and at all succeeding meetings the stolen Testament formed the theme of many a denunciation of sin. Still, it is comforting to know that a Testament is rather a risky thing to steal, since it may bring repentance in its train. We are often asked to explain the meaning of the books we seek to sell, and the task is by no means easy. A man buying a Gospel, for instance, will open it at a most unexpected place, and invite you to explain the doctrine. It may happen to be the Sermon on the Mount, or the story of the Gardarene and the Swine! Never did I realize my limitations so much as when a guileless villager asked me to explain the "Parable of the Talents." But in the Bible all roads lead to the Cross, and so, though at first embarassment attends us, we are always able ultimately to turn the conversation to the Saviour. Thus we seek to sow the good seed of the Kingdom, resting on the Divine assurance that "My word shall not return unto me void."

SOME OF OUR CALLERS.

Believing with the wise man, that if we are to have friends, we must show ourselves friendly, we do our best to get into touch with the life of the town. We make a point of being at home to all who call on us, and the open door is widely taken advantage of. One of our most regular visitors is a young man with a large head and an equally big heart whom we call the "Pilgrim." Poor fellow, he is subject to epileptic fits, an affliction which debars him from holding any responsible position, and casts him on the generosity of a kind, though elder brother. But our friend is not without ambition. He is determined to translate the "Pilgrim's Progress" into Hindi, an undertaking for which he supplicates my help; further he is moved to become a poet, and every now and again produces a poem in our honour, which we graciously accept; he plays a good game at chess, too, and is altogether a most interesting young man, for whom, because of his infirmity, we entertain a deep sympathy. He talks freely on the great theme of salvation, and if religion is construed in terms of conduct, our epileptic friend stands a good chance of Heaven. For him to confess Christ openly would mean not only excommunication, but beggary. He is not made of the stuff from which martyrs spring, and so he remains in the fold of his old faith, nominally a Hindu, but at heart a Christian. Many a preacher of holiness, myself included, could do with his winsome disposition. Another visitor, of a different sort, is an educated Brahmin, who is also a young man, a failed B.A., and as proud as Lucifer. He speaks English fluently, and has read widely, especially rationalistic literature. Frankly and bitterly opposed to Christianity, he will argue on the subject from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same. He calmly tells me that Christianity is a delusion; that God is something inherent in matter, and that matter itself is eternal. Education has undermined his faith in many of the doctrines and customs of Hinduism. He admits and deplores the evils of Caste, as well he may, since on account of its influence he was prevented from going to England to study as he desired, but he glories in the splendid past of India, and tells me that primitive Hinduism contains all that we know under the name of Science to-day. His ideal is apparently a reformed Hinduism. Although antagonistic to Christianity he sends his boy—as sharp a little chap as you will meet in a day's journey—to our Mission School, and also presents us with a basket of fruit occasionally.

Another interesting caller, who has lately disappeared, was a Sadhu, or "holy man." Not the sort of holy man you depict in your imagination.

My brief residence in India has pretty well shattered the fair ideal I once had of an Indian Fakir. As I find him he is an undisguised, unblushing beggar. This friend had a well-fed look, and his whole appearance seemed to indicate prosperity, and an adherence to the rules of Sandow. He looked like an Indian "beef-eater!" His religious exercises seemed to consist in reciting verses from the sacred books, and these he performed with profound satisfaction to himself, if not with edification to his hearers. Talking of Fakirs reminds me of one cheerful pilgrim I met, who was evidently an Imperialist, for he said, "God is Lord above, and the Sahib is Lord below!"

A FORWARD STEP.

We hope soon to open another Mission Station at Champatia (in Champaran), with a population of from three to four thousand, and the centre of a densely populated district. Our Directors have sanctioned this forward movement, and we only await now the coming of the wherewithal—a little matter of £300—in order to begin building operations. It means the setting of a light in a dark place—a light which we trust will attract rather than warn. Will you help us in this?

Slacken not in prayer, for the need increases, and the battle must be pushed even to the gate.

JOHN Z. HODGE.

"Regions Beyond" Missionary Union, Siwan, Saran, North India.

May we earnestly commend to the Readers of "The Christian" URGENT NEED mentioned in the closing paragraph of Mr. Hodge's letter. A warm-hearted friend of Missions residing at Champatia has given the ground on which to erect a simple Mission House, and it is absolutely necessary that these operations should be rapidly pressed forward during the cold season, which is now commencing in India, otherwise a delay of twelve months will occur.

We desire to send an instalment of at least £100 to our Missionaries by next mail, in order that they may purchase the necessary bricks and commence building. We cannot, however, do this from our general funds (WHICH JUST NOW ARE SADLY NEEDING REPLENISHMENT), but we feel that we have only to make this need known and the money will be forthcoming in order that the planting of the Gospel standard in another dark spot may not be delayed.

Gifts, small or great, will be thankfully received and acknowledged if transmitted to the office of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union, Harley House, Bow, London, E., marked specially "Champatia Station," or may be sent through the Editor of "The Christian."

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Rev. John McNeill at Portsmouth.

SECOND WEEK.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

On Sunday afternoon Mr. McNeill got back to the Town Hall, which is at the centre of things, and in itself a huge attraction for a Gospel meeting. It is, I suppose, one of the finest and handsomest halls in the provinces. Mr. McNeill does not spare himself. On Sunday he preached three times to crowded audiences; in the morning at Immanuel Church and in the afternoon and evening at the Town Hall. The afternoon meeting was for men only. In the evening the hall was crowded long before the hour of commencing, and hundreds were turned away. Taking as his subject the story of "The Man Sick of the Palsy," he gave an eloquent address on faith, the faith that brings one into contact with Christ for blessing to one's own soul, and the faith that works for blessing on the souls of others, the faith that works by love.

On Tuesday, in spite of the gale and a downpour of rain, a great crowd, including people of every class of the community, listened with rapt attention to an address on God's choice of David as King of Israel. It was a true and timely message, with its wholesome lessons for our modern life.

The best meeting of all this week was perhaps the open-air meeting for dockyardmen at the Unicorn gate, in the dinner hour on Thursday. Over 2,000 men stood solid while the preacher dealt with the great truths of sin and salvation. And in conversation with some of the men I found that I could endorse what Mr. McNeill affirmed, that the talk in the dockyard, that enormous hive of workers, has been less of betting and fiscal policy and more about preaching, which is a good thing and a hopeful sign At the afternoon service in the Buckland Congregational Church it was difficult to find seating accommodation for all the people. Day by day the attendance has steadily gone up from 400 to 1,000. and the general opinion among the ministers is that if the mission could go on another week there is not a church in Portsmouth which would anything like seat the afternoon audience.

The ministers of the town have cordially supported the mission throughout, while the Executive Committee of the Free Church Council have strongly urged Mr. McNeill to extend his stay over Sunday, which he has readily agreed to do. So the end is not yet.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Taunton.

A remarkable mission has just been closed by Mrs. Baeyertz in our town. Taunton has seen many missions at various times, but this one has been unique by its peculiar circumstances. Mrs. Baeyertz came to Taunton unheralded and unknown (invited by a lady, who, reading of her from time to time in The Christian, attended her mission in Norwich to hear and see for herself). Yet from the very first the presence and power of God were so powerfully felt in the meetings that it was soon found that the Temperance Hall was far too small for the crowds who flocked to hear the messages of God from her lips. The Temple Chapel, estimated to hold 2,000, was, therefore, lent for the remaining meetings.

The Bible readings were, to some, a source of strength and encouragement, while to others, the power of the Word in their hearts and consciences revealed to them their low spiritual condition. The week-night meetings were crowded. The advertised time for the last meeting, Monday night, was 8 p.m., but by 6.30 people had begun to gather, and long before the time to begin the meeting, the hall was packed, large numbers standing throughout the whole service, and scores being turned away from the doors. It is sufficient to say that God Himself was dealing with His own people, and when the closing sentence was asked, "Lovest thou Me more than these?" the heart of that vast audience was bowed as one, and many went away, as we have since heard, to take up the work for God on a new plane of living altogether.

The after-meetings were a feature of the mission, being conducted on (to us) new lines. Anxious ones were invited into a separate room, but there was no personal dealing unless specially requested. Each person was provided with a "marked" Testament, and after verses bearing on salvation had been read aloud by Mrs. Baeyertz, and brought forcibly to the minds of the inquirers, they were asked to speak silently to God on the matter, thus bringing the soul into direct contact with God, and leaving Him to do His own work with His own Word. The result more than satisfied those who were inclined to doubt this new method of dealing with souls. Scores who came into the room, looking sad and sorrowful, left with bright, rejoicing faces, only to return the following evening to lead some friend into similar blessing.

Rev. E. S. Ufford, the singing pilgrim, author of "Throw Out the Life-Line," who is on his way round the world, gave addresses recently at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth Road. His methods are most interesting. He sings several original solos, and exhibits models of the U.S. life-saving apparatus to illustrate his sermons, which those who were privileged to hear and see would not soon forget. D. M. Cameron.

A mission has been conducted at Motherwell for two weeks by our brother, Mr. A. Y. McGregor, at the Railway Mission. The work had been in difficulties for some time past from the want of a hall, the old place having been taken over by the proprietor. But, a place in a suitable locality having been secured, a definite start has again been made with blessed results to souls. As the meetings went on the interest grew, and, though the ground is hard, we trust a permanent impression has been made. J. M.

The Beverley Total Abstinence Society commenced the winter's campaign in the Temperance Hall with a seven days' Gospel Temperance Mission. Mr. Bob Johnson, the converted "Christy Minstrel," was the missioner. The meetings grew in interest, and night by night the hall was crowded; many were glad to stand in the vestibule, or sit on the platform steps, and on the Sunday night the place was far too small. The missioner took for his subject "Sowing and Reaping," many being moved to tears. R. L.

Mr. J. B. Wookey has completed a nine days' mission at the Highbury Vale Mission, N., connected with Highbury Quadrant Church. The addresses were principally delivered to Christians, the desire being to quicken the life of believers; but many powerful appeals were made to the indifferent and undecided. The services were characterized by simplicity and earnestness, and by the absence of anything of a sensational nature; and the illustrations drawn from the speaker's wide experience in Christian work were telling and attractive.

J. J. O.

The twelve-days' mission just held by Mr. Frank Weaver in the Primitive Methodist Church at Doncaster, was a means of blessing. The congregations steadily grew until, on the concluding Sunday night, the building, which seats 1,200 people, was packed to the doors. On Thursday Mr. Weaver related the life story of his father. During the mission a number of hearers, especially young men, were led to Christ. With reference to the report which appeared last week of Mr. Weaver's mission at Houghton-le-Spring, the effort put forth on the last night was for the Aged Miners' Homes (not "Nurses' Homes" as stated).

Mr. William Hill, of Edinburgh, has been addressing a series of special services in the Wesleyan Church at Ballymoney, co. Antrim, with much blessing. On the opening Sabbath he preached in the Second Presbyterian Church at noon to a large and interested congregation, and the same day subsequently addressed other three services. During the week the Word was with power, and the attendances increased nightly in spite of very inclement weather. There was a marked sense of God's presence in the meetings, and in a few nights a break came, and a number have clearly decided for Christ, while others have evidently been brought under conviction of sin. J. Y.

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr has been conducting a united ten-days' mission in the Co-operative Hall, Stanley, co. Durham, for the Stanley and District Free Church Council. Splendid audiences gathered each evening. Forty adults professed conversion on the first Sunday afternoon. A children's service was held, and thirty-nine entered the inquiry rooms. As a result of the temperance lecture on "The Down Line," 148 total abstinence pledges were signed.

W. P.

Special services have been held in connection with the Sunday-school at Brockley Baptist Chapel, London, S.E. (Pastor Rev. John Lewis). Mr. William Olney, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, was the missioner, and he was accompanied by Mr. F. Spencer Johnson, whose singing added greatly to the interest of the gatherings. There were two meetings on each week-night—at 6.45 for young people, and at 8 o'clock for senior scholars and adults. Over fifty professed decision for Christ.

Mr. Henry Collins of the Evangelization Society, has held a fifteen days' mission at Cox Green Mills, Bolton. This is the twentieth mission which this evangelist has conducted here. It was a very effective one, both as regards the attendances and spiritual blessing. The evangelist spent his mornings and afternoons in house-to-house visiting, and in calling upon the sick. Altogether the neighbourhood was thoroughly roused. The work is undenominational, and the meetings are held in a large warehouse in the mill, which will hold an audience of 500 persons on occasions. Many hundreds, perhaps, have been born into the new life in Christ Jesus in this mission room. Many, also, have been successfully prepared here to take up positions in the ministry of the Gospel at home, and even abroad. In spite of opposition, men and women thirsting for Gospel truth came to the mission and found peace with God. At the concluding meeting, Mr. John Naughton, who occupied the chair, spoke strongly in defence of evangelistic mission work. N.

Next Week. Our next issue will include a Literary Supplement, in which account will be rendered of some of the books of the season, one feature being a selection of extracts from the writings of Christian authors of our day.

The Church and the Unemployed. The resolution taken at the Conference of Free Churches in the City Temple on Thursday last, relative to the question of the unemployed, was both bold and practical. It was resolved to create a fund for the purchase of waste land, upon which the genuine unemployed (as distinguished from loafers) might be set to work. Obviously the extent of such a scheme must be very limited, but the principle of finding work for men who are willing to do it is sound. Sir John Gorst declared for local authorities, rather than for a central authority, to settle this question. Mr. Percy Alden urged the appointment of a Minister of Industry, with a central department to deal with the matter. It seems to us that the two things are needed. Much can be done locally, but much can only be done centrally. The question of the unemployed is very acute, and it must be seriously faced.

Tammany Again. The news that Tammany has once more become the dominant influence in New York, is an unpleasant shock to all friends of righteousness. At the last elections its power was broken for the time—we had hoped for ever—but now it has been returned stronger than ever. To speak with much plainness, this means that New York dismisses a government which, during three years or more, has stood for purity in public life, in favour of an organization whose reputation for corruption and evil government is world-wide. It is simply incomprehensible. What have the decent citizens been doing with their votes? What have the churches been doing? There must have been either the exercise of a remarkable amount of bribery and bad influence to secure this result, or a lamentable degree of apathy on the part of Christians. It is a grim spectacle. There is a contagion about this kind of thing which spreads rapidly, and other places become debauched by the example.

The Lesson for Ourselves. We must not fail to learn the lesson this disaster teaches. We should not be surprised to learn that the reverse is partly due to over-confidence on the part of those who, for three years, have governed New York in the interests of righteousness. They probably relied too much upon their old success, and so were caught unawares. Good people are not always wise; too often they underestimate the cunning and the vigilant wickedness of the enemy. We need to remember that the enemy never sleeps. Mr. Meyer, who has just been returned on the Borough Council for Lambeth, speaks of the desperate fight made by the publicans to prevent his success. They will fight every man who, in the name of God, sets himself to seek the weal of the people. It is only by thorough preparation that a victory is possible.

Truth in Public Speech. It is very regrettable that so much virulence is introduced into the public discussion of those questions which are uppermost in the public mind just now. All dignity is sacrificed when men descend to petty personalities, and convert the forum into a wrestling ring. Above all things, there is needed dignified calmness and truthfulness in discussing problems which directly affect the food of an entire people. A study of rival prints and of rival orations reveals the very unpleasant fact that there is, too frequently, an absence both of dignity and of truthfulness. Statements of supposed fact are made with the greatest assurance one day, and upon the next day they are alleged to be perversions of fact. Even figures from Blue Books are made by partizans to tell two different stories. This is certainly not the temper in which serious discussion should be undertaken; and unless it is altered, the ultimate result in practice will be fatal to the country. It is a great evil that partizanship is carried to the length of forgetting the demands of truth and justice.

"Seven Heroic Children." By preparing a new and much-improved edition of the story of the terrible disaster at Darjeeling, in 1899, to the children of Rev. D. H. Lee, Mrs. R. C. Morgan has provided the Church of God with a lasting memorial of missionary faith and consecration. The biographical chapters of Seven Heroic Children (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott) are mainly in the words of the stricken mother, and the broad facts were already known to not a few through the edition published in India; but the narrative as now presented in connected form owes much to the sympathetic pen of the editor. The book is truly the record of "a great sorrow and a great victory," which will earn for itself an honoured place among literature useful in the education of believers to their great missionary privilege. The attractiveness of the volume is further enhanced by a touching poem by Mrs. Morgan—"Ushered into Paradise"—and a series of excellent photographs.

Mrs. Spurgeon's Book and Pastors' Aid Funds. Many of our readers will learn with pleasure that steps have been taken for the continuance of the beneficent work so long carried on by the late Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon in connection with her "Book Fund," and to a less extent—though also acknowledged with heartfelt gratitude wherever its influence was felt—with the "Pastors' Aid Fund." It is desired that correspondence in connection with these agencies should be addressed to Miss Thorne, Westwood, Beulah Hill, Upper Norwood, London, S.E.

The Positive Gospel. Dr. Forsyth has done well to expand the notes of his Bournemouth address on the "Positive Gospel," and to print them in extenso. They are worthy of a more permanent form than that in which they first appeared. This penetration to the very heart of things is courageous and supremely necessary. The crux of contemporary theology is revealed in these sentences:

> A positive Gospel is, first and foremost, authoritative — descending out of heaven from God, and not rising to heaven from man. . . . . The prevailing tone, so far as a preacher can measure it, is different. It is evolutionary rather than revelational, ideal rather than historic. . . . . It dwells in the possibilities of human nature set free by the touch of God in Christ, rather than upon a new creation in Christ. It is more conscious of the inner resources now set free than of the totally new life given in a new creation. It fails in power. The pulpit has become literary, interesting, soothing, and engaging; only not converting, breaking, commanding.

These are very plain words, but they admirably focus the actual situation. A choice must be made, and it is well when Christian scholars force the issue. Dr. Forsyth asks, in the light of all this, whether churches deserve to live. They do not, as Christian churches, unless they proclaim the positive Gospel. There is no raison d'être for them apart from this.

The Real Evolution. Expressing himself in regard to evolution, the Bishop of London (according to Mr. Raymond Blathwayt in The Quiver) said:—

> Whatever other kind of evolution may be true or not, this at least is true: "Now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is" (1 John iii. 2).

This truly, as the bishop added, is "enough to satisfy the most ambitious."

A Trustful Outlook. Mr. D. S. Cairns, dealing, in the first of a series of papers in the Contemporary Review, with the subject of "Christianity in the Modern World," is able to take a very hopeful view of the position of the Church of Christ in face of the general and bitter attack upon the faith which has characterized the close of the last century and the opening of this. He thinks—and thoughtful readers will agree with him—that at no period in the long story of Christianity, has the faith delivered to the saints been subjected to a greater intellectual strain; for, brilliant and confident as was the Rationalistic attack of the 18th century, it was not so powerful as the negative thinking of this age. Mr. Cairns finds many evidences that the present movement is drawing to a close, and that ultimately Christianity will emerge the stronger from the atmosphere of thought dominated by intellectual forces hostile to faith. The believers of the 18th century lived through, and outlived, the combined assault of their day, as the Christians of the present day will outlive the "higher criticism" and the practical atheism which are now so much to the fore.

The Revelation of the Past. The Christian world has followed with keen interest the career of Professor Hilprecht, and his remarkable discoveries in the East. Through him the science of archæology has received a great impetus, and thus the truth of the Bible has received abundant confirmation. Already many conclusions of literary critics have been entirely overturned by the substantial revelation of facts written upon Babylonian and Assyrian bricks, dug up after a burial of 4,000 years. The most recent discoveries of brick libraries, in the oldest cities known to us, seem likely to overthrow some of the favourite hypotheses of agnostic philosophers, created in order to account for man. They have assumed that man has emerged from savagery, and that the farther back we penetrate the wilder he will appear to be. Of course, this is mere assumption, devoid of all historic proof. Professor Hilprecht's most recent discoveries, however, reveal a tendency the exact contrary of all this, and show us in one of the earliest cities known a wonderfully developed science and civilization. We can afford to hold our souls in peace. The past is slowly yielding up its record, and when its last word is spoken, it will be found to confirm and not to contradict the account of man which the Bible gives.

Invasion of Monks. Too much publicity cannot be given to the settlement of great numbers of Roman Catholic monks in this country; and we welcome a series of papers on the subject begun in the Sunday at Home by Mr. David Williamson. As we have shown, the gravest danger in the matter lies in the apathy or ignorance of even the Christian public to the real meaning of the facts with which we are face to face. We trust that no stone will be left unturned until public opinion is aroused to take steps for the prevention in Great Britain of the social and political evils on account of which the orders are being expelled from their continental monasteries and convents.

Rome and Heretics. In the course of a newspaper discussion on the consecration oath administered to Roman Catholic Bishops, it has been explained that the clause—"heretics, schismatics, and rebels against our Lord the Pope, I will persecute and attack to the utmost of my power," is no longer in use in the British dominions. Alongside the explanation, however, has come the official declaration that the change was made a good while ago simply as "a measure of goodwill and to preclude misconceptions," for "it is quite certain that the alteration made in the form of the oath altered in no respect the obligations of the Bishops, nor was it due in any way to any change or modification of the Church's attitude towards what she holds to be heresy and schism." This admission of Monsignor Moyes is but an echo of the words of Pius the Ninth, in his Apostolic letter of September 29, 1850, when he maintained, the special form of oath notwithstanding, that such Bishops were "equally bound by the obligations which bind the other Archbishops and Bishops, according to the same common discipline of the Catholic Church." Whence it appears that the old persecuting policy is consistently defended, but that, "as a measure of goodwill and to preclude misconceptions," the evil spirit is curtained from public gaze. We may well believe that, should time and opportunity permit, Romish Bishops in British dominions, equally with others, would show themselves empowered to "persecute and attack heretics, schismatics, and rebels against our Lord the Pope."

Light from Japan. In presence of the bitter attacks which are being made in these islands against Christianity and its influences, it is gratifying to find that in the Far East thinkers and observers are uniting in their testimony to the life-giving power of the religion of Christ, not only as regards the individual but the nation and the State also. Speaking recently at a meeting at Tokyo, an ex-Cabinet Minister said:—

> I firmly believe we must have religion as the basis of our national and personal welfare. No matter how large an army or navy we may have, unless we have righteousness as the foundation of our national existence we shall fall short of the highest success. I do not hesitate to say that we must rely upon religion for our highest welfare, and when I look about to see what we may best rely upon, I am convinced the religion of Christ is the one.

The Ex-Premier, too, has recently said in regard to the Bible:—

> As you read, you may think it antiquated. The words may so appear, but the life which it holds up to admiration will never be out of date, however the world may progress. Live and preach that life, and you will supply to the nation just what it needs.

Speaking to the Heart. Among the various memoranda of the late Mr. Gladstone, of which we owe the knowledge to Mr. Morley's "Biography," there is one which is of especial interest at present, in the light of the late religious census. When the late great statesman first visited Italy, he was struck with the difference between Italian and English preaching, and he makes this note of it:—

> The mind of the English preacher, or reader of sermons, however impressive, is fixed mainly upon his composition; that of the Italian upon his hearers. The action in the one case is warm, living, direct, immediate, from heart to heart; in the other, it is transfused through a medium comparatively torpid. The first is surely far superior to the second in truth and reality. The preacher bears an awful message.

This criticism, written in 1839, applies less universally to-day than it did at that time, when men studied style as the chief thing. Since then, happily, and largely since Spurgeon's day, a heart to heart speech has come into existence, and this characterises the best Evangelical preaching to-day. But to many Mr. Gladstone's criticism still applies. We could wish that the students in colleges, who frequently aim too exclusively at the "literary," might learn the secret of speaking to the heart. It requires a better education and more true dignity to speak in this way than it does to read sermons. And this is, of course, quite apart from spiritual results.

Cistern or Spring. The radical difference between a human character formed by the power of the Lord Jesus Christ, and one formed in any other manner, is like that which we perceive between a cistern and a spring. Our Lord's own illustration is that of the springing well: "The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life." The man in union with Christ is at the source of all life, and when that union is unimpaired, there is a perpetual freshness of life, and fertility comparable to that of a living spring of water. But in others, who reject the claims of Christ, there often appears to be a spontaneous flow of moral life. It is their frequent boast that their morals are equal to those of the redeemed person. They are mistaken—grievously mistaken. Their outflow is not from a living spring, but from "a cistern of carefully collected rain water"—as an old writer phrases it. Men forget this. The moralist who rejects Christ ignores the fact that he has lived in a Christian atmosphere from infancy, and that the morality which he boasts is Christian. It is real morality, in its outward effect; but in its source it is wholly different from vital Christian morality. His is the outflow of the cistern. The Christian's is the welling up of the spring. The difference between the two is essential.

THE UNVEILING.

THE FIFTH TRUMPET.—IV.

"HISTORY repeats itself." The actors who make history have been the same from the beginning. The three Persons of the Godhead and the holy angels; Satan and the fallen angels; members of the human race, some of whom are saints, children of God, others children of the wicked one. On every platform and in every age the same principles and the same forces have been in action: therefore, while the circumstances have differed, the character of human life on earth, whether good or evil, has been the same.

If we consider the Letters to the Churches we trace decline from Ephesus, leaving her first love, to Laodicea, self-pleasing and self-satisfied. But all the phases of life depicted in the Letters have always existed, so that any true ministry on the basis of either Letter would have been apposite and appropriate, more or less, in any church, at any time, from John's day to our own.

In like manner there has been a downward tendency, from the day when Eve, the mother of all living, believed the lie, "eat the fruit of the forbidden tree; disobey God, and you shall be as God, knowing good and evil,"—onward to the time when the Man of Sin shall sit in the Temple of God, setting himself forth as God; and God shall send a strong delusion on them that receive not the love of the truth, that they should believe THE lie, that the creature can equal the Creator, that the Lawless One is God (2 Thess. ii.).

But the same lie has been working in the human heart from the day of the Fall. Allured by the rebel angel, who fell in attempting to usurp the throne of God, Eve made herself her own god. And every child has been born into the world with the instinctive desire to rule its own life, i.e., to make itself its God. For our body is the temple of God; but man profanes the temple by setting forth himself as God.

The history of the whole world is epitomized in the individual. For "God hath set the world [eternity, R.V.] in their heart; and His ways are 'alike, whether unto a nation or unto a man'" (Ecc. iii. 11; Job xxxiv. 29). The entire race was in the loins of Adam, and each man is an Adam. Therefore the principles and forces working in the world, are working, in various degrees, in each individual. Some yield themselves to pride and passion like Cain; others worship and obey like Abel; but the nature and possibilities of Adam are in each alike.

Therefore, if the visions of The Unveiling were true in the Past, they are true in the Present, and will be in the Future. If true in the Present, they were true in the Past, and will be in the Future. If true in the Future, they must have been in the Past, and must be in the Present. For the profound truth that "History repeats itself" is but a breviate of the repeated word of wisdom:

> That which hath been is that which shall be; and that which hath been done is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun.
> That which is hath been already; and that which is to be hath already been; and God seeketh again that which is passed away.
> Whatsoever he be, his name was given him long ago, and it is known that he is Adam (Ecc. i. 9; iii. 15; vi. 10 R.V. mar.).

The symbols under the Fifth Trumpet, as given below, are all verified in the human heart and its passions. Whatever interpretations of this chapter may be found in special events in the past or the future, each symbol must be shown to apply to such interpretation.

If any other explanations be given to any of these symbols, they must all agree together to justify the interpretation. But no other interpretation can invalidate that which is here authenticated, by the exposition from the Scripture itself, of the symbols employed; unless such exposition can be shown to be incorrect.

Prophecy has, in many cases, more than one fulfilment. "Out of Egypt have I called My Son," is fulfilled in Israel, in Jesus, and in every child of God. Similarly, innumerable instances, on a larger or smaller scale, in a nation or an individual, may be cited as fulfilling the visions before us; for "the thing that hath been, shall be."

SYMBOLS IN REVELATION IX.

A Star fallen out of Heaven. Lucifer; the angel of the bottomless pit; Abaddon, Apollyon; Satan.

The bottomless pit. The heart of man, "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked: who can know it?" (See last week's article of this series). Also Prov. xxv. 3.

The key of it. Temptation.

Smoke as the smoke of a great furnace, darkening the sun and air. Hosea (vii.) likens the heart to a baker's oven, burning as a flaming fire. As the smoke from such a furnace darkens sun and air, so does the smoke from the burning lusts in the heart. The first effect of temptation, when yielded to, is that nothing is seen clearly or in its true proportions.

Out of the smoke came locusts on the earth. The lusts evoked by temptation take definite shape, and are destructive as locusts. Cp. Joel ii. 25, with Luke xv. 13-17; Rom. i. 21-32.

Having power as the scorpions of the earth have power. (Mentioned thrice for emphasis.) As the torment of a scorpion to the flesh, so is conviction, shame, remorse, to the spirit. Every sin has its own sting (Prov. xxiii. 32).

Forbidden to hurt the grass of the earth, or any green thing, or any tree; but only men having not the seal of God. The natural locust feeds on the green things; but these scorpion-locusts torment men only.

Five months. (Mentioned twice for emphasis). Five is the number of the senses. Pusey says, on the mystic locusts in Joel ii. 9: "As the windows are to the house, so are the senses, and especially the sight, to the soul . , . In vain is the protection of God's providence or His grace, if the soul leaves the senses unguarded, to admit unchallenged sights, sounds, touches, which may take the soul prisoner . . . The arrow of sin is shot through them." The Prophets, our Lord, and ancient writers, are to the same effect.

Months. The month, like the hour, the day, the year, is a circle, and represents a process complete in itself; yet part of a larger circle, a further process (Cp. Num. xi. 19, 20; Job xxxix. 1, 2). The lusts act through the senses; and each sense, complete in itself, is also a component part of the whole. When the senses are misused, the stings of remorse torment the conscience in regard to each and all of them.

Like horses prepared for war. See the vivid description of the war-horse in Job xxxix. 19-25. Augustine says, "I threw the reins upon the neck of lust." The Apostle Peter warns that "fleshly lusts war against the soul" (1 Pet. ii. 11).

Crowns. (The word means the chaplet of victory, not the royal crown). The lusts of the flesh and the desires of the mind, conquer men of the earth, who have not the seal of God on their foreheads.

Like unto gold. The golden crown represents supreme dignity—despotic authority. Nebuchadnezzar was the head of gold; whom he would he slew or spared (Est. viii. 15; Dan. ii. 37, 38; v. 18, 19). The lusts are despots claiming absolute submission to their will.

Faces as of men. Familiar and unrestrained human intercourse. Not to save or help, but to tempt and ruin, they will speak face to face as a man speaketh with his friend (Exod. xxxiii. 11; Prov. xxvii. 19).

Hair as the hair of women. The attraction, fascination, blandishment of the woman. "The king is held captive in the tresses thereof" (S.S. vii. 5., R.V.). The lusts add to the false sweet reasonableness of the man, the false sweet seductiveness of the strange woman.

The teeth of lions. Cruel, savage, tearing, devouring. Amnon's selfish passion turned to cruel hate. The lusts tear and destroy character, family, soul, everything (Joel i. 6).

Breastplates of iron. The lusts are hard, impenitent, imperious, impervious, impenetrable to human compassion or Divine rebuke. Contrast the mother's bosom, the high priest's sympathy (Isa. lxvi. 13; Heb. v. 2).

The voice of their wings as the voice of chariots of many horses rushing into war. (The single war-horse has thus multiplied and intensified.) The energy, strength, fierceness, eagerness of the single lust increases, multiplies, intensifies into the swift and tumultuous rush of many lusts, yoked as to war-chariots rushing to the war against the soul (Joel ii. 5).

As king the Angel of the bottomless pit. The natural locusts have no king, but the lusts have as king the liar and murderer from the beginning; the Old Serpent, the Devil, and Satan.

His name, in Hebrew Abaddon, and in Greek Apollyon. Hebrew and Greek are the languages of the two great divisions of the race. The Israelites under the highest Divine culture (Isa. v.), the Gentile left to grow wild, like the vine in the wood. The name in either case of the author of the deceitful lusts of the deceitful heart is Destruction, Destroyer.

Studies in the Psalms.—II.

The First Two Nights in the Field.

By REV. J. STORJOHANN.

TWO of the finest pearls which David fetched out of the deep waters of suffering are Psalms lxiii. and iii. They are both of them morning hymns—Psalm lxiii., after a sleepless night spent in holy meditation; Psalm iii., after a safe sleep with his head resting on the hand of Jehovah (5). And still the men of Israel had pitched their camps against their king (6) while he was waiting for news from Jerusalem in the dry land of the wilderness between Jericho and the Jordan. The inward joy of Psalm xvi. reflects itself in the triumph of victory of Psalm lxiii. (5, 6, 10).

PSALM LXIII.

A Psalm of David when he was in the wilderness of Judah.

PART I.

1. Elohim, Thou art my God; early will I seek Thee: my soul thirsteth for Thee, my flesh longeth for Thee, in a dry and weary land where no water is.
2. As I have looked upon Thee in the sanctuary, to see Thy power and Thy glory.
3. (For Thy loving-kindness is better than life; my lips shall praise Thee)—
4. So will I bless Thee while I live: I will lift up my hands in Thy name.
5. My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness, and my mouth shall praise Thee with joyful lips;

PART II.

6. When I remember Thee upon my bed, and meditate on Thee in the night watches—
7. (For Thou hast been my help, and in the shadow of Thy wings will I rejoice)—
8. So my soul followeth hard after Thee: Thy right hand upholdeth me.
9. But those that seek my soul to destroy it, shall go into the lower parts of the earth.
10. He shall be given over to the power of the Word,—they be a portion for jackals. But the king shall rejoice in God:
11. Everyone that sweareth by him shall glory; for the mouth of them that speak lies shall be stopped.

The sanctuary (2) and the right hand of God (8) fill the thoughts of David in the sleepless night; the temple he has mentioned in Ps. xv., and the right hand of Jehovah (Ps. cix. 3), in which there are pleasures for evermore (Ps. xvi. 11.) The mercy and trustiness of God, which has met him in the sanctuary (xxviii. 2 and 6) will follow him throughout his whole life. It fills his soul, and his mouth sings it out. And as his thoughts rest on God (1) and his soul hangs on him (8), so the right hand of God upholds him; therefore he can exult under the shadow of His wings.

In verses 2-4 and 6-8 we find words which, to quote Stosch, in rare depth and clearness, "depict the mystery of communion with God. There is seeking and finding, holding and being upheld in wonderful penetration. The twining of the thoughts into each other exhibits to us the interaction of the Divine and the human. The help received from God proves the foundation of a longing for God, which is always renewing itself."

In his capacity of king, David can pronounce a sentence over those that seek his life; but alas! it pierces his heart like a sword when, for the second time in these Psalms, he refers to Absalom. He (Absalom) shall be given over to the power of the sword, they (his followers) be a portion for jackals; but happen what may, "The king shall rejoice in God, and every one that sweareth by him shall glory (11). It reminds us of yon leader among the Philistines, Ittai, who swore by David, "As the Lord liveth, and as my lord the king liveth, surely in what place my lord the king shall be, whether for death or life, even there also will thy servant be" (2 Sam. xv. 21). So great faith and fidelity David had not found in Israel. It gives him the courage to call himself "the king" (10), though he is an exile in his own country. In one of the darkest periods in the life of David, the Psalm is full of exulting joy.

PSALM III.

A Psalm of David, when he fled from Absalom his son.

1. Jehovah, how are mine adversaries increased! Many are they that rise up against me.
2. Many there be which say of my soul, There is no help for him in God. Selah.
3. But Thou, Jehovah, art a shield about me; my glory, and the lifter up of mine head.
4. I cry unto Jehovah with my voice, and he answereth me out of His holy hill. Selah.
5. I laid me down and slept. I awaked; for Jehovah sustaineth me.
6. I will not be afraid of ten thousands of people that have set themselves against me round about.
7. Arise, O Jehovah! Save me, my God! For Thou smitest all mine enemies upon the cheek-bone. Thou breakest the teeth of the wicked.
8. Salvation belongeth unto Jehovah: Thy blessing be upon Thy people. Selah.*

In the spirit David sees thousands rising against him (1); ten thousands of people have set themselves against him round about (6), and he hears an awful saying from the lips of many of the men of Israel: "There is no help for him in God" (2). But Jehovah protects and guards him; Jehovah hears his prayers. Has not Jehovah heard him in a wonderful way by giving him the last night's safe and refreshing sleep; and will not the same God rise and smite on the cheek-bone his enemies, who have spoken such words about him? But to Him to whom salvation belongs (8), David breathes a prayer for the misguided people, and prays for God's blessing upon it. By his intercessions the king saves his people, who seek his life. †

"Together."

John xi. 52.

Blest purpose of our God,
For this the "one Man" died;
To gather all His scattered saints
For ever to His side.

Ephes. i. 10.

In diverse companies,
The saved, in sweet accord,
Shall yet one common centre own,
Their living glorious Lord.

Acts xx. 7.

Till then, He with His saints,
By word and spirit led;
Unto one name, the name adored,
Should meet to "break the bread."

Psa. cxxxiii. 1.

How good and pleasant then,
The blessing who can tell,
That those thus met by grace should learn,
In harmony to dwell.

Phil. i. 27.

All other strife unknown,
Save striving against sin;
In serried ranks by faith and prayer,
Warring the lost to win.

1 Thess. iv. 17.

Waiting that coming day,
When all the saints shall be Caught up together with their Lord,
To dwell eternally.

Brighton. W. H.

* This method of finishing the Psalm in a single verse by a weighty conclusion very often occurs in the Davidic Psalms—for instance Psa. i., iii., v., xii.

† The German Professor Schultz regards both these Psalms as Davidic; still he understands Psa. lxiii. 11, "Everyone that sweareth by him," as referring to God; "for the Israelites did not swear by their king." But is not Ittai, who no doubt is the cause of this saying, a proof that they did so. Professor Baethgen admits that the Israelites swore by the king ("thy soul live!"); but he denies that David was in the Wilderness of Judah, fleeing from Absalom, his son. "But," says Schultz, "that this wilderness towards Jericho was called the Wilderness of Judah, cannot be doubted."

Why Miss Your Destiny?

By MARECHALE BOOTH-CLIBBORN.

IT is a glorious truth that we were created for God and for holiness. Yet we can turn aside and miss our destiny, and become sons of the devil instead of sons of God.

Men are not born atheists and mockers; belief in a higher power is innate, and we are born worshippers. We must worship; consequently we are all of us idolaters until we adore Christ.

Why do we miss our destiny? Why do we go down? Because we attach ourselves to the earth and earthly things, such as money, sensual pleasures, &c.; so grossly are we absorbed with these, that we become identified with them, and thus "joined to our idols," we forget our sublime destiny.

You can acquire tastes, appetites, and desires which were utterly foreign to your nature—nay more, which were as far removed from you in earlier years as heaven is from hell. So great may be this change, that the former life you lived appears as another existence and belongs no longer to you. Cold, hard, and cynical, you have no feelings, because your heart is dead; and the worst of all is that you are quite reconciled to this state of things. Not all at once did this take place, but gradually, little by little, day by day has it been going on. You began by ignoring God's claims on you and making light of virtue and of the sacred relationships in life; and when conscience arose to rebuke you, you smothered it, and turned a deaf ear to its cry.

To-day this inward voice has ceased to trouble you; the evil thoughts, words, or acts, which years ago would have made your breast a hell, do not even cause a qualm. So far are you changed that you can eat, sleep, and amuse yourself, in this condition. But oh, my brother, my sister, do not imagine there will be no terrible awakening!

A PAINFUL CASE.

The Rescue Home had just been opened in the continental city of X———, and I was very much disappointed over an interesting case we had tried in vain to save. She was a Roman Catholic, and for a long time by her unremitting toil, supported a mother who was a drunkard behind the scenes. For three years this young woman had been engaged to a young man—by birth a gentleman—who from the first promised marriage, but, alas! never seriously meant to keep his word, his social standing being far above hers. Repeatedly she went back on the promise she made me to leave him, but something, nay, Someone, impelled me to persevere. There was a jewel to be won for the Saviour's crown.

One evening, after another long effort, I brought her away in a cab with a lovely little boy of twelve months old. She was the first inmate of our Home, and since that night has never given me five minutes anxiety.

It is a sad story, all of which cannot be written; but the absolute trust, and the tenacious way in which the girl held on to the hope of marriage, was most pathetic. Not until almost by force I took her ring, and told her one of the hardest and bitterest things a woman can hear—that the father disowned his own child—could I shake her confidence.

BETRAYER AND BETRAYED.

The following letter, in which I have purposely sacrificed form for the sake of a literal translation, will illustrate better than any words of mine to what depths it is possible to fall. The letter was given me the evening of her flight.

"LITTLE LILLETTE,—Once again I must ask pardon for all the harm I have done you. I hope, however, that you will be strong in trouble; stronger than you have been up to the present. This will be a very great consolation to me. I owe many thanks for the resolutions that the good little Lillette made yesterday, in spite of her heart and all her feelings. Believe that I shall never forget it, and that it cost me much before deciding to break your ideal—but, as I told you, I prefer to be sincere. As long as my heart was free from other passion, I always considered you as the best friend I possessed. If I was not completely happy, it was that living without love was not to live—but you, poor little Lillette, you suffered!

"Whilst you dreamed of a simple, quiet life with me, you must understand that violent passions, riches, and a luxurious life are for me essential. In a word, our ideals are completely different, and it is a divorce of souls which I have accomplished in leaving you. Fate made us meet, and fate separates us. Don't have any ill-feeling towards me. My dream now is to create for myself quite a new life made up of goodness, of love, and above all, faithfulness in a serious affection.

"I sacrifice you, it is true; but if it were otherwise, think of the torture you would have inflicted on me. Is it not better to separate, each of us keeping a good memory of what made our union? Think also how my life is insupportable in this muddle, now that I love truly.

"You are good, Lillie; be courageous now. The sacrifice that I ask of you is enormous I know, but do it for love of me, and I will be eternally obliged to you.

"You will put all your tenderness in the little Marcel, that I shall never forget; and, above all, remember that he who loves well chastises well. Au revoir, au revoir!

"Once again pardon me, and don't suffer too much by your exile. My only hope is that Marcel will recompense you largely for all the suffering you have endured, so little merited during these long years.

"I remain, your devoted ——."

This astounding document needs no comment. But let us remember this young man is not alone; there are thousands in sumptuous drawing-rooms and hotels to-day as guilty as he. And what about the society that produces, sanctions and patronizes such characters? Surely this is what everyone who has the salvation of souls at heart, should reflect upon. Is it necessary to add that the man married into a good family—and little Lillette troubled him no further. The girl has now been for three years one of the brightest and truest Christians I know. Her letters are full of the peace of Christ.

AN INSIDIOUS SIN.

There is no sin which so destroys the faculty to believe as this sin of impurity. It also destroys hope, and drives to despair quicker than anything else. As surely as it opens the door to the lower world, it closes the door to the higher. It puts an insuperable barrier between you and the Kingdom of Heaven. It kills prayer, and while living, your soul is dead.

Do not think I allude only to open actual sin; there is an impurity of mind and spirit, which may never be transmitted further, but which is equally fatal to the soul.

True as it is that the pure in heart alone see God, so true is it that the impure in heart cannot see Him; they cannot know Him, they cannot hear Him, there is no God for them. If we will not seek God we cannot find Him, but if we seek with all our heart we shall find Him, and with Him, pardon, purity, heaven.

Signs in America.—II.

By Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

ANOTHER signal fact is the increasing alarm at the ravages of tobacco, especially among boys. Dr. Brown Sequard, in his examination of candidates for West Point, found a very large proportion of them hopelessly disabled by tobacco; and in nearly all cases of such heart and lung and nerve disability, cigarettes were to blame. Dr. Wiley, of the Agricultural Department, is now conducting a series of strictly scientific tests as to the effect of this drug on the digestion, circulation, and general health, as he has done with various articles of food.

CHURCH FEDERATION.

Again, the movement toward Church Co-operation and Federation is noticeable, reminding us of Canon Henson's efforts to promote unity between Anglicans and Nonconformists in Britain. The fact is, moral anarchy is imminent if something is not done, and Christians begin to feel the weakness of division before a united foe. Professor Ladd of Yale, in his new book, "The Philosophy of Conduct," bears witness to the danger now threatening society, as seen in the open way in which municipal corruption flaunts its defiance in face of the public, and the more alarming apathy even of respectable citizens.

A federation of churches was attempted a few years since, differing from the similar movement in Britain in the fact that no Established Church exists in the United States, and hence no Nonconforming bodies. But there has been a felt need of abating the evils of wasteful competition, especially in thinly-settled districts, where half a dozen weak churches struggle to maintain an existence though one union church would suffice. I have known a village of 800 people, only 500 of whom were adults, and five denominations at work. This new federation aims also to awaken public conscience and further intelligent citizenship, good government, and general social uprightness.

Thus far the movement has scarcely gripped popular sympathy, as an amusing instance illustrates. In New York city a four days' meeting was held early last year for the promotion of the cause. It was on the evening of the usual mid-week church meeting, when the Federation meeting was held in the audience room of the Broadway Tabernacle, the principal Congregational church in the city. Barely a hundred were present. The theme was Christian Co-operation: the need and the benefit of it. But under the same roof, separated only by a partition, the usual attendants at the mid-week meeting thought best to go through their usual exercises separately, and the Federation meeting was not allowed to use the church organ that evening, lest it should disturb the devotions of this brethren!

The Church Co-operation movement is broader, and in most cases will take in Unitarians and Jews, closely approaching the Parliament of Religions ten years ago. There is also a Congress of Religion movement, eight years old, which does not aim at either of the objects above stated, but affirms essential unity in all the diversity of religious views and its leadership is in Unitarian hands. It emphasizes the Ethical side of religion rather than ecclesiastical machinery or enterprise of any sort. The New York State Conference of Religion, now four years old, is under Evangelical leadership. It has a quadrilateral basis, as follows:—

1. The Fatherhood of God.
2. The Ethical Teachings of Jesus and the Prophets.
3. Emphasis on Social Righteousness.
4. The Spirit of God in the Minds of Men.

As illustrating the need of a junction of all religious forces for effective resistance to social immoralities, it quotes the remark made years ago by a powerful party boss: "Politicians care much for the Labour vote, for it goes solid; but they care nothing for the Church vote."

Home Missions.

Open-Air Evangelism.

A RECITAL of some of the chief features of last summer's campaigns afforded much cheer and encouragement to the large assembly of friends and supporters of the Open-Air Mission, at the autumnal reunion of that vigorous organization, held at Exeter Hall a few days ago.

Mr. H. W. Maynard, who presided, has just returned from South Africa. He testified that there is in that land an increasing realization of the value of open-air preaching. Both the speaker and Mrs. Maynard had taken part in street meetings in Johannesburg, where, in a remarkable way, the people gather to listen, and fruit is seen. Mr. Spencer Walton, too, had told Mr. Maynard of a spirit of hearing among people of all classes at Durban.

The next speaker, Lieut.-Col. F. Roberts, spoke of the summer's work in various parts of the home land. During a fortnight at Yarmouth there were very large crowds. Even on when the "Singer's Ring" had to be closed, more decision cards were taken than on any other occasion. At Leicester, where local friends have carried on meetings at the Park gates, and not a few souls have been blessed, large numbers gathered night after night. One Leicester lady, who became anxious about her soul, witnessed that she was led to serious thought by the changed character of relatives who had sought Christ during the Yarmouth mission. In conclusion the speaker read an interesting letter from a new convert describing how she had found the way of salvation.

The work at Brighton was described by Mr. J. Newcombe Goad, who said that he had never seen better meetings. On some occasions the attendance must have been over a thousand. One evening when the address was on "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" the speaker had read out the decision card, and then asked those who were prepared to take one to come forward. Some twenty persons immediately responded, and there were evidences of a thorough work being done. On another occasion, when Mr. Henry Varley spoke, there had also been deep conviction, and among others who became impressed was a boatman. Mr. Goad dealt with him, and the man found Christ. Glorious meetings were held, too, on the Brighton racecourse, where amid the noise and babble of the carnival, souls were crying for mercy. Some opposition was encountered at Lewes Races; but a splendid hearing was ultimately obtained, and there were "signs following."

Mr. Frank Cockrem, secretary, in the course of a brief summary of the campaign, said that the workers have visited hundreds of places, and blessing has been general. The leaders' reports, without exception and despite adverse weather conditions, tell of revival. Dealing with particular missions, Mr. Cockrem said that at Newport, Shropshire, meetings held by a number of the Society's evangelists were crowned by the conversion of some notorious characters. During a meeting in a bye-street a Christian woman remarked to her husband, "What beautiful singing!" and decided to attend the evening indoor gathering. She did so, and asked prayer for her husband, that he might be drawn to the meetings. Next night he was there—sitting just inside the door so that he might easily slip out; but during the after-meeting he beseeching mercy." Deliverance came, and he and his wife went home rejoicing. To-day, he is "shining for the Saviour."

At a number of fairs in the north of England, encouraging services were held. At Millom "never-to-be-forgotten times" were experienced, decision cards being taken by many hearers.

Another feature has been Sabbath morning meetings among people who do not attend a place of worship. At Newcastle-on-Tyne large crowds assembled, when Mr. Hill, a convert of two years' standing, graciously and modestly told of his conversion from the life of

A RACE-COURSE TIPSTER.

"Look at these two children of mine," Mr. Hill said to the people, "they used to be afraid of me; but now—they want to go everywhere with me." Proceeding to describe the racecourse campaign at Doncaster, Mr. Cockrem told of blessing at the morning meetings in the market-place among tipsters and holiday-makers. On each occasion some were awakened and came forward for cards. On the course itself, in addition to other work, religious literature was distributed. An ice-cream vendor, noticing a book lying on the ground, took it for a betting man's book, and picked it up. It proved to be a Marked Testament, and he read it. Next day, he came forward and said, "I want you to give me one of the decision cards, not that I want to get blessing from it, for I have got that already from the Testament." In conclusion, Mr. Cockrem showed that ministers in various parts of the land have written to him praising the Lord for the fruitful labours of the Society's evangelists in their respective districts. The past year has been one of remarkable extension of blessing.

Rev. R. Middleton, of Norwich, subsequently gave an address to workers, which was full of spiritual stimulus.

Ragged School Work at Camberwell.

A LARGE gathering of workers and friends associated with the Camberwell Mission, Toulon Street, Avenue Road, formerly the notorious Nelson Street, was recently held under the presidency of Rev. John Waite. Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the Ragged School Union, and his chief office assistant, Mr. A. H. Ward, are the hon. secretaries of what is really one of the oldest centres of its kind in London, the school records going back for nearly a century.

But though the record is so good, of long, far-reaching, and beneficent service, the work, which has ever been entirely dependent on voluntary contributions, is as urgently needed as ever. Persons benefited by the Gospel generally leave such a locality, when others take their places, so that, on the spot, the reformation really wrought is not always apparent. The managers tell us that "The Mission is situated in an 'Irish colony,' or typical slum, lying just off the Camberwell Road. Ignorance, neglect, and dirt reign supreme, in spite of all that has been done to remove them. A strong and vigorous band of voluntary workers has long been labouring faithfully in teaching the ignorant, showing love to the neglected, ministering to the sorrowful and needy, and, above all, sowing the good seed of the Kingdom."

After the reading of Scripture and prayer, the Chairman spoke of the need still existing for such work as was being done by the Mission. Mr. Ward gave details of the service being carried on, and pleaded for a fuller consecration. Mr. D. J. Legg, association secretary of the Religious Tract Society, gave a helpful address on the Scriptures, the chief point being the help which teachers may obtain from earnest Bible study. Mr. J. F. Shorey, a member of the Council of the Ragged School Union spoke on the privilege of being co-workers with God. Mr. Kirk also followed with an earnest address, in course of which he called attention to the great help which the Camberwell Mission—in common with all the affiliated schools—had received from the Religious Tract Society.

Perhaps the most realistic picture of the neighbourhood in which this work is carried on is given by Mr. Charles Booth, in his "Life and Labour of the People in London." Of the Sultan Street area he says:—"The impression made upon me by this block of streets when first I walked through them is one never to be forgotten—they are in some ways without counterpart in London. There are places more squalid, and there may be people more debased, but there are none whereon the word 'outcast' is so deeply branded." Mr. Booth's picture of Hollington Street, in the same area, closely resembles a typical ragged-school quarter of Lord Shaftesbury's middle life:—"Three-storey houses, yellow brick, narrow backs, no gardens, fearful mess in streets, bread, meat, paper, old tins and green garbage. All doors open; heavy rain, but street full of children, bare heads and bare feet; many windows broken, blocked with boards, stuff, or paper."

There is much overcrowding, and as is inevitable, children seem to swarm everywhere. The work is a manifold one, but its Christian character is ever to the fore. G. H. P.

Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.

OPENING OF THE NEW BUILDING.

THE new Sailors' Home and Hall in connection with the Welcome Mission was opened on Monday, October 26, in Stanhope Road, Portmouth. Major Riley, K.R.R., who presided over the public meeting, spoke of the pleasure he felt in taking part in the consecration, by prayer and praise, of the new Welcome Hall and Home.

Mr. T. Hogben, the director of the Mission, gave an interesting account of the rise and progress of the work. It was impossible to tell all that God had done through the Mission during the past sixteen years, but they had much for which to thank God. Three years ago, the work looked as though it must come to an end, but the friends set to work and began to pray for what they now saw before them. In all the building has cost £3,750, and about £250 will clear it of debt.

This is a mission which deserves support. During the sixteen years of its existence, there has hardly been a week when God has not savingly converted men and women. Of these some forty are known to have departed to be with Christ. Twelve, at least, have gone forth to the Mission field.

Among others taking part in the opening services were Engineer Rear-Admiral Pitt, R.N., Captain Stileman, R.N., Commander Key, Mr. W. Monro Collings, Rev. John Kemp, and Rev. W. Langdon Brommel, chaplain to the forces. The new building is arranged with every comfort and convenience for the Service men who will make it their home when ashore. On the ground floor is a fine hall seating nearly 500, with a reading-room adjoining. Class-rooms, with rooms for mothers and children, are found on the first floor; while the director's office, baths, and rooms for prayer and private study are on the second floor, with comfortably furnished bedrooms on the floor above. Three or four at least of these rooms it is proposed to use for men in training for Mission work. There is plenty of opportunity for training missionaries and workers in the Mission, and already several have applied to be received.

The Mission is entirely unsectarian, and there is not a section of the Evangelical Church of the town which has not received some who have been converted through its agency. Following the opening services, a convention was held from Tuesday to Friday in last week, and was addressed by several well-known speakers.

Marylebone Dinner Table and Soup Kitchen.—The trustees of St. Paul's, Portman Square, W., have again consented to the Marylebone Dinner Table and Soup Kitchen being held in the Mission House during the coming winter. Commencing on November 2, the serving of dinners and soup will be continued daily (Thursdays excepted), until the end of April, 1904. During last season no fewer than 19,515 persons were benefited. The poor show their grateful appreciation by their numerous contributions. It is earnestly hoped that this excellent charity (established for thirty-seven years), will be supported as in years past. Applicants come from many of the parishes round for the hot and nourishing meals provided. The treasurer and secretary of this beneficent work is Lady Thompson, 35, Wimpole Street, W.

Miss Macpherson's Work.

BY the good hand of our God upon us we are enabled to start another winter's work, and already the Training Home is filling with little future emigrants. Years of experience among those sent out and settled in Canada make us thankful to gather in these helpless ones, knowing what benefits await them in the fair Dominion. A poor woman, with three children to support, begged help to keep out of the workhouse, and gladly gave into our charge her two bright lads, aged six and eight years.

A poor girl of eleven, motherless and all but homeless, who was brought to us one day by a sympathetic neighbour, "to be saved from the streets," is now a happy, useful little member of our family. Then we have poor little neglected Lucy. She has never known a mother's loving care. How glad we are to train her to be the joy, and fill the heart, of some childless woman in Canada.

A few days since two little boys were brought to us in a most deplorable condition, their rags dropping off them. The mother is an imbecile, and has been in an asylum two years. The father is a dock laborer with very little work. There are five children, and the eldest is in the infirmary with an ulcerated leg through neglect. On their way to our training home, by train, the passengers commented on the forlorn look of the little ones: "Where do they come from? Can this be Christian England?"

During the past summer, 130 once homeless and destitute have been provided with good homes in Canada, and there is still room and a warm welcome for hundreds more. We could go on describing the condition of our boys and girls, but each story seems more pitiful than the previous one. M. Merry.

Miss Marsh's Convalescent Home.

A THANKSGIVING service in connection with Miss Marsh's efforts to provide more commodious premises for her Convalescent Home was held recently at the suitable house which has now been secured and fitted up—"Beechfield," Worthing.

Colonel Goldie, hon. sec., who presided, said that their meeting was one of thanksgiving to God for all the services vouchsafed to Miss Marsh in the past, and for the blessing of God upon the Home in the future. The Home, as many present knew, was established at Black Rock, Brighton, thirty-seven years ago, at a time of trouble and sickness; and the object was to give a place where people from the hospital, or who were discharged, could come and recruit their health before going to their own homes. The Home at Black Rock was one of the first established, and since then many other institutions of the kind have been established in different parts of the country, while many hospitals have their own private Convalescent Homes. They were obliged to leave Black Rock on account of the encroachment of the sea. They then came to Beachfield.

The speaker explained that the building is in the hands of trustees, and that of a total expenditure of £3,300 (including the purchase of the property), Miss Marsh has herself given £2,200. Subsequently General Stileman, an old friend of the Home, and other gentlemen, led in prayer. Rev. W. Heber Wright, as vicar of the parish, on behalf of himself and his congregation, expressed a very hearty welcome to all the workers, and said they all thanked God for the work that had been brought about through the instrumentality of Miss Marsh, whose presence that day they all greeted.

At the close of the meeting Miss Marsh gave a short address, leaving as farewell words to her friends the names of the Lord Jesus, Saviour, and Emmanuel, "God with us;" containing in their brief compass the supply for all the need of every human heart, for time and for eternity.

Bayswater Convention.

ANOTHER convention has passed, but many are the memories of gracious and helpful influences which remain. The gatherings were held as usual in Paddington Baths Hall, and were attended by large numbers of friends, not only from West London, but from other parts of the Metropolis. A spirit of earnestness marked the opening meeting which deepened as the days went on, as those who assembled listened not so much to the preaching of the Gospel, as to the statement of what the Gospel is, and what are its claims upon those who name the Name of Christ.

There were five meetings daily, and the numerous speakers expounded with much impressiveness different phases of Scriptural truth and its application to the daily life of believers. With rare fitness Captain Tottenham presided, and his brief, pointed remarks again and again struck the keynote of subsequent addresses. The point of view of the chairman repeatedly set forth was, "Ye are God's building; according to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise master builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus."

Among those who gave addresses were Revs. C. G. Moore, J. Stuart Holden, W. Fuller Gooch, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, F. S. Webster, J. Gregory Mantle, R. Wright Hay, and E. H. Hopkins, Mrs. Penn Lewis, and Mrs. Baeyertz.

Stony Stratford Orphanage.

THERE has been a time of rejoicing at the Stony Stratford Orphanage, connected with Mr. Fegan's Homes, the chapel attached to the Orphanage having been opened for evangelistic services.

In June, 1900, through God's goodness in answer to prayer, the freehold of this substantial block of buildings (which, it is stated, cost £40,000), were secured for £4,500, the whole of this sum being sent within a fortnight in answer to earnest prayer.

After three years of patient waiting upon God that the way might be made clear to open the chapel for evangelistic services, both for the orphan boys and the people of the district, it was at last felt that the time was ripe to go forward. Services held in a large tent on the Orphanage ground in June this year were attended by marked blessing.

After much prayer and thought, the Council felt assured that the work at the chapel should commence without further delay, but £900 was required to put the building in thorough repair and make necessary alterations. This amount also has been all received so that the chapel might be opened free of debt.

At the opening services Mr. Fegan spoke with much power, morning and evening, and at the latter meeting especially, with a closely-crowded building, there was rapt attention to the earnest message of Divine love and saving power, which we trust will prove to have been a life-giving word to some. A very pleasing feature in the services was the number of those present who professed conversion during the tent services in the summer. Meetings will be continued nightly this month, conducted by Mr. J. W. C. Fegan and Mr. W. R. Lane. F. D. H.

Misery and Mercy.—At the Albion Hill Home, Brighton, misery and mercy have met for the past forty-eight years. It is a penitentiary home in which girls of the ages of from fourteen to twenty-five are received; for the reformation of those who have strayed from the paths of virtue, and the protection of such as may be in circumstances of particular temptation. The girls are maintained, clothed, and trained for service or industrial occupations, with a view to their being placed in situations or restored to friends. Self-help is inculcated in a marked degree, the inmates being responsible for more than one-third of the gross income. The home, a Church of England institution, is conducted on Evangelical principles. Its operations extend to London and the provinces, and since it was founded it has admitted and trained 2,462 girls. The death of many old supporters has seriously diminished the income, and the home is in imminent danger of having its usefulness curtailed.

Flowers and Texts.—Mr. A. Knight (Bryn Towy, Brockley, S.E.) will be glad of flowers and tracts and booklets in connection with his efforts for advertizing and distributing Scripture texts. They would be given away by workers in hospitals and unions.

From Our Readers.

"A CHRISTIAN PARTY FOR PARLIAMENT."

SIR,—The letter from Rev. W. Adamson under the above heading, in your issue of the 5th inst., is a weighty one. What he says as to the hopelessness of getting the Evangelical section of the National Church to unite, as a party, with Evangelical Nonconformists, to withstand the forces of Sacerdotalism arrayed against them, is, I fear, but too true.

When we find the Archbishop of Dublin, who has always been regarded as an Evangelical, refusing his permission to Rev. Thomas Connellan, holding his licence, to conduct an Evangelistic mission in the Free Church of England, as he has recently done, we need not be surprised to find that the Evangelical section of the Established Church in England will not, as a party, co-operate with their brethren of the Nonconformist Churches in withstanding the common foe.

THE JESUIT ADVANCE.

DEAR SIR,—I think the Jesuits, who are the very wisest serpents now on earth, will play a very dangerous set of cards soon. They will quietly and slyly take the edge off God's sword, and cry out for Christian forbearance, love, gentleness; and inculcate no attacks at all upon error, fallacy, false logic, &c.; and urge practically that lions, bears, "dogs" should be let loose, and a time of absolute forbearance appear publicly. In that time they will sow poisons and invisible tares and most cunning doctrines, and we shall be told that all these things are to be ignored, allowed in charity and humility.

I see this new phase appearing clearly; and Christians, as a rule, are so easily beguiled and pushed into places out of the way, and their mouths filled with phrases of false charity, that the devil will get a fine sowing time. The "sword" will be waved as a feather, no definite doctrines; no one daring, like Christ or Paul, to oppose—to stem the torrent, to proclaim woe, woe, woe! (Gal. i. 10; ii. 11; iii. 3; iv. 28; 1 Cor. xvi. 22). Christ stemmed and opposed the whole religious current in His day. We are in a Galatian "state" at this time.

How did the Jesuit societies get hold of the French? By quiet means — stilling the Christians in France. Even the Evangelicals never called out about it. The Government found the Jesuits rooted in France. They made no noise at all, but kept down all opposition by never provoking. They stilled the Evangelicals everywhere, paying their own way so as to be no burden, just as the new monkeries and nunneries are now doing in England, till they get big roots and thousands of foolish unthinking persons brought round, and then the Government will find the little tigers and lions are fully grown and ready to come out and fight.

The Pharisees and the hypocrites exactly correspond with Romanists and hypocrites now, who wish our religion to be taken in hand by men who carry no real sword, no edge to our sword, lions without teeth, Christians who dare not to be either Calvins or Knoxes. In America even the colleges of dear old Puritans are now Unitarian nests, well feathered and too comfortable to hold not even one Calvin and no masculine minds, timid, good (for nothing), pleasing and self-pleasing people. This is the very ground Jesuits like to farm upon.—Yours very truly, Gordon Forlong.

A Good Work is being done by the Burrage Grove Sunday School, Plumstead, since 1878. The work, which is strictly undenominational, comprises Sunday-school, teachers' and scholars' prayer-meetings, open-air mission, Bands of Hope, Christian Endeavour, a branch of the International Bible Reading Association, a well-stocked library, and a Society for Distribution of Pure Literature. The district is a needy one, and steps are being taken to erect a new building, of which the commemoration stones were laid on the 17th inst. The treasurer is Mr. J. Gittings, 19, Tuam Road, Plumstead, S.E. Of the £1,800 required £500 has been raised locally.

Obituary.

MR. S. T. TURTLE.

MUCH sorrow has been occasioned in Christian circles in South London by the death of Mr. S. T. Turtle. He was a valued member of the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. and an active and devoted friend of the work of the Clapham Junction Association, while the undertakings of the South-East Metropolitan District Union also shared his support and service. As a member of the Council of the London Baptist Association, his wide knowledge and experience were always at the command of his colleagues, and for upwards of thirty years he laboured earnestly in the interests of Battersea Chapel, York Road, S.W.

A VICTORIA CROSS HERO.

The illness and death of Rev. James William Adams, vicar of Ashwell, have afforded the Times an opportunity of re-telling the story how, in the period of his service as an Army chaplain, Mr. Adams won the Victoria Cross, not by courage in taking human life, but in risking his own life to save a wounded man. The circumstances of his death, however, have not been given similar publicity, and it is well that they should, for his God was with him through a long and extremely painful illness, and his end was peace built upon the finished work of his Saviour. The long days of pain passed without a murmur; "It is now I have learned the love of God," he said, "it is all the love of God." With that altruism which had obtained for him the much-coveted distinction he expressed a wish to die alone: "It distresses you to see me die," he said to his wife and daughter, and with a prayer for them upon his lips he passed away into "the rest which remaineth for the people of God." Verily, before such a death of a trusting believer the cruel glories of the battlefield fade into nothingness.

MAJOR-GENERAL HUTCHINSON.

Called to his rest last month in his seventy-first year, Major-General Alexander Hadden Hutchinson, R.A., left a fragrant memory, and a beautiful record of service to God. He was the eldest son of Dr. Richard Scholes Hutchinson, of Nottingham, and entered the Royal Artillery in his twentieth year. Twenty-five years later he had reached the rank of lieutenant colonel, and four years later became colonel. From 1869 to 1872 he was on the staff at Aldershot as garrison instructor, and later commanded the artillery in South Wales. In 1882 he was placed on the retired list as a major-general. His interests were many and varied, leading him, among other engagements, to be a member of the Geological and Royal Geographical Societies.

As a member of the Church of England, General Hutchinson was strongly opposed to ritualistic tendencies. He was well known in Herefordshire and elsewhere as an evangelistic worker in the open-air. Three years ago he visited Dymock, which was regarded as one of the most spiritually needy places in the county. A house was taken, and Gospel work begun in the open-air in the face of keen opposition. The zealous labourer was soon a welcome visitor in the cottages, and the Hill Grove Mission with its regular Gospel services is a permanent memorial of the good work done.

CANON MAJOR LESTER.

At the age of seventy-five, Rev. Canon Thomas Major Lester, vicar, since 1855, of St. Mary's, Kirkdale, Liverpool, and Hon. Canon of Liverpool, has passed to his rest. By his death the city of Liverpool loses a staunch Protestant, an earnest and consistent Evangelical clergyman, and one of its oldest and most indefatigable workers on behalf of the poor, and particularly the children of the poor. Only a few days previous to his death it was decided, at a meeting in the Town Hall, presided over by the Lord Mayor, to raise a statue of him in recognition of his work, and large subscriptions have been given towards this object. Canon Major Lester commenced his ministerial career as curate of St. Barnabas Church, Toxteth Park. After a year's service there, he became curate of St. Mary's Church, Kirkdale, to which he returned as vicar in 1855, after being in charge of St. Saviour's Mission, Manchester, for about a year. The canon was also chairman of the Liverpool Self-Help Emigration Society, the Stanley Hospital, and Kirkdale Burial Board. But perhaps his most valuable work was that as founder, hon. superintendent, and treasurer of Kirkdale Industrial Schools and Homes, for which he may be said to have laboured unceasingly since 1855. This gigantic movement in connection with the Kirkdale boys' and girls' charities "has proved itself," says the Liverpool Post, "to be one of the greatest works carried on within the diocese of Liverpool."

MR. J. T. CAMPBELL.

Following shortly on the decease of his beloved wife (Lady Ann Campbell), Mr. John T. Campbell, the eminent solicitor, received the home-call in his eighty-fourth year. In the early sixties his was a well-known figure on many Evangelistic platforms, heartily identifying himself with the revival movements under the well-remembered preachers — Brownlow North, Richard Weaver, Stevenson A. Blackwood (afterwards Sir Arthur Blackwood), J. Denham Smith, Dr. Donald Fraser—whilst he often conducted services, in his own inimitable manner, for the Evangelization Society, the Evangelistic Mission, and kindred movements, with much acceptance. These labours were only discontinued when growing years and professional responsibilities rendered it necessary for him to desist from public speaking. Many will remember his fine erect form and earnest advocacy of the fundamentals of Divine truth as he often stood side by side with one of an equally striking figure—the late Mr. Robert Baxter (another of London's chief lawyers, and both earnest witnesses for Christ), in many crowded gatherings in those memorable days.

Warmly did Mr. Campbell enter into all the self-denying labours of his devoted wife, Lady Anne Campbell, in the inquiry rooms of the Moody and Sankey Missions; and on the very evening he left his offices in Warwick Street for the last time, he made, to the writer, most touching references to her beautiful life. He had just been expressing grief that from, comparatively, few pulpits in our principal churches the glorious Gospel of Christ and His atoning sacrifice is so seldom now proclaimed. These were almost his last utterances; for a chill, taken just before, brought on pleurisy and pneumonia, involving great weakness and ultimate unconsciousness, and on the Saturday evening in the same week (October 24) he quietly fell asleep in Jesus. The funeral, which was of a private character, took place at Woking Cemetery on the following Wednesday, where the remains now rest side by side with those of his wife and eldest son till the glad morning of resurrection. The School of Tyrannus.

In the school of one Tyrannus (Acts xix. 9).

THE humble room of Ephesus,
Beyond the city's roar,
To dear Ephesian saints was known,
And fruit celestial bore.

There Paul, amid the hush of all,
On inspiration borne,
Would tell the heavenly tidings forth
In words which breathe and burn.

What mysteries there—till then unknown—
Were brought 'neath human ken,
And by the Holy Ghost there thrilled
The hearts and souls of men.

Amid the atmosphere of heaven,
The mind of God was told;
While sweet communion with the throne,
Each spirit seemed to hold.

Those hours are past, yet still the scene—
That dear Ephesian school—
Arrests the mental vision's gaze,
Of sacred thoughts so full.

ALBERT MIDLANE.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

DUNDEE.

THE audiences at Dundee have been large and enthusiastic, and the results most encouraging. Over two thousand new pledges have already been secured by Dr. Henry, while Christians have been quickened, and some very interesting cases of spiritual awakening have been reported.

The Dundee Advertiser of November 9, says:—"Continuing the work of the mission at present being carried on in Dundee under the auspices of the Gospel Temperance Union, Dr. Henry addressed a largely attended meeting last night in the Kinnaird Hall. Rev. JOHN DICK presided, and several ministers and well-known laymen were on the platform. In a powerful discourse Dr. Henry argued that as drink had a baneful influence on home and church life it could not have God's blessing. Every man who crossed the threshold of a public-house and spent a penny over the bar was a partner with the maker and seller of drink. Every man who invested money in connection with the manufacture and sale of drink was also a partner with the publican. Dr. Henry addressed a large meeting of women in the same hall in the afternoon. On each occasion Mr. T. ARMON JONES sang various hymns with great acceptance. A large number signed the pledge."

An interesting interview with Dr. Henry appeared in the Evening Post. A prefatory note reads:—"Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones have returned to Dundee, and with them a distinct flutter in temperance circles—such as they are well calculated to arouse. There is no need introducing the doctor to the Dundee public, since he carries with him not only that most efficient of passports, a good and true cause, but with it a faithful desire to shed a light wherever he goes."

In the course of the interview Dr. Henry pointed out that in temperance organization this country "is far behind America, both in the way of temperance reform and in the progress made. For example, we have local veto in practically every city and territory across the Atlantic. We have twenty-two millions of children, who are given once every week, for forty weeks in the year, the very latest scientific instruction on the bad influences of drink and its effects on body and brain. It is compulsory that scientific instruction be given in every State and territory; this has been brought about through a twenty-five years' crusade persistently carried on by the Women's Christian Temperance Union in our country.

"Then our commercial life," continued the doctor, "has done a great deal to restrict the habit of drinking. Carl D. Wright, the greatest labour statistician of our country, said two weeks ago, I think, that he believed commercialism in America would soon kill the public-house. That was suggested by reason of the action taken by the railway people of Chicago, representing twenty-five trunk lines, refusing to employ anybody except on a teetotal basis."

One of Dr. Henry's most effective addresses dealt largely with the question of Christian responsibility. He asked, in conclusion, "Who will solve the great social questions? Will the worldling ever solve them? Never. Will the publican solve them? Never. Will the bookmaker solve them? Never. Will the Sabbath-breaker solve them? Never. Who will solve them, then? Only the Christian who is devoted to his God. There is not a great question before the world to-day that promises any sort of solution in any reasonable length of time unless Christian men and women, for Christ's sake, grapple with it, even at the cost of blood and tears."

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Dundee, till Nov. 13	Alloa, 9-20.	Hull, 21-Feb. 3.

The Israel of the Alps.

By H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

FROM the similarity of their history in some remarkable respects to that of the Jews, the Waldenses have been often called "the Israel of the Alps." Like the Jews, they have been from the beginning a singular and separate people, distinguished by a purer faith from the nations which surrounded them. They have been the object of long-continued hatred and persecution, have been uprooted from their native soil, scattered among the nations, and then restored by the hand of Providence to their ancient heritage. Like the Jews, they have their distinctive literature, their dialect, and their religious organization.

They have had their armies, their generals, their heroes, and their martyrs. They have been all but exterminated at times, and yet preserved from destruction, to be witnesses to Divine truth and to the wonder-working hand of Providence. In spite of a thousand persecutions, pitiless wars, and long exiles, they have preserved the love of their country and faith, and constitute to-day a united people whose history has proved them to be as imperishable as the bush which burned with fire but could not be consumed.

Where, whence, and what are these people? What is their locality, what was their origin, and what has been their faith and practice?

(1) Their locality. Separating France, Germany, and Austria from Northern Italy are the mountains, valleys, glaciers, and lakes of the Alps. In the south-western corner of this vast mountain barrier, closely clustered near the lofty far-seen cone of Monte Viso, five narrow and isolated valleys run up into the mountains, winding their tortuous way between steep wooded hills and naked over-hanging precipices, crowned with rolling clouds or glittering snows. This labyrinth of alpine mountains and valleys forms a quadrilateral fortress, overlooking the broad plain of Piedmont, and the city of Turin. Beautiful and fruitful in some places; wild, barren, and awe-inspiring in others—the country of the Vaudois seems to have been specially designed for a refuge for God's persecuted witnesses during the darkest ages of the Papal apostasy.

(2) The Origin of the Vaudois. While the history of the Waldenses as a Protestant people can be clearly traced back to a period many centuries earlier than the Lutheran Reformation, their origin is lost in obscurity. According to the Waldensian historian, Léger, the Vaudois valleys have been Christian since the time of Paganism, or even that of the immediate successors of the Apostles. Alexis Muston held that the Vaudois were the direct successors of the Apostolic age, and formed a chain which connected the churches of the Reformation with the first disciples of Christ. Professor Comba, however, in his recent valuable history of the Vaudois, treats this view as legendary.

Some facts connected with their origin are clear. Claude of Turin, in the ninth century, bore a powerful protest against Romish errors and superstitions, and his followers suffered persecution for their faith. That many of these took refuge in the closely adjacent Vaudois valleys seems highly probable. Many of the persecuted Albigenses on the other side of the Alps, fled at a later date, to the same locality. The afflicted disciples of Pierre Valdo, known as "the poor men of Lyons," helped to swell the Vaudois population, which in the eleventh and twelfth centuries had become considerable, and was noted for the Protestant character of its faith. Italian refugees from among the persecuted followers of Arnold of Brescia, in the twelfth century, who was distinguished as a preacher of the pure Gospel, and an opponent of Papal error, took refuge in the Waldensian Alps. Italy on the one hand, and France on the other, contributed in early centuries their Protestant refugees to the Waldensian valleys, where both Italian and French are still spoken.

(3) Their faith and practice. Between the twelfth and sixteenth centuries, while popes and councils were weaving the chains of error and spiritual despotism around the minds and consciences of Christendom, the Waldenses held the simple Gospel of Apostolic times, and a steadfast protest against the superstitions, idolatries, and tyrannies of the Church of Rome. The Scriptures had disappeared in the Middle Ages from the homes and churches of Europe. Manuscripts of the Bible were preserved in many monasteries, but to the people the Bible had become an unknown book. In the Waldensian valleys, during this dark period, even the children read the Bible, and committed large portions of it to memory. An Inquisitor of Passau, in a report relating to these times, describes

THE CHARACTER OF THEIR FAITH:—

"The Waldenses are modest, and avoid luxury in dress. They live by the labour of their hands; they lay up no treasures, being satisfied with the supply of the necessities of life. They are chaste and sober, and do not frequent wine-shops or ball-rooms, because they take no delight in such vanities. They abstain from anger. In their words they are exact and modest, and they refrain from gossip, loose speech, lying and swearing. They translate into the vulgar language the Old Testament and the New. I have myself seen and heard a peasant who repeated from memory, word for word, the whole of the book of Job, and I have known others who knew perfectly the whole New Testament. It is easier to find among the Waldenses people who can repeat the whole text of the Holy Scriptures than to find among us a doctor who can say three chapters."

Another Inquisitor describes the way in which the Waldensian evangelists conducted their mission. They would travel, he says, as pedlars, selling silks and pearls, rings and veils. "After a purchase has been made, if the pedlar be asked: 'Have you anything else to sell?' he answers: 'I have jewels more precious than these things; I would give them to you if you would promise not to betray me to the clergy.' On getting the promise, he says: 'I have a pearl so brilliant that you can by it learn to love God; I have another so splendid that it kindles the love of God,' and so on. Next, he quotes such a Scripture passage as this: 'Woe unto you that devour widows' houses'; and when asked to whom these denunciations apply, he answers: 'To the priests and the monks.' Then he contrasts the Catholic Church with his own: 'Your doctors are ostentatious in their dress and manners; they love the highest seats at table, and desire to be called masters, but our ministers are not such masters. Your priests are unchaste; but each of us has his wife, with whom we live chastely. They fight and kill and burn the poor; we, on the contrary, endure persecution for righteousness sake.' After some such address, the heretic adds: 'Examine and consider which is the more perfect religion and the purest faith, whether ours or that of the Romish Church.' And thus the hearer, being turned from the Catholic faith by such errors, forsakes us."

In this manner, by their godly life, their steadfast testimony, and widespread evangelistic labours, the Waldenses not only kept alive the lamp of truth amid the darkness of the Middle Ages, but did much to prepare the way for the glorious Reformation of the Sixteenth Century.

Gospel Work at Boulogne-sur-Mer.—During the past three years, M. le Pasteur Migault has been in charge of the M'All Mission at Boulogne, and the little towns of Capécure and Marquise, where he has been permitted to see the conversion to Christ of many Roman Catholics, who have often become in turn earnest helpers in the work. M. Migault has come to this country for a short rest, and with the hope of obtaining assistance to maintain and extend his much-needed work. He can be communicated with, c/o Henry Edmonds, Esq., 12, Linden Park, Tunbridge Wells, and is always glad to welcome English Christian visitors at 27, Rue Joinville, Boulogne.—T. G. A.

"The Gospel in Normandy."

I AM sure that all those who have so readily helped in my work in La Seine Inférieure will rejoice to know that the Lord is greatly prospering me, both in the distribution of Scriptures and in the conférences or réunions, as they describe evangelistic services here. The Scripture Gift Mission has made me liberal grants of Illustrated Gospels, which have been received with gladness. I have already visited a large number of villages; opportunities for conversation in the houses, on the route, or at the markets, are always present, and one's experiences sometimes are most exciting, and always interesting.

It is a terrible awakening when, for the first time, one discovers the spiritual alienation and ignorance of these unsaved crowds in France. I have traversed hundreds of miles on foot without finding more than one Bible. In numbers of cases the Gospel has been received with joy, and I trust in saving power—notably in the case of the village blacksmith at Jumiéges, whom I found hungering for the truth. In St. Martin the whole village was moved. I held two meetings, one in the café, the other in the smithy.

I was soon cleared out of Gospels, and the cafetière gave me her address, so that I might send on another parcel. Apart from the potent force of the written Word, there is the moral effect upon the people of one's coming from England especially to bring La Bonne Nouvelle.

At the Villa Bellevue, Duclair, Mesdames Gregg and Béart have placed at my disposal a splendid room abutting on the garden, with harmonium, &c., where I am holding the meetings. The people come with readiness, and sing the hymns with joy. In my preaching I refer from time to time to the Scriptures, getting them to read the quotations.

At the last two meetings, I have had an ex-priest of Rome, a savant. He is deeply interested, and in perfect sympathy. He is acting as my vicaire (or curate); and as I proceed with my address, he, Bible in hand, turns up the quotations, and reads them! The unbounded astonishment of the people is touching, as I read and speak of a present salvation, of a judgment past for believers, of the joy ineffable and glorious; and all through the possession of Le Christ Vivant in the heart.

One generous helper has sent me the means to obtain a parcel of Bibles, which I have left in the hands of those who have learnt to love them. Now I am praying God to move someone with means to come and continue the work. I am now back in England for missions, and shall be glad to hear of such openings. My address is, Normandie, New Malden, Surrey.

SAMUEL LEVERMORE.

Military Church in Rome.

SIG. ALFREDO CAPELLINI has lately been in Sicily, to make preparation for the winter's work, by visiting the regiments to be stationed in Rome this autumn. He was accompanied by his father's former colporteur, who is accustomed to this special work. He says he started feeling the weight of responsibility resting on him as new to the work, but that the Lord was very manifestly with him, removing every difficulty encountered, and causing him to prosper, so that he feels "like a child whose first steps are sustained by a father's tender care."

Their first destination was Messina, where they found the soldiers scattered in the villages. They succeeded, however, in gathering a nucleus of some twenty men, whom he hopes to seek out on their arrival in Rome. "Books were distributed there, and also in Catania, where some having fallen into the hands of the officers, were approved by them, and there also they made acquaintance with soldiers desirous of obtaining light and instruction." Will the old friends of the Military Church ask that the Holy Spirit may work mightily among the soldiers in Rome this season?

THE DISTRIBUTION OF RELIEF.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society has forwarded to the secretary, Rev. W. A. Essery, particulars of the relief being administered among sufferers at Resna, in the vilayet of Monastir. A large store, free of rent, has been placed at the use of the Society's representative and his native assistant. The flour and blanket supply was expected at noon on the day after their arrival, which was Saturday. We quote from the narrative:—

By one o'clock a great crowd of women, with some children and some men, were waiting outside the inn. The carts arrived at 3 p.m., but by the time they were unloaded it was too late to begin distribution, so I invited the people to come on the morrow. It went to my heart to dismiss them without bread for the night. Many faces showed how much they needed it.

Then I went to visit some refugees from Ehla. A girl of eighteen has a wound from a gun. The bullet entered behind the ear, and emerged from her cheek. I saw to the wound. It was made as she fled from her burning home. Her elder sister was not so fortunate; she had a baby nursing at the breast—a single bullet ended the life of both mother and child. A bride from the same village has two wounds in the left foot.

I have talked with from twenty to thirty people, who tell the same story of burned houses, and grain and cattle plundered. Practically, no one from a burned village has anything but his clothes. The need exceeds my expectation.

Sunday morning I went to the depôt. A solid mass of people was banked against the closed shops opposite, awaiting us. We had a tin measure for flour, holding about 5lb. For the present need we gave one measure to two people. We found it necessary to enrol names of all families, because the need of bedding was great, and the supply limited. Roughly, the number of families supplied with bedding was as follows: From the villages of Podmuchani, twenty-three; Ehla, twelve; Dupeni, six; Lavisi, three; Vulkodereh, one: total, forty-five. Many were the blessings invoked by the recipients upon the donors of the gifts and upon the distributors.

Flour was taken out to the looted village of Izbishta, and doled out to 291 persons; also at Zlatari 278 persons received about three pounds each. A family of eight orphans who came to get flour, had barely enough clothing to cover their nakedness, and were shaking with cold. The most importunate plea is for bedding. By far the greater part of these 750 families in the seventeen burnt villages of Resna now need bedding. There are also four or five villages not burned, but looted from one to three times each.

Mr. Essery adds that the workers have telegraphed for 200 more coverlets and fifty bags of flour. "These coverlets," he says, "are coarse, heavy, home-made affairs of various sizes. A blanket costing 80 or 90 piastres covers a whole family of five or six persons. I regret that we have not some cheap army blankets to give to prisoners, shivering in gaol these cold nights.

"We can do little more this winter than aid in preserving life, leaving the rebuilding of houses till spring. Were funds in hand, I would recommend a large outlay for oxen and buffaloes, to enable the poor peasants to plough their fields and get in seed this fall. It is pitiful to hear farmers who were once rich in cattle and sheep, begging food for themselves and their families. A master builder of Smilievo called one morning to beg a few piastres for the funeral of one of his little ones. This man's brother was killed while trying to save his children. The mother was seriously wounded. Their house was one of the finest in the village. An old man at the depôt, who recently owned a flock of 200 sheep and other property, shed tears of gratitude at receiving only five piastres for food. Speedy relief means a great saving of suffering, sickness, and mortality in the coming months."

FRIENDS' MACEDONIAN RELIEF FUND.

The committee of this fund have received from Bulgaria several letters, written by a vice-consul, which throw light on the distressed condition of thousands who are suffering destitution. Writing from Varna he says: "We have here some 2,000, and more coming. Leaving everything, many of their relatives murdered, women violated, houses burnt, crops ungathered, they fled with just the clothes on their backs.

"A man who went down to the frontier of Sofia a few days ago, describes his trip, and adds: 'The sad part was when 650 wretched Macedonians came over the mountains—mostly women and children—after flying for four days from the Turks. All they have is what they stand in.'"

After visiting Bourgas, the writer says: "Many of the refugees are in a miserable state, mostly women and small children, many widows and orphans. Their houses, crops, and all they had in the world, are gone. It is hard to give exact numbers, but I can account for 16,000 round here and at Varna; and our English Consular Agent here says that with small children there must be 20,000." The most useful immediate form of relief seems to be good woollen blankets.

South American Missions.

I.—THE LAND OF THE HOLY CROSS.

IN writing of South America, one might tell of its stupendous size, containing as it does one-eighth of the land surface of the globe; or of its sublime mountain chains stretching unbroken from north to south for 4,500 miles; or of its mighty rivers, the largest in the world, rolling their majestic waters to the ocean; or of its wide-stretching llanos, its pampas, its pathless primeval forests, its enormous mineral wealth; or of its gigantic ruins of prehistoric empires, which impress the mind with sensations of awe and astonishment. But from the standpoint of a missionary, the one thing that strikes one most is the terrible spiritual destitution of this huge continent.

Politically, South America is divided into fourteen Republics, of varying size and importance, and for more than 400 years the entire continent has lain under the thrall of an unspeakably corrupt Roman Catholicism, with an ignorant, intolerant, and openly licentious priesthood.

Ethnologically, thirteen of these Republics are peopled by a Spanish-speaking race, numbering probably 20,000,000; and one, by far the largest of all, covering practically one-half of the continent, has a Portuguese-speaking population estimated at 18,000,000. Besides these, there is a considerable European element—English, German, Italian, &c. There are also several millions of emancipated negroes, some eight or ten millions of pure Indian aborigines, unknown numbers of mulattos (hybrids of white and black), mestizos (white and Indian), cholos (white and mestizo), zambos (black and Indian), and other degrees of mixed blood—a state of things that reveals the appalling sensuousness of the dominant races, and which much retards social, political, and spiritual progress.

THE CHURCH'S RESPONSIBILITY.

As the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof, and as men's souls are His, and as the Church of Christ is debtor to all, it surely behoves us to ask—What have the followers of Christ hitherto done—what are they doing to-day—to evangelize the more than forty millions of our fellow-men that people South America? "Though our task is not to bring all the world to Christ, our task is unquestionably to bring Christ to all the world." It will be our purpose, therefore, in a series of short papers, to put before the readers of THE CHRISTIAN the bare facts of twentieth-century missionary effort in South America, so far as they can be gathered from the published reports of missionary societies at work there. This we will do with a view to emphasize the great need of

to be held in December next in Exeter Hall.

Here is a brief statement of the work being done in BRAZIL—The Land of the Holy Cross.

The United States of Brazil—twenty-one in number—embrace nearly one-half of the South American Continent. To this vast territory for 400 years the Bible has been denied by the Romish Church. As a result, there is almost universal ignorance even of the simplest truths of the Word of God, while the religious teachings and practices of the country, based on Romish traditions and priestly inventions, are directly opposed to the doctrines of Christ. Sin is everywhere minimized. Priests and people, unabashed, live constantly in the violation of God's laws, and in the practice of the grossest immoralities. In short, the moral and intellectual state of Brazil is deplorable.

THE CHURCH'S RESPONSE.

Now, what is the Church of Christ doing for these twenty-one states with a population of 18,000,000? For many of them absolutely nothing! For a few of them, especially in the extreme south, and along the Atlantic seaboard, something has been attempted during the past quarter of a century, but nothing adequately proportionate to the country's needs, or the ability of those to whom has come the command to evangelize the nations. Of the 537 missionary societies of the world, some ten only have representatives in any part of Brazil! Of the 15,460 missionaries, some 200 only are at work in Brazil! Think of it, ye followers of Christ! In this twentieth century, among a people numbering 18,000,000, the Church of God can spare only 200 men and women—one worker to 90,000 people! In what number of years will Brazil be evangelized at this rate, think ye? In England and Wales alone there are more that 20,000 Anglican clergymen, and more than 10,000 Free Church ministers, while in the whole of Brazil, which is more than fifty times as large, there are only 200 missionaries, including married women! The statistics are as follow:—

American Presbyterians	45	missionaries
Meth. Epis. Church of America..	44	,,
Southern Baptist Convention....	25	,,
Protestant Epis. Church of America	10	,,
German Lutheran Church	45	,,
Help for Brazil.....	15	,,
S. America Missionary Society ..	4	,,
Smaller societies (including the Bible Societies, the S. America Evan. Mission, the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A.), say	12	,, 200

THE CHURCH'S OPPORTUNITY.

Surely, brethren, these things ought not so to be. Viewing this list from the standpoint of British Christians, it is painfully humiliating. Not a single one of the fifty greatest missionary societies of Great Britain is in any way represented in Brazil! Must it be so for ever? Can nothing be done? Does the "Munroe Doctrine" throw a baneful influence over even British missionary effort? Are these millions to remain unevangelized simply because they live in one of the Americas? Probably 15,000,000 of the population have never once had the Gospel proclaimed to them.

The past is not without encouragement. By Bible distribution and missionary effort, multitudes have been awakened, hundreds have been converted, conditions have been created, and demands brought about, which greatly increase the responsibilities of the Church, and enhances its opportunities. To-day the position of thousands in Brazil is a critical one. Former beliefs are being undermined and abandoned. The masses are drifting from old anchorages, drifting upon dangerous seas. To rescue these thousands surely an imperative call comes to the Church of Christ. The responsibilities are tremendous. The opportunities are great. Shall we let them slip?

ROBERT CALDWELL.

Lepers and the Bible Society.—On Sunday, August 23, at the church in connection with the Leper Asylum, Almora, India, Rev. G. M. Bulloch mentioned the work of the British and Foreign Bible Society and its approaching centenary. The leper congregation was much interested, and during the week asked for further information about the Society. As a result, some decided to save each day a portion of their allowance of food to give on September 15, as an offering to the Society; while others preferred to fast on that day for the same purpose. As the lepers have no money, this is the only form of contribution available for them. Their total offering amounted to Rs. 7·9 (10s. 1d.). The sum in itself may seem small, but it is the heart's gift, and with it goes what is far more precious—the prayers of these poor sufferers, who realizing the value of the Bible to themselves desire that others should share its blessings with them.

A Mother's Love.

By Lieut.-Col. SETON CHURCHILL.

WHAT a power and an influence love has been in this world, when every other force and power has failed!

I remember once hearing of a young fellow who had passed a very stiff competitive examination, and had got his commission in the army. How proud he was of his position! He joined his regiment, but, ere he had been three years in the service, his father received a letter from the commanding officer to say that his son had entirely gone to the bad, and had so disgraced himself and brought discredit on the regiment, that he must leave.

In order to save the disgrace of a court-martial, the father decided that his son must retire by sending in his papers. But then arose the question, What was to be done with the youth? The father would not have him at home, as he might taint and corrupt his brothers and sisters, to say nothing of the disgrace he would bring on them. So it was decided that he must go out to South Africa.

A SAD HOME-COMING.

The poor young fellow, however, pleaded very hard to be allowed to come home once more before sailing, to see the old place and to pack up some of his things. To this the father consented, so long as the son would come in the early morning before the neighbours were up, and his brothers and sisters were aroused, so that no awkward questions should be asked.

The young fellow arrived. There was the old home that he had not seen since he had joined his regiment. But what a contrast in his surroundings! He had left it only three years before, so full of bright hopes and grand possibilities, and now he was a miserable wreck on the ocean of life. However, he tried to harden his heart against all the higher emotions of his nature. He went up to his room and packed his things, and then looked round to see that he had left nothing unpacked. There was the old bed in which he had so often slept, and there was the bedside beside which he had so often knelt with his mother's arm around his neck. What tender recollections these past associations recalled! How they reminded him of the happy, innocent days of his youth, with all its bright hopes of the future now so rudely shattered! In recollection of that happy past, he went once more to the old bedside, and knelt down again to pray in memory of bygone days.

TURNING POINT OF A LIFE.

While he was thus engaged on his knees, the door quietly opened, and who should peep in but his mother, who had looked in to see if her boy had arrived. The last thing she ever expected to see was her poor wandering boy engaged in prayer. She quietly stepped into the room, and putting her arm around his neck, knelt once more on the old familiar spot, and prayed once more with him as in olden days, when he was her innocent lad. That act of love on the part of the mother was the turning point in that young man's life. He had rejected the authority of his commanding officer, defied the opinion of his brother officers, and even scorned his father's authority. All had failed, but that mother's love won that hard heart.

He had to go out to South Africa, but what a difference! Instead of going out as a miserable wreck, he went out as a Christian man, and all this the result of one act of love.

A Christian Poetess.

The Late EDITH GILLING CHERRY.

MANY of our readers who never met her came to know and love Edith Gilling Cherry through her poems which have appeared from time to time in these columns. The publication in volume form of a selection of these, chosen by her mother (Mrs. Matilda S. Cherry) — The Master's Touch and Other Poems* will be welcomed as affording an opportunity for the possession of the pieces in more permanent and very attractive form—including about forty-five fresh poems which have never before been published.

The brief life-story of the author is beautiful and touching. At the age of sixteen months an attack of infantile paralysis "winged the bright little bird of the home." Another stroke came at the age of twelve; "but that seemed only to touch the spring for sweeter music, for about then she began to write, and thenceforth her pen was always busy." In the words of a friend, writing just after she had been called home, about six years ago: "Spite of the crutches that were the necessary companions of her life, a petite figure, and a fragile look that bespoke tender interest in her, she was so extremely bright and even gay, with something of the pure abandon of a happy child, that you associated her naturally with flowers and sunshine and music."

THE LATE MISS EDITH GILLING CHERRY.
From Photograph by Heath, 24, George Street, Plymouth.

At a very tender age the child showed an appreciation of spiritual things far beyond her years. The death of a sister, fifteen months her junior, when she was scarcely six years of age, made a deep impression alike on heart and imagination; but as the result of careful teaching by her mother, she was saved from associating gloomy thoughts with the bereavement, her mind turning rather to "the time when they should meet each other in the bright, heavenly home."

Delicate health led mother and daughter to be constant companions, and prevented education from proceeding along customary lines; but exceptional natural gifts made Edith Cherry an apt learner when home teaching was possible. Under watchful care she read all that came within her reach. A series of "Memory Notes" appended to the present volume, with extracts from her diary, show that her spiritual experiences were of the deepest character, and her walk of faith most childlike. A life of physical weakness drew the young disciple near her Lord and Master, where she learned much about the deep things of God. Through some of these poems breathes, as Mr. Meyer says in his prefatory notes, "an almost irrepressible desire to be with the Lord, to hear His voice, and see His face. They tell of the home-sick longing and heart-ache for the Master."

Miss Cherry did good service as a mission Sunday-school teacher; while the Young Women's Christian Association and the Christian Endeavour Society claimed a warm place in her heart. Perhaps dearest of all, however, was her own "Whatsoever Band" (2 Sam. xv. 15), founded in 1892, in the working of which she spent much of her strength. She was charmed with the idea of uniting together, by a motto-word so expressive, those who serve the Lord Jesus Christ as King in the little things of hidden service with those who honour Him in the greater deeds of public life. The hymn she wrote on the motto, and the rules, were translated into more than one foreign tongue.

On August 29, 1897, the earnest young poet passed to be with her Lord, leaving these and many more tender memorials of what she had learned as she walked with Him on earth.

MY BEAUTIFUL SECRET.

"I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness and speak to her heart" (Hosea xi. 14, marg.; Jer. xxxi. 12, 13).

I have learned a beautiful secret,
I know not how, or where—
But I know it is sweet and precious,
And true, and glad, and fair;
And that God in heaven reveals it
To all that have ears to hear.

And I know that ere I learned it
My way was weary and hard;
And somewhere in life's music
There was always that which jarred—
A hidden and dreary discord,
That all its sweetness marred.

But my harp of life was lifted
By One who knew the range
Of its many strings—for He made it,
And He struck a key-note strange;
And beneath the touch of the Master
I heard the music change.

No longer it failed and faltered;
No longer sobbed and strove;
But it seemed to soar and mingle
With the song of Heaven above;
For the pierced hand of the Master
Had struck the key-note—Love.

Thy heart's long-prisoned music,
Let the Master's hand set free!
Let Him whisper His beautiful secret
To Thee, as He hath to me.
"My Love is the Golden Key-note
Of all My will for thee."

Back to the Land.—The Small Holdings Association is in a very quiet way giving useful object lessons in the difficult question of the utilisation of the land, a problem certainly of the deepest interest to the nation. Upon one small estate in Surrey the Society has found room for forty families, who are able to maintain themselves upon their allotments; and numerous applications for land are received from residents in our crowded centres who were formerly engaged in agricultural pursuits, and wish to return to country life. Evidently there would be considerable migration in this direction if a system of peasant proprietorship were widely extended, in recognition, not only of a national need, but also of the Divine statement that "the earth He hath given to the children of men" (Ps. cxv. 16).

Strengthening Weak Congregations.

Pastor E. A. CARTER.

RECALLING his early history in an interview a few days ago, Pastor E. A. Carter traced the realization of his conversion back to his fifteenth year. A conversation with a minister who was staying at his father's house set him thinking more seriously on the subject than he had done, and led him to seek baptism and to join the Church. When he took a definite stand among the Lord's people, he started a small tract society, organized distribution in the neighbourhood, and spent some time sticking gummed slips on posts and fences. He also persuaded a friend to join him in holding open-air services. The position of released prisoners appealed to him so much that he took a supply of Gospels to the prison doors, giving with each his address and an invitation to the receiver to call on him.

While thus engaged in Christian service, there was deepening in his mind an early impression that God meant him to enter the ministry. Having a fear of taking any step in advance of the will of God, the young believer made this a matter of much prayer. He asked the Lord to let him open his Bible at a text of guidance, and the words were, "Go, for I have sent thee"; not satisfied, he asked again, and this time opened at the same incident in Chronicles instead of Kings; a third time the message was, "I have spoken these words unto thee." He has never felt led to take such a step again, and would not advise anyone to follow the example of his youthful days; but the leading of the Lord seemed to him quite clear at the time, a belief corroborated by later experience.

Entering the Pastors' College at the age of twenty, Mr. Carter's health was in an unsatisfactory state when his course was completed; so he went for some time, in conjunction with his brother, into the land and property business, from which his father was then retiring. During the five years spent in this way the young men erected a small temporary chapel at Mitcham, conducting the services and gathering together a congregation which still continues to do good work. But Pastor Carter heard once more the Lord's call to devote himself entirely to aggressive Gospel work, and it was then that the Pioneer Mission began to take shape.

The object aimed at was the planting of Baptist causes at centres around which the population was growing, and there was special need for a Gospel ministry. Attention was also given to the strengthening of weak and struggling causes, nearly twenty which could fairly be so described being raised to a more satisfactory position. The first thought at all times is the winning of souls, and then that of consolidating the people into congregations for confirmation in the faith and effective service. Beginning in London, the work has been also vigorously pushed in the provinces, as well as in France; while one missionary is now supported in Egypt in connection with the North Africa Mission, and a second in connection with the Nyassa Industrial Mission.

The impression that God had some extensive work for him to do, seemed to be brought to a point in a conversation with Pastor Douglas, of Kenyon Chapel, Brixton. In a conversation, that friend told Mr. Carter that he had been praying for a man to be raised up to go through the country preaching the pure Gospel, and then said: "I believe God is calling you to do this." Mr. Carter was then on the eve of taking a month's holiday, and used the time of quiet to pray and think over the matter. Eventually he was led to the conclusion that the path pointed out was the one in which God intended him to walk. The matter was fully laid before the late C. H. Spurgeon, who, though he became a warm friend of the movement, did not feel sure that the time was opportune; but Pastor Carter went forward. His wife and he placed their services at the disposal of any particular church requiring help, preaching, encouraging, advising. Then two or three new causes were started, and, with the help of neighbouring ministers, kept going until it was possible to settle pastors over them. Thus the work has grown in dimensions year by year.

A strong council was formed with Mr. Carter as honorary director; and during the past year the serious illness of the founder, with the necessity of prolonged rest, necessitated the formation of an executive committee. Now a further step has been taken by the appointment of Mr. T. H. Hopkins as secretary, with office at 3, Eagle Street, Southampton Row, W.C. Additional demands will be made on the funds, and on every hand there are openings for further effort. Men can be found to go forward to the needy localities which abound, if the Lord's stewards send in the means for their support.

As an instance of what has been done in different places, we mention Blackhorse Road, Walthamstow. About five years ago, the work in this populous district was begun by Pastor F. J. Walkey, at that time a student in the Pastors' College. An iron chapel was erected, which, before two years passed, had to be enlarged to a seating capacity of 400. God blessed the work, there were many conversions, a church was formed which now numbers over 150 members, with a Sunday-school of over 300 children. When Mr. Walkey removed to Leytonstone, and there was some anxiety as to the future, Rev. G. T. Bailey, pastor at Leyton, who as honorary secretary worthily served the Mission in other ways, undertook the oversight of Blackhorse Road, having Mr. W. J. Hurlow as his assistant in the double charge. The new arrangement worked admirably, God giving tokens of His favour in the conversion of souls. In a few months twenty-nine joined the church, and others were coming forward.

In 1895, Mr. Carter arranged to begin a new station in Govan (Glasgow), and placing in charge an earnest and able young worker—Mr. J. Harper. The cause prospered and numbers were converted. Among those gathered were some who came from the Paisley Road district, where Mr. Harper for some time held a week evening service; but in 1897 a separate church was formed at Paisley Road, of which Mr. Harper became pastor, the work at Govan being still carried on under the Mission. The Paisley Road cause has succeeded in a wonderful way, and there is now a strong, living, aggressive church. The Mission helped in the purchase of land, and a large iron chapel, seating 600, was erected. This was opened in 1901 by Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich, and from the first it has been filled with earnest hearers. Throughout the ministry there have been many very striking cases of conversion — frequent instances of whole households being won for Christ, special blessing on open-air work, and notable deliverances from the thraldom of strong drink. The success of this work alone is described as sufficient to justify the existence of the Pioneer Mission.

In October, 1902, Pastor Carter, accompanied by his brother, Mr. F. C. Carter, and Dr. McCaig, paid a visit to France, spending some time with Pasteur Saillens, of Paris, examining his work and consulting with him and his committee. It was decided instead of undertaking work directly, to take advantage of Pasteur Saillens's ripe experience and personal superintendence, the Mission undertaking to occupy two districts, which lack of funds had compelled the Paris brethren to abandon—Nimes and Rouen. At Nimes the little church was holding together, but without a pastor and with no likelihood of reaching outsiders. A young earnest helper of Pasteur Saillens in Paris, Mr. R. Dubarry, was found willing to take up the work. At Rouen, for some time no services had been held, although there were a few devoted souls who met for prayer. After considerable difficulty a suitable place of meeting was found, and a pastor found in Mr. A. Gross, who was then leaving a sphere of labour at St. Etienne. The meetings from the first were well attended, and many tokens of blessing received. Pasteur Saillens, who has frequently helped in the work, declares that it is the most promising of all the French stations.

The mission has been the means of opening up the way into the regular ministry of the Gospel for a number of excellent workers to whom it appeared to be otherwise closed, taking in hand young men who have proved the call of God, and above the average in ability, who wish to go to college. The plan of giving them a year or more of experience before sending them for training, has more than justified itself, for in this way the young and fresh enthusiasm is strengthened and directed with most beneficial results. We should like to see it widely adopted among students for the ministry generally.

SUNDAY, November 15. Proverbs xxxi.

THIS last chapter consists of two distinct fragments, which are thought to belong to a later age than the earlier part of the Book; but inserted here by the holy men who put the final touches on the Old Testament Scriptures in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah.

1-9. We know nothing of Lemuel, but if his mother resembled in character the noble woman described in the remainder of the chapter, he was greatly blessed, and must have become a noble man. We cannot be too thankful for the influence on our lives of noble women, especially our mothers. Few men who have risen to eminence have not attributed their earliest impressions and inspirations to the effect of their mothers' influence and teaching.

10-31. Throughout this book we have severe strictures on woman. "The strange woman" is perpetually referred to. And even where her nature is not corrupted by impurity, we are often reminded how she may destroy the peace of a man's life by her temper or her tongue. Thus it is befitting that at the close of this book there should be a portraiture and appreciation of what woman is at her best, and in myriads of happy instances. The ideal woman of the Book of Proverbs is the stay and confidence of her husband, and her helpfulness lasts as long as her life does (v. 12). When her hair is grey, and her cheeks wrinkled, she is still his crown and joy. Through him, also, she plays no small part in the public life of the time (23); and he always thinks of her as the best wife possible (29). Such is the true beauty of womanhood (30), which is the reflection of a Divine and heavenly light shining upon her heart; and her works praise her.

MONDAY, November 16. Ecclesiastes i.

This Book was written to answer the question which, in one form or another, has always been asked by men: Is life worth living? If that inquiry be put in slightly altered form, "How may life be made worth living?" or "What is the true ideal and the chief good of man?" it would be difficult to find a more complete answer than that which is suggested by these chapters. The moral and conclusion to which we are finally conducted is that, apart from God, life is full of weariness and disappointment; "all is vanity and vexation of spirit." The key-word of the book is the recurring phrase, "under the sun," and when a man has nothing in heart or life save that which is bounded by the sky above and the horizon around, there is no end to his misery. If, however, we love and serve God, if in all our ways we acknowledge Him, if we seek first His kingdom and righteousness, we may spend our years in the higher atmosphere of serene contentment, peace, and joy.

1-11. The prologue is cast in a dramatic form, and gives the characteristic utterances of a man who, wearied with many futile efforts, gathers up his strength to recount the experiments he has made and the conclusion to which he has come. The keynote is the old contrast, old as human life, between the certain order and steadfastness of nature, and the vicissitude and changefulness of human life. This contrast, between nature and man, begets a mood of pessimism and despair. A Christian is not afflicted thus, because behind nature is God, and beyond this human life are eternal realities and destinies; but, when men are jaded with voluptuous delights and without the peace of faith—such thoughts are common enough.

12-18. Oppressed with a dark pessimism, known by some as accidie, the philosopher sets out on the search for the Supreme Good, the philosopher's stone which should turn all things to gold. But he seeks it among men, instead of as the gift of God. With him it was rather intellectual than moral or spiritual. He knew not Christ who is the Truth—God's light on life's inscrutable problems.

TUESDAY, November 17. Ecclesiastes ii.

1-11. If we cannot reach the Supreme Good by wisdom, perhaps we can by pleasure. This experiment was tried by the Preacher, on the largest scale, and under the most auspicious conditions. He surrounded himself with all the luxuries of an oriental prince; built new and costly palaces, laid out paradises, dug great tanks and reservoirs of water, surrounded himself with a great retinue of servants to enhance his dignity, collected flocks, hired famous musicians and singers.

But when he had drunk of every cup, and passed through the whole giddy round of pleasure, he turned from it all, as Byron did, who died of thirst, because rivers of earthly delight cannot satisfy the heart which was made for God.

12-26. Having pronounced wisdom and mirth to be alike vanities, in which the True Good is not to be found, the Preacher did not at once proceed to try a new experiment, but paused to compare these two "vanities," and to reason out his preference of one over the other. He says that wisdom is as much better than pleasure as light is than darkness. Wisdom is, indeed, the light by which men see. Wisdom opens our eyes to see that we must seek the good which alone gives rest and peace, such as pleasure and mirth can never afford. But there are limitations even to wisdom. It cannot explain many mysteries in human life—why the same fate befalls sage and fool (15), why each is soon forgotten (16, 17), and why man cannot foresee the future (19-21). Give us, O God, the wisdom which is from above, that we may be taught of Thee!

WEDNESDAY, November 18. Ecclesiastes iii.

1-15. The earlier part of this chapter has been compared to a huge timepiece wound up by the Almighty Maker; and after He has set it going nothing can stop it till the angel swears that time shall be no more. At one tick a child is born, at another an old man dies. As the pendulum swings in this direction, a nation is planted; as it swings in that, another is overthrown in some great battlefield. There is a time when friendship bestows its caresses, and receives them with delight, and a time when the friendship cools. There is a time when every enterprise seems to succeed, and all turns to gold; but at another, one enterprise after another goes wrong. Such are the alternations of mundane affairs, and shall we not rise from them to God, by whose will this clock of destiny has been set up? What comfort there is in the words of the Apostle: "Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the Creation." Each day that dawns, however much it may surprise us, brings no surprise to Him, who sees the end from the beginning.

There is a beauty in everything, and in the timeliness of everything; but nothing of all the things which God has made can satisfy the heart of man. Notice the remarkable rendering of verse 11, as it is given in R.V. "He hath set eternity in their heart." There is in the human heart a capacity of hunger for God and eternal realities. The woman will come to draw water until the Lord opens fountains in her heart.

16-22. The Preacher at this point turns to consider the monstrous injustice of the age. The unjust judges, the rapacious satraps, the hard-fisted landowners. He had brooded over these things till he seemed to lose faith. He lays bare his heart for us to see the storm of despair that swept across it. But we are no more to accept this than to follow the track of any sin, which is recorded on the page of Scripture. The Bible holds up the mirror to man's heart in all its moods, that we may see ourselves, and our need of redemption.

THURSDAY, November 19. Ecclesiastes iv.

1-3. As the Preacher reflects on the unalleviated misery of men, he affirms that the dead are happier than the living, even those who died so long ago that their very memory has faded from the earth. Happier than either were they who had never seen the light, never been born into a world so out of course.

4-8. But, he argues, you cannot hope to get good fruit from a bad root. What can you expect from human society, which, in fact, is founded on man's jealous rivalry with his neighbour? Every man tries to outdo and undersell his neighbour, so as to amass a larger pile of gold, not for the sake of the good it may do, but for the mere pleasure of having it. Even though a man has no son, no kith or kin to save for, yet there will be no end to his labours, and he will continue to hoard to the end of his days.

9-16. There is something better than this jealous rivalry. Union is better than isolation; co-operation than competition. Two pedestrians can help each other against accident. Two may communicate to each other warmth. Two travellers are a better match than one for the thief. A threefold cord is not easily broken. The darlings of the people are safe against the hand of tyranny and time, though even for such there comes a moment when they will be forgotten as a dream. Something more than human companionship is needed to secure us against the whips and scorns of time. Stand near me, O Saviour, let me hear Thee say, "It is I."

FRIDAY, November 20. Ecclesiastes v.

1-7. Every scene of mortal life is invested with frivolity and falsehood. Cottage and palace, the study and the banqueting-room, teem with them. Surely, it might be hoped that they would not enter the sanctuary! But, alas, in God's House there are rash vows and babbling voices! It is the House of God, but men have made it a den of thieves. This thoughtless resorting to the sanctuary, the inattention and undevotion which often characterize the worshippers, precipitancy in religious vows, which are made to be broken—these are as frequent to-day as in the old time. "Keep thy foot," i.e., drop off your sandals, or in other words, divest yourself of secular anxieties and worldly projects, "when thou goest to the House of God." Be not rash or hasty in uttering vows; it is not wise to make more than the one solemn covenant to be only for God.

8-20. When we return from the sanctuary to the common round of life, there are certain comforting thoughts amid the miseries and distractions which confront us on every hand. (1) Though there are perversions of equity, yet there is One who is higher than the highest (8). (2) The king himself dare not allow the depopulation of his land to go beyond a certain point, for he must live on the labours of the peasant (9). He who does evil to acquire wealth, makes but a poor bargain at the best (10), has a larger number of dependents to keep (11), misses the sweet sleep of the poor (12), and will as likely as not be succeeded by an heir who will waste it all (15-17). Therefore the Preacher advises that we should accept whatever the Providence of God allots to us, and enjoy it with a quiet trust in His care and love.

SATURDAY, November 21. Ecclesiastes vi.

In this chapter the Preacher is dealing with the lover of wealth. He is speaking not against wealth, but against seeking it as the chief good. To use our Lord's words, he is dealing with those who "trust in riches," and do not accept their abundance as the gift of God. Such fret about their wealth, be it more or less, though they have no children to inherit it, and have to adopt aliens as their heirs (2). There is no rest for those who have all that this world can give, but have not God (3-5).

Besides, it is absurd to try and satisfy an immortal soul with the gewgaws of a passing show. If the spirit in man be craving and unfed, whatever his outward conditions or his faculty of enjoyment, he cannot be at rest. After all, the wise and poor, who make the best of the little they have, are likely to get more real happiness out of life than those who are always craving for things beyond their reach. We cannot rest, till we rest in God (8-10). You cannot use or enjoy more than a certain amount of worldly goods (11); you can never be sure that what seems so attractive may not turn out an apple of Sodom to your mouth (12); and you will have to leave all at the last (12).

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

LETTER FROM DR. TORREY.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

To Those who have Unsaved Friends.

A LETTER FROM DR. TORREY.

THE most fruitful and most delightful field of Christian activity is the home circle. Truly converted men or women can reach their own relatives and friends more easily than they can reach anybody else in the world. When Andrew found Christ, "he first findeth his own brother Simon, and brought him to Jesus." When Jesus had cast the demons out of the man of Gadara, He bade him: "Return to thine own house, and show how great things God hath done unto thee." Strangely enough many professed Christians are more afraid to speak to those of their own households about Christ than to speak to anyone else. There can be no doubt that this fear is from the Evil One.

It is the privilege of every Christian mother and father to bring each of their own children to Christ. It is the privilege of the converted wife to bring her unconverted husband to Christ; and it is the privilege of the brother and sister to bring their unconverted brothers and sisters to Christ. It may require time and patience; but it can be done. But

HOW SHALL ONE GO ABOUT IT?

First of all, by prayer. By prayer, I mean real prayer; not the mere mentioning once or twice to God our desire that our loved ones should be saved; but praying, if need be, day and night, week after week, month after month, and year after year in the power of the Holy Ghost, until the one whose salvation we seek has clearly accepted Christ, or we have received the definite assurance from God that our prayer is heard.

Almost immediately upon my own conversion, God laid upon my heart my oldest brother. He was the oldest member of the family, and I the youngest boy. Day after day, and week after week, and month after month, I prayed. Then God put it into my heart to spend a whole night in prayer for him. The day following that night of prayer, I wrote him a letter, and he wrote one in reply ridiculing me; but I kept on praying, and he kept on apparently wandering farther and farther from God. For fifteen years never a day passed but what I besought God for his conversion. At the end of that time we had both moved to Chicago, and one morning, as I was praying for him, it seemed as if God said, "I have heard your prayer." I did not pray for his conversion again, but each morning thanked God that He had heard my prayer, and told Him that I was waiting to see the fulfilment of it. About two weeks after, my brother came to my house to dinner. He was just up from a bed of sickness. After dinner I asked him to remain all night and he consented. In the morning his rheumatism had returned, and he was unable to put on his boots and leave the house. For two weeks he was shut up in my home. The long-looked for day of opportunity had come. Every morning we held family prayers in his room. Our little children running in and out seemed to speak more of the Saviour than usual. Friends who called upon me, seeing him in my home, took it for granted that he was a Christian, and everyone spoke of the things of Christ.

At the end of the two weeks, when we walked down the street together, after we had gone about half-a-block, he said to me, "Archie, I am thinking of going into temperance work; how do you begin?" I replied, "The best way I know to begin temperance work is to become a Christian yourself." He answered, "I always thought I was a Christian." To this I said, "You have the strangest way of showing it of any man I ever knew." "How do you become a Christian?" he asked. "Come over to my office and I will tell you." I explained to him the way of life just as I would to a little child, though he was my eldest brother, and he knelt down like a little child and took Christ. Within a year he was preaching the Gospel.

Several years passed, and, hearing he was sick, I went out into the country where he was stopping to spend the day with him before going south. I found that up to the preceding Sabbath he had preached the Gospel, but was now unable to leave the house, though apparently not much worse than he had been often before. When I started to speak of old friends that I had recently visited in the east, he stopped me, and asked that we might have a time of prayer. At the close of the day I bade him good-bye for a few weeks. The next morning very early, before going to the train, there was a rap at my door, and one of the students handed me in a telegram. I opened it and read, "Your brother passed away at two o'clock this morning." I hurried out at once, and when I went into the room where he was lying, and turned back the white sheet from that silent but peaceful face of my oldest brother, I thanked God that I had believed for fifteen years, in the face of much discouragement, in a God that answers prayer.

God is willing to answer our prayers for our loved ones, though He may test for a long time the reality of our faith.

But it is not enough to pray. If we are sincere in our prayers, we will put our lips at God's disposal, for Him to speak to our loved ones through them. We may have to wait some time for an opportunity, but we shall be watching for it every day, no matter how long it is in coming, and the moment the opportunity comes we shall seize it. Of course, we must look to God to give us His Spirit, to show us the right thing to say and to give power to what we do say.

Need I add that unless our own life is thoroughly right with God, every known sin put away, and we ourselves entirely surrendered to His blessed will, we need not expect that much will come either from our prayers or from our efforts? If we are unreal, no one will know it so well as the members of our own households. The real secret of the unwillingness of many people to speak to the members of their own families is found right here; they know that their own lives are not right, and they are deliberately sacrificing the eternal salvation of their own loved ones rather than pay the price, namely, entire consecration to God. I cannot see how any true Christian man or woman can rest content until every member of their own family has been brought to Christ.

The hall is so vast in its area, that it is said to have held 9,000 people at an entertainment not long ago; yet wherever your eye travelled there were people—people everywhere. There was still an hour before the service was due to begin; but already an immense congregation was in eager readiness. Under the white glimmer of the huge electric globes there seemed to be a ghastly pallor on the faces upturned to the platform; but as soon as Mr. Alexander had by persuasive smile and tactful encouragement set everybody singing, the countenances became radiant. "Why, you are looking ever so much happier now," he said; and we on the platform could corroborate him. While Mr. Alexander is telling an apt story of the effect of distributing hymn-sheets, I see Dr. Torrey making his way to the furthest point in the hall. He stands now by the side of a policeman, and tests the effect of Mr. Alexander's voice at the utmost limit of St. James's Hall. Then he returns to the platform, and is enabled to save some of his vocal power by the satisfactory proof of the hall's excellent acoustics.

At seven o'clock it seemed as though the hall were nearly full; it is now half-past seven, and still a steady stream wends its way through the open doors, until the dull distance of the last rows of chairs becomes aglow with interested faces.

Do you ask, What is the audience like? After visiting each one of the Torrey-Alexander missions in Great Britain, I am again struck with the large proportion of men in the service. Not boys, but men, and the thoughtful Lancashire type of man, with quiet non-committal face, waiting to see what the American evangelists have to say. On the broad platform is the big choir, not quite close enough to get the full contagion of Mr. Alexander's fervour, but spreading itself picturesquely across the full width of the hall. There is no organ in St. James's Hall, but that does not matter, as my neighbour remarked, when you have Mr. Harkness at the pianoforte! There are no side galleries, so the red rostrum is not built so high as was the case at Glasgow, where Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander stood on a little scarlet square, high above the ordinary platform. Far away at the end of the hall, almost lost to sight, there is a gallery, and a dim line of faces tells us it is full.

The preliminary singing—"a whole service in itself," one minister called it—has finished, and has fused the immense audience into one united gathering of interested people. Down steps Mr. Alexander, and immediately Dr. Torrey calls on a local pastor to pray. It is a beautiful beginning, for the man's heart is yearning that the city may be blessed, and he beseeches God that thousands may be saved.

All are now seated save the stewards, standing like finger-posts all over the hall. Dr. Torrey, a little husky after his heavy exertions for the last two years, begins his striking sermon on Belshazzar's dream. It is wonderful how immediately

THE PREACHER CAPTURES HIS HEARERS.

From the first vivid sentences until the completion of the story of the writing on the wall, there is strained attention. When he points in illustration of the writing, I notice how many turn their heads involuntarily in the same direction, as if expecting to see "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin," on the wall of the hall.

With relentless power he applies the story to the weighing of each individual in the balances of God. The voice is now clear in its loud tones of denunciation of sin. Only twice, when Dr. Torrey alludes to gambling, does the audience applaud, and then almost out of relief from the searching stress of appeal to consciences. At the end of the address, the invitation is given. From all parts of the audience there rise men and women ready to take Christ as their Saviour. Soon the front seats are crowded with kneeling people—for Manchester folk make it a real "penitent form"—and when the service concludes, it is after a great harvest of souls has been reaped.

Thus has the work begun in Manchester. May it be continued and ended with the same obvious power of God! D. W.

Dundee Young Converts' Meeting.

The spirit of the Young Converts' Meeting was such as to say emphatically that blessing in great degree has been showered upon us by the bounty of the "giving God." The happy songs and beaming faces, and the gracious words of the speaker all seemed to say: Christ died for all, that believing they might have life through Him. The hymns were sung with a fervour that will not soon die, sung as the expression of the experience of the heart, which they indeed are.

As chairman, Councillor HENDERSON spoke encouragingly, instructively, and comfortingly, as became one with his large sympathy for all that is true to Christ, and that makes for the extension of His Kingdom. Dr. GRANT'S addresses are always most worthy of hearing, and his words to the young Christians were calls to go forward. "You have surrendered your heart—surrender your wills and your whole lives." Two truths that have recently been made prominent he would emphasise—(1) the work of the Holy Spirit, (2) the necessity of service. "Young Christians are not called to teach, but they are certainly called to serve, and to testify. Serve in the church with which you are connected."

Mr. W. M. Oatts (Glasgow) took the heart of the audience by his apt allusions to recent experiences. He advocated strongly the continuance of the young converts' Fellowship Meeting. His words clustered round Acts xi. 23, "With purpose of heart cleave unto the Lord." With the wisdom of one who knew the perils, he said: "Guard against besetting sin, guard against the subtlety of the devil. Do not argue with sin; flee from it. Keep testifying. Live the life. Remember Dr. Torrey's five things: (1) look to Jesus, (2) spend fifteen minutes daily with the Bible, (3) take time to pray, (4) get to work, (5) keep testifying.

Rev. Mr. Hamilton urged all to practise the presence of God by unceasing prayer, which will drive away base and unworthy thoughts and desires. We have three blessed possessions—the righteousness of Christ, peace with God, joy in the Holy Ghost; with these gifts let us bear witness to the change we have experienced. Mr. W. Stewart, who ever speaks in the spirit of deep interest in all that makes for Christian life, gave wise and gracious counsel.

The impressions made show no sign of wearing off, because they are not merely impressions, but rather expressions of inward reality.

THE CONVERSIONS ARE MANIFESTLY REAL.

A gentleman in public life, with some years of magisterial experience, remarked that the police authorities in some cases knew the change. The work of Dr. Torrey has given an impetus to interest in the poor and lowly, and in lodging-houses the Gospel meetings are packed with interested hearers; so that some have had their faith stimulated to look for manifestations of God's power such as we read about in connection with Jerry McAuley's Water Street Mission. Another feature and result of the Mission has been its success among many young men, and this specially in Mr. Stewart's Y.M.C.A. Bible class, with its attendance of some 600 (or over) young men. Its faithful leader had been for long building up the fuel; when Dr. Torrey came, the torch was applied, and the fire began. G. C. F. C.

"The Heart of the Mission."

In the Y.M.C.A., Dundee, Dr. Torrey gave a series of brief addresses on Prayer which stimulated those who heard them so much that we continue the notes for the benefit of a wider circle:—I believe the prayer-meeting is the heart of the whole mission. God has blessed everywhere we have gone, but it is simply because people have prayed. I am told we are to gather each day this week to pray definitely for an outpouring of the Spirit of God on these meetings. I want you to consider two passages of Scripture which deal with this great subject of Prayer.

In Hebrews v. 7, we have a picture of our Lord and Master in His earthly life. It presents to us our Saviour as a Man of prayer. Whatever characteristics He may have possessed, one that stands out everywhere as a characteristic is prayerfulness. We have a short biography of our Lord and Saviour. All the biography we have of Jesus Christ is in the four Gospels, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John; yet in that record of our Lord's life, brief as it is, the words "pray" and "prayer" are used not less than twenty-five times. Men have been impressed with this feature of our Lord's life.

A book was written in America a few years ago, and it spread all over the country, "In His Steps; or, What would Jesus do?" The author tries to tell how he thinks the Lord Jesus would run a newspaper, &c. I don't know how the Lord Jesus would run a newspaper. I do not know whether He would run a newspaper at all or not. But I can tell you what Jesus would do; He would do precisely what He did do when He was here before. "He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." One thing He did was to pray. He spent whole nights in prayer, and rose early in the morning for prayer. Here in this remarkable verse, we read of His "offering up prayers and supplications." If we would be like our Lord, we must be men and women of prayer. If we are not men and women of prayer, we are not followers of our Lord Jesus Christ—we are not walking in His steps. Whatever else I do, by God's help, I would be a man of prayer.

The second passage is Hebrews vii. 25. "Seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them." Not only in His earthly life, but in the glory. We are told that the chief occupation of our Lord and Master in the glory is praying: "He ever liveth to make intercession." I cannot tell you how profoundly that impressed me a few years ago—the chief occupation of my Lord in the glory had been prayer—how important it must be! The Lord has made it the chief occupation in the glory for 1,800 years. If I want fellowship with my Lord in the glory, I must give time and heart to prayer. I believe the Lord would have me preach and do personal work; but if I am to have fellowship in what the Lord is doing to-day, I must be a man of prayer. The pre-eminent business of my Lord's life to-day is prayer.

People will come to the afternoon meeting where a man speaks, but they say, "What is the noon meeting? Only a prayer meeting? I guess I don't need to go to that!"

ONLY A PRAYER MEETING!

That is the most important meeting that is ever held. I sometimes wish I could preach like some great man that God has so wonderfully used, like McCheyne; what I long for most of all is to draw near to God in prayer. I think that is the most vital thing. We are going to spend the remainder of the time in prayer for one another in Dundee. Don't pray because you think the time ought to be occupied—that is mockery. Unless you have prayer in your heart, keep still. We can all be lifting our hearts in prayer when nobody is speaking. Let us all make the prayer of the one who is speaking our prayer. Let us be sure that we talk to God. So often without thinking, without any intention of doing it, we fall into the way of speaking to the people instead of speaking to God. We are trying to lift the people up. We are going to call upon God and expect God to answer the prayers that go up to Him."

Bible-Readings by Miss Saxe.

The last week of the Torrey-Alexander Mission in Dundee was in many respects the best. One of the special features of that week was the three Bible readings given by Miss Saxe, from America. The intimation of her meetings was largely responded to, writes a lady correspondent, and when the hour of the first lecture came, it was inspiring to see an eager audience of many hundreds gathered to listen to the words of their gifted sister from across the sea. Nor were they disappointed, for each lecture was in itself a masterpiece, a perfect exposition of the subject in hand, yet laid down with simplicity and lucidity, that even the youngest and most untutored of her listeners might understand and profit by it.

The first lecture was on "The Construction of the Bible;" the second on "The Study of the Bible;" and the third on "The Tabernacle." One could not but be impressed with the scholarly grip the lecturer had of her subject. She succeeded in very deed in making the Old Book glow with a new freshness and beauty which could not fail to entrance the hearer, and result in earnest study on the lines she prescribed. The second lecture was the gem of the trio, and the "Chapter Summary Study," which she explained, met with wide approval, and has already found among her hearers many earnest followers. We were told when Miss Saxe arrived, that she was the leader of the largest Bible-classes in America, and we may have been a little sceptical at first as to any woman's ability to be at the head of so great a work. Our doubts, however, were quickly dispelled, for we had only to listen to her for a short time to know that she was not only an effective speaker and a wise teacher, but that her ruling passion was to lead souls to bow in subjection the story of which she was so competent to teach. Miss Saxe has since her visit to Dundee been conducting classes for Bible-study in Liverpool.

Incidents at the Missions.

A SCHOOL-GIRL'S COURAGE.

A school-girl who gave her heart to Christ at the children's meeting in Dundee, wrote a letter on the following Saturday, telling how matters had fared with her. When she went to school on Thursday morning, she had to stand the fire of a good deal of laughing and teasing, for a number of her companions had been at the meeting and had seen her go forward at Dr. Torrey's invitation. However, she bravely told them what she had done, and what she had heard. She says herself, "I did not mind, for I knew that Jesus was not laughing, but rejoicing over His newly-found lamb." As the result, some of them went to the meeting to hear for themselves, and eight of them were won for God.

FALLING BACK ON THE BIBLE.

I feel I must write you a line, says a correspondent to Dr. Torrey. I have been reading your book, "What the Bible Teaches," and it has opened my eyes and warmed my heart. I want to say to you that your remarks on the devil have fairly staggered me. A year or two ago I learned that "the devil of Christendom is a myth," but your book has set me thinking—thank God for it—in a way I never dreamed of, and I trust I have begun to study the Word of God in a way I have not done hitherto.

What would I not have given for one of your books some years ago, when the Spirit of God began to deal with me, and I came under a conviction of sin which very nearly drove me to a suicide's grave? I wandered on for years in the blackness of darkness, groping for light, but finding none: I could never think of getting any help from the Bible, for I knew that it had been given up even by some ministers. But I was driven almost to desperation, and having nothing else to fall back on, I fell back on the Bible. After many years of agony indescribable, I at last found peace in believing. Oh, the joy of knowing Christ after years and years of darkness and despair! How my heart was gladdened when I heard you were coming to this country, and when I heard you speak to business men in Glasgow, my joy knew no bounds. I bless God for you and for all the experience that he has allowed you to pass through. You will never know till eternity dawns on you how much some of us have to thank God for. What a God is ours! I don't expect you to take any notice of this. I only want to tell you what great things the Lord has done for me, and what a blessing He has made you to me. God bless and keep you. Many here are remembering you in prayer. I shall never cease to pray for you and yours. Perhaps you will pray for me that I may be used of God "to bring men to Christ."

SIXTY YOUNG MEN WON FOR CHRIST.

When in Dundee Mr. Alexander had only to hear of the large Bible-class conducted at the Y.M.C.A. to offer to visit it. He accordingly found himself on its platform on the first Sunday of the mission, when he sang one of his solos, and talked to the young men in his own kindly way. He won their hearts, and it was with delight they heard him say that he would be back next Sunday—and that without waiting for an invitation. On all the four Sundays of the mission he found his way to this meeting; and not only so, but he also (as he always does) set others to work, with the result that Mr. R. Harkness, his pianist; Mr. R. Lowe, his secretary; and Dr. Neville Bradley, who came from Liverpool to spend a short holiday with the mission, all addressed the young men. They were listened to with the deepest attention. On the last Sunday Mr. Alexander was present, over six hundred young men were in the class. He undertook to teach them a chorus in four minutes, and he proved to be right in his forecast, for within that time he had them singing, with a vigour and a verve which those who know his manner of leading a chorus can understand :—

A little talk with Jesus makes it right, all right!

He got them to sing it repeatedly, and they all took it so heartily that probably not one of them will ever again hear these lines without recalling the October afternoon when the sweet singer first taught them that little song, which is so expressive of his own bright life.

After what has been said it will not be surprising to hear that the mission reached many of the young men of the Y.M.C.A. Bible Class, nor to discover, as was done on the Sunday after the mission closed, that over sixty of them were converted during the meetings of October. To God be all the glory!

ECHOES FROM DR. TORREY.

What we need is to know the love of Christ, not as a theological proposition, but as a living reality in our lives.

Our possession of peace of conscience, deep and satisfying joy, and eternal life, depends entirely upon what we do with Jesus Christ.

Every person who does not confess Christ openly before the world, rejects Him openly before the world.

After His resurrection Jesus Christ appeared to His friends and not to His enemies.

The best proof that one is filled with the Spirit is that he bears the fruits of the Spirit.

Some of the loveliest people I know are those who were once down in the depths of degradation and sin.

It is a possibility for every child of God to be taught directly by the Spirit of God.

The Holy Spirit teaches us through His own Book.

No amount of study of the Bible will lead you to understand it unless you are taught by the Holy Spirit.

It is the prayer which God the Holy Spirit inspires which God the Father answers through the Son.

Out-and-out Christianity is not popular.

The world knows what a Christian should do, if the professing Christian does not.

Last Sunday at Manchester.

Writing from Manchester, on Monday, a correspondent says: We had a splendid day here yesterday. In the afternoon at three o'clock St. James's Hall was filled, Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander taking the service. Rev. Henry Montgomery and Professor Towner were in another part of the city, conducting a meeting in a theatre which accommodates 1,500 persons.

In the evening St. James's Hall was packed with eight thousand people half an hour before the time announced for the service. The use was obtained for an overflow gathering of St. James's Theatre next door, where Mr. Montgomery and Professor Towner dealt with an audience of about 2,000; but many had to be turned away from both places.

At the end of last week forces were divided, Dr. Torrey and Professor Towner taking the meetings on Friday, Mr. Alexander and Mr. Montgomery reserving themselves for Saturday. The evangelists have been so much impressed with the value of Saturday as the working men's day for meetings in Manchester, that it is proposed to take Friday as rest day instead.

Temperance Notes from Ireland.

WE are thankful to say that there is a definite effort at advance in the total abstinence work of Ireland. The last few weeks have been specially full of activity. In September an important conference and public temperance meeting were held in Longford, the Bishop of Kilmore presiding, and thereafter Miss C. Maud Battersby went to Boyle, where she was joined by Miss Stevenson, of Londonderry, an able vocalist and pleasant speaker, and the two ladies proceeded on a tour through Connaught on behalf of the Irish Women's Temperance Union. Cashelgarron, Dromore West, Ballina, Foxford (the stronghold of nuns), Castlebar, Galway, Westport, Ballinasloe, Athenry, Ardrahan, &c., were visited in succession. At every place much interest was shown, and definite work has been begun in many towns by establishing temperance cafés, refreshment carts, &c. Miss Stevenson's account of the new and beautiful home for inebriate women at Strandtown, Belfast, was heard with deep satisfaction. When this tour was ended Miss C. M. Battersby returned to Dublin, and held temperance meetings for shop assistants, mothers, and adult Bible-class members.

An encouraging feature of the work is its inter-denominational character, Presbyterian, Methodist, and Church of Ireland clergy giving their countenance and help. The method of sending two ladies who can sing as well as speak is a wise one, variety and attractiveness being given to the proceedings. A very hearty spirit characterized the numerous meetings held in connection with the Hibernian Band of Hope Union in Dublin. The gathering in the Metropolitan Hall was largely attended, and much enjoyed. Rev. Kingsmill Moore presided, and Dr. Morton (Nenagh) spoke on the physical and medical, Mr. Bingham on the social, and Miss C. M. Battersby a few words on the spiritual aspect of total abstinence.

City Police Institute.

THE annual report of the City of London Police Mission and Institute (19, Cheapside, E.C.), states that "the first purpose of the Society is the salvation of our associates in the Force." Good progress has been made. The Bible studies on Monday evenings have been maintained with increasing interest and numbers. In describing what he designates "extended service," the hon. secretary, Mr. Herbert Leng says: "The way God has used our saved men to lend a helping hand to those of our more unfortunate brothers and sisters, calls forth our highest note of praise. Just a few cases: 'Your daughter stands at the top of the street; will you receive her back again?' was the short sentence preceding a very happy restoration scene between a Christian mother and her long-prayed-for wayward daughter."

Again: "In the ordinary course of duty one of our men had to take a poor fellow to the hospital with a broken leg, and then convey the news to the wife, who was found to be in an advanced stage of consumption, and with a family of ten young children. Not only was the police officer able to give a little pecuniary assistance, but by grace he was used to convey spiritual consolation, and allowed to commit father, mother, and children to God in prayer."

The Institute is open daily from 12 to 9, and Mr. Max von Cassano, the missioner in charge, will be glad to welcome any Christians who desire to rest awhile. The missioner is winning the hearts of the men, and he finds opportunities for witness as he visits the stations and hospital, and speaks a passing word to men on duty. The deputational work to churches is being owned of God, and Mr. Leng will be glad to communicate with friends with a view to the arrangement of Gospel meetings at their churches or mission-halls.

Purity Work in South London.—The Purity and Temperance Work carried on by the South London Central Free Church Council, under the direction of Rev. F. B. Meyer, is in no sense denominational, but is maintained in the interests of all sections of the community. The annual report, just issued, shows that in a quiet and judicious way a great amount of good has been accomplished, evil resorts have been suppressed, and evil doers brought to book. The Agent, Mr. J. O. Bairstow, deserves warm encouragement in his difficult work.

Scripture Readers Wanted.

THE Secretary of the Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society writes:—"Our great need of more readers is obvious when we tell of what our inadequate staff try to do.

"At Portsmouth, in the new barracks, during four hours each evening one reader has twenty-four large rooms with twelve messes in each, between thirty and forty smaller petty officers' rooms, forty rooms in the old barracks, forty more at Whale Island, besides ships in the dockyard—altogether over 6,000 men. The other reader does what he can by boat to visit the numerous small ships in the harbour.

"It is the same for two readers at Devonport, and also at Chatham, where there is only one.

"At Walmer one reader works among 2,000 marines, old soldiers, and recruits.

"At Sheerness, too, there is only one reader. None at Malta, although two are required for the ships and hospital.

"There is one at Hong Kong, and one at Yokohama. The Society cannot afford to send readers to the Cape of Good Hope, Bermuda, and Esquimault for the ships on those stations, most of which have no chaplain."

From the above it is clear that there is work for at least nine more readers were funds available. The address of the Society is 112, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

Prayer for India.

FOR the seventh time the annual call to observe a day of prayer for India has been issued. The call emanates from our great Eastern dependency, and is specially observed there, but there are many at home who are glad to have the opportunity of uniting with workers in the field. The day set apart this year is Sunday, November 15. Year after year the cry of earnest hearts has gone up to God, "O Lord, revive Thy work in India."

Writing from the Missionary Training Home, Adgar, Madras, Rev. R. J. Ward says, "It is, indeed, something more than an annual day of prayer that is needed, and there are encouraging proofs that out here in India, as in the homeland, the spirit of prayer is spreading in the ranks of God's servants. But none the less is there a call to observe a special day of prayer. Let East and West join hands that day in mighty intercession; let ministers lead their congregations to plead with God for India; let family altars be burdened with the same cry; let those who, like Jacob, are 'left alone,' and it may be like him, continue into the night, lay hold of God in a great wrestling, for the making bare of His arm in the midst of the heathen.

"We need a revival; nothing short of that will meet the case. We need it for the cleansing and awakening of the Church, that the followers of Christ may be faithful witnesses, and may realize their missionary responsibility in relation to the unevangelized and the unsaved. Thank God for all the growing proofs of this missionary spirit. At Bangalore, for instance, the Christian soldiers are supporting a catechist to work among the over 300 native syces and 'cleaning boys' of their regiment. We need on the part of the evangelized, but unsaved, a deep conviction of sin, which will surely come all the sooner as the burden of souls is laid on our hearts. In this country, as at home, there are Gospel-hardened hearers, and even the changed and more friendly attitude of many educated Hindoos towards Christianity means, in many cases, that they are no longer afraid of being converted."

A Soul-Stirring Record.—Pastor Julius Rohrbach has done well to place on record God's dealing with him. The title of the book is "The Lovingkindness of the Lord," and its pages unfold a story that cannot fail to hearten those whose spirits are cast down by reason of the seemingly insurmountable difficulties in their Christian life and service. Happy reminiscences of the '59 Revival, which reached even to the quiet village of Ridgewell, Essex, are followed by grateful references to the work of Moody and Sankey in Britain. Step by step the author recounts the varied experiences which led up to his settlement at Charlottenburg, and the far-reaching blessing which God has given in Germany. Pastor Rohrbach himself says of his book: "It is only a leaf out of that vast volume of what God hath wrought. We publish it for the glory of Him, of whom, in whom, and to whom are all things, to the strengthening of the faith of younger believers, to stir up to more prayer, more zeal and faithful service, and to prepare for His coming." Home Mission Week.

DEAF AND DUMB.

UNTIL last week I think I was under the impression that the worst affliction one could have was blindness. But since my visit to the British Asylum for Deaf and Dumb Females at Lower Clapton, I have realized a little more fully the hardships of deaf-mutes.

One recognizes a blind person at once, and is ready with help and sympathy. But a deaf-mute is so much like others in appearance that his affliction is often overlooked. Many people are willing to read to the blind, but few will take the trouble to learn the deaf and dumb alphabet.

Sometimes, perhaps, you stop your ears up and pretend to be deaf (I have even heard of children doing this when they did not want to hear what was being said to them!), but you can unstop them again at will. Or you may, perhaps, have been deaf for a short time through illness. If so, you will remember how inconvenient it was, and how irritable it made you when you could not hear what others were talking and laughing about.

How many things we owe to the powers of hearing and speech. Just think for a few minutes about this. Without them, amongst other things, you would lose the endearing words your parents say to you; you could not shout and laugh at your play; and you could not exchange confidences with your friends, unless they could speak your deaf and dumb language.

Again, think of what Sunday at Church would mean, under such circumstances. You would not hear the music, or be able to join in the singing. No helpful words from the minister would reach your ear, inspiring and teaching you (do those of us who can hear always listen, I wonder!) How dull the service would seem, and if you get restless now, what would you do then?

As you get older you will learn the delights of conversation, the pleasure of listening to and speaking with others on matters grave and gay. All this is unknown to the deaf and dumb. Of course, if they are living with kind friends, and have been taught when young to read, their hardships are lessened. But in these monthly Home Mission talks, I generally tell you of those who are poor, and lonely, as well as afflicted. Deaf, dumb, and destitute! Can we wonder if these sufferers sometimes develop morbid and suspicious dispositions, when they are shut out from so much?

This is the sad side. I have told you of it in the hope that it may make you still more grateful for your privileges, and that your gratitude may turn itself into helpfulness.

Now for the glad side! This is found in such Homes as the one I visited at Clapton, where girls and women are educated, clothed, fed, and enabled later on to earn their own living.

It was lesson time when I arrived. Needles were being busily plied. Presently book work began, and it was most interesting to watch them spelling out silently on their fingers each word that was written on the blackboard. The more advanced pupils had signs for whole words. For example, the lesson was on the sun, and a quick movement of one finger round the face represented that word, and so on.

Many of these girls and women come from workhouses, or have been brought from miserable homes.

But at such an Institution as this, gladness and love are brought to bear on minds that were once dull and unhappy.

After a few years of training these women are able to go out into the world, and to at least help to maintain themselves. Some find situations as domestic servants; others as dressmakers, milliners, &c.

Many enter the Home ignorant even of their own names (for it is only of late years that attention has been paid to the education of the deaf and dumb), ignorant of all knowledge of God, and of the pitiful Saviour who desires to be their Friend and Comforter.

It is hard work to instruct the deaf-mute, and the teachers need great patience and skill. The lessons have to be taught over and over again, ere the simplest ideas can be grasped, unless the pupils are intelligent and eager to learn. You see a deaf-mute cannot learn anything by means of hearing as you can, but everything must first be represented by a sign, and the signs mastered, ere the meaning can be grasped.

I noticed some elderly women amongst the others, and on inquiry found that these were too old and feeble to support themselves. They must have gone to the workhouse but for such homes as these, where they can spend their old age in peace and happiness.

Another thing I observed was the brightness of the rooms, and the pretty garden attached to the Home. Too much cannot be done in providing beautiful objects to be seen by those who depend so much on their sight for their knowledge of the world. The next time you send any flowers, I must ask Uncle Tom to forward them to this Home.

I came away glad that such a Home as this existed where "deaf-mute women may be educated and trained to earn an honest livelihood; where the homeless and destitute are cared for," and, best of all, "where an endeavour is made to lead all to the knowledge of the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent, whom to know is life eternal."

Bible Clock.

Make a circle to represent a clock, mark off the hours from one to twelve, and, taking the word DO for one o'clock, find the following texts in which this word occurs, having two, three, four, to twelve words to represent the hours. Chapter and verse must also be given.

ONE is a word in the Bible we find (Matt. v.).

TWO a reflection of God's holy mind (Micah v.vii.).

THREE warns us all to beware of mistakes (Jas. i.-iii.).

FOUR is for one who evil forsakes (Isa. i.-iii.).

FIVE speaks of that which is due to all men (Gal. v.-end).

SIX if we heed we can strength then obtain (John xiv.-xvi.).

SEVEN wise counsel concerning the Lord (John ii.).

EIGHT shows our love, not only in word (Heb. xiii.).

NINE God's command, when tempted by many (Ex. xxiii.).

TEN highest aim set before us of any (1 Cor. x.).

ELEVEN sweet reward if the Lord we obey (John xiv.-xvi.).

TWELVE tells of joy none can e'er take away (John xiii.).

[Those under ten, find any 4 texts; under thirteen, any 7; under seventeen, any 10.]

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (No. 407).

Personal.

Many thanks for the beautiful flowers, which arrived quite fresh. They gave much delight to some little sick children.

Hilda Robinson, Mary Bennett.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers," and hope you will find the study useful and interesting.

Temperance Foskett.—Thank you for your letter. I hope your brother will soon be quite well again, and that little Amy may be able to resume her "Searcher."

Kathleen Wingrave.—If you will send your little parcel to me, I will attend to it for you.

Molly McArthur.—You may go at once into the new division, or remain in the old till Christmas.

Dorothy Smith.—You will find your name in the second list of No. 405, which appeared in The Christian for November 5.

Barbara Bourne.—In No. 403 your answer to question 9 was wrong. In No. 404 questions 6 and 7 were incorrectly answered.

On Monday last, in time for the "First List," I received an empty envelope, postmark Acton.

Uncle Tom.

The Doom of the Drink Traffic (Dan. v. 1-6; 24-30).

THE love of drink robs us of self-respect, of the love of truth, and especially of reverence towards God. Belshazzar would never have commanded the gold and silver vessels to be brought unless he had tasted wine. Wine also robs woman of her true position, and makes her the toy of man, because associated with him in self-indulgence and passion, therefore we are told that the king, his wives, and concubines drank together. Banish alcohol from our land, and you would at once build the temple of purity and reverence which in these latter days seems to have fallen, in our land at least, into ruin. The mother of King Lemuel said, truly enough: "It is not for kings to drink wine, nor for princes to say, Where is strong drink?" (Prov. xxxi. 4); and it should be borne in mind that no kingly soul can afford to play with strong drink except at the risk that the crown may roll from his brow as in the case of Belshazzar. Oh! royal young soul, stepping into the kingdom of this wonderful age, I pray you as you pass the threshold to make a vow that you will never taste, touch, or handle intoxicating drink, then you will be likely to love God, to be pure, and to play a noble part in your day and generation!

What sacrilege was here! From the very vessels which had been taken from the House of God these groups of carousers praise their gods, attributing to them the success which had brought the sacred emblems into their midst. The gold and silver which had gleamed only by the light of the Shekinah, now reflected the scenes of drunken riot, and yet, something of the same kind is perpetually taking place in drinking saloons where the vessels of our human nature which were intended for the use of the Master are prostituted to unholy service. If you would heed carefully 1 Thess. iv. 4; 2 Tim. ii. 20, 21, you must see to it that you never touch strong drink.

Intoxicated though the king was, he was suddenly sobered by the vision of the fingers of a man's hand that wrote on the plaster walls of his palace, over against the sacred seven-branched candlestick. Be it remembered that for those who live lives of self-indulgence and impurity there are always fingers that write their doom, not on walls, but on the tablets of eternity. You may not discern them, but with unerring accuracy they are recording your doom, and some day you will awake to see that inevitably and certainly the sentence of God has gone out against you, and it is recorded indelibly upon the tablets of everlasting remembrance. God is against the drink traffic; there is not a bar, or tavern, or drink party where His hand may not be seen writing the legend of drink, in shattered nerves, debilitated health, shortening years, wan cheeks, and furrowed foreheads, in the thoughts that trouble, and the loosening of the joints of the loins, and the smiting together of the knees. There is no need to call in wise men and soothsayers, a little child may connect intemperance and penalty.

God is always weighing us in the balance. He weighs us against our knowledge, our opportunities, the privileges He has given, the early education we have received (vv. 21, 22). In this weighing which is constantly going forward, are you meeting His just expectations, and especially with regard to your antagonism to the drink? This may truly be expected of you. Are you meeting God's demand by an undeviating and resolute opposition? If so, there may be in front of you marvellous opportunities of blessing, as was the case with Daniel, who, as we remember in the first chapter, resisted all the temptations to make him drink the king's wine, and who rose to the first position in the king's State, clothed with purple, and decked with gold.

If, on the other hand, you refuse to rise to your high calling and take your part with the elect host who are going forth to war against lust, and drink, and self-indulgence, be sure that your kingdom will be divided, that your chance will pass from you to others, and that you will come finally to an unlamented and perhaps shameful death.

The one thing that dignifies and ennobles the humblest life is abstinence for the sake of others in the strength of the Lord Jesus, but self-indulgence will drag souls, who are richly dowered with gifts and opportunities, from their thrones, to the common lodging-houses, casual wards, and even gaols.

C.E. NOTES.

Lewisham Road Mothers' C.E. Society has celebrated its third anniversary recently. The secretary reported forty-four active, six associate, six home, forty-four honorary members, and eight committees, which have accomplished a good deal of quiet work during the year.

Preparations are being made in Australia and New Zealand for Dr. Clark's forthcoming visit. Conventions are being arranged in all the large Australasian centres of population. One month will be given to New Zealand, nearly two months to the different States of Australia, and a few days to Tasmania.

Christian Endeavour in Devonshire is making good progress. The county, of course, although large in area, is not so thickly populated as other counties farther north, but there are to-day 233 societies. These have 5,030 active members, 1,000 associates, 873 honorary, and 2,280 juniors. The work of winning souls for Christ in the societies has resulted in 404 associate members becoming actives during the year.

UNDER the ancient law, fathers and mothers were bound to instruct their sons against gluttony and drunkenness. If the son persisted in his own evil way, he was publicly stoned by the elders of the city (Deut. xxi. 19). Three kinds of drinks are mentioned—wine, strong drinks (spirits), mixed wines (spiced, flavoured liqueurs).

The spirit (alcohol) is contained in proportionate quantities in almost every article of food; but the Lord did not command men to extract the alcohol from grape or grain in order to use it in poisonous quantities for intoxication. The wheels of a clock require oil in small quantity to make them work smoothly, but an excess would clog the machinery. A certain amount of food is necessary to repair the tissues of the body; but gluttony overworks and clogs the organs of digestion, the brain is oppressed (drowsiness as a disease, 21), and the heart fails for lack of room for palpitation.

Wine is a Mocker.

Promises	health	gives	sickness.
,,	good cheer	,,	poverty.
,,	happiness	,,	misery.
,,	strength	,,	weakness.
,,	joy	,,	sorrow.
Looks	beautiful	but	bites.
,,	harmless	,,	stings.

Is a cheat, makes beginners think they can stop when they like; makes sick folk think it will make them well; weak ones think it will make them strong; tipsy folk think they are wise and clever.

Is a thief, steals energy, self-respect, property, business, home, common sense, truthfulness, clear conscience, principle, good temper, will power, heart (Hosea iv. 11).

The serpent first fascinates its victim, and then encircles him, one coil at a time, but does not stop until the life is crushed out.

Gluttons and Winebibbers.

What are they, and how are they formed? They are slaves of their appetites (Phil. iii. 19). There is a sentinel, alert and sensitive, which keeps the door of every human throat named "the palate." In a little child this sentinel may be called a Pleasant-Pleader. "More, more, please give me more;" and more is often given, unwisely, for by it the Pleasant-Pleader grows big and strong, and soon becomes the Tiny-Tyrant, who no longer asks for more of that he craves for, and which gratifies his appetite and adds to his strength, but demands it; then before the owner knows, or the feeder realizes the danger, a Dreadful-Despot makes his presence felt, rules the will, mocks at the right desires and makes the feeder know he is a slave to the commands of his palate, as surely as any negro under the driver's whip. Chains are all around him, he is no longer his own master, but servant of the drink crave. The marks of slavery are on him—the blood-shot eyes, the bleared face, the silly speech, the trembling hand, the tottering gait, the disordered brain (v. 33, "Strange things," fancies). Carelessness of life and safety, bruises, sickness, but a determination to return to the embrace of the serpent. "I will seek it yet again."

1. Warning (xxiii. 20), companions may entice you. Answer (Prov. i. 10), "Look not on the cup." Those who do not look will not drink.

2. The Lord Jesus warned His disciples (Luke xxi. 34). Watch and pray, that you keep your pledge, and that you win more companions into the ranks of "Band of Hope."

3. Drunkenness is the badge of the children of darkness (1 Thess. v. 7, 8). Satan tries to hold the hands for mischief, the feet for swift war, eyes for evil, lips for guile, and the throat for drink; all to deafen the soul against God's call to repentance, salvation, holiness, heaven.

S.S. Lesson Illustrations.

BEWARE OF THE GLASS.

It is said that in France a novel method of catching fish has been tested by anglers. A tiny mirror is attached to the line near the baited hook, and it is found that the fish, being dazzled, makes haste to secure the tempting morsel, with the result that it becomes speedily caught on the relentless hook. Anglers say they are able to catch many fish with the use of the little mirror, by means of which they are deceived and bewildered. So is it with the allurements of intoxicating liquors. It is as true to-day as in Bible times that "wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise (Golden Text). The flash of the public-house mirrors, and the glamour of the surroundings, are apt to attract the unwary.

THE SECRET TROUBLE.

Gipsy Smith states that at a recent mission held in Ireland a well-dressed lady was convicted of sin, and asked the missioner if he would pray for her. He enquired of the lady what he should pray for, and exactly the need that she felt. She hesitated for a long time, and sought to generalize on her requirements. Pressed by Gipsy Smith, the lady at last confessed that her curse in life was a love of strong drink; and, with tears in her eyes, she pleaded for strength from God to overcome the craving. Among both rich and poor the curse of intemperance is responsible for much existing misery. "Who have woe? Who have sorrow? Who have wounds without cause? They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine (vv. 29, 30).

THE STING OF STRONG DRINK.

Two young people known to the writer, a brother and sister, were left a fortune on the death of a rich relative. Until then they had both been abstainers, and had taken an active part in religious work. The young man on becoming possessed of his wealth, at once determined to see the world. He travelled extensively, and mixing much in society, soon became a heavy drinker. As with the prodigal in the parable, the young man retained his many friends just as long as his money lasted. When he had spent all, he was forsaken, and after much suffering died in penury away in the west of America. His sister, on the other hand, devoted her fortune to the service of God, and to-day, having married a Christian worker, she is able to use her talents for the furtherance of Christ's kingdom (vv. 31, 32).

Work in the Midlands.

AS an encouragement to many workers in the great harvest field, I send you the following:—About three weeks since I received a hearty invitation to visit Edgbaston, a suburb of Birmingham, as also to take part in a conference of Believers in Corporation Street Hall, Birmingham, on the past Tuesday and Wednesday. I consented to go and see the grace of God of which I had heard.

On the Saturday night, amidst heavy rain, a large meeting welcomed me into the Evangelistic centre. A beautiful hall, admirably adapted, well furnished, lighted, and situated on the principal line of traffic, met my view. An esteemed brother, a Mr. Farren, brought to Christ about four years since, consecrated in heart, life, and substance, purchased and remodelled the building at a cost of £5,000. The work is remarkable. A large number of young men, devoted to the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, and given to the spread of the Gospel, cheered my heart with their vigorous co-operation and whole-hearted service for Christ.

The meetings were a great success, Sunday night the building was packed, and, what was a great joy, the Lord was in our midst confirming the Word with many signs following. Well nigh seventy confessed the Lord Jesus as their personal Saviour and Lord. Our hearts were full of praise to be sent to establish the faith of many believers, and to reap in this goodly field wherein we had bestowed no labour, was proof of grace indeed. To speak as a certain leader has spoken of the evangelist being a "spent force" so far as the general community is concerned, what folly this is!

The believers' meetings in Birmingham brought hundreds together for ministry, praise, prayer, and conference. The commodious hall was a scene of Christian friendship, fellowship, and loving intercourse. Gathered from all parts of Birmingham, and visited by honoured and well-known brethren, the two days set apart will be long remembered as "seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." I could say much more of the great value of the many centres of Christian work and worship represented there, and of the choice fact that our hearts burned within us as the Lord of Assemblies graced the meetings with His Royal presence.

Henry Varley.

Cambridge Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE mission to the University, conducted by Preb. Webb-Peploe, concluded last Sunday. Throughout the meetings have been well attended, and God has been pleased to give many visible tokens of blessing. May He continue to bless the seed sown, that much fruit may abound to His glory! The vast importance of such a mission cannot be over-estimated, especially in view of the fact, brought to light by a contemporary, that 6,000 Cambridge men have been ordained during the last thirty years. There is a need for national prayer for such services as these, for the whole Church of Christ must feel the results of such a time. Praise God for the blessings granted. Pray for further blessings upon the meetings of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union yet to be held this term.

Oxford Notes.

THE 1903-4 academical year has commenced, and no fewer than 740 men have come up for the first time.

The annual meeting of the Oxford branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society was recently held in the Town Hall. The Bishop of St. Albans presided over a splendidly attended meeting. Rev. J. Milton Brown said the Society gave the Scriptures to the 50,000 students of the five universities of India, thus touching the highest intellectual life of our great empire. The collections for the year were £177, for that evening £30.

Rev. W. Bryan-Brown, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, has been holding a very successful mission within the precincts of the Oxford County Gaol. The average attendance at the chapel service has been about 120. Private interviews in the cells, to the number of 120, were made during the nine days, and twenty thanksgivings for blessing received were written by the men on the prisoners' slate.

At the meeting of the East Oxford P.S.A. on Sunday, Professor Estlin Carpenter, of Manchester College, spoke upon the crisis in Macedonia. He said that for 500 years Macedonia had been under the hand of the Turk, and this in spite of the fact that out of the entire population of 2,200,000, quite 1,300,000 were Christians, and less than 500,000 were Turks. To-day in Macedonia there are nearly 80,000 hapless fugitives. The meeting unanimously passed a resolution that it was fully time that the Government took practicable measures to stay the deplorable state of things in Macedonia, and to ensure the future good government of that land.

Welsh Notes.

THE Monmouthshire Congregational Union is formulating a scheme for the assistance of weak churches. The proposal was submitted by Alderman J. Daniel, J.P., at the autumnal assembly of the Union held at Abersychan on October 22. It is hoped to raise a fund of £1,000.

In addition to the several orders of nuns already domiciled in the Principality, another order is soon to be added to their number. The superior-general of the French Community of Nuns of the Holy Ghost has just been visiting South Wales with the object of selecting a site for the mother house of their order. Their temporary residence will be at Pontypool.

At the quarterly meetings of the East Glamorgan Welsh Congregationalists, recently held at Dinas, complaints were made that sufficient practical work is not being accomplished by the Forward Movement of the denomination. As a result of the discussion, a committee was appointed to make investigations. A resolution was passed urging the English Government to intervene for the protection of the Macedonian Christians. A paper was read by the President of the Conference on "The Educational Institutions of the Churches."

A short time ago the Holywell Board of Guardians decided to accept the offer of the local Free Church Council to undertake the religious ministrations at the workhouse. This resolution meant a refusal to appoint an official Anglican chaplain in succession to the vicar of the town, who has just resigned the post. The action of the guardians is condemned in the severest terms by the Church Times, which declares that the new arrangement "is founded upon the impudent assumption that it makes no difference to a helpless pauper whether the worship in which he joins is that of the Church or the Rehoboths and Bethels, whether he shall have the sacraments or their imitations."

Irish Notes.

A DISPUTE has taken place in Belfast between the Catholic Association, representing Bishop Henry and the priestly party, on the one side, and the United Irish League on the other, over the question whose right it is (the former or the latter) to select a Parliamentary candidate for West Belfast. What the result may be will be interesting to note.

A new organisation, called the Guild of Witness, has been formed in connection with the Church of Ireland Union for Prayer and Bible Study, with the purpose of trying to influence Roman Catholics and lead them into the light. With this object in view one of the means which the Guild intends to employ is to keep churches open for prayer and meditation on week days as well as Sundays.

The Catholic Truth Society is making a vigorous effort to capture this country for Romanism. At the annual meeting of the Society just held in Dublin, it was stated that over a million copies of various penny publications had been circulated since the formation of the Society a couple of years ago, and the members were urged never to throw away a Roman Catholic newspaper, but to give it to someone else.

Although the Roman Catholic population of Ireland is rapidly decreasing, the number of priests, nuns, and monks in the country is increasing by leaps and bounds. Thus according to the census returns in 1861 there were 3,014 priests in Ireland, but in 1901 there were 3,711, or an increase of 23 per cent.; then in 1861 there were 2,069 nuns, but in 1901 the number had risen to 8,031; and in 1861 there were only seventy monks, but in 1901 the number was 1,159. Within the period mentioned the Roman Catholic population of Ireland declined from 4,505,265 to 3,308,661, a decrease of 26.5 per cent.

The United Committee, which supervises and encourages work carried on in connection with Methodist Sunday-schools, Bands of Hope, and Christian Endeavour, has issued its annual report, and from this it appears there are in Ireland 352 Sunday-schools with 2,733 teachers and officers, and 26,066 scholars. In the Bands of Hope there are 26,514 members, and last year nearly 3,000 persons signed the temperance pledge. In the Christian Endeavour Society there are over 5,000 members, of whom 2,421 are active, and 749 juniors.

A pioneer work has been going on for just a year in the Bloomfield District of Belfast, under the auspices of the Irish Baptist Union, with such success that the hall hired for use was soon found too small. A member united to the fellowship looked round for ground to erect a tabernacle which could in the future be used for school and other work. Favourably situated ground was found quite near to a main thoroughfare, in the midst of a large and growing population, and now there has been erected a hall seating 350 persons, with another beneath of the same size, which will be in constant use.

The Bishop of Derry has spoken out strongly on the intolerance to which Protestants are at the present time exposed in many parts of this country. He says: "Thirty-four years ago the land rang with assurances that when Protestant ascendancy was ended the hatchet would be buried, sectarian animosities would disappear, and all Irishmen would join hands for the common good of Ireland. To-day, when we are too strong to be persecuted, we are proscribed;" and, he added, they had no redress, and that "their graveyards were deliberately and intentionally defiled." He, moreover, stated it was notorious no Protestant need apply for the humblest office under an elective board, and that people would rather have their children die under an inefficient Roman doctor than recover under the best qualified heretic. Unfortunately this testimony is only too true.

For several years the Homes of Rest at Bangor, co. Down, inaugurated by Mr. A. V. Vanee, have been doing an excellent work in affording needed rest and change at a nominal cost to weary workers, girls, lads, and men, in mills and factories. Now Mr. Vanee has entered on a larger enterprise, namely, the establishing of a People's Palace in Belfast, which is to consist of a large hall for general social purposes and entertainments, a minor hall for similar purposes, a medical mission for assisting the poor, a general recreation room for men, playground and covered game courts for children, industrial training institute for cripples, residence for factory and mill girls, old folks' home, where husbands and wives can live together, free library and reading-room, a lodging-house for women, and one for men. The institutions are to be conducted on Christian, but unsectarian lines. The buildings are to cost £12,000, and it is estimated that when completed the institution will be self-supporting.

Scottish Notes.

THE Sabbath Alliance calls earnest attention in connection with the municipal elections to the efforts of the Sunday Society to commit the community of Edinburgh to public entertainment on the Lord's Day.

On October 22, No. 22, Burnbank Gardens, Glasgow, was opened by Miss Stirling as a Rest House where missionaries on furlough or on deputation work can be received. During the afternoon Mr. Walter B. Sloan conducted a short meeting, when Miss Stirling told about the work that had been carried on during past summers at the seaside, of which this is a further development. Representatives of several missionary societies joined in expressing their appreciation of the way in which a long-felt need was now being met.

Mr. James Murray forwards from Chung King to the National Bible Society of Scotland a remarkable address by Viceroy Ts'en Ch'uen Shuen, in response to the presentation of a New Testament and letter from the British and American missionaries on his leaving Chentu for Canton, in the course of which His Excellency said:—"My hope is that the teachers of both countries will widely spread the Gospel more than ever, that hatred may be banished and misunderstanding dispelled, and that the influences of the Gospel may create boundless happiness for my people of China. May the Gospel prosper!"

A plebiscite of householders in the burgh of Partick having been taken under the auspices of the Scottish Permissive Bill and Temperance Association, (1) 1,101 voted in favour of claims for compensation for non-renewal of licenses being legalised by Parliament, with 5,797 against, and 207 neutral; (2) 6,321 were in favour of a reduction of hours during which licensed houses are open, with 705 against, and 79 neutral; (3) 6,612 were in favour of the ratepayers having a direct vote as to whether licensed houses are required or not, with 413 against, and 80 neutral; (4) 4,357 were in favour of the total prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquor as beverage, with 2,415 against, and 330 neutral.

"Five Points for Young Converts."

(AS ENUNCIATED BY DR. TORREY.)

Five things, if remembered, will help you each day;
Obeyed, they will keep you from going astray;
Though Satan may tempt you and trials betide,
You surely will conquer, and in Christ abide.

"Keep looking to Jesus," He never can fail,
And walk in His footsteps. in every detail;
The world's vain allurements will vanish from sight,
By "looking to Jesus," your Saviour and Light.

"Read daily your Bible," if you would be strong
To witness for Jesus and overcome wrong;
"The Author," "The Book," and "the doer" abide,
But they who neglect it will surely backslide.

"Pray without ceasing." This will bring you to Him
Who cleanses and keeps you a victor o'er sin;
There's nothing so great that our God cannot do,
And nothing so small but He'll undertake too.

"Confess Him to others." Be bold for your King
To those who are lying in darkness and sin;
What help can you better, to all recommend,
Than this Blessed Jesus—the needy one's Friend?

Do something for Jesus," He did all for you;
Your joy find in willing His sweet will to do.
So seeking to please Him through life day by day,
His presence shall gladden each step of your way.

Edinburgh. J. McINTOSH.

Schwifat, Lebanon.—Miss Louisa Procter writes that during her visit to this country a responsible committee has been formed in London in connection with the local committee at Beyrout of the Schwifat Mission. The committee includes Lord Shaftesbury, Hon. Granville Waldegrave, Rev. Robinson Lee, Mr. Beresford Pite, Mr. Francis Brading, Dr. Geo. Herbert Proctor, and Mr. Charles Ford. Miss Procter sailed for Beyrout last Tuesday, a young lady missionary accompanying her, and another promising to join the Mission early next year. These additions mean that the expenses will be increased. Miss Procter, who begins to feel the infirmities of age, is anxious to transfer the property to trustees, and that a fund of £3,000 should be raised to secure a permanent income. Mr. C. Ford, honorary secretary, may be addressed at Heatherbrae, Tadworth.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Rev. John McNeill at Portsmouth.

CLOSING DAYS.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

As far as I can gather from conversation and interviews with some of the most prominent ministers and workers in this town, Mr. McNeill's mission has been more effectual in reaching outsiders—the careless, the indifferent, the atheistical—than any similar movement during the last twenty years. Not since Mr. Moody's visit in the early eighties has a mission so stirred every part of the community.

The mission has laid hold of the dockyard men through the meetings in the dinner hour at the Unicorn Gate. Friday was, indeed, a day of power and victory. A great crowd of men listened in awed silence to Mr. McNeill's earnest and solemn words. Standing on the seat of an open landau, he preached Christ and the way of salvation; and the faces of the vast throng bore witness to the fact that the Spirit of God was at work in the hearts of the men.

Over 3,000 people gathered for the last meeting in the Town Hall. Every seat was occupied, and hundreds standing, massed together in the aisles and doorways. Mr. McNeill succeeded so well in holding the attention of the people that not more than four persons moved out during the whole of the service, which was by no means short.

At Mr. McNeill's suggestion, praise meetings are now being held all over the town in the various places of worship. At one of these, held in Immanuel Church, many testimonies were given as to the fruits and results of the mission.

"There are three hundred men working in my shop," said one, "and many of them have openly renounced their atheism and expressed their intention of going back to church-going, worshipping ways on the Lord's day." Already over 200 cards filled up by those who have professed to receive blessing during the mission have been returned to Mr. McNeill, and others are coming in.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

Another month of blessing to add to the long list of 10,000 nights of consecutive meetings in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, London, E. Rev. John T. Vine, who for so many years travelled from the United States across the Atlantic to hold services in the Great Hall was again the preacher for October. His practical addresses illustrated very forcibly from his own experience always carry great weight with them. By request, he gave his well-known address on "The Great White Throne," which has been so greatly blessed to thousands. It was a very solemn time, and at the close of the earnest appeal many found their way to the inquiry room. Throughout the month the attendances were extremely good considering the wet weather. The addresses to believers met with much acceptance.

On Thursday evenings during the month some very successful Gospel temperance meetings were held by Mr. R. S. Bradbrook, illustrated by magnificent dissolving view pictures. Many pledges were taken, and some professed conversion to Christ.

Mr. Charles E. Barraclough at Alloa.

We have been favoured with a return visit of Mr. C. E. Barraclough. Twelve months ago he came to Alloa for the first time, and we had a season of blessing, the fruits of which still abide. On this occasion there was a spirit of earnest expectation, and the meetings were well attended from the start.

Each night the indoor service was preceded by a short out-door meeting. Hundreds of men stood to listen. On the Saturday we had not arranged for any indoor service, so the evangelist determined to spend the evening in the open-air. Favoured with fine weather, we had a splendid meeting. Hundreds gathered around our band of workers. There were a number of poor children, ill-clad, standing well in the ring, and it was pathetic to hear the evangelist teach them that delightful children's hymn, "Jesus wants me for a Sunbeam." How they sang it, too! Mr. Barraclough then spoke a few words to the bairns, with the result that he won their hearts, and it was just wonderful how quiet they stood while with deep earnestness he addressed the great crowd. That impressions were made for eternity we have no doubt.

It was past ten o'clock when we concluded the meeting, and even then the people seemed to have no desire to go home. We rejoice also in manifest results to the preaching of the Word, and believe that though the instrument has gone to preach elsewhere, the work being of God will continue.

Alexander Cormack, Missionary,
Greenside Church, Alloa.

Miss Huxtable at Norwich.

Miss Huxtable has just finished holding a twelve days' mission in Norwich, in Rev. R. Middleton's Mission Hall, which is situated among the slums, and was built some fifteen years ago by Rev. A. E. Selwyn, who is now at Hampstead. The numbers attending were somewhat reduced by the very wet weather, but were, on the whole, very encouraging. The mission itself was a very solemn time, and very real work was done. The addresses were direct and searching, and the power of the Lord took hold of many of the people. The inquiry room was well used, and seventy-six persons professed to have received God's gift of eternal life. It has been a most refreshing time also for all the workers. To God be all the glory!

R. M.

Mr. George Clarke at Weston-super-Mare.

The United Mission, conducted under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. by Mr. George Clarke at Weston-super-Mare, has aroused the deepest interest throughout the town. The Victoria Hall was filled on Sundays and week nights to overflowing, which necessitated the hiring of the Pavilion, accommodating about 1,000 more people. To the astonishment of many, this spacious building was crowded in every part both at the afternoon and evening meetings last Sunday. The Bible talks in the afternoons have resulted in a spiritual awakening and uplifting, while the Gospel appeals at the evening meetings won many for Christ. The mission continues till the 19th.

Rev. John Wilson at Sheffield.

On Sunday, November 1, a six days mission was commenced at Attercliffe Chapel, Sheffield. The Sunday services were conducted by the pastor, W. Walker, and his wife, the singing being led by a large choir. On Monday evening the work was taken up by Rev. J. Wilson, of Woolwich (vice-president of the Baptist Union). We all felt that Mr. Wilson struck the right note at the first meeting. His message was to Christians; it was a call to service, and our hearts were filled with joy to see all Christians present rise as a sign that they would seek individually to lead some soul to the Lord Jesus.

We cannot tabulate results; nay, is it ever possible so to do? Yet we are able to rejoice greatly over those converted to God, and also on account of the blessing which the mission has been to Christians. Among those who assisted Mr. Wilson during the week were Revs. E. Carrington, Dr. Wolfenden, and W. A. Gutteridge. W.

Marlborough Hall, Greenwich, S.E.

A series of evangelistic services recently held at the Marlborough Hall, Trafalgar Road, Greenwich, S.E., resulted in drawing a good number of outsiders to listen to the story of Christ's love to poor sinners. Mr. W. Turner has carried on the work at Greenwich for some thirty years, and the friends who took part in the present mission rejoiced with him in the blessing that was given. At the outset Mr. A. Holness took an acceptable part, and among those whose words proved effective to the awakening of hearers were Mr. Henry Varley and Mr. Ned Wright. At the close a testimony meeting was held, when there was a season of praise and thanksgivin for these helpful meetings.

Mr. William Forbes held a tea meeting last week for theatrical women and girls at Manchester. The room was crowded.

In a fourteen days' mission at Fulbeck, near Grantham, by Mr. J. Westwood, sinners were awakened and believers abundantly blessed. The Bible expositions were clear and helpful. S. Crosby.

The Free Church Council of Tibshelf and Newton district has had a month's mission by Rev. Jesse Mayo. We have had splendid spiritual times. Souls have been won, many are convicted, and we believe the mission will prove the starting-point of a revival. J. Ayre, hon sec.

Mr. Bennett Anderson has just concluded a ten-days' mission at Borough Road Mission, Birkenhead. Though the weather was unfavourable the attendance kept up. Real work for eternity, we believe, was done. Backsliders were restored, God's people refreshed, and many souls led to accept the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. E. J. T.

Messrs. W. Olney and F. Spencer Johnson have commenced a mission at the Baptist Church, Blackhill, co. Durham. A local paper says of the Sunday night meeting:—"No such crowds have been seen within the building before. The service itself was one of great spiritual power, and many already have been led to decision for Christ."

A series of meetings has been concluded at the "Bethel" in connection with the Portsmouth and Gospel Seamen's Mission, by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Small. The afternoon Bible readings on "The Overcoming Life," were much blessed, and not a few in the Gospel services were led to make decision for Christ Jesus. At the children's services also God's power to save the little ones was manifest. Our hearts are full of thanksgiving. E. F. Jennings.

An evangelistic mission at the Congregational Church, Wymondham (Leicestershire), was conducted by Mrs. Alexander, of Ilford. The weather was unfavourable, and the outstanding feature of the mission was not numbers, but spiritual power. About twenty passed through the inquiry room, and others have received a spiritual uplift. A. B.

Mr. J. Whiting, of the Evangelization Society, has just finished a three weeks' mission at Rowhedge, Essex. On Sundays the chapel was crowded out, the people listening with rapt attention to the Gospel story. A large choir added much to the brightness of the services. Many inquirers professed to accept Christ as their Saviour. Harold M. Scrutton.

Mr. Sampson Cowley has held mission services in the Wesleyan Reform Chapel, Skelmanthorpe. He put the Gospel in a plain and persuasive manner. The church members have been revived, and the worldling convicted of sin. We had some splendid times in the open air. About thirty have professed to find the Saviour, mostly young people. Hy. Archer.

The protracted mission held at Shoreditch Tabernacle, E., has been marked with many proofs of Divine prosperity. More interesting or successful days have seldom been known than on Saturday and Sunday last. The great building was crowded when the esteemed pastor, Rev. W. Cuff, spoke on Saturday night; so also on Sunday night, when Mr. Henry Varley preached on the subject of "exceeding abundant grace." The memory of these services will live for many days.

Mr. Edward Hurditch has just concluded a week's mission at Southfields Baptist Church, S.W. The weather interfered very much with the attendance, but interest increased from the first, and the closing Sunday evening service was the largest ever assembled in the church. Many rose at the end to testify of blessing received. Some have been led to confess Christ, and workers strengthened in their faith. Mr. Hurditch proclaimed the old Gospel with power. (Pastor) W. E. Hall.

A Gospel Temperance Mission has just finished at Newcastle, conducted by Mr. Josiah Nix, and arranged by a united committee. It will be remembered that the missioner is appointed for such work by the Wesleyan Home Mission Committee, as a fulfilment of their pledge to do some definitely Gospel Temperance Work for a gift of £300 per annum, given by Mr. Joseph Rank, of Hull. There have been 753 pledges taken, and 102 inquirers helped in their spiritual and moral distress. A. L. F.

A series of evangelistic meetings was conducted in Tillicoultry, N.B., by Rev. W. G. Pope, of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union. This was Mr. Pope's second visit within two years, and his addresses, which were of a searching nature, were listened to with interest and profit. The closing Gospel meeting was held in the Congregational Church, when there was a very large attendance. On each of the Sabbaths Mr. Pope conducted the morning fellowship meeting, and also preached forenoon and afternoon in local churces, when his services were much appreciated. C.

At Arundel Square Congregational Church, Barnsbury, N., a ten days' Gospel mission has been conducted by Pastor S. H. Hodges, LL.B. (a devoted preacher connected with the Society of Friends in the United States). The meetings during the whole of the mission have been well attended, and a number have decided for Christ. The services on Sunday afternoon and evening were specially well attended. The closing meeting was a very fitting one, the address being designed to encourage and strengthen those who had just begun the Christian life, and at the same time to stimulate all believers in their endeavours to extend the Kingdom of God. Charles Garnett, Pastor.

An eight-days' mission has recently been held at Canning Town Christian Mission, St. Thomas Road, Ford's Park, conducted by Mr. J. C. Crawley and the Stratford Gospel Choir. A great amount of good has been done. The missioner and the choir, assisted by a number of D. L. Moody's converts from the Conference Hall, Stratford, spoke and sang nightly. It was a mission undertaken by working men to working men and women. The result has passed our expectations. The hall was fairly well filled, and about seventy-six decisions were made, including a large number of big boys and girls—an outcome of which is the formation of a C.E. Society. Alexander Smith, Hon. Supt.

On Sunday, October 25, Mr. James Wharton concluded a three weeks' mission at the Mission Hall, Hanley Castle, Worcester, which was rich in spiritual blessings. Night after night a goodly number of people came along dark and dirty country roads to listen to the "Wonderful Words of Life." Besides "preaching the Word," Mr. Wharton devoted much time to house-to-house visitation, and on the whole was very well received. Not only in the homes of the people, but on the highway he dealt with people about eternal things. During the mission eighteen persons received blessing, and on the Sunday following six of these gathered with other members of the mission round the Lord's table to remember His dying love. L.

In response to the hearty invitation of the Thetford Free Church Council, Mr. R. S. Bradbrook has paid a second visit to Thetford for a brief mission, and, as on the previous occasion, much encouragement has resulted. A special meeing was arranged for the converts of the last mission, and Mr. Bradbrook greeted very many, some of whom are now actively engaged in Christian work. The services were held in the Town Hall and in the Oddfellows' Hall, and were well attended, a large and united choir rendering valuable aid. Mr. Bradbrook's addresses to Christians were accompanied with much power and blessing, the careful exposition of God's Word (so much needed nowadays) proving a real help to all. (Pastor) W. Fitch.

Mr. J. W. Moodie has conducted a two weeks' mission in Trinity Presbyterian Church, Kentish Town, N.W. The church had been for some time practically empty, but Mr. Moodie got a good attendance from the beginning, and it kept steadily increasing. During the second week the audience numbered fully 400 each evening, and at the last service there were about 700 present, the largest number that has been in the church for twenty years. Mr. Moodie has been a soldier, and he used his stirring experience to illustrate his addresses. The meetings were gratifying, not only from the numerical point of view. It was manifest that the people were touched by the appeals, through the missioner did not press them to wait for after meetings. During the second week a few remained nightly to inquire after the way of salvation. M.

The first meeting of a mission to the London blind, which will be in progress for the next two months, was held a few days ago in the large rooms of the Church Home, connected with All Soul's, Langham Place, W., when 300 sat down to tea. An address followed by Rev. F. S. Webster, who spoke of "Judgment and Salvation." Mr. John Tennant, chairman of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, and its superintendent, Mr. W. Mead, assisted in the service, at the close of which, the lady who originated and sustains this special effort distributed relief to the needy ones, and books to their guides. Nine other similar meetings has been arranged to take place in different parts of London. Names and addresses of blind persons not already known to the Indigent Blind Visiting Society will be thankfully received by Mr. Mead, 95, Gurney Road, Stratford, E.

Requests for Prayer.

For a Christian widow in a precarious state of health.
For an aged believer, that the use of her arm may be restored.
On behalf of a mission being held at Curdridge, Hants, by the Rev. T. H. Bland, M.A.
For blessing on open-air meetings by University men in Oxford on Lord's Day evenings.
For Mr. William Liddell's mission at the Friends' Meeting House, High Street, Staines, November 8-25.
For meetings held at the Y.M.C.A., Borough Road, Sunderland, on Sunday evenings, for non-churchgoers.
For a blessing upon the Ipswich monthly meeting, November 13—speaker, Dr. John A. Anderson, C.I.M.
For blessing in house-to-house visitation near Newbury, Berks, by Mr. M. Jones, of Reading.
For a mission at Cage Lane Mission Hall, Plumstead, to be conducted by Major Hanson Tapp, R.F.A.
For Gospel meetings by Mr. J. G. Stanger in Greyfriars Mission Room, and Christ Church, Coventry.
For a special mission to be held at Seaham Harbour, near Sunderland, November 15-29, that God will give a great awakening.
A father requests prayer that four sons and a daughter may be converted during the mission of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander at Manchester.
Prayer is especially asked for Wincanton that God will create a thirst for Himself, and that He will bless Mr. Hogben's prayer mission, December 1-3.
Hungarian Christians ask their brethren in other countries, and especially in Scotland, to pray for a manifestation of the Holy Spirit in Hungary.

About Books.

Dr. Torrey's annual for Sunday-school teachers, The Gist of the Lessons, is a concise exposition of the International Sunday-school Lessons for 1904. It is multum in parvo, and as good as it is compact. (1s. net. Nisbet.)

Some excellent lessons are taught in Hubert's Two Anchors, or Service Chosen, by E.A.W., the boys with whom the story is mainly concerned being the true brothers of those around us. (2s. 6d. net. Chas. J. Thynne.)

A Missionary Roll: Pioneers of the Nineteenth Century (1s. 6d. net. Elliot Stock.) contains notes of the chief pioneers of British Missionary Societies, and those of other nationalities—American, Dutch, Swiss, German, &c. Portraits are given of seventy-two celebrities, missionaries, and missionary scenes.

Those to whom the price of Dr. Joseph Parker's Pulpit Bible was prohibitive will welcome its publication in ten monthly parts. The originality and terseness of the annotations strike every reader. Underneath there is constant evidence of true insight into the deeper spiritual teaching of the Word of God. (2s. each. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Professor Loisette's Assimilative Memory (10s. 6d. Funk & Wagnalls Co.) contains the complete system of memory training, so long associated with the name of the now deceased author, revised and brought up to date. All pledges of secrecy are now abolished, and the private student may now pursue at his pleasure the course which so many have followed under personal direction, or by correspondence.

In the preface to his work, Studies in the Psalms, Mr. C. H. Perry remarks that the book is intended as an aid to life and devotion. To each of the 150 Psalms the writer applies some present participle as its keyword, and furnishes a brief meditation. Some undoubtedly will find food for thought and reflection; but by most people the method of treatment in many cases will be regarded as arbitrary and the result unsatisfactory. (2s. 6d. Stockwell.)

Under present circumstances, when educational matters are receiving an unusual amount of attention, the "suggestions for the consideration of parents, teachers, and social reformers," contained in Education in Accordance with Natural Laws, by Charles B. Ingham (3s. net. Novello & Co., Limited), are worthy of careful attention. Points are raised which will be keenly disputed, but even those who differ from Mr. Ingham will do well to ponder well his position.

Seventeen helpful papers by Rev. F. B. Meyer are gathered together in The Art of Life. (2s. Thomas Law, Memorial Hall, E.C.) Such subjects as "Recreations and Amusements," and "Are there Blank Days in the Christian Life?" deal with pressing topics in most helpful fashion. Probably interest will centre chiefly in the frank consideration of four answers to the question, "Why are you not a Christian?" Through all there is the charm of Mr. Meyer's lucid style of teaching.

Divine Government: An Inquiry into the True Principles of Government in Church and State as set forth in Holy Scripture. By Basileutos. (1s. G. J. W. Pitman, 140, Gower Street, W.C.) A very readable essay, opening with the statement that government is of God, and proceeding to examine the principles and practice of ancient times. From the kingdom of men the author rises to deal with the Kingdom of God, and delights us with thoughts on the supremacy of love. The pages are deserving of prayerful study.

The Boy's Own Paper, whose past has been so pre-eminently successful, starts, with the November issue, on its second quarter of a century. The latest number is no whit behind its predecessors in variety and interest. The opening part (November) of a new volume of The Girl's Own Paper is fully up to the standard sustained for so many years. We notice with special interest the beginning of a series of papers on "Christianity—What it is," by Dr. A. T. Schofield. There is much helpful wisdom, combined with sound doctrine, in the first paper. (6d. each. R.T.S.).

Mr. Josiah Spiers' collection of True Stories, New and Old, for Young and Old, has now reached its sixteenth edition, completing 170,000. The author is widely known as the founder of the Children's Special Service Mission, and his long period of labour in connection with this organization entitles him to a prominent place in the ranks of those who are capable of leading and teaching the young. Drawing upon a long experience, Mr. Spiers recalls many striking incidents, and turns them to good account in demonstrating and pressing home Gospel truths. The book is attractively bound and the illustrations are numerous. (1s. Grapho, Limited, 9, Warwick Lane, E.C.)

To peruse the pages of Living for the Best, by James G. K. McClure, is to be brought face to face with some of the most solemn lessons of life, set forth with sagacity and tenderness. Lofty ideals are presented, and each is illustrated by an Old Testament character. As an example of making the best use of life, Joseph is given; putting the best into others, Elijah; developing under difficulties, Jeremiah, etc. Young men and women will greatly profit through reading chapters so rich in counsel and loving in exhortation. The all-important truth is pressed home that we are made for contest and intended to overcome. Victories are to be won at every step of life's progress; but the greatest victories a man can win are those within his own heart. (2s. Revell.)

Miss M. A. Lloyd has complied with the request of many friends, and has written a biography of her illustrious sister, Susanna Meredith: A Record of a Vigorous Life. To those who are familiar with the far-reaching work which the subject of this narrative was permitted to do, the book will read less like romance than it will to those who are strangers to the influence of her career of unselfish devotion. For years she laboured unerringly in the interests of female prisoners and their defenceless children, and no one had better opportunity for knowing how deep was her sympathy for this class, and how the plans for the amelioration of their lot were worked out, than Miss Lloyd. By no means the least interesting part of the biography is that which throws light on the happy home-life in Ireland, and the few years Mrs. Meredith shared the joys and sorrows of a devoted God-fearing partner. The work throughout is written with freshness, insight, and sympathy. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Those who are interested in the culture of tea in India will find an excellent manual of the subject in Indian Tea: Its Culture and Manufacture, by Claud Bald (Thacker, Spink, & Co, Calcutta). Even to the outsider the treatment is luminous and instructive on every point, from the preparation of the land to the packing of the product for shipment. By those who are engaged in the trade the volume is regarded as an important one. Young men going forward to this business will find it of the highest value, experienced workers will receive hints for which they will be grateful, while to their home friends and many who have no intention of seeing India the book will throw light on correspondence and business details which otherwise must remain obscure. Those who are interested in parables from nature will find a new field opened up to them by the natural history of the tea-plant, the difficulties of the cultivation, and the descriptions of its enemies with the modes of dealing with them.

Those who have known Mrs. Pearsall Smith (H.W.S.) will welcome her spiritual autobiography—The Unselfishness of God. (6s. Nisbet.) Intertwined with the predominating personal element, the reader will find many side lights on the spiritual side of Quakerism. The teaching regarding "the Truth," "ministry," "the inner light," and many other points, is explained out of a full knowledge acquired through upbringing in the faith, and with a sympathy through which there shines a deep sense of gratitude for the benefits received—all made luminous to the general reader by expression practically in the language of an outsider. The main facts of the author's own religious life are gathered round four points—"awakening," "restoration of belief" (after a period of scepticism), "the restitution of all things," and "the life of faith." That she should think it necessary to accept the third of these in the sense here proposed, in order to vindicate the loving Fatherhood of God or the Kingship of the Redeemer, will be read with regret by many—the phrase not being used in the Acts of the Apostles in the same sense. In a life of simple faith in God it is possible to go on while much remains without explanation that can be stated in logical terms. With our finite conceptions and modes of expression, to insist on the solution of every difficulty seems to close the door against the possibility of a vision transcending all our thoughts. Then there are Scriptures bearing on the subject which will not be forced into this mould.

Spiritualism Denounced by Living Ex-Spiritualists. A booklet giving remarkable evidence, compiled by Rev. Alexander A. Boddy. (2d. From the Author, All Saints, Monkwearmouth, Sunderland.)

Mrs. V. M. Cattermole has added to her series of tracts A Friendly Letter to Mothers. It is a timely homily on duty and privilege, and should be widely circulated. (The Author, Eleigh Water, Chard, Som.

The Church Army Sheet Almanack, 1904, reproduces two favourite engravings: "Christ at Emmaus" and "Christ Appearing to the Dying Soldier." With the object of encouraging Bible searching, one word is omitted from each week-day text. Much care has been taken in the selection and grouping of the passages. (12 copies, 1s.; 50, 3s., post free. 130, Edgware Road, W.)

A Brand Plucked from the Burning: Being the life of the late Tom Elliott ("the Happy Shoemaker"), by his intimate friend, Thomas A. W. Martin. (1d. J. N. Karger, 95, Thorpe Road, Forest Gate, E.) Mr. C. O. Boardman, president of the West Ham Crusaders' Band, writes an introduction to this booklet, which will be specially interesting to the friends of the late Mr. Elliott.

The Right Hon. Sir ALGERNON WEST, P.C., G.C.B., The Hon. Sir JOHN A. COCKBURN, K.C.M.G., M.D., Rev. F. B. MEYER, WILLIAM GREEN, Esq., and others.

Mrs. BRAMWELL BOOTH will speak, giving a Report of the year's progress.

The usual Autumn THANKSGIVING FUND will be raised in connection with this Annual Gathering, for the Maintenance and Extension of the Rescue Work. Mrs. Booth, in appealing to her friends and supporters says: "Our needs are great. I earnestly hope we shall be able to raise at least £2,000 upon this occasion. If you are able to help us largely, I ask you seriously to enquire whether the character of the work does not deserve your liberal support . . . but if your gift must of necessity be small, do not on this account hesitate to send it."

Mrs. Booth will be present in the ante-room adjoining the Larger Hall, at 5 o'clock, to receive the friends and others who wish to be introduced to her. Dinner will be served at 6 o'clock.

Tickets may be obtained from the Secretary, 259, Mare Street, Hackney, or 101, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

THIS was the first charity called a "Home" and the earliest attempt to make Cottage Homes.

Five Hundred homeless and destitute boys, most of whom are not eligible for other institutions, are given Christian homelife, educated, and trades taught.

Admission is not given because of the respectability of deceased parents, or their family. The need of the child, his lack of home training and Christian teaching, are the chief matters considered.

Will those who sympathise with destitute children help in the saving of these poor boys?

TRAINING HOME WORK.

C. E., aged 13, was taken into custody for wandering. She was homeless and destitute. After much seeking her father was found—a vile, drunken brute. We took C. in. The character now given of her is that she is a most willing, helpful girl, and bids fair to be a good, faithful servant.

WE NEED MUCH MORE HELP TO CARRY ON SUCH WORK.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Paisley Y.M.C.A. is about to carry out a scheme which contemplates the erection of commodious premises in a central part of the town, and has resolved to acquire a site in High Street, with some ground adjoining.

At the mid-Ireland Conference, recently held in Dublin, under the presidency of Mr. James Cuming, it was reported by the Irish travelling secretary that there are now forty-one Associations in the three Irish districts, being a gain of four during the year, while the membership is 6,865, showing an increase of 282 in the twelve months.

The Associations of Hants and Dorset, forming the Southern Union of Y.M.C.A.'s have held their autumn conference at Dorchester, under the presidency of Sir Matthew Dodsworth, Bart. Excellent reports of work were presented on behalf of Ryde, Southampton, Bournemouth, Dorchester, Winchester and many other centres. A forward movement had taken place in work among volunteers at the summer encampments.

At the seventh National Conference of Swedish Y.M.C.A.'s, which was held in Gothenburg in the fine building belonging to the local Association, the chair was occupied by Prince Oscar Bernadotte, President of the National Committee. Questions were ably dealt with by prominent speakers as to the relation of the Y.M.C.A. to young men in villages, in the army, and in the schools throughout the country.

The Leipsic Association, which recently celebrated its tenth anniversary, has had an interesting history. Sixteen young men originally founded the work in 1893; a year later the number increased to 237, and during the decade no fewer than 2,197 have been enrolled, including 447 merchants, 421 bakers, 100 soldiers, 77 hotel employés, &c. Soon after the foundation of the Association, a young man, who was leaving the town, expressed his appreciation of the work by presenting 500 marks to it, this amount being half his savings.

The North Midland District Union of Y.M.C.A's, embracing the counties of Yorks, Lincoln, Derby, and Notts, held its autumn conference at Bradford a few days ago, under the presidency of Mr. W. B. Mason, of Leeds, when all the principal Associations of the district were represented. The reports showed an increase of six in the number of Associations, of over 1,100 in the membership, and that there had been extensions of premises at many centres. Rev. Herbert M. Nield, president of the Eastbrook Wesleyan Mission, Bradford, gave an address on "The men we need." The Conference was welcomed by Mr. Oates Ingham, chairman of the Bradford Y.M.C.A., while Mr. Duncan Law, president, entertained the delegates at luncheon. Important discussions took places during the afternoon upon the social department of the work, and upon work in the foreign field.

Delegates from the thirty associations in the Midland District Union assembled for their autumn conference in the new buildings of the Leicester Association on the 17th ult. These buildings, recently erected at a cost of some £37,000, afford opportunity for a great work among young men at this important centre. An instructive and interesting paper was presented at the morning session by Mr. Howard Lloyd, subject, "Aggressive Effort in Association Work—the Men and Methods Needed." A paper upon "Boys—How to Reach Them" was presented by Mr. F. E. Crapp, of Birmingham. A public meeting was held in the Association Hall in the evening, when Mr. Alderman Sawday again presided, and addresses were delivered by Mr. W. H. Mills, Mr. F. C. Bennett, and others. The reports presented throughout the day showed that a vigorous work was being entered upon by the associations in connection with the opening of the several autumn sessions.

Church of England.

The Church of England Temperance Society has offered to supply copies of the Holy Scriptures to all chief constables in the country who are willing to place them in the police-court cells.

In urging the cause of the Diocesan Temperance Society, the Bishop of Liverpool has addressed a letter to the clergy, in the course of which he says:—"The masses of our people are slowly becoming alive to the necessity of grappling with a curse which seriously affects their well-being and their happiness. Above all, the Church of Christ is realizing her duty—to cast out one of the greatest causes of offence and one of the chief hindrances to the progress of the Kingdom of Christ."

Congregational.

Rev. J. G. Stevenson, of Newquay, has accepted a second invitation to become the successor of Rev. R. J. Campbell at Union Church, Brighton.

The Church meeting at the Tabernacle, Penn Street, Bristol, founded by George Whitefield, are endeavouring to raise £350 in aid of their third Jubilee celebrations, the scheme for which includes extensive internal alterations to the church.

The services recently begun in the Gayton Rooms, Harrow-on-the-Hill, have met with much success, and there is every promise that a strong Church will be established there. Rev. John Fisher, who has conducted the services from the commencement, has consented to remain for a further period. A communion service is held on the first Sunday evening in each month.

At a social meeting held in Charlotte Baptist Chapel, Edinburgh, a few days ago, it was announced that as a result of the pastor, Rev. J. W. Kemp, sitting in the vestry on Monday, November 2, to receive gifts to defray the cost of renovating the chapel, a sum of £105 had been received. A conference on "Soul-winning" was held, in which several members and Dr. Lewis, of Chicago, took part.

A missioner has been engaged for the winter by Montague Street Church, Blackburn, to visit the homes in the densely-populated district around the church, work among the sick, and give invitations to the people to attend the church and Sunday-school. During the present pastorate the congregations have steadily increased, the number being now twice as large as two years ago. The pastor (Rev. Fred Robinson) has been ill for some weeks, but has now recovered.

The nineteenth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Thomas Grear at Bishopsgate Street, E.C., was observed on October 25, the preachers being Rev. Joseph Hocking and the pastor. At the public meeting on October 29 Mr. W. H. Brown presided, and the speakers included Revs. C. Ensor Walters and R. J. Campbell. A brief report detailed the work carried on by the Church and the numerous and varied organizations which are at work among the poor in Spitalfields, as well as for the residents and workers of the City.

Owing to the rapid development of Rev. F. W. Newland's work at Claremont Chapel, Pentonville, N. (referred to last week in the interview, "Rivers in a Dry Place"), it has become necessary to enlist further help for visitation, work among factory girls, and other efforts. A hostel for women residents has therefore been opened (in Myddelton Square), where ladies can find a comfortable home at a very moderate charge with board and lodging. The work gives large scope for varied gifts, and Mr. Newland will be glad to give full particulars to any inquirers. Address: 24, Douglas Road, Canonbury.

Baptist.

The friends at Westbury Avenue Church, Wood Green, N., have just celebrated a threefold anniversary, being the eleventh of the formation of the church, the ninth of the settlement of the present pastor (Rev. F. Horace Newton), and the first of their removal to their new premises.

Harlesden Church (Rev. B. Thomas) has celebrated its anniversary by contributing over £134 to the church funds. A new feature of the work is the engagement of Sister Helen, of the Deaconesses' Home, who is now carrying on a successful mission in a neglected neighbourhood.

Rev. W. Llewelyn Williams, pastor of Tabernacle Church, Swindon, reports the addition of forty by baptism during the last year. The total membership is now 738. During the year building operations have commenced at Gorse Hill, and it is expected that the mission congregation there will be in the new premises early in 1904.

Anniversary services have been celebrated at Penge Tabernacle, S.E. It is now nearly a year since the late esteemed pastor, Rev. J. Wesley Boud, passed away, after twenty-one years of earnest ministry. Rev. Isaac L. Near, late of Christ Church, Birmingham, has now entered on the pastorate. October 21 was quite a "field day," and commenced with a two hours' prayer-meeting at six a.m., which was largely attended. A reception was held in the vestry from one p.m., and at four o'clock a sermon was preached by Rev. J. C. Carlile, of Folkestone. Later, a welcome meeting to the new pastor was held in the Tabernacle.

Methodist.

Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes and Sister Lily have prepared a "Hugh Price Hughes" Calendar for 1904, with a quotation from his writings for every day. It is beautifully got up, and will be ready in a few days, price 1s. net. It will be issued from Lincoln House, 60, Greek Street, Soho, W.C.

The forty-eighth annual report of the Wesleyan Home Mission Fund states that Methodists are awakening to the great importance and urgency of the duty that is before them, and encouraged by this fact the committee has felt justified in venturing upon several new and very promising enterprises. The past year is said to have witnessed a marked revival of the missionary spirit throughout British Methodism.

Rev. C. H. Kelly met with an accident on Friday last, which might have been serious. Crossing at the Mansion House on his way to the Methodist Recorder office, he was knocked down by a hansom, the driver of which neglected to obey the guiding hand of the policeman. Though considerably bruised, Mr. Kelly proceeded on his way, and we are glad to say was able to fulfil his duty as one of the chaplains of the Wandsworth Prison, and on Sunday last to preach as usual.

The thirty-fifth annual report of the Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund, in a striking way, shows the remarkable work the Fund has been able to do in the promotion of Methodism in the Metropolis. The total now numbers 119 churches, to which have been added Sunday-schools, lecture halls, &c., the whole costing probably more than a million sterling, to which the Fund has contributed, or has promised to contribute as the conditions are fulfilled, in grants or loans, nearly £300,000. Additional sites for thirty new churches are now held with the aid of this Fund, and will be occupied in due course with suitable buildings.

Presbyterian.

Mr. James Robertson, a well-known elder at Regent Square Church (Rev. A. Connell's), has, owing to failing health, resigned the superintendency of the Aldenham Street Sunday Schools, a position he has held for twenty-five years.

Church anniversary services have been held at Mansfield Road, Nottingham. Rev. John G. Train, of Upper Norwood, preached striking and helpful sermons, which were much appreciated. The services were well attended, in spite of heavy rain during the day.

Dr. Monro Gibson, of St. John's Wood, has decided to hold a bright service on the first Sunday evening of every month, principally for the benefit of young people from Scotland, Ireland and Wales, who may be more or less strangers in London. A social gathering will subsequently be held in the lecture hall.

A social meeting, with the view of inaugurating the work for the coming winter, was held a few days ago at Muswell Hill. Rev. Stuart Starritt occupied the chair, and gave an encouraging statement as to the position of the various agencies, and an appeal for funds was made on behalf of the building fund by Mr. Shaw, the treasurer. Mr. Robert Whyte, of Regent's Square, was present, and gave a vigorous and stimulating address.

Society of Friends.

Harry R. Keates, during the last week of his stay in England, visited Bristol, Saffron Walden, St. Ives, Norwich, Croydon, Canterbury, Ashford, Liverpool. He left the latter city on the 31st ult. in the Cunard liner, "Campania." His service in London and Dublin Yearly meetings have been much appreciated.

George Grubb, Cork, visited Richhill meeting, speaking on Christ's invitation to the weary and heavy-laden. He attended the Bible-class, and gave an instructive lesson on Paul's ministry in Corinth. In the afternoon he was at Tamnamore First-day School, and in the evening at the mission meeting at Wheatfield.

B. Seebohm Rowntree delivered an instructive address before a large audience at the meeting-house, York, on betting and gambling. Defining gambling as "a stake upon chance for gain without labour," he went on to show that the evil is greatly on the increase. It is due to two chief reasons: (1) the desire for a fuller life, and for excitement as a relief from the monotony of daily toil; (2) the desire to get rich without labour. He outlined a number of remedies, such as exposing the folly of the practice, providing counter-attractions, the steady support of local authorities in their attempts to suppress betting, and, most important of all, the deepening of the spiritual and religious life of the community.

A correspondent writes:—"United services are held weekly at the Mission Halls, Sandymount and Williamstown, near Dublin. For some years God has blessed the preaching of Christ crucified." In the report just issued of the work at Sandymount, we read: "We desire to thank the Lord for the continuance of the preaching of 'the glorious Gospel of the Blessed God, which is committed to our trust' (1 Tim. i. 11). Christ and His finished work have been fully proclaimed as the sinner's only hope; and blessing has been vouchsafed to Christians and to the unsaved, for which we are thankful."

The seventeenth anniversary of the Dartford Young Men's Bible Class has been held. Earnest addresses were delivered by Rev. J. B. Barraclough, and Messrs. Robert Brown and Philip Beeman. Abundantly has prayer been answered, for since the commencement of the work the noble pile of buildings called the Martyrs' Memorial Hall and the Blackwood Institute have been erected and thoroughly equipped, being a busy hive of Christian and Protestant work throughout the year on Sundays and week-day evenings. Numerous organizations are at work, and 1,314 young men have passed through the ranks of the Bible Class.

About two and a half years ago a mission was commenced in the Board School, Ashingdon, Rochford, Essex, since which time evangelistic services have been conducted every Sunday, and have been well attended. The Board School is three miles distant from the nearest Nonconformist place of worship, and is situated about midway between several villages. Mr. H. Crawford, of Hockley, has given a site for the erection of a mission hall in close proximity to the present school site, and a building committee has been formed, who have decided to proceed to erect a building for the worship of God on unsectarian lines, to accommodate 200 persons, at a cost of about £250. The secretary is Mr. C. Weight, "Thorndean," Ashingdon.

Fallen Asleep.

Mrs. Darby, wife of Rev. R. D. Darby, of Leigh, and formerly of the Congo Mission.—Mr. John Rappitt, for many years deacon of Irthlingborough Baptist Church and superintendent of the Sunday-school.—Rev. Thomas Hill, Methodist New Connexion, died at Southport on Saturday. He was stationed at Bury, afterwards serving in the Irish Mission for three years. His subsequent appointments were at Leeds Second, Boston, Hawarden, Stourbridge, Sheffield South, and Alnwick. In 1880 he became a supernumerary.—Mr. J. Satterthwaite, J.P., a well-known member of the Society of Friends, and highly esteemed, particularly at Preston and Lancaster. He was a man of high character and considerable attainments.—Very suddenly, Miss Louisa Churchill, at Tunbridge Wells. Only two days previously she was full of thoughts for the future; happy, and bright. For more than fifty-four years she had been almost bedridden, and rarely out of pain, and yet when able she was busy with her fingers and brain for others. She carried on quite a large work for her Master in different ways.—At Dublin, Miss M'Ghee, daughter of the well-known Protestant champion, Rev. Wm. M'Ghee, aged ninety years. At Ballyshannon, Rev. A. Lowry, senior Presbyterian minister in Ballyshannon, aged eighty-four years.—At Carlingford, Rev. W. J. M'Cully, the founder and first minister of the Presbyterian Church, Carlingford.

Books to Read. "What shall we read?" "What is a good book for a present?" These are questions to which a careful perusal of our Literary Supplement contained in the present issue, will supply the answers. True it is that "of making many books there is no end," but in view of the time devoted by members of our families to reading, it is all-important to secure a place for sound, healthy literature. Our Supplement pages afford useful direction in this respect. To make room for this special feature, we have been obliged to hold over for this week a number of reports and current items.

Two London Missions. London is to be privileged during the next few days with visits from two specially prominent evangelists. Mr. W. R. Lane is to labour among the masses of South London from the 21st to the 30th inst., at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, while Gipsy Smith begins a week at Highbury Quadrant Congregational Church on the 22nd. Both these earnest missioners will esteem the prayers of readers that their services in the Metropolis may be blessed to many souls.

Another Episcopal Pronouncement. Following the example of the Bishop of Exeter, the Bishop of Chichester in his charges at that city and at Brighton last week, took occasion to speak very seriously in regard to the practice of Reservation, and to forbid it in his diocese save in special and exceptional cases, for which sanction must be obtained. It would appear from his remarks, that, like other of the Bishops, Dr. Wilberforce has found the distinction between Reservation simply for the purpose of administration to the sick, and Reservation "with the addition or allowance of a form of adoration," to be not always observed. He also ordered the immediate removal of "altar books or cards," and the discontinuance of the public Invocation of Saints. Insisting upon the use of an audible voice in the prayer of consecration, "that the congregation may join and be brought into that most solemn act," the Bishop said, "There is no reverence shown in mumbling . . . it is not necessary to add paralysis to piety."

The Education Conference. It is much to be regretted that the Conference proposed by the Archbishop of Canterbury between representatives of the two opposing parties, relative to the Education Act, has dropped through. The spirit of Dr. Davidson was admirable, as was also that of Dr. Horton, but it is clearly impossible to come to a working understanding while the law remains as it is. A leading article in the (R) Catholic Times has at least the merit of stating the case unequivocally. From the sacerdotal side no quarter is to be expected. The Romanists accuse Dr. Davidson of "playing the denominationalists false." It is not at all a nice expression to employ towards a conciliator, but it shows what is the underlying spirit of the priests. The article goes on to threaten retaliation at the polls if anything is done in the way of compromise. The following sentence shows the drift of the matter:—

> In the educational battle we can count upon the Catholic vote in Great Britain as a unit, and that vote as a rule decides, or goes far to decide, the balance of parties; and in addition we can count upon the aid of the Irish Parliamentary party.

So we see where we are, and what we may expect. But how much longer is the intolerable strain to continue?

Salt of the Earth. The writers of fiction, who of late years have given us a literature of the slums, are largely responsible for a widespread misapprehension, which even such reliable and monumental works as Charles Booth's fail to remove. Only too many people are under an impression that East and South-East London is simply a hopeless area given up to drink and idleness. A paper in the current Macmillan's Magazine, on the subject of "The London Workman's Wife," will come as a surprise, for it is written by a lady who has had a long experience in the locality between Limehouse and London Bridge, and who week by week has visited many families crowded into their little rooms, and living admirable lives of self-sacrifice and industry. These are the salt of the "mean streets," and of them the popular novelist has had little or nothing to say. That the earner of low wages spends too much upon drink is unhappily true, but there are thousands of working people whose lives are devoted to the well-being of their children, and who are unnoticed, and receive but little sympathy, simply because they do not obtrude their poverty.

Alms-Giving. Mr. G. H. Leonard, M.A., in his lectures at Birmingham University on "The Art of Almsgiving," if he does nothing more, will at any rate emphasize some of those main principles of benevolence which ought to be at the base of all wise charity. Following the lead of Ruskin and other teachers, Mr. Leonard urges that the duty of the rich to the poor is not merely to give out money indiscriminately and spasmodically. The tenderness and pity which underlie that spasmodic generosity may with advantage be educated into something higher and better. It cannot be too strongly insisted upon, that the central point in the parable of the good Samaritan lies in the fact that "he took care of him" (Luke x. 34), and it is just that practical interest which Christ bids us imitate.

History and Licensing. The legitimacy of the demand made by temperance reformers, for a full recognition of the rights of stricture on the part of magistrates in the matter of licence renewals, is immensely strengthened by the publication of Mr. Sidney Webb's "History of Liquor-Licensing in England." Such a book is really needed in order to "place" the temperance question of to-day in its true historical setting. We are apt to forget that there is a history of licensing, extending back a century or two, the study of which gives to the present proposals the momentum belonging to age. Those who are ever ready to brand temperance advocates as faddists, and fanatics, and disturbers of a nation's customs, should be made to read this illuminating book of Mr. Webb's. It is clear enough that the drinking customs of the English people have been an incubus on the national life for a century or two. History shows to what lengths "free drinking" can go. When the publicans had it all their own way, London was a huge saloon full of drunken men. This is not exaggeration—history is too emphatic upon the point, and the country must be reminded of it. Mr. Webb shows that the power of the justices to deal with licences has always been upheld. We must see to it that they are not deprived of it.

The Position of the Barmaid. We are glad to see some signs of a movement for dealing practically with the question of the barmaid. It is rumoured that the Licensed Victuallers' Association is considering the matter of providing homes for worn-out assistants. That is something, and better than leaving them to drift into poverty, and worse. But the question is one for the country to settle, and it can only be settled satisfactorily from a moral point of view, by the abolition of serving women at drinking bars. No woman ought to be subjected to a life such as these are compelled to live. Apart from the question of long hours, there is the atmosphere of a drinking place, which must, in the nature of the case, deaden a woman's delicacy. One of the most active workers in the cause says, pertinently:—

> It is a national curse that the publican-sinner is not only allowed to work women to death, but also that he should have the choice of the prettiest and most attractive-looking women in order to make profit for himself and the millionaire brewers.

That is just the mischief of the thing. The charm of womanhood is prostituted in the interests of a business which appeals to the lowest appetites of a depraved nature.

The Armenians. It is only natural that the Turcophiles in this country should try to make capital out of the tragic vendetta which has shocked London. No words can be too strong in deprecation of such terrible deeds as those which occurred in Peckham, but to represent such vengeance as a fair sample of the Armenian spirit borders on the preposterous. When the feeling of horror at this crime has passed away, we hope that renewed attention will be drawn to the unhappy condition of the Armenians. A multitude of other distractions has occupied the public mind, and the Armenian question has been shelved. We shall hail the day when there will be no longer any necessity for the existence of secret societies to secure justice for the oppressed Armenians.

In God's House. We are all sadly familiar with the "low devotional thought-atmosphere," which the following remarks of a recent writer illustrate:—

> Some of our churches are unconsciously desecrated. People enter, bringing all their worldly thought with them. They may not have, on entering, a silent wish that such thoughts be left behind. They whisper to each other fragments of social and worldly matters—they look over the congregation with the mind of curiosity or the mind centred on the apparel or ornamentation of others. . . . There is not always an effort to bring a mood appropriate to a place where the ruling thought should be that of a serious, earnest desire to draw nigh and be connected in thought with the Supreme Power of Infinite Good.

This is why the seeds of good often fall "among the thorns," which spring up and choke them" (Matt. xiii. 7).

Spiritual Pride. There are many kinds of pride—pride of face, of race, of wealth, of position, of advantages and abilities. But it is well to remember that all these are given by God, and may at once be taken away. But the most subtle form of pride has been described as "pride of grace." Just as a worldling may be proud of personal beauty, so may a thoughtless Christian become proud of the beauty of holiness. The "exceeding riches of His grace" are a gift, not an acquisition, and it is dangerous to feel our fulness without remembering that if we are partakers it is only by the grace of God. And the humility—not servility—which will follow the thought, will only bring us nearer to Him who, for us, "humbled himself and became obedient to the death of the cross" (Phil. ii. 7).

A Cloud of Witnesses. Many people who pray earnestly day by day, "Thy kingdom come," forget how far the Divine development of that petition depends upon personal compliance with the Lord's will, not only as regards the unseen spiritual life, with its hidden springs of conduct, but also in social relations. Practical testimony for Christ must necessarily depend upon what we think of Him, and know of Him; and doubt in respect to Him cannot but result in a wavering life (Acts iv. 13). As Rev. J. Scott Lidgett recently said, our witness must be to the living continuous presence of Christ:—

> While men discuss creeds about Him, His witnesses are here and there and everywhere, men who know Him, who have been lifted into a secret and blessed intimacy with Him. This witness contains the offer that what Christ has been to you He will be to your neighbour; what you have found he may find. . . Witness to Christ must be inspired by hearts moulded to His will. How often men's politics, trade, social standards, destroy the witness they might be for Christ. "Ye shall receive power after the Holy Spirit hath come to you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me" (Acts i. 8). There is the secret.

The Racecourse. The promoters of horse-racing, an amusement which some of our contemporaries designate a sport eminently "noble," do not appear to think highly of their following. Quite recently the Sussex railway stations have been placarded with a notice respecting a small local race-meeting, intimating, for the information of the public, that about 125 detectives, inspectors, and police would be in attendance for the protection of visitors to the course. Not long ago a similar announcement was made in Surrey. No wonder there are people who persist in believing that horse-racing is not an ennobling national pastime!

The Transformation of Waste. Christian workers—especially those who labour among the lowest classes of the population—may find much to encourage them in the discoveries of modern science with regard to what used to be called "waste." A study of articles manufactured from "waste" yields a harvest of information, and, in the way of analogy, of hope. Whole industries are thriving to-day upon the transformation of what used to be thrown away as useless. Coal tar, for example, yields all sorts of wonderful things. And now the refuse from the mines at Jachimsthal—once discarded as "waste"—has yielded the raw material from which radium is extracted. The most marvellous substance in the world lies in those heaps of rubbish. Naturally the owners regard it with different eyes to-day. All this has a voice for the Christian heart. There are "wastes" in the world of men, and some have come to look upon them as unredeemable. But our faith is in the Divine Power, which can transform this moral rubbish, and make it serve its true purpose again. If it were not for this assurance we might well lose heart, but possessing it we dare hope for the salvation of the worst.

The Rock of Faith. An eminent theologian recently said that preachers often take too much for granted in estimating the religious knowledge of their congregations, and that a great need of the time is to re-emphasize the foundation truths which we too frequently assume are comprehended by all. Judging from ordinary conversation, and from the correspondence columns of papers, we think this observation is true and timely. If one thing above another could be singled out for special emphasis, it would be the truth concerning the Person of our Lord—the rock truth of our faith. All attention seems at present focussed upon His teaching. In a sense this is a good thing, for we must "hear Him" in whom the Father is well pleased. But when it is said that it does not matter much about our view of His Person so long as we try to carry out His teaching, it is evident that people need recalling to the true order of things. For the value of our Lord's teaching depends upon what He was, and the ability to practise His teaching is proportionate to our living union with HIM. Equally fallacious is it for men to think that they can surrender the Gospel history of Christ and yet retain HIM in some way. As Professor Banks says:—

> A purely idealized Christ is a fiction of our own. Knowledge of Christ presupposes the substantial integrity and trustworthiness of the Gospel history. We can no more resolve the history into myth and fiction, and at the same time retain the real Christ, than we can break up the cathedral window and retain the picture painted on it. Not the Christ behind Scripture but in Scripture is the Christ we know.

The Eyes of the Heart. Some of the newer terms which are coming into use in religious journalism, and in the pulpit, need careful watching, or they will bring with them a confusion of ideas. We refer particularly to the terms borrowed from psychology. "Super" and "sub," and other words now in vogue, are not always illuminating. The old term "heart," to designate the real, central self, will not easily be improved upon. All understand it, and it has the advantage of touching reason and emotion at once. In view of some new ideas about man's nature, there is need to re-emphasize what the Bible teaches about the heart. The new psychology speaks of redemption by unification and adjustment within oneself; the Bible speaks of redemption by the cleansing of the heart through the Blood of Christ and the adjustment of the heart to GOD, its source and centre. This is the unique note of the Gospel, and it awaits its revivification through the lips of teachers and preachers. The pure in heart see God; and the riches of God's grace are beheld by the eyes of the heart (Eph. i. 18, R.V.).

THE UNVEILING.

THE SEVEN TRUMPETS.—THE SECOND WOE.

HISTORY is always repeating itself; this book of The Unveiling is always being fulfilled. These papers do not call in question any specific fulfilments on a larger or smaller scale, in the Past, the Present, or the Future. For doubtless in the Pagan and Papal persecutions, in the Romish Apostasy, in the Saracens and Turks, in Mahomedanism, in the Christian martyrs, and in the coming crisis, striking and unmistakable fulfilments have been seen and foreseen by men taught of God, throughout the Christian ages. Though it must be admitted that at times the Scripture has been interpreted by events, instead of events by Scripture.

It is our purpose to show that as history is always repeating itself, on every platform of human life, this book of The Unveiling is an uncovering of the secret springs of action, of the thoughts and intents of the heart, and of the just judgments of Him that sitteth on the Throne.

It has been shown that the First Woe, whatever may be its outward manifestations, has a distinct and minute fulfilment in the fact, and in the way in which, sin carries its own punishment in the scorpion-sting of remorse and shame. As in the case of our first parents when they knew that they were naked, and hid themselves in the trees of the Garden.

The Second Woe consists in the judicial punishment of sin at the hand of God. As when He drove the sinners out of Paradise.

The Sixth Trumpet sounds, and the seer hears a voice from the horns of the golden altar which is before God. The prayers of the saints had gone up mingled with the incense from this altar. The horns of the altar guarantee the power of such prayer. The first four Trumpet Angels announced judgments on man's environment—the earth and heavenly bodies. Then come the visions of the three Woes, bringing judgments on men themselves. The visions are consecutive, but the judgments may be simultaneously inflicted upon individuals or upon nations.

The Euphrates formed the national defence of Israel against Assyria. But when Israel sinned, Assyria became the rod of God's anger and the staff of His indignation. Thus the Euphrates, the Assyrian river, became the symbol of God's judgments on His sinful nation Israel: "The Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river strong and many, even the King of Assyria and all his glory" (Isa. x. 5; viii. 7, 8).

God's judgments are all prepared beforehand, for the appointed hour of the appointed day of the appointed month of the appointed year (Alford). Witness the 120 years before the Flood; the 400 years before the iniquity of the Amorites was full: "the same hour" in which judgment followed Nebuchadnezzar's boast, after a year's warning; "that night" of Belshazzar, who had had his warning in Nebuchadnezzar (Gen. vi. 3, xv. 16; Dan. iv. 29, 31, 33; v. 30).

The scorpion-locusts well represented the deceitful lusts; but there is no deceit about the horses and horsemen of the Second Woe. It was impossible for John to count them; therefore he tells us he heard the number of them. The locusts torment, they do not kill; the horsemen kill, but only the third part of men; for even this terrible judgment is corrective not exhaustive.

There is a similarity between the swarming scorpion-locusts and these myriads of myriads of the horsemen, but the latter are still more terrible than the former. The power of the locusts was in their tails; that of these horses was both in their mouth and in their tails; and their tails were like serpents and had heads, and with them they do hurt.

Yet not these terrible inflictions, but "the goodness of God leads to repentance."

> Law and terrors do but harden,
> All the time they work alone;
> But the grace that seals our pardon
> Soon dissolves a heart of stone.

Nevertheless the rest of men, as seen in the vision, repented not. (Cf. Rom. i. 24-ii. 11).

The command to "loose the four angels which were bound on the great river Euphrates" reminds us of the proberbial expression "to loose the dogs of war." And the weird description of horses and horsemen, with the horrors of their supra- (or infra-) natural concomitants, necessarily brings to mind "the horrors of war." And certainly war, with its consequences of famine and pestilence, has been one of the chief of God's judgments on mankind. He speaks of "My great army which I sent among you." Attila was called "the Scourge of God." Napoleon and other men of war have well earned the same appellation.

The thousand years of peace are to be rung in by beating swords into ploughshares, and spears into pruning-hooks, and the nations shall learn war no more. But before that time can come, the nations must "prepare war, and beat their plowshares into swords and their pruning-hooks into spears" (Isa. ii. 4; Micah iv. 3; Joel ii. 9-15).

These myriad myriads of horsemen may well represent war, the chief of God's judgments in the present life; and war, with the hellish passions out of which it springs, and which it evokes, may well include all the other judgments of God under this Second Woe. No one period of history is large enough to cover the area of these Woes. They are as extensive as mankind, from Cain who slew his brother, to Antichrist whom Jesus will slay with the spirit of His mouth.

Observe that the First Woe is the scorpion sting of remorse and relates to the individual. The Second Woe is the judgment inflicted by God upon individuals and nations in this life. The Third Woe is the judgment of the dead and the living before the Great White Throne. It includes the Seven Bowls, in which is filled up the wrath of God on all who are not written in the Lamb's Book of Life.

SYMBOLS IN REVELATION IX. 13-21.

The four angels.—God's messengers, agents, executors of judgment. The angels have special spheres assigned them.

The golden altar which is before God.—From which the prayers of all saints ascend before God out of the Angel's hand, mingled with the sweet incense of His worthiness (Rev. viii. 3, 4).

One voice.—The prayers of the Saints unite in one.

The horns.—The power of those prayers.

Bound and loosed.—God binds and looses the angels of judgment. "Shall there be evil [calamity] in a city, and the Lord hath not done it?" (Amos iii. 6).

Two myriads of myriads.—Innumerable.

Horses and horsemen.—Cavalry. A symbol of War.

Breastplates of fire, jacinth, smoke, brimstone, heads of lions.—The sight of a battlefield would explain all this. Modern firearms and armaments give visible and tangible effect to the cruel passions of warfare in all ages.

Power in their mouth and in their tails, etc.—They go forth breathing threatenings and slaughter, and their after-effects are famine and pestilence.

The great river Euphrates.—The defence of Israel against Assyria; yet, when they sinned, the means of their punishment. The river represents Assyria.

Prepared.—God foresees, and prepares for what He foresees.

Hour, day, month, year.—The appointed year, month, day, hour, for the execution of judgment.

The third part of men.—The judgment is for correction, not for utter destruction. (See Amos vii. 2, 5.)

"The Next Revival."

By Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D., Brooklyn.

THE spirit of prophecy seems to have descended upon certain good men on both sides of the ocean, and the subject of their confident predictions is what they call "the next revival." In our own land that stalwart patriot and philanthropist, Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong, has published a small volume, entitled "The Next Great Awakening," in which he contends that each spiritual awakening in modern times has rested on some one great special idea, and that it was called forth by the special circumstances of the time. Rev. Dr. John Watson, of Liverpool, has recently been exercising his prophetic gifts in an address before the Baptist College of Bristol, which is attracting no small attention. The Liverpool doctor contends that such evangelistic movements as were conducted by Mr. Moody are now a "spent force, and his peculiar methods are now obsolete"! Instead of a work whose chief purpose is the conversion of sinful souls and the quickening of spiritual life of believers, Dr. Watson emphasizes the superior claims of a great humanitarian work for feeding the hungry, improving the dwellings of the poor, insuring fair wages to the labourer, cleansing the slums, and in all kindred lines of social reform.

After reading this eloquently constructed manifesto, I recalled at once a similar pronouncement made just fifty years ago by that distinguished philanthropist, Mr. Charles L. Brace, the founder of the Children's Aid Society, and the author of a notable book called "Gesta Christi." At that time the Christian people of New York were being aroused to the horrible condition of the slums and their wretched occupants; the "Five Points House of Industry" and the "Old Brewery Mission" had just been started, and Mr. Brace had launched his admirable Children's Aid Society. "Here come's the new revival!" exclaimed my good friend, Mr. Brace, with all the exultation of a spiritual Columbus who discovers a new continent opened to Christianity.

What was the result? The sort of social and sanitary reforms which Mr. Brace helped to pioneer has been going forward from that day to this, in New York, in London, and many another hive of population. Mr. Brace made his declaration in 1853. Five years afterwards came the wonderful revival of 1858, which spread over New York and this whole nation, and extended to Great Britain, resulting in the conversion of multitudes of souls.

In 1873, Mr. Moody began his great evangelistic campaigns, which were attended with mighty outpourings of the Holy Spirit. From that time to this, upon those churches that have done the right kind of preaching, the right kind of praying, and the right kind of giving and working, the Divine Spirit has descended in full measure. We can assure my dear Brother Watson that the Christianity of Calvary and of Pentecost is good for both the bodies and the immortal souls of men; and that the aims and the methods of such evangelistic servants of Christ Jesus, as Moody, and Spurgeon, and McNeill, and kindred preachers, are no more a "spent and obsolete force" than sunshine and showers are obsolete. God's world and God's glorious Gospel are big enough and broad enough for both kinds of revival.

WHAT "REVIVAL" MEANS.

1. What is the exact meaning of the word "revival"? In its true and legitimate sense it is the result of an outpouring of the Holy Spirit. It describes a state of things in a church or in the community when Christians become more spiritually-minded and active in good works, and the conversions of impenitent souls are more than ordinarily numerous. Two vitally important phenomena are essential to a genuine revival—the Holy Spirit quickens believers, and the Holy Spirit regenerates sinners; and the fruit is a new kind of life to both classes. That is the essential type and characteristic of all true "awakenings," from the days of Pentecost to the present hour. Good men from good motives may organize religious methods and machineries, but they end in pious clatter unless the "living Spirit is within the wheels."

2. Everyone who studies carefully both the Bible and human nature must acknowledge that however excellent may be all humanitarian philanthropies, yet the seat and fountain-head of the evils, the wrongs and the miseries, is the human heart. That carnal heart is at enmity with God, and of course with godly living. The disease that lies at the root in that heart—whether in fine mansion or in hovel—is sin, sin, SIN. No impure fountain can send forth sweet waters. Jesus Christ "died to save us from our sins." The Holy Spirit is sent to "convince the world of sin," and the Apostles never stopped with lopping off the twigs of social evils; they struck at the roots. It is a noteworthy fact that such men as have been the means of the mightiest revivals—John Wesley, Whitefield, Jonathan Edwards, Charles G. Finney—have turned the lightning-flash of Divine truth on the damnable nature of sin, and made that the prime reason for fleeing to Jesus Christ. Would not more of such pungent preaching—red hot with love of souls—hasten the coveted revival?

LOVE AND THE CROSS.

3. If such genuinely Evangelical revivals come, one of the fruits of the Spirit will be brotherly love. The faith that furnishes no food to hungry bodies, or raiment to shivering backs, is denounced by the Bible as "dead." How can a man love God if he love not his brother man? It is a striking fact that so many of the foremost labourers for the conversion of souls have been the foremost in the practical philanthropies which Dr. Watson commends. For example, on a certain Sabbath in London I joined with that glorious old reformer, Lord Shaftesbury, in a Gospel service for neglected non-churchgoers, and during that week I visited the "Ragged School" which he had established among the poor outcasts of the "Smithfield" district.

The Hon. William E. Dodge (our American Shaftesbury) was equally ready to labour among Pennsylvania coal-miners in an inquiry-meeting, and with New York millionaires in sustaining scores of charitable institutions. Charles H. Spurgeon, the prince of evangelistic preachers, maintained his orphanages and mission schools, and other reformatory agencies; but his chief aim was the conversion of souls; for he felt that a clean heart was the best guarantee of a clean home, a clean deposit in a savings bank, and clean living. When Christ's servants endeavour to satisfy hungry souls by filling an empty stomach—when they are satisfied with paying the sons of toil fair wages, and do nothing to make them heirs of heaven; when they care only for sick and suffering bodies, and bring no remedies for sin-sick and perishing souls, they are guilty of treason to their Master and of criminal robbery of those for whom Jesus died. May God save His Church from "Revivals" that take no account of Calvary's Cross, or the Day of Judgment, or the tremendous realities of Eternity!

"A REVIVAL OF FAITH."

4. The most idle waste of breath is to predict Revivals, for God is a Sovereign and takes none of us into His secret councils. His Kingdom cometh not with observation, or by sounding of trumpets. During my forty-four years of pastoral experience, the most copious outpourings of the Holy Spirit upon my church came when we were not expecting them. While neither pastor nor churches can predict the seasons of the Spirit's peculiar presence, it is their imperative duty to be preaching God's whole message, to be praying without ceasing, to be doing Christ's work after Christ's personal fashion of personal effort, and then trust our promise-keeping God for the showers of blessing.

All those material benefits that Dr. Watson pleads for are eminently desirable; but they are more likely to come when Christ's Church puts spiritual things above secular things, and is baptized with the unselfish and loving spirit of our crucified Lord. Humanitarian reforms are admirable as far as they go; but verily they do not go far enough when they stop short of salvation from the curse of sin, and stop short of the Cross of Jesus, and stop short of a new heart and of the life everlasting in heaven. May "the next Revival" in our Churches be a revival of faith in God's Word and the power of prayer, and a revival of holy and unworldly zeal in not only saving men's suffering bodies, but saving their immortal souls!

Reminiscences of '59.

OF the glorious revival days of 1859, in Ulster, Mr. Archibald Bell, of Belfast, is able to speak from a wide personal experience, for he was in the midst of the awakening from the early part of '59. Taking advantage of Mr. Bell's presence in London, a representative of THE CHRISTIAN waited on him a few days ago for the purpose of obtaining a few reminiscences of those solemn and moving scenes that must always have a sweet interest for the people of God.

At the outset Mr. Bell spoke of the times preceding the revival as marked by spiritual deadness. "For myself, I was converted in 1851, through a godly New Connexion minister, John Shuttleworth, of Sheffield. I knew the Word of God as a child—that is, the letter of it; but now the Spirit led me out into life and liberty. It was during an after-meeting, while in agony of soul, that Mr. Shuttleworth and a godly working-man came to help me. The working-man said, 'I want to put three questions to you.' They were as follows:—'Is He able to save you? Is He willing, and When will He do it?' As to the first, I knew God was all-powerful. As to the second, did not Christ love me and give His life for me? To the third question the Spirit supplied the answer, 'Behold, now!' and God accepted me. I have told this often, and in many a place it has helped anxious souls."

"You recall the very commencement of the revival, Mr. Bell?"

"Yes. It began on the same day in Ireland and America. In Ireland it originated through

AN ENGLISH LADY, MRS. COLVILLE.

She was the wife of a man who had deserted her and sent her away. Some friends welcomed her when she came to Ballymena in '57. While in a certain house Mrs. Colville was speaking on spiritual things to a young lady who lived there. A young man named James M'Quilkin was in the room at the time, and being unconverted (though a church member), he was disposed to be critical. Mrs. Colville said to the young lady, in the course of conversation: 'Well, my dear, you have never known the Saviour.' M'Quilkin was cut to the heart. He felt that in any case it was true of himself. In a few days he found peace."

"And then——?"

"He began to witness, though some of the ministers and elders said, 'He's gone mad.' He met Jeremiah Maneely, a farmer's son, who had been anxious for some time, and now became converted. These two found a young man named Robert Cardy, whom I knew well, and the three worked together."

"How did they begin?"

"With prayer meetings night after night for many weeks; then followed cottage meetings, gathering fifteen to twenty people at a time, when many found peace. The three youths were denounced as 'teachers of false doctrine,' and assailed by 'dead' professors. One elder followed them about, to oppose, but he, too, got converted, after a lengthened period of resistance, through the preaching of Mr. Maneely. One night Maneely announced me to preach in a kitchen. It was at an ancient place that had been a kind of castle in its day, and had a capacious kitchen. The room was so that I had room for my feet, but not to move them. Just in front was a man who kept crying 'Amen' and 'Praise God.' It was this old elder. He was filled with the Lord, and he lived and died so."

CRAMMED WITH PEOPLE

"You saw the revival sweep through the land, Mr. Bell?"

"I did. Let me tell you of two typical meetings. First, at Cullybackey. (This, of course, is in Antrim, my own county.) I was the guest of a gentleman at Ballymena. He and his wife and some of the servants were saved, and the wife said: 'Let us go to Cullybackey and see some of the anxious souls.' We went. It was a scattered village of perhaps thirty or forty houses only, but in ten minutes we had a crowd of 200 people round the door of the house whither we had gone. I had to go out into the street to preach, and the people would have me stay. I agreed to go over for a time the next day, which was Saturday, leaving in time to go to Carrickfergus for the Lord's Day. Accordingly I drove out again next day, and found 1,500 people waiting for me, seated on a gentleman's lawn. You will understand I was a young fellow, full of love to Christ, and I lavished just all I knew."

"The late Mr. J. G. M'Vicker once spoke of such a meeting ——"

"Wait a little. There was a young minister standing listening in the Saturday evening meeting at Cullybackey. It was M'Vicker. I had been preaching on 'Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters,' and

'WHOSOEVER' HAD BEEN PROMINENT.

"As soon as I had left the meeting he stood up and opposed what I had said. He said 'the young preacher had said some good things, but that it was a mistake to make such use of "whosoever," as it was applied only to the elect.' On the way home, however, he remarked to some friends, 'Maybe Bell was right.' He lifted up his hands and said, 'God knows I'm open to conviction.' He was convicted on the spot, and after a few days found peace, and announced a meeting in the same place where he had opposed. 'Bell was right,' he told the people, adding, with his hand on his heart, 'I have the same thing here that Bell has.' M'Vicker was much used."

"To return to your Cullybackey meeting, Mr. Bell?"

"It commenced at five p.m. I had to go off for my Sunday engagement, as I have said; but the meeting lasted all night in the open air, and until nine the next morning. Hundreds were saved. Yes, it was lovely weather; but people took little heed of weather. They were convicted of sin. The anxiety was extraordinary. One had only to announce a meeting, and hundreds of people would come."

"You went on to Carrickfergus?"

"Yes. A grammar-school teacher named Beattie went with me. We were announced for the First Presbyterian Church, where James White was the minister. We had a crowded congregation. Nothing particularly happened except in the case of a beautiful young lady in the singers' pew, just below the rostrum. She was bending and laughing at the idea of men preaching who did not wear ministerial cravats. As I was nearing the end of my address, I said, 'Woe unto her that laugheth now, for she shall mourn and weep.' She was smitten

AS THOUGH SHE HAD BEEN SHOT.

That was the beginning. There was a great breakdown. Hundreds were afterwards convicted, and among the rest that young lady wept and cried until (by daylight next day) she was saved. At four o'clock we went on again in the Scottish quarter, where I preached to 4,000 people. It was like watching the breaking of the waves on the seashore, to see the shaking of the people as the Spirit moved upon them. I never realized the power of God so much before. A Unitarian minister who was there wept like a child for mercy.

"We returned home to Mr. White's, where we were guests. (He was one of seven brothers, all ministers.) Before we went to rest, we went into the drawing-room to thank God for His mercies. We had only been there a minute or two when Mrs. White slipped in with her five children, and whispered to me, 'There are none of us saved,' meaning herself, her three daughters, and one son. They all found peace but one, and I fear he, who still lives, is yet far from God. Well, it was six a.m before I could just throw myself on my bed, like a sack of wheat, for I had no strength left to pull off my coat. At nine a.m. the breakfast bell rang. I washed and hurried down, and found five or six elders beseeching us to visit anxious souls."

"You had at once to organize?"

"We had. I urged the elders to get the people together. They did so. We lost count of numbers, but there were at least 200 saved during the course of a few days. The work rolled on in power. I could not tell of it in detail, for I had to go to other places."

"You were going to speak of a second typical meeting, Mr. Bell?"

"It was at Ballymena, on July 12th—that is a holiday, of course, the anniversary of the Boyne. God gave me strength to preach nine times, beginning directly after breakfast. There were said to be prepared for the occasion. A platform was erected to hold about 150. At one time there were eighty ministers on the platform. But the people would hear anybody, no matter who, shoemaker or stone-breaker, if only he spoke of the things of God."

"There was a speedy break?"

"About ten o'clock a clever, handsome fellow, in labourer's moleskins, came in jauntingly, laughing and mocking, though quite sober. He strode across the beautiful grass a dozen yards or so, and stopped dead. If hit with a sledge hammer he could not have fallen quicker, as he cried aloud for mercy. 'Mercy' was his prayer until five o'clock in the evening. (Next day they told me he was a happy Christian.) Henry Bewley, of Dublin, was in the meeting and wanted to speak to me, but could not reach me for two hours owing to the crowd. We had a hollow in front of the platform especially for the anxious. It was covered the whole day with ladies and gentlemen, farmers and workpeople—all classes, indeed, but nobody could tell how many hundreds were saved that day."

"A glorious time, Mr. Bell!"

"It was typical, as I have said, of what occurred in hundreds of places, where great numbers of people were led into the kingdom. And if you think, 'Well, Brother Bell is old and getting fanciful,' I can excuse you, for you did not see it. The half has not been told."

Week of Prayer, 1904.—The Councils of the Evangelical Alliance and the Central Y.M.C.A. have arranged Meetings for Prayer in Exeter Hall, daily, from 1 to 2 p.m, and from 7.30 to 9 p.m., Jan. 4—8, 1904. The Solemnity of the Times, the Necessities of the Lord's Work and People, the Condition of the World (particularly in the East of Europe), and the suggested topics in the Evangelical Alliance programme, will afford subjects for intercession.

THE LATE

Mr. William Quarrier.

A MAN WHO TOOK HOLD ON GOD.

MR. WILLIAM QUARRIER, the founder of the Orphan Homes of Scotland, has gone beyond, "absent from the body, present with the Lord," and with his departure an honourable career has ended, a memorable life has closed, and Scottish orphans have suffered a great and irreparable loss. On Thursday, October 16 last, he fell asleep in Christ, and passing from this sphere of service he has left behind him multitudes all over the land, and many far across the seas, who bewail and mourn the loss that they, as well as the country at large, have sustained.

The moral excellencies of Mr. Quarrier were many, but among them there were three that particularly distinguished him: (1) his love for the welfare of poor children; (2) his faith in God; (3) his utterly disinterested life.

His love for needy and destitute children was something astonishing. His own early hardships, no doubt, helped to add to his interest in their welfare, but beyond all question he was a man, apart from the educative influence of early hardships, who had an endowment of tender sympathy that impelled him to find objects on which to pour itself out; and in attending to the wants of the poor and needy children he found abundant scope for its outlet. In a sense applicable to few he was Master Greatheart, and thousands of children have been advantaged and blessed by the wealth of pity that for nearly forty years of his life took practical shape on their behalf.

But it was his faith in God that secured for him the transcendent position that he occupied among his fellow-men. His daring, courageous faith marked him out as a prince in Israel, and gave him the prominence that he attained. Faith in God was the principle with which he removed mountains of difficulty. From first to last there was no change in him in this, except as to its growth. As he began so he ended. He prayed, he believed, and he reached out the hand of faith on behalf of the helpless children, to Him who is able to help, and God heard his prayers and honoured the faith of His servant. As it was expressed by one of our contemporaries, "His courage, enthusiasm, and faith were extraordinary, but events justified them." In this age of doubt and distrust his faith stood firm. He was as a lighthouse amid the gloom. There was no taint of Agnosticism about him, for he laboured and endured as seeing Him who is invisible.

Mr. Quarrier's disinterestedness was well known to those who knew him best. He planned, and prayed, and laboured, and toiled for others. Even when working hard at his business in his early manhood, he was planning how much money he could save to start a home for the rescue of the poor and destitute children who were waiting to be picked up from the streets. And when he had built up a business that was bringing him in an income of about a thousand a year, he was led eventually, as the work of rescue grew on his hands, to forsake all and follow the Lord undividedly in the work to which He had manifestly called him. Scotland may well be proud of such a noble and unselfish life.

THE LATE MR. WILLIAM QUARRIER.

From Photograph by Messrs. T. and R. Annan and Sons, Glasgow.

It was in Greenock, that large mercantile town with widespread shipping interests situated on the Firth of Clyde, that he was born on September 29, 1829, so that at his decease he had but shortly entered on his 75th year. The Orphan Homes of Scotland are situated at the head of Strathgryffe, about seven miles distant from Greenock, only about two hours' walk from where he was born.

He was the second of three children. One sister older than himself still survives, and one younger passed away many years ago. Before he was three years of age his father died, and two years later, his mother with her three children removed to Glasgow. His mother was a capable needlewoman, but the struggle for existence was keen. His share in the fight for daily bread began early, for at seven years of age he obtained employment, at which he wrought for ten or twelve hours a day putting heads on pins, receiving in return a shilling a week. Shortly afterwards he was apprenticed to the shoemaking trade, and by the time he entered on his teens he was able to do the work of a journeyman. At twenty-three he set up in business for himself, and four years later he married. Mrs. Quarrier has been a true helpmeet, and their married life was a very happy one. Four of their family survive, the eldest daughter being the wife of Pastor D. J. Findlay, of St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow. The others, a son and two daughters—one of them the widow of James Burges, whose death was noticed in The Christian some months ago—are all actively interested in the work of the Homes. Hundreds of letters have poured in on Mrs. Quarrier and her family, expressing sympathy with them in their great loss, and prayer on their behalf, as well as on behalf of the work from which the human head has been taken, will be greatly valued.

Mr. Quarrier's faith in God was not the product of early home-training, as is sometimes the case. It was at a Sabbath-school, when he was about six years of age, that he first heard of a God who lived above the blue sky, and who loved and cared for little children. Later—how much later he could not remember, though it could not be many months at the most—there came a day, when, after having had nothing to eat for thirty-six hours, he wondered as he stood on the street, cold and hungry, why everybody passed him by and paid no attention to him. And as he stood there, full of hunger and wonder, he resolved that if ever he should be rich he would think of poor children—a noble resolve, and one which he magnificently carried out! It is beyond all question that the kind thought which filled his young heart that day was from above, from whence every good thought cometh; and we can easily see that the God of the fatherless boy was leading him by a way that he knew not, and by a way that naturally he desired not, in preparing him for the distinguished position he was afterwards to fill.

When he was in his eighteenth year, Mr. Quarrier was converted to Christ. This great crisis was brought about through a godly woman, a Mrs. Hunter, who owned a boot shop in which he was employed at the time, inviting him to the church which she attended, on learning that he went nowhere. He had not been trained to church-going, but he very readily responded when invited. At this church, in connection with the regular ministry, his eyes were opened to see Jesus as his Saviour, and the new life was entered upon. It adds to the interest of the incident to learn that Mrs. Hunter's daughter, Isabella, about ten years later became Mrs. Quarrier, and it is she, who now, after forty-seven years of happy married life, mourns and feels most keenly the great loss that William Quarrier's removal has involved.

In the year 1864, work of an ameliorative kind among the Glasgow street boys was begun. A Shoeblack Brigade, a Newspaper Brigade, &c., were started, and eight years later the Orphan Homes took shape. During the thirty-one years that the work of rescue went on under his care, fully 13,000 children were dealt with. The village contains at present over sixty buildings, and the aggregate value of the property is something like a quarter of a million. Including the sums received for maintenance, over half a million of money was entrusted to his care for the work by a confiding public, and it is sufficient to say that no man was ever more faithful to a public trust.

It is only fair to Mr. Quarrier's memory to add that to him belonged the honour of taking the initiative in erecting buildings for consumptive patients. The Sanatoria reared by him at Bridge of Weir were the first of the kind in Scotland. Many communities have been stirred through his example to take an interest in those afflicted with that fell disease, but he led the van.

The funeral day was one never to be forgotten by those present. Two special trains conveyed mourners from Glasgow to Bridge of Weir station, where conveyances were waiting to carry the visitors to the Homes, two miles distant. Many of these visitors came from widely different parts of the country, About one o'clock the body, which was inclosed in a beautiful oak coffin, was borne from Mr. Quarrier's residence to the church. At a few minutes before three o'clock, the hour for commencing the service, when Mrs. Quarrier and family entered the building, the church, with the exception of the platform and some reserved seats in front of it, was densely packed. Over and above the children and the Homes' workers, numbering about 1,400, hundreds of mourners were content to occupy whatever standing room could be obtained. At three o'clock a crowd from the second special train pushed in, filling up every nook and corner of the building. The platform was filled with a representative company, while among the audience were many ministers of the Gospel and other representative men, professional and commercial.

Pastor D. J. Findlay, of St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow, son-in-law of Mr. Quarrier, who conducted the service both in the church and at the grave, opened the proceedings by giving out the well-known hymn, "Rock of Ages, cleft for me." The reading of Scripture and prayer which followed were taken part in by Lord Overtoun, Sir Samuel Chisholm, Mr. Alex. Mackeith, Mr. Walter Sloan, Revs. D. M. Macintyre, George Green, H. W. Bainbridge, and Robert Clark. Mr. David Douglas, superintendent of the City Home, who has been associated with the work for twenty-four years, bore testimony in a feeling manner to Mr. Quarrier's high qualities of heart and head. He (Mr. Quarrier) never saw a child whom he despaired of, and he was ever ready to lift up the lowest. Mr. Douglas's eulogy befitted the occasion, and was a worthy tribute from an old and highly-valued servant.

Pastor Findlay followed with his tribute. Mr. Douglas, he said, had spoken from the second circle; he spoke from the inmost. It had been one of the privileges of his life to know Mr. Quarrier from his boyhood, and he had never known him to speak one selfish word, nor had he ever known him to fight one battle in his own interest. He used no exaggerated language when he said he was Scotland's greatest philanthropist; but his greatness lay in this, that he was a Christian first and a philanthropist second. William Quarrier was above and beyond everything else a Christian man, he was a man in Christ Jesus.

Holding up the Bible, which had been laid on the coffin before the service began, Mr. Findlay said that Mr. Quarrier never touched his Bible with soiled hands, yet the print on some of the pages was nearly rubbed away. He was a man of one book—the Bible—and he loved it, and lived it. The hymn: "Oh, God, our help in ages past," having been sung, and the benediction pronounced by Principal Hutton, the children filed out and took their places on either side of the avenue leading from the church to the cemetery within the grounds. Starting from the church-door, the big lads from the City Home led the procession, followed by the "ship" boys carrying the flowers; then came six of the "fathers" bearing the coffin, which they carried shoulder high. Closely behind the coffin Mrs. Quarrier and family and relatives walked, and immediately behind them followed Lord Provost Sir John Ure Primrose, and several of the magistrates of Glasgow. As with bared heads, in perfect silence, the mourners passed along, from the children and others who lined the avenue, the tears fell thick and fast. At the grave the hymn was sung:—

> On that bright and golden morning
> When the Son of Man shall come.

Thereafter the coffin was lowered into the grave, prayer was offered, the doxology was sung, and the great company dispersed.

It was a great tribute, and the memory of it can never fade. J. C.

Not Death, but Life.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, if a man keep my saying, he shall never see death" (John viii. 51). "To die is gain" (Phil. i. 21).

> To die in Christ, is not to die,
> In Christ death met its doom;
> It is to pass to those bright scenes
> Where death can never come.
> To die in Christ, is just to pass
> From darkness into light—
> To say farewell to all but bliss,
> A last adieu to night.
> To die in Christ, the risen Lord,
> Is not to sink, but rise—
> A blessed moment of release,
> A joy, a glad surprise.
> To die in Christ; so let me pass,
> Should Jesus tarry long,
> At perfect rest with Him, before
> Heaven's rapturous burst of song.

Gospel Messages for the People is a useful little book for evangelists and inquiry room workers, and a companion volume, What is Heaven? will be helpful in the instruction of young believers. (9d. each, post free 11d. Of the author—Pastor F. E. Marsh, 3, Park Place West, Sunderland.)

Correction.—We regret that a typographical error occurred in the third verse of the poem "Together," published in our last issue, which should have read as follows:—

> Till then, He wills His saints,
> By word and spirit led,
> Unto one name, the name adored,
> Should méet to "break the bread."

Readers who have preserved their copies will be glad to make the alteration.

The Evangelical Alliance.

THE Autumnal Conference of the Evangelical Alliance was held on Tuesday, November 10, at Walthamstow, under the presidency of Mr. W. H. Seagram, and was well attended in the afternoon and evening. The addresses given were of a high tone spiritually, and those who were present will long remember a day spent in the Master's realized presence.

After hymn and prayer, the hon. secretary read the "Practical Resolutions," drawn up by those saintly men, who in 1846 assembled to organize the Alliance. So beautiful are they that the chairman subsequently remarked: "Surely if we lived up to the standard they set forth, we should be almost perfect disciples." He also urged very strongly the desire that all members of the Alliance should be true believers, born of God, and not merely nominal Christians. He instanced a recent case of a lady who thought she was a Christian because a relative of hers was a dignitary in the Church, and warned all not to be satisfied with merely holding Evangelical doctrines.

Rev. J. G. Train, of Norwood, gave the first address, which was singularly comprehensive. The heads only can be mentioned here. They were the

FOUR WORDS OF THE GREAT MINISTRY:—

1. "Come," our Lord's word to the sinner;
2. "Follow," His word to the disciple;
3. "Abide," His word to the saint;
4. "Go," His word to the servant.

Rev. James Consterdine followed, drawing a contrast between the "soulish" or sensual man, and the man who is energized and controlled by God's Holy Spirit. He said: "Christ's presence in us is the secret of all true life. He is our life. 'When Christ our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with Him in glory.'" Mr. Consterdine spoke of—(1) The spiritual life, (2) its cultivation, (3) its fruit. To go to the root of the subject, we must turn back to Genesis iii. Sin entered, death that moment entered, and immediately our first parents died, not physically but spiritually; they were afraid, and they hid. Now, thanks be to God, the believer is "dead" and "hidden," not dead in sin as Adam, not hidden as Adam, but dead to sin, and hidden in the Lord Jesus. "Ye died, and your life is hid with Christ in God."

A believer is a branch broken off. The very word our Lord uses for "branch," implies something broken off; hence St. Paul's allusion in Rom. xi. to the "graft" broken off from the wild stem, grafted into the true olive. In grafting, the stem so was the Lord Jesus wounded that we might be grafted, and when the vital union has taken place, the sap—the Holy Ghost—flows into us. The living water in John iv. is another figure showing the same truth.

MUST BE WOUNDED OR PIERCED,

The Holy Ghost in His seven-fold energy, in His true Personality, is at our disposal. He is the Spirit of Truth and the Spirit of Love; all important are they in the cultivation of the spiritual life. We must ever speak the truth in love. To speak the truth in bitterness is useless. To show an apparent spirit of love at the sacrifice of truth is equally dangerous.

Now, as to the Fruit. When our Lord spoke of the "fruit," whether of the corn, or the vine, or whatever figure He used, it was in connection with its reproduction, the winning of other souls. Hs forgot His hunger and His thirst in His desire to lead a soul into the light and the truth. Nothing is so Christlike as to spend our time, our money, our all, in seeking to win other souls. Let it be our holiest passion to seek to win souls. Paul said: "For God is my record how greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ." No wonder he had such "a crown of rejoicing."

Other addresses followed later in the day from Mr. R. C. Morgan, Rev. J. B. Barraclough, and Rev. J. Gosset-Tanner.

THE LIFE STORY — OF —
WILLIAM QUARRIER.
A Romance of Faith.

With a Preface by SIR SAMUEL CHISHOLM, BART., ex-Lord Provost of Glasgow.

"There are few life-stories which can compare in simple human interest with the story of the life of William Quarrier. I have seen no more impressive sight than that of these twelve hundred children gathered together in their beautiful, comfortable, cheerful church, their faces beaming with intelligence and happiness, and making the service to themselves, and to every visitor a simple joy. And to one who knows anything of the previous history of these children, who, it may be, has seen some of them the day before they were admitted, the contrast suggests the 'new heaven and the new earth.'"

By Rev. DAVID GREGG, D.D.

IN His prayer to the Father, Jesus makes for us the greatest possible request. He asks God to save, not only ourselves, but our lives, and to make our lives effective powers for the salvation of others.

There is a great and fundamental truth just here, one which we ought to keep always in the light. It is that Christ wants our saved lives as well as our saved selves. He has a mission down here in this world for saved lives. He wants them lived right in the midst of sin and of sinful men, as a rebuke to sin; and as a revelation of how men may be saved through and by Him; and as a standing invitation to come unto Him and be saved; and as an exponent of His redeeming grace; and as a type of what men can be, and ought to be; and as a reproduction of Himself and of His life among men. Christ has a mission for His people in this world, and the world needs this mission truly fulfilled. The world needs Christians now, just as formerly it needed Jesus Christ Himself. That is the reason Jesus says: "I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world."

The saved Peter has a work to do for the Master and for the world. He is not ready to go yet; he must stay and lead on the day of Pentecost. The saved John has a work to do for the Master and for the world. He is not ready to go yet; he must stay and write the Apocalypse and the Fourth Gospel. The saved Paul has a work to do for the Master and for the world. He is not ready to go yet; he must stay and write his Epistles, and found and organize Christian Churches, and give the Gospel a new setting, a new statement, and a new start. He must stay and evolve from the story of the Christ the great fundamental doctrines which are wrapped up in that story.

If these men of the early days had been taken out of the world on the day of their conversion, who would have written the New Testament, and who would have organized the Christian Church? If Augustine and Calvin had been translated at the beginning of their Christian careers, where would be the world's great system of Christian theology? If Luther had been called above, the moment he found Jesus Christ, what would have become of the great Reformation? As Christians, we are here with a mission, just as was the Master Himself, and it is our mission here to continue Him and His saving work. As John, the disciple of Love, puts it, "As He is, so are we in the world." . . .

We are to keep in unimpeded contact with God, and also with sinners, and so bring God and sinners together, that sinners may be saved. Our first master-passion in life is to live in unbroken communion with God, and our second is to spend ourselves in seeking and saving the lost. We are to be the mediators between God and the lost. We are to be the light of the world, the salt of the earth. We are to be here as a redeeming agency. We are to be Christ-centres. "As He is, so are we in the world." If we are true to ourselves we can be all this. When this prayer of Jesus in our behalf is fully answered, we shall be all this. We shall be in this world, but not of this world. We shall be Nazarenes. We shall be instructors. We shall be leaders. We shall be sources of new spiritual life. We shall be living Gospels. Men will feel the power of the impact of our life upon their life, and as a result there will be convictions, conversions, and confessions among those with whom we dwell.

Pure Fun is a book for boys containing many pictures of a humorous character in the style familiar to readers of the "Boys' Own Paper." (1s. R.T.S.

* From Individual Prayer as a Working Force. (2s. net. Revell.) A beautiful little book, containing studies in the life of Christ, Abraham, and Paul—also in the life of the Church and the life of fellowship between Christ and believers. We trust these pages will have many readers in sympathy with the prayerful intentions of their author.

The Method of the Tempter.*

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN, D.D.

CONSIDER the tempter; and the first point of interest is that of a perpetual method, incidentally revealed in his attack upon Jesus. Carefully read the quotations from Scripture in which Jesus replied to his attacks, side by side with the passages in the Old Testament. . . .

If the references in Deuteronomy are observed, it will be discovered that they are quoted in opposite order to the way in which they occur in the book. In answer to the temptation concerning bread, Christ uttered words to be found in Deut. viii. 3. In replying to the temptation directed against trust, His quotation was from Deut. vi. 16. While in replying to that in the realm of worship, the quotation is from Deut. vi. 13. In the law of God the order is worship, trust, bread. That order the devil inverted, and his temptations proceeded as to bread, trust, worship. This is a revelation of the perpetual method of Satan, and also of his estimate of humanity. . . .

He appeals first to man as being animal only, calling him to satisfy his material appetite, as though that were the sum total of life. God never so appeals to man, even in his fall. Notwithstanding the ruin and the wreckage of human life, the message of God is always one that calls man first to worship and a recognition of his spiritual nature. The Divine plan is ever that of recognising the divinity in man, the magnificence of his spiritual being, ruined magnificence to-day, and yet truly magnificent in the ruin, because capable of communion with God. The word of God is ever, "Seek ye first His kingdom" (Matt. vi. 33); and then He appeals to the trust in man, and promises him bread and all things necessary. Satan called this Man to feed His physical life, and endeavoured to break down His trust in God, and to divert His worship from the true to the false, and so change His allegiance and His service to bondage and slavery.

Then, again, notice how the enemy silently confessed his defeat. That is impressively evident by the fact that in each temptation the Master gave him but one reply. No second argument was needed. Looking back on that threefold process, in the wilderness, on the wing of the temple, and on the high mountain, there is seen a Man standing in a fortress that hell is utterly unable to capture, replying to each attack in one brief sentence. The silence of the enemy after the reply of the Lord was a clear confession of his defeat, and a remarkable proof that he is unable to gain any advantage over those who are content to abide, at whatever cost, in the will of God. . . .

Yet once again. In this temptation there is an intimation of the devil's estimate of the work of Jesus. After showing Him the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, he declared his conviction that to capture the soul of Christ would be a greater victory than all his conquests. He reckoned this perfect Man to be worth all over which he claimed to have gained authority. "All these," said the enemy; and the offer included the result of the dreadful persistency of diabolical endeavour through long centuries, the evolution of evil through tedious processes. The spotless Son of God was, in the estimate of the devil, of more value than all. In effect, the enemy said, I will give to Thee all that has cost so much, if I may but gain for one moment Thy homage. It is a stupendous and startling revelation, the devil's estimate of the worth of Christ.

There are persons who say that they cannot understand the expiatory work of Christ on the cross, because of the difficulty of believing that the suffering and death of one could possibly be sufficient for the redemption of the world. Satan evidently recognised the infinite value of this second Man; and understood, moreover, the relation of that undepreciated value to the redemption of the world.

* From The Crises of the Christ (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton)—a thoughtful and helpful contemplation of the main facts in the life of Christ, from the aspect of the accomplishment of a Divine work. A strong point is the treatment of the union of the Divine and the human under each head—His birth, baptism, temptation, transfiguration, crucifixion, resurrection, and ascension. The inner meaning of our Lord's earthly career is comprehensively dealt with as by one who has pondered deeply on the things of God.

The Chastening of the Lord.*

By Rev. HUGH MACMILLAN, D.D., LL.D.

THE blessing of God is ever the blessing of sorrow. He gives to each believer, as He gave to Christ Himself, a cross. It was said by the pagan poets that madness was the penalty which Hercules paid for being so near the gods. And it is true indeed that those whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth. Their sufferings are the marks of the Lord Jesus, the wounds of His cross, the jewelled stars which mark out the nobility of heaven. If they have Diviner joys, they must have deeper woes, than other people; if their peace passeth all understanding, with their sorrows no stranger can intermeddle. . . .

The angel's visit to the Virgin Mary at Nazareth was the foreboding of the sorrow and the shame that were to come to her in virtue of that honour, the sword that was to pierce her own soul also. Paul was transported to the third heaven and heard unutterable things, but he had a thorn in the flesh, in consequence, to wound and mortify him. And so it must ever be. God cannot come near us, even to bless us, without His presence shutting out the sunshine and casting a shadow over us. The flame of His holiness cannot touch our frames without shrivelling them up, even when it comes to purify us.

There is ever an effort to success alike in the natural and spiritual sphere. We hardly ever get what we have striven hard for, in the exact way that we had expected, and without any drawback. To the exaltation of feeling and the quickening of the mind, there is annexed the penalty of the weariness of the body. The gains of life are accompanied by the inevitable losses. Connected with every wrestling with the higher world, there is always the disability of the shrunken sinew. . . .

Wounded in the flesh, the Christian is exalted in spirit; like a vine that has its inferior parts, its tendrils and foliage and branches, pruned away, in order that its nobler part, the cluster of grapes that yields the life-blood of the plant, may be produced and developed. Clearer insight and nobler Christian vigour, and more vivid spiritual fellowship, and increased powers of usefulness, come through the maiming of the outward man; and it is felt that it is better to enter into the kingdom of heaven halt and maimed than having the body complete to be cast out. If physical strength withers under the angel's touch, and worldly good consumes away under His breath, let us gladly pay that small cost of our ennobling, and learn with the Apostle Paul to glory even in our infirmities, as the soldier glories in his battle-wounds. Let us rejoice that we are accounted worthy not only to believe in Jesus, but to suffer for His sake. For it is the highest exaltation of our nature, the culminating honour of our life, to be crucified with Christ. It is because we be crucified with Christ.

Cassell's National Library.—The popularity of this series, published in 1885 and following years, was fully deserved, by reason of the high character of the books thus brought within reach of the general public. Another series has now been commenced, and many works of name and fame are promised at the same price as before, 6d. each. Lists may be had from Messrs. Cassell, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

* From The Touch of God, "The World's Pulpit Series." (3s. 6d. S. C. Brown, Langham & Co.) Called to his rest while this volume was passing through the press, Dr. Macmillan has given us here some of his choicest sermons. While they are more doctrinal than some of his other books, the keenly observant naturalist is manifest. The Gospel message is presented in a beautiful setting.

Quenched Lamps.*

By Rev. DINSDALE T. YOUNG.

WE contemplate the seven lamps of religion. They were the lamps of the Temple that Hezekiah's profane fathers quenched. How many are putting out the seven lamps of God's great temple now! What a difference the lamps make! Do not the lamps count in the home? What do they stand for in the Church? Desolate and drear is the temple environed with night, if the lamps be put out. Consider some of the lamps which certain essay to put out.

I. Evangelical Doctrine is a Lamp which Some have Put Out.—The truth as it is in Jesus is not infrequently compared in Scripture to a lamp, or torch. And what a radiant lamp it is! The noblest epitaph I know is that of John Owen, the massive philosophic exegete and theologian of the Puritans. In that eloquent eulogium we are told what we happily know to be the case, that he held up "the effulgent lamp of Evangelical truth." A fine phrase, but indicating a far finer reality. A man has lived to splendid purpose who has held up that effulgent lamp. But there be those, and have always been, who have put out the lamp. It is very markedly so now. Many pulpits and many churches have put out "the effulgent lamp of Evangelical truth." No marvel that Godless multitudes have all but gleefully extinguished it. Thank God, none can quench it absolutely, but in relation to themselves and their circle they have done the sacrilegious deed. "They have put out the lamps." . . .

II. Worship is a Lamp which Some have Put Out.—If there be a commandment which pervades Scripture more entirely than another, it is this: "Worship God." No lamp of the seven lamps of religion is more needful than this. Without its aureate luminosity we are dark indeed. Public worship is alike an injunction of God and an instinct of man. Of multitudes it may be declared, "They have put out" this "lamp." With what grim eloquence recent census returns of church attendance speak! The masses and the classes of Britain are quenching one of the noblest lamps ever kindled by the Father of Lights. I do not now seek to assign the reasons of this fatuous proceeding. Probably criticism should begin at the House of God. Is "Welcome" written large across every wall of the sanctuary? Do we preachers preach the most interesting and thrilling and momentous realities as if they were fictions? Are our sordid lives an anti-climax to our sublime discourses? These and kindred inquiries must be honestly answered. . . . .

III. The Bible is a Lamp which Some have Put Out.—"Thy Word is a lamp," sang the grateful Psalmist. No symbol could be more every way apposite. What an all-illumining lamp it is! A lamp for the Church; a lamp for the home; a lamp for the office or shop; a lamp for the lonesome "valley of the shadow," dissipating its gloom and flooding it with mellow glory. And it was the availableness, the homeliness, the utility for common scenes which God's Word evinces that charmed the Psalmist. He describes it as "a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." It is not merely a remote illumination, a planetary flame, an astronomical lustre. It is near, ever and everywhere helpful; it accommodates itself to my immediate need. Then how infinite the folly that puts out such a lamp! The character of the Bible is the argument for its preservation. . . . Higher Criticism may be very good; but is it not time we had a process of contrite criticism? We are the culprits at the bar, and the Bible is the judge. Put not out this lamp Divine. Walk ye with humble joy in the light of it. . . .

IV. Christian Morality is a Lamp which Some have Put Out.—Christianity is a regeneration that it may be a morality. By the power of the redeeming and indwelling God, it creates a splendid ethic. Our religion is a theology, a creed, that it may become a life. Christian character is, and ever has been, the world's finest moral illuminant. "The life was the light of men" is a great avowal, true of the servant as supremely true of the Lord. There is no light like life. It was to life that many of us owed our earliest light—a father's godliness, a mother's gentle piety. The world's greatest evangelizing force is Christian character. The sermon that never wearies us is that of an eloquent life. . . .

V. Entire Sanctification is another Lamp which Some have Put Out.—Isaiah, that fervent intercessor and evangelist, was eager for the blissful age when Jerusalem's "salvation" should be as "a lamp that burneth." No lamp burns so gloriously and allures so irresistibly as a full salvation. But, alas! of how many of us is the indictment true, "They have put out the lamp"? . . . What a lack of the complete Christian there is! It is rare to meet one who is obviously, though all unconsciously, absolutely surrendered to God, filled with the Spirit. Are saints becoming scarcer? Is Pentecostal consecration lapsing? Where are the supernal wind and the mystic flame? Oh that a revival of entire sanctification were in our midst! Oh that God would raise up evangelists to the churches! When we are radiant with inward and outward holiness, then, indeed, shall we be the "light of the world."

VI. Consecrated Home-Life is One of the Lamps which Many have Put Out.—What a lovely lamp is this! Ten thousand times ten thousand have been made thereby to be "light in the Lord." Do not observers of the religious signs of the times descry a dimming, if not a quenching, of that lamp? May not the decadence of home religion explain any religious decadence there may be otherwise? "When families pray, churches prosper." If our family prayers wither, the Church will inevitably fade.

VII. The Lamp of Immortality Some have Put Out.—Needs there a word to prove that this lamp has been, and is being, put out in this our age? With apparently light heart and willing hand, men quench this lamp. Surely they know not what they do. You surrender New Testament Christianity when you surrender immortality. You do more. You destroy one of the chief inspirations to, and supports of, morality. Moreover, you annihilate the strongest solace of weary and wounded lives.

* From The Crimson Book, by Rev. Dinsdale T. Young. Those who are acquainted with "Unfamiliar Texts" and other works by Mr. Young, will know what to expect in this volume of sermons. The secret of the author's power and popularity as a preacher is not far to seek. It is seen in these stately and characteristic utterances of Evangelical truth, and their evangelistic tone and scope. They are marked by that clearness of thought, felicity of expression, and deep earnestness which never fail to bring home to men the urgency of deciding for Christ, and henceforth remaining faithful to the heavenly vision. On Judging Our Neighours.*

By Rev. J. REID HOWATT, M.A.

IT is not easy to detect Hypocrisy. Many a good saint has been dubbed by this name. If you want in a village to find the abode of any faithful child of God, you will be left long groping if you inquire for him as a saint. But ask for "some old, canting, praying, snivelling hypocrite," and you will be directed straightway to a saint! Every godfather can give a name, but only he who hath the nature can recognise the nature. So we need to be watchful in calling anyone a hypocrite, lest we be found calumniating some chosen vessel of the Lord, who may stand in need of much improvement, perhaps—as who does not?—and may in many ways be yet deceiving himself, but who, so far as his light reaches, is struggling with ignorance, wrong instruction, or a bad inheritance in his temperament, to be true to his Lord. Call a man ignorant, call him a blunderer, or anything else about which a man may judge; but when it comes to spiritual things, go slow—be chary of giving names and characters—leave all such judgment with the Lord, who alone knows the spirits of men. "Forbear thee from meddling with God."

* From Bunyan's Folk of To-day; or the Modern Pilgrim's Progress (2s. Partridge), in which Rev. J. Reid Howatt has shown the Dream to be "ever as recent as our latest breath." The outcome is an instructive book, which, by stripping off that which is accidental, reveals the true unity of human nature in different generations. With something of the quaintness and frankness of the Dreamer himself, pointed lessons are driven home in telling yet lovable fashion.

The Way to Face Lions.*

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

DANIEL is one of the model men in the Old Testament; in some respects he is about the best character for young men to study and imitate. In his youth he faced ridicule by refusing to touch the king's wine; in his later life he was not afraid to face the king's lions. There are two or three things about his course in the last matter that young people ought to notice. In the first place, he did not send any apology to the king of Babylon. Apologies for doing a right thing only belittle the act and take off the grace of it. In the second place, he did not brag about what he was going to do. There was no bluster or big talk. When I was a pastor, I used to be rather distrustful of people who, when uniting with the church, made very loud professions and promises. They reminded me of Peter's boastful speech to His Master: "Though all men forsake Thee, yet will not I."

Daniel neither apologised nor played the braggart. He saw that there was serious business before him; he knew all about the ferocious lions in the royal park, and had made up his mind to face them when the time came. So he went quietly up to the chamber on the roof of his house; he threw open his lattice, and worshipped God in prayer—"as he did aforetime." Actions speak louder than words. The old hero went down on his knees three times in the day; busy man as he was, he took time to pray; brave man that he was, he did not care who saw him, or how soon his godly conduct was reported to the king. Daniel did not ask God to muzzle the lions; nor was there any intimation given him that if he did his duty there would be any miracle wrought in his behalf. Martyrs, when they make up their minds to suffer for the right, always expect that lions will bite, and that fire will burn.

There are two roads for every young person in the journey of life. They cannot take both, and every young man must decide which of them he will take. The one is a smooth and easy path of connivance and compromise, with no lions to encounter. The other is by the airline of duty, as God's Word and conscience reveal duty; whoever treads that path, must expect to be battered with ridicule, or bespattered with misrepresentation and reproach.

Daniel dared to be singular, both when he refused the king's wine-cup, and when he defied the king's lions. The young man or woman who follows the fashion, and runs with the crowd, counts for nothing. When they turn round and face the crowd for conscience' sake, they may encounter hard knocks or scoffs, but they save their own souls, and are in the right attitude to save the souls of others. Every young man who determines to keep a clean conscience, and obey Christ's commandments, will encounter some lions in the course of his experience. In business, he must often decide between selling his conscience and selling his goods; he must prefer to be poor rather than to put a dirty dollar into his purse.

In social life, he must not be afraid of being branded as "Puritanical" on all such questions as theatre-going, and wine-drinking, and Sunday bicycling, and other conformities to bad fashions. In politics, he must "bolt" whenever his party heads on a wrong track. . . .

If facing a duty and standing up for Christ costs dearly, it pays gloriously in the end. My friend, never be afraid of but one thing, and that is, the frown of God! His smile means heaven; his frown means hell!

The whole controversy is reviewed in A Catechism of Vivisection, by Dr. Edward Berdoe (1s. Swan Sonnenschein), and the results carefully indexed, so that those who are willing to be informed on the matter, or to lend a hand in the suppression of the cruelties practised, may find everything at hand. The book is an admirable manual of the subject.

* From Campaigning for Christ (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). This is a beautifully got up volume of papers in Dr. Cuyler's best style. It covers many points in human experience on the youthful side; and never without doing so brightly, lovingly, and wisely. The warning and counsel given are those of practical sympathy with the needs of young people, also of ripe experience. Large type, ornamental borders, and a good portrait, add materially to the other attractions as a seasonable gift-book.

Sermons and Addresses.

At the Lord's Table, by Rev. R. Cynon Lewis, of Lavender Hill Congregational Church, contains a series of ten Communion Addresses, characterized by much thought. (2s. net. A. H. Stockwell.) It is not often that one comes across a volume of addresses so equal in their force and beauty.

Concerning the King. By Rev. John Thomas, M.A., of Liverpool. (3s. net. A. H. Stockwell). Eighteen discourses and meditations, such as we should expect from the heart and mind of their distinguished author. The pages are replete with thought, and those who read will be stirred by many a passage.

A book full of counsel for everyday life is The Homely Virtues, by Rev. John Watson, D.D. (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Perhaps the weightiest words are those on "Reverence"; but there is also much on "Straightness," "Thoroughness," and other topics, to make any reader examine himself as to his usefulness and influence.

Vol. 1 of Sermons by Free Methodist Ministers comprises discourses by some of the most useful ministers in the Connexion. For the most part they are expositions of familiar passages of Scripture, considered from new points of view, but with the fundamental principles of the Gospel as a background. A full-page photograph of each preacher accompanies his sermon. (2s. 6d. Stockwell.)

The Three Things that Abide: Faith, Hope, Love (1 Cor. xiii. 13). By Sir W. T. Gairdner, K.C.B., M.D., formerly professor of medicine in the University of Glasgow (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). This is a decidedly good addition to the series of "Little Books on Religion." A fourth chapter deals with the meaning of the New Testament rendering of the word agapé, and in a very forcible and instructive manner.

Many aspects of the Lord's Supper are treated in The Communion Table, by Rev. L. Maclean Watt, B.D. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) The volume contains twenty-six addresses given to Mr. Watt's own congregations, which supply, as they profess to do, "plain and practical teachings" regarding the ordinance. Those who are frequently called on to preside at the Lord's Table, will find here much that is suggestive.

Rev. J. Appleyard has shown considerable originality in his treatment of the subjects dealt with in An Orchard of Pomegranates; or, The Fruit of the Spirit. It consists of a series of sermons prepared in the course of a busy ministry at Brixham, and should find many appreciative readers. In two of the chapters the author gathers up and emphasizes some of the significant lessons to be learned from the strenuous life, unprecedented service, and Christian character of Mr. Gladstone. (2s. Stockwell.)

Bonne Nouvelle. — Vingt-quatre Sermons. Par Frank Thomas (3fr. 50c. J. H. Jeheber, Geneva). Another volume of discourses by the eloquent Swiss pastor. Cogent in exposition of Scripture, and powerful in their Gospel appeal, they deserve many readers. Not without point has Pastor Thomas been called the "Spurgeon of Switzerland." In literary output, as well as in pulpit influence, he is such a one as we should like to meet wherever freethought and religious indifference show themselves.

A wide circle of Nonconformists will welcome the series, Primitive Methodist Preachers, for hitherto the pulpit utterances of ministers of this Church have not to any extent been published in permanent form. Among those represented by the first volume are Revs. Thomas Mitchell, T. Clamp, Arthur Jubb, E. Clements, Matthew S. Cushing, John Holland, &c. The sermons are of a homely, vigorous type, notable for their terse application of truth and well-directed exhortation. (2s. 6d., with photographs, Stockwell.)

The author of "In Life's School" has done well to issue a companion volume, The Heritage of Youth. In these pages young men will find counsel and help of a high order, for Rev. David Watson fully realizes the needs of the youth of to-day. He shows how this heritage may be thoughtlessly and sinfully squandered, and also how it may be guarded and enriched. The highest possible ideal is always in view, and the ring of honest conviction and sincerity of purpose running through the book, will do much to stimulate a manly and deep-rooted piety. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Sermon Outlines. By the late Rev. Henry Stevens, M.A., for thirty-five years vicar of Holy Trinity, Sydenham. (3s. 6d. net. Nisbet.) The outlines are full, and they number sixty-one, many of them general, some on Church seasons. For substance and beauty this is an exceptional volume, as sermons go. The preacher touched great themes—as some of the titles will show: "The Sabbath, a Law and a Blessing" (Mark ii. 27); "The Great Epiphanies or Manifestations of God" (John xii. 46); "The Holy Ghost the Source of Power" (Luke xxiv. 49); "The Reign of God the Theme of Praise" (Psa. xcvii. 1); "Christ's One Offering and Second Coming" (Heb. ix. 28). This selection from the discourses of a true "minister of the Word" will take light and comfort into many a household.

Appealing to the unmistakable teaching of nature, of human experience, and of Scripture, Rev. Hugh Black lifts the veil in Work (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) from the blessings and benefits which can only come to the truly industrious. Faithfully yet graciously the truth is told about the modern striving after a life of idleness, with its dangers alike to the commonwealth and the individual. The Christian ideal of strenuous activity is shown to culminate in a consecration of work, that all may be done unto the Lord. This is a book to fire the young with ambition, and still to save them from ignoble ideals.

The twelve discourses which Rev. George T. Candlin gives us in his volume, On Service with the King, are distinguished from the ordinary sermons of the pulpit, inasmuch as they are chiefly concerned with foreign missions and their relation to the central themes of the Gospel. The author has laboured for twenty-five years in China, and at the close of a pleasant and profitable furlough he dedicates this work to his brother ministers in the Methodist New Connexion Church; though the volume is deserving of a much wider sphere of usefulness. The sermons are not elaborate, nor yet profound; but being eminently practical, they never miss their mark in appealing to the heart. (3s. Stockwell.)

Two companion volumes on The Parables of Jesus and The Miracles of Jesus (6s. each net. James Robinson, Manchester) will be valued as useful tools by busy workers. The fact that in each case the work of twelve more or less well-known ministers is combined, is an indication of the wide variety of treatment given to the subjects. All are Evangelical, and in nearly every case the sermons are such as must have led to growth in grace on the part of earnest hearers. Even readers who differ from certain presentations of truth—the authors do not themselves absolutely harmonize in detail—according to individual judgment, will, we believe, be far from regretting the perusal; and both in the study and the family circle the books deserve a warm welcome. While in the case of the Miracles the whole narrative is treated in each case, advantage is taken of the way in which the Parables lend themselves to division. The focussing of light from different directions in this fashion amply vindicates the composite nature of the volumes.

Annual Volumes.

The Child's Own Magazine is a bright book for the little folks. There are several coloured pictures, as well as many engravings. (1s. Sunday School Union.)

Bright Rays is a volume of stories, Scripture lessons, and pictures, such as will be found useful for the entertainment and instruction of children. (1s. G. Stoneman, 29, Paternoster Square, E.C.)

Little Folks' Christmas volume has all the old attractions, with many signs of increasing interest. The pictures are as good as ever, and the readings just what little folks are sure to like. (3s. 6d. Cassells.)

The Young Woman, Vol. XI. (5s. Horace Marshall & Sons.) Stories, sketches, and interviews, talks about men and things, and private correspondence, make up the bulk of this interesting volume. The illustrations are many—portraits, landscapes, &c.

Young England stirs the soul of many a growing lad as he reads the stories of adventure, and is introduced to men whose motto is "deeds not words." The twenty-fourth annual volume is in a worthy succession, and by all its features is marked out as an admirable present. (5s. Sunday School Union.)

Sunday Reading for the Young (3s. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) was never more attractive. The pictures are numerous and good; the readings make up a varied budget, including children's tales and pretty things in prose and poetry. The illustrated stories of the Kings of Judah are an instructive and interesting feature.

School-boys and girls of different ages will highly appreciate Our Darlings. The longer tales are by Evelyn Everett-Green and Mabel Mackintosh, and many authors have contributed shorter stories. The historical element is strong in the volume, and heightens its educational value. There is also much that is amusing and entertaining. (5s. J. F. Shaw & Co.)

Home Words is truly a paper "for heart and hearth," though appealing more particularly to members of the Church of England. The travel, philanthropic, and other descriptive papers are bright, interesting, and well illustrated; while the stories are healthy and stimulating. The articles, "Hymns and their Authors," deserve more than passing notice. (2s. "Home Words" Office.)

The Animals' Friend is a favourite. The volume before us, edited by Ernest Bell, is the ninth; it is admirably written and well illustrated. Subjects of high moral importance and great practical interest are dealt with; and we could wish for the pages many readers in a day when some of our noblest "dumb companions" have many enemies. (2s. 6d. G. Bell & Sons, 5, York Street, Covent Garden, W.C.)

The contents of the Quiver (7s. 6d. Cassell) maintain the high level reached in recent years. First among the stories comes Joseph Hocking's "A Flame of Fire," relating the adventures of three Englishmen in Spain in the time of the Inquisition and of the Great Armada; followed by "My Bitter Experience," an anti-gambling tale by Scott Graham; and these are accompanied by many more. Dr. Hugh Macmillan contributes an interesting and instructive series of papers on "God's Beautiful Creatures," while Archdeacon Sinclair deals with the causes of "Current Irreligion," Rev. H. B. Freeman gives "Talks to Men" in different capacities, and Arthur Fish adds four series of well-chosen "Pictures of the Parables." There is wealth of sermons, expository articles, and descriptive papers. The poetry is good, and in each monthly part a hymn tune appears. This is an admirable volume of family reading.

A wide range of topics characterizes The Leisure Hour, and the reader will, indeed, be hard to please who does not find in it instructive employment for many hours. Racy accounts of travel and adventure come from many lands, and "Over-Sea Notes" give tit-bits of information, which have a general interest. Popular scientific papers, over a wide range of topics, are numerous, and mechanical matters have not been forgotten. The biographical sketches include a series of ambassadors and another of religious journalists. Domestic matters, gardening, books to read, holiday hints, and many other subjects are treated in an interesting and informing manner. The serial tales are "The Intriguers," by J. Bloundell-Burton, and "Jill's Red Bag," by Amy le Feuvre, and they are accompanied by a large number of shorter stories. The "leisure hours" which are spent over this volume may well help in the furnishing of the mind with that which will prove of good service. (7s. 6d. R.T.S.)

In the hands of Mr. Howard H. Spicer, the Boys of our Empire volume (7s. 6d. Andrew Melrose) is a book that appeals to the schoolboy from many sides of his nature. Stories of adventure, travel, and school life abound; but there is also much that is of more permanent value. Though the volume is mainly occupied with what may be called secular things, the series of talks by "the B.E.L. Chaplain" will turn straying thoughts to higher things. To the second volume of The Girls' Empire (5s. Andrew Melrose) serial stories are contributed by Evelyn Everett-Green, "The Three Graces," and by Louise Mack (Mrs. J. P. Creed), "Girls Together." In addition there are many shorter narratives and tales that deserve to attract notice. Hints on home-nursing, house-keeping, gardening, and others of a more varied character will attract readers, according to taste; and the family will be a rare one indeed in which the volume is not in demand by members of different ages.

Few annuals can be recommended for the home circle with the same confidence as The Sunday at Home. Entertainment, instruction, and meditation are all well provided for in its pages. Hesba Stretton contributes a series of quiet helpful papers on "Parables of our Lord." Biography is a strong point, especially along missionary, ministerial, and philanthropic lines, including "Women Workers of To-day," which are worthy of special attention. Bishop Welldon's "Talks with Boys" on Scriptural topics are wise and telling. The claims of the children have been fully recognized in the provision of special stories, as well as a series of just such articles as they will enjoy from the pen of Rev. J. Reid Howatt. The hymns and other poems are varied and of a high order; while the abundance of excellent illustration constitutes a great attraction in itself. The serial stories are "The Intervening Sea," by David Lyall; "Under the She-Oaks," by E. Boyd Bayly; and "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," by Rhona Sutherland (7s. 6d. Religious Tract Society).

The annuals from Messrs. Partridge are full of bright and cheerful stories, articles, and poems; while the coloured covers and abundant illustrations fully maintain the reputation of past years. In The British Workman (1s. 6d., &c.), a specially interesting feature is a series of papers dealing with "The World's Workers." Such life stories as those of Revs. Thomas Spurgeon, John McNeill, and Dr. Maclaren are well told. In The Friendly Visitor (1s. 6d., &c.), "Heroes of the Mission Field" will well repay reading, as well as "Noble Lives I Have Known"; while the "Flowing Streams" section supplies excellent Gospel reading. The Family Friend (1s. 6d., &c.), well deserves its name, providing wholesome and profitable reading for different ages. Of The Children's Friend and The Infants' Magazine (1s. 6d. each, &c.), we can only say that they are in every way adapted to meet the tastes of the little ones. The Band of Hope Annual is a marvel of freshness, which temperance workers among the young will find of the highest service. These are all books that will be highly appreciated by any into whose hands they may come.

The Mystery of the Trinity.*

By Rev. R. J. DRUMMOND, D.D.

CHRISTIANS are not the only religious people in the world. Christians are not the only people who believe in God. But Christians are the only people who think of God as they do. And when you try to put in a few words what they think and believe, it is this: they believe in God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost—one God. These words are not found in the Bible. There is no one text that sums up the matter in these terms. And yet that is the distinguishing thought of the Christian about God.

Now that doctrine of the Trinity often seems a very perplexing subject. And no wonder; I, for one, should be very much surprised if, when the truth about God is reached, we should not find something which is very perplexing to human minds, and something which betrays the poverty of human speech. I expect that the truth about the infinite God will always tax the fullest resources of finite minds and tongues, and still leave men wondering, pondering, and adoring. But as a result of this, men often are content simply to take this doctrine of the Trinity on credit, and make no attempt to understand it. And this is not right. Christian belief is not credulity. We must never be content with a second-hand faith.

We ought, therefore, to inquire how men came to think thus about God, and to offer us this simple sentence to express our knowledge of Him. It was thus. For one thing, this was the only way in which they could gather up all that was said about God in the Bible. For another, it corresponds to Christian spiritual experience. In the Old Testament they found God in Creation and Revelation. They found Him the Maker of the World, the Instructor of the Patriarchs and Prophets, the great Invisible I AM, the object of their worship. But they found, too, this same God bidding them expect His advent in this world; Himself, yet not in a way they had ever known Him before; still entitled to their worship, but to be strangely near themselves.

And when they came to the New Testament, there stood Jesus of Nazareth; and the closer men came to Him, the more His grandeur rose before them, and they "beheld His glory as of the Only Begotten of the Father." Then they said: This is He of whom the Scriptures spoke. This is God, God in human form, God on earth just as there is God in heaven. And nothing helped them more to this than the way in which Jesus spoke of God. He claimed to be God's Son, and called God His Father. And when He would explain to men how Father stood to Son, He said: "I and My Father are one."

But ere His departure from this earth, Jesus Himself spoke with extraordinary distinctness of the coming of another Divine agent, who should take His place and carry on His work. And in very deed men found in themselves, working there with strange irresistible power, and producing results that eclipsed creation in the transformation of lives, something that exactly corresponded to Him of whom Jesus spoke, and they called this mighty worker within them God the Holy Spirit. And so it is not some strange concoction of the human brain that speaks when we call God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, ONE GOD, but it is just the description in a few words of what men who, as Christians, study the Bible, and reflect on their own experience of salvation, find there about God—who He is and what He is. And what gives it value and significance is, that it satisfies our highest thoughts; finds room in God, through all eternity, for the play of the highest faculties man knows or possesses. Here is a God who is not blind energy, dumb force, an impersonal, passionless unity. But within Himself there is room for fellowship, for love.

Now to the man who is asking, May I reckon myself a Christian? I would say, Is that your thought about God? Have you an intelligent grip of it? Does this conception of Him make any difference for you, or do you understand the difference it does make in the life of men, and in their relation to God? . . . If you are a Christian, you will have thought of it. If you are not, then you can only earn your right to remain as you are by careful thought; mere negligence, again, is wanton folly, wilful neglect.

* From Faith's Perplexities. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) This is an admirable statement of the strength of the Christian position, written not so much to refute the arguments of opponents as to reassure the minds of those who already believe. There is no cloud of technicalities. In language which all our young people can understand, it is shown that the weight of sound scholarship, of mature judgment, of high character, and of common sense are all on the side of those who adhere to Christ as their personal living Saviour.

The Lord of Death.*

By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Litt. D.

KNIT these four contrasts together. Death as a step into a dim unknown versus Death as a step into a region lighted by Jesus; Death as the cessation of activity versus Death as the introduction to nobler opportunities, and the endowment with nobler capacities of service; Death as the separator and isolator versus Death as uniting to Jesus and all His lovers; Death as haling us to the judgment seat of the adversary versus Death as bringing us to the tribunal of Christ; and I think we can understand how Christians can venture to say, "All things are ours, whether life or death" which leads to a better life. . . .

The fact that Jesus Christ has died, changes the whole aspect of death to His servant, inasmuch as in that great solitude he has a Companion, and in the valley of the shadow of death he sees footsteps that tell him of One that went before. Nor need I do more than remind you how the manner of our Lord's death shows that He is Lord not only of the dead, but of the Death that makes them dead. For His own tremendous assertion, "I have power to lay down My life, and I have power to take it again," was confirmed by His attitude and His words at the last, as is hinted at by the very expressions with which the Evangelists record the fact of His death: "He yielded up His spirit," "He gave up the ghost," "He breathed out His life." It is confirmed to us by such words as those remarkable ones of the Apocalypse, which speak of Him as "the Living One," who, by His own will, "became dead." He died because He would, and He would die because He loved you and me. And in dying, He showed Himself to be, not the Victim, but the Conqueror, of the Death to which He submitted.

The Jewish king on the fatal field of Gilboa called his sword-bearer, and the servant came, and Saul bade him smite, and when his trembling hand shrank from such an act, the king fell on His sword. The Lord of life and death summoned His servant Death, and he came obedient, but Jesus died not by Death's stroke, but by His own act. So that Lord of Death, who died because He would, is the Lord who has the keys of death and the grave, and in regard to one servant says, "I will that he tarry till I come," and that man lives through a century; and in regard to another says, "Follow thou Me," and that man dies on a cross. The dying Lord is Lord of Death, and the living Lord is for us all the Prince of Life.

We have to take His yoke upon us by the act of faith that issues in an obedience which will become more and more complete, as we become more fully Christ's. Then death will be ours, for then we should count that the highest good for us will be fuller union with, a fuller possession of, and a complete conformity to, Jesus Christ our King; and that whatever brings us these, even though it brings also pain and sorrow, and much from which we shrink, is all on our side. It is possible—may it be so to each of us!—that for us Death may be, not an enemy that bans us into darkness and inactivity, or hales us to a judgment-seat, but the Angel who wakes us, at whose touch the chains fall off, and who leads us through the iron gate into the City.

* From Last Sheaves. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) There is true pathos in the title. Many readers have learned to look to this field for a rich harvest, and these "last sheaves" yield ripe grain. Dr. Maclaren is an expositor of the highest order, who brings the human heart into direct touch with the Divine message. These sermons are masterpieces of the application of wide knowledge of the Word of God and long experience of His gracious dealing to the upbuilding of believers and the ingathering of sinners.

The Godly Household.*

By REV. CHARLES BROWN.

THE godly household. Let us try to make the fair and lovely picture stand out before us, that our eyes and hearts may desire it before all other things. And let us begin by brushing aside a great fallacy, viz., that such a household would or could ever be dreary, joyless, or melancholy. This is a supposition which proceeds from the father of lies, the source of all the misapprehensions which beset men respecting the Christian life, who suffer their eyes to be blinded by the god of this world. From some points of view it would be dreary. A man whose palate has been cloyed and ruined by stimulants, considers clear, sparkling water the most flat and insipid drink in the world; and the man whose moral and spiritual palate has been injured by a long course of highly-spiced stimulants, loses his taste for simple things. He has a bowing acquaintance with the Christian religion, but no vital godliness; he cares far more for the last sensational novel than for the parables of the Lord, and has far more interest in football than in Christian missions, would far rather go to the theatre than the week-evening service, and thinks far more kindly of Sunday golf than of Sunday prayer. Shut such a man up in a godly household, and it would be intolerable; he would be made wretched, and would be moved either to repentance or disgust.

What constitutes a godly home? The acknowledgment of God in all things; making His will the governing principle. There can be no godly household where that is not done. And it has a wider application than we are sometimes inclined to give it. I believe that in a godly home there will be family worship and thanksgiving for daily mercies. I cannot understand a Christian home where these explicit acknowledgments of God's presence and bountiful care are omitted. If the family be godly, surely the name of God will be reverenced and the presence of the living God will be greeted. I can as well understand the omission of all the little courtesies of love in a home as the omission of these things. You may tell me that I am not to conclude that a husband and a wife are not Christians because they have abolished the family altar. You may assure me that they are really good people all the time. You may also tell me that I am not to conclude that a mother is cold-hearted who never fondles her little child, and that a husband is not passionately devoted to his wife who has never been seen by his children to caress her. But I still think it passing strange, and cherish the idea that where true love is, it will be articulate.

I cannot understand a household where the will of God is put first, and that will is never spoken about; where it is the one subject that is never mentioned, and where the Book in which that will is revealed is the one Book that is never seen in the hands of children or parents, unless there is a Scripture lesson to be learned. It is most difficult to understand a company of people who profess to put the will of God first, and who never kneel down together to seek guidance in the knowledge of that will. So it is impossible to comprehend the mystery of a family that belongs to God, where the Bible is not read and prayer offered. I would have the family altar. I beseech you to guard it. Build it up, if it has fallen down. Erect it, if it has never been erected. But let it be a real thing—a hearty, and not a formal matter. For you know that you may have it, and grace before meat and all the rest, and it may be a perfectly lifeless form.

The Scripture Pocket Book for 1904 (1s. 6d. net, Religious Tract Society), is a handy book of reference as well as a pocket diary. An old friend, this publication has made a reputation, and its various useful features are admirably sustained in the issue for next year.

* From Light and Life. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) These sermons have two characteristics which impress us most favourably. Calvary is never out of sight as the one source of hope for mankind, and the law of God is simply and fearlessly applied to every-day life. Whatever is at variance with the obvious teaching Scripture is reproved; on the other hand, the preacher gives us instruction in righteousness.

Reviewing Two Generations.

THE charm of personal recollection, as compared with the story of a life written by another, however intimate, is vividly illustrated in J. Guinness Rogers: An Autobiography. (7s. 6d. James Clarke & Co.) Here we have a volume which will enable the student of contemporary history to look behind the scenes of not a few outstanding events.

As the grandson of a Cornish farmer, who trained his family in the principles of the Church of England, and the son of an Independent minister who did good and earnest service in three Irish parishes before settling in England, Dr. Guinness Rogers had the relations of Church and State brought practically home to him from the outset of his career. Born at Enniskillen nearly eighty-one years ago, he has seen many vicissitudes in the fortunes of Nonconformity in these islands, and from his well-stored memory can throw interesting side-lights on the story.

The description of denominational life in the "decaying town" of Prescot, where his early youth was spent, is candid yet kindly; while the pictures of the school-life at Silcoates recall days which we had almost believed further back than the experience of men now active. We live in better, brighter days; and not a little of the improvement is shown to be due to better means of communication and the cheapening of literature. As an outside student, Dr. Guinness Rogers has not many intimate associations with Trinity College, Dublin; but it is otherwise with Lancashire College, of which he was the first student. There he came under the influence of Dr. Robert Vaughan, whom he describes as "the statesman of the denomination in his generation." Among his fellow-students were Robert Alfred Vaughan, son of the principal; Alexander Raleigh, "distinctly a preacher, called of God to preach with a power in the pulpit such as falls to the lot of very few"; Enoch Mellor, than whom "no truer brother ever entered the College"; and others equally worthy, though Dr. Rogers was not thrown into the same close fellowship with them.

A noteworthy passage in the book is that in which a warm tribute is paid to the influence on him of the congregations with which, as a student, he was brought into contact. These were times of national interest and political activity; and the opinion is expressed that, for the first time in English history, the voice of the Nonconformist ministry was heard with the same strength upon affairs which seemed to lie outside their proper province.

From the introduction then given to public life, Dr. Guinness Rogers has never drawn back, but has ever taken a large view of his position as a minister of the Gospel, and concerned himself with all that affected the life of the people. Freely intermixed with the names of brethren in the ministry, are those of the political leaders of the last two generations. Many years afterwards Dr. Rogers learned that when he was discussing burning questions of the hour at Newcastle, during his first pastorate, his friend of later days, Joseph Parker, was among those who attended. During that period he himself learned to love and honour Edward Miall, and he thanks God for the quickening influence thus introduced into his life.

> We had formed a Working-Men's Class, which itself was a remarkable power for good in a stratum of the social life of the town where such influence was sadly needed. . . . One of the most conspicuous members was a man who himself had been rescued from the very depths of moral iniquity. When he was first brought to me, a more miserable object could hardly be looked upon, and when my chapel-keeper asked me if it was not possible to have work found for him in the garden, I hesitated for a moment. He had been introduced to me as the greatest blackguard in Ashton, and his looks very well supported the description. But he had become a total abstainer, and it was hoped that this would be the beginning of a great change in the habits of his life. I made the venture, and I have often thanked God I was able to do it. A more remarkable case of conversion I have never known, and its reality was tested by years of quiet and faithful work. A more loyal friend no minister could have had.

The next move was to London, which brought Dr. Rogers into even closer contact with public life. In a chapter entitled "My Fathers in the Ministry," we learn how such great preachers as Dr. Raffles, John Kelly, Dr. R. S. McAll, James Parsons, William Jay, John Angell James, Thomas Atkins, Thomas Binney, Dr. Henry Allon, and Robert Halley appealed to this keen observer. Dr. R. W. Dale is described in terms which mark him out as Dr. Rogers's closest friend during his long career, and very touching indeed is the relationship from which the veil is lifted.

These pages show us a man who has been the valued friend of statesmen with whom he was not always in agreement; as well as of Churchmen who differed from him widely on minor points, but rejoiced to be at one with him on that which is of prime importance; and all alike found him "one of the truest among true men." It was characteristic of this outspoken but generous and lovable Nonconformist, that Dr. Randall Davidson should, on his elevation to the Archbishopric of Canterbury, write:—

> It is a very real satisfaction to me to know that you are hard-by; and that we can, if need be, take counsel together upon the things which equally concern us all, and they are the biggest and deepest things.

Looking at the present position of affairs, Dr. Guinness Rogers sums up his feeling thus:

> The wild unrest of the age, the arrogant refusal of intellect to submit to the obedience of faith, the fond belief of numbers in some new development in this wonderful century, and the consequent demand of a new Gospel for a new age; and last, but not least, the materialistic spirit, of which it may be said that if philosophic speculation kills its hundreds, materialism kills its thousands, constitute a sufficiently formidable force. They can be met, but it must be by faith in the living Christ; and that faith will create men, like the heroes of the past, ready to hazard their lives for the sake of the Lord Jesus.

This book is an admirable review of the period from a ministerial point of view. Facts are frankly stated and faced, and, in the light of simple faith in God, coupled with belief in the good intentions of honourable opponents, the outlook is pictured in colours by no means hopelessly dark.

A Notable Autobiography.

AMONG the most notable biographical volumes of our time must be placed that in which Helen Keller tells how she was enabled to break through the terrible barriers which shut her off from the world around—The Story of My Life. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stouyhton.) Though this young lady, who is now only in her twenty-third year, is totally deaf and blind, she has not only established the most complete communication with her friends through the sense of touch, but can speak French and German as well as English; and has cultivated her mind to a degree which, in the circumstances, can only be described as marvellous.

Born with all her faculties, she lost sight and hearing as effects of a serious illness in her second year; and it is most touching to read the account of the patient effort which resulted in the dawning on her mind, at the age of seven, of the idea that the signs for "w-a-t-e-r" spelled into her hand represented the wonderful something which gave her so much pleasure. That was the first streak of the dawn: much remained to be done, but the mystery of language had been revealed.

The reader is impressed by the wisdom of the system under which, long before she had learned to do a sum in arithmetic, or to describe the shape of the earth, she had been taught to find beauty in the fragrant woods, in every blade of grass, and in the curves and dimples of her baby sister's hand. Feeling has been developed in an extraordinary degree, and with the senses which remain to her, she enters with delight into the enjoyment of such pleasures as canoeing on a moonlight evening, or riding on horseback on a bright day. In her own words, when replying to critics who doubted her attainments; "The word moonlight means to me all the beauty and stillness of the night; sunlight, all the gladness of the day."

The record of Miss Keller's preparation for her graduate course at Radcliffe College is a revelation of rewards reaped by an indomitable spirit. During her first year after entrance, she was occupied with French German, history, with English composition and literature. The second year's course included the Bible as literature, the governments of America and Europe, the Odes of Horace, and Latin comedy. At the time of writing, the third year, she was taking economics, Elizabethan literature, Shakespeare, and the history of philosophy.

No thoughtful reader can lay down this book without being deeply moved. We are brought into touch with a great soul bursting fetters of iron, and mounting the hill of knowledge by a path not trodden hitherto. Even more than her studies, Miss Keller's letters reveal a mind of a very high order; and, should God spare her, she will be able to smooth the way for those similarly limited who come after. Among her friends are numbered many of America's literary men, and confidential relations with Bishop Phillips Brooks are manifest.

The charm of previous work of the same class by the Bishop of Durham (Dr. H. C. G. Moule), will ensure a hearty welcome for a volume of short Bible readings for the Sundays of the year—From Sunday to Sunday. (5s. Isbister.) In the arrangement of the subjects, the natural and Christian seasons have been generally kept in view, but this has not been allowed to limit truly spiritual meditation; and where the topic called for fuller treatment, two or three papers are connected. It has been Dr. Moule's privilege in the past to open up the Word of God to those whose eyes were holden; and here he is at his best. The treatment is simple yet scholarly, comprehensive yet exact, and marked by a close observation of detail which makes every word luminous. None can read the book, in the prayerful spirit in which it was manifestly written, without being helped to a fuller vision of the life that is hid with Christ in God. It is eminently calculated to make the Sabbath a "day of rest and gladness."

WHEN asked about "that night," Wilbur told Mrs. Lee that they first tried to escape from the south side and to get down to Nos. 4 and 5 (the nearest houses), but they came to a flood of mud and water rushing down the hill-side, as he said, "like the Ohio river." It was impossible for them to cross it.

They then went out by the back way, going up the narrow foot-path to the road, and started to the house above; but they found the road washed away, and nothing left on which to tread. Vida then led them back down toward Lebong, the opposite direction, but they were met by insurmountable piles of earth and debris. Boulders were rolling down the mountain-side, trees were falling, and stones flying through the air. The rain poured in torrents; the roar of the cyclone and the pitch darkness were enough to terrify the bravest heart.

Vida found that she could not keep them together, and she said: "I am afraid we will get lost from one another, and I promised papa to take care of Esther. Come, we will go back to the house, and if the Lord wishes, He can save us together, and if not, He will take us together." So they returned and went upstairs, made a fire and began to dry their clothes. Several times they knelt in prayer, asking God to protect them.

Hearing someone knocking at the door, they went down and found a poor native man, all crippled, and his face bleeding, who told them that the house was going to fall. He was so ill and shivering with the cold that the children instead of thinking of themselves, became interested in him.

Vida took a cloth and wiped the blood from his face. They tried to lift him inside, but he fainted away. She then took the durry (large rug) from the floor near by and wrapped him up in it. Two other native men passed the door and said: "Children, the mountain is falling down, and you had better leave." The children told them that they had tried, but did not know how to get away. Not able to render them any assistance, the men passed on. . . .

The native man lying at the door regained consciousness, and went away, dragging himself along the ground. He must go, he said, to his master, Nos. 4 and 5. When he saw them last they were kneeling in prayer.

Vida took them all upstairs again to the fire. While they were praying, the corner of the room cracked open.

At this juncture of the story, Mrs. Lee, seeing that the boy was agitated, tried to check him; but he said, "Mamma, I must tell you about Vida. She sprang to her feet, her face just beaming, as she said, 'Children, the house is coming down; we will soon be in heaven.'"

"But were you not afraid, Wilbur?"

"No, mamma; God had taken all the fear away, and we were all so happy! We felt just as if we were in the train coming home to you. We said to each other; 'Now if papa and mamma and baby Frank were only here, we could all go together to heaven. How nice it would be.' Oh, Vida's face, mamma! If you could only have seen her! How beautiful she looked! Her face shone like an angel's as she talked to us. She then led us into another room, and again we knelt about the bed and we all prayed. Jessudar (the Bengali girl) was kneeling with us, and, with hands clasped and looking up to heaven, she said, in Bengali: 'Oh! merciful God, take us now.' These were her last words."

The "Day by Days" Almanac (1d.) and The Golden Text Calendar (block) are both supplied with well-chosen texts, and will be highly serviceable in Christian households (Holness).

* From Seven Heroic Children: a Great Sorrow and a Great Victory. By Ada Lee, written "as if her pen had been dipped in her own heart-blood." Edited by Wilma Morgan. The story is that of the sudden home-call which came to the children of Rev. D. H. Lee at Darjeeling, in September, 1899. The facts given above are the last known of five of the family, and Jessudar, the Bengali girl. Wilbur was spared only long enough to tell how they went to be with the Lord, and then he, too, joined the company around the Throne. This is a missionary book with a peculiar pathos and charm, showing how the victory is won, even over death itself. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

A Lion Story.*

By Rev. J. MORGAN GIBBON.

Benaiah went down and slew a lion in a pit on a snowy day (1 Chron. xi. 22).

I WONDER how he did it. The snow was on the ground, and the lion had been driven by hunger from the forest, and had come nearer to where people were living; and there he was in this pit, hiding himself, on the watch for anybody that might pass, so that he might spring out and kill him. So at last this man made up his mind that he would go down and kill the lion.

Well, now how does a man set about it who goes to kill a lion? How should we set about it, when we have got anything to overcome and conquer in our own lives? We have all got our lions to kill. One has his temper—a black, angry, bad little temper. It is a lion, it must be killed. Another has a habit of telling "white lies." That has to be killed. Another has a lion of sloth and laziness. We must kill our lions.

I wonder how Benaiah set about it. The first thing was to make up his mind to do it. He did not do it at once; he had to think about it. People said, "Benaiah, there is that lion out there; we do not know what to do." And he went and thought and thought, until at last he said, "I will, I will, I will!" He made up his mind.

Some people only get to the point of saying, "Perhaps," or "I will see," or "I may." These are soft words—like putty or wax. But "I will" is a sharp word. If you are going to do anything in life—to kill any of your lions, you must begin by getting your courage up to the point of "I will!" The second thing was to keep up his courage. Of course, when Benaiah said he would go and kill the lion, the people said, "What a brave man he is!" . . . But when he got outside the village, and there was no one in sight, he felt cold and wretched; and there was something in him that wanted to go back. . . But he had said, "I will!" and he did it.

Some people's lives are all beginnings. If I could see the diaries you boys and girls keep, what should I see? January 1.—Began to learn Latin. Began to read English history. Read Macaulay's Essays. Began to take lessons on the violin. January 2.—Began something else. But by the time March has come, I ask: "How have you got on with your Latin?" "Oh, I tossed it away!" "What have you done with the violin?" "I gave it to my sister." "How about Macaulay's Essays?" "Frightfully dry! gave them up!" You did not keep up your courage. Now, for the sake of your soul, when you begin a thing, finish it. Go on.

Another thing Benaiah had to see to was caution. He had to go down very cautiously from one place to another. . . . There they are, the two living things at the bottom of the pit, and of the two only one can leave the pit alive. He must have prayed with might and main to God to keep him to his work. . . .

Now, if you are really going to conquer the sin within you, you must get to work in that same cautious way. There must be no brag or swagger about it. You must not go out and do the great task of life as if you were great people. You must go out with caution and modesty, praying God to help you; and then with God's force you will slay your lion. . . .

At last he got him up to the top of the pit and someone sees that Benaiah is alive. The whole village comes crying, laughing, and shouting; and then they met Benaiah dragging the big thing, with all the boys and girls in the village helping. There were almost as many hands as hairs upon it! When they arrived, what a cheer they gave! And Benaiah felt it was well worth all the peril and the cold. . . .

Ah, boys and girls, believe me, it is worth while being noble; it is worth while being brave everywhere. It never pays to be a coward. . . . May God help you to kill your lions.

Poems.

Come up Hither!*

By EDITH GILLING CHERRY.

(Rev. iv. 1.)

I have heard a voice that calleth
Down from Heaven's open door,
Like a cooling dew it falleth
On my spirit, wearied sore—
Falleth from the far blue ether
From the heights by angels trod:
"Come up hither—hither—hither!
"Child of Heaven, and of God!"

"What is this thy sad heart deemeth
"Almost more than it can bear?
"Come and see how small it seemeth
"In this cloudless upper air!
"See it, as the angels see it,
"Who have looked upon the King;
"Lift thy thought to theirs, and free it
"From all earthly fettering."

"Come up hither—hither—hither!
"Rise above thy little life,
"Dreams that vanish, hopes that wither,
"Thankless service, wearying strife;
"Praise and blame, and tears and laughter—
"Soon 'twill all be nought to thee!
"I will show thee God's Hereafter!
"Come up hither!" "Come and see!"

* From The Master's Touch and other Poems. (2s., 2s. 6d., 3s. Morgan & Scott.) These poems breathe, now a deep spiritual longing, anon a glad experience—in thoughts which must touch a responsive chord in every reader's heart.

Perfect Through Suffering.*

By GEORGE T. COSTER.

A child cast out to die
Deformed and weeping lay
In helplessness. Passed by The Lord that way.

He caught it to His arms,
To His capacious breast,
Allaying its alarms,
The child He pressed.

"Unworthy of the earth"
He said, "and of the sky,
Deemed art thou, in thy birth,
Condemned to die.

"Die shalt thou not, but live,
Thy earth with heaven be rife;
To thee the power I give
To live thy life.

"Thy life shall be a cross,
To triumph thou shalt go
Thro' grief—and by earth's loss
Heaven better know.

"Perfect thro' suffering, this
The way I went, and now
It is thy way to bliss—
My child art thou."

"Things as They Are."*

Amid the gloom and darkness
Of India's awful night,
Where Satan sits enthroned
In fearful fiendish might—

All hopeless were our mission,
All hapless were our lot,
If God were not behind us,
The God that faileth not—

If Christ were not our Captain,
To lead us in the fight,
When all the hosts of hell attack
The children of the Light.

In Him our strength confiding,
Though things be "as they are,"
We see the triumph coming,
And hail it from afar,

Of captives' souls delivered
And blind eyes made to see;
Then idols shall be shattered,
And shades of darkness flee.

Yes, we shall come rejoicing,
Our work is not in vain,
And many a sheaf we'll carry home
From India's golden plain.

Story Books.

Hodder & Stoughton.

The uncle and nephew to whom the reader of Two Tramps, by Amy le Feuvre, is introduced, are most likeable individuals, and the story of their adventures is charmingly told (2s.).

As the third of a series of tales dealing with English history, Follow the Gleam, by Joseph Hocking, deals with the times of the Civil War. Strafford, Laud, Charles I., and many more historical personages are introduced in its pages. One more effort is made to do justice to the memory of Oliver Cromwell, by representing him as the brave, earnest, lovable man he was; instead of the morose, merciless bigot he was long described as being. The book is bold in conception, entertaining throughout, and sheds some instructive light on the history and manners of the time. (3s. 6d.)

Tracing the steps by which God led a wayward self-centred girl, first to know Himself as the true centre, and then to absolute dedication to Him, Amy le Feuvre has woven a deeply interesting story in The Making of a Woman. (6s.) There is much skilful delineation of character in the book, and the emphasis is always on true ideals. The reader seems to see the veil lifted from lives that are among the hardest to reach with the message of life which is life indeed. One who struggled against restriction with a demand for freedom, in quest of fame as the highest good, in the end seeks first the Kingdom of God with His righteousness, and glories in being the servant of Jesus Christ. This is a good book, which will shed light on the path for some who are perplexed. It deserves to be placed on many a family table.

The wrongs of the black man at the hands of the white make a terrible record, and they cannot be spoken of only in the past tense. With shame we remember that the colour-line is now drawn in English territory, and excuses are found for those who would keep the South African native races in a condition which, whether it be called apprenticeship or by another name, is certainly not freedom. Much may be done by literature in which things are called by their right names, and we trust that, besides doing a good work at home in the United States, Handicapped Among the Free, by Emma Rayner (6s.), will open the eyes of British readers to what "keeping the black man in his proper place" really means. We do not envy those who can read these pages without feeling their blood grow hot and their pulses beat faster. This is a powerfully-written "story with a purpose," permeated by a passion for righteousness burning like a fire.

We are brought face to face in The Lights of Home (6s.), by that clever writer, David Lyall, with just such men and women as we long to meet in the daily round of life in city and country. Even where the reader is startled by expressions of hopefulness for the future life founded on a decidedly unorthodox basis, he feels he must admire the character of those in whose mouths the expressions are put. There is throughout the volume an undercurrent of yearning for real home life which will appeal most deeply to those who have known at one time that great joy and privilege, and who have afterwards gone out by a lonely path. The music is in a minor key, and in this respect harmonizes with the greater part of many lives. Yet again, it reminds us of different experience in that it is not sad; rather does it bring back to us quiet hours spent with those we loved, when speech and silence were alike pleasant, because there was mutual understanding.

Nelson & Sons.

Harold Avery's The House on the Moor is a bright little story of schoolboy adventure. (1s.)

Boys seem never to tire of their old friend, Coral Island, by R. M. Ballantyne. This newest edition, strongly bound and capitally illustrated in colours, is a marvel of cheap production. (1s.)

A quiet tale of life at St. Germains, the Court of the exiled Stuarts, is simply told in A Fair Jacobite, by H. May Poynter. (2s. 6d.) Between the lines there can be read an understanding of the reasons why England is better without the old dynasty.

The rising of Owen Glendower is the foundation of Evelyn Everett-Green's vividly-written story, Cambria's Chieftain. Madoc, son of the great Welshman, and the Prince of Wales are the chief figures in this powerful blend of history and fiction. (3s. 6d.)

For little girls there is much of simple faith in the Lord to be learned from Isabel's Secret, by the author of "The Story of a Happy Little Girl." (2s.) On Angels' Wings, by the Hon. Mrs. Greene, tells of a suffering little one, and her home-going to heaven. (1s. 6d.) Daddy's Lad, by E. L. Haverfield, is a "story of a little lass," whom all loved. (1s. 6d.)

The terrible opening weeks of the Franco-German war are the historical setting of The Castle of the White Flag (5s.), by Evelyn Everett-Green. As the residence in Alsace of a party of young English people, who used it impartially as a Red Cross hospital for the wounded of both armies, the castle became the scene of a number of striking incidents. Vivid picturing of the horrors of war alternates with more agreeable passages, and the book will be wholesome, profitable reading for young people.

The stirring experiences of the Riverton Boys (1s. 6d.), told by K. M. Eady in a pleasant and readable fashion, will appeal to all who enjoy innocent fun. The author describes a feud between two neighbouring schools, and the exciting situations in which the rival parties eventually found themselves. The closing chapter is an echo of the late South African war, several old Riverton friendships being renewed at the front.

Boys will revel in the adventures of the young English soldier of fortune, fighting for the Dutch in their heroic struggle against Spanish oppression and cruelty, as set forth in Beggars of the Sea (3s. 6d.), by Tom Bevan. The "beggars" were stalwart patriots of Queen Elizabeth's day, and the tenacity with which they continued their revolt on sea after the Spaniards had driven them from the land is typical of the dogged perseverance they display in defending the cause of the helpless.

The Round Tower, by Florence M. S. Scott and Alma Hodge, will be welcomed by those who enjoy historical reminiscences. It relates to the Irish Rebellion in 1798, and gives a graphic description of the strategy of two small boys who escaped from the clutches of the French, and conveyed to the English headquarters news of the enemy's approach. This and other exploits connected with the ruined tower furnish entertaining and pleasurable reading (1s. 6d.)

Religious Tract Society.

A stirring story of travel and adventure in the hill country of North India, which boys will appreciate, is well told in Ilderim the Afghan, by David Ker. (2s. 6d.) The tone is high, and good wholesome lessons are taught.

Not for long have we read a story with more pleasure than More About Pixie, by Mrs. George de Horne Vaizey. (2s. 6d.) Innocent fun and genuine pathos both abound. The author knows how to write a good story without introducing a bad character, which is a healthy sign.

A story of joy and sorrow, of light and shade in human life, all used by the grace of God to draw His own people nearer to Him: such is By Love Impelled, by Harriet E. Colvile (2s. 6d.) It is told in a charming way that will draw out the sympathy of youthful readers, and make plain to them some things hard to be understood.

Ravensdale Castle, by Louisa C. Silke, recalls the days of Queen's Elizabeth's reign, and is a true picture of life in Court circles and the doings of the nobility in the sixteenth century. Not the least interesting figure in the group is the invalid mother of a baronet, whose Christian piety is used to noble purpose in influencing others for good. (2s. 6d.)

The Shell Hunters: Their Wild Adventures by Sea and Land. By Gordon Stables, M.D., R.N. (2s. 6d.) The illustrations afford some idea of the thrilling character of this book. The first depicts a "most awkward mêlée," the second "armed fiends leaping to and fro," while in the third we see how "the Chinese knife flew high in the air." And the story is assuredly stirring and exciting.

E. Livingston Prescott's book—Donny's Captain—is attractive inside and out. Donny himself is a lively boy with an innocently adventurous turn of mind at the age of six, a blind faith in humanity, and a burning desire to help everybody to do everything! Confusion and much amusement of course are the outcome. The reunion of the child's parents, after many years of estrangement, forms a fitting sequel to a touching story. (2s.)

A vivid picture is drawn in Turf and Table, by Henry Johnson (2s. 6d.), of the terrible net spread by gambling harpies for the young and weak. The Bishop of Hereford contributes a commendatory preface. Lovers of purity and righteousness must wish that such books could be placed in the hands of thousands of our schoolboys and—it may come as a shock to some, but the need is even wider—their sisters as well. Writing to teach a great lesson has produced no trace of dulness; brightness and sustained interest are the characteristics of the story.

"Blessed be drudgery" is the keynote of A Princess in Calico, by Edith Ferguson Black. The story is that of a life amid the most commonplace and trying surroundings rendered beautiful by surrender to Christ. Spiritual and temporal things are placed in their true perspective here. In an equally attractive companion volume, The Anchoress of St. Maxime, by M. H. Cornwall Legh, the truth is brought home that a life of continuous duty may be monotonous or the reverse, according to the spirit in which it is lived. These are books for girls, full of wise teaching. (2s. each.)

There is a good deal of discussion of religious and social questions in The Conscience of Roger Trehern, by Evelyn Everett-Green (3s. 6d.); but we commend it as a good story, such as will help young people in the clearing up of the problems which must be faced by thoughtful minds. The hero is a young man trained for the Church, who at the last moment declines to seek ordination because he is not conscious of the call of the Holy Spirit. Following his conscience, he is at length enabled, after a series of fiery trials, to feel his feet upon the Rock, and to go forward humbly and gladly to Christian service.

There is much that is suggestive on the relations of employers and employed in The Intervening Sea, by David Lyall (3s. 6d); yet it is not a text-book of economics, but a deeply interesting story. The veil is lifted from the human heart by one who knows both the lights and the shadows of life. The responsibility resting on every man, and the mutual duties of class to class,—of poor to rich, as well as of rich to poor—are shown in a way that will arouse earnest thought. Depiction of character is a strong point in these pages; and it is made plain that behind all remedies for social ills, to be effective, there must be the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Keen appreciation of nature in her grander moods marks The Woman at the Well, by Frances Craig Houston. (3s. 6d.) Those who have been possessed by the charm of hills clad in snow or wreathed in mist will find here an interpretation of their thoughts. This well-written story emphasizes the (to the many) unwelcome truth that the deepest charm of life is often brought out by pain and sorrow when all else has failed. Mystery and everyday life are interwoven in an attractive manner. Healthy lessons are inculcated, and some pitfalls of life are marked with a prominent danger signal. The book is pleasant reading, and will make friends for itself.

Andrew Melrose.

Two companion volumes by Louise Mack (Mrs. J. Percy Creed)—Teens and Girls Together (3s. 6d.)—supply life-like word pictures of home and school life among girls in Australia.

The Squire's Heir, by Evelyn Everett Green (5s.), possesses that fascinating charm which one has become accustomed to look for in her romances. The honest, blameless life of the real heir is in danger to all appearance of being overshadowed by the worthless would-be supplanter, but in the end reality and goodness triumph. Throughout, interest is sustained, and the characters well contrasted and excellently drawn.

Three stirring boys' books are by Robert Leighton. The Haunted Ship (5s.) is a tale of the Devonshire smugglers, in which mystery and startling situations abound. In the Land of Ju-Ju (5s.) is described as a tale of Benin, the City of Blood, and some truly terrible pictures are given in its pages. It is, however, full of racy description, and of surprising adventure on the part of the youthful heroes, well told. The hero of Fighting Fearful Odds (3s. 6d.) is extricated, and becomes a respected member of society, after being in an apparently hopeless network of temptation and criminal association.

Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.

The "Chatterbox Library" now includes The Constable's Stories, by Flora Schmalz, with illustrations (1s.), which illustrate in different ways how unlikely the wrong-doer is to escape his penalty.

As its title suggests, Bert's Holiday, by Janie Brockman, is the record of the pranks and exploits of a boy on vacation—charmingly natural, lively, and entertaining throughout. (1s.)

Those who read the vivid impressions of life in South Africa given in Lost Sir Brian, by Fred Wishaw, will find that the book is more than an interesting story. A companion volume more suited for girls is The Girlhood of Theo, by Cecil Darby—a good story of home life. (3s. 6d. each.)

Of the series of story books for young people, by Stella Austin, illustrated by J. Ley Pethybridge, it is worthy of note that Uncle Philip (2s. 6d.) is now in its fourth edition, while Other People, a story of Modern Chivalry, and Kenneth's Children (2s. each), are in the third edition. Mother Bunch (2s.), which has just been added, is a bright and homely story of village life, which promises to win its way also into favour. Those who prefer stories with a Church of England ring about them will find these worthy of attention.

Girls will like to read the experiences of Hilda at School, related by Mary Macleod. There are some interesting sketches of children, and the racy style of the author at once commands attention and retains it to the end. A sound useful moral underlies this wholesome and pleasant story. (1s. 6d.)

Jean Ingelow is well acquainted with the inner pleasures and diversions of life at a girls' school, a glimpse at which is given in the first part of The Black Polyanthus and Widow Maclean. The second part tells of a large-hearted widow who succours the son of the village squire when turned adrift by his father for having run away to sea. (1s.)

Drummond's Tract Depôt.

Two Words Did It: and other narratives, by A. M. C., is a continuation of the little work, "Stories of a Men's Class." It tells how, through the persevering labours of a Christian lady, numbers of working-men are persuaded to attend a Bible-class, with the result that many of them are won for Christ, and in their turn become soul-winners among their companions. As an illustration of what may be accomplished by individual effort, this collection of narratives will be read with interest and profit. (1s. 6d.)

A singularly fresh and stimulating Protestant story is Geraldine De Leslie: or Tried and True. It should be read by all who are inclined to close their eyes to the evils which must inevitably follow the tolerance of Romish influences in the home circle. The heroine, the daughter of a Roman Catholic baronet, borrows a copy of the Word of God from an Irish peasant, and learns of the only way by which salvation can be obtained. The strength of her new found faith is sorely tried, but she has the joy of seeing others brought into the same liberty and peace. Other characters introduced are exceedingly well drawn, and the doings of one and all are portrayed in a manner that will afford no ordinary pleasure to those who take up the book. (2s. 6d.)

J. F. Shaw & Co.

The popularity of Hans Andersen is as great as ever, and a handsome illustrated edition of Fairy Tales is sure to be a favourite with children. (3s.)

Simple conversations on Bible subjects, with illustrations, form an attractive feature of Sunday Sunshine; and there are also plenty of interesting stories, with well-chosen Scripture-searching exercises. (1s. 6d.)

The story of Robin Hood has a perennial attractiveness for boys, who will doubtless consider it the chief feature of the handsome illustrated volume, Bravely Won. The book also contains a number of short tales of adventure, in which the military element predominates. (3s.)

On the Winning Side, by Sydney C. Grier, is a record of lively experiences of missionaries among uncivilized peoples. Not only is it pleasant reading, but boys and girls who peruse it will become acquainted with some of the difficulties which the heralds of the Cross have to encounter in heathen lands. (2s. 6d.)

The stirring days of Nelson, the circumstances of the battle of St. Vincent, and life on board British battleships, generally constitute a background of which Dr. Gordon Stables has taken full advantage in Chris Cunningham (5s.). Boys will never tire of reading of the adventures of such officers and sailors, men and boys.

The boy from whom Saint Jack takes its title, earned first the soubriquet of "Fighting Jack." His own ambition, and that of his parents for him, was that he should follow in the footsteps of many ancestors as a soldier; but the story is here told of how he enlisted under the banner of Jesus Christ, and fought battles for Him instead. (2s. 6d.)

Yet another story comes from the fertile pen of Evelyn Everett Green. Under Two Queens (5s.) is undoubtedly one of her best productions. Its historical setting takes us back to the stirring times of Lady Jane Grey, and outstanding events in Court life are woven into a fascinating and spirited narrative, with that charm and skill which have ensured for the author the wide popularity she enjoys.

S. W. Partridge and Co.

Children's picture books are gay inside and out. Among the first issues are: Two Little Bears at School, and Merry and Free. (1s. each.) A bright little book of the same kind is—Sweet Stories Retold, a Bible picture book for little folks. (6d.)

If the doings of Stephen Grey, as penned by Letitia Carter, are taken to heart by youthful readers, gambling practices will be robbed of their fascination. This is a powerful setting forth of what too often follows the unchecked mania for betting, loss of character, domestic happiness, and a true conception of life and manhood. (5s.)

Three attractive and well-illustrated additions have been made to the series of sixpenny story books—A Sunday Trip, and What Came of It, by E. J. Romanes; Wilful Jack, by Marian Isabel Hurrell; and Willie the Waif, by Minie Herbert. The ninepenny series has been enriched by Grandmother's Child, by Annie S. Swan; and Dorothy's Trust, by Adela Frances Mount. Among the books at a shilling, Ruth's Roses, or What Some Girls Did, by Laura A. Barter; Sunshine and Snow, by Harold Bindloss; A Brother's Need, by L. S. Mead; In Paths of Peril, a Boy's Adventure in Nova Scotia, by J. Macdonald Oxley; and Pets and their Wild Cousins, with its new and true stories of animals, by Rev. John Isabell, will appeal strongly to young people of both sexes.

Two attractive books deal with the difficulties and encouragements of witness-bearing for Christ in different circumstances. Robert Aske, by Eliza F. Pollard, is a story of the Reformation, in whose pages we find the names of William Tyndale, Miles Coverdale, Cardinal Pole, and the Duke of Suffolk; with many a testimony to the faithfulness of God. In Meta Lyall, by Flora E. Berry, the circumstances are those of modern life, and again the cross of Christ is shown to bring joy through tears. These books inculcate sound Scriptural teaching, (2s. each.)

Christmas Cards and Booklets.

YEAR by year the variety of Messrs. Raphael Tuck & Sons' publications for the Christmas season becomes more bewildering. Beautiful cards are supplied at every price to suit the slenderest, as well as the better supplied purses. Floral, animal, historical, seascape, and landscape subjects abound. Wall texts and Scripture mottoes are excellent value down to a halfpenny each. The "Home, Sweet Home," series at 3d., 4d., and 6d., present many attractions, and are of a size making them suitable for the walls of cottages or children's bedrooms. The cheaper Wedgwood texts will be found admirably suited for wider distribution in missions and classes. Twelve kinds at 2d., and six at 1d. of reward texts, in sheets to cut up, will be welcomed by teachers who have come to the end of their resources in this way. Christmas post-cards may be had with religious and Scriptural designs, as well as a host of others. (6d. per packet.) Among the illustrated books for young people is The Holy Land, by Canon Duckworth, illustrated by W. J. Webb (3s. 6d.) "Father Tuck" has a Bible series of books, including Our Lord's Miracles, Parables, In the Beginning, and Old Bible Stories (1s. each on linen, 6d. paper). Charming booklets by Miss Havergal, Miss Charlotte Murray, Keble, H. F. Lyte, Chas. Wesley, and others, are provided at 1s., 6d., 4d., 3d. Among Calendars too numerous too mention, The Lord's Prayer (1s.), Peace from Heaven (6d.) Golden Promises (4d.), and Words of Hope (3d.) will well repay examination.

Mr. Ernest Nister, 24, St. Bride Street, E.C., publishes a large and beautiful selection of motto cards for 1904. There is abundant variety to choose from at 2d. and 1d. each (12s. and 6s. per 100), with a smaller size at 3s. per 100. The texts are well chosen, and the colour-printing attractive. Arrangements can be made for adding names of churches, &c., or for inserting different texts. Among novelties we find a new and excellent-temperance pledge cards (2d., 1d., and ½d. each); a variety of Christmas mottoes, series of excellent postcards, with texts accompanied by landscapes, seascapes, &c. (6d. per packet); and purse calendars.

Messrs. Hills & Co., Limited, have an excellent calendar giving coloured views of Lincoln, Durham, York, and Canterbury Cathedrals (2s. 6d.); the Church Calendar gives the proper lessons for 1904; while the one entitled "Little Folks" (1s.) will be a favourite in the schoolroom; and others are suitable for the study or general use. Well executed views of public buildings, &c., are to be found on Christmas cards at various prices, and floral cards also appear in chaste and beautiful designs. "Hymnal Gems" are a series of verses on hand-made deckle-edged cards, suitable for framing (2d. each). Another novelty is a series of book-markers made of parchment, with sayings from Christian authors (2d. each).

Mr. John Ritchie (Kilmarnock, N.B.) provides excellent sheet almanacs with texts—Watchman (½d.), and Household (1d.). The Every Day Stand Calendar has a text for each monthly page (4d.), while the Pocket Diary and Daily Text Book (2d.) is among the best of its kind. There are also good intaglio motto cards for believers, workers, and general use.

Among the most attractive calendars, text-cards, mottoes, and intaglios—with Christmas, New Year, and birthday greetings—are the Mildmay Series. The "Lakeland" cards are specially beautiful (2s. for six). Series III. of the Mildmay Greeting cards have reproductions of water-colour sketches by Mrs, Townsend (1s. for 12). "Hill and Vale," with sketches from around Keswick; "Bright Flowers," by A. L.; and "Carols of the Dawn," with pictures of birds, by A. B. and L. L. will be found very suitable for Sunday-school and other widespread use (6d. for 12). Four square and four oblong motto cards for 1904, at 1d. each, could not be improved upon. The "Robin" Motto, "Not One is Forgotten," has been reprinted, without date, by request (1d.) Larger cards, three kinds, are 2d. each. The calendars include "Looking Upward" (2s.), "Trossachs" (1s.), "Mildmay Stand" (1s.), "The Shining Way" (6d.) All profits are applied to the support of the hospitals and other work of the Mildmay Missions (D. de Lys, Mildmay-Deaconess House, N.).

The Day Star Series of Hand-Painted Texts and Scrolls will meet a general need for select decoration for class-rooms and larger places of worship. As intimated, the illumination is done by hand, and whether the result presents a striking word or a favourite text, either as a scroll or in a frame, the work is calculated to gratify the eye and arouse reflection along Christian lines. Some of these artistic productions are specially suited for Christmas and New Year gifts. Substantial scrolls range from 2s. 6d. upward. (Prospectuses, with all particulars, from S. E. Roberts, 8, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.)

Books for Children

(Besides others already mentioned).

The Wonderful Castle, by Mary E. Murray, is a good addition to the Red Nursery Series (1s. Sunday School Union).

Mrs. Molesworth gives us some capital fairy stories in An Enchanted Garden. (1s. T. Fisher Unwin.) The book is in its third edition, and is one of the best of the "Children's Library" series.

Darton's Leading Strings may well be popular. What with fine pictures and large print readings it is the very thing little children want, and are the better for having. (1s. 6d. Wells Gardner.)

Lollipop Town is a splendid collection of simple stories in large type and short words, with just the pictures to suit. (1s.) The Grey Rabbit, written and illustrated by Mary Gladwin, has effective illustrations in red and black. (1s. net. Wells Gardner.)

Large type and suitable illustrations, coloured as well as black and white, with poems and stories in simple words, bespeak a warm welcome for Little Frolic from those who are just beginning to read for themselves. (2s. J. F. Shaw & Co.)

The plea on behalf of domestic animals which underlies Pussy Meow: the Autobiography of a Cat, by S. Louise Patteson (2s. 6d. A. Melrose), should appeal alike to old and young. The story is interestingly told, and will arouse interest all round the home circle.

Toy books are in great and tempting variety. At 3d. we note, with approval, Bible Stories and Crackers. A.B.C. of Games and Toys and The Doll's House (6d. each) will charm childish recipients. Larger books at 1s. (on linen 2s.), including Our Dogs and The Book of Horses, seem to be even better value. All are splendidly produced in artistic fashion. (Nelson.)

Boys and girls are not likely to skip a line of Benny, the Breadwinner, by Nellie Hellis. It tells of the heroic struggle of an orphan boy of twelve to support the one who had adopted him. Benny's kindly disposition adds to this another burden, the task of caring for an ill-treated, motherless girl. To read how the two children fight with poverty, and eventually overcome, and help each to a knowledge of a Saviour's love, will give unalloyed satisfaction to young folk. (1s. 6d. Jarrolds.)

A beautiful volume for the young is Tales from Maria Edgeworth, with introduction by Austin Dobson, and illustrations by Hugh Thomson. (6s. Wells Gardner.) Once more we meet with "The Orphans," "The White Pigeon," "Forgive and Forget," "Waste not, want not," "The Little Merchants," and several other of Miss Edgeworth's charming stories. The illustrations are quaint in character, and excellent as to artistic execution. Such a volume as this should do something towards promoting literary taste in the homes into which it is received.

The "Original Poems" and Others: By Ann and Jane Taylor and Adelaide O'Keeffe. Edited by E. V. Lucas, with illustrations by F. D. Bedford. (6s. Wells Gardner). A handsome edition of a famous book. Though a century has passed since they were written, the poems have lost none of their simplicity and charm. There is a deeply interesting introduction, giving account of the writers to the new age; and as for the many pictures, they will captivate young minds, and promote the entertaining and instructive intention of the volume as a whole.

Eight masterpieces of English art are reproduced in good style in Evangelists of Art, by Rev. James Patrick. In an excellent homily which accompanies each, the painting is described in detail, and helpful lessons are pointed out, so as to form an excellent "picture-sermon for children" (2s. 6d. Oliphant).

The Representative Men of the Bible. By George Matheson, D.D., LL.D. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) This second series of studies begins with Ishmael, and ends with Daniel. They are from the pen of one who sees motive as well as action, one who exercises imagination as well as judgment. We should not like to endorse every position assumed in the interpretation of Scripture, nor every inference derived from familiar Biblical statements; but, all the same, we recognise with thankfulness the valuable contribution here made to a setting forth of the ways of God as shown in His dealings with men. If Dr. Matheson shows us "Ishmael, the Outcast," "Jonah, the Narrow," "Aaron, the Vacillating," and "Boaz, the Kind," it is to make us see the lessons of the lives of these and a dozen other Representative Men of the Bible. The discerning reader will find this book instructive and refreshing.

FOR some years Miss Katherine Browne has conducted most successful work as a missioner in the villages of Norfolk, and through her guidance many lives have been given to the Lord Jesus Christ. It has, however, been painfully evident that the bodies of the very poor need attention as well as the souls, not only because of the distance of the parish doctor and of the delay which frequently occurs in obtaining his services, but because he is seldom acquainted with the conditions which prevail in maay of their homes, or with the astounding ignorance of hygienic sanitation and the art of nursing.

Some time ago, Sister Maud, of the West London Mission (daughter of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse), joined Miss Browne during her holidays in one of the villages. In one of the cottages visited a woman was ill with rheumatic fever. The doctor was sent for on a Saturday, but he did not arrive until the following Wednesday. Fortunately Sister Maud, with her nine years' experience as a nurse in hospital and in Soho, was able to deal with the case, which, like many others, would otherwise have probably been fatal.

She was, however, struck with the fact that the poor people were crowded together more closely than in London! Three families slept in two small rooms, and the children were frequently ill owing to gross errors in diet, from which they might have been saved by timely advice. The need of help was indeed so great that Sister Maud was induced to devote a whole year to these poor people in a group of villages. In one instance the mother of six children died from want of proper nursing (it was a case of hæmorrhage), the doctor living six miles away, and no skilled help being available. In another, two aged women who lived together were sick unto death in their one bed. The Sister was called in, too late, unhappily, to save both lives, for one poor woman died, but the other, lying beside the corpse, was successfully treated.

Sister Maud has remarked that she dare not tell anyone but her colleague what she found to be the condition of the people in some of these village homes. They need the active help of loving women, trained alike in the service of Christ and the hospital, who will nurse and help them in all emergencies, and with the long chronic illnesses also counsel and teach them; but there are few among them who have received these angel visits. There are, indeed, a few nurses here and there, yet it happens too often that they may not visit those people who do not attend the parish church, Sister Maud herself having in one village been requested (and by a dignitary of the church) to act on this instruction!

It is proposed that Sister Maud should join Miss Browne, to visit and nurse the sick in a group of parishes for a year, the population numbering about a thousand people. Sister Maud, who holds the L.O.S. certificate and hospital general training, has had an experience which is only to be gained by her ten years' practice. She loves the work because she loves the people; and she has a devoted helper in Miss Browne, in whose duties she is equally interested. That this work may become a reality, appeal is made for the small but very necessary funds to cover actual expenses. £80 will, it is confidently expected, provide for a year. The following are referees of the work:—Katherine Price Hughes, Edward Olney, C. Silvester Horne, Gipsy Smith, George White, M.P. for West Norfolk, James Long (Cudworth Manor, Newdigate, Surrey).

The "Handy Theological Library" opens with the fifth edition of In Relief of Doubt, by Rev. R. E. Welsh. (2s. 6d. net. H. R. Allenson). The Bishop of London writes that in a great many instances among professional and business men he had found the book to be of real service, "dealing with the vague atmosphere of doubt which is so common," and dispelling it by "clear and pointed arguments." While we cannot approve of the author's concessions to criticism of Scripture, and to evolutionary theorists, the book is a scholarly discussion of the subject.

Five Hundred homeless and destitute boys, most of whom are not eligible for other institutions, are given Christian homelife, educated, and trades taught.

Admission is not given because of the respectability of deceased parents, or their family. The need of the child, his lack of home training and Christian teaching, are the chief matters considered.

Will those who sympathise with destitute children help in the saving of these poor boys?

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, November 22. Ecclesiastes vii.

IN this paragraph, a worldly wisdom enumerates (1-14) three principles for a successful life. Seek to win a good name, like some choice fragrance, which exhales from apparel or person. This is more likely to be secured in the house of mourning than of feasting (2-6), for it is impossible to be with fools without sharing their folly (7); and though one has to listen to the reproof of the wise, it is well to bear it patiently, for the end will be better than the beginning (8, 9). Seek wisdom rather than wealth, for it braces the spirit to meet any fortune, and inspires an inward serenity and calm (12). Accept all that happens from the hand of God, both crooked and straight, trusting Him whatever may befall (13, 14).

15-20. It is quite in keeping with a mere worldly morality, which is being here exhibited before us, to draw as an inference from the most casual and superficial observation of life, that since the righteous are not specially rewarded for their righteousness, nor the wicked punished on account of their sins, therefore a prudent man should be neither very righteous nor very wicked. It is part of the policy of a Mr. Worldly Wiseman to be temperate, going to no excess of virtue or vice. Here is strength (19). This is a most immoral moral, though it is as popular to-day as ever; and it is set down here that we may know the kind of reasoning which is being pursued by multitudes.

21-24. It is not wise, says the Preacher, to be overmuch troubled by what people say about us. "Let them say." But in the present connection, the probable suggestion is, that there is nothing gained by being too careful. In any case, we shall be the subjects of slanderous gossip. Men will speak against us, as we have spoken against them.

25-29. The royal writer was reaping what he had sown. When he says he had found one man among a thousand he may have had in his mind the "interpreter" of Job xxxiii. 23. Out of his thousand wives and concubines he had not found one whom he could trust. Men and the harem have made such Eastern women what they are.

1-13. We are advised to submit with hopeful resignation to the wrongs that spring from human tyranny and injustice. The worldly-wise man will carry a bright face into the king's presence-chamber; and even, though he is rated with evil words, will not show resentment or join in revolt. He knows that obedience and submission will not provoke insult or contumely. (Does not this account for the obsequious servility of the Eastern, as contrasted with the manly independence of the West? We must consider, not how to get easily through life, but how to make things better for those who follow us.) The Preacher insists that, though there are apparent inequalities in the awards that come to the righteous or wicked, yet on the whole men receive their deserts, and therefore the triumph of the wicked will soon pass, whilst the righteous will receive their reward. This is not noble teaching, but it suits the man who wants an easy position in the world, and can accommodate himself to the current maxims of his time.

14, 15. In these closing verses of this section the Preacher seems to doubt the very principles he has been advancing, and he falls back on the conclusion that the best thing for a man to do is to carry a happy disposition through the world, and amid his labours. He does not answer the question as to how that temper is to be acquired, through the peace of God keeping the heart. That secret is disclosed in other experiences of which he knew nothing (Phil. iv. 6). In citing these current maxims, does not the Divine Spirit intend to teach us that a scheme of life which makes a man a coward and slave, which cannot satisfy the larger cravings of the soul, is wholly and hopelessly wrong? Thus we are prepared to be led to the discovery of the chief good. From verse 16, and onwards, we are taught that the chief good is found, not in wisdom, pleasure, or business, but in holiness, which begins in the forgiveness of sin and ends in anticipating and preparing for the life to come.

TUESDAY, November 24. Ecclesiastes ix.

1-6. Those whom the Preacher addressed had no certain knowledge or anticipation of the world to come. For them death was the end of all; no light of hope shone behind the darkness of the grave. For the living alone there was hope, however dejected and wretched their lot, their times might mend; but there was no happy outlook for those who had died. The heavens might be full of light above their graves, and the works of men many, diverse, and great; but they had "no portion for ever in aught that was done under the sun."

7-12. This was the problem of life that presented itself to the Jews of that age. They found that, despite their best endeavours, life was not tranquil; the calamities which overtook the wicked overtook them, even prudent behaviour provoked hatred, and death was always a frowning mystery at the end of all. He was tempted, then, to say, "Let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die." Even those who seek to be good and wise are sometimes taken like fishes in the nets of trial, or as birds in the snare—why then try to be good?

13-17. We have in this paragraph a little parable to illustrate this latter point. A wise man was able to deliver the little city from the great king, but his wisdom did not bring him bread, riches, favour—of what good, then, is wisdom? (This parable receives a striking illustration in the history of the heart, which conscience is able to hold against the power of evil and the attacks of the prince of the power of darkness.)

All this is very pessimistic. It sets forth, however, the conclusion to which men are led when they practise virtue for the sake of the benefit it will do them, and before the love of Christ has furnished them with the one sufficient motive, not to live to themselves, but to Him who died for them, and rose again.

WEDNESDAY, November 25. Ecclesiastes x.

1-7. We have the picture of a fool, and can almost see him coming down the street, for ever wandering from the path for the merest trifle, and chuckling after every other man he meets, as a fool not knowing himself. Alas, when such a man is lifted to sit on an imperial throne! Yet how often this has been the case. Now if a poor wise man, like the one described at the end of the last chapter, is obliged to attend the court of a man like this—how shall he behave? The Preacher counsels meekness and submission. If the ruler rates him, he is to remain unruffled and keep his temper, otherwise he may bring about some greater outrage.

8-20. To confirm him in this line of behaviour, the Preacher adduces several maxims. The overreaching and tyrannous monarch is preparing his own grave (8). To attempt to dethrone a monarch is like pulling down an old wall, because you break up the nest of many a reptile, which will sting you for your pains (9). To attempt a revolution unless you have strong confederates is like endeavouring to cut down trees with a blunt axe (10). Even if the ruler is angry, surely you can charm him to quietness (11).

There were so many of these unsuitable rulers in the state, that its whole fabric was fast fading into decay—the roof rotting and the rain leaking in. Yet the head of the state sought to prop up his power by an army of spies (20). Those were difficult times. The description here reminds us of what is rife in the Turkish Empire. Woe indeed to those whose lot is only in this life, and know nothing of the abiding City.

THURSDAY, November 26. Ecclesiastes xi.

The Preacher is drawing nearer to the object of the long quest. In this chapter he portrays the man who is walking in the right path and drawing closer and closer to the goal. He looks on his neighbours' interests as well as his own, and does good to the evil and thankless. He is compared to a husbandman who pushes out from his home on the inundation of the Nile, casting his seed, which otherwise he would gladly eat, on the waters, in sure faith in the Divine laws, that he may receive his own with interest. He does not withdraw from the labour appointed him because it may be unproductive; nor is he ever waiting for what he supposes will be a favourable season; because he knows that God has a loving purpose in all seasons and for all things, and he may safely trust Him. He has learned that we gain by giving, and thrive by spending; that we are happiest when we live for others; and that our one business in this world is to build up a strong, gracious, and noble character. Sometimes we shall be thanked, but oftener blamed; but peace comes to him who goes on as God's child, seeking to be perfected in love as his Father is.

But though there are stern duties to be done, there are flowers and fruit-trees on our path. Let us not be oblivious of these, but rejoice in every good thing which the Lord gives, and especially in Himself.

FRIDAY, November 27. Ecclesiastes xii.

1. In the last verses of the preceding chapter, the Preacher has mentioned the inevitable judgment-bar that will sum up our individual lives in one dread word of praise or blame. "We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ." When this is borne in mind, it acts as a check on sinful indulgence, an incentive to holy and beneficent living, and a make-weight to the stings and whips of time.

2-8. To this admonition to live in the perpetual present memory of God, the Preacher gives wings, by appending a description of the experiences of man in old age. The keepers of the house are the arms; the strong men are the legs; the grinders are the teeth; the daughters of music are the voice. The old man shrinks from the height, and cannot digest the lightest food. Finally the silver cord is broken, and the golden lamp of life falls heavily to the ground. If we would have death shorn of its terrors, we must remember our Creator, before death comes.

9-14. This is the Epilogue and summing-up. Have a reverent sense of the Divine Presence; be obedient to your highest ideals of duty, revealed in Jesus Christ; fulfil the demand of every hour, without fretting about the future; be blithe, cheerful, and kindly; rest in the Divine forgiveness, and anticipate the Divine Hope and Home.

SATURDAY, November 28. Solomon's Song i.

This exquisite idyll has always been ascribed to Solomon, and the internal evidence points to his authorship. The burden of the Song is the affection and endearment of the marriage relationship. But there is a deeper strain in it than this. Throughout the Scriptures, the marriage relation is chosen to represent the connexion between Jehovah and His people (Isa. liv. 5; lxii. 5; Jer. iii. 20; xxxi. 32; Hos. ii. 2-7). In accordance with this view, a deeper significance attaches to this poem.

To the early days of Israel's history Jehovah looks back and says: "I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after Me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown. Israel was holiness unto the Lord, and the first fruits of His increase" (Jer. ii. 2).

But the self-surrender of the bride in this Song of songs and her receptiveness of love, are yet more absolute: "Let Him kiss me with the kisses of His mouth. . . . Draw me, we will run after Thee. . . . We will be glad and rejoice in Thee."

She confesses her unworthiness, but knows herself accepted in the Beloved: "I am black as the tents of Kedar in myself, but comely as the curtains of Solomon in Thee."

She longs for His companionship: "Tell me, O Thou whom my soul loveth, where Thou feedest Thy flock." He gives her counsel, and pours out upon her words of admiring love: "Behold thou art fair my love, behold thou art fair, thine eyes are as doves." F. B. M.

South American Missions.

II.—THE LAND OF THE SILVER RIVER.

UNDER this title we include the three Republics of Argentina, Paraguay and Uruguay, which form the basin of the Rio de la Plata and its tributaries. The Land of the Silver River is an immense territory, stretching some 2,500 miles north and south, and embracing an area more than twelve times as extensive as the British Isles.

(a) The Argentine, one of the most progressive of South American Republics, has been well opened up by railways, and possesses a climate very suitable in most parts for European colonisation. Its commercial progress during the past few years has been great indeed. Religious liberty is freely accorded to all, although the Republic nominally professes the Roman Catholic faith. Politically, the Argentine is divided into fourteen Provinces; the Federal Capital being at Buenos Ayres. Outside of these fourteen Provinces there are ten large territories embracing the remaining portion of the Republic. The population is estimated at 4,500,000.

(b) The Republic of Paraguay (which abuts on the north-east shoulder of the Argentine, and lies between the Paraguay River and the Parana) covers an area of 95,000 square miles, and has a population of about 600,000, of whom more than 100,000 are aboriginal Indians. The soil is very fertile, and in some respects Paraguay is a most inviting country. But of all South American Republics it seems to have yielded hitherto least fruit in proportion to the time, money, and labour expended upon it. It has been unfortunate in its rulers. Its heavy taxes become crushing burdens which, sooner or later, dishearten all who seek to do anything for the country or its people. These discouraging commercial and political circumstances influence adversely, also, missionary effort within the Republic. During the past year not a single colporteur of either the British and Foreign Bible Society, or of the American Bible Society, has been able to do anything within the Republic of Paraguay. The report of the South American Missionary Society shows that an encouraging work has been done for one or two of the Indian tribes of this Republic, but otherwise nearly the whole land still lies unpossessed for Christ. An effort is now being made on a small scale to start a new mission for Paraguay.

(c) The Republic of Uruguay, which is the smallest of all South American Republics, having an area of 72,000 square miles and a population of probably 850,000, is perhaps still more neglected and still more disappointing even than Paraguay. Its progress is considerably hindered by the amount of time wasted in unfruitful and uncertain politics. Little time and less energy are left to deal with questions vitally affecting the country's progress. In this republic the South American Missionary Society has one chaplaincy, at Fray Bentos, and some itinerant work is done by the Society at a few places in the interior. The Methodist Episcopal Courch of America has eight foreign missionaries at work, chiefly in Montevideo and Trinidad. Some of the colporteurs of the British and Foreign Bible Society and of the American Bible Society also occasionally visit the Republic; but so far as we know, there are not more than a dozen missionaries, half of whom are women, in the whole of Uruguay, with its twenty provinces; which means that there is only one representative of Christ in that Republic for each 70,000 of its population.

Returning now to the immense territory of the Argentine, we will try to tabulate what is being done by the Church of Christ for its four and a-half millions.

(1) By far the largest society at work there is the Methodist Episcopal of America. According to their latest report, this society has some twenty missionaries, stationed at various strategic points in the districts of Buenos Ayres and Rosario. The society seems to be doing a good work.

(2) The two Bible Societies already referred to have for long been doing a sapping and mining work, according to the funds at their disposal. The British and Foreign has one agent and five colporteurs for all the Republics of the Silver River, while the American Bible Society has one agent and eight colporteurs for the twenty-four divisions of the Argentine Republic.

(3) The South American Missionary Society has a chaplaincy for the Welsh Colony of Chubut in Eastern Patagonia, and one at Sandy Point on the Straits of Magellan, and two small Mission stations in the vicinity of Cape Horn and the Land of Fire; but nowhere else in the entire Republic (except in the towns of Buenos Ayres and Rosario), is any work being attempted by this Society. In Buenos Ayres the Evangelical Schools, under the superintendency of the Rev. W. Case Morris and Mrs. Morris, assisted by some thirty-five teachers, are doing noble work, as are also the Homes at Alberdi, six miles from Rosario, under the superintendence of the Rev. W. H. T. Blair, Mrs. Blair, and staff.

In addition to the societies already named, the chief missionary agencies at work in the Argentine Republic are:—

1. The Regions Beyond Missionary Union, with a dozen workers at half a dozen centres.
2. The Canadian Baptist Mission, with four workers.
3. The Victoria Gospel Press, with five workers.
4. The Waldensian Society with eight workers.
5. The Christian Missionary Alliance, with four workers.
6. The Adrogue Evangelical Mission, with three workers.
7. The Postal and Telegraph Christian Association, with two workers.
8. The Moody Bible Institute, with four workers.
9. The Scotch Presbyterian Society, with four workers.
10. The Open Brethren and Independents, say, twelve workers.

The whole of the above have their sphere of service in the one province of Buenos Ayres!

But what shall we say of the other thirteen provinces and ten territories of this progressive and prosperous Republic, with its network of railways, its fertile soil, and its healthy climate? Are there no heralds of the Cross anywhere save in the Federal Province of Buenos Ayres? Yes, a few. In the Province of Cordobá there are six Christian workers to its 350,000 inhabitants! In the Province of Entre Rios, with its 240,000 people, there are two witnessing for Christ! In the Province of Santa Fé, with its 350 colonies, practically only one city—Rosario—is occupied! and, lastly, in the Province of Tucuman there are two brethren at work!

The nine remaining provinces, and the ten territories of this vast Republic, in which there is a population of from two to three millions, are wholly uncared for by any section of the Church of Christ!

The sum of what has been written is that in the vast Republic of Argentina there are not more than a score of its principal towns being influenced in any material way by missionary effort—not more than a score of towns, many of them, too, huge seething sinks of sin, with but here and there a mere grain of "the salt of the earth" to check their rank putridity! Simply to state this is surely to write across the brow of Christendom those awful words—"weighed in the balances and found wanting." How long, O Lord, how long?

ROBERT CALDWELL.

Sunday Observance in Venice.—The leading manufacturers of cloth, silk, and cotton goods in Venice, some of whose places of business were opened all Sunday and other parts of the day, have just undertaken to close their works, warehouses, shops, and offices from Saturday night till Monday morning, and so to observe in its entirety the Day of Rest. This resolution is to take effect from Sunday, November 15. Some time ago resolutions were passed by the Sunday Closing Societies urging upon Parliament the immediate passing of the Sunday Closing Acts. All over Italy an agitation in favour of the observance of Sunday is being systematically carried on, and with good results. A. R.

Evangelising around Paris.

A FEW miles to the west of Paris walls lies the suburban town of Colombes. With the neighbouring localities of Courbevoie, Asnières, Bois-Colombes, &c., there are at least 100,000 people in that district. The population is mainly composed of employés and shop assistants from Paris, who prefer living in less crowded lodgings than those which they could afford to rent within the city itself. Here, in consequence, one finds larger families and a healthier moral atmosphere than in Paris proper.

Through the instrumentality, mainly, of a Christian brother (a former monk) and his wife, who are living there, a few converts have been gathered, and have become members of the Rue Meslay Church, of which I am the pastor. That church, indeed, is largely made up of converts from Roman Catholicism, who have been led to Christ by one or another of our fellow believers, and its membership is scattered in nearly every part of Paris and its adjoining suburbs.

Lately a Christian couple have joined our ranks, after a varied experience which entitles them to our special interest. Monsieur and Madame Raynaud were formerly majors of the Salvation Army, and have in that capacity travelled in almost every part of France. Both converted at an early age, they joined the Salvation Army quite young, and remained seventeen years in it; M. Raynaud is now thirty-six years old. About two years ago, or more, they left, with good feelings on both sides, and a perfectly good record.

They are now without any earthly support, and yet are burning with the desire to consecrate their lives, as they have done hitherto, to the proclamation of the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ. They live at Colombes; and we have decided to open there a mission hall, giving free scope to M. Raynaud to work in what will be practically an out-station of the Rue Meslay Church, Paris. Evangelistic meetings will be held weekly, besides children's meetings and other forms of activity. Any help towards this undertaking will be most gratefully received and acknowledged by myself at the address below. R. SAILLENS.

61, Rue Meslay, Paris.

M. Saillens at Exeter Hall.

A GOODLY number of French-speaking young men assembled in the Lower Exeter Hall on Friday evening, in response to an announcement that M. Saillens, of Paris, would deliver an address. One was struck with the evident seriousness of the congregation, which is perhaps in some measure due to life in a foreign country. M. SAILLENS spoke on "Light," and based his remarks on John viii. 12-24; John ix. 1-7.

The discourse claimed the rapt attention of the hearers. It was largely allegorical. The very necessity of light to the existence of any living thing was shown by the fact that light was God's first step in the creation of the world. The preacher dwelt on the power of light, and on its healing virtues. In connection with the latter, he cleverly brought in a reference to the newly-discovered radium. Men love the light of nature, and also intellectual light, but as a result of the Fall, God's moral light is not so welcome to men. They do not willingly let that light penetrate into their innermost hearts.

It is not so much because of the mysteries and difficulties that hang round the Word of God that they refuse to read the Bible; it is because of the light it sheds on their lives.

With an eloquence and flow of language which it would require the music of the French language to describe, the speaker applied the allegory. The light of God's Word, he said, was not only accusatory, but healing; and several Frenchmen of the company will ascribe the turning-point in their lives to the Holy Spirit's working through the lucid address of M. Saillens.

THE

Torrey-Alexander Mission.

Rich Blessing at Manchester.

THE mid-day meetings are being held in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A., Peter Street, and are attracting large crowds of men holding important positions in the commercial world. On Tuesday, November 10, Dr. Torrey opened his course of addresses on "Why I believe the Bible to be the Word of God," and such was the impression created that on Wednesday the great gathering was considerably augmented. Even the casual observer must have felt a great power in the addresses, for the doctor seemed to excel himself in their delivery. The pulse of the gathering was very evident from the enthusiastic rounds of applause which punctuated the discourses. On Thursday the climax was reached when the speaker "shattered the dreams and illusions of the higher critics." At this point the great crowd burst into a prolonged applause, which showed that as far as the hard-headed business men of Manchester were concerned higher criticism had no support, but rather condemnation.

Perhaps the most impressive part of these meetings is the singing. In this the men join with great spirit and fervour. The chorus of "I surrender all" is an especial favourite. When the attention of all is directed to the great significance of those words, a chorus that was harsh and unmusical becomes tender and melodious.

At these gatherings one is struck with the presence on the platform of many of the leading ministers of the city and district. At the close of one meeting I approached one and asked his opinion on the address. With beaming face he replied: "Praise the Lord; it's what we have been wanting for months." The singing of Prof. Towner has been greatly appreciated at these meetings.

The afternoon Bible meetings in St. James' Hall have been marked by an interest seldom experienced in such gatherings. Before Dr. Torrey commences his address a praise and testimony meeting is conducted by Mr. Alexander. During this some glowing reports of the effects of the mission are given, and an idea is obtained of the extent and power of the services. A typical Yorkshireman got on his feet and began telling of the blessing he had received, and was quickly followed by many others, who told of loved ones saved and lives strengthened and blessed.

BRINGING COMPANIONS TO CHRIST.

Great power and blessing have been manifest in the evening meetings. Men, women, and children of all ranks have been dealt with by the workers, and hundreds have been brought out to a clear knowledge of Christ as their Saviour. A most interesting incident was reported by one of the workers. Nine employés of one establishment were converted on the same evening. Thirteen men came to the meeting together, four of whom were Christians. Great was their joy on seeing their nine companions step out into the aisle, march boldly to the front seats, and there publicly confess their acceptance of Christ. A night or two later they brought another man with them, and he decided.

These fourteen men have started a lunch hour Bible-reading in their workroom, encouraging reports of which are coming to hand. Attracted by the large crowds, a stage professional singer wandered into the meeting one night. The Spirit of God took hold of her, and she found peace eventually by publicly confessing Christ at the front seat. On Thursday evening, between twenty and thirty telegraph boys made their appearance. At the close of the address, in response to the invitation, nineteen of these boys stood up and signified their intention of taking Jesus as their Saviour. Later, the workers had the joy and satisfaction of leading them all out into the light.

On Saturday, meetings were held as usual with remarkable results. In the evening the great hall was packed with an audience largely made up of working men who could not attend any other meeting.

Parties came in from surrounding towns and villages, and many went away with a new-found joy in their hearts. It was a glorious sight when some 200 people—old and young—stood up at the close of the meeting and said, "I take Jesus Christ to be my Saviour and Lord and Master."

LAST SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

In lieu of the eight o'clock meeting for Christian workers, a gathering for prayer was held in one of the small halls at the Y.M.C.A. It proved to be a time of great blessing, and was a fitting beginning to the great day that followed.

In the afternoon the hall was well filled, and a powerful address from Dr. Torrey on the words, "Who, then, can be Saved?" was followed by a good response, the front seats being well filled with anxious inquirers. In the evening, fully three-quarters of an hour before the time for commencing, the hall was packed. A fine body of 700 men occupied the front rows, while at the back all the sitting and standing room was taken up by a great throng anxious to hear the Gospel.

An overflow meeting in St. James's Theatre, conducted by Mr. T. Boyd, of Glasgow, was crowded out, and then hundreds had to be turned away. In both meetings the power of God was felt, and great numbers were led to a definite decision. Dr. Torrey delivered a very powerful address on "God," and held his immense audience in a wonderful manner. As he proved the existence of God, the greatness and holiness of God, and summed up by exhorting his hearers to "prepare to meet God," thousands eagerly drank in his words, and scores responded to the invitation.

A meeting for ministers has been held on Monday morning in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, and was largely attended. Dr. Torrey's searching address to his brethren was with power and directness. The purposes of the ministry, its privileges and responsibility, were indicated in a forcible manner, which appealed very strongly to the brethren present. A time of heart-searching prayer followed the address, and it is believed that many went away strengthened and blessed as a result of the brotherly counsel and appeals of the Doctor. C. O. R.

Death of Dr. Pierson's Daughter.

THE death is announced, at Calcutta, of Miss Louise Benedict Pierson from typhoid fever. She was the daughter of Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, editor-in-chief of the Missionary Review of the World—one of the seven children engaged in Christian work at home or abroad. Miss Pierson was a singularly devoted and successful missionary. She had spent several years as secretary of Young Woman's Christian Associations in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., and in Lowell, Mass., when she was asked by the Women's Union Missionary Society of New York to go to Calcutta to work for the women and girls of India. She sailed on November 16, 1901, to take up the work laid down by Miss Sarah Gardner, who returned home because of ill-health, and whose death occurred last August. Miss Pierson had already made herself beloved by her fellow workers, and by the women and children for whom she laboured, by her loving ministries and cheerfnl self-forgetfulness. Her loss will be keenly felt.

The accident which the Bishop of Liverpool recently sustained at Hindley is proving more tedious than was at first hoped. Dr. Chavasse undertook some public duties a few days ago, prematurely, with the result that he is now under imperative orders to abandon work for a time, and take care and rest. Under these medical orders the bishop has cancelled all his engagements for some time.

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. Cuyler is preaching constantly, and is also booked to take part in the jubilee celebration of the Brooklyn Young Men's Christian Association.

Mr. and Mrs. Osborn-Howe left for South Africa at the end of last week. Their postal address will be c/o I. Storr Lister, Esq., I.S.O., The Reserve, King William's Town, South Africa.

Madame Annie Ryall (Mrs. Bustin) has undergone an operation, which has afforded relief, but she remains in a weak condition. According to the latest intelligence it is hoped that the patient may be convalescent in a few weeks' time.

Mr. and Mrs. Farrand Pierson have just taken up Mission work in Central America, being located first at San Jose, Costa Rica, and then proceeding as the Lord may lead. Mr. Pierson, who is the youngest son of Dr. A. T. Pierson, goes from Northfield, Mass. Mrs. Pierson has had extensive experience in work among poor children in Pittsburg.

Miss Bessie Kaufman, of Hepzibah House Training School, in New York, and Abbie C. Morrow, editor of The Illustrator, published in Chicago, are guests at Bethshan, 10, Drayton Park, N. They will remain until the 27th, being en route for Jerusalem, where Mrs. Morrow goes to build a home for her work, similar to the Elkanah Home for Orphans which she has in Morsemere, N.J.

"Owners" or "Possessors"?

THE following incident was reported in the papers recently:—About seventy years ago, a ship named the Barbaric sank in a gale off the coast of Nova Scotia, after trading in South American waters. At that time there were few or no appliances for searching the contents of sunken ships, and it was thought that the cost of any such experiments with the Barbaric would be more than the result would be worth, so she was left alone.

This year a fisherman, who had heard about the wreck, bought her for a guinea, for he had heard some wonderful tales about great wealth that the vessel was said to contain, of which her owners appeared to be ignorant.

Next he invited a diver to join him in finding out if these stories were true, and in a short time they had brought up thousands of golden dollars, amounting in all to nearly £10,000!

In taking this as an illustration of higher things we must not strain it too far, as in some points it is not an exact parallel. We cannot buy salvation, for Christ has purchased it for us. Still we may find a lesson here and there in this remarkable story.

It is quite certain that there are "treasures" and "riches" spoken of in the New Testament as "laid up" for those who are willing to become possessors of them. First and foremost stands the precious gift of God's love, "which is eternal life" (Rom. vi. 23).

We may wonder how it was that the owners of the Barbaric had not heard the rumours that put the fisherman "on the scent." Perhaps they had; but had either treated them as mere gossip with no proof, or had not thought it worth while to risk time and money on an uncertainty. The fisherman, however, realizing that there might be wealth, and that it might be his, took steps to secure it. The owners had no faith in the matter. The fisherman had faith, although its only foundation was the common talk of a fishing village; and he became, first the owner, then the possessor.

The treasure of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ is lying ready for each of us to possess. We have heard about it, not from uncertain rumour, but through God's most Holy Word, which (we read) "abideth for ever." But, alas! some only think of it as an "idle tale"; others admit "there may be something in it," but they think "it will cost too much"—that they must give up a great deal in the way of pleasure or popularity, or incur too much in the way of pain or persecution. But there are others who, like the fisherman, believe what they have heard, and are willing to part with something in order to obtain what is far greater and better.

The owners had not heard, or else would not believe, and, therefore, they would not act; the villagers heard and believed, but they did not act. The fisherman heard, believed, and acted. Whether we think that he acted quite fairly, or not, we may at any rate say, regarding ourselves and the "riches in Christ Jesus," that we must do these three things—Hear, Believe, Act, if we are ever to enjoy them.

Now we have all heard about them—in our Bible-reading, Sunday-school, family prayers, and in conversations with our parents and teachers.

Most (if not all) of you believe that they exist. If you were to be asked if Christ died that sinners might have eternal life, and a place in heaven, you would say, "Yes." You do believe it—at any rate, with your head, or in your mind.

But have you acted in order to secure it? You are owner—are you possessor? Have you said, "I mean to have it, whatever I have to give up for it?" To-day that fisherman doesn't think about the twenty-one shillings he spent, the trouble and time that he gave, or the discomfort he endured. He is too full of joy at the wealth he has secured, and "wouldn't have missed it for anything!"

Dear boys and girls, think earnestly about these things. I feel very anxious lest any of my nephews and nieces who hear so frequently about salvation, and in a kind of way believe it, should lose it at last for want of definite action in taking possession. "Lay hold on eternal life" (1 Tim. vi. 12).

And those of you who have already done this, and who, by appropriating the "exceeding great and precious promises" have become "partakers of the Divine nature" (2 Pet. i. 4), are bidden (5-7) to cultivate the graces of Christian character in all their beautiful variety. These need careful development, even after you have given yourselves to Jesus and received eternal life through Him. What need there is for them in your life at home, at school, among friends and companions, and indeed at all times! And we may have them.

As soon as the fisherman owned the ship, he owned all that it contained. When we take Christ as our Saviour, immediately there is at our disposal an endless supply of grace—"the riches that are in Christ Jesus" (Phil. iv. 19). As children of God, we are already owners of them—they belong to us—"All things are yours, and ye are Christ's" (1 Cor. iii. 23); but are we all possessors of them? That is what we have to see to. Let us hear, believe, and act in regard to these also; that we may live to glorify Him, and "lay hold upon the hope set before us" (Heb. v. 18), namely, "the glorious appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus ii. 13).

The Secret of National Prosperity

NATIONAL prosperity must be the desire of every true patriot. We love best the land that gave us birth, and long to see her keep in the foremost rank among the nations of the earth. We desire this not only for the sake of our people, that there may be no complaining in our streets, but because, if our nation be strong and prosperous, her influence for good, for peace, and righteousness will be so greatly enhanced.

But what is the secret? Not alterations in her fiscal policy, not the navy or army, not the pomp of court pageantry, but the religious quality of her people. It is well that there should be the outward semblance of religion in our Houses of Legislature, and in public functions, but this amounts to very little if drink and impurity, waste and extravagance, pride and ostentation are practically unchecked and unrebuked. We can only be a religious people, and, therefore, truly prosperous, when the bulk of our people walk in all God's ways, love and serve Him with all their heart and all their soul.

The circumcision of the heart referred to in verse 16 is, of course, explained by Col. ii. 11, and means separation from all known sin, purity in heart and life, and a simple dependence on God. These are qualities which we must cultivate for ourselves, and do our best to spread amongst our fellow-countrymen, seeking that, one by one, they may be brought under the law of Christ.

We must be separate from known sin (16). Our country should have no complicity with the drink traffic, and should steadfastly refuse all gains, whether in India or at home, that come from this unholy source.

We must not be stiff-necked (16), but humbly dependent on God, for He is the great God and mighty. No one who saw it will ever forget the Mafeking night, and if the spirit of braggadocio, which then exhibited itself, were to prevail, it must bring about our downfall.

We must secure justice in our law-courts, and fair dealing in our trade. If once the corruption and bribery, which have ruled in some countries, were to become supreme, the very heart of our land would rot. There is no right-minded American citizen that does not mourn the recent Tammany victory in New York, and look on the future with apprehension.

We must be pitiful and generous to native races (18, 19). We must not shut our ears or hearts to the cry of the Armenian or Macedonian asking for deliverance from the cruel hand of the Turk. We must not refuse the cry of the poor handless natives of the Congo, or of the subject races of our wide domain. We must not be oblivious of the mute agony of the poor animals, tortured by the vivisectionist. Love, pity, and sympathy are beyond all price in the upbuilding and maintaining of the national well-being.

Above all, we must love God, His house, His day, His honour and name. We have much to learn from heathen people in the tenacious pride with which they magnify their national deities. This is the point on which the prophet Jeremiah descants so eloquently (Jer. ii. 10). But there are signs amongst us that we are doing the reverse. Our Sundays are becoming days of pleasure. Our working-classes and others are greatly ebbing away from our places of worship, the ancient bonds are greatly relaxed. The Higher Critics have done much to destroy the faith of myriads, and have given nothing in return.

What need there is, therefore, for God's people to be more than ever careful as to their own character, and energetic in their private and public influence, to stay the further spread of all disintegrating and corrupting forces. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTE.

The Christian Endeavour Society of the Congregational Church of Pasadena, Cal., began a praise meeting on Sunday afternoons in a camp of Mexican street labourers stationed in the locality. It secured Spanish-speaking helpers to hold services in the native tongue, and when the camp was moved to another part of the town the work was committed to the ministrations of another C.E. society.

David's Charge to Solomon (1 Chron. xxviii. 1-10.)

Golden Text.—Prov. iii. 5.

DURING King David's three months' absence from Jerusalem the affairs of the nation got unhinged, and strife arose between the tribes. Israel complained and talked about bringing the king back, but Judah did it, though tardily (2 Sam. xix. 9, 15). Hence jealousy, quarrel, and revolt, led by Sheba (v. 41, xx. 1-23). Seven years later Adonijah, another of David's handsome, spoiled sons followed his elder brother Absalom's evil example, and had himself proclaimed king at En-rogel (1 Kings i. 6, 7, 9, 25).

Nathan wisely and promptly warned the sick king, and David had Solomon (1 Chron. xxii. 9), anointed at Gihon, proclaimed King of Israel and Judah, and enthroned publicly in Jerusalem.

A National Assembly

usual (2 Sam. v. 3), and necessary to ratify the succession of Solomon to the throne of David. Princes, hereditary chiefs of the tribes. Captains of the companies, described 1 Chron. xxvii. 1-15. Officers of the army, chiefs of civil service, and stewards of the Royal households, and all men of note and fame in the nation. The occasion was used by the aged king to give a solemn charge to his people and to his successor, and to stir up the zeal of all for the great work of building "the palace, not for man, but for the Lord God" (xxix. 1). Spoken, not from the throne, but in spite of weakness, after the illness mentioned (1 Kings i. 1), the aged warrior king stood up before his people. Feeble in body, but clear in intellect, true in heart, and a spirit filled with God.

King David's Charge to his People.—"God first." Even the throne was the Lord's. Jehovah was king, David and Solomon His deputies (v. 5). God's palace the great work of the coming reign. Our God present to hear the vows of His people (v. 8). God's laws to be observed and searched out (Deut. vi. 6). God's chosen to be upheld and His land preserved as a possession, loyal to God they would be loyal to their king (1 Tim. v. 21).

King David's Charge to his son.—"Know thou the God of thy father" (John xvii. 3). "The living God" (Heb. xi. 6). God who has been real to me, in the sheep cotes and on the throne; in adversity and prosperity; when I served Him uprightly, and when I wandered from Him to bring me back again (Psa. cxix. 67). Know God for yourself. (Solomon was about eighteen.) 2. Serve Him. Rule the kingdom, and build the temple for God. Service must be sincere, willing, constant. Why? God knows all hearts. God rewards faithful souls. God rejects the unfaithful. God would give him wisdom, but he must use it. God had appointed him to a great work, he must "take heed, be strong, and do it" (v. 20). (My God will be with thee.)

Special Points.

1. David was willing to give up his plans when they were not according to God's will.

2. King David was not permitted to build the temple, but he did all he could for the work. All are not fitted or free to go out as missionaries, but each can do a part for the mission field at home.

3. King David gave from love to God, willing and joyfully, and the princes caught his spirit. He worked with all his might, and so did they (2, 6, 9). They rejoiced over the work together (17).

4. There is a temple in building now (1 Pet. ii. 5). Are we helping in mission work, if not with money, then with work (xxix. 5).

5. How do we read our Bible? For duty, lesson, task, for the stories or the histories or people? Let us search the Scriptures to know Jesus and His will.

IN CHRIST'S HAND FIRST.

Dr. Miller tells of a young girl who, having recently become a follower of Christ, wrote to a friend who had helped her, asking, "Will you let me put my hand in yours again for the New Year?" In reply the friend expressed her willingness, adding, however, the condition, "But in Christ's hand first." He alone can guide us safely, and whoever else we put confidence in, we must "trust in the Lord with all our heart, and lean not unto our own understanding" (Golden Text). An earthly friend may fail to lead us aright; while the Lord, who is willing to personally conduct us into the unknown future, knows the whole path before us.

USING OUR WINGS.

Rev. John McNeill has said that a friend of his once had a young eagle. Having occasion to move away, the friend wondered what he could do with the young bird, when it occurred to him he might set it free. The eagle on being released in the garden was too astonished to fly, and its master, to encourage it, lifted it on to the wall. Just then the sun, which had been obscured behind a cloud, shone forth. The bird thereupon lifted its eyes, and pulling itself up, stretched one wing and then the other, rose, with a scream, and was soon a vanishing speck, away in the blue of heaven. David said, "The Lord hath chosen Solomon my son to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the Lord over Israel" (v. 5). Such was the exalted position offered to Solomon. We may be made kings and priests unto God if we will but rise upon the wings of our privileges and soar above the affairs of this world.

THE LORD'S UNSEEN HELP.

In telling Solomon that the Lord had chosen him to build a sanctuary, David added, "Be strong and do it" (v. 10). Such a command was not unlike the request of the father, who asked his son to cut out a boat from a piece of wood. The boy attempted the task only to find it a very difficult undertaking. When at last the boat was completed, the little fellow was astonished to discover that, night by night, his father had corrected the mistakes of the day's work, by applying his own knife to the wood, and employing his own strength to complete the task. So it is with the work we undertake for the Lord. In our own strength we should often fail were it not for the unseen help we constantly receive from above. The Lord's strength is made perfect in our weakness.

Young People's Bible and Prayer Union.

—Letters received daily from ministers, Sunday and day-school teachers, express cordial appreciation of the Young People's Bible and Prayer Union, an organization which concentrates study in the International Lesson. The subject selected for the lesson is given for each Sunday morning, and is taken as a topic for the preceding week's reading. The daily portion illustrates, explains, and enforces, the Sunday's lesson, and makes the Union a decided help both to teachers and children. If teachers go to their classes thoroughly furnished from the Word of God, and scholars are prepared for the lesson of the day, great results may be expected from the toil of the Sabbath and the prayer of the week. Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, The Hillyers, Littlehampton, will be glad to give particulars of the Union.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

DUNDEE.

THE writer, recalling with distinctness the visit of Mr. J. B. Gough to Dundee—more than a quarter a century ago—and that of Mr. Francis Murphy, can truthfully say that not since these memorable occasions has the city been moved on the subject of total abstinence as it has been through the visit and messages of Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones in the great mission just brought to a close.

The experiment—only once previously attempted in this city—to hold a series of meetings, in one of the great halls, covering a fortnight was to many minds a most daring one. In respect that a marvellous series of meetings—the Torrey-Alexander Mission—had just terminated, the element of risk, it was thought, was increased. It was felt that a great strain was being put upon the people.

Their previous visit—some six months ago—under different auspices, however, was so manifestly favoured of God that the directors of the Dundee Gospel Temperance Union made the venture—a venture that has been emphatically and completely justified. From the first meeting in the Kinnaird Hall, crowding the building and enthusiastic to a degree, all fear was dispelled, and subsequent meetings have fully warranted the inception and continuance of the campaign. No word could more appropriately describe the result than the one serving as a headline—Remarkable! Apart from the mighty moral impulse sent throughout the community—an impulse that cannot soon spend itself—that no fewer than 3,295 persons should, under the inspiration of a great conviction, adopt the vow of total abstinence is surely splendid testimony to the value of the work carried on, and a magnificent tribute to the eloquence, earnestness, and skill of the missioners.

Dr. Henry, in his addresses, set himself a high ideal. Their intellectual qualities were great. The arguments were set forth with conspicuous power and tremendous energy. Old truths were dressed in new and becoming literary garb, and delivered with charming grace. New and striking phases of truthwere submitted with telling effect, and it was discovered that after all that there was something new that could be said for temperance, and that the case had not been exhausted. Every address was on a high plane, and demanded on the part of the hearer the use of the intellect. It cost the speaker vast labour to prepare; it required the hearer's constant and continuous use of his intellect to comprehend, appropriate, and assimilate the argument. Both purposes were amply fulfilled—the speaker held, possessed his audience, and the hearers became possessed by the argument. To those already total abstainers the addresses were a source of education and stimulus. Indeed, to listen to those marvellous presentation of Gospel truths was nothing short of an education.

The Mission was made more fruitful of good, and memorable in its results by reason of the valuable aid rendered by Mr. Armon Jones. That his singing was attractive beyond anything probably in its own line ever heard here goes without saying; but it was more than merely attractive, it was a ministry of song. Mr. Jones has sung messages that have proved a means of blessing to many. His visit and work will long abide as a precious memory with many.

At the closing meeting—great as regards numbers and intensely enthusiastic—the President of the Gospel Temperance Mission (Bailie Martin) referred to the work in glowing terms. The Dundee Advertizer has faithfully reported the meetings. F. M. S.

Blindness and Acute Suffering.

An Old Man, 74 years of age, blind through cancer in the eyes, which is now spreading all over the face. In addition to this sad affliction he is also suffering from an internal disease. He and his aged wife are greatly in need of assistance, as apart from the little their married children are able to give them they have nothing at all to depend on except charity. Who will help to make their old age free from anxiety? Surely pain and blindness are terrible enough without poverty.

Drink and Sabbath. In view of the approach of the annual "Temperance Sunday" (Nov. 29), the Secretary of the Sunday Closing Association has issued to ministers and others a brochure which throws a lurid light upon the relationship between the drink traffic and the growing desecration of the Lord's Day. To those who wish to acquire knowledge on the subject, he commends a visit to the crowded and poorer parts of any of our large towns on a Sunday evening, and he says :—

> England is now almost the only English-speaking country in the world in which the Sunday sale of liquor is lawful, and it is not to our credit that in Guernsey and the Isle of Man, where the publicans are renewing their agitation against the Sunday Closing laws of those islands, that they are able to point, as they actually do, to England, and to argue that their laws should be modified so as to harmonise with those of the Mother Country.

Caring for Inebriates. The report for the year 1902 of the Inspector under the Inebriates' Act has just been issued, and, although it is somewhat dismal reading, it is not entirely without its bright and cheering paragraphs. Two institutions have been opened during the year, making a total of eight such State establishments, and Dr. Branthwaite is able to state that "the progress has been continuous in every single particular." Some 510 persons were committed to these Homes during the twelve months. Long sentences are, in the Inspector's opinion, necessary and desirable in all such cases, if reform is to be hoped for, less than eighteen months or two years being useless. The judges, it would seem, share this view. It is pitiful to read of the numbers of unfortunates whom it is absolutely requisite to "retain in a safe place"—a type of person who, according to Dr. Branthwaite, "is a danger to the community when at large"—for these unhappy beings are the product of the drink system, which claims, and gets, Government support.

The Place of the Evangelist. Our esteemed friend, Mr. Henry Varley, writes in his old paper, the Christian Commonwealth, a splendid defence of the office of the evangelist. He means it to be a counterblast to the dictum of Dr. Watson that "the evangelist is a spent force." Certainly, as Mr. Varley points out, it is not an opportune moment in which to speak of a force as "spent" when that force is manifestly more vigorous than it has been for years past—indeed, since Mr. Moody's day. What is needed is not criticism, but honest recognition on the part of the churches of a Divine gift to the Church, for no man who accepts the New Testament at all can deny that the evangelist is a Divine gift. The Wesleyans have recently acquired Cliff College, which is now a training-college for evangelists. The order of evangelists is thus distinctly recognised by a great Christian body. We should like to see the same spirit manifested by all the Churches. One great lack of the college system is that there is not, generally speaking, a recognition of the specific evangelistic gift—therefore it is not trained. It is a great pity, for by this lack the Church suffers greatly. One day perhaps it will be generally understood that the evangelist is as truly a gift of God to the Church as the pastor and teacher.

Saving and Sneering. It is almost impossible to avoid a contrast between the representative men whose names were prominent in the newspapers on Wednesday morning of last week. On the previous night (November 17) a memorial service was held at City Road Chapel on the first anniversary of the death of Mr. Hugh Price Hughes. On that very day, the latest addition to the list of sneering attacks upon the Gospel was heralded in the papers with much trumpet blowing. Speaking of Mr. Hughes, Canon Henson drew attention to the fact that he displayed in word and act the intense conviction of one who believed that Christ alone was the power of salvation to modern society. In this he was at one with an immense multitude who deal with the heart of things and bless both soul and body. The "Infidel," as he proudly designates himself, opens a bitter and vulgar attack on the Gospel by describing an excursion he made in the Strand, because he found "one's fellow-creatures so amusing." Yet in that same Strand he tells us there are thieves, vagrants, failures—vice, crime, and the like. And he finds his fellow-creatures there "so amusing"!! After that it matters little what he says. Such attacks on the Gospel can only flourish, like foul germs, in a vitiated moral atmosphere.

Talk and Work. In happy contrast to the vapourings of Secularism is the work done in our great cities in the name and the spirit of Christ. The Central Hall Mission in Manchester records that during the past year 33,000 rescue and relief cases were dealt with; 103,000 beds were provided, with food and work for the destitute, 4,765 women were met at the prison gate and cared for. This is but part of the year's work, for thirty-three prayer meetings were held weekly; 15,000 people attended the Sunday services; the Sabbath afternoon and evening schools had 3,863 children under Gospel teaching. Such simple statements of Christian effort are the most effective replies to infidel argument.

Teacher or Saviour. It is not uncommon to hear sceptics and Social Democrats denouncing the evils of our modern civilization as though they were in accordance with the Divine arrangement, whereas all the canker in our industrial system, and in our national and individual existence, is the result of man's enmity to God's will and purpose. Christ's teaching in regard to our relations with each other is perfectly clear as to this.

Music Hall Patriotism. When a nation is discussing a great problem that affects its interests in any way, above all things soberness is needed. It is impossible to forget that during the late war the vulgar ditties sung at public entertainments had much to do with keeping the blood of the people hot. And now a similar course is being pursued over the Fiscal Question. A music hall audience and atmosphere, generally speaking, are not conducive to calm sober thought on important matters. The roaring out of choruses is not patriotism, nor can a country's destiny be decided by noise and venomous attack. Above all things we need to think, and, so far as Christian people are concerned, to pray, about these things.

The Child in the Street. "The Employment of Children Act, 1903," which comes into operation on New Year's Day next, confers upon county councils new powers, which, if judiciously used, will result in saving the little workers from much oppression which at present does not come within the law. Some of the more important clauses are those which bear upon street trading and night work, especially those prohibiting the employment between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m. of children under fourteen years old, and that of children under eleven in the streets. Much wisdom will be required in carrying out the Bill so as to avoid any addition to the pressing burden of poverty. The opportunity is, however, a great one, and if it is taken up in a true Christian spirit, the operation of the law will be fruitful of good results in saving and elevating the class from which so many are lost through neglect.

The Vivisection Case. In reference to the "Vivisection Case" tried last week, it is a matter for extreme regret that the Hon. Stephen Coleridge should have been misled in his information in imputing to the plaintiff that he had tortured a dog, by performing experiments on it when it was not properly under anæsthetics; and he has paid the penalty. But the case in no way lessens the urgent demand for the revision of the Vivisection Acts themselves. Two facts were freely admitted on the plaintiff's side—(a) that such demonstrations are made to students not for purposes of research, but as illustrations of physiological laws already well known; (b) that animals may be kept alive from one time of experiment to another provided that anæsthetics are administered at each operation, thus suggesting the possibility of suffering during the intervals.

Important Testimony. Many leading surgical authorities have declared against the practice of vivisection. Professor Tait's testimony is that he went through the most complete course of instruction in the University of Edinburgh without witnessing a single experiment on a living animal. Sir Benjamin W. Richardson declares that he gave up such experiments in his classes, not from sentiment, but because he got on better without them.

A "White Slave" Villain. The Paris correspondent of the Daily News, in notifying a few days ago the arrest of one of a notorious gang of "white slavers" in that city, a man "who owns to an income of £2,000 a year from his villainous calling," says:—

> Hundreds of respectable young girls are enticed under false pretences into houses of ill-fame, and are never again heard of.

Mrs. Crawford therefore adds:

> I would advise young Englishwomen coming to Paris for employment to communicate with the secretary or the superintendent of the British and American Homes, 77, Avenue Wagram.

We are sure that all readers of The Christian who are familiar with Miss Leigh's admirable work will have pleasure in making this advice known to girls who are seeking for appointments in France.

What of Macedonia? Weeks have passed by since the Sultan was threatened by one or two of the great Powers, and yet nothing has been done. Is it that he does not fear the Powers, nor care for their threats? The friends of Macedonia—and their number is daily growing—are becoming very sick at these intolerable delays in reform. The attitude of Europe and of our own country is simply inexplicable. Still more so is that of the German Emperor. While the whole civilized world is horror-struck at the murders in Macedonia, we read of presents passing from William II. to Abdul Hamid! It seems as if the Sultan is playing off Germany against the rest of the Powers—just as he did over the Armenian question. But Great Britain is under special obligations to protect the unhappy Macedonians against extermination, and should know no rest until justice is done.

Rome at Home and Here. In view of the forthcoming opening of the Roman Catholic Cathedral at Westminster, Father Taunton, writing in the columns of the (R.) Catholic Times, claims for it that it represents a different aspect of worship to that of the parish church, viz.: "the offering of prayer and praise together with the Eucharist victim in the name of all the faithful of the Church." The people, therefore are, he says, "a secondary consideration."

> Whether they are there or not is unconsidered . . . the angels are congregation enough for a cathedral besides the clergy. The cathedral finds no place for semi-private manifestations of piety.

It is, however, from Spain that Father Taunton has taken his ideal, and notably from Seville, where he > was "struck by the way the laity were ignored, and dignified canons and minor canons in their stalls as the clergy of the church were the congregation."

A recent traveller, in an account of services at Seville (which, according to Father Taunton, are more magnificently carried out than anywhere else), describes a long and elaborate dance, with the accompaniment of castanets, before the altar, by sixteen gaudily dressed boys, the priests kneeling around them, and the Archbishop, at the conclusion of the pirouetting, giving the benediction. The writer, who is by no means bigoted, terms this the "turning of a possible vice into a means of devotion, the bringing of the people's art, the people's passion, into the Church!"

An Indian Testimony, In reply to the reiterated and ill-founded objections to missionary work in Eastern lands, to which undue prominence is frequently given in the Press, it is pleasant to find a competent and scholarly observer, who himself was "nurtured in hereditary heathenism," clearly and unmistakably testifying to the needs of his country, and the true and only possible source of its salvation. As the opinion of one of the most representative men of modern times, Keshub Chunder Sen, the testimony is of the greatest value. He says:—

> If you wish to secure the attachment and allegiance of India, it must be through spiritual influence and moral suasion, and such, indeed, has been the case in this country. You cannot deny that your hearts have been touched, conquered, and subjugated by a superior power. That power, need I tell you, is Christ. It is Christ who rules British India, and not the British Government.

The Fatalism of Machinery. The farewell sermon of Dr. Knox at Birmingham, prior to his departure for the new See at Manchester, was very impressive. His experience of twelve years of Birmingham life has revealed to him a great weakness in Christian effort, which we ought to be thankful to have pointed out. He calls it "the fatalism of machinery"—that is, the delegation to committees and boards and societies of those personal responsibilities which a Christian is forbidden to transfer to others. He says:—

> The more mechanical society becomes, the more likely are its members to lose the sense of the presence of God, to regard evils as inevitable, to shut their eyes to the voice of God in the city, . . . The touch of soul with soul, the spirit of the Good Shepherd seeking the sheep, is too often lost.

It is of this personal responsibility that we need ever reminding. There is much that can be done through committees and societies far better than by individuals; but, carried too far, this delegation becomes pernicious. "Soul with soul" is the living secret of the Christian spirit. Perhaps the chief need of the day is a revival of the idea of personal responsibility to Christ and to men.

Trouble in Tibet.

FOR some time past we have received from correspondents in India disquieting letters as to the relations of the Indian Government with Tibet. There are constant rumours of impending military operations, an army of Nepaulese being stationed on the frontier.

Some years ago a commercial treaty was arranged with Tibet, Sikkim being taken under British protection, and a line of boundary was fixed upon. Herein lies the source of the present trouble, it being alleged that the Tibetans have not fulfilled their part, but have repeatedly displaced the masonry pillars erected on the boundary.

The Indian Government, after negotiating with China, appointed a commission to treat with Tibet, and the members by appointment entered the Chumbi Valley some months ago, but have waited in vain at Kamba Jong for Chinese and Tibetan officials with proper credentials to meet them.

Preparations have, therefore, been made for a forward movement, a large supply of military stores having been collected in readiness. This intelligence is exceedingly painful reading, suggesting, as it does, the probability of a war with Tibet. Whatever the true inwardness of the situation may be, it is a call to the people of God to intercede at the throne of grace that a peaceable way may be found out of the impasse, and that we may not become involved in another of our "little wars." We remember, too, that brave and devoted missionary Miss Annie R. Taylor, who is in that country alone, as the representative of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission. For her, as well as for other labourers on the Indian and Chinese borders of Tibet, we bespeak our readers' prayers.

The Gospel of the Grace of God.—I.

By PRINCIPAL A. McCAIG, LL.D.

THIS epithet is only once applied to the Gospel, but the substance of it is frequently expressed in various other ways. It occurs in Acts xx. 24, in the address of the Apostle Paul to the Ephesian elders. This title brings into prominence the special fact that the Gospel is a revelation of the grace of God. By the Grace of God we understand God's love or favour towards men as undeserving sinners. Mercy or pity is the same love shown to men as miserable, wretched, guilty. Although the word is only used in this one passage in direct association with the word "Gospel," yet the idea is everywhere prominent in the New Testament. God as revealed in the Gospel is the "God of all grace." Salvation is brought to us, but it is the grace of God that "bringeth salvation"; forgiveness is proclaimed, but it is "forgiveness of sins according to the riches of His grace"; and so the Word of the Lord is the "Word of His grace," and the Gospel of God is the "Gospel of the grace of God."

In a former paper when speaking of the Gospel of God, we had necessarily to speak of the gracious character of God as exhibited in the Gospel, and we now only seek to emphasise some of the ideas suggested by that revelation.

(1) It shows Divine Grace overflowing the bounds of Jewish particularism. Apart from revelation, men can have little idea of the Grace of God; but the very fact of a revelation implies grace. God's revelation was, among other things, a revelation of grace.

The disclosure of the Divine character given to Moses in Horeb can hardly be said to be surpassed by any subsequent verbal revelation. "The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, &c." Sweetest, noblest, grandest music that had ever greeted the ears of men; how majestically it rolls along the old dispensation, and reverberates throughout the whole Word of God!

GRACE FOR ALL.

This revelation was made to a particular people, and that people came to imagine that because the grace had been manifested to them, it did not exist for others. They did not understand that God's grace to them was meant to prepare the way for the unfolding of His grace to the world at large; and yet the many glowing predictions of their own prophets concerning the future blessing of the nations might have taught them better, while God's dealings in providence from time to time might have cleared their vision.

The blessing of Naaman the Syrian, the salvation of repentant Nineveh, the witness-bearing of Daniel in heathen Babylon—what were these but God's object-lessons, by which He set forth, in clear characters, the great truth which ultimately dawned on Peter, when he exclaimed, "I perceive that God is no respecter of persons"? They seemed to consider God's grace to be like their own inland lake, bounded by their own mountains, and separated from other lands, whereas their Scriptures showed it to be rather—destined to lave with its blessed waters the shores of every land under the sun—yea, that it would eventually cover the whole earth as the waters cover the sea. The Lord Jesus Christ, while appearing as the "Minister of the circumcision," plainly indicated that the grace of God was not to be deemed a Jewish heirloom. In His ministry of mercy He was willing to bless a Roman Centurion, a Canaan-itish woman, and inquiring Greeks. He declares plainly that He has other sheep not of the Jewish fold whom He must bring into the one flock of the redeemed. He testifies of God's love for the world, and promises life to "whosoever believeth." He foretells that the outcome of His being lifted up will be the drawing of all men unto Him; that from the north and the south, and the east and the west, they shall come and sit down in the Kingdom of God, with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and His last commission is: "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all nations."

PAUL'S SPECIAL MISSION.

It was, however, the special mission of Paul to bring into prominence this great truth. To him was committed "a dispensation of the grace of God" towards the Gentiles, that he "should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ." He preached the Gospel as a message of grace for sinners as such. Christ was for him something more than a second Moses; His servants were not sent forth to make proselytes to the Jewish faith. God, in the Gospel, had given more than a new national code answering to that from Sinai; He had given a universal proclamation, which was to be made known wherever men were found. The law of His grace, going forth from Jerusalem, was to be a summons to men of every nation; the beam from Zion's hill was to "lighten every land."

The Epistle to the Galatians shows how, on the ground of the grace revealed in the Gospel, the Apostle can meet all the objections of the Jews against the Gentile Christians, and can fully vindicate the Gentiles' participation in the blessings of salvation. Before God, he places Jews and Gentiles upon the same level, and shows that the Jews, with all their pretensions, needed to be saved by grace, while for the Gentiles there could be no hope apart from grace; so to Jews and Gentiles alike he proclaimed the Gospel of the Grace of God.

II. In the Gospel the Grace of God is contrasted with the Law of Condemnation. The law demanded perfect righteousness from those under its sway. Its uncompromising declaration was: "The man that doeth these things shall live in them"; and the stern converse of that was: "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them." This stern, unbending law, though in itself holy, just, and good, proved to be weak through the flesh; weak in the sense of being ineffective to give life, since the people were not able to keep its requirements. The law, however, served other necessary purposes, in the development of the Divine plans (Gal. iii. 19-25). It was the standard by which the actions of men could be tested, it was the mirror wherein their vileness could be seen.

It had a regulative purpose, and it had an educative effect. It taught men the sinfulness of sin, showing them their moral helplessness and inability to come up to its requirements, leading them to despair of self, and constraining them to look for another way of salvation. It thus became the schoolmaster, the pedagogue, to lead men to Christ. As to its judicial effect, it is called "the ministration of death and condemnation." The Gospel ushers in the reign of grace as contra-distinguished from that of the law of sin and death. "The law was given by Moses, grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." As opposed to the law's demands for righteousness as the ground of life, the Gospel offers a Divinely provided righteousness, and holds out everlasting life as the gift of God's grace. In opposition to the righteous curse of the law, the Gospel assures us that "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us."

Character—Policy—Victory.

By Rev. R. BURGES, India.

GOD buries his workmen, but carries on His work. Abijah was a man of considerable public usefulness, but God raised up Asa in his stead. In moments of weakness we sometimes think that we are indispensable, and that the earth would not easily revolve on her axis without us. This is a mistake, for God can get on without the most useful of us. "Abijah slept with his fathers," we are told. Here is an Old Testament hint that there was at least a superficial belief in the resurrection of the body. Sleep implies a wakening and a morning. The word cemetery means sleeping-place. This is a beautiful meaning, and should bring comfort to those who have loved ones resting there, waiting for the dawning of the morning.

CHARACTER.

The 14th and 15th chapters of 2 Chronicles give a fairly full account of Asa, king of Judah. In the Book of Kings there are some other records which supplement Chronicles. We have first of all set before us Asa's Character. "Asa did that which was right and good in the sight of the Lord his God." We are not told he did that which was right in his own eyes, nor that he did what was right in the eyes of the people. He was not ruled by self-will or by public opinion; he did what was right in God's sight.

Here surely is a lesson for us all in our private life, in our play, in our profession. Are we ruled by what others will think of us, or by what God will think of us? Too often we arrive at decisions with regard to a course of action, not so much by the fact that we live in God's sight, as by the fact that we live in the sight of men. He who constantly realizes that the eye of God goes to and fro over the whole earth, and that nothing can escape its searching sight, is the one who will, if his heart is true to his best interests, serve God heartily.

POLICY.

Notice first, Asa's destructiveness. He sets himself to reform the morals of the royal court. Maachah, the mother queen, was an idolatress. So earnest was Asa that he took her idol and made dust of it, and burned it on the banks of the River Kidron. Such a drastic measure needed considerable moral courage. His religion was of the right stamp, for it reached to the domestic circle. His conduct was what Ruskin would call frankness and audacity, a readiness to follow custom and propriety as far as they help, but if they hinder that which is right in God's sight, they are to be departed from. The most important training ground of the empire is the family circle. No nation can rise higher than her family life; therefore let us guard and purify our hearths and homes with jealous care.

Nor did the king's measures for reform languish and die in the royal court. Soon his influence was felt in his kingdom. We are told that he cut down the groves, broke down the images, and did all in his power to lead the people back to "the law and to the commandments." We are not all kings. If we were, Asa's methods would not be best for modern conditions. It would not be a wise thing literally to break down with violence the gods of heathen peoples to-day. Better, probably, would it be to utter our protest against them, and use our influence with the idolaters to worship the living and true God. Such influence is accumulative and must tell. The Ganges is silently loosening the foundations of the ghats, shrines and temples of non-religions in the great city of Benares, and one by one they are falling into the river bed. So slowly is the river doing its deadly work that the mass of Hindoos who worship there do not perceive the decay. Just as surely is the River of the Water of Life loosening the foundations of non-Christian religions. If we endeavour with our money, our time, our influence and our prayers to spread the news of the Kingdom, we are helping the flow of the river which eventually will bring life and blessing to all peoples.

Secondly, Asa's policy was also constructive. To build is as necessary as to pull down. The anarchist tries to pull down everything that is up and makes no attempt to put up anything in its place. The philanthropist tries to put down all that makes for the woe of the people. Asa was a religious philanthropist, pulling down all that he knew would do harm to his people, and erecting what would be for their good.

"Let us build fenced cities," were the words that Asa spoke. Walls and towers and gates and bars were to be constructed for the improvement of these cities. Cities without an army would be useless. Therefore Asa trained an army, made up of 300,000 men of Judah and 280,000 men of Benjamin. This army was trained to a high pitch of perfection. Some of them were taught to fight at close quarters, and some at a distance.

A careful study of Asa's policy will prove that he recognised that the peace his people were enjoying should not be wasted in idleness or aimless work. Rather, he decided that the years of peace they were enjoying should be used to repair and strengthen the cities, also to create a trained army ready for the field, and for the defence of the cities. Asa knew not what a day might bring forth, and felt that the best way to meet any foe was to get ready in time of peace. This history has a good deal to teach us. Into every life there come seasons of quiet from the rush of life. Satan is not all the time positively active in trying to overthrow us. There are seasons of cessation from the fight. Are we, as Christians, careful of the use of these hours? Do we cultivate the habit of recognising times of quiet in our lives, and do we try in these seasons to strengthen our faith by Bible study and prayer? He who lays emphasis on these duties, and cultivates the regular and persistent habit of Bible reading and prayer, is thereby fitting himself for the coming of the foe. The devil delights to find the foe unprepared, and knows that certain defeat is his if he finds the Christian ready for him. Strength gained in times of quiet will serve us in times of severe temptation. Blessed is that soldier who at the noise of battle is ready for the fray.

VICTORY.

We now come to a scene of great activity in the life of King Asa and his troops. The expected happens. Zerah, the Ethiopian, comes against Asa and declares war. Asa has less than 600,000 men, and King Zerah 1,000,000, together with 300 chariots. It looked like suicide to fling 600,000 men against 1,000,000 and their chariots; but Asa knew the source of real strength and prayed, for prayer is power. "It is nothing with Thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power: help us, O Lord our God; for we rest on Thee, and in Thy name we go against this multitude." Asa put his hand on prayer, the throttle-valve of God's great engine. Utter routing was the fare of the foe, and victory the joy of Asa and his valiant men of war. Of course, only victory could follow strategy bathed in prayer. Prayerful strategy spells victory.

How these things rush into one's heart; prayer is work, prayer is life, prayer is war, prayer is victory. Do we start, continue, and end each day with prayer? If we do, victory is God's—and ours.

At the close of the chapter there is that beautiful sentence, "They returned to Jerusalem." After the fighting and looting, after the noise of battle, and the sight of garments rolled in blood, they returned to Jerusalem. He who makes up his mind that the Christian life is an armchair business makes a very great mistake. The Christian life undoubtedly is a fierce battle with opposing forces ever ready to appear in all forms. He who recognises that the Christian life is a battle and braces himself for the fight is the one who gets the victory. The fight must continue to the end of life. Cheering is the thought, however, that, after the noise of battle, the rush and strain of life, after the hot tears and deep sighs, will come the end of the battle, and we shall "return to Jerusalem." "This day the noise of battle, the next the victor's song."

Studies in the Psalms.—III.

The Fortieth Psalm.

By Rev. J. STORJOHANN.

ONCE more David has to go down into the depths, and deeper than ever before; but here, too, we can truly say: "There are pearls there." Having crossed the Jordan, he is met by the dreadful news of what Ahithophel has persuaded Absalom to do (2 Sam. xvi. 21ff.) Involuntarily David, first and foremost, clings to the raising up of his honour before the whole people, which God, after his great fall and conversion, had granted him, in answer to prayer, in the last great war with the Philistines. (See The Christian, January, 1896.)

PSALM XL.

1. I waited patiently for Jehovah; and He inclined to me, and heard my cry.

2. He brought me up also out of an horrible pit—out of the miry clay, and He set my feet upon a rock, and He established my goings.

3. And He put a new song in my mouth, praise unto our God; many saw it and feared, and trusted in Jehovah.

PART I.

4. Blessed is the man that maketh Jehovah his trust, and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies.

5. Many, O Jehovah, my God, are the wonderful works which Thou hast done, and Thy thoughts which are to us-ward; there is none to be compared unto Thee; if I would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered.

6. Sacrifice and meat offering thou hast no delight in; mine ears hast thou pierced for me; burnt offering and sin offering hast thou not required.

7. Then said I: Lo, I am come; in the roll of the book it is written of me:

8. I delight to do Thy will, O my God; yea, Thy law is within my heart.

PART II.

9. I have proclaimed glad tidings of righteousness in the great congregation; lo, I will not refrain my lips, Jehovah, Thou, Thou knowest.

10. I have not hid Thy righteousness within my heart; I have declared Thy faithfulness and Thy salvation; I have not concealed Thy lovingkindness and Thy truth from the great congregation.

11. Withhold not thou Thy tender mercies from me, Jehovah; let Thy lovingkindness and Thy truth continually preserve me.

12. For evils have compassed me about, more than can be numbered. Mine iniquities have overtaken me, so that I am not able to look up; they are more than the hairs of mine head, and my heart hath forsaken me.

PART III.

13. Be pleased, Jehovah, to deliver me: make haste to help me, Jehovah.

14. Let them be ashamed and confounded together that seek after my soul to destroy it: let them be turned backward and brought to dishonour that delight in my hurt.

15. Let them be desolate by reason of their own shame that say unto me, Aha, Aha.

16. Let them rejoice and be glad in Thee, all those that seek Thee. Let such as love Thy salvation say continually: Magnified be Jehovah!

17. But I am poor and needy, Adonai remember me: Thou art my help and my deliverer; make no tarrying, O my God.

In the approaching battle, in which the principal object was to "destroy" the life of David (14), he thought of the grand rescue in the war with the Philistines, in which God heard his cry out of dire distress (xviii. 6), drew him out of many waters (xviii. 16), and, placing his feet on the strong rock (xviii. 2), gave security to his steps and put a new song in his mouth. Which is this new song after he had gained the victory? The new song which is promised to God in Psa. cxliv., viz., Psa. xxxiii. was sung before the victory. If the Septuagint is right in surmising that Psa. xcvi., which begins with the words, "O sing unto Jehovah a new song," is by David, this may be the song which David alludes to. From that period, David also accentuates how important it is to wait on God always (7), and numbers himself among them that wait on Jehovah (xl. 1). In Psa. xxxvi. (12 ff.), David also connects his present distress with the rescue in the war with the Philistines.

I. David wanted to offer up sacrifices by way of thanksgiving for the manifold and wonderful works, and the thoughts of grace which God had shown to David, to other believers, and to all those who by this event had learned to fear and to trust. But Jehovah does not demand these offerings of him, as he is far away from the sanctuary of Jehovah, where alone they could be offered up. He may here have remembered Saul, who just at Gilgal—where David a short time ago had been encamped—self-willedly and obstinately had offered up sacrifices to God and been rejected. In keeping with the words which Samuel then spoke to Saul (1 Sam. xv. 23), David still wants to make Jehovah the offering of obedience, the obedience which was prescribed for him in the law about the king (Deut. xvii. 14-20.)

If the law of sacrifices could not be kept, then the precepts in the copy of the law—the roll of the book which the king was always to carry about with him—must be only the more carefully carried out. (Deut. xvii. 18 and ff.) If the external law of offerings cannot now be demanded, the internal law of the heart becomes the more strict (8).

II. But as David did not conceal from the great congregation the lovingkindness and truth of Jehovah (10 ff.), it is his prayer that God now too may not withhold his tender mercies from him (11), but that His lovingkindness and truth continually may preserve him, now when innumerable evils again have compassed him round about and paralysed him. These evils, which are as little to be numbered as the wonderful works of God (12-5), have brought his iniquities over his head in a dreadful force; his iniquities have, indeed, overtaken him.

Is it the news of Ahithophel's infamous counsel to Absalom, by which the latter has cut off every possibility of a reconciliation? David had heard of the disgraceful scandal, "in the sight of all Israel and before the sun." This dreadful news brought into David's mind the words of the prophet Nathan (2 Sam. xii. 11 ff.), so that he was not able to "look up"—he could not look men in the face, and could hardly even lift his eyes to God (12). Was not this one of the fourfold penalties to which David had sentenced himself (2 Sam. xii. 6), and which Nathan had proclaimed beforehand?

III. Alas, now it was said of David, Aha, Aha! But let them be desolate by reason of their own shame (15). David has become poor and needy (17), but God places a prayer in his mouth, which the robber on the cross was afterwards to make his own: "Adonai, remember me." Jehovah must make haste to help him (13), and make no tarrying in delivering him, abashing his enemies, and letting the believers rejoice (16).

Truly, the answer to the prayer was not long delayed, as we shall see from Psa. lxxi. But it was also already contained in the prophetic words which David spoke (vv. 7-9), when just the desire for sacrifice and the full resignation of obedience made David a symbol of the true sacrifice of Him whose self-sacrifice is the end of the offering up of animals, and whose Person and work is the essence of the book of the law.

David in no wise spoke disparagingly of sacrifice. Nothing could have given a man like David more pleasure than to offer up sacrifices, but he had self-denyingly given up the ark of the covenant, and felt bound to the authorized places of sacrifice on Zion and at Gibeon. These circumstances must now serve to show the insufficiency of the law of sacrifices, and in this way its own claim to a higher sacrifice.

To hearken is accordingly the most important thing, and this David expresses thus: "Mine ears hast thou pierced for me," and he that hath ears let him hear, let him perceive and attend to the will of God which is written in the book of the law. This law David did not only carry about with him and read therein all the days of his life (Deut. xvii. 9), according to the precept given in Ps. i. 2, "Blessed is the man who meditates in the law of Jehovah day and night," but he also carries it within his heart (v. 9).

Heb. x. 5-10 explains the prophetic element in these words by David, as fulfilled by Christ—obedient even unto death, yea the death of the cross—as the true Sacrifice, who by completing the gracious will of God in obedience and suffering, has fulfilled the law in our place, so that we have been "sanctified by the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all."

HAVE we not overlooked to whom? It is to a people surrounding us on every side, and who at one time were the only rich ones, but whose fall has become the salvation of the Gentiles and their riches (see Rom. xi. 11, 12). We need not wander far to discover who our creditors are, for this poor people are amongst us; yea, we need not even go beyond our shores to seek for them, for the Lord has brought them to our very doors.

The question may be asked, for what are we debtors to them? A cursory glance at the Book we so much prize may answer this question. To whom are we indebted for that Book of books? Doubtless to its Divine Inspirer, but also to the instrument He employed in its composition. But particularizing, to whom, humanly speaking, are we indebted for that law wherein we delight to meditate—for the histories of those witnesses of faith which are our examples (see Heb. xi.)—for those "exceeding great and precious promises," which are our support in life and in death, for those Psalms of praise and prayer which have expressed the experience of believers in every age? And to whom are we indebted for the New Testament? As for Peter, "his speech bewrayeth him," and Paul answers for himself, "of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee." And He, on whose finished work we now rely, was of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Judah, of the house of David as concerning the flesh, though God over all, blessed for ever.

Now let me also ask who first preached the Gospel to the Gentiles? Were not these first missionaries to the Gentiles all of the seed of Abraham, Israelites who were especially called by the Lord Jesus Christ? To Gentile Christians I say: "Their debtors verily ye are, since ye have been made partakers of their spiritual things." As Gentiles, you can never atone for the persecution of past ages. You have only to look into history to see what awful cruelty the Jews received at the hands of the British nation a few centuries ago. Nor can we as Christians atone for the neglect with which we have hitherto treated the Jews.

Let us now do what we can to discharge our debt. Let us give back to the wandering mass of Judaism their own Holy Scriptures, and thereby point them to "the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world." When once they are acquainted with Moses and the Prophets, the work of the messenger of the Gospel will be wonderfully facilitated, for he will then be able, like the apostles of old, to reason with them, proving from their own Scriptures that the Lord Jesus is the true Messiah promised to their fathers. Above all, let us pray for them with the same earnestness as did the great Apostle to the Gentiles, when he said: "Brethren, my heart's desire, and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved."

"One by One."—We have several times called attention to the "One by One" plan for seeking and saving the lost. We believe it is the most simple, easy, and effective method of soul-winning, and also the one upon which the Christian Church was started; so easy that every Christian—even the most feeble and timid—can be made wise to win souls, and so important that none should neglect it. By following it, Christians are brought into closer fellowship with their Lord and with each other in "the unity of the Spirit, in the bond of peace." It is a sure way to promote and maintain a revival of pure and undefiled religion. Particulars of the constitution of the Band, with many interesting incidents of its operation, may be had on application to Mr. Thomas Hogben, "Welcome" Mission, Portsmouth.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, November 29. Solomon's Song ii.

THIS Song of songs is the story of free grace and dying love to the bride, or to a soul wooed and won by her Lord and Saviour. It is pictorially told in successive scenes. Here they are alone; she is in the real presence.

1-3. The bride modestly says: "I am a rose of the plain (R.V. marg.), a lily of the valleys." "Fair I may be as the rose which covers Sharon's plain, sweet as the lily abundant in the valleys; but I am one of thousands." He replies that she is as one lily among thorns. So is every soul to Christ. She responds that He is a fruitful apple-tree among the fruitless trees of the wood.

4-7. She tells others of her great delight, and adjures them by the wild and timid deer, not to waken Love until it please. She is in His embrace, yet she thinks such joy is as easily frightened away as those roes and hinds. The soul that loves Him is led, first into His house, which is a spiritual banqueting-house, and next into His inner chambers. His banner over us is love, because He conquers us by His love; and the conquered soul becomes overwhelmed with the expressions of the love that passes knowledge.

At verse 8, Canticle ii. begins. The soul has lost the sense of the Saviour's presence, but becomes aware of His return. He comes unexpectedly. Though as yet we only see Him through the lattice of assemblies and ordinances, we know that He is near, and we hear His voice bidding us come away (9). But the full realization of vv. 10, &c., will not be until that blessed springtime shall visit our world, when He makes all things new, and the flowers of the new creation begem the soil so long tangled with sin. The Bride hears herself addressed as a dove, because the Spirit, Himself the Dove, has filled her heart with His presence; and she addresses her Lord as a roe, or young hart, for swiftness, that He may hasten across the mountains which intervene between them. "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

MONDAY, November 30. Solomon's Song iii.

1-5. The Bride. The spiritual desertion described here does not seem to have arisen from indifference, as in chapter v. Rutherford gives us the key to this experience when he says: "As nights and dews are better for flowers than a continual sun, so Christ's absence (at times) giveth sap to humility, and putteth an edge on hunger, and furnisheth a fair field to faith to put herself forth." The secret of her loss is in that word bed. Spiritual indolence speedily leads to estrangement. Four times the desolate believer speaks of her Bridegroom as "Him whom my soul loveth." She questions the watchmen—the ministers of the Gospel—but they cannot help her; but presently she finds her Lord, and holds Him fast, confessing to the Church her new-found joy. "As a little weeping child will hold its mother fast, not because it is stronger than she, but because her love constrains her not to leave it; so Jesus Christ, yearning over the believer, cannot go, because He will not." Let the daughters of Jerusalem be very careful lest they break the holy union between other souls and Christ by levity of spirit, or carelessness of speech.

6-10. The Bridegroom with the Bride. The friends of the Bridegroom see a cortège approaching consisting of a palanquin and guard. May not these be the angels, as they watch the ascent of the Church from the lowly places of her origin to sit with Christ in heavenly places? She exhales the sweet perfumes of love, faith, joy, and praise; and is escorted by the hosts of God's protecting care. The description of the palanquin is very elaborate, and may be used to set forth the all-sufficiency of Jesus—the silver of His purity, the gold of His immutable covenant, the pillars of His strength, the purple of His royalty, the tesselated pavement of His love.

11. This summons to the daughters of Zion will receive its main fulfilment when from our graves or our homes we shall go forth to greet a greater than Solomon, taking to Himself His Bride—His Holy Church (Eph. v. 27).

TUESDAY, December 1. Solomon's Song iv.

1-5. The Bridegroom. We are perfect through His comeliness that He puts upon us (Ezek. xvi. 14). Seven features of our beauty in Christ are referred to. Eyes of the dove, for gentleness. Hair like the fine silken hair of goats, for abounding strength. Teeth like the flocks that ascend from the washing, for purity. Lips like a scarlet thread, for comeliness of speech. Temples like the crystal seeds of the pomegranate, for modesty. The neck hung with necklaces and jewels, for stately beauty. The breasts to set forth the abounding fruitfulness of the Church.

In v. 6 the Lord tells those who love Him, that though He is hidden from their sight, He will still be accessible to prayer, until the everlasting day shall break, when they shall see Him face to face; and He invites them to leave the border mountains between the hostile northern lands and Palestine for a closer union with Himself.

9-16. How wonderful it is to think that Jesus really loves us! One look of faith ravishes Him. The love of the redeemed soul is better than wine, and the scent of its virtues or prayers is more than the sweetest spices. What an Oriental garden is to its owner, wherein are all kinds of rich tropical spices and fruits, such is the heart that loves Him to its Lord. What a fountain is in the sultry air, so is the love of the Church amid the world's hatred. Note that our sources are not from earth, but from the heavenly places themselves—the cliffs of Lebanon. The one thing needed by a church or an individual soul is that the breath of the Holy Spirit may fan our spiritual graces into manifestation.

16. The last clause is the bride's reply. She owns that she is His, and that all her fruits are there because He has created them, and her only desire is that her Lord should be satisfied.

WEDNESDAY, December 2. Solomon's Song v.

1. This verse belongs to the previous chapter. The bride had said, Let my beloved come, and He has answered her request. How much myrrh and spice He has had given Him for drink! If there may have been the wine of the wrath of God, there has been the honey of sweetness and the milk of simple faith.

2-9. We begin here another Canticle. This selection sets forth the sin of the favoured soul against its Heavenly Lover, and its punishment. Dispensationally, it describes the refusal of God's love by the whole Jewish nation. How often the Lord has come to knock at the door of our hearts, to find us slumbering like the virgins at the bridal feast, and the disciples in Gethsemane! Instead of bitter reproaches, He addresses us in terms of endearment; but often we are too drowsy and indolent to take heed. He knocked when we were sleeping; He is gone when we arouse, that He may correct us, and lead us to desire Him the more. The ministers of His holy Gospel are powerless to help, and the daughters of Jerusalem, who may represent those who are interested in religious matters, cannot restore the lost joy.

10-16. The believer must always be ready to give an answer to everyone who asks; and we have here the answer of the Church, or the individual, to the inquiry, why Christ is so superior to all other attractions. White as the light; ruddy from Calvary's bloodshedding; His head as of gold standing for His Deity; His black bushy locks for youthful strength; His dove-like eyes for gentleness; His cheeks beautiful and suffused with love; His speech fragrant as with myrrh; His hands so gentle; His legs so strong; His countenance majestic; His mouth so sweet.

All my capacious powers can wish
In Thee doth richly meet,
Nor to mine eyes is light so dear,
Nor friendship half so sweet.

THURSDAY, December 3. Solomon's Song vi.

1. This question may well have been asked at the time of our Lord's burial, when men like Joseph and Nicodemus were led to seek Him in company with the Church. Whenever we talk about our Lord we lead men to seek Him.

2, 3. The Lord is now in heaven, where the spices of His Holy Nature are poured forth without stint or limit; and there is a sense in which He is always gathering lily-white souls, who have washed their robes, and made them white in His blood. What a blessing to know that we are His, and He is ours for ever!

4-9. These verses may be applied to the risen Lord, when He sent forth His Church to be as an army for subduing the world, and as a flock for fruitfulness. The result of her work in the world is a great aggregation of souls to Christ; but amid all other societies and people the Church of Jesus is "the only one."

10. Here is the Church of Christ after Pentecost, going forth to the conflict with the world-forces.

11, 12. The bride's soliloquy. It is the late autumn ("a garden of nuts"), and we are reminded of the contrast between the garden of flowers (ii. 11), i.e., spring; of the garden of spices (vi. 2), i.e., late summer; and here of nuts, i.e., autumn. In every season of experience, "yesterday, to-day, and for ever," Jesus is the same; and we rejoice in Him.

FRIDAY, December 4. Solomon's Song vii.

We have in this chapter a description of the Church, and of the soul on which the Lord has set His love. Hers the jewelled girdle and the girdle-clasp; hers the vesture of gold like golden corn, and the modest veiling of her charms like the shyness of the young roes. Hers the pure majesty of the erect neck and the love of the dove-like eyes. She scents the fragrance of His advent, and is crowned with the beauty of Carmel. The glorious beauty of her black hair binds the eyes of her immortal lover, so that, King though He be, He is held captive in the tresses thereof (R.V.). Tall and fruitful (6, 7), sweet and lovely (8, 9)—how little do we realize all that we are to Christ! We, indeed, have no comeliness save that which He has put upon us; but we know that we are His, that He desires us (16).

12, 13. The Bridegroom leads the Bride into the vineyards. There must be times in our lives for the exchange of the expressions of our love and Christ's. We must lay up for Him holy thoughts and prayers, that we may give Him as much joy as possible. It is a serious question for us all, whether we give Christ time enough to say all to us that He desires.

SATURDAY, December 5. Solomon's Song viii.

"Oh that Thou wert as my brother." From the beginning it was not so; the husband "shall cleave unto his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh." She might have ten brothers, but only one husband, who is everything to her as she to him.

"I would lead thee." How incongruous! Yet it is an error to which we are very prone. "I am going to do some Christian work; Lord go with me and help me." Ephesus was full of good works, but had lost her first love.

Think of Mother Nature instructing us to do the work of the Divine Spirit. "I would give spiced wine of the juice of my pomegranate," to Him who gave for us the pure blood of the grape. "This cup is the New Covenant in my blood, which is shed for many for the remission of sins."

In 4, 5, she tries to recall a past experience. "His left hand should be under my head." In ii. 6 it was so—a present enjoyment.

"Who is this?" In iii. 6 the same three words recalled His sacrifice; now they recall the day when she, a poor sinner, came up out of the wilderness, leaning her whole weight on Him, her Beloved.

"Set Me as a seal upon thy heart," for love; "upon thine arm," for service. The greater seals the less, never the less the greater.

"We have a little sister." Now she has learned her lesson. She has yielded to His vehement appeal. She will now live for others. Let Him be in His right place, and all beside will, by His Spirit's guidance, fall into theirs.

By Dr. HARRY GUINNESS.

IN the end of the eighties, Europe suffered severely from epidemic influenza, and one of the sequels which succeeded that extraordinary malady in certain parts of the Continent was called "La Nonna," and described as a condition of unwonted somnolence. Fortunately, however, the condition proved to be transitory and unimportant, and sustained no relation to the "sleeping sickness," which at that time was decimating the population of the middle Congo.

The terrible ravages of the latter, especially amongst the Church members of the station of M'Banza Manteka, constituted one of the reasons which prompted my journey to Africa in 1890. At that time the Dutch medical men on the lower river had never seen a case, and even Dr. Sims, at Stanley Pool, had not often been brought into contact with the disease. But in the intervening strip of country, 230 miles in width, hundreds of poor creatures had perished from this terrible scourge. I, personally, saw scores of cases, and brought home several to London for investigation. The symptoms were very simple, and might be summed up in a sentence as the gradual oncoming of a condition of somnolence and lethargy, which increased as the weeks or months went by, until the poor victim was too weak to walk, and even disinclined to eat. The majority eventually starved to death, and the fatal termination was never further delayed than eighteen months. The London doctors were profoundly interested and utterly puzzled. No organic trouble could be discovered during life, and no post-mortem examination revealed the secret. The mystery was so profound that not even any workable theory of the causation was forthcoming, and meanwhile the natives were dying, not alone in the Cataract regions, but, later on, far away in the distant interior. In one province of Uganda alone, there are probably 20,000 infected persons.

At last the British Government sent out three Medical Commissioners to investigate the subject; and, thanks to the perfection of modern microscopy and the marvellous strides which have been made during recent years in the investigation of the micro-organic causation of disease, the Italian member of the Commission, Dr. Castellani, has discovered the probable origin of the trouble.

There seems to be little doubt as to the contagiousness of the malady, and immediate steps are being taken to segregate the sufferers, with the hope that in due time the disease may be stamped out, as leprosy has been in our own country. And what about the sleeping sickness of the Christian world—

THE WHITE MAN'S LETHARGY?

How true it is, alas! that with regard to our Master's great commission too many have been utterly oblivious. The torpor of a deadly indifference has stolen over us, and we no longer heed the perishing multitudes. Their cries of misery have failed to penetrate our ears; and while the sorrowful procession of their untold millions has swept on into eternity, we have slept, unconscious of the tragedy, intent only on the fantasies of pleasure, or the glittering baubles of a temporary gain.

The sleeping sickness! Could any illustration more appositely portray the utter indifference to the heathen that characterises the majority of so-called Christians! And the saddest part of all is, that the indifference is not alone to them, but to Him!

Does it not seem passing strange that when all the doors of gracious opportunity are widest open, there should be a universal complaint on the part of missionary societies of a dearth of suitable candidates for foreign service?

The problem must be squarely met, and the causes of this decadence remedied. We are persuaded that it is unavailing to attempt to galvanize the Church into renewed activity! The forces of materialism, worldliness, pleasure seeking, money making, and selfishness cannot be antagonized by any other power than the incoming of the Spirit of God. Nothing but a widespread revival of spiritual religion will meet the case. Only thus shall we be delivered from the fatal and criminal somnolence into which we have fallen with regard to His claims and His aims.

"He came through the garden in the midnight alone." He came to seek for love, for an understanding heart. He was bearing the sorrow and sin of all the world. He had gone through the conflict in agony and blood. Even then He might have saved Himself. He might have done His own will. But He chose to bear the cross for us, and to die the death of all.

"Earth's greatest strife was over, and He came to seek His loved ones." He had bid them watch and pray—share with Him the trial and the service of that hour.

"Did He crave in that great moment one sympathetic heart?"

"HE CAME AND FOUND THEM SLEEPING."

Beloved, "Let us not sleep, as do others, but let us watch and be sober!" We have dozed away too much of our time in carelessness and ease. We have been all too dull of hearing, and lethargic in response. But it may be that through infinite mercy, He may yet speak to us again—"Go, work in my vineyard!"

The sun is sinking towards the distant horizon. The night is stealing on when no man can work. The moments are slipping past. The opportunity for action is fleeting. Now, if we rouse us, we might pray—give, go! To-morrow it may be too late.

The Distress in Macedonia.

OUR treasurer, the Lord Kinnaird, has received a reliable communication from one who fears lest the doleful and horrible sufferings of those in the south-east corner of Bulgaria should be overlooked.

The writer dates from Adrianople, October 30. He says:—"The Bulgarians of the Kirklisse district, the country comprised between the town of this name and the Black Sea and Bulgarian frontier, have been burnt out, plundered, massacred, and outraged even in a greater degree than those in Macedonia. The facts are too hard, and do not allow of any exaggeration. When the insurrectional movement occurred in this district, 60,000 soldiers were massed in the country, and the devastation was complete. Those of the villages which were not burnt were completely sacked, those of the inhabitants who failed to escape were murdered or left to regret they were not dead. . . . The burnt village, Raklitza, three miles from Kirklisse, which had contained 120 houses, or 600 inhabitants, when visited were found to be an old couple. The old man stood up with great difficulty. His only prayer was: 'Do not allow the soldiers to beat me again!' This village, within sight of the Governor's residence, was fired by soldiers during the night, and the inhabitants shot down as they attempted to escape, all the cattle were burnt, and the people plundered of all."

Proceeding, the writer quotes from the report of the Bulgarian vicar of Kirklisse who, by order visited, in company of some officials, the twice-sacked village of Oadievo, to persuade its inhabitants not to flee. The vicar writes: "I found of the 500 villagers only twelve old men and a few women left, the rest had been killed or had fled. Every house had been plundered. I visited the church; I found four walls, and everything sacred trodden down and covered with every kind of filth. . . . The misery in the villages further away is even greater. In the town of Kirklisse are hundreds of women and children all but naked and starving; they have nowhere to go to, and the authorities will do nothing for them. My object is simply to draw your lordship's attention to this part of the country, in the hope of your finding it possible to send out someone with relief this way also. No one, so far, has thought of these abandoned people. There is unfortunately no British Consul in this vilayet."

This communication increases the outlook upon the woes, miseries and necessities of south-eastern Europe.

The Brazil Mission.

THE public burning of Bibles by a Romanist priest at Pernambuco has drawn fresh attention to the neglected condition, from the missionary point of view, of the vast country of Brazil. The friends of the Brazil Mission feel that the needs of the land should at this time be newly represented to Christians of our own country. Accordingly, a meeting for conference and prayer was held at Exeter Hall a few days ago.

Mr. William McCall, who presided, bore testimony to the moral degradation which prevails so largely throughout South America, as the direct result of Romish error. Those who travel know that, despite the boast of Rome that she is "always the same," she differs in various lands. For example, if a priest proves too evil for Europe he is sent off to South America.

THE GROSSEST IGNORANCE PREVAILS.

To take one example: On Good Friday the people say, in all sincerity, that "God is dead," and verily believe that the universe is going on for a time without the Almighty. There is, however, a bright side, for, in the course of the past twelve years more particularly, a number of useful agencies have sprung up. In Buenos Ayres, for example, the Bible is taught to large numbers; and there is encouragement in connection with the Y.M.C.A. work at Rio Janeiro and at various centres in Argentina. The Lord's servants are labouring earnestly. Yet there are millions who have never heard the Gospel.

Rev. James Fanstone, who has had wide experience of Brazil, declared that there is no place in the world where an intenser spiritual need can be found. Yet, a cheering fact is that a number of conversions are reported by the Mission, and this fruitfulness is maintained despite Romish persecution. The same priest who publicly burned 214 Bibles has now burned 140 more, but a large measure of interest in the Gospel is being manifested by the people; attendances are larger and spiritual advance is noted.

Proceeding, Mr. Fanstone drew lessons of encouragement from his experiences in visiting mission stations, and, as showing the darkness of the priests, told of some shocking cases of immorality among them. Nor is immorality uncommon. One man witnessed that he had known thirteen priests in one district, and all were impure. In one town (where people came readily to hear the Gospel) the priest had had to fly from the place, and when he did so he took with him the wife of another man, and a newspaper article exposing him was signed "A Victim." In conclusion, Mr. Fanstone urged that Christians at home should evince greater interest in the welfare of Protestant work in the dark and difficult country of Brazil.

Among others who were present was Rev. Wm. Lawrence Tweedie (secretary). A season of prayer concluded this earnest, solemn meeting.

The needs of Brazil, as a field for missionary labour, will also be brought before the forthcoming South American Missionary Conference at Exeter Hall, in December.

The Indian National Congress is to be held this year during the Christmas week in Madras, and nearly 20,000 delegates and visitors are expected to be present from all parts of the Indian Empire. Rev. K. R. Gopalah Aiyar, M.E. Mission, Vepery, Madras, writes that this will be a fine opportunity to distribute Christian literature, and asks that friends in Britain will make this possible by forwarding suitable periodicals.

III.—THE LAND OF THE INCAS.

HOW surprisingly slow is the dissemination of knowledge! From the literature of the most enlightened portion of mankind we learn that some sixty centuries ago man was created. All that the world knows to-day of man primeval, or of man during the first seventeen centuries of the human race, is practically contained within the compass of six octavo pages.

For seventeen centuries more the world possessed no written documents, so far as is at present known, which tell of the doings of mankind as a whole, apart from the brief notices that appear from time to time in the Jewish Scriptures. About five centuries before the Christian era, Herodotus, rightly named "The father of history," wrote the first European history that is known. But even he could tell nothing of at least one half of the world as we know it to-day.

For more than a thousand years after the death of Herodotus, nowhere is there to be found a single hint as to the existence of the Western Hemisphere with its teeming millions! Hintings as to there being another world outside of Europe and Asia and part of Africa, began to make themselves known only about the eighth century after Christ.

Towards the end of the thirteenth century, A.D., mighty empires were being formed in Mexico and Peru. Whence the founders of those empires came is to this day a matter of conjecture. Probably the Inca dynasty in Peru was founded by the shipwrecked warriors sent by Kublai Khan to invade Japan, about 1280 A.D. For 250 years that great dynasty existed, exercising a wonderfully civilizing influence over the aboriginal tribes inhabiting the north-western parts of the continent which we now call South America. But and whence came they? Perhaps from the heart of Asia by way of Behring Straits, or by the Aleutian Islands, peopling the Americas. Some in their hunting expeditions may have been carried by ice-floes to the shores of the New World. That the numerous tribes of Indians found in Canada, the States, Central America, and the South—how many soever they may be—are all the descendants of the same progenitors, is amply testified to by their general resemblance to each other. That there was not a white man, nor even a black man, in any of the Americas—North, Central, or South—even as late as 1533, when the dynasty of the Incas came to an end under the treachery of Atahualpa and the conquest of Pizarro, may safely be concluded. The general colour of the tribes inhabiting these Americas, varying as it does from yellow to copper colour, resembles more the people of China, Japan, and Central Asia, than it does the races of Europe or Africa.

INTERNAL EVIDENCE.

It would, I think, be more easy to prove (not only from their appearance, but also from their manners and customs, from their beliefs and superstitions, from their practices, both in time of peace and of war), that the American Indians, wherever found, are offshoots from the races known as Mongols and Samoyedes, which people the eastern and northern coasts of the Asiatic continent, than that they are, as is sometimes conjectured, the descendants of any nations nurtured in Egypt or elsewhere in Africa.

From the dates given above, which may be taken as roughly accurate, it will be seen that for fifty-five centuries after man was created, the people of the older world had practically no knowledge whatever of the millions upon millions inhabiting the Americas. Who these tribes—found all over the interior of the New World—were and are, and whence they came, may never be satisfactorily explained. At present, our one concern is that they are part of the human race, concerning whom our Lord has said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

WHAT IS ACTUALLY BEING DONE

for the three Republics which comprise the Land of the Incas?

(a) Peru. The Republic of Peru has an area of nearly 700,000 square miles, is divided into nineteen provinces, and has a population of 5,000,000, but only four of its towns are at present occupied by Christian missionaries.

In Lima, its capital, and in Callao its chief seaport, the Methodist Episcopal Church of America has nine missionaries at work. These are mostly engaged among the English-speaking population, and have hitherto been able to do very little for the native races. In Cuzco, a small self-supporting effort has been begun by some former students of Harley College. The American Bible Society has three or four colporteurs residing in as many different towns of Peru, from which, as centres, they seek to distribute the Word of God throughout the Republic, and extend their journeys into the adjoining Republic of Ecuador. The British and Foreign Bible Society has also an agent in Peru; but other than these Christian agencies we know of the nineteen provinces of this Republic, whose highly developed civilization under the Empire of the Incas has been all but obliterated under the blighting influences of a corrupt hierarchy.

(b) Ecuador. Like Peru, this Republic at the time of the Spanish conquest was subject to the dynasty of the Incas. Its political history since the conquest has been a long series of revolutions. Several of its towns have been visited from year to year by colporteurs of the American and British Bible Societies, but with the exception of some representatives of the Gospel Union of Kansas, and a few Methodist Christians, in Quito, the capital, and Cuenca, one of its chief towns, who are engaged in the National Normal Schools simply as educationalists, there is in the sixteen provinces into which the Republic is divided.

NO MISSIONARY WORK BEING DONE

The population, which numbers nearly two millions, is practically without a witness for Christ. The Republic, one of the most liberal in South America, swarms with Roman Catholic priests. The people live in the gloomiest ignorance and degradation, and gross moral darkness everywhere covers the land.

(c) Bolivia. In this Republic, which forms what might be called the roof of South America, there are but three towns occupied by Christian missionaries. In La Paz, the capital, there are four missionaries connected with the American Baptist Mission, and four missionaries of the South American Australasian Mission. These workers are engaged principally among the Quichua Indians. Parts of the Holy Scriptures have been translated into their language. In Cochabamba there are two missionaries of the Canadian Baptist Mission and in Oruro one missionary. There are also one or two independent workers. All told there are about in the Republic of Bolivia, with its 2,000,000 of people and ten large provinces. For long the national life of the Republic has been in a very backward condition. It is at least 100 years behind even its neighbours, backward as they are. The grossest superstitions enthrall the people. But Bolivia shows signs of awakening. Colporteurs may be met with here and there on its narrow precipitous roads. Railways are practically unknown. Its chief towns lie along the high plateaux of the Andes. The climate is cold and healthy except on the slopes towards Brazil. Its rich silver mines are worked by the half-breed descendants of the Spanish and Indian races. Digging is continued continuously day and night. The women as well as the men work in the mines. They live in miserable huts in such a state of wretchedness and debauchery as cannot be put into print. The few missionaries at present in the field are chiefly engaged in school work.

Taking the three Republics together as forming the Land of the Incas, there are probably some twenty missionaries for some ten millions of people. How one man can be expected to evangelize in one generation half a million souls is surely a problem that concerns the Church of Christ? The present workers can do little more than touch the mere fringe of the population.

When we consider the deplorable moral condition of the vast bulk of the people and the deadly hatred of the Church of Rome against the distribution of the Word of God, we see clearly how impossible it is for a band of workers so disproportionate to the population to accomplish the task to which they have set themselves; and how imperative it is for the Church of Christ to ARISE AND BE DOING.

The native races of the once powerful empire of the Incas have been driven further and further into the interior, and for century after century have been left almost wholly uncared for except by a degraded priesthood of a corrupt church. Absolutely debauched and licentious as the priesthood is known to be, nevertheless it exercises a tyrannous spiritual control over the people, both while they live and when they die.

Truly it behoves the Church of Christ to seek to do something adequate for territories so long neglected, for peoples so steeped in sin, for native tribes so groaning under the thraldom of such a church. Right glad shall we be if one outcome of the coming Convention is, that some strong missionary organization will be called into existence to undertake the work of evangelizing these three rich Republics which comprise the land of the Incas.

ROBERT CALDWELL.

Orphans at Aintab.

THE Orphanage at Aintab, founded, and for so many years sustained, by Rev. H. Hovhannessian, deserves hearty support on the part of the friends of Armenia. Rev. F. A. Shepherd, missionary of the American Board, writes:—

"This home for orphaned Armenian children has been doing a very useful work for a number of years. Besides the numbers who have been fitted for artisan life in the common industries of the country, a few have become well-known in professional lines. Two medical doctors, two dentists, and one clergyman are among them, men who have become eminent by their work in Central Turkey. The Orphanage has always been hampered in the work which it is designed to do, by the lack of adequate funds to enlarge and advance it, but Mr. Hovhannessian has patiently used that which has come to him, and made it practical by emphasizing the importance of the industrial departments in the training of these young people.

FIFTY THOUSAND ORPHANS.

"Mr. Hovhannessian's Orphanage was the forerunner of many others, which the benevolence of Christian people has supported since the terrible massacre scenes a few years since, that made orphans of over 50,000 Armenian children. Such orphanages have been the means of giving home and practical training—physical, mental, and moral—to over 5,000 of bright promising children in different parts of the country. Mr. Hovhannessian was one of the few who had already demonstrated the success of training these unfortunate children in the useful arts of living, and fitting them to be respected men and women.

"I may add that in connection with the very remarkable spiritual awakening that has recently swept through Aintab some of our college students have been led to organize special mission Sunday-school classes in the district near the hospital and orphanage. Mr. Hovhannessian has kindly given the use of a dwelling house on his premises for one of these classes, and also the use of the unfinished dining-room for orphans for an evangelistic meeting, in which work the lads take an earnest and effective part."

DEALING WITH THE DRINK TRAFFIC.

DEAR SIR,—The Temperance Manifesto lately issued by many of the leading Temperance workers is a step in the right direction, and I cannot help thinking that some of our more ardent friends have unwittingly been impeding definite advance.

It is best to aim at securing such things as are likely to be accepted by public opinion. Certainly we are not likely to obtain "total suppression" while teetotalers only number, I believe, something like six millions of the total population of about forty-two millions!

Sunday Closing is a thing that I believe may be obtained, and it is hard that England should be the only portion of the British dominions, except the five towns in Ireland, where it is not compulsory.

The reduction of the number of publichouses is another point upon which it would be possible to secure a majority, if it is approached in a practical and possible way.

The way to do it is, I venture to think, as follows:—1. Take each licensing area as the unit to be dealt with. 2. Let each bench of magistrates have power to give compensation to all licensed houses for which they refuse to renew the license on the ground of not being required, and to levy upon the remaining houses in the area a sufficient rate to pay the compensation. 3. The basis for compensation and rating to be the ordinary assessment upon which all other rates are made.

This simple method would follow the precedent of the Private Streets Works Act, which enables local bodies to take over private roads under certain conditions, and charge the frontagers the cost of making them up. This is recoverable against the properties, and every one is treated fairly. The compensation would fall entirely upon the trade, and the public rates would not be burdened.

I believe the brewers would accept such a settlement, but I would urge all who feel an interest in the subject on no account to agree to any fund being set up by any tax upon liquor for compensation purposes, as any amount raised from such a source would be ridiculously inadequate to secure the sweeping reduction of houses which we feel to be necessary.—I am, yours truly, Colin Taylor.

YOUNG SMOKERS.

SIR,—Much has been said and written lately on the deterioration of the English race, especially of certain classes. Our Government may well utter a warning cry and complaint in finding so large a proportion of the candidates for the Army obliged to be rejected in consequence of insufficient stamina and other physical requirements.

Bearing in mind this acknowledged deterioration, I would earnestly ask every true patriot if it be not his duty seriously to consider whether the alarming amount of cigarette smoking, now so universal amongst boys, will not increase the deterioration we deplore, and produce in the coming manhood of our race a terrible harvest of evils.

America has become alive to the threatened dangers. Forty-two States have enacted anti-cigarette laws, and many towns and cities have passed prohibitive or restrictive bye-laws. Five American railroad corporations have forbidden their employés to smoke cigarettes.

I have before me a list of other witnesses from Canada against the evil. It consists of twenty newspapers, twenty railroads and business houses, thirty medical men, thirteen school inspectors, and 789 teachers and heads of schools and colleges.

A Bill has lately been introduced into the Canadian Parliament, with a large and influential backing, "to prohibit the importation, manufacture, or sale of cigarettes." Surely it behoves every patriot—clerical, medical, and civilian—to unite in one solid phalanx to try and save the present and coming generations.—Yours truly, W. T. McCormick

ALCOHOL: A FALLACY.

DEAR SIR,—It is often asserted that alcohol, albeit in small quantity, is naturally contained in various articles of food supplied to man by the Creator. The fact is that these articles, in their natural state, contain, not alcohol, but starch or sugar, from which, by processes of fermentation, man may, if he will, evolve the alcohol. There is no alcohol in barley, or in grape juice, or in apples; none even in malt or sweetwort, in freshly pressed fruit-juice of any kind, until man has exposed it to the action of yeast or other ferment germs, by which a process of decay is initiated, resulting first in the formation of alcohol and carbonic acid, and then, unless the process is artificially stopped, in the further change of the alcohol into vinegar. As the late Dr. B. W. Richardson taught, and as some of us have for years told our Band of Hope children, "It is an entire mistake to suppose that alcohol in any of its forms as intoxicating drink is a gift of God to man."—Yours truly, Fielden Thorp.

Tussles with Sceptics.

By Rev. JOHN TUCKWELL.

THE great debate has taken place. The night was fine, and for the greater part of the time we could not have had less than from 400 to 500 men present, with a slight sprinkling of women, some of whom audibly encouraged my opponent. Our subject was the account in Genesis of the Creation of the world and the Fall of man. It was my duty to open, which I did, explaining the meaning of the language used, and showing its perfect agreement with scientific facts, especially in the first part of the first chapter.

My opponent followed, affirming the Babylonian origin of the record, quoting Sayce, Colenso, and others; insisting on Archbishop Usher's calculation of 4004 B.C.; that the Hebrew word bará meant to create something out of nothing, or implied the eternity of matter; that Elohim meant "gods," not God; that the waters rested on nothing, which was impossible; that the light could not have appeared before the sun, and that as plants were said to have been created on the third day, sunlight must have existed before the fourth, &c.

I recommended my opponent to get a good translation of the Babylonian Tablets, and try to extract from those tissues of polytheistic rubbish the precise and scientific account of Gen. i.; as Archbishop Usher's account was not part of the Biblical story, and was not correct, I declined to be bound by it; as no known act of Divine creation in the material world had taken place since the creation of man, man had never had an opportunity of investigating the process, and we were, therefore, not in a position to define the term with any confident knowledge, and hence could not convict the writer of the story of any error in its use. The word Elohim was evidently not understood by the writer in a plural sense, for in every case throughout the chapter it governed its verb in the singular; as to the waters resting on nothing, no such idea was in the narrative; and as to the existence of sunlight before the fourth day for the growth of plants, sunlight was not necessary for this purpose. Indeed, plants grow more rapidly without sunlight, e.g., under electric light. With the wonderful discovery of radium before us, we could not say that light was then, scientifically, impossible.

My opponent got among the stars, and told us the sun was 700 times as large as the earth, instead of saying its mass was 700 times that of all the planets put together; he ventured also into the story of the creation of Eve, which gave me the opportunity of insisting upon the much needed moral of the story—one man, one woman; one woman, one man. God's long delay in sending the woman's seed was criticized, but the quickest remedies are not always the best or the most effectual was a sufficient vindication of the wisdom of the Almighty.

Christianity was said to manufacture criminals, since in India a far greater percentage of crime existed among the Christians than among the natives, which suggested the answer that if my opponent were in India he would probably be classed among Christians! But a Christian in the true sense of the term was a converted follower of Jesus Christ, and not one who merely professed a Christian creed. He hazarded the assertion also that Jesus Christ required a man to break the law as a condition of discipleship, by forsaking his wife and children, which the law would not permit. To which I replied that my friend ought to take the whole of the teaching of Jesus Christ or he would not understand it, and indeed the whole of the teaching of the New Testament. To show that that was not Christ's meaning, I reminded him that there was a text in the New Testament which said—"He that provideth not for his own, especially for those of his own house, hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."

The fact that the objections have been answered a thousand times before is not sufficient excuse for neglecting them. Multitudes are now hearing them for the first time, and are not hearing the answers. The fallacies and falsehoods need to be nailed down upon the spot like counterfeit coin every time they are used.

Bibles in Bold Type.

UNCEASING effort on the part of Bible printers to furnish the Christian public with copies of the Scriptures in large clear type, yet small enough in bulk to be conveniently carried about, has already led to some surprising results; but the latest achievements in this direction, which now lie before us, mark a gratifying advance on anything yet attempted. These two editions (with references measuring $7 \times 4\frac{5}{8} \times 1$ inches, and the text alone measuring $7 \times 4\frac{1}{2} \times 1$ inches: Oxford University Press) are in Brevier heavy-faced (or Clarendon) type, which secures a boldness only to be otherwise obtained in a volume of unwieldy proportions. The blackness of the printing naturally subjects the already well-known and highly-valued Oxford India paper to an unusual strain, on account of its extreme thinness and lightness; but even this difficulty has been overcome, and in these volumes the familiar characteristics are combined with an opacity which makes the printing show even more clearly than if done on good white paper.

Home Missions.

A Great Anniversary.

ON Tuesday of last week the anniversary of the Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Mission was celebrated, and was the occasion of a fresh demonstration of the growing interest with which this unique work is followed by Christian workers throughout the length and breadth of the land. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. J. H. Jowett, who commenced the service twenty minutes before the advertised time, for the Central Hall was then densely crowded, and hundreds could not even get near the doors. The preacher delivered a memorable sermon from 2 Peter i. 3, 4. It was a glorious Evangel for an anniversary. The passage, said the preacher, answered three questions: (1) What have we got in the spiritual bank? Divine virtue and Divine glory. (2) What may we take out of the spiritual bank? "Exceeding great and precious promises"; "all things that pertain unto life and godliness." (3) What can be accomplished by what we take out? Escape from the corruption of lust, and the becoming partakers of the Divine nature. Mr. Jowett preached for nearly an hour a sermon full of fine Biblical exposition, lit up with many an apposite illustration, and ending with a personal appeal to his 2,000 hearers.

There must have been fully 5,000 at the afternoon meeting in the great Free Trade Hall, which was presided over by Mrs. W. H. Eyre, of Bristol. She was specially interested in the work of the Mission because her sister, Miss Colmer (Sister Marion) for some years had been engaged in its social work. She told how going about the Mission she had realized in some small measure what it is to be homeless, friendless, and solitary. She pleaded with her hearers to realize with an intensity deeper and more practical in its outcome than hitherto, how Christlike was this work.

Rev. J. H. Jowett said he had read Mr. Collier's very wonderful report. Two things specially struck him about the work. One was that amid all the manifold interests that gathered round their Mission, they never allowed their interests to interfere with the central Evangel of Grace. He was also thankful that they were not afraid to gather round about the Evangel all other agencies which would help to confirm it; and no man in England had more right to call his fellow-men to his help than Mr. Collier.

Rev. Samuel Chadwick, of Leeds, said he gazed with amazement and admiration upon the bewildering developments of the Mission, since every development was an evolution from small beginnings. Sanity and courage, faith and common-sense, ever went hand in hand. Mr. Collier's work was a conspicuous object-lesson. Mrs. Ormiston Chant, who had visited every part of the Mission, also spoke of it as the greatest work of its kind in the British kingdom.

The interest in the great evening meeting was immense. Over 1,200 reserved seat tickets had been sold before the meeting. The platform was crowded with leading ministers and laymen of all the churches. The Deputy Lord Mayor of Manchester presided, in the absence of Mr. Henry Holloway, of London, through illness. He said he knew no work like the Manchester Mission. Nobody dreamed of such wonderful success when the Mission was begun. Rev. S. F. Collier had a great ovation when he was called upon to speak. He modestly took the cheers of the people as meant not for himself personally, but for every member of his staff. He alluded to the fact that that day was the first anniversary of the death of Hugh Price Hughes, whom he looked upon as the greatest Methodist since John Wesley. The Manchester Mission was the first great concrete example of the Methodist forward movement of which Mr. Hughes was the great inspirer. The Mission had a staff of nearly forty ministers, lay agents and sisters, a roll of 5,729 members, more than 2,000 voluntary workers, a weekly average of more than 15,000 people in its congregations, 3,863 scholars in its Sunday-schools, and a property valued at upwards of a quarter of a million pounds. Last year 103,000 beds, and over 300,000 meals were provided in the homes and shelters.

40,000 MEN AND 8,000 WOMEN, and more, had been helped during the year in connection with the social work. A great event had been the bazaar, when they raised a sum of £15,642! This was for clearing off debts and extending the already large social plant of the Mission, including a new maternity home and hospital. The Mission had recently purchased for £20,000 the Technical Schools opposite the Free Trade Hall, where a new central hall would most probably be erected in a year or two. When they looked, they would see that every step in advance had been warranted.

He had no need to tell an old story year by year, as each year's work had been full of new developments and the Divine blessing. In conclusion Mr. Collier alluded to the fact that ninepence in every shilling of the cost of the Mission was provided within the Mission itself. The members are giving up to the point of sacrifice. They raised over £4,000 at the Mission stalls at the bazaar. A class of poor girls at the Central Hall had sent a special donation of £11 to the Anniversary Fund.

CONVERTED "WHISKEY-MONEY."

They had one woman who brought weekly what used to be her whiskey money, and place what formerly was her beer money in the foreign missionary box.

Rev. Marshall Hartley (President of the Conference) said it was an unspeakable joy to know of the wonderful success of the Manchester and Salford Mission. The churches do not discharge their duty to the people simply by opening their church doors, playing the organs, preaching sermons, and then going home as if there were no sinful men and women in the streets, no miseries at their gate, and no poor wayfarer who had fallen among thieves. Every church that would be true to its Master's call must in some way or other continually bestir itself to come for those who were never found within the regular church organizations. He sometimes thought that the outsiders would not be very welcome or very comfortable if they found themselves in the midst of some of our churches. No church fulfils the ideal of Christ that is not continually putting its fingers down into the gutter,

FEELING AND GROPING FOR GOD'S LOST JEWELS.

The President's speech evoked great enthusiasm, which was intensified by an equally stirring address from Rev. C. Silvester Horne. He was the more heartily cheered because, as he said, he is "now in the same line of mission business." He claimed that the work of the Mission is the greatest building and binding force in the city, binding suburban saint and city sinner, or, as it perhaps ought to be, city saint and suburban sinner. No civic authority could do what the Mission was accomplishing. With missions like theirs in every city in the country, there would be no need to set up apologies for Christianity, for they would have the evidence of Christianity multiplied on every hand. The Mission workers were practical men and women who consecrated the best brain to their work. They needed the best workers. It was impossible to regenerate the slums with the failures of the suburbs. Unless the church was a more interesting and exciting place, in the best sense of the word, than any public-house or music-hall in the city, there was something wrong. There were many great fights before them, fights with evil powers and vested interests, and they needed consecrated youth under the banner of Jesus Christ. He was a Protectionist desirous of protecting the public against the publican, and the people against the priest.

After Gipsy Smith and Rev. F. L. Wiseman, B.A., had addressed the meeting, Mr. Collier announced the total collections for the day, including donations and subscriptions, as £2,135.

Christian Soldiers in Force.

EXETER HALL was the scene of some memorable gatherings on November 12, when the seventh annual Military Convention of the Soldiers' Christian Association was held. Representatives from almost every part of the country were present, for in addition to the 550 non-commissioned officers and men in attendance, there were seventy commissioned officers and a number of Army Chaplains and Scripture Readers.

The first meeting, at noon, was for prayer, praise, and testimony. A fitting keynote for the day's proceedings was given by the chairman, (Lieut.-Col. R. F. Granville Smith), "Great is the Holy One in the midst of thee." From all parts of the hall men rose in quick succession to request prayerful sympathy on behalf of what is being done to save men in their respective depôts. Very touching were the references made to the self-denying efforts of Miss Perks (Winchester) and others who carry on a beneficent ministry in Soldiers' Homes. Some told of persecution from comrades; but one and all rejoiced that God is continually owning and prospering the labours of His servants in the British army.

Subsequently an address was given by Bishop Taylor Smith, Chaplain-General to H.M. Forces. Turning to Matt. xi. 29—"Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me"—he directed the thoughts of the soldiers to some of the features of Christian service in which Christ should be taken as their pattern—(1) loving sympathy to their younger brothers; (2) compassion on those of their own age or seniors; (3) to identify themselves with others in their trouble; (4) use of every effort to reclaim the fallen; (5) to learn of Him in the matter of prayer. Each of these thoughts was emphasized and applied by the Bishop in impressive terms, as he pleaded for such a following of Christ as must always result in obedience.

In the afternoon, Sir George Williams entertained the delegates and friends at luncheon in the large hall, and in welcoming them to the Convention referred to the noble work being accomplished through the Soldiers' Christian Association at home and abroad. He rejoiced that there has been a satisfactory increase in the membership, and hoped the time would come when every soldier in King Edward's army would be found to be a soldier of Christ. Other speakers were Bishop Taylor Smith, Mr. T. A. Denny, Col. Robinson, Col. Phayre, Rev. Owen Watkins, Col. Phillips, and Preb. Webb-Peploe.

WHAT THE ASSOCIATION IS DOING.

The "roll-call" showed that over thirty regiments were represented by contingents in uniform. Reports of the year's work were given by district and regimental secretaries. Among those who took part were Major Riley (Gosport), who described in vivid terms what is being done in some of the southern counties; Sergt.-Major McVein spoke of fruitful endeavours at Gibraltar, and bore testimony to the "One-by-One" method of winning souls. Sergt. Brown reported progress in the work at Aldershot; and Gunner Fox (Royal Marines), brought cheering tidings from Portsmouth. From Canterbury, Hythe, Woolwich, Shorncliffe, Shoeburyness, also came interesting reports.

The general secretary, Mr. Samuel E. Burrow, then described his visit to branches of the Association in the Mediterranean Sea. At Gibraltar he found a state of chaos and unrest, and some of the leaders on the verge of severing their connection with the Association. The matter was made the subject of intercession, the workers met together for conference, the Spirit of God moved upon their hearts, so that the work at Gibraltar to-day is as strong and vigorous as ever. At Malta there are ten flourishing branches. There is a hunger of souls to know the Word of God, and the Christian soldiers are helping on evangelistic enterprises, not only in their ranks, but among civilians. Progress was also noted at Alexandria and Cairo.

In the evening, Lieut.-Gen. the Hon. B. M. Ward presided, and addresses were given by Dean Lefroy, Major-Gen. E. Owen Hay, and Rev. Dr. J. Robertson, Presbyterian chaplain.

A Valuable Mission.

THE annual meeting of the North-East London Gospel Mission and Lancing Homes of Rest was held on Tuesday of last week, at Earlham Hall, Dalston. Mr. Wm. McCall took the chair, supported by Messrs. G. E. Morgan, A. H. Simmonds, J. E. Cheeseman, R. Campbell and others. A large number of friends had gathered from the outlying missions, as well as many former patients at the Homes, while a bright band of children from the Mission Sunday Schools sang very sweetly selections of sacred music.

The Superintendent, Mr. Wm. Chorley, gave an interesting account of the year's work, which included some hopeful features of spiritual import, in relation to the Gospel message alike in streets, halls, and the homes of the poor. Never had the "Old, old Story" been more readily listened to, and never had larger numbers been witnessed in attendance within doors and without than during the past season. The work amongst the children and young people was full of promise and gave real encouragement.

But the mission has also definite and aggressive work among the East-End factory girls, and to some extent among the gutter lads of the big city. Then the practical side was emphasized in the many ways of meeting and alleviating some of the pitiful destitution ever to the fore in hopeless and semi-submerged areas in which this mission is working. Details were furnished by the workers, as the meeting proceeded, which were heart-rending, but which only the more boldly threw into relief the blessing of having such welcome hospices among the weary solitudes of these never-ending human wastes.

The story of the large and important Southern Homes of Rest, which have now become one of the largest institutions of their kind on the south coast, was then briefly told. It included the building, during the past year, of a new mission-room for the patients and others; also a new wing has been added to the Men's Home, bringing the accommodation in the several homes to nearly 200 beds. The cash statement showed a total income of over £5,000, while the expenditure was a trifle over the receipts.

Most helpful addresses were given by the Chairman, also Mr. G. E. Morgan, M.A., and several other friends, who emphasised the need and the utility of such Christian missions, specially encouraging Mr. Chorley and the workers to continue their service with redoubled diligence in the face of the abounding need. Testimonies from workers and others included a grateful personal statement from a former Roman Catholic, who was converted while staying at the Lancing Homes. The representatives from the latter told of real work for God among the many seeking renewed strength for the coming winter in these Homes by the sea.

Not the least interesting was the story told of the Cottage Rest, where a few poor ones of Christian character are spending their closing days in peaceful surroundings, who otherwise were homeless, or would in their old age and infirmity be found knocking at the workhouse door. One of these had only the week before passed peacefully to her Saviour, full of praise for the Lord's goodness to the last. Communications will be thankfully received by Mr. W. Chorley at 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N.

God First Loved Us.—To know that long before I cared for Him, He cared for me; that while I wandered up and down in carelessness, perhaps while I was plunging deep in flagrant sin, God's eyes were never off me for a moment, He was always watching for the instant when His hand might touch me and His voice might speak to me—there is nothing which can appeal to a man like that. The man is stone whom that does not appeal to. When, touched by the knowledge of that untiring love, a man gives himself at last to God, every act of loving service which he does afterwards is fired and coloured by the power of gratitude, surprised gratitude, out of which it springs. How shall he overtake this love, which has so much the start of him?—Phillips Brooks.

An American Evangelist.

Dr. H. M. WHARTON, of Philadelphia.

A DEEPLY-INTERESTING work is being organized in South London. Several churches are uniting for a mission to be held, first in Maze Pond Chapel, Old Kent Road (Rev. Dr. Dixon, pastor), and then in others, by Dr. H. M. Wharton, of America. Along with Gospel preaching, this well-known evangelist will exercise an individual ministry, visiting the people in their homes, and inviting them to interviews in a mission office, which he will open in the church precincts.

A Virginian by birth, Dr. Henry Marvin Wharton has been preaching the Gospel for twenty-eight years. His early manhood was spent at the bar, where he practised as a lawyer for five years. On giving his heart to Christ, he brought all his powers into a new service, and without delay prepared for the Christian ministry.

Though associated with the Baptist body, his work lies with all denominations. In America his name is familiar wherever Gospel work engages earnest attention; and he has two brothers in the ministry, both of them able men, held in wide esteem. He is the more convincing preacher of the grace of God for his early experiences as a pleader at the bar.

REV. DR. WHARTON.

During twenty years he has held three different pastorates, in the last of which he built a very large church, the membership of which grew to over 1,000, with 1,100 children on its school-roll. This was in the city of Baltimore. All that time he did evangelistic work, as he is in the habit of saying, "incidentally," but some of his friends, seeing him as prominent as an evangelist as he was busy as a pastor, found it difficult to say where the "incidental" came in. In both spheres of ministry he did large service, and year by year the evangelistic calls became more numerous. At length it became necessary for him to decide upon one line of labour or the other. His church had given him large liberty, employing two assistant pastors for some time. Eventually the wider field was adopted as the doctor's parish; so giving up his church, he entered entirely upon evangelistic labours. For several years he worked with the late Mr. D. L. Moody, taking part in some of his most interesting as well as greatest meetings—in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Chicago.

Dr. Wharton was educated at Roanoke College and the University of Virginia, and thence went to the Theological Seminary of Louisville, Kentucky. His degree in Divinity came from Howard College, Alabama. He has spent several years in editorial work. He came to England this year with letters of introduction from Mr. J. V. Farwell to Sir George Williams, Lord Kinnaird, Mr. T. A. Denny. Everywhere he has gone his work has been greatly blessed, alike in America, Europe, Asia, and Africa. He preached the consecration sermon of the great C.E. Convention at Boston, and has been a correspondent of the Christian Endeavour World.

During the Cuban War he preached the Gospel to American soldiers, and was a great friend of the late Major Whittle, who held a blessed and successful mission in Dr. Wharton's church in Baltimore; in fact he was at his bedside a short time before he died. The experiences of that day will long live in Dr. Wharton's memory. The evangelists prayed for one another, and the Major, who was so weak that he could hardly move, cast loving eyes upon his friend, and said: "Wharton, preach the love of God."

Some time ago a friend in America presented him with a handsome private car in which to live while travelling from place to place. This has greatly facilitated his interesting work, the various railway companies transporting him as well as his singer and porter free of charge. While thus employed, Dr. Wharton lives in his car, which is comfortably furnished, and thus, in the matter of hospitality, he is no charge upon those among whom he labours in the Gospel.

During his present "holiday" stay in England, Dr. Wharton has had a number of invitations to preach and conduct missions. As already intimated, several churches in South London have combined in the effort which he is now undertaking. He will have the assistance of a trained choir, and devoted helpers will hold up his hands. Many will join us in earnest prayer that great blessing may attend his mission.

The Blind Poor.

THE happy majority of human beings can see and enjoy the glories of nature; can follow their occupations and earn their daily bread; can participate in the pleasures of life, forgetful, perhaps, that there is a sad minority of their fellow creatures living in partial or total darkness, groaning in poverty and suffering.

Do the happy majority realize that there are 25,317 blind persons in England and Wales, 3,253 in Scotland, and 4,253 in Ireland? Some have no relatives or friends to look after them, and are and treated as ordinary paupers, though their poverty has resulted from no fault of their own. Some live at home with their friends, others in such lodgings as they can obtain, when their homes are broken up by the pressure of poverty or when they have been deserted (by those whose love ought to go out to them most in their hour of need) because they find them a care and a burden, and so they are left to fight the battle of life all alone and in the dark.

Like most minorities, when the nation has scheduled and tabulated them, they are left severely alone, forgotten and pushed on one side. "Lest we forget" to heal this cruel wound, I have thought it wise to bring their sad condition to the notice of a generous public, hoping by so doing to reach the hearts and consciences of the sighted majority, that they may be led to take a loving and intelligent interest in the sad minority, who, in addition to blindness, have often to endure poverty and despair.

The blind who are able to work for their living earn so little that in most cases they have to apply to some pension society like the National Blind Relief Society to enable them to

EKE OUT THEIR SCANTY EARNINGS.

A pension of £6 to £12 per year makes all the difference in such cases, rendering them less a burden to their relatives, and supplying them with little comforts which otherwise they could not obtain. The Society has 725 pensioners on its books, and 100 candidates seeking election; many of whom are in dire necessity, and whose ages from twenty to ninety. Shall the blind be allowed to bear their burden alone?

The Blackdown Hills Mission.

MANY readers have followed with prayerful interest the labours of the Lord's servants in the Blackdown Hills for many years, though but few remain who have watched its progress from the commencement in 1863. Entering upon an almost terra incognita—a district sunk into the lowest superstition and darkness—removed from the mellowing and elevating influences of civilized life—of railways, of newspapers and of schools—George Brealey (whose name is now a household word, not only in those districts, but in places much further afield) commenced his pioneering work for God. From the very first the appproving seal of the Holy Spirit's power was manifest; and from among sinners of the vilest type arose trophies of Divine grace to live and witness for Christ in changed and consecrated lives. Desperate characters were saved and sanctified; the lion, in scores of instances, was changed into the lamb, and drunkards wife-beaters, blasphemers, returned convicts, former sheep-stealers—the "devil's castaways," as some afterwards described themselves—were found "sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in their right minds." From such moral débris God raised up many and, as in Thessalonica, "from them sounded out the Word of Life." Mission-rooms, Sunday and day-schools sprang up where all before was darkness, sin and death; and the whole district was illumined with the Gospel.

For twenty-five years the late George Brealey laboured with patience, energy, and with heavenly enthusiasm and unction, and hundreds upon hundreds were led to Christ. Scores in their turn became teachers, evangelists, or missionaries. In the spring of 1888 God called His faithful servant to higher spheres above.

Every year witnesses fresh proof of His saving grace and renewed evidences of the transforming power of the Gospel. The whole neighbourhood is entirely changed in its moral aspect. The Gospel preached and lived, the uplifting influences of schools and increase of knowledge have wrought great outward changes. Yet there is the deepest need for the continuance of the Gospel light. The present generation is in the greatest danger of being captured by Rome and her daughters, who are doing their utmost to obtain the children. The earnest desire of the mission is to maintain the work in its energy and Scriptural simplicity. The people are for the most part very poor, and help to continue the preaching of the Gospel in the six mission rooms and to maintain the Sunday and day schools must be given from outside.

In a recent circular letter, Mr. W. J. H. Brealey (superintendent) writes:—"The meetings held in the various mission stations are, as a whole, very well attended. The Bishopswood Day School is prospering, and the new buildings required by the Board of Education have been completed, and are now waiting for the architect's certificate of approval. The various Sunday-schools are all very encouraging, and in some cases increasing. Stapley Mission Room still waits to be superseded by the new hall.

The land has been acquired in a convenient spot, and the Trust deed has been completed. We are daily praying for this, for it is so greatly needed. The work of visiting the sick and poor reveals much poverty and need, and the failure of the potato crop will entail much privation and distress in many families during the coming winter.

"The spiritual outlook is cheering. Souls have been brought 'out of darkness' into the 'marvellous light' of God's love. Believers have been kept in harmony, love, and unity; and we believe growth in divine things has been manifest." Mr. Brealey's address is 10, Albert Road, Clevedon, Somerset.

Thirty Years in Shoreditch.

REV. WILLIAM CUFF and his friends have just completed thirty-one years of active service in a densely-populated quarter of the East End of London; and the anniversary gatherings have shown that the enthusiasm of pastor and people in what might well be called the Holy War in Shoreditch, has not in any sense abated. The Tabernacle and its large schoolroom, which occupy the site of what was known in its day as Providence Chapel, represent an expenditure of over £30,000 during Mr. Cuff's pastorate. Apart from what is done at headquarters, however, there is a number of mission stations at which Sunday-schools, regular preaching services, &c., are carried on.

During Mr. Cuff's long term of office, many changes have taken place in the neighbourhood, some for better, some for worse. The poor are certainly better housed; model dwellings have superseded squalid shanties; disease-breeding rookeries have been cleared away, and the people live under altogether improved sanitary conditions. But such an improved outlook cannot in any sense change the hearts of the people. Specious prescriptions of human invention have repeatedly been tried, but all have failed. The people remain untouched, while drinking, godlessness, and indifference prevail. Mr. Cuff and those who work with him have watched every movement for bettering this condition with deepest concern, whether political, educational, social, or religious.

Mr. Cuff tells us that his own experience has proved the Gospel to be the power of God unto salvation, and that he has now more faith in his message than ever before, because cases come before him every week, some being of the most striking kind, proving that the Spirit of God is at work. One typical conversion was that of a doorkeeper at a low music-hall, who, on becoming totally changed, engaged in Christian work, and his wife and family were also converted. Similar cases constantly occur.

During the long illness of Mr. Cuff, the congregations fell off, but since his return in restored health, there has been a revival of prosperity; the attendance at the prayer-meetings has also largely increased. The Sunday-schools, both at the Tabernacle and the mission stations, are going on well. Associated with the stations are Bible-classes, Temperance societies, Bands of Hope, Dorcas societies, and funds for the poor. To carry on all of this work, as well as the preaching services, requires the time and energy of 300 members of the congregation, and these are never at the Tabernacle Sunday evening service. There are between 2,000 and 3,000 children in the Sunday schools.

By way of a new effort, an endeavour is now being made to bring into a week-night meeting the rough lads from the street, young fellows who are of the roughest of the rough, besides being practically heathens. Christian working men meet and teach them; and when the pastor has addressed them, they were at first rude, but the roughest natures respond to the Gospel call.

But what Mr. Cuff considers to be the oldest and best work connected with the Tabernacle is the house-to-house visitation society, by means of which 800 poor families are called on every Sunday, to have attractive Gospel reading left with them one week, and changed for something new the next.

It will thus be seen that the Shoreditch Tabernacle is doing a comprehensive work which could not possibly be done without aid from outside. The Tabernacle itself has so far got out of repair, that its renovation is urgently necessary. For all the work which must be done, inside and out, a sum of £2,000 is required, and this crisis has come at an inopportune time. "I am in distress about it, and know not what we shall do," remarked the pastor himself a few days ago. "A debt will cripple us again just when our best work was never better."

Mr. Cuff and his church officers are most anxious at such a time not to do anything to frighten people away; but while they realize the need for outside aid, they have much cause to be encouraged by the attitude of their own folk, who for the most part are of the working class.

G. H. P.

Mildmay and the Poor.

"NO room for me anywhere." Such was the despairing cry of a hard-pressed man after a day's fruitless tramp in search of work. The same sad refrain goes up from many a cheerless home in the Metropolis visited by Deaconesses from Mildmay, and the following cases indicate the distress met with on every hand.

A little woman, thin, and very faded-looking, about eighty years old, has supported herself and her brother (who is an invalid) by selling pin-cushions. This obliges her to be out all day and in all weathers, trusting for food to the kindness of the few people who are her customers. But she "cannot afford to eat much," as she wants the money to pay the rent.

A lonely widow, over eighty, has parish relief and a small weekly allowance from a friend, and this together enables her to pay her rent, and so keep out of the workhouse. But when her rent is paid she has barely enough left to get a little food and firing. A pennyworth of bread lasts her two days. She feels the cold very much, her room being partly underground.

"Why, yes, I sometimes have only a piece of dry bread for breakfast, and not enough of that." This, in answer to an inquiry, is the experience of one who was once surrounded by comparative luxury, and kept her own servants. The death of her husband, followed by the falling due of heavy mortgages, caused the loss of her property, and reduced her to poverty. For years she struggled bravely to support herself with needlework, or by the sale, one after another, of all her household treasures. Then a bad fall caused permanent injury to her hip, preventing her from going out to seek orders. Now she lives in a dark, underground room, alone, needy, and in pain.

Mrs. Codner, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N., anticipates a winter full of arduous toil for her large staff of deaconesses, and asks for the practical sympathy of God's people on behalf of the work.

Common Things Glorified.—Our Lord calls His people always to be helpers in blessing this world. We cannot do much. The best we can bring is a little of the common water of earth; but if we bring that to Him, He can change it into the rich wine of heaven, which will bless weary and fainting ones. If we take simply what we have and use it as He commands, it will do good. Moses had only a rod in his hand, but with this he wrought great wonders. The disciples had only five barley loaves, but these, touched by Christ's hand, made a feast for thousands. The common water, carried by the servants, under the Master's benediction became wine for the wedding.—J. R. Miller.

Seeking the Lost.

WHEN vice creeps out after dark, and almost takes possession of particular districts both of London and of provincial cities, it does not, happily, have matters all its own way. Rescue workers connected with various organizations endeavour to combat the evils of immorality, and to win the lost from haunts of shame. In many parts of England (particularly, of course, in the great centres of population, and at ports and military stations), the women victims of sin are gathered under the sound of the Gospel by the secretary of the Midnight Meeting Movement (Mr. Wilson McCree) and the enthusiastic staff of voluntary helpers who rally to his aid.

The efforts of this well-known Society, though more closely associated with London, are extending in the country, and there are many manifestations of spiritual blessing as the outcome. It is interesting to note, regarding the provincial work (as an independent testimony of good accomplished), a reference that is made in the last report of the Southsea Rescue Home. Miss Colebrook, the lady superintendent, writes of "one who was rescued from a midnight meeting nearly five years ago. She has lately visited her relatives in Somerset, of whom she had not seen or heard for twenty years. On her return we were much encouraged to hear her speak of how God had kept and preserved her from her early besetting sin. We are thankful to say her daily life proves the reality of a changed heart."

Not a little difficulty is apt to arise, as rescue workers well know, from the curious but pronounced caste customs that prevail even among the poor fallen ones, the better dressed viewing the poorer and more slatternly with bitter contempt. This trouble is wisely met by Mr. McCree; each section is dealt with separately, as far as circumstances will allow. In the West End, near to Piccadilly—that open market of midnight iniquity which continues to shame the city and the nation—meetings are planned in a convenient lecture hall. The methods of arrangement are simplicity itself. Tickets of kindly invitation to a simple meal are issued several days in advance. The number of acceptances varies, but in any case all who come are personally spoken to, and an opportunity is afforded of quitting their degrading life. Meetings are also held from time to time at Paddington, where a gathering was held, attended by eighteen girls, all the worse for drink; also at Islington, King's Cross, and Whitechapel—indeed, is covered. The experienced night missionary calls attention in his report to "two most striking facts, namely—the presence to-day in London streets in certain neighbourhoods, of so many Jewish women (a contrast to the experience of past years, when it was the rarest exception to find one of the Hebrew race in this position). Secondly—the increase in the number of very young girls to be found invariably under the escort of some fashionably-dressed woman, parading certain localities."

The report shows, too, that regular visitation of the streets is carried on wherever the evil exists in a flagrant form. "It was interesting to note that some, on speaking to them a second time, still retained the card with the prayer, which we had given them on our first meeting with them; while it was evident that some regarded our presence (knowing our mission) as a rebuke. More than one has told us they know 'our object is a good one!' that we are there to save them from the life to which they have fallen victims. The Gospels being in French and German, as well as English, afford us a good opportunity of approaching foreign women, who are in increasing evidence on the streets."

Turning to the Provinces, similar energy is manifested in organizing meetings. Mr. McCree, recalling a visit to Portsmouth, tells of one woman, who was taken in a state of intoxication and suffering from a lacerated head, to a refuge. She had been before the magistrates on thirty-two occasions, but is now doing well.

are an important feature of the movement. In these days, when so many young women gravitate to factory life for the sake of the "free evenings," it is well that words of warning and counsel should be addressed to them by Christian friends. Choosing, accordingly, those districts where factories and laundries abound, the girls have been gathered together, and with encouraging results.

The programme of meetings for the coming winter is a full one, and Mr. McCree will gladly welcome offers of help and co-operation. His address is 8A, Red Lion Square, W.C.

London's Starving Poor.

INTERVIEW WITH DR. R. CHAMBERS.

LABOURING amid a dense population of the very poor in West London, Dr. Robert Chambers, of the Marylebone Medical Mission (12, Bell Street, Lisson Grove, W.) has spent over twenty-seven years in the Gospel cause, ministering to the needs of the sick and suffering. Speaking a few days ago to a representative of THE CHRISTIAN, Dr. Chambers expressed the opinion that during his long experience he has not known so much misery as at present exists.

"We work among circumstances that tend to depress, but there is the comfort that, not only are bodily needs attended to, but the Gospel is preached. We maintain the patients' meetings thrice a week, and (as visitors are free to come and see) we have a long procession of sufferers, old and young, many of them in a condition of physical collapse that is pitiful to behold."

The doctor's words were borne out by the almost continuous ringing of the patients' bell and the entrance of sufferers, some of them men of the labouring type, but chiefly very poor women, not a few carrying babes in their arms. All had made a palpable effort to look tidy, but alas, the told plainly of the daily pinch of hunger. A service was held for them, and it was pathetic to witness these weary souls listening to the story of Him who came to give rest to the heavy-laden.

"Do they always listen attentively, Doctor?"

"Always with quiet respect. Perhaps with the greater attention because this is often the only religious service to which they can get."

"The work is essentially religious, then?"

"But for the Gospel, we should not be here. We are thankful to note that the various departments which represent the mission are well maintained. There is a large Bible-class for women, and a well attended children's service, besides the Sunday evening evangelistic meeting. Perhaps the patients' meeting is the most striking. Yes, yes, we are privileged to see fruit for our labours, often in the most unexpected way. For example, a woman who called the other day said, 'Don't you know me, Doctor?' I replied that I could not remember her, and she went on to say: 'Twenty years ago, you attended me when I was ill. I can thank God for the illness, for the words you spoke to me pointed me to Christ.'"

"How about those who are too ill to come to the meetings?"

"We regularly visit the sick poor in their own homes, and daily meet with cases that are simply appalling. There is no other word for it. I go into houses where there are parents and several children in

A STATE OF SEMI-STARVATION.

You will understand that these are not people of the 'cadger' class. They do not trumpet their needs, but suffer in silence. We, therefore, relieve urgent cases, lend blankets, and provide such warm cast-off clothing as friends send to us, in addition, of course, to giving medical aid."

"Is there much distress just now?"

"I have never known so much misery. Great numbers are out of work; but, moreover, one comes across so many who—suffering, for example, from heart disease—are not fit to do work even when they get it. Again, rents have risen. The parish authorities will no longer allow large families to herd in one room; this is a salutary rule, but people who are compelled by circumstances to live in the district are rendered the poorer, because they have to take two rooms instead of one, and two decent rooms cannot be got in this district under seven shillings per week."

"Yet, you visit some terrible one-roomed homes?"

"One can only describe some of them as 'unfit for a pig.' I visited only yesterday a poor child lying in a damp kitchen and suffering from bronchitis. The little one was literally gasping for breath in that dismal place, where

SUNLIGHT NEVER COMES.

The mother and three children lived there. Bad air and bad food lead, of course, to sickness, hence one has many patients who, so to speak, scarcely hold together through weakness and starvation. Some are literally covered with sores. One need have no fear of exaggeration, the bare truth is only too terrible. If Christian people could see with me the melancholy scenes witnessed in our daily round of work, their hearts would surely be moved with compassion toward these sick poor in West London slums."

Conference at Littlehampton.

THE annual Conference at Littlehampton was held last week at Rev. Darlow Sarjeant's Home of Rest, and over 100 friends were welcomed to the gatherings, which extended over four days. Early on the Sabbath we met to celebrate the Lord's death. At the morning session, Rev. HERBERT WOOD (Liverpool) spoke on the hindrances to the filling of the Holy Spirit. In the afternoon, Mr. SARJEANT emphasized the fact that the fulness of the Spirit meant that the individual gifts of the believer would be intensified and used.

Among the speakers in the evening was Pastor SCHAARSCHMIDT, of Berlin, whose address was translated by his daughter. The missionary meeting is always a great feature at these Conventions.

Mrs. PARKER, of Finland, told how the Finlanders, as they became converted, started meetings in their own homes, not waiting for mission halls to be built. Mr. DAVID GARDINER, secretary of the Ceylon and India General Mission, told of the conversion of a son of a priest, who, on going home to visit his relatives, ate poisoned cakes prepared for him, and before many hours was rendered insane. Mrs. GARDINER followed by telling how God is sending them workers. Mrs. BREWSTER and Pastor and Miss SCHAARSCHMIDT also spoke. At the evening meeting, Miss PATRICIA THOMSON condensed into a short and forceful address a mighty truth, the unity of the Body of Christ.

On Tuesday morning Mr. CHARLES COOK and Rev. A. CHAMPION, M.A., were the speakers. The latter made plain the different ways in which the fulness of the Spirit manifests itself. In the afternoon Mr. Charles Cook held the company spellbound by his wonderful story of the work in the prisons of the world.

The evening meeting was addressed by Pastor MAYCOCK and Rev. H. WOOD, M.A., who again directed our attention to wisdom as exemplified in the life of David (1 Sam. xviii. 14).

Those who were present will never forget the gracious influences felt at the half-night of prayer, and many have returned to their homes and their different spheres of labour thanking God for the November Conference. E. B.

What Redemption Means.—God has brought us out of the infernal Pharaoh's workhouse, and from that ignominious severe captivity in which we were slaves of sin, and He will also now safely carry us through this wilderness. In the New Covenant we are already the redeemed of the Lord, redeemed from the hands of our enemies, from sin, from the power of death and dominion of the devil.—C. H. von Bogatzky.

With God in East Africa.

By Rev. Francis Henry Gordon.

"BWANA! Bwana! Safari ya shatani wata-kuja." These words were eagerly spoken in my ear by an African leader and Christian worker, whilst we were all on our knees in prayer to God very early one Sunday morning in our mission prayer room at Mombasa. We had many mission services on the Lord's Day, and we commenced with prayer. The quick ears of my right hand Christian helper and worker had detected in the distance sounds which were familiar to him, and so he impressively informed me in his own language what may be rendered in English: "Master! The caravan —or procession of Satan—they will come and be here shortly."

As the procession came nearer, and the noise grew louder, I rose and announced a hymn which our African Christians could sing lustily; yet I heard the voices in the procession, and the chorus, given with precision by very many women who kept rank and stamped their feet in unison, and waving the long clubs which they use for pounding food in a large wooden mortar.

This chorus was impressive, as the whole procession shouted with gusto, repeating over and over again with stamping feet, "Sitarki Kharsi Sitarki." "I don't like work: I don't. I don't like work: I don't."

The dust, and noises of shouting, stamping, and the satanic yells were overwhelming; but on, and sweetly the Christian hymn was rendered by our African saints, my dear wife presiding at our "baby-organ."

It is said "music hath charms to sooth the savage breast." On that occasion this was more than verified. The Godly words and music inspired by the Holy Spirit had a marvellous effect. Satan's procession could not go past our mission or church-house. They wavered, halted, listened; then they broke up their formation and crowded round the house, filling the main street with an outside congregation of open-mouthed, open-eyed, open-eared, and tamed savages, decorated in barbaric fashion, yet charmed by the hymn Divine.

Again I changed our sacred song to one which always fascinates the Africans. The tune and words are also dear in our Sunday-schools at home, when we join also in singing:

Oh, that will be joyful,
Joyful, joyful, joyful;
Oh that will be joyful,
When we meet to part no more!

We had on that Lord's Day five very happy meetings, and many of the same people came each time. At the 10 a.m. service, conducted in the manner of the Church of England Prayer Book, we had a packed congregation within and a much larger one in the street. Sometimes those without engaged in argument with each other about the claims of the Christian faith, so that to be heard I had to raise my voice as if I was in a large cathedral. We had God in our midst, and His voice was calling. An after-meeting was necessary, to which all inside stayed; not one would go. Prayers and intercessions went on and on, until at half-past one o'clock I told them to go and come back again at four.

When they had all quietly scattered, my wife and I conversed with a young Scotch officer who had recently been converted in a very thorough manner, and who showed his gratitude by helping us as a Christian worker.

This young officer, who had about thirty to forty native officials under him in his office, could speak the language fluently, but after his conversion his knowledge was also used in eloquent preaching.

Presently two young African women, who were well known to us, came back very quietly, with bare feet, eyes downcast, and solemn faces. My wife spoke out to each of them by name, saying, "Faida, Ziza, what do you want?" They each answered with voices full of emotion, "Nataka karibu Isa, bibi." "I want to come nearer to Jesus, dear lady." That was music to our ears—"I want to come nearer to Jesus!"

We sympathized with them, and pointed out the way and expounded God's word carefully. The young officer then joined in, and with his finger touched the young woman who was nearest and said, "Faida! Behold! Listen! You know me?" Her answer in grief, not in anger, was, "Yes, indeed, master, I know you very well. In the beginning you were a child of Satan. Now you are a child of Jesus."

Both girls prayed and wept tears of penitence, but soon rejoiced in pardon and peace from the Saviour.

When they were gone our friend said, "Oh, Mrs. Gordon, what a disgrace for me! What a shame that I should have come out here to be told by an African girl that when first she knew me I was a child of Satan. It is true, I was. What would my good Christian mother say if she were here! I thought I was going to pass lightly over the past, and earnestly preach God's mercy, but suddenly God used the African girl to show me the depth of my own past depravity and sin!" (1 Tim. i. 15).

We may well feel sympathy with all those who with true patriotic and Imperial zeal are doing their duty and serving abroad. When one is out there amongst them, one feels such a yearning love for the young fellows far away from their homes and loving influences they have been accustomed to. One thinks of the mothers and loving sisters, and the proud fathers, who all think about them so much. Abroad in distant lands the temptations are many and varied; so they are at home.

I wonder if that African girl could have detected any of you as a "child of Satan"? You may be a model sister or brother in your earthly family: your relations and friends may rightly and justly delight in you; yet if not a great sinner, you have "come short" of the stature required in God's standard of fitness for Heaven (Rom. iii. 23). Therefore come to the Saviour whom you need, our Lord Jesus Christ, and accept His salvation.

An Evening with Indian Missions (Isa. ii. 7-22).

THE first Protestant missionaries to India were Ziegenbalg and Plutscho, who landed at Tranquebar in 1706. A Protestant work was commenced in Calcutta by Kiernander in 1758; but we are most accustomed to think of Carey's landing there in 1792. In the Bombay Presidency, Protestant missions date from 1813.

Carey was brought to God through Thomas Scott, the well-known commentator. Through the study of the journal of David Brainerd, he received his first impulse to missionary consecration, Dr. Ryland, who at first opposed him, afterwards said, "I believe that God Himself infused into the mind of Carey that solicitude for the heathen, which cannot be fairly traced to any other source." Carey tells us in his diary that he could never forget that he was there in almost absolute loneliness, with the exception of the faithful help given from Great Britain by Andrew Fuller. It was seven years before he baptized his first convert. The £13 2s. 6d., which, in 1792, was contributed by twelve Baptist ministers for missionary enterprise, has now grown into hundreds of thousands of pounds; and that one convert into the following total:—The Madras Presidency, which is the oldest Protestant mission field in India, contained, in 1890, 368,000 native Christians; Bengal came next with 109,000; the North-West Provinces and Oudh had 30,000; the Punjab and Bombay each about 20,000.

John Newton's ministry at St. Mary Woolnoth, Lombard Street, was the means of the awakening of Buchanan. This young man came under the new Evangelical movement, and was strongly affected by it; and a few years later went to India, and became one of the most powerful promoters of missions, and of Bible translation in that country. He published a tract, entitled, "The Star in the East," which, crossing the ocean, fell into the hands of Adoniram Judson, then a student at Andover, and determined him to give his life to the work of Foreign Missions. What kind of an ambassador of the Cross the latter became, all the world knows. Theodore Parker declaring that if the modern missionary movement had done no more than produce one Adoniram Judson it were worth all it cost.

Charles Simeon was the means of winning Henry Martyn, that missionary of incomparable love and compassion, who, as he gazed upon heathen India, wrote: "I lay in tears, interceding for the unfortunate natives of this country, thinking within myself, that the most despicable Sudra of India was of as much value in the sight of God as the King of Great Britain."

Time fails to tell of the wonderful work which has been done by missionaries, as represented by Drs. Duff and Inglis, and others in the past, and by those who have given themselves to the higher education of India in recent years, amongst whom we may name Dr. Murray Mitchell, Dr. Wilson (of Bombay), Dr. Miller, Dr. George Smith. The work in India, which is perhaps most hopeful, is the college training, which is being given so widely under the superintendence of missionaries, and in this the Americans stand in the front rank. Nothing can surpass such colleges as those at Lahore and Madura. The work done by the C.M.S. would demand a volume, and the same may be said of the Presbyterians.

In addition to colleges, the rescue of children from famine, the work of Bible-women in the villages, the great network of medical missions, the regular preaching in the bazaars, are all valuable methods of bringing about the kingdom of our Lord in that great country, of which William Arthur says, "Of every six infants one first sees the light there; to what instruction is it born? Of every six brides one offers her vows there; to what affection is she destined? Of every six families one spreads its table there; what loves unite their circle? Of every six widows one is lamenting there; what consolation will soothe her? Of every six orphan girls one is wandering there; what charities will protect her? Of every six wounded consciences one is trembling there; what balm, what physician does it know? Of every six men that die one is departing there; what shore is in his eye?"

The passage cited from Isaiah is a memorable one, anticipating the overthrow of idols before the worship of the true God—that revolution is passing rapidly over the great continent of India. The feasts are still attended by large numbers of the masses, but the more thoughtful and educated abstain from them, and there are every signs of a mighty and most hopeful movement being on foot, which at any moment may cast the idols to the moles and bats. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTE.

Rev. George W. Hinman, M.A., writes encouragingly of the progress of Christian Endeavour in China. He says: "I am starting for a trip to Manchuria to visit the work of Scottish and Irish Presbyterians. They have a remarkable work there, and many of them are showing great interest in Christian Endeavour. Rev. J. Stobie has written that he intends to have a society in every one of his stations, so we anticipate a good increase in the work there."

International S.S. Lesson.

Solomon's Wise Choice (1 Kings iii. 4-15).
Golden Text.—Prov. ix. 10.

THE condition of the kingdom of Israel when Solomon succeeded to the throne of his father showed a marked contrast with that of the same kingdom when David was anointed king of Israel in Hebron (2 Sam. v. 3).

When David abdicated in favour of his son Solomon, he left to his leadership a nation peaceful, prosperous, and united (1 Chron. xxii. 18). A well disciplined army officered by men of rare ability, strength, and vigour (2 Sam. xxiii. 8-39). Surrounding enemies subdued or curbed, even the king's sons in submission (1 Chron. xxix. 24). A royal capital and palace. A compact State reaching from Lebanon to Egypt, from Euphrates to the sea. Commercial alliance with Tyre and trading intercourse with inland cities. A fixed line of priesthood with their rights restored. Above all, an established ordinance for the public worship of Jehovah according to the laws of Moses, with the addition of such music and singing as Israel had never known.

Solomon's Life Work.

A great people to govern (1 Kings iii. 9).
A great responsibility to bear (1 Kings ii. 8).
A great house to build (2 Chron. ii. 9).
A great God to serve (2 Chron. ii. 5, 6).

Early preparation. He "loved the Lord" (1 Cor. viii. 3), obeyed the laws of his father (Prov. vi. 20, 21), showed respect to his mother (1 Kings ii. 19), worshipped Jehovah (Luke iv. 16). His grandfather was Ahitophel (2 Sam. xvi. 23), his father David (1 Sam. xviii. 14); no wonder there was wisdom recognised in the lad (1 Kings ii. 9). But he needed special wisdom for a special work—Wisdom from God for the work of God.

Solomon's Equipment for Work.

Humility (Prov. xv. 23). A knowledge of his own unfitness, inexperience and ignorance of the duties which lay before him. A realized sense of the importance of the nation as "the chosen of the Lord." The difficulty of taking up the work so great a man had laid down. A deep sense of God's almighty power. A desire to do the work the Lord had apportioned to him under Divine teaching. An almost overwhelming sense of the greatness of God, whose house he was to build (2 Chron. ii. 5, 6). Were these the lessons he had learned between the time when his aged father pleaded, "My son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve Him," and the time when he went up to Gibeon and offered himself to the Lord through the whole burnt offering (a type of Christ) and learned to say, "O, Lord, my God, give Thy servant an understanding heart"?

How did Solomon get Wisdom?

By prayer and from the Lord (1 Chron. xxix. 12, 19). His father, being David, had led him to the Fountain-Head, where only he could be "made great" and gather strength to do "a great work." At Gibeon the Lord opened His hand and offered him his choice of blessings. Jesus opens His treasure house to us (John xiv. 13, 14). If the Lord asked you the question in Luke xviii. 41, what would you answer? Where is wisdom to be found? (Job xxviii. 12-28); "Christ the wisdom of God" (1 Cor. i. 24, "for us," v. 30). "In Him dwelleth the fulness of God" (Col. ii. 9). Compare Job xxviii. 15-18 with Matt. xvi. 26, v. 15.

Special Points.

Every life-work is great that is done for God, and it will be a great thing for a follower of Jesus to hear Him say, "Well done," when "we all stand before the judgment seat of Christ" (2 Cor. v. 10).

2. Whatever talent we have is God's gift (1 Chron. xxix. 14), and if we give it to Him for His service He will multiply its value. David was once a poor lad playing on a home-made harp, with a talent for music and song, and he used his talent for the praise of God. He was a rich man and a king when that great orchestra played on the instruments he had invented (Amos vi. 5, 1 Chron. xxiii. 5) and sang the Psalms of David.

3. God knows our need better than we do, and what He has to meet it with. What a pity Solomon did not ask for grace to live his home-life for God as well as his public life, but his heathen wives stole his heart away from the Lord. Pray, "Hold Thou me up and I shall be safe."

S.S. Lesson Illustrations.

A man who was truly wise.

Sir David Brewster, of scientific fame, was led to love God by the good influence of his daughter-in-law. He had asked her in a childlike manner if she would pray for him, and when peace came to him it was by a simple belief in the atonement of Jesus Christ. He afterwards confessed that the atonement was everything to him. "It meets my reason, and," he continued, "it satisfies my conscience; it fills my heart." So has it been with other wise men who have listened to the call of God. To them "the fear of the Lord" has been the beginning of wisdom; and the knowledge of the holy understanding (Golden Text).

The bank of faith.

Some time ago an Australasian paper reported that in New Zealand a bank on wheels had been instituted. A clerk travelled in the carriage, and was provided with a wallet containing a supply of cash, and wherever the bank was, customers were in the habit of depositing their money or doing business as occasion required. The plan is said to have proved a great convenience to the settlers far away in the bush, who were thus saved the trouble of journeying long distances to the large towns. So is it with the bank of faith. We may all draw from its mighty store, and it is at the disposal of all people in all places. The Lord appears to us as He did to Solomon, and says, "Ask what I shall give thee" (v. 5).

A consecrated life.

It has been said of General Sir Hope Grant that "his religion influenced all he did. His Maker was always uppermost in his mind; to Him he confided his cares, troubles, and difficulties. To Him he looked at all times and under all circumstances for a way out of them. His trust was, indeed, in God, and it is doubted if any man, even Abraham himself, ever had a more complete faith in the Almighty." The General, like Solomon, felt his need of an understanding heart to judge, and that he might discern between good and bad (v. 9). We are only competent to act both in the large and the small affairs of life if we have hearts of understanding and powers of discernment, which the Lord our God will give to his waiting children.

A pleasing choice.

A little girl, being anxious to have some flowers in her own small garden, asked her father for anything he could spare from the many he was growing. In order to test the child her father gave her the choice of two flowers. One had a profusion of blossom, but little or no roots; the other, a plant of smaller growth with but little flower, but far more promising, because it displayed an abundance of roots. When asked which of the two she preferred, the child, with a wisdom far beyond her years, chose the plant of sturdy undergrowth, because, as she said, "it would last longer and look better in the autumn." If we choose the better part in life the Lord will be pleased, as He was with Solomon. He will then do according to our works, and give us wise and understanding hearts (v. 12).

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

THE WORK IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

Christ's Example in Prayer.

By REV. DR. TORREY.

(Notes of an address, following two already given.)

I WOULD like, before we turn to God in prayer, to talk to you a little more along the line of the prayer life of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. People come and speak of the blessing we get at the afternoon and evening meetings. I think the blessing comes largely from the prayers that go up at this noon meeting. Let us consider Luke v. 15, 16.

You will notice this was a time when Christ's life was unusually busy. New opportunities were constantly opening, multitudes were coming to hear him, and to be healed of their infirmities. He felt there was so much to do that He must take more time than ever for prayer. That is not the way with most of us. When life is very busy we say, "We will postpone prayer now to a time when life is not so busy, and afterwards when there is a lull in the work, we will give ourselves to prayer. Our Saviour followed the opposite plan—the more work, the more prayer. He was oftentimes too busy to eat, and too busy to sleep—you remember how quickly He fell asleep in the storm on the boat, though it was a terrifying storm. He snatched His sleep when He could get it, and was sometimes too busy to eat or sleep, but never too busy to pray. Some men have learned that same secret. Martin Luther and Adam Clarke said about that same thing, "This is to be a very busy day, therefore I will rise two hours earlier this morning in order that I may have more time for prayer." But other men have forgotten that. Perhaps new power has come to a man as a result of prayer, and they have got so occupied with their work that they have forgotten to pray, and so they have lost their power.

TOO BUSY TO PRAY.

A man visited the seminary where I was a student, and after he had said a few words, he remarked that perhaps we might like to ask questions so that he could help us in that way. I put to him this question—it was an impertinent question, and I was but a young man—"Will you tell us something about your prayer life?" The man fixed his eyes upon me and said, "To tell you the truth, young man, I have been so busy of late that I have not really had very much time for prayer." Need I tell you that God in a measure set that man aside for a while until he learned to take time to pray. I think that is a temptation that we all meet—so very busy, and even about the Lord's work, that we do not take time to pray. It is like an engineer who says, "I have got such heavy work to do, I won't take time to put in fuel and water." The more you have to do, the more opportunities opening to you, the more you put in prayer.

PRAY TO GAIN STRENGTH.

The next passage for us to consider is Mark vi. 31, 33, 34, 35. Jesus had just heard about the death of his cousin, John the Baptist, and felt the need of seclusion and rest, for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat. Luke says they welcomed Him (R.V.). Gone aside for a holiday, a little time of rest, seclusion and refreshment with His disciples, and yet when he saw the multitude He said, "I must teach and help," and He began to teach them many things. He dismissed the multitude and His disciples—after teaching and working all day and being much exhausted—and now He has time to sleep, "and when He had sent them away, He departed into a mountain to pray." He prayed when He was very, very weary. It is one of the secrets we need to learn in Christian work that there is oftentimes more refreshment in prayer than in sleep. I believe in a man taking care of his body, feeding it properly, and taking the necessary time for sleep, but oftentimes there is more refreshment in prayer than in sleep even for a tired body. Sometimes we go to bed and just toss about—we don't sleep. We would find oftentimes that if we would just get up and pray, we should soon gain sleep.

In an American city, John Wooley was labouring for the salvation of other drunkards, and we had made an agreement that we would meet with some brethren after our meetings for a time of prayer that night. After my meeting was over, I went to the place where Mr. Wooley was holding a meeting, and his wife came up and said, "Don't take him. He needs the rest so much. He needs sleep." I said, "John, your wife is right. You need sleep more than prayer just now." He went home, and we went up to the appointed place of prayer, and had been there perhaps an hour when Mr. Wooley came into the meeting. He had not been able to sleep and had come up to the meeting. I think it was five o'clock in the morning before we left that place of prayer, and as I parted with John Wooley on Euclid Avenue he was as fresh as a new-blown rose. Let us learn the secret from our Master of rest in communion with God.

PRAY WHEN TEMPTED.

Two more passages which will help us in this matter are Matt. xxvi. 36; Luke xxii. 39-41. You remember this was just before His great temptation. We speak of the temptation in the wilderness being His great temptation, and so it was; but you remember it says, "The devil left Him for a season." The final temptation was to follow the next day, and was the day of the great temptation of the disciples as well; and He said, "Let us prepare for it by prayer. You pray that you enter not into temptation." You remember the result: the disciples went to sleep, but Jesus spent the time in prayer. The next day, when the testing came, the disciples fell, every one of them, but you remember the calm majesty of our Lord's bearing when He was at the court of Ananias and Caiaphas and Pilate. He had gained His victory in Gethsemane before he ever went to the courts of these men. The thought is simply this—we should pray before the great temptations of life. There is a time of testing coming. We often see them coming. Prepare for them by prayer.

Finally, a few words on Luke xxiii. 34, 46. It is our last view of our Saviour in His earthly life. "Then said Jesus," as He hung on the cross, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." In the 46th verse, "And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, He said, 'Father, into Thy hands I commend My Spirit.'" Thus were the last moments of His life in prayer. His last utterance was a prayer. His life had been a life of prayer, and very fittingly it closed with prayer. O, that God would make our lives like His, a life of prayer from the beginning to the end.

Addresses to Men at Manchester.

DR. TORREY is supremely a man of faith; but (or perhaps we should say and therefore) he is a far-seeing and thorough organizer. The order in which the services during the Mission are held is carefully thought out, so that every class of people shall be reached. During the last two weeks meetings of three-quarters of an hour (1-5 to 1-50) long have been held exclusively for men during the dinner-hour, and the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. has been filled by a most attentive and appreciative audience of business men. Mr. Alexander conducts the former part of the meeting, leading the singing, calling for testimonies of help received, and giving with good effect one of the hymns as a solo. Dr. Torrey speaks for from twenty to thirty minutes, and compresses much matter into the time.

Among other subjects he has dealt with the question, "Did Christ rise from the dead?" He marshals his facts in a very clear and powerful way. He has no hesitation either in word or conviction, and affirms and illustrates that the four Gospels contain accurate records of observed facts. Very powerful was the closing of the first address on this subject when he pointed out that what the Apostle John described as he had seen—the flowing out of Jesus' side, after the spear thrust, "water and blood"—had taken seventeen centuries of scientific discoveries to explain.

The addresses are listened to with earnest attention, and testimonies are given that they have confirmed the faith of believers through a clearer vision of the truth. One man met Dr. Torrey and said that by these addresses Unitarianism had been knocked out of him, and he had been led to accept Christ as his Saviour.

A TYPICAL EVENING MEETING.

During the day Dr. Torrey devotes his time to strengthen faith, to instruct, and to build up. In the evening he bends his energies to lead souls to a decision for Christ. The announced time for the meeting to commence is 7.30; but the choir (comprising some twelve hundred persons) has assembled much earlier, and the congregation is coming in. Mr. Alexander, alert and bright, is on the high rostrum leading the singing, and in more ways and senses than one is attuning the gathered and gathering concourse of people for the message to be delivered. He intersperses pertinent remarks, and gives cheerful testimonies between the songs. He calls upon various sections of the congregation to sing a verse of a hymn, and succeeds in getting the whole audience to sing. Some parts of the hall are roped off for parties from outlying districts, but by the announced hour for commencing every seat is occupied.

Some minister or clergyman leads in prayer; the notices are given out in a clear and business-like way; Mr. Alexander sings a solo—and then Dr. Torrey walks briskly up the steps and calls the audience to prayer. The prayer is brief but pointed, simple and earnest. He then gives out his subject or text, and at once plunges into his theme. He speaks with directness and with a gathering force to the end of the address. He will sometimes speak for nearly an hour, and sometimes for about half that time.

JOHN III. 16.

On Thursday evening he opened by saying he would speak from the text which had been the most powerful passage of any in the Bible for conversion, and asked his hearers to guess which it was. A lady on one of the steps of the platform gave out the text: "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." He said: "Our salvation begins in God's love, and it ends in our loving God."

He proceeded to announce, illustrate, and enforce the four main thoughts in the text—I. The universality of God's love; II. It is a holy love; III. The greatness; and IV. the power of God's love. In dwelling upon the fact that the love of God is a holy love, the preacher with a realistic power which produced awe of heart, described the sufferings that a father must endure in seeing an only-begotten Son in bonds, scourged, crowned with thorns, crucified—and oh! how God had suffered through what His Son bore and endured at the hands of the wicked and on the cross.

THE AFTER-MEETING.

As soon as the address is finished prayer is offered, at the close of which the congregation is requested to continue in attitude of prayer. Then the preacher asks any who desire to trust in Christ to stand up as a sign of this. One after another responds to the invitation. Then they are requested to stand up all together, and to come forward to the front seats to be specially spoken to and to give in their names. The invitation is repeated to others to come. The numbers which have come forward have varied. Some nights comparatively few and some nights many. It was stated that one night "hundreds" had been led out. There is also during the after-meeting an interval when there is no singing or speaking from the platform, and Dr. Torrey, having requested every one to speak to the person next to him, sits silently on the rostrum looking round upon those before him thus engaged. There is no inquiry-room. At the close of the meeting Dr. Torrey—and sometimes Mr. Alexander also—speaks to the converts, giving them instruction and advice. The workers then hand in to the secretaries the cards bearing the names of the inquirers.

FALLEN WOMEN'S MEETING.

On Wednesday night a gathering of some 300 women of the unfortunate class met, who were addressed by Dr. Torrey. The women had been brought together by the workers of the Manchester City Mission. Fifty of them stood up professing conversion, and ten have been received into Homes for further help and guidance.

RESTING DAY.

On Friday the evangelists rested. Dr. Torrey's voice on Thursday night was exceedingly weak when he first stood up to speak; but it recovered as he went on. He has worked hard and needed the rest. A series of prayer meetings were held during the day at 8, 11, 1, 3, 5 and 7 o'clock. These were sparsely attended. Only a short notice of them had been given, and in some instances, doubtless, meetings were also held in outlying places.

SUNDAY SERVICES.

On Sunday afternoon the hall was full, and a helpful address was given to Christian workers. In the evening the hall was crowded, and an overflow meeting was held in the adjoining theatre, which also was filled. A large number of inquirers came forward, the great majority being young men. One of the officials stated that the proportion of men to women was about five to one. The overflow meeting was conducted by Mr. Ernest Matthews, the energetic and capable secretary of the Manchester City Mission—who has thrown himself heart and soul into the special mission work—and some five-and-twenty persons came forward at that meeting. Altogether, so far, over two thousand converts have been enrolled.

The meeting for fallen women, held on Wednesday evening last week, is still bearing good fruit, and the power of conviction of sin is spreading. On Monday morning one of the most notorious among bad women in one part of Manchester came forward and declared her determination to live henceforward a right life.

ADDRESS ON CHRIST'S RESURRECTION.

On Monday noon the last lecture on the evidence of Christ's Resurrection was given at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, at which there were some 700 men. It was an exceedingly able and convincing address. One point which went specially home was the reply to the suggestion which some had made and defended, that Mary Magdalene had, in a state of hallucination, thought she had seen Jesus alive upon His burial. "Remember," said Dr. Torrey, "that among the apostles, all of whom affirmed that Jesus had risen from the dead, there was such a man as Thomas, who said he would not believe except he put his fingers in the print of the nails, and Thomas was not a man to be imposed upon by a woman's illusion when in a state of hallucination. There was also among them Matthew, a tax-gatherer, and could they for a moment suppose that a tax-gatherer could be carried away by what a woman said she perceived in a state of hallucination. According to the true scientific and legal principles and rules of dealing with evidence, it was certain that Jesus Christ had risen from the dead."

Fellowship Meeting in Liverpool.

ON Tuesday, November 17, I had the privilege of attending a large meeting of converts at Liverpool. The large hall of the Y.M.C.A. in Mount Pleasant was crowded with a bright-faced company of men, women, and children of all ages and classes who had been brought to Christ during the Torrey-Alexander Mission of September. I arrived at the meeting fully half an hour before the commencement time; but the hall being full, we began right away, and a glorious time was experienced.

Mr. Proctor presided, and was supported on the platform by many well-known Christian workers. The first part of the meeting was devoted to the singing of Alexander's Revival Hymns, and as one hymn after another was beautifully rendered the whole company became aglow with the light of heaven. After prayer, Scripture texts were given with an alacrity and delight that was inspiring. It was a happy sight to see hundreds of converts who, a few months before, were without Christ and without hope, repeat verses from God's Word which had been helpful to them.

It had been intimated that Mr. Alexander would be present to speak some words of encouragement; but, owing to the great demands for his presence at the Manchester meetings, he was unable to fulfil his promise. He did wisely and well in sending his pianist (Mr. Harkness) in his stead, and with him a lengthy letter to the converts. This epistle was read by Mr. Harkness, and listened to with great interest. Miss Parkes was present, and added much to the profit of the meeting by narrating first a story about some persecuted Armenian Christian boys, then telling of the formation of home Bible classes in Dundee. A time was profitably spent in praise and testimony, and as one after another rose and, with beaming countenance, thanked God for the gift of His Son, and the joy they had in trusting Jesus, I felt constrained to say: "Praise the Lord for His goodness."

The meeting closed with the favourite "Glory Song," and, after a few words of prayer and the benediction, the great crowd dispersed, going to their homes strengthened and blessed, and with a firmer assurance of Christ as their Saviour. The prayers of God's people are asked for these converts. R.

Incidents of the Mission.

AN INVALID'S PRAYERS.

An invalid lady wrote the other day saying she could do very little, but she was praying every day for God's blessing on the Torrey-Alexander missions. How much of the joyful results is traceable to this and other instances of regular prayer.

SLEEPLESS BEFORE DECISION.

From a letter received lately by Dr. Torrey, we take the following sentences:—"I have attended your meetings since Wednesday, and last night I got no sleep. At one o'clock this morning I found Jesus Christ. I accept Him as my personal Saviour and Master. Will you please pray for me?"

"GET RIGHT WITH GOD!"

Some men were giving out cards at a railway station with the words, "Torrey to-night. Get right with God." As two gentlemen took these tickets, the elder one said to the younger, "Now, Frank, thank God for this. Come and hear Torrey. I have been praying for you for years, and now here is your opportunity."

PRAYING ALL NIGHT.

One lady, who had come all the way from Hull to be at the Manchester Mission, said she and friends with whom she was staying spent the whole of a night in prayer for the success of and God's blessing upon the Mission. The hours seemed to fly, and they rose from their knees with the assurance that their prayers were to be answered.

BEARING TESTIMONY.

A son of one of the workers, who was converted in the Manchester meetings, wanted to confess Christ at his work, and take his stand at once for God. It is a place where the lads bet a great deal; so this little lad stood up and said, "Do you know what Dr. Torrey says about betting? Them that bets is fools, and them that takes the money from them that bets is thieves, and nothing else." In this practical way the boy bore his testimony.

THE SON OF A MINISTER.

One night, a man all rags and tatters was asking from group to group, outside St. James' Hall, Manchester, for the price of a bed. At length a young man, who bought some cigarettes from a boy, gave him a penny of the change, and said to him, "You had better go into the hall to the meeting. You look tired, and as if you wanted to rest awhile." At the close, two workers talked with him, and he completely broke down. He turned out to be the son of a preacher. To-day, he is a changed man, and is now rejoicing in the assurance of sins forgiven.

A CHORISTER CONVERTED.

A young man in the choir was spoken to the other night about his soul; but apparently very little impression was made. He was very hard, obstinate, and stubborn. He was accompanied home by one of the Mission workers, who, after a long and earnest conversation, led him to Christ. This incident was reported, and a letter which Dr. Torrey had received from the young man was read:—"I have just accepted Christ as my Lord and Master, 11.10 p.m., November 9, 1903. Please tell Mr. Harkness that I have surrendered. I thought I should have never surrendered—I thought I was too hard-hearted. But, thank God, He has made me soft-hearted, and now I am no longer a hard-hearted sinner, but a tender-hearted Christian."

CONVERSIONS IN A FACTORY.

The good work at Liverpool continues, as this letter witnesses:—"I would just like to let you know that since your mission in Liverpool we (Hudson's Dry Soap workmen) have been continually holding meetings at breakfast and dinner time in our shop. We have been privileged by the heads of our firm to hold these meetings without interference from anyone. We also have a prayer meeting every Sunday morning from 7.30 till 8.30. We have an attendance of from forty to fifty. I may tell you that it is through one man getting soundly converted at your mission that these meetings started. We have men in our shop accepting Christ as their Lord and Master every day. I would like to ask the prayers of your meetings that we may continue our work for the Lord. I just write you these few lines so that other shops may take our example. I am glad to see that there are many souls accepting Christ in Manchester."

DR. MACLAREN'S PRESENCE.

On a recent evening Dr. Alexander Maclaren was present on the platform of St. James' Hall. He arrived while Mr. Alexander was teaching the great congregation to sing a hymn. In this, as in every part of the proceedings, the venerable preacher took a keen interest. He listened to Dr. Torrey's address with a close attention which was an example to everyone. It was a stimulus to speaker and hearers to see him so interested in the service. As soon as the great congregation saw Dr. Maclaren arrive they rose spontaneously to their feet to greet him. It may also be mentioned that at the meeting for ministers Dr. Torrey said that the men who reached and held the people were those who preached the Word of God. They had not to go out of Manchester for an example of this, for, said Dr. Torrey, "Dr. Maclaren has always, and throughout his long and potent ministry, been an expounder of the Word."

HUSBAND AND WIFE CONVERTED.

"One Sunday night, at St. James' Hall, Manchester, during the after-meeting, I spoke to a young man about his soul," writes a worker. "I tried to induce him to accept Christ as his personal Saviour. He said he had tried to be a Christian, but had failed because he had such an ungovernable temper. He had just had a quarrel with his wife. I found out he was trying to be a Christian in his own strength, without taking time for prayer and study of God's Word. I pointed out to him the utter impossibility of succeeding without trusting to the atoning work of Christ on the Cross, and then using the means of grace by study of the Word and communion by prayer. I left him at last after getting a promise that he would try and bring his wife the next night. They both came, and he asked me to try and induce his wife to go with him to the front benches. I succeeded at last by God's grace, and they both accepted Christ as their Saviour, Lord, and Master. During the closing hymn they joined very heartily in singing, 'I am happy in Him,' and looked as if there was no doubt about it."

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

In a new book, "The Possibilities of Life," by Andrew Melville (Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.), there are three or four allusions to the work done by Messrs. Torrey and Alexander. The author quotes, with approval, the remarks made on the Higher Criticism by Dr. Torrey, when he said, "he had been a higher critic of the higher critics, but when he came to study the Bible, instead of reading about it, he found that the 'crazy quilt' theory of the construction of the Bible will not hold water. The criticism of yesterday was laughed at to-day." In the same volume there is a quotation from Dr. Torrey as to the power of prayer. "Here," says the author, "is absolute faith in our Lord's own words: 'I say unto you, all things whatsoever you pray and ask for, believe that ye have received them, and ye shall have them.' So he and his singing companion go forth assured beforehand that hundreds are to be brought to believe and accept salvation; and all the reports of their work stated that the largest halls in the places they visited, both in England and Scotland, were not large enough to hold the crowds that gathered to hear the simple Gospel, and that many hundreds in every city were led to decide for Christ."

INCIDENTS OF THE "GLORY SONG."

The Secretary of the late Liverpool Mission, when in Cardiff recently, was very much surprised to hear a parrot whistling the "Glory Song."

A Manchester City Missionary told an interesting incident showing the remarkable hold the "Glory Song" has upon the people who hear it. He was visiting the people in his district one morning and inviting them to attend the meetings. Entering into conversation with one woman, he said, "Why don't you go to St. James' Hall to the Special Mission?" "I'm not in the habit of going to any place," the woman replied. "The singing alone is well worth hearing, and the 'Glory Song' is worth going ten miles to hear." "What is it like?" asked the woman. "I'll sing it to you," answered the missionary, and he did. "I heard that at the theatre the other night," she said, "and the audience took it up and sang it with 'gusto.' If they sing that at St. James' Hall, I'm coming." It may be mentioned that four other women out of the same street came to the mission as a result of the missionary's invitation.

ECHOES FROM DR. TORREY.

There are no little sins.

Professing Christians are snared into a guilty silence about the fundamental truths of the Bible because they are not popular.

No one ever succeeded in living a Christian life and letting nobody know about it.

No man has ever found any moral or spiritual truth which is not contained in the Bible.

The Bible contains more truth than all other books which have ever been written put together.

If every other book ever written was burned up, and you had your Bible left, you would not suffer any essential loss.

Other Evangelists at Work.

Sheffield Church Mission to Young People.

A MISSION to children and young people has just been held in Sheffield, in which no fewer than thirty-five out of forty parishes have taken part. The mission was inaugurated by the Sheffield clergy mainly to reach young people between thirteen and nineteen years of age—a period of life when the drifting from Sunday-school and other religious influences commences. Where it was considered necessary to reach also those below that limit of age, separate services were provided. The purpose of the mission was primarily to win souls for Christ. In the Sunday-schools there has been much patient and prayerful sowing of the seed. The mission has since proved to be a glorious reaping time, and in a manner which has far exceeded the expectations of the most sanguine. Both children and young people have been won, and on the closing night of the mission made in many churches an open confession of their decision. Side by side with this ingathering there has been a distinct deepening of spiritual life among teachers and scholars. Sunday-schools thus blessed will inevitably be a means of drawing others in, and so increasing their own numbers.

Previous to the mission two conferences were held, the latter to discuss the all-important question, "How to retain the young converted through the mission." At this meeting Mr. Henry Hutchinson urged the claims of the Scripture Union, and Mr. J. C. Proctor (Liverpool) the usefulness of Christian Endeavour.

On the day preceding the mission a solemn and impressive consecration service for missioners, clergy, and workers was held in the parish church, when a most helpful sermon was preached by the Bishop of Sheffield.

In addition to the special services each night in the several churches there were also short services each morning in the Church day schools and midday services in many workshops where young women were employed.

Special literature was used and widely circulated containing a letter to parents written by Archdeacon Eyre; to teachers, by Rev. A. Pearson; to children, by Rev. S. Chorlton; to young people, by Mr. Nicholson.

The mission has had the hearty sympathy of the Archbishop of York, as was shown by the letter which he issued to the clergy. A short prayer meeting was held daily during the mission at the Y.M.C.A., and on each occasion proved to be a happy and helpful time for the missioners.

Mr. Frank Weaver at Clacton-on-Sea.

The fortnight's Mission at the Primitive Methodist Church in the above town has been a time of blessing. Each evening there was a good audience to hear the rousing addresses of the Missioner, Mr. Frank Weaver. On Sunday he held a mass meeting for men only, which is considered the largest gathering of men for a spiritual meeting ever held in the town. On Sunday night the place was crowded, and the solo singing of "When the beautiful gates unfold," by Mr. Weaver, will long be remembered. His address was listened to with great attention. On Thursday afternoon Mr. Weaver spoke to a large gathering of women; at night he lectured on, "My father's life-story." It has been a glorious mission, a large number having decided for Christ. (Rev.) J. Fleming.

Mr. Charles Inglis in America.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been preaching ever since he landed in the New England States. In the city of Boston, which is generally regarded as a difficult place for evangelistic work, God has wonderfully owned His servant, the Tremont Temple (with a seating capacity of 3,000 people) having been crowded with overflowing audiences. On the last Sunday night, when Mr. Inglis preached on "Man's Awful Ruin and God's Wonderful Redemption," the Spirit of God was manifestly working. In the city of Providence some remarkable meetings were held at the noon-day hour for men only; as many as 1,300 men came together to listen to the story of the Saviour's love, and many a heart was touch through the solos of Prof. Stoat. The evangelist has now left for Pennsylvania, where he is to hold three meetings daily until the end of the year, after which he returns to Boston to preach in the late Dr. Gordon's Church, and then goes to the far West. "Paddy" Norman at Bedminster.

We have been favoured with a visit from our old friend "Paddy" Norman, who commenced the work here five years ago, and has concluded a ten days' mission at the Central Mission Church, Bedminster Town Hall (seating 1,200). Crowds have gathered to hear his message, and hundreds have gone away disappointed each Sunday night because unable to gain admission. We are thankful to report many genuine cases of blessing.

On the Saturday, a midnight march and a medley meeting inside the hall were arranged, and proved successful in bringing in some of the drunkards, and publicans, and landladies of Bedminster. For some minutes the scene in the hall was a lively one, as the poor drink-sodden creatures and a publican tried to talk the speaker down; but "Paddy," with his characteristic tact, quieted them, and at the close of the meeting temperance pledges were taken, and some sought the Lord Jesus. The mission closed with a meeting at which the missioner told his life story. At this service, too, we had converts and pledges.

A Worker.

Kirkwall, N.B.

A most interesting and blessed work has been going on in our midst here in Kirkwall. The mission has gone on for six weeks, and was brought to a finish last Friday evening. The services were held in the Congregational Church and Temperance Hall, the mission being Mr. A. Y. McGregor, assisted by a band of men and women eager for blessing.

On the first night the Congregational Church was crowded, and as the mission went on what was earnestly prayed for was realized. One night a sea-captain, who is an earnest Christian, dealt with a man in the inquiry-room until eleven o'clock, and had the joy of seeing him safe on board the "Gospel Ship." Next day his wife decided, and in the evening his wife's mother. One young man, who had said hard things about the mission, is now rejoicing in the forgiveness of sins. A lady who was an inveterate dancer has now become an earnest worker, along with many others, for which we thank God, and give Him the glory who has given the increase.

On Saturdays the whole evening was devoted to the open-air, and the service sometimes lasted for two hours, the people standing round in hundreds from eight o'clock till ten. On Sunday evenings the Temperance Hall, seated for 700, was crowded to overflowing. We desire now to shepherd the lambs of the flock. C.

Canon Aitken at Banbridge.

A remarkable mission has just been concluded in this picturesque little town of North Ireland; and many happy hearts are overflowed with joy at the thought of what God hath wrought. Canon Aitken, accompanied and assisted by Rev. James Nunn, commenced work at an introductory service held on the 14th of last month. It has been most interesting to witness the constant deepening of the interest manifested in the Mission, and the steady increase in the congregations, until on the last Sunday night hundreds had to retire, unable to find a place within the crowded church. And, along with increasing numbers, the apparent fruitfulness of the Mission has been growing from day to day, and many anxious souls have sought counsel and help from the Missioners. Night by night large numbers remained to the after-meeting, many of them in distinct spiritual anxiety.

During the early days of the period Canon Aitken dealt with some of these in the vestry of the church; but, this being small and inconvenient, during the second week of the Mission it was found necessary to utilize a portion of the church for this purpose, and numbers of seekers came boldly forward.

One of the most interesting features was a series of addresses delivered by Canon Aitken to operatives in the mills, and others, at the dinner-hour, each address lasting about a quarter of an hour. These have been much appreciated by the class for whom they were intended, and quite a goodly number attended in the latter part of the Mission. The closing service will not soon be forgotten. After an earnest appeal by the preacher to those who had profited by the services and to those who had not, a public distribution of memorial cards took place, each applicant coming forward and sitting down beside one of the Missioners in the front seat, and stating the nature of the blessing that had been received. Several of those who thus came forward were still earnestly seeking for a light they had not yet discovered, and some seemed to gain what they sought there and then. It was with a very full heart that the doxology was sung, and a most blessed and encouraging Mission brought to a close. Mr. Nunn greatly endeared himself to the hearts of his young friends in the children's services. These have been well-attended, and it is hoped that many a young heart has been won for Christ. C.

Gorse Hill, Swindon.

The factory and works of the Great Western Railway Company at Swindon are continually being enlarged, with a result that the population of the town and neighbourhood is being continually increased. Gorse Hill, to the left of Swindon Station, which a few years ago was mostly fields and country lanes, is now becoming a great and important part of Swindon. It is estimated that there is a population of nearly 10,000 souls, but religious accommodation for less than 3,000 persons.

Mr. Daniel Skinner has just erected at his own expense a beautiful mission hall in Florence Street, where services are to be held of an undenominational character. The opening service was held on Saturday, October 24, when a large company of friends gathered for praise and prayer and to hear addresses from several servants of the Lord. From the following day to Monday, November 9, we had the joy of telling out God's glad tidings to good congregations every day. Each afternoon Christians came together for Bible talks on the Tabernacle in the Wilderness, illustrated by diagrams, and each evening eager congregations listened to the old, old story in sermon and song. We have been greatly cheered by the manifest presence of the Lord, resulting in some interesting cases of blessing and in revival among the people of God.

During this special effort we had the pleasure of proclaiming the Gospel to large companies of men in the mess-room of the G.W.R. works, and in connection with the local branch of the Railway Mission, which is being used of God in blessing to both saved and unsaved, through the efforts of the Misses Comie and Casswell and their noble band of helpers.

James Sprunt.

Mr. Henry Varley at Aldershot.

Mr. Henry Varley has just concluded a blessed mission in Aldershot. The newly-erected Masonic Hall was used. The local Y.M.C.A.—although numbering considerably less than a hundred—organized the mission. Every night found an increased number attending, and had the meetings gone on for another week hundreds more would doubtless have been reached. As it was, twice daily found Mr. Varley expounding the Scriptures, preaching the Gospel, and denouncing shams. His vindication of the Word of God was especially owned in strengthening the faith of His servants, while the good-will and commonsense which mark his preaching was in every way profitable.

Mr. W. R. Lane's Missions.

At Louth we have just finished a ten days' mission under the auspices of the Free Church Council, Mr. W. R. Lane being missioner. The meetings were encouraging and inspiring. We engaged the Free Methodist Chapel (that being one of the largest in Louth), intending to hold all the meetings there; but as the work went on we found it was necessary to engage the large Town Hall, where Mr. Lane's limelight lecture was given on the Friday to a crowded audience.

Sunday was indeed a high day. At the meeting for men only, held in the Town Hall at three, quite 500 attended to listen to an appropriate and telling address, which will not be easily forgotten.

Another after-meeting was held in the Town Hall at 7.30, which was again crowded, and although this was Mr. Lane's fourth address that day to large congregations, yet his words were as powerful as when he began.

On the Monday night the concluding meeting was held, when over 1,000 eager listeners were in attendance to hear the life's story of the missioner. Many were deeply impressed, and stood up to witness for Christ.

Jas. Colam.

Last Lord's Day Mr. Lane began a ten days' mission at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, S.E. At night the great building was filled, and fully a thousand people remained to the after-meeting. A large number of inquirers were pointed to Christ.

Mr. C. Wickerson has just concluded special services at Brunswick Chapel, Whitechapel Road, and has returned to Notting Dale Congregational Church to conduct lantern services every Sunday evening till the end of the year. The object being to reach a class of people who never enter a place of worship.

A series of meetings has been held at the Friends' meeting-house, Wisbech, by Mr. Arthur Dann, of St. Ives. Bible readings were given in the afternoons, and each evening a Gospel mission meeting was held. The earnest addresses were attended by great blessing, several coming out boldly for Christ.

Miss Glover has conducted a mission at the White Memorial U.F. Church, Glasgow. At first, the wisdom of inviting a "girl evangelist" had been doubted, but, a correspondent writes, "the mission was most satisfactory. The crowds were great, and without pressure upwards of forty persons professed to find Christ."

Mrs. Harrison Lee has conducted a week of Gospel Temperance services at Blackwood, Mon. Among the satisfactory results were the securing of over 100 pledges, and the formation of a branch of the British Women's Temperance Association, with forty members. The meetings were attended by large numbers.

Revival services have been conducted by Mr. Bob Johnson in the Lee-Smith Adult School, Hull. "The Spirit of God worked mightily in our midst, whole families have found the Saviour, and many homes once unhappy are now full of joy. On Sunday night the place was packed, and we again had the satisfaction of seeing sinners awakened and prodigals return to their Father."

A friend writes from St. Stephen's, Cinderford, Glos.:—"Mr John Coates and Mr. A. Barnard, of the Ross Tent and Evangelistic Mission paid a visit for nine days to one of our mission churches (Littledean Hill) ending Tuesday, 29th ult. The services were well attended. God's children were quickened and revived, and others were led to see Jesus as their Saviour.

Rev. W. J. Pope, travelling secretary for the Regions Beyond Missionary Union, has just concluded a week's mission for the children and young people at Berger Hall, Bromley, E. The services have been largely attended, and great interest was shown. Many it is believed yielded their hearts simply and tenderly to the Lord Jesus, and we are confident that we shall see fruit after many days.

W. Hayes.

Llandudno was glad to welcome Mr. H. Thorne on this his second visit to the place. His ten days' mission has been a source of great blessing not only to the Presbyterian Church where the mission was held, but also to the other churches in the town. The daily Bible readings were much appreciated. Mr. Thorne also delivered his popular and instructive lecture, "From the Stage to the Cross." P.

The week of prayer just closed has been a hallowed season of refreshment and joy to God's children and the workers in connection with the Y.W.C.A. Home, York House, Leamington. Each morning there were Bible-readings and prayer meetings, Gospel meetings were held each evening, and many hearts were touched by the power of the Holy Spirit, through God's Word, and precious souls have been "born again." Eternity alone shall reveal the full results. Mr. Rayner, of the Open-Air Mission, has been God's chosen instrument, and night after night we realized how graciously the much prayer that had preceded this mission was being answered. C. S. B.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Harrison have concluded a ten days' mission at the Heath Street Primitive Methodist Church, Crewe. The preaching of the Word in the open air by Mr. Harrison, and the services in the chapel resulted in upwards of 120 seeking salvation. At the midnight meeting in the chapel, on Saturday night, several notorious characters were seeking mercy. The missioners were well supported by a mission band; several cases of blessing were reported on the Market Square. The town was stirred. Subsequently, Rev. G. P. Clarke received the new converts, upwards of 100 attending, including one who had been described as "the biggest drunkard in Crewe." E. G. Grey, Sec.

Mr. William Collard has concluded a fifteen days' mission at North Street Wesleyan Mission, Luton, with encouraging results. There were about seventy cases of decision. On several occasions the place was crowded, the homely addresses being highly appreciated. During the mission Mr. Collard gave his lecture on "Mission Work in the Australian Bush and at Home." At a men's meeting the missioner gave a straight talk on the evils of Drink, Gambling, and Impurity. The last few days of the mission were very encouraging, when drunkards signed the pledge and stubborn wills were broken. At a subsequent praise and testimony meeting many of the new converts told out of a full heart the change God had wrought.

G. Fossey.

In connection with the United Mission by the Paddington Free Church Council, a ten days' mission has been held in Praed Street Chapel by Rev. D. H. Moore. The first Sunday was exceedingly wet, and to crown all Mr. Moore was suddenly prevented from leaving his own pulpit at Vernon Chapel. In spite of this the mission has been an effective one. Mr. Moore's faithful presentation of the evangel has been blessed to the ingathering of a large number. It was a time of blessing, too, to the members of the church, as the Bible readings have been greatly enjoyed. The Sunday-school shared over twenty of the scholars deciding to serve Christ. The closing meeting, when Mr. Moore gave the story of his life as sailor, fireman, missionary, and pastor was one full of intense interest, and resulted in great blessing. J. Biggs.

Mr. Fritz Wood, the young Irish evangelist, has been conducting a mission under the auspices of the Belfast Y.M.C.A. for the past sixteen days. The meetings were held in the great hall of the Association, and were largely attended, the audiences on the Sundays numbering over two thousand, and on the week nights an average attendance of one thousand persons. The feature of the mission was the unusual large attendances at the after meetings, the resources of a large staff of Christian workers being fully taxed each night to a late hour in dealing with the inquirers. At the farewell service Mr. D. A. Black, of the Y.M.C.A, stated that the mission, from all standpoints, had been one of the most satisfactory in his experience in Belfast work. Professor Towner, of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, sang at several of the meetings.

Requests for Prayer.

For revival blessing at Cwmaman, near Aberdare.

For the reconciliation of two members of a family.

For a spiritual awakening among villagers near Madras.

For the guidance of God for a family in a season of trial.

For three brothers who have wandered from God, that they may be brought back to Him.

For a deep work of grace in the hearts and lives of workers and orphans in a Home in India.

For a mission at Orford, Suffolk, beginning next Sunday, by Mr. H. Bray, of the Evangelization Society.

A minister prays for grace to pray in faith without doubt, so as to believe he has received and will receive.

For a young man lately delivered from long affliction, that he may be led to serve God whole-heartedly.

For the work in Mission Halls at Sandymont and Williamstown, Ireland, that blessing may be given.

For mission services for adults and children at Whyteleafe Tabernacle, Surrey, November 22-December 6.

For the United Wesleyan Circuit Mission at Audley, Staffordshire, now going on, conducted by Paddy Norman.

For mission services at Shaftesbury Institute, S.E., and Jamaica Road Congregational Church, S.E., by Mr. and Miss Beaumont.

For a dear brother, who has passed through great trial, that he and his wife may be converted, and that God may prove Himself to them a very present help in time of trouble.

Mr. Ness, of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Millwall, London, E., asks prayer for a rich blessing on the three-weeks' evangelistic campaign being conducted by Mr. J. W. Moodie, of the London Evangelization Society.

There will (D.V.) shortly be opened (1) an institute and restaurant for girls at Newington Causeway; (2) a hostel for 250 girls in Clapham Road. Prayer is asked for (a) wisdom in arranging the buildings; (b) the provision of suitable staff; (c) great spiritual blessing among the girls. R.

Praise.

Mrs. Elliott Theaker (evangelist) desires to praise God for His mercy in restoring her to health after a long and painful illness.

For answered prayer on behalf of the boys' department of the City of Dublin Y.M.C.A., and for blessing each week among both men and boys.

A constant reader of The Christian asks others to unite with her in praising God that He mercifully spared her an operation, in direct answer to prayer.

For much blessing attending a Men's Mission in the City of Dublin Y.M.C.A., conducted by Mr. A. Parke, during the Week of Prayer; also for blessing in the boys' department.

Young People's Mission, Walthamstow.—The unsectarian Gospel services maintained under the auspices of this Mission, have now entered upon their fifteenth year. The committee record that during the past twelve months the goodness of God has been specially manifest in answered prayers for an increase in the workers. The hon. secretary, Mr. F. Wimp (61, Westbury Road, Walthamstow), writes:—"Naturally in fourteen years, and with a population whose character has changed from city men to working class, we have lost many of our original supporters, and these gaps are hard to fill."

Salvation Army Women's Work.

A DEEPLY interesting anniversary gathering was held on Monday evening at Cannon Street Station Hotel in connection with the Women's Social and Rescue Work of the Salvation Army. The chair was occupied by Sir John Cockburn, K.C.M.G., M.D., who explained that this was not the first occasion on which he had worked shoulder to shoulder with the officers of the Army, he and Sir Horace Tozer (who had been expected to preside) having highly valued such co-operation as members of Australian governments. He bore testimony to the cordial feelings of all the Colonial governments for General Booth and his corps of helpers.

Rev. H. Russell Wakefield expressed his sense of personal loss at the death of Mrs. Booth-Tucker—a note which ran through the entire proceedings—and, as Mayor of Marylebone, gave an eloquent tribute to the help which municipal authorities receive in the most difficult part of their duty from the officers of the Army. A great note of hope for the apparently hopeless had been sounded by proving that a woman can be raised up however low she may have fallen.

The annual report submitted by Mrs. Bramwell Booth was received with every sign of prayerful sympathy and practical interest. The record figures of last year were exceeded in a gratifying degree.

During the twelve months ended on September 30 last the number of cases dealt with in the Rescue Homes was 2,211, and the number resident at the close of the year 621. Since 1884 no fewer than 28,772 cases had come under the influence of the workers. In the service girls' department 33,412 visits had been paid to the homes, while the officers had called on 6,058 of the girls at their places, the figures for five years being respectively 129,229 and 23,226. At the shelters and metropoles there had been no fewer than 220,499 attendances, with 321,648 meals provided. Of these women 395 professed to find the Saviour as a result of being dealt with, 179 were sent to situations, eight were reconciled to husbands, and 773 helped to earn a living. Officers who were busy in connection with prisons dealt at the gates with 4,052 women, visited 2,968 in cells and 2,519 in their own homes, sent to the Army Homes 214, and temporarily assisted 341.

FINANCIAL ANXIETIES.

The report bristled with other figures showing the many-sidedness of an organization for which women all the world over had good reason to thank God. The year had been a time of much financial anxiety; but Mrs. Booth looked back with a great thankfulness to God for what He had done. The total cost, including the support of over 400 officers, is about £32,000 a year; but the earnings of the women defray over two-thirds of this, leaving £10,000 a year to be met by contributions. A touching appeal was made for the means to the establishment of a dairy farm, where many of the women might be taken to live for some time. Present rents, too, are a very great burden.

More officers are required, especially those of education and ability, who would be able to undertake the management of these institutions. The cause of lost womanhood was pleaded with a pathetic power and urgency.

A successful "financial campaign" was conducted by Commissioner Miss Cox, whose appeal was supported by a few hearty words from Sir Algernon West; followed by a rousing address in which Sir John McDougall called for support to all that would purify the streets of London. The Mayor of Hackney (Captain Wells-Holland), Miss Booth (daughter of the Chief of the Staff), Commissioner Howard, and Sir Horace Tozer (who arrived before the close) also took part in the proceedings.

A goodly display of useful and ornamental needlework, executed in the Homes, which was laid out in an adjoining room, elicited the warm approval of the lady visitors.

Printing-Press for Basutoland.

EARLY in 1904 Rev. A. Casalis hopes to leave for Basutoland, and a special effort is being put forth to secure the completion of the fund of the organization and development of the new printing-press at Morija. A bequest which was available was allocated to Mr. Casalis for the purpose, leaving a sum of about £400 to be raised, and of this about £80 has been received.

Another member of the missionary party is Mr. Charles Labarthe, who four years ago offered his services in connection with the printing-press, and who will superintend the work of the native helpers. It is expected that the new machines will speedily be set up and brought into full work, so that the missionary printing which has hitherto, owing to the worn-out condition of the old machine, been entrusted to business firms, will be done on them. When the circumstances are remembered under which all this has to be accomplished, it will be seen that the task is a difficult one, calling for much prayerful and practical sympathy on the part of Christians at home. Much must be done before the effects of the South African war on the publication of Christian literature can be undone.

Those who have followed closely the progress of the Basuto Mission will appreciate the importance of this step, and the great influence which the press there exerts in the work of evangelization. An urgent appeal is made that British Christians should provide these initial expenses, if only as a small recognition of the devoted work of the French missionaries in English territory. The Basuto Church aims at being self-supporting, and even now maintains evangelists in the Zambesi region, but a great body of heathens are still to be won for Christ. The native church longs to send out more evangelists, if provision for their maintenance were made. Communications may be addressed to the hon. secretary, Mrs. Sutherland-Taylor, 190, Albion Road, Stoke Newington, N.

Mission Work in Berlin.

AN interesting meeting was held at Womersley House, Crouch Hill, on Wednesday afternoon, November 18, when by the kindness of Rev. and Mrs. Darlow Sarjeant, Pastor Schaarschmidt and his daughter gave some account of their mission work in Berlin. The pastor was introduced to the meeting by Mr. Sarjeant, who has himself twice visited the Mission, and preached there.

Herr Schaarschmidt spoke in German, interpreted by his daughter. His was a simple, heart-stirring story of the deep spiritual needs of that great country, whose sons have in the past contributed so much to the cause of spiritual religion and freedom of faith.

It would seem, judging from the facts stated, that what Germany needs is another Luther to stir those who are indifferent, and to quicken those who are spiritually dead. We were told that while Berlin is rich in monuments, it is very poor in churches, and even were the people disposed to attend places of worship there is not accommodation for them. But the object of Pastor Schaarschmidt in starting his work was to lay hold of those who did not attend any service.

At first he and his helpers tried by sacred concerts to attract the people to services; but this was unsatisfactory, for what the people needed was the Gospel of salvation. So they invited the homeless and workless, of whom there are many, to a cup of tea, and then after satisfying their bodily needs, they told them the story of the Cross, and sang to them of the same theme, and often as the men listened tears ran down their cheeks, as for the first time they heard the story of the love of God and found it true in the helping hand, which had been outstretched to them. Now there is no difficulty in getting a congregation. The pastor and his helpers go out into the streets and sing and preach the Gospel, and the people come in to find help in their deep need.

With the evangelistic is associated social work, and Pastor Schaarschmidt has opened an employment bureau, by means of which he has been enabled to find work for the homeless and starving. He is ably seconded in all his efforts by his wife and daughters.

They have need of much help, as the work is only partially supported by the American Methodist Episcopal Church of Berlin, that Church itself being only a mission in Germany's capital, and not self-supporting, so that it can only guarantee £100 a year.

The pastor and his daughter have therefore come over to enlist the sympathies of English people in this truly Christ-like work.

Mrs. Sarjeant spoke, too, from personal observation of the work which is being done by these good people, and commended it to the practical sympathy of those present.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

DARLINGTON.

DARLINGTON is recognized as one of the towns giving great interest to temperance and moral and religious questions. It is sometimes termed "the Quaker Town"; the Society of Friends exercise great influence. The Temperance Society has worked since 1831, and only a few weeks ago a new Institute has been opened, costing £5,000. Many well-known missioners have visited Darlington, but none have been more welcome than Dr. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones. Previous to the Mission great preparations had been made, a committee comprising representatives from all the churches and temperance organizations having been formed. The town was mapped out into districts, and every house visited twice with suitable literature. This created a great amount of interest.

On the Saturday a reception was given to the missioners in the new Temperance Institute. The Deputy-Mayor, Councillor Harbottle presided. An address of welcome was given by Rev. W. Collett; and reports of work done was given by the secretaries of the various departments of work. Dr. Henry gave a fitting reply, and Mr. Jones delighted the workers by his singing. The public meetings commenced on the Sunday, when two meetings were held in the Assembly Hall, and were well attended. On the Monday there were three meetings, one for children at 5.30 p.m.; and, after the public meeting at 7.30, the town was thoroughly aroused, at 10.30, by an important demonstration. Announcement had been made that a torchlight procession would be held, and a great crowd had gathered round the hall. Three brass bands led the way, with over fifty torches, and a long procession of teetotallers. The town was indeed stirred. A midnight meeting was afterwards held, with 700 persons present. It lasted for over two hours, and was most impressive; forty-three pledges were taken, and a number of hearers sought the Lord Jesus Christ.

The subsequent gatherings were all well attended and effective, especially that which was held for women.

The mission concluded on the Friday evening, when Dr. Henry delivered his popular lecture, "The Future of the Anglo-Saxon Race," and Mr. Jones rendered special solos. The local papers have given good reports of the meeting, and the Northern Echo published an interview with Dr. Henry on American life and the pledge-signing crusade.

No fewer than 958 pledges have been taken, and the committee generally feel that if it had been possible to continue the mission two weeks the result would have been correspondingly greater.

About Books.

The re-issue of Cassell's Popular Educator, in serial form, is now completed. It is a wonderful repository of information, arranged in a manner to prove of special service to students and persons of inquiring mind.

How to bring up Boys, by S. A. Nicol, is a capital little book, written from a Christian standpoint, full of sage advice to parents on the right training of their lads. Rev. F. B. Meyer contributes a prefatory note. (1s. R. T. S.)

Rev. James Neil's well-known book, Musical Service: Is it Right? has appeared in a second edition, enlarged. (1s. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) As an attempt to vindicate the spirituality of worship under the New Covenant, this is a work deserving of prayerful study.

Rev. James Flanagan, the vigorous and evangelistic Primitive Methodist minister, of St. George's Hall, Southwark, has issued a volume of addresses under the title of Man's Quest, which are enriched with stimulating thoughts, and lit up by passages of earnest appeal. (3s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell.)

The Way of the Wilderness, by Rev. Francis L. Denman, is a Scriptural and instructive meditation on the dealings of God with His people, bringing out clearly the purpose of grace underlying the dark periods. The booklet supplies material from which a series of really profitable Bible-readings might be given. (3d. Marshall Bros.)

The "Golden Grain" Almanack is published in a variety of styles from 1d. The interleaved edition (6d.) is a good engagement list, with daily text; and the Diary roan tuck with pockets (1s. 6d.) would be difficult to rival for the use of Christians. The Day by Day stand calendar will serve to recall the promises of God in the midst of business (J. E. Hawkins).

Continued popularity, as evidenced by the call for fresh editions, proves that a new generation is turning with appreciation to the selection of Scripture passages in Daily Light on the Daily Path, which has endeared itself in so many homes. A copy now before us contains both morning and evening portions in compact form, in beautiful and durable binding. (3s. 6d. Bagster.)

Numerous illustrations, with a clear and simple treatment of the subject, will make many friends for Popular Natural History of the Lower Animals (Invertebrate), by Henry Scherren, F.Z.S. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society). With such a guide the young naturalist may make his own way, by an easy path, to an amount and accuracy of knowledge surprising to those of an older generation.

More than ordinary interest gathers round W. Robertson Nicoll, LL.D., Editor and Preacher, by Jane T. Stoddart. In all the churches, and beyond, there are many to whom the story of Dr. Nicoll's life—so simply yet so well told—will have a great attraction. R. J. Campbell, by Charles T. Bateman, is another timely addition to the same series. (1s. 6d. each net. "New Century Leaders." Partridge.)

With this year's Christmas number of The Graphic is given away a portrait of the King, which is a beautiful specimen of colour work, painted from life for presentation to the 1st Dragoons of the Guard. The likeness is exceedingly striking and lifelike. The number is, as usual, illustrated throughout in colours, and contains an admirable selection of short stories by popular writers. In addition to the portrait of the King, another coloured plate, "A Rude Awakening," by G. C. Hindley, is presented.

Miss Hesba Stretton has given us in The Parables of our Lord (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society) a series of quiet, thoughtful papers which will make more real than ever to bruised and troubled hearts the marvellous comfort to be found in our Lord's own words. This is not a commentary, but a practical application of the truth to daily life. It is at the same time an excellent instance of the finding in the Word of God, through loving, sympathetic meditation, of much that is apt to be overlooked in more formal exegesis.

That Dr. Torrey should describe The Treasury of Scripture Knowledge as the book which he uses almost more than any other in the study of the Bible, is a very strong recommendation. He adds that it is simply invaluable; and in our own experience it has proved of the highest service as a manual to show how truly Scripture is its own best interpreter. Those who have made diligent use of marginal references, and have proportionately benefited thereby, will find that this compact volume lifts such study to even a higher level. If young believers would use it in connection with the reading of say one chapter a day, it would prove a valuable guide in the opening up and understanding of the treasures of the Word of God. (5s. Bagster.)

Those who aspire to positions of influence in the world of commerce will find Letters that Bring Business a useful manual. With such an informing handbook it should not be difficult for any to attain that precision and facility which are essential in conducting successfully the correspondence of a business house. The details given in the examples are representative of many branches of commerce, and altogether the treatise is a practical and succinct one. (1s. net. Guilbert Pitman.)

Garden Pests. By Phœbe Allen. With numerous illustrations from nature by Dr. Harrold F. Bassano. (3s. 6d. Wells Gardner.) A pretty book, of the same class as the "Sun Children's Budget," "Playing at Botany," and other favourites. Such a volume as this, introduced into a happy family, may do much to excite in the minds of the young an interest in the works of God in nature. The educative value of such books goes deep into many a life; the winning way in which instruction is given being an important and influential factor in the case.

Considerable interest attaches to The Printed English Bible 1525-1769, by Rev. Richard Lovett, which is about to be published by Mr. Henry Frowde, containing as it does a brief critical history of the English text as exhibited in the cardinal editions, complete collations and full bibliographical details of every important edition of both the New Testament and the complete Bible. The volume will include over a hundred collotype plates of title-pages, engravings, and leaves which illustrate the typography, the text, and other special features in the various editions. The subscription price is five guineas.

As in all Rev. W. J. Dawson's books, literary finish is a characteristic of the sermons which compose The Reproach of Christ. (3s. net. Revell.) Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis explains in a prefatory note that he urged the publication of them, and refers specially to the solidity of the matter and the appeal to the higher spiritual life. The range of topics is wide, and in all a thorough grasp of the subjects is apparent. Mr. Dawson's reputation will commend the book where Evangelical appeals are seldom read; but it should be noted that he declines to accept the doctrine of eternal punishment as commonly understood.

The New Biblical Guide, by Rev. John Urquhart, has been translated into German, and is being received with great favour in many quarters. Being a work of five volumes, it is a substantial contribution to modern controversy on the authority and integrity of Holy Scripture. It is a joy to know that, alongside many publications of a rationalistic order in Germany, there is ever a good opening for light along other lines, and that books of the nature of "The Biblical Guide" find welcome readers among Evangelical Christians. The title of this edition of Mr. Urquhart's work is Die Neueren Entdeckungen und die Bibel. Fünf Bände. (4 marks each vol. Max Kielmann, Stuttgart.)

Recent discovery and more complete study of older materials have undoubtedly opened up a field for A Short History of Ancient Peoples, by Robinson Souttar, M.A., D.C.L. (12s. Hodder & Stoughton.) Egypt, Babylonia, Assyria, the Medes and Persians, Phœnicia, Carthage, Greece, and Rome are passed under review in able scholarly fashion by one who gives evidence of knowing the ground well; and in pleasant, easily understood language the reader is placed in possession of the facts so far as research has been able to establish them. While in the other sections the main tendency appears to be towards conservatism, and even in connection with "the Hebrews" the special guidance of God is acknowledged once and again, the position taken up is often that of the destructive critics. The reduction of some of the Old Testament records to the terms of profane history comes with a rude shock.

The Grounds of Theistic and Christian Belief. By George Park Fisher, D.D., LL.D., emeritus professor of Ecclesiastical History in Yale University. Revised edition, in great part re-written. (10s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) When this work first appeared, twenty years ago, it was cordially welcomed as a weighty contribution to Christian apologetics. Since then the author has continued to observe with care the trend of thought on the many subjects dealt with in his great book; and, in working the whole over again, with the purpose of bringing it abreast of the times in the meeting of unbelieving cavils, and supplying the answers of fact and faith, science and reason, as viewed from a Christian standpoint, he has put us under a great debt of obligation. The work covers a wide field, and should be of special service to those who would combat scepticism, or confirm such as are weak in the faith. While thus commending the book, we would by no means associate ourselves with every position taken up by the gifted author. Yet his work, as a whole, is beyond question as to its great helpfulness, as well as singularly able in the treatment of many sublime themes.

Messrs. Gould Bros. are constantly adding to the list of their musical publications. Among the most recent are: Daddy's Angel, a song written in three different keys (4s.); A Memory of Spain, a harmonious setting of a pretty reverie (4s.); A Guardian Rose, words by Florence Hoare, music by J. L. Roeckel (4s.). The Royal College edition of Czerny embodies twenty-four five-finger melodies which will be found useful in furnishing beginners with the first steps to a good style of playing, the production of a good tone, and the acquirement of a finished touch. (1s.) In the Sunbeam Instruction Book for pianoforte playing, one of the simplest and most interesting methods possible is adopted. The notes are twice the usual size—an arrangement sure to be appreciated by teachers and pupils alike. (1s. 6d.)

As a magazine for purposes of localization, the Free Churchman is becoming more and more appreciated by Nonconformists. Ministers who are seeking an inset for the monthly organ of their church and congregation will find this publication splendidly adapted for such a use. For 1904, readable articles are promised by such prominent Free Churchmen as Dr. Forsyth, Dr. Clifford, Dr. Alfred Rowland, and comprise a series of devotional papers, entitled "Helps Heavenward"; others deal with family life ("The Home Circle"), and under the heading "The Master's Call," helpful counsels will be given for those engaged in different spheres of Christian service. Special attention will be paid to the needs of young men and women, and Rev. Charles Brown is responsible for the "Chat with the Children" each month. (Thos. Law.)

The Roll Text Almanack (1d. J. F. Shaw & Co.) gives a short text in large type for every day of 1904. True spiritual insight has been shown in choosing the passages.

The Church of England Almanack is also a small diary. The daily lessons are given, lists of prelates and officials, and full information regarding the influences at work for the spread of Ritualism and Romanism. (1d. and 6d. Church Association.)

Newquay.—In the Homeland Handbooks series a capital guide has been issued—Newquay, the Vale of Lanherne, and Perranzabuloe. It is illustrated, and an ordnance survey map is included. (6d. net. Homeland Association, 24, Bride Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.)

Those who like plain speaking and pungent reading will find it in the "Old Paths" Series of penny pamphlets. (Parsons & Baverstock, 373, Earlsfield Road). They call men to Awake to Righteousness. They deal with "The Doubts and Delusions of Modern Thought," "The War Spirit," "The Neglected Bible," "'Its' and 'Ands,'" "The Twentieth Century New Testament: its Value and its Faults," &c. They may be obtained of the editor, 10, Foulser Road Upper Tooting, London, S.W. A dozen stamps would secure the series, and they are well worth the consideration of all who observe the drift of the times.

Personalia.

Rev. John B. Barraclough asks us to state that he has withdrawn from the presidency of the Zion Hostel for Hebrew converts, Ulrome, Hull.

We regret to learn that the condition of Mrs. Thomas Spurgeon gives cause for increasing anxiety. The latest bulletin is less favourable, and prayer is asked for the esteemed lady.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Faithfull have returned to their work in Spain, and may be addressed as before at Paseo de Areneros, 6, provl., Madrid. They are grateful for all the fellowship shown during their visit to the British Isles, and would value prayer for increased blessing on their service for Christ.

Mr. George Hatton, one of our oldest mission friends in London, is ill. His address is 20, Guildford Road, Tunbridge Wells. He would be cheered by a letter from any of his old-time comrades and supporters when he laboured with both hands earnestly in Seven Dials and St. Giles, until his health utterly broke down.

Miss McLean, whose work among Japanese sailors in Great Britain is so well known, has received a pressing invitation to revisit Japan, in all the naval stations of which she is sure to receive a very cordial welcome. We hope in an early issue to give some particulars of her plans. Meantime, friends are asked to note Miss McLean's new address, 10, Dock Street, North Woolwich.

Professor Towner, musical director of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, has received a warm welcome to this country. His message in song is proving very effective at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, where he is taking acceptable part in some of the meetings of Mr. W. R. Lane's mission. On Monday last Professor Towner sang at the Aldersgate-st. Noon meeting.

Mrs. Penn-Lewis has just added to her contributions to Christian and Biblical literature the most important of them all, The Cross of Calvary (Marshall Brothers, 2s. 6d.). It is a multum in parvo of Gospel exposition; a most timely condensation and concentration of severely Scriptural thought; a timely antidote to many erroneous tendencies; a safe directory for souls pressing on to God. Like Barnard's Progress of Doctrine (Macmillan. 6s.), and Adolph Saphir's Christ and the Scriptures (Morgan & Scott, 1s. 6d), it would be a most useful gift to evangelists, pastors and teachers. It may be obtained on special terms for free distribution from the Author, Great Glen, Leicester.

Obituary.

DR. PIERSON'S DAUGHTER.

THE following letter reaches us from Dr. Pierson. We assume that our readers will deeply sympathise with him in this hour of affliction:—

"Dear Brother,—Word reaches us by cablegram that our precious daughter, Louise Benedict Pierson "rests forever." She passed away at Calcutta, of typhoid fever, in the fortieth year of her age, the first of our dear family circle to be translated. Readers of THE CHRISTIAN may be interested to know this, but I am unequal to any more than a word now.—Affectionately, A. T. PIERSON.

November 6.

REV. A. A. ISAACS.

The death is announced of Rev. A. A. Isaacs, who passed away on November 15, after he had conducted morning service in the Consulate Chapel. His father was a convert from Judaism to the faith of the Gospel. The son, born in Jamaica, was sent to England for education, and in 1850 became a curate at Peterborough. Occupying this position for three or four years, Mr. Issacs exhibited great energy in his work, and came to be recognized as a clergyman of more than ordinary zeal and ability. He left Peterborough to become an Association Secretary of the London Jews' Society, and afterwards was appointed vicar of Christ Church, Leicester. For more than a quarter of a century he laboured assiduously amongst the working class population of his parish. He also rendered a large amount of voluntary service to the C.M.S., the London Jews' Society, the Pastoral Aid Society, and the Church Association, to say nothing of local institutions which owed much to his care and efforts in their behalf.

In 1891, Mr. Isaacs accepted the incumbency of Portland Episcopal Chapel, Bath, which had been placed at his disposal without solicitation of any kind. This is one of the few remaining chapels for which Bath was once distinguished, and it has had a long succession of decided Protestants as its ministers. In this sphere he ministered for eight years, when, having passed his seventy-second birthday, he sought relief from a fixed charge, not for the purpose of leading an idle life, but in order to render such service as might be suited to his age and strength. His services were in constant request, and with preaching and lecturing his time was fully occupied. But two years since he felt it right to take charge of a church at Düsseldorf, which had been built by the British Consul and his family, and had been vacated by the officiating chaplain. Mr. Isaacs ministered there until the day of his death. He was essentially a man of strong convictions, and the causes to which he gave his adhesion had his untiring endeavour and strenuous support.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. WILLIAM HUBBARD, formerly pastor of Tacket Street Congregational Church, Ipswich. Some ten years ago he was disabled by a paralytic stroke.—Aged eighty-two, Rev. JOHN BUCHANAN, first minister of the Free Church at Bothwell, and afterwards of South Africa and Largs.—Rev. WILLIAM NICHOLSON, superintendent of the Weston-super-Mare Wesleyan circuit.—At Jericho, Rev. J. J. KENDON, jun., eldest son of the late Rev. J. J. Kendon, of Goudhurst. He had laboured as a missionary in Jamaica for twenty-four years.—Aged seventy-three, Mr. W. R. NEAVE, J.P., a member of the Society of Friends and a prominent temperance reformer.—The Presbyterian congregation at Little Sutton has sustained a severe loss by the death of Mr. N. M. BARRON, the senior elder. Going to the district thirty years ago, he at once threw himself into religious and social work. He was founder of the local Temperance Society, and became its president. He bought an hotel, foregoing the licence, and carried on a mission in the Drill Hall, which was part of the property.

Mr. H. EADEN LILLEY, of Honiton, after many months of painful suffering. For thirty years he had been very closely identified with the Baptist Church, of which he was senior deacon and treasurer.—Aged sixty-nine, Mr. MOSES SHAW, of St. Helen's, Lancashire, an Evangelical churchman of deep spiritual convictions, and an earnest advocate of Protestant principles.

Books for Country Ministers.—Rev. G. Coates, Western House, Willington, Durham, acknowledges a parcel of tracts and books from G. G. (Harrogate); "Addie" (Norwood), £5; parcel of books from Lady Baird; parcel of "Grace and Truth" from Mrs. M. L. Thomson, Harrogate. Applications are being received by almost every post.

Church of England.

Mr. Murdoch Gillespie is conducting the services at the mission church, St. Paul's Cray. Congregations are steadily increasing.

At Christ Church, Endell Street, St. Giles, W.C., the Vicar, Rev. S. A. Griffiths, has arranged a series of sermons by laymen on Sunday evenings in Advent. The preachers are: Nov. 29. Mr. T. P. Baptie, J.P.; Dec. 6, Lt.-Col. Everitt; 13th, Mr. G. A. King, M.A.; 20th, Mr. A. Wilcox.

The Calcutta Mohammedan branch of the Church of England Zenana Mission reports progress for the year. A greater appreciation of the New Testament and desire to possess it are evident, in part the result of the distribution of the Bibles, &c., through Lord Radstock's scheme, in memory of Queen Victoria.

Rev. Frank Swainson, who was recently appointed vicar of St. Barnabas, Holloway, N., has already distinguished himself for great activity in the parish, which has resulted in a large increase in the congregation. Last Sunday Mr. Swainson preached a soul-stirring sermon from Acts xxvi. 21, "Almost Thou persuades! me to be a Christian." He is a decided evangelical, and has often appeared on Protestant platforms.

Preaching recently at All Saints' Church, Monkwearmouth, the vicar, Rev. A. A. Boddy, said: "I very gladly seize this first public opportunity of referring to the munificent gift about to made by Mr. John Priestman on behalf of himself and his sisters—I mean the offer of £6,000 towards the much-needed new church for the Roker and Fulwell portion of this large parish. We thank almighty God who has given the ability and will to those who offer so splendid a gift. We feel that such generosity has a far-reaching influence, for it stimulates others. Too often wealth is but selfishly expended or put into a bag which has holes. Such an example as that which gladdens our hearts to-day will surely stir up the wills of favoured ones in our midst to see the happiness of giving now."

Congregational.

Rev. J. G. Stevenson, of Newquay, hopes to commence work at Union Church, Brighton, with the New Year. It is expected that Rev. R. J. Campbell will continue the Wednesday evening services in Union Church for some weeks longer.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of Rev. T. C. Udall's ministry at Shrubland Road, London Fields, N.E., is fixed for November 29 and 30. Revs. Archibald Brown, J. Morgan Gibbon, T. D. Rutherford, W. Pedr Williams, Mr. George Spicer, J.P., and others are advertized to take part in the proceedings.

Rev. Albert Swift has just completed the fourth year of his pastorate of the church at Dulwich Grove, S.E. At a public meeting, Mr. C. W. Toms (ex-chairman of the London Congregational Union), presided. Mr. Lovell, one of the deacons, on behalf of the Church offered congratulations to the pastor, and Rev. John Onley (chairman of the Surrey Congregational Union), and other friends also addressed the meeting.

Hope Street Church, Hull, the oldest Congregational Church building in the town, has been closed, and the church has moved to a new temporary building erected on a site in the Newland district. Within recent years city improvements have swept away all the dwellings in the neighbourhood of the old chapel. The new site is in a populous district. The first Sunday's services in the new premises were conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. G. Patton, who preached to overflowing congregations.

Baptist.

The church in Garland Street, Bury St. Edmunds, is entering on a new and, it is believed, a prosperous phase in its history. Some years ago a serious secession of members occurred. At a meeting just held more than a hundred of these old friends returned.

A meeting held recently at the Baptist Tabernacle, Redhill, was addressed by M. Coineloup, the converted priest, who was announced to speak on his work in France. A number of Roman Catholics, headed by "Father" Smith, of Redhill, are alleged to have disturbed the meeting by disorderly conduct. Subsequently, at Reigate, "Father" Smith was fined £2 and costs for riotous behaviour. Notice of appeal was given.

It is proposed to erect in Chorlton-cum-Hardy a Baptist Church, which will be known as the McLaren Memorial Church, to commemorate the distinguished services to the Church of Christ of Dr. Alexander McLaren, who has just closed his powerful and fruitful ministry of forty-five years at Union Chapel, Manchester. The cost of the proposed church is estimated at £5,000, and building operations will not be begun until at least two-thirds of that sum is secured.

A new Baptist church has just been opened at Woodlands Road, Nelson, Lancs., by Mr. W. Hamar, moderator of the Lancashire and Cheshire Association. The new building is a commodious structure, capable of accommodating 720 persons. At a dedicatory service, conducted by the pastor, Rev. H. Nicholls, an address was given by Alderman White, M.P. Two public services followed, when the preacher was Rev. John Thomas, of Liverpool. The church at Woodlands is one of the most successful and progressive in the district. During the last two years, the membership has been doubled.

Rev. B. J. Gibbon has resigned the pastorate of Bloomsbury Chapel, W.C. At a church meeting Mr. Gibbon's resignation was sorrowfully accepted. Testimony was borne to his six years' faithful ministry, and to his sterling character, and it was agreed that not only the Baptist denomination in London, but the Free Churches generally and the Temperance cause, would lose in the removal of Mr. Gibbon a powerful advocate and a true friend. Mr. Gibbon has accepted a pressing invitation to Old King Street Church, Bristol.

Methodist.

A large mission hall is to be erected at Enfield Lock, in the Hertfordshire Mission. The hall will seat 1,200 persons, with fourteen rooms for school and other purposes. The estimated cost is £8,250.

Representatives of the following Methodist denominations—the Methodist New Connexion, the Bible Christians, the United Methodist Free Churches, the Wesleyan Reform Union, and the Independent Methodists—met a few days ago in the Memorial Hall, E.C. There was much unanimity of feeling and opinion, and the prospect of union was advanced by some important stages. An adjournment was made to an early date in December.

The Hugh Price Hughes memorial service held recently at Wesley's Chapel, City Road, N., was a remarkable tribute to the memory of the distinguished preacher and missioner. Eloquent tributes, marked by affection and sincerity, were paid by Canon Hensley Henson, Dr. R. F. Horton, Rev. C. Ensor Walters, and others of his friends and colleagues. The service was not one for mourning, but served its high purpose of inspiration and stimulus.

The Commission appointed by the last Wesleyan Conference to inquire into the attendance at places of worship in London has held its first meeting. Thirty-seven members of the Commission were present. The convener, Rev. Henry T. Meakin, had furnished each representative with a collection of statistics relating to London Methodism. For more than two hours a conversation ensued of the most frank, practical, and hopeful character. The tone of it was very spiritual. Mr. J. E. Vanner expressed the hope that whatever suggestions as to reorganization emanated from the Commission, the greatest need of all—spiritual power—would be kept in mind.

The 12th of the present month was, it has been pointed out, the anniversary of the opening of the first Methodist Chapel in England a century and a half ago. The "Old Foundry in Moorfields," as it was termed, was also the home of "the mother of the Wesleys" for a long period, and she died there. From that small beginning Wesleyan Methodism has developed into the present world wide communion, with accommodation for two and a quarter millions of worshippers; while other Methodist bodies also have 7,000 chapels with seating for one and three-quarter millions. There are now throughout the world 47,924 Wesleyan Ministers, 102,750 lay preachers, and nearly eight million members, with over 80,000 Sunday Schools.

Presbyterian.

The nomination committee has unanimously selected Rev. W. Rigby Murray, of Manchester, as moderator of Synod for 1904.

The report of the Church Aid Committee of the London Presbytery North, deals with the financial and other assistance given to East London churches. A "floating library" attached to the East India Road Church supplies sea-going vessels with boxes of books. The Ladies' Settlement in East London, which is also aided by the committee, is now full. Ladies from a distance go into residence in the Settlement and work among the women and girls in the East-End.

At a gathering in aid of an effort to clear the debt of St. Aidan's Church, Didsbury, Miss Burstall, head mistress of the Manchester High School for Girls, spoke of the importance of religious influences in the solution of present-day problems. She had felt again and again in moral training that one was baffled and helpless without a spiritual influence beneath. But if one could appeal to the spiritual influence of true religion, then the task became easy. The churches had a great work to do in the twentieth century. They, and they only, could act as bulwarks against the excess of luxury and pleasure in its bad forms, which tended to demoralize our young people.

Society of Friends.

Charles and May Replogle have conducted meetings at Hull. They gave an interesting account of their work in Alaska. Gospel meetings were also held. Owing to the annual fair, and persistent wet weather, some of the week-evening meetings were not large, but at all of them the presence of the Holy Spirit was powerfully felt, sinners were convicted, and wanderers brought back.

Friends in Birmingham and district have had the pleasure of hearing Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin, travelling secretary Friends' Foreign Missionary Association, deliver addresses, with the view of increasing the interest and knowledge of the work of Friends in the mission field.

A meeting has been held at the Friends' meeting house, Bath, to hear addresses by Maria R. Ellis (Scarborough), and Joan M. Fry (Bristol), on "The Method of Peace." W. S. Clark (Street) presided. Mrs. Ellis, in the course of a thoughtful address, urged the necessity of nations basing their actions on reason rather than on brute force. Miss Fry maintained that the absence of physical power in arbitration was a virtue, because nations had to submit to moral force. Since the year 1815 two hundred cases had been dealt with by the Courts of Arbitration, and in only one instance had the award been set aside, and that on a merely technical point.

Portsmouth Central Mission is a new undenominational undertaking which is being inaugurated with a view to attracting the unreached masses to hear the Gospel. The missioner, Mr. H. Campness, has spent some weeks lately at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, in order to become intimately acquainted with Rev. F. B. Meyer's methods in aggressive Christian work. He begins his work on December 6, when the first meeting will be held at St. James's Hall, Charlotte Street, Landport.

We have had in Abergavenny some members of that noble band of Christian workers, the Kensit Wickliffe Preachers. A more outspoken set we have never come across. We feel it a high honour and privilege to have heard them, and to have heard from the lips of Mr. Ewart the account of Mr. Kensit's life as reformer and martyr, Mr. Ewart himself having been with the late leader when the missile was thrown, and also in the hour of death and triumph. E. E. C.

At Comet Street Mission Hall (Cardiff Town Mission) encouraging anniversary services have been held. On the Sunday earnest Gospel addresses were delivered by Rev. W. Wigley Haughton and Mr. R. Cory. A correspondent writes:—"Christ and His finished work have been fully proclaimed as the sinners' only hope, and blessing has been vouchsafed to Christians and to the unsaved for which we are thankful. At the public meeting recognition was made of the good work of the missionary, Mr. Joseph Cass.

The sixteenth annual report of the North London Gospel Samaritan Mission (93, Grove Road, Upper Holloway, N.), gives a striking account of the good work carried on by Mr. Henry Bird (honorary pastor) and his band of helpers. The sick poor are relieved, and visitation is carried on by two sisters. The list of meetings is long and varied, and in all the efforts the aim is essentially evangelistic. "'The Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth,' and all the services, whether conducted by the pastor or other friends, every Sunday evening, keep this thought, this precious truth, well before them as believing it."

MOST URGENT APPEAL.

This Society, in which Queen Victoria took so warm an interest and whose Patron is now Queen Alexandra, pleads most earnestly for help towards its unique work. It has, besides its many Shore Institutes, three Hospital Steamers with four Sailing Bethel Ships, in home waters; and two Hospital Steamers and three Shore Hospitals in Labrador and Newfoundland. Without further and immediate aid it will be compelled to curtail operations, and what this would mean during Winter's storms few can adequately realise. It has no invested funds, but is absolutely dependent on the voluntary gifts of the public.

A recent important extension of Spiritual Work for Seamen in the great port of London, coupled with necessary increases of staff in ports on the Continent and on the North-West Coast of America, largely frequented by British crews, urgently call for generous gifts from all who care for Sailors. Several other large ports in British Colonies and elsewhere are earnestly asking for Sailors' Chaplains and Readers, who cannot be sent for lack of funds.

We owe much to our Seamen; this is an opportunity to pay some part of the debt.

The Society maintains 198 Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in 150 seaports in every part of the world.

Sixty-eight Mission Steamers, Sailing Vessels, and Boats, and 106 Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in daily use, winter and summer.

Blindness and Acute Suffering.

An Old Man, 74 years of age, blind through cancer in the eyes, which is now spreading all over the face. In addition to this sad affliction he is also suffering from an internal disease. He and his aged wife are greatly in need of assistance, as apart from the little their married children are able to give them they have nothing at all to depend on except charity. Who will help to make their old age free from anxiety? Surely pain and blindness are terrible enough without poverty.

The National Blind Relief Society.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, The Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE RAILWAY MISSION

urgently needs Funds to prevent the withdrawal of Workers from large Railway centres where work is greatly needed among the men.

400,000 Railway Men are employed every Sunday in the British Isles in running trains.

About 500 Railway Men are killed and 15,000 injured every year through accidents.

Who will help to send the Gospel to these men who are hindered from attending places of worship by Sunday duty, and to whom the public owe a debt of gratitude for the faithful way in which they perform their dangerous duties?

Contributions will be gratefully received by SAMUEL G. SHEPPARD, Esq., Treasurer, 57, Old Broad Street, E.C.; or RICHARD NIXON, Secretary, 1, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Ministering to the Blind Poor.

The Indigent Blind Visiting Society.

The object of this Society is to improve the condition of the blind resident in and near London, by providing them with (1) Readers of the Scriptures at their own homes; (2) Instruction in Reading, Writing, Knitting, and other branches of education; (3) Temporal Relief where needed.

By a recent Evangelistic Mission the Society reached nearly two thousand blind persons of both sexes. The Samaritan Fund has come to the help of many who would otherwise have been thrown upon the streets. Funds are urgently needed.

Full particulars from Annual Report, to be had from the Secretary, I.B.V.S., 8, Red Lion Square, W.C.; or the Superintendent (Mr. W. Mead), 95, Gurney Road, Stratford, E.

South American Missions. Many are looking forward with keen interest to the Convention on Missionary Work in South America, to be held in Exeter Lower Hall, December 9-11. The cry of "The Neglected Continent" is a loud one, and it is time that the Church of Christ heard it. Full particulars regarding the Convention arrangements may be had from Mr. R. Caldwell, hon. sec., The Missionary Association, 6, Colonial Avenue, Minories, London, E.

Special Home Mission Issue. Next week we hope to devote special attention to aggressive effort in London, giving a survey of what is being done, not only in preaching the Gospel, but in brightening the lives and feeding the bodies of the poor and helpless. At the same time, the provinces and other lands will not be forgotten, and instructive articles will have their usual place, making the issue one specially interesting to the Lord's people.

"The Outpoured Spirit and Pentecost." Readers who profited by the recent series of articles on "The Outpoured Spirit" will be glad to learn that they have now been published in more permanent form. Along with them will be found a shorter series on "Pentecost," which appeared forty-two years ago, when the title of our paper was The Revival:—The Outpoured Spirit and Pentecost. By R. C. Morgan. (1s. Morgan & Scott.) The teaching of Scripture is carefully elucidated in the light of the fact that this is at once the dispensation of the Spirit and that of our Great High Priest, Jesus the Son of God. The aim kept in view is that the perusal may lead to a proper and proportionate perception of the present work of the Lord Jesus for, and of the Spirit in, the believer. Those who long for deeper experience will find guidance in the understanding of the difference between having "received," as all have done who are born again, and being "filled" and "kept filled" with the Spirit.

Conscience and Giving. We are pleased to note the brave and sensible words spoken by Dr. Horton at Manchester on Church methods of raising money. To attack the bazaar as a method of replenishing an exhausted church exchequer, is certainly not a popular thing to do, but the sound reason given for this is worthy of consideration. The bazaar, said Dr. Horton, assumes that money is not obtainable by touching the consciences and convictions of men, but only by appealing on the lines of their amusements and interests. Money gained thus is not, he contended, of equal value with that gained on right lines. This is a lofty view to take, and we hope it will have its due effect. The whole question of giving needs elevating to its true rank. There would be no necessity to make frantic appeals for help, or to adopt worldly schemes for obtaining money, if the conscience were touched, and Christians gave proportionately, systematically, and gladly, as workers together with God.

Real Love of our Neighbour. There are several things in a little book, "The Church's Failure," just issued by the Bishop of Rochester, which need careful thought and contemplation by the whole Church of Christ. It is surely a work of the Spirit of God that our leading Christian teachers are increasingly uneasy in the presence of the problem offered by the unevangelized and unelevated masses in great cities. Through this holy uneasiness in the hearts of the leaders, God is speaking to the rank and file. The Bishop finds his greatest difficulty, not so much in the sin and darkness which abound, as in "the attitude towards it of so many who enjoy to the full England's luxury and wealth and the profits of her gigantic commerce." Too often, gifts of money in charity are considered a sufficient discharge of Christian obligation towards the outsiders. Duty may impel a man to offer his possessions, but to offer one's self to men there must be love. And a revival of deep love to God and to men would solve all these social problems which oppress us.

Reaching the Drunkards. We would like to commend to all who are really earnest in seeking to save the drunkard, the scheme that has been adopted in the missions of Mr. Gipsy Smith, Mr. Nix, and others, for some time past. Open-air marches, with lamps and bands, at a late hour, have resulted in attracting several thousands of public-house frequenters to a special Gospel service held for them alone. Recently at Northampton, at Hull, and in London, some remarkable results have been achieved, not only in the way of securing great congregations of these unhappy people, but, so far as could be judged, in definite conversions. Why should not the ministers and workers of any town adopt a similar method? If we mean to reach these wanderers, we must go after them. But, beyond this, if they are to be retained subsequently, the ordinary services must be adapted to their needs.

The Influence of the Press. One of the greatest responsibilities that a man can have is that of being able to influence public opinion through the medium of the newspaper. Yet there are few responsibilities that are generally taken so lightly. A converted Press in this country would work a moral revolution. We thank God for those journalists who accept their task as a Divine vocation, but their number is all too small. There is crying need for a daily Press enlisted on the side of righteousness. If an editor have the welfare of the people at heart, surely he ought to employ such a mighty agent as the newspaper for the accomplishment of his desire. A weekly page, for example, dealing with the drink trade, such as that which the Daily News gave in a recent issue, should work wonders. The public need to know the facts; and if they once gained an insight into the real menace of "the Trade," the people themselves would be aroused to desire reform. We sadly need a courageous use of the daily Press in the interests of temperance and holy living.

The Use of the Platform. What is true of the Press, is also true of the Platform. At many public meetings on moral or social subjects golden opportunities are missed by speakers who skirt round the fringe of what is really needed, because, as they apologetically say, they "do not wish to preach." At the annual meeting of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, held last week, we were glad to hear a young barrister, the son of an eminent judge, plunge boldly into the heart of the matter, by emphasizing the word "Christian" in the title of the Mission. Speaking to the young men and women who, after falling into dishonest practices, had been given a "second chance," he urged them not to shrink from rebutting the sneers of the ungodly against Christianity, by testifying to the benefits they had themselves received at the hands of the godly helpers of that noble work. This goes to the roots of things, and the year's record of that and other Missions is worth more than the vapourings of fifty "Clarions."

The British Workman. No one understands the working-man so well as does the working-man himself. Hence the utterances of Mr. John Burns on British trade come with authority. In the World's Work for December he has some strong things to say as to > the growth of snobbery among the sons of men who were proud to be workers of something, however humble that something was . . . [and the] false and vainglorious distinctions between living out of land or upon interest from bonds, as compared with living out of honest commerce and clean industry.

Sport and Drink. Equally forcible is Mr. Burns in regard to the hold of athletics and amusement upon the working community alike in our Colonies and at home:—

> To golf, horse-racing, gambling, and betting, both masters and workmen have given time, money, and thought that might be given to worthier and better things . . . and they [the Colonies] have suffered from a lick of the dog that has been biting the old country too long—intemperance, sport, and extravagance.

These are the matters in which reform would be of far more reaching importance than any of the questions now agitating the nation.

Public Prayer. Ever and anon we hear of suggested changes in public worship, particularly in the matter of public prayer. It is quite true that pulpit prayers are too often "wearisome" to the congregation, and "a heavy burden" upon the mind and conscience of the minister. It is also true that much "free prayer" tends to become liturgical on account of the repetition of practically similar sentences time after time. But we very much doubt whether the suggestion of a Presbyterian Prayer-book would mend matters. It has been adopted in some places, with the result that the remedy has been worse than the disease. What is really wanted is the revitalization of prayer. No prayer is "wearisome" to a true worshipper, nor a "heavy burden" upon the mind of a minister where the Spirit of God is allowed free action. All depends upon the spirit of the man who prays.

Graven Images. The erection adjoining a church at St. Leonard's, of "a Calvary," a sculptured cross with a figure of the crucified Saviour, and with other figures at the foot, would have marked another step Romeward on the part of the extreme Ritualists, even if there had not been the adjuncts of incense and holy water at its public consecration. We might well have looked for some episcopal condemnation of the ceremony, or statement in regard to the prayer for the repose of the soul of Rev. W. Vaughan, inscribed on the base of the crucifix, seeing that the evening communion at a neighbouring church has been made the object of the Bishop's disapproval.

Purgatory. Mr. Lister Drummond, K.S.G., in a recent lecture on "Indulgences," to which the Roman Catholic Press has given prominence, took occasion to criticise severely "the nonsense" which many Protestants believed as to the Roman doctrine, and the "hazy notions" of many of his co-religionists. In explaining and defending that doctrine, Mr. Drummond is reported to have asserted that there could not be any sale of Indulgences, a statement strangely at variance with the daily traffic in them in Spain, where they form an important item of the priests' income! For the instruction of the Protestants, however, the lecturer added:—

> One great advantage of Indulgences was that they could be applied to souls in purgatory. How often it was when friends or relatives died we wished we could do something . . . Well, here was the means of doing this. We could do it, and do it better than in any other way, by gaining Indulgences for the departed souls, and asking God to apply the merits of these to the sufferer.

This is a sufficiently clear definition, but is very much at variance with the imspired statement in Heb. x. 12, as to the "one sacrifice for sins for ever."

False Toleration. In face of the widespread apathy in regard to the pretensions and assumptions of Rome, there is a strong temptation to accept the famous dictum of Buckle that—

> It is necessary men should begin to doubt before they begin to tolerate, and that they should recognise the fallibility of their own opinions before they respect the opinions of their opponents.

The stream of Protestant laudation of the late and the present head of that communion which has ever been the embodiment of opposition to the essential principles of Evangelical Christianity, is far from being a healthy sign. The "live and let live" principle is quite out of place in respect of the teachers of soul-destroying error. It is true that there may not be actual acknowledgment of, or acceptance of, Romanist doctrines; but there undoubtedly is growing indifference to Protestant principles on the part of Protestants themselves, and notably of the two vital beliefs of Evangelical truth, that the Word of God in the Scriptures is the last court of appeal, and the doctrine of justification by faith. There can be no true toleration of a system which puts forward an Atoner who can only be approached through a fellow-creature, for such toleration is equivalent to complicity in a denial of the efficacy of the one great, sole, and sufficient Atonement, and the character of Him who gave Himself for us.

Possessing and Possessed. We note a trenchant review of a clever volume of sermons that has just appeared, in which the reviewer says:—

> The preacher, we have no doubt, accepts all the truths that centre in the Atonement, in the Resurrection, in the Ascension, and in the Second Advent. But they have not yet taken possession of him. When they do his preaching will be transfigured with a new radiance.

An important question is opened up in that one sentence we have italicised. No man is exempt from the danger of holding truth which does not fully hold him. It is an excellent thing for us all to inquire to what extent the truth of God holds us; how far it masters us; to what degree it is a passion with us, and how much of it is really assimilated with our own being. So long as Divine truth is external to ourselves, or touches us but lightly, however much we may speak of it to others, there can be no kindling of other souls through us. When, like Ezekiel, we "eat" the Divine roll, we can go out and "speak" the truth of God with marvellous effect, and not until then.

The Note of Certainty. The review to which we have alluded—written by one of our ablest critics—goes on to say:—

> We do not forget that in these days many, worn out and puzzled by theological disputes, rest themselves on what is simplest and easiest in the Christian creed. But the living heart-beat of Christianity is, and always must be, in the atoning passion of our Lord.

Undoubtedly this explains much of the shiftiness and uncertainty which prevail to-day. But, if we may use the expression, it is a hermit-crab policy. That mollusc, tired out with strife, betakes itself to what is simplest and easiest, and in so doing sacrifices its true power. There is no truer word in the New Testament than the word "warfare" to describe the life which the true apostle of Christ is called upon to live. From the beginning it has been warfare, and it will remain so to the end. The character of the fighting changes, but the warfare itself always goes on. To-day the enemy is desperately attacking the citadel itself—the Person of our Blessed Lord. So far, however, from this causing Christians to retreat and "to rest in what is simplest and easiest," it is the call of God Himself to come out to the fray. It is the enemy that must be defeated. But only certainty can give victory, and we must get back to the absolute note of certainty. Everything is at hand to help us, history, archæology, and, chiefest of all, experience. And, when truth possesses us, we shall be invincible.

Giving the Sense. A little book recently published upon the art of effectively reading the Holy Scriptures in public, very properly insists upon the supreme importance of "giving the sense." It ought not to be necessary to urge so obvious a plea, yet it is most needful. It is altogether wrong to describe the devotional part of the service—including the reading of the Scriptures—as "the preliminaries." Preliminary to what? One reason why the Bible is a sealed book to so many people may be that the public reading of it is frequently made so uninteresting. If any part of the service should be especially intelligible, surely it is the reading of the Word of God. When Ezra the Scribe mounted the pulpit to read the law, "he read distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading" (Nehemiah viii. 4-8). It is not surprising that the people were deeply moved. There is nothing more interesting and alike more moving than the Word of God. But to be read properly it must first be felt. An artificial elocution is repellent. If a man feels the truth and it has mastered him, he may be trusted to read it effectively.

Old and New. There is at present a noteworthy demonstration of that intellectual pride, which even in the days of Job had its exponents, and led to the patriarch's caustic question: "Canst thou by searching find out God?" (Job xi. 7.) It has become the fashion to denounce theology and dogma as disintegrating forces, or as agents raising insurmountable barriers between the soul and God. In a recently-published volume, professing to deal with "The Secret of the Universe," it is insisted upon that what is now needed is a development in each person of the faculty of directly perceiving spiritual realities, the "cosmic consciousness," in fact, whatever that may be. By this means the Kingdom of Heaven is to be entered. The consciousness of Job revealed to him the secret of wisdom that "God exacteth of thee less than thine iniquity deserveth" (Job xi. 6), and no modern development can bring man lower than that, or lift him higher than the Divine ideal of a "new creature in Christ Jesus."

THE UNVEILING.

(The articles on this subject will be resumed, if the Lord permit, early in the New Year).

WE have before us an "Exposition of the Revelation, and Prophetic Outlines, by Walter Scott." (Holness. 7s. 6d.) Its view is distinctly Futurist, and differs from that presented in our papers on "The Unveiling," in that it regards the whole book as fulfilled exclusively in the crisis at the close; while our view is that the principles and forces which will be headed up in the delirium tremens of the world, are working through the ages, as drunkenness works through the daily life of a man, until the terrible consummation of disease and madness and death.

But there is no necessary antagonism between these views: the one is essential to the other; every course of conduct leads to a definite conclusion or crisis; and every crisis is the result of a previous course of which it is the consummation.

We therefore seriously differ from the writer in what he assumes to be the "incontrovertible statement, that the translation of the saints to their heavenly home must be sought for between chapters iii. and iv.," and that "unless this is admitted an intelligent understanding of the Apocalypse is impossible." This is a large statement to make, in view of the saintly and not unintelligent men of God who through the Christian ages have gained understanding of the times from regarding the whole book as one vitally concerning the Church of God of this Age, while looking back upon the past and onward to the future.

Having said this, we gladly assert the value of very much that is written in this book. We are thankful to see that the author understands the Man Child to be the personal Lord Jesus.

There is a large fund of information, original and gleaned from other sources, which is valuable to the student of the Apocalypse, whatever view he may take of its fulfilment.

The Gospel of the Grace of God.—II.

By Principal A. McCaig, LL.D.

WHILE noting the contrast between the Gospel of Grace and the Law of Moses, we must at the same time remember that, even under the dispensation of law, souls were saved by grace, as Paul clearly shows in the case of Abraham, David, &c. Side by side with the law of righteousness represented in the Decalogue, there were the typical provisions of grace in the sacrificial system, showing sinful Israel that remission of sins could only come through the blood of atonement.

So, while in one sense the new dispensation is a contrast to the old, in another it is the complement of it. For in grace Christ fulfils the requirements of the law, that righteousness may be freely offered to the believer; and through that same atoning work He fills up the shadowy outline of the types, giving them substance and value, and furnishing the key to their complete understanding.

But even then, while fully recognising the grace that is set forth in the sacrifices and types, we can see how the ceremonial law as a whole was a system of bondage in comparison to the grace of the Gospel. The great typical observances, while claiming significance from the coming Saviour, and clearly foreshadowing His great salvation, were yet in their details irksome and burdensome. The Gospel shows its gracious character, in that it answers the requirements of the moral law, and removes its condemnation; it fulfils, and by fulfilling abrogates, the typical observances of the ceremonial law, but also abolishes all the directions and restrictions given to the Jews as a separate people, and brings its subjects into a condition of liberty. There the renewed spirit, under the influence of the mighty love of Christ, can act spontaneously—the great principles of the moral law remaining as its guide, as they must ever be the rule of life to all moral beings, while the minute rules needed for the infancy of the race are set aside as for those who are "sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus."

All this is beautifully set forth by Paul in Galatians iii. 24-26. The Jews generally clung to their system as if the shadowy were the real, and the temporary the eternal; and so prevalent was the legal spirit, so entirely had they subordinated the gracious elements of the old economy to the legal, so complacently were they resting in the law and making their boast of circumcision, that the contrast introduced by the Gospel became the most prominent part of it, and that contrast was sharply defined by this beautiful description of the new message as "the Gospel of the Grace of God."

Passing by other interesting points suggested in this title, we note that (III.) it meets all objections drawn from human sin. Men of the worst character have found the grace of the Gospel sufficient to meet their case. The trophies of great sinners saved, line the victorious march of the Gospel of the grace of God. It is the glory of that Gospel that, however great a sinner a man may feel himself to be, it can give him assurance of pardon and salvation. The grace which saved the sinners of Jerusalem and Samaria, of Ephesus and Corinth, of Antioch and Rome, has in our own age proved able to save idolatrous Hindus, bigoted Chinese, cannibal Fijians, brutalized Patagonians, and degraded Congoese; while in civilized countries like our own, it has proved efficacious among all sorts and conditions of men, being as able to save the cultured sinners of the West-end as the outcast denizens of the East-end, and equally needed by all.

The constantly accumulating evidence of its saving power ought to prove an irresistible argument in every individual case. To every one who argues against himself on the ground of his sins, we can say, Yes, you are a great sinner, but Christ is a great Saviour. Sin in your heart and life abounds, but the grace of God superabounds. It would be strange reasoning for a hungry man, when food is set before him, to say he is too hungry to eat, for a thirsty man to say he is too thirsty to drink; but more unreasonable is it for a sinner to hold back from Christ on the plea that his sins are too great. In each case, the need is the fitness. Prove yourself the chief of sinners, and you prove your need of the grace of God.

IV. It overthrows all pleas founded upon human merit. The idea, so prevalent, that the sinner can do something to merit salvation, cannot live in the atmosphere of Divine grace. The view of God's grace given by the Gospel, while giving hope to the vilest, slays all hopes founded upon human righteousness.

Paul uses all his powers of sanctified reasoning to show the utter impossibility of justification by the works of the law, and the perfect reasonableness of salvation by faith. Faith gives all the glory of salvation to the grace of God. Works, merit on the part of man, would put the crown on the sinner's head, and leave room for boasting. "If Abraham our father was justified by works, he hath whereof to glory." But concerning the salvation of Abraham and of all the faithful, the Apostle most positively declares it is "not of works, lest any man should boast."

Thus the boasting for which works would leave place is for ever excluded by the law of faith, which is also the method of grace. Nor can there be any commingling between works and grace in the obtaining of salvation, as some seem to suppose; as if they could be saved partly by the grace of God and partly by their own works; that what they lack in merit will be supplied by the merits of Christ; for in another passage the two ideas are brought into the sharpest possible contrast, and the utter want of harmony between them unmistakably shown:—"And if by grace, then is it no more of works, otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then it is no more grace, otherwise work is no more work." Our only hope is in the Grace of God.

The Cross of Jesus.

"Christ's Cross is the sweetest burden that ever I bear; it is such a burden as wings are to a bird, or sails to a ship, to carry me forward to my harbour."—Rutherford

Is it a burden for birds to bear
Their wings expanding free,
Which bear them on in happy flight
O'er mossy dell and lea—
Those downy wings by which they soar
Far as the eye can see?

Is it a burden for ships to bear
Their wide expanding sail,
Outspread to catch the rising breeze
Or gently wafting gale,
When waves and billows all are spent
And storms no more prevail?

Is it a burden for ewels rare
To glint and burn with light?
Or glittering glow-worm in the glen
To gild the hours of night?
Or lilies fair, their robes to wear
Of pure and spotless white?

If so, the Cross, then, I might say,
A burden is to me,
Where Jesus died to save my soul,
To bless, and set me free;
Ah, no! 'till life's last hour the Cross
My boast and joy shall be!

The Unrest of the Age.—I.

By Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, D.D.

THERE are not a few points of resemblance—albeit there are others of dissimilarity, quite as marked—between the work of the Apostles in the great cities of the East, and that which the ministers of the same Gospel have to do in our own land to-day. The difference, of course, must be great between a people who profess to accept Christianity and to whom, at all events, it speaks with the authority of a venerable national tradition, and those to whom it was nothing more than the strange, unwelcome talk of aliens belonging to a race which they hated and despised. But it is possible that there may be as little disposition to accept the message of the teachers on the part of the one as the other.

It can hardly be doubted that there has grown up among us a large class who would be as indisposed to have themselves regarded as Christians, or to allow it to be supposed that they accept the Gospel as a Divine message, as were the Stoics or Epicureans of Athens. Both these schools have their representatives to-day, and not a few are to be found even in our congregations. They may come with more or less regularity to church, but they do not profess to worship. They listen if they are interested by the preacher's individuality, but they listen with the ear of the critic, not even with the professed desire to hear what God is saying to their souls; probably if they have been interested, they go away to discuss, as they might criticize a scientific lecture or a political oration. Outside our congregations there is a mixed multitude. Some are agnostics; some are avowed and very aggressive unbelievers; some are simply materialists, whose one thought is how they are to secure a good time in life, and who are content to leave the hereafter to care for itself.

THE CRAVING FOR NOVELTY.

So, in a word, the preacher has to deal to-day with numbers who are just as indisposed to accept his message, and as little prejudiced in its favour, as were the men of Corinth or Ephesus, Athens or Rome. One class, which the writer of the Acts has described in well-known words, is as numerous and as active among us as in the old Athenian multitude. "Now all the Athenians and the strangers sojourning there spent their time in nothing else but either to tell or to hear some new thing." A spirit of this kind has from time to time developed itself, but it may be doubted whether it was ever more rife, more active, or more self-confident than it is to-day.

We have passed into a new century, and there are not a few who talk as if the past were to be forgotten. "Let the dead past bury its dead." Signs of this are to be found on every side. Sneers at the "early Victorian" are as common as they are unworthy, seeing how much the present owes to the thought and energy, the courage and resolution of that early Victorian period. The political world bears traces of the activity of the same spirit. Without breathing a word as to the merits of a controversy which lies outside my present subject, it must surely be admitted to be a strange and significant phenomenon that it should be thought possible to persuade a people so rich and increased in goods as this nation undoubtedly is, that it is on the eve of ruin unless it can strike out some new path to prosperity. But so it is. The Twentieth Century must be true to itself. The glow of young life is in it, the energy of youth is bounding in its veins. It must have a new faith and religion for the time.

This new-century sentiment is perhaps not surprising; indeed, it is only the new year feeling intensified. But it has been developed in so extreme a form that it needs to be strongly dealt with. The Nineteenth Century, especially in its closing decades, was sufficiently vain of its own achievements and confident of its powers to accomplish even greater things. But it is hard to resist the impression that there has been a perceptible increase of these qualities since the Twentieth Century dawned. It is as yet only in its babyhood, but in its impatience of the teaching of the past, in its determination to intermeddle with all kinds of knowledge, in its revolt against all that is established, in its assertion of an independence which forgets how much it must owe to the past, it shows a temper which could only be appropriate in a manhood that could point to years of diligent toil and approved success.

OUR DEBT TO THE PAST.

But while the self-complacency, with which we are sometimes told that this wonderful century is not to be satisfied with teachings which sufficed for the less enlightened ages which preceded it, can only provoke a smile, it would be worse than folly to forget the wealth of that inheritance to which the younger generation has succeeded. It may be often supercilious as well as superficial, ignorant as well as dogmatic, but we may find some excuse for its faults when we sit down, and, in some quiet hour, contrast the world as it is to-day with that of seventy years ago. I was reading lately the references to Mr. Huskisson in "The Life of Mr. Gladstone." They called up before me a scene which impressed me then, but which is far more suggestive now. It will be remembered that he was killed on the day of the opening of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway. I saw the train which bore him to his sad end. It was a marvel to my boyish eye and imagination; it is a still greater wonder to-day, as I remember all of which it has been the forerunner. Steam and electricity have changed the aspect of the world—the railway was in its infancy, and the telegraph was unknown at that time. The changes which they have wrought are only part of the revolution which has transformed the entire world of knowledge.

It is hardly wonderful that those who have felt the quickening touch of a period like this should come to believe that there is no secret which can be hidden from their ken. The type of character formed under these conditions may be neither admirable nor amiable, but it is really a very natural product of the extraordinary advance of the age.

There is, at all events, nothing surprising in the fact that an age which has passed through such experiences should

NOT BE AN AGE OF FAITH.

A student of to-day has only to take up a textbook, in almost any department of knowledge, in order to perceive an unhealthy, because an exaggerated, sense of the supremacy of the human intellect. So wide has been the range of discovery, so many mysteries once supposed to be insoluble have been unveiled, so many boundaries that appeared insuperable, have been passed, that it is hardly matter for surprise if there has grown up, not only an eager craving for new discoveries, but a refusal—perhaps hardly expressed or acknowledged, but not the less real—to admit that there is any truth beyond man's power to discover for himself. In other words, the very idea of a world known to us by faith alone, is treated as a superstition which all intelligent men will scorn.

The position is surely very near that of the people of Athens and the strangers there, with this difference (and it is a vital one), that in the case of our generation it means a revolt against a faith which has justified itself by the works of centuries, in which it has ennobled multitudes of human lives, and inspired deeds of heroism, self-devotion, and chivalrous service in the cause both of God and man.

THE NEED OF THE AGE.

One remarkable feature of this spirit is the utter failure to recognise the limitations of the sphere to which these intellectual achievements are confined. The world of knowledge has been almost indefinitely enlarged, but the spiritual region, where faith reigns alone, remains as vast and as impenetrable to mere reason as ever. Science has altered many of the conditions of our physical life, but it has done nothing towards solving the primary questions which meet every man. It has multiplied man's power for subduing the earth, but it has given him no help in conquering himself. Temptations assail him, cares and anxieties disturb him, at times the sense of mystery as to his future overwhelms him, a sense of failure or of sin disturbs him even to the extent of agony, but science gives him no help.

The spirit-world is left precisely as it was before. Science cannot, amid all its achievements, point to a single burdened head to which, in the hour of darkness and despair, it has been able to minister relief. On every side we may hear the cries, "What must I do to be saved?" or, to put it in Milton's words, "Which way shall I fly infinite wrath and infinite despair?" But to them science has no reply. It is surely a very unwarranted conclusion from its victories in the realm of physics to infer that it will achieve similar success in the spiritual realm.

The Smithy.

A MINISTER'S sanctum is not always a study. Sometimes it is a battlefield where a fight that tests the manhood has to be fought. So Rev. John Mackenzie found it to be one morning when he had been in M—— for about a year. He was a popular preacher with the high-strung temperament that so often characterizes the class, and when we add the element of "Mondayishness" to other unfavourable influences, it is easy to understand that the spectacles through which he was looking at many of his ministerial and pastoral discomforts that morning were not couleur de rose.

His daily contact with human nature proved, alas! that it had swerved very considerably from the original type, and he was honest enough to admit that his own modes of dealing with it were by no means faultless. And so a host of worries and penitent regrets stood that morning like a blank wall between him and a calm marshalling of his thoughts for study.

And behind all these more superficial troubles there lay the chronic heartache of an empty little chair in his nursery, and a wee grave greening in the neighbouring cemetery; for only three months before, little three-year-old "Roy," one of those winsome, other-world children whom we are heathenishly told that "the gods love," had laid down his playthings, and, hand-in-hand with the Saviour, whom he had learned to love dearly, had gone away into the Heavenly Garden. What gave special keenness to the blow was the fact that, humanly speaking, it was avoidable. The gross carelessness of a nurse had been mainly to blame for it, and John Mackenzie had some bitter moments when he lost view of the Divine oversight of earthly affairs. It was one of those moments with him just then.

Church difficulties, an impoverished nursery! Did God know? Did He care? It was well for him that just then a well-known tap at the door, which was always musical in his ears, was followed by the entrance of his sweet-faced wife.

"Sorry to disturb you, darling, but I have brought the letters." A glance at his troubled face brought her at once to his side. "Dearie, you don't look like work this morning; don't do it; just go out, and get those poor nerves braced up a little. Take Mab with you; she looks rather pale this morning."

Mr. Mackenzie rose to the clever bait, and, in a few minutes, study and home cares were left behind, and he was breathing the fresh, pure air, with his little daughter prancing and chattering by his side. The outskirts of the town were soon reached, and they came to a smithy by the roadside, belonging to a parishioner. Here Mab's eager appeal, "Oh, dad, do stop. I like to see the sparks!" made the father pause and stand watching the busy, noisy workmen.

John Rutherford, the master, was too much engrossed to welcome his visitors otherwise than by a genial smile, but went on giving the iron that lay on the anvil a series of light, careful taps, each of which was immediately followed by a heavy blow from the assistant's sledge-hammer. Under these moulding strokes, the metal gradually took the desired shape, and presently Rutherford laid aside his tiny hammer, and came up to his pastor's side.

"That seems a bit of skilful work, John," the minister said; "but you will excuse me," he added, with a laugh, "if I confess that your share of the work does not seem to me to count for much. Why, my little girl here could give those taps!"

"Could she, sir?" said John, good-humouredly. You're a fine hand at preaching, sir; but maybe you understand sermons better than you do smith-work. You see it's this way. I study the thing out, and know what's to be done, and then my little hammer makes a dent where Tom's blows are to fall, and he would never venture to bring one down without my giving him the signal."

A PARABLE, AND ITS MEANING.

Then the talk turned to other subjects for a few minutes, and the minister went on his way; but he carried with him one of those earthly parables which, to the open mind, bring such heavenly meaning. Impracticable deacons, a fatally-careless nursemaid, they only dealt sledge-hammer blows under the direct guidance and control of the Master-Workman. And when, in the out-spokenness on spiritual truth which is such a crowning blessing in married life, he shared with his wife the experience of the morning, they both agreed that it had been more fruitful in teaching than hours of study.

Do we not need the same lesson? We may be devout and orthodox enough in theory; we join heartily and enjoyably in the hymns that speak of the moulding hand of God through the discipline of trial; but when the unexpected blow falls, and "the dearest idol we have known" has been "torn from its throne," we look only at second causes; forgetting the purpose and the work of the Divine Designer, we think we do well to be angry. Thank God, He is very pitiful! He remembers that we are not callous metal, but quivering, sensitive humanity, and very patiently and tenderly he draws us near to Him, and reveals Himself, not only as the Artificer but the Consoler. Then, with a purged vision and under the gracious influence of the Holy Spirit, we recognise our Father's wise control of the human and apparently malign agency, and as docile scholars we learn the true spelling of the word disappointment—His appointment.

"Phœbe."

(Rom. xvi. 1, 2.)

NOTICE a few characteristics of this good lady, of whom the Apostle writes with evident admiration and regard.

(1) Kindness of heart. She was noted for her kindness and sympathy; she had evidently won the affection and regard of her poorer brethren and sisters at Corinth.

Some of the new converts were probably very poor indeed. Some of them were probably slaves, and had to bear trial, persecution, and unkindness, because of their new faith in Christ Jesus.

In Phœbe they found a friend ever ready to sympathize with them, ever ready to comfort and help and cheer them in the midst of their trials and sorrows. Paul could indeed say of her, "She hath been a succourer of many."

(2) Generosity of disposition. She was always ready to show hospitality to her poorer brethren and sisters in Christ, fellow-believers, fellow-converts in the Christian faith; willing always to help them, and to be of any service to them, so that they might "grow in grace" and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Paul well knew and admired her generous disposition, for he says: "She hath been a succourer of many and of myself also."

(3) Joy in having this valuable and precious Epistle committed to her care by the Apostle, and of having the honour of taking it with her from Corinth to Rome. The Apostle also writes words of commendation, requesting the Christian converts at Rome to receive her, and to do whatever they can to assist her. How gladly they would do this when they knew that Phœbe was a sincere and true friend of the Apostle; and what joy Phœbe would have in delivering the messages sent by the Apostle to them, and in helping and encouraging these new converts in the Christian faith! Studies in the Psalms.—IV.

The Great Turning Point.

By Rev. J. STORJOHANN.

IN Psalm lxx. the last part of Psalm xl. is repeated. Then follows Psalm lxxi., with no superscription. It has been the occasion of much controversy as not being one of David's, and has generally been ascribed to Jeremiah. But it appears that it is placed with the previous one in order to give an indication of its origin; and it splendidly vindicates its claim to be classed as Davidic when it becomes evident that it was written soon after Psalm xl. (10). If, in the latter, David reached the profoundest depths of his suffering in receiving the overwhelming tidings of Absalom's infamous act (xl. 40), in Psalm lxxi. there is the first glimpse of a turn in the tide of misfortune. David has heard of the public deliberations in Jerusalem about his life (lxxi. 10, &c.), which by Hushai's help were turned against Ahithophel, thus giving David time to gather together the men that were faithful to him, and saving him from the hurried attack that Ahithophel had planned.

PSALM LXXI.

PART I.

1. In Thee, Jehovah, do I put my trust, let me never be ashamed.
2. Deliver me in Thy righteousness, and rescue me; bow down Thine ear unto me and save me.
3. Be Thou to me a rock of habitation, whereunto I may continually resort.

Thou hast given commandment to save me; for Thou art my rock and my fortress.

4. Rescue me, O my God, out of the hand of the wicked, out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man.

5. For Thou art my hope, Adonai Jehovah; Thou art my trust from my youth.
6. By Thee have I been holden up from the womb; Thou art He that took me out of my mother's bowels

My praise shall be continually of Thee.

7. I am as a wonder unto many; but Thou art my strong refuge.
8. My mouth shall be filled with Thy praise and with Thine honour all the day.

PART II.

9. Cast me not off in the time of old age, forsake me not when my strength faileth.
10. For mine enemies speak concerning me; and they that watch for my soul—they take counsel together—

11. Saying, God hath forsaken him; pursue and take him; for there is none to deliver.
12. O God, be not far from me; O my God, make haste to help me.

13. Let the adversaries to my soul be ashamed and consumed; let them be covered with reproach and dishonour, they that seek my hurt.
14. But I will hope continually, and will praise Thee yet more and more.

15. My mouth shall tell of Thy righteousness, and all the day of Thy salvation; for I know not the numbers thereof.
16. I will come with the mighty acts of Adonai Jehovah; I will praise Thy righteousness, Thine only.

PART III.

17. O God, Thou hast taught me from my youth; and hitherto have I declared Thy wondrous works.
18. Yea, even unto old age and grey hairs, O God, forsake me not; until I have declared Thine arm unto the next generation, Thy might to everyone that is to come.

19. Thy righteousness also, O God, is very high; Thou Who hast done great things, O God, who is like Thee?
20. Thou, which hast showed us many and sore troubles, Thou shalt quicken us again. And shalt bring us up again from the depths of the earth.

21. Thou shalt increase my greatness, and turn again and comfort me.
22. I will also praise Thee with the psaltery, even Thy truth, O my God. Unto Thee will I sing praises with the harp, Thou holy One of Israel.

23. My lips will greatly rejoice when I sing praises unto Thee; and my soul, which Thou hast redeemed.
24. My tongue also will talk of Thy righteousness all the day long; for they are ashamed, for they are confounded, that seek my hurt.

Whereas previously his enemies in Jerusalem had only whispered together against David: "He shall rise up no more" (Ps. xli. 8), those that lay in wait for his life have now openly taken counsel together to persecute and take him for whom there is no deliverance, who is forsaken by God (Ps. lxxi. 10, etc.). Yet David can greet these terrible tidings with the words: "Thou shalt bring me up again . . . and comfort me" (vv. 20, 21). The great turning-point has really come: for David's prayer is heard, and God has defeated the counsels of Ahithophel. Hushai's plan has succeeded! David may well say that God has given commandment to save him; the impending danger of being overtaken by Ahithophel with 12,000 men is over! God will bring to life again David and his followers, whom death would have claimed, had Ahithophel come. God will bring them up again from the depths of the earth (cf. Ps. lxix. 2), i.e., the gates of death (Ps. ix. 13), which had already opened to swallow them up (20). Whereas in Ps. lv. 19, David trusted that God would deliver his soul from the battle (rebellion) that was against him, he can now say: "Thou hast redeemed my soul" (23). David can indeed conclude the psalm with the triumphant exclamation: "They are confounded, they are brought into shame, that seek my hurt" (v. 24). The prayer in Ps. lxx. 3 is answered.

At the same time, the danger is sufficiently imminent, and David still calls for God's ready help (12). Oppressed by the weight of years (Ps. xxxvii. 25), he now feels, as he never felt before, that his strength is failing, and innumerable troubles (20) have rapidly whitened his hair (vv. 9, 18); but what God has been to David from his youth—his trust and hope (5), his strength and song, and the God who has taught him to declare this (17) He will continue to be in the days of his old age and misfortune. In mentioning his youth, David cannot but think of the similarity between his position then and now. Now, too, as in the days of Saul, it is a question of him only—"take him, for there is none to deliver him"; but this culminating point in the audacity of the rebellion had become the first glimpse of deliverance. God will deliver him now, as He did from the dangers of his youth.

As we see from the Psalm, the three great deliverances of his youth, Keilah, Sela-hammahlekoth, and Hachilah, recur to his mind. How natural, then, that he utters his cry for help in the words of the Psalms of that period, repeated from memory! What was then prayed for and granted, is prayed for and will be granted again now. He begins with Psalm xxxi. 2-4, from Keilah, when he was waiting for Saul as he now waits for Absalom (1, &c.) He cries out in the well-known words of Psa. xxii. 10, from the hour of extreme danger (vv. 6-12). He concludes his Psalm with the words of Psalm xxxv. 28, in the great ultimatum to Saul, before he expected him in Hachilah.

In Psalm xl., in the face of the heavy infliction of the fourfold chastisement,* he had pleaded the great answer to prayer in the war with the Philistines, whereby the Lord had recognised him as His own after his great fall. In Psalm lxxi. he brings to God's remembrance the previous deliverances in his youth, which are to be again experienced; and the Psalm assumes, even strophically, the same form as the Psalms of that period, xxxi., xxii., and xxxv. (third and fourth strophes). He moreover lays special stress, as in Psalm xxxv., on the ending of everything with praise. Every section ends, as in Psalm xxxv., with promises of praise (vv. 6 and 8, 14 and 16, 23 and 25). The second (no less important) weight that David places in the scale of answered prayer is that as God has taught him from his youth up to declare His wondrous works, He will also now in David's old age, allow him to prophesy to the present generation, and to every one that is to come, by proclaiming God's arm and its strength (18).

David, indeed, even rises to the bold request that the page may now be turned, after he has been in the lowest depths of affliction, and that God will even increase his greatness. He is so elevated by that first gleam of light from the still dark sky of troubles, that he exclaims, as if carried out of himself, a fourfold "Thou shalt" (vv. 20, 21), against which he places a fourfold "I will" (vv. 22-24).

The tremendous conflict in David's soul is also apparent in the name for God in the Psalms, which is so far Elohistic (vv. 12, 17-24) that it has to be placed in the second book, which contains the Elohistic Psalms, as the first book (i.-xli.), the Jehovistic. How excellently well adapted it was to be the concluding Psalm there, and how safely, in connection with Psa. xl. 10, it could be left without a heading! For David is here as unmistakable as anywhere, only that, so to speak, he surpasses himself.

In fulness of thanksgiving, he four times in succession (vv. 22 to 24) promises to praise, to sing, to rejoice, to talk, with the harp and with the psaltery—with lips as well as soul—all the day long, of God's faithfulness and holiness; he designates God as the "Holy One of Israel" (22). Asaph again adopts this new name in Psa lxxviii. 41, just as David had adopted that used by Asaph (how beautiful an exchange!), and subsequently Ethan in Psa. lxxxix. 19; and it becomes a favourite name with Isaiah, who uses it thirty times, especially in connection with his reference to David (Isa. lv., xxxi.).

* David had sentenced himself to fourfold restitution, and Nathan announced to him (1) that the son Bathsheba had borne him should surely die; (2) that the sword should not depart from his house; (3) that God would raise up evil against him out of his own house; and, lastly (4), he prophesied the horrible publication of the adultery, his son doing publicly with David's wives what he had done secretly with Uriah's wife. In the face of this terrible humiliation in the eyes of all the people, David very naturally clung to the satisfaction he had obtained for the national honour in the great answer to prayer.

Lord Jesus, Thou Hast Taken.

(Sequel to "Consecration Hymn." F. R. H.)

By Edith Gilling Cherry.

Lord Jesus, Thou hast taken
This fleeting life of mine,
That it may be a mirror,
Wherein Thy life shall shine.
Lord Jesus, Thou hast taken
My moments, and my days,
And tuned them to the key-note
Of Thine unending praise.

Lord Jesus, Thou hast taken
These feeble hands of mine,
And laid Thine own upon them,
To work Thy plans Divine.
Lord Jesus, Thou hast taken
My restless wandering feet,
To go, or stay, henceforward,
Just as Thou seest meet.

Lord Jesus, Thou hast taken
This voice of faltering tone,
To sing amid life's discords
For Thee, and Thee alone.
Lord Jesus, Thou hast taken
My lips, that they may be Touched with Thy fire and laden
With messages for Thee.

Lord Jesus, Thou hast taken
My silver and my gold
To spend but at Thy bidding—
A trust from Thee to hold.
Lord Jesus, Thou hast taken
All powers of mind, or brain,
To use but for the Giver;
Ne'er for myself again.

Lord Jesus, Thou hast taken
This wayward will of mine;
Not crushing it, nor breaking,
But blending it with Thine.
Lord Jesus, Thou hast taken
My heart Thy throne to be—
O loving, tender Saviour,
Whose own heart broke for me!

Lord Jesus, Thou has taken
My love, and so I rest;
All love grown purer, truer,
For loving Thee the best.
Lord Jesus, Thou hast taken
Myself, and sealed me
Thine only, all and ever;
Yea, "Set apart" for Hee.

Saving Discharged Prisoners.

As the fine old chapel in Little Wild Street has been taken down, and the new building which is to supply its place is not yet erected, the winter meeting of the St. Giles' Christian Mission took place at the Olympic Theatre, Wych Street, on Friday last. Sir W. H. Quayle-Jones, ex-Chief Justice of West African Settlements, presided.

Rev. W. Cuff made a statement in regard to the work, in the course of which he showed that unremitting endeavours to uplift the fallen, to brighten dark and dreary lives, and to prevent the young from falling into crime, had now been carried on during forty-four years.

Those in touch with the work knew that the efforts were not in vain; the bright faces of the lads present showed what splendid results had followed the efforts of Mr. Wheatley and his co-workers. They did not ignore the seriousness of offences against law and order; but when they considered the adverse circumstances into which many poor children were born, and the terrible environment of their early days, the wonder was that a greater number did not come under the notice of judges and magistrates. The accident of birth had largely to do with the matter, and an offence which would brand as a criminal a child educated in the streets, would be punished by parents, or the master in the case of a public school.

Describe a lad of tender years as a criminal, and he would probably believe himself to be one. It was almost a universal rule, that to imprison the boy was to ruin the man that was to be. Such opinions had guided the work, and were now shared by those who administered the law; but when the work commenced, they did not generally obtain. Many a man, now hardened in crime, might have been redeemed to a useful life, had he been treated mercifully and judiciously when dealt with for his first trivial offence. The first was established in 1887; but before that time the Mission had been instrumental in saving many a boy from bad associations and evil tendencies; and the Homes for Boys were the natural outcome of the endeavours made to lessen the number of criminals. There were two ways of doing that—to transform criminals into honest men, and to cut off the supply of young recruits. They had done, and were still doing both. During twenty-six years 112,551 discharged prisoners had been supplied with tools, clothing, and employment; 450,000 free breakfasts had been supplied to those discharged from local prisons; 101,501 ex-prisoners had signed the teetotal pledge; and 250 convicts, released from penal servitude, had received attention at the office of the Mission in Brook Street, Holborn—a large proportion of the gratuities allowed for good conduct being paid through Mr. Wheatley. As for the who often suffered more acutely than the actual breakers of the law, work is found for the women, and the children are admitted to the Home and Orphanage at Maldon in Essex.

Other and varied agencies of the Mission were constantly and quietly busy—evangelistic effort, house-to-house visitation, open-air preaching, the visitation of the sick poor, and the administration of relief. It is a many-sided labour, constantly increasing year after year; and, as the receipts for 1903 showed some falling off, a strong appeal was made for increased financial aid.

The Chairman said that he had seen much of the work during seven years at Clerkenwell Court, and he did not know what they would do without it. It was shown that the better treatment of children had largely been brought about by the action of the St. Giles' Mission, which was a good work deserving of every encouragement. During thirteen years in West Africa he had felt the want of such a society.

In the course of a brief statement, Mr. Wheatley, the Director, showed how greatly he had been indebted to magistrates for aid rendered, and also to the heads of business houses, who had made openings for the boys, and had written concerning them. He emphasized the value of such help, and expressed the opinion that too much could not be spent on a child whose parents had led him into criminal ways.

Sir Albert de Rutzen (Chief Metropolitan Police Magistrate) referred to the blessing which had attended the work during the year, As regarded the police-court business, when boys were concerned, he showed that Mr. Wheatley had been his chief friend, one who was never tired of doing good, and never gave up hope until hope was gone. In speaking of this it was hard to know where to begin or where to end.

In place of Mr. F. A. Bevan, absent through bereavement, Rev. A. W. Baldwin, Chaplain of Wormwood Scrubbs Prison, also spoke, urging strongly that something should be done to prevent small boys selling newspapers in the street, "with no future before them but to drift into criminal habits." Lady Quayle-Jones distributed the good conduct prizes, and other addresses followed.

The King Edward Schools AND MISSION.

There was a large attendance at the fifty-eighth anniversary gathering of the King Edward Ragged Schools, Institute, and Mission, recently held, at which the Marquess of Northampton presided. In presenting his annual statement to the meeting, Mr. Charles Montague acknowledged the Divine blessing which had attended the work "among poor and tempted and struggling people and children," during fifty-eight years. Lord Shaftesbury first taught people to show interest in the children of the poor; and the last sixty years have been regarded as the era of the discovery of the child. It is for the poorer classes and for those a little above them that the mission exists. The chief aim is to make Christ known among the people, in order that they may have life and have it more abundantly. It is believed that the ranks of criminals are recruited chiefly from those of weak will, who commenced as children by picking and stealing. Indifference was shown to be a chief feature of the slums, and that becomes callousness if not checked early.

As fine results came of taking children in hand early, Mr. Montague added that it was a great joy to know that in the King Edward Schools under voluntary religious instruction. There are also 400 members in the Young People's Bible-classes, held on Sundays and week-nights. Their Christian Band united such in fellowship. A week-service, commenced three years ago, had been very successful, and the senior scholars had gained a greater number of prizes from the Shaftesbury Society and School Committee than any other institution. The industrial classes for young persons of both sexes were originally founded to draw away boys and girls from vicious amusements, which formerly were of a lower character than at present. These include such useful arts as cookery and dress-making for girls, carpentry, cabinet-making, &c., for boys. Nursing and first aid is also taught to girls. Because "no subsequent supply of nourishment, however liberal, will fully compensate for starvation during infancy and childhood," are provided three days a week during the winter months. The work of the new Holiday Home at Sandon, in Essex, has already conferred great benefit on numbers of ailing women and children. Among other agencies are mission services held three times a week, free libraries, and the visitation of the poor by the Bible-women, the missionary, the nurse, and other visitors, mothers' meetings, and Bible classes for adults. The general work influences for good some 3,000 persons of all ages, in one of the poorest and most densely populated quarters of London.

FREE DINNERS FOR POOR CHILDREN

The Chairman said he considered it heart-breaking for education to become valueless through children being underfed. It was a national duty to see that there were no half-starved children in the country. In their work, teachers had also learned what was good for them. He thought with shame on the evils of overcrowding; and until the nation dealt with the housing problem, they must continue to be ashamed; nothing was so likely to bring the nation down. Whatever had been done in the past, there was still more to be done in the future. Those who thought that ragged-schools were obsolete did not know; the need for them was increasing.

Mrs. Kennedy distributed fifty-eight faithful service prizes to those who had held situations from one to twenty-four years. Other addresses followed. Mr. Montague's address is 16, Addington Street, Bow, E.

Missionaries at Barrow.

One of the most interesting missionary meetings ever held in Barrow was in session last week at the Gospel Assembly Hall. Missionaries from a number of countries took part at the various meetings. Mr. F. S. Arnot, from Garenganze, Central Africa, the pioneer who followed in the footsteps of the late Dr. Livingstone, gave a most thrilling account of his travels in that continent, of the great needs of the people, and of his interview and dealings with King Lewanika.

Mr. Thomas McLaren, who has lately returned from a tour through India and Ceylon, spoke encouragingly of his visit to that late famine-stricken country, where hundreds of native children and young people are now under Christian training. Messrs. Green and Hill told of their labours among the Chinese in the Straits Settlements, and the conversion of many of them to the Christian faith. Mr. G. J. Chesterman, from Spain, related the story of his work and the progress being made in that priest-ridden land, and spoke of the steadfastness of some of the converts, choosing prison rather than give up their hope in the Gospel.

Mr. Mitchell, who has lately returned home, spoke of his work in Nova Scotia, West Indies, Demarara, and latterly in Venezuela. Mr. James Wharton gave a brief account of his evangelistic work among the freed slaves of the Southern States of America, and Messrs. Brewster and Groves, from the Australasian colonies, told of their labours among the bush-men and settlers in that far-off land. The meetings were well attended.

An Islington Convention.

The unity animating Evangelical clergymen in Islington has been demonstrated in the convention for the deepening of spiritual life, recently held in St. Andrew's Church, Thornhill Square, N., in connection with the five neighbouring parishes of St. Andrew's, St. Thomas', St. David's, St. Matthias' and Holy Trinity. The clergy and workers for some months have held weekly united open-air services in the different parts of the district, and the union proved an inestimable blessing to the workers and the whole of the parishes.

At the convention, Rev. Hubert Brooke gave a series of Bible readings on "The Claims of the Heathen World upon the Church of God." The other speakers were Revs. G. C. Grubb, R. Middleton, H. B. Macartney, and E. W. Moore. The conveners have much cause for thankfulness. Their object was to seek for a deepening of spiritual life among the members of their respective congregations, and this object was in a large measure achieved.

The meetings were well attended, and throughout there was a spirit of conviction. It may also be added that there is no mistaking the spirit of love that has been poured out, and the hope that has been kindled as well as the real encouragement to believe in God's power to revive His people. In a way not easy to describe, those who have participated in the strengthening and refreshment the convention has brought, have been greatly helped to put first things first.

Other Lands.

The Gospel for Tibet.

By Mr. CLAUDE BALD, Darjeeling.

AT the present moment, when the British Government has determined to force a way for commerce into Tibet, it is the duty of all who pray, "Thy Kingdom come," to unite specially in supplication that the messengers of the Gospel may speedily be enabled to enter through the door which is at length to be opened. Tibet is one of the countries which have been fast closed against Christian missionaries up to the present time; though many prayers have already ascended from the earnest hearts of Christians who have longed to extend the blessings of the Gospel to that spiritually dark land of Buddhism and priestcraft.

For many years Christian missionaries have been knocking at the gates of Tibet, and have been demanding admittance at all available points. Probably the first of these were the Moravians, who established themselves on the north-west confines of India, at the extreme limit of the semi-civilized country of Cashmere, in the heart of the Himalayan Mountains, where there is one of the principal passes into Tibet. Here they studied the language, translated the Scriptures, and gave the Good News to the Tibetan traders who kept coming and going through the passes. One of these missionaries, Mr. Heyde, after spending uninterruptedly upwards of forty years at that bleak spot, moved to the neighbourhood of Darjeeling, where he and his wife spent about six years revising and completing the New Testament in Tibetan.

Members of the China Inland Mission have for many years been striving to enter the country from the border next China, at a point which can be reached only after an arduous journey of five months from the sea-coast. Some of these noble and faithful men and women have passed through much tribulation, and have suffered violence at the hands of the fanatical Chinese from time to time. One of them, Miss Annie Taylor, felt that some effort should be made to enter from the border near Darjeeling; so she went to the La-Chong Valley, within the independent territory of Sikkim, and remained for some two years, studying the language and customs of the Tibetans. Then, finding that an entrance from that point was absolutely denied her, she went again to China, and, traversing the old ground, entered the forbidden country from that side, and so made her famous journey almost to the very gates of Lhassa. After incredible hardships, she was compelled by military force to retrace her steps, although almost at the goal of her journey.

Immediately after this journey, she returned to England, and raised a band of men who proceeded to Darjeeling, with the object of preparing to enter the closed land as soon as the way might be opened. This company, after a time, became scattered, some going round to the Chinese border of Tibet; one died in harness; some joined other missions, while one or two returned home. Undismayed by the apparent hopelessness of the outlook, when the British Government subsequently arranged a commercial treaty with Tibet, and a nominal trading station was opened on the borders of that country and Sikkim, Miss Taylor applied for permission to settle as a trader at the new station, named Yatong. After much difficulty this was granted, and for the past eight or nine years she has stuck to her post in that wild and almost desolate spot, absolutely alone, being the only European there, with the exception of an official who represents Tibet. She sells a few useful things to the traders who pass to and fro, dispenses medicine to the sick, and above all, preaches the Gospel and distributes portions of Scripture to all who pass through.

Among the other bands which are preparing to enter Tibet, the strongest is that of the Scandinavian Alliance Mission, which was organized some ten or twelve years ago, by certain Scandinavians who had settled in America; hence this is practically an American mission, though most of the members are from Norway and Sweden. These made their headquarters at a village near Darjeeling, named Ghoom, which is occupied almost entirely by people from Tibet. There they set up a printing-press, from which was issued the revised edition of the New Testament in Tibetan, also much Gospel literature in the language. The missionaries themselves are scattered at various points along the borders of Tibet and Bhotan, many living in the most frugal manner, while teaching and preaching to the people, and at the same time helping them by introducing better systems of weaving and other industries.

These different agencies are now prepared to enter the "Great Closed Land." They are furnished with the Scriptures in the language of the people, and they are already acquainted with the manners and customs of the country, so that there is nothing to hinder them in carrying the message of peace and salvation, unless it be the opposition of officials.

It may seem strange that there should be any prospect of British opposition, but past experience has shown that our administration is not without men who suppose that the presence of the missionary must necessarily mean disturbance. If the official does not himself understand the power and purpose of the Gospel, he naturally thinks that it will only raise resentment among the natives.

This is a time for earnest believing prayer that the Lord of the whole earth may disarm every opposition to the peaceful conquests of the Gospel in Tibet and Bhotan.

Christianity and Hinduism.

IN the course of a striking article on the influence of Christianity upon India, The Christian Patriot (Madras) says:—

We claim that the discontent with social evils noticeable in Indian society is to a great extent due to the influence of Christianity. The dissatisfaction with the degraded position assigned to women, the denouncement of the evils of infant marriage and enforced widowhood, the abhorrence among the higher educated classes of polygamy—features which are characteristic of present-day Indian society—are due to the higher ideals of social life presented by Christianity.

At the present moment, Indians themselves protest most strongly against the ill-concealed obscenity of much of their sacred literature. Whence this moral indignation? Is it not due to the unconscious influence of Christian ideals of what is pure and what is impure? Infanticide, suttee, and other inhuman practices, are things of the past, but there still exist practices of a religious kind, such as hook-swinging and nautch dancing, which are revolting to the moral conscience, and in time these too will become superseded.

But the most potent indirect influence of Christianity is seen in forms of beneficent activity which are manifesting themselves in Hindu society, and which are alien to the Hindu religion. To give one single example—Hinduism is caste and caste is Hinduism, and hence the depressed castes of the Hindu community have always been treated with contempt, and subjected to the greatest tyranny by the higher classes. It is only after the advent of Christian missions that these despised and degraded classes have been cared for, educated, and trained, so as to enable them to take their right position in Indian society. What is the result? Hindus are also coming forward to advocate warmly the cause of these depressed classes.

We may go on like this enumerating countless instances of the ways in which Christianity is working; and it is, therefore, unfair on the part of the critics of missions to overlook the overwhelming evidence that is forthcoming to establish the moral and social influence of Christianity in India, even on those outside the visible Christian fold."

New York Bible-School.

UNDER encouraging circumstances, Dr. Wilbert W. White has opened his Bible School in Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. Between twenty and thirty students have come into residence with him and his staff, in order to devote their whole time to the courses given, and to be fitted for future usefulness in the work at home and abroad. More are expected, who, on arrival, will fill up the accommodation in the four houses that have been taken for the purpose.

These students represent fifteen States, as well as England, Burmah, China, India, Japan, and Venezuela. Twelve of them are Student Volunteers, willing to proceed to any foreign mission that the Lord may indicate. New York contributes nearly one hundred other students, who attend the special courses of study arranged, under the charge of six qualified teachers. The outside work of these students has, in a month, resulted in the formation of twenty-nine dining-room Bible-classes, which they are teaching once a week; and this movement is only just beginning.

The extension work includes classes conducted in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Newburgh, Patterson, and other places, in which are enrolled several hundreds who are being reached and helped every week. The School is now in full working order, and has already been attended with much spiritual blessing. One new feature this year is a Visitors' Day, during which a succession of teachers, occupying an hour each, deliver lectures and lessons, from three to nine, in one of the Presbyterian Churches. This is arranged to meet the needs of business people, who cannot attend the regular day-sessions. The numbers are growing every week, and one attraction is a meal provided between six and seven for the accommodation of many who have not time to go home, but who want to continue the studies as they proceed.

THE RANGE OF SUBJECTS.

The Visitors' Day subjects are upon "Prayer," "How to Teach in Sunday School," "How to Carry on Personal Work," with addresses on "The Deepening of Spiritual Life," and "Recent Oriental Research and the Bible." This last named is conducted by Dr. Rogers, of Drew Seminary, one of the leading Assyrian scholars in America.

Inspection of missions, in order to learn methods of work, is among the items on the programme. Most enjoyable and instructive visits have been already paid to the Water Street Mission, the Florence Crittenten Rescue Mission, and to Mrs. Whittemore's Mission. Not only do the students learn much, but they also take part in the evangelistic work going on, and so bring fresh messages and cheer into the hearts of the workers and leaders in these different enterprises.

Among the students are several ministers and missionaries, who have come away from their charges in order to take a thorough Bible course, so as to be better fitted for their work in the future.

A magazine is now issued monthly by Dr. White, called The Bulletin, which is designed to give a variety of valuable instruction to teachers, answering questions, meeting difficulties, and reporting some of the best addresses given before classes. The subscription is five shillings a year. G. Soltau.

Indian Villages.—Mr. A. S. Paynter, (Jai Bhai) writes:—"The Holy Spirit is mightily working, and since our arrival here (Kaikalur, Kistna, East Coast), we have had calls from forty or fifty Hindoo villages. The whole of the country side is awakened. At the first village visited, after days of teaching and prayer, and two long meetings, many sought Christ. The sight of these young converts praising their newly-found Saviour was blessed beyond words. Eight elders of the village presented us with the village temple site for the building of a small church. All the people beg for baptism. The responsibility upon us of guiding this movement of the people to Christ is great. Calls reach us from other villages. Smal village churches will be needed."

Italian ex-Priests.

THERE seems to be a spiritual awakening among Roman Catholic priests, and especially among the younger class. They are beginning to realize that there is no hope of better things in Rome, and that their only hope is to come out and be absolutely separate from her contamination.

For many years we have met with young priests who have told us that their great difficulty was how to earn their living if they left their false position, in which, they said, they were still continuing only because of the material support it yielded them. Many friends, in their noble desire to aid these needy brethren, have, perhaps too hastily, sought to "employ" them as evangelists, without first of all waiting upon God, and requesting their new-born brethren to do the same, in order to see whether He had bestowed upon them any special gifts for preaching and teaching His truth. The result has been that, in Roman Catholic countries, there are ex-priests who have entered the ministry of the Gospel who ought never to have done so, either as evangelists, or pastors, or teachers.

Hence, in many minds there is a latent idea, more chronic than reasonable, that ex-priests ought to undergo a special ecclesiastical quarantine. If God's people thus make up their minds that ex-priests are simply Jesuitical spies, or that they are perverted rather than converted, how will they be able to try the spirits? We thank God for having called out of Rome's priesthood many true and faithful witnesses of His Gospel; and it is with the desire that this blessed testimony may go on with increasing power and blessing that I now write.

Surely no intelligent Protestant will assert that an ex-priest is qualified to preach the Gospel and teach the Church of God, simply because he had studied Rome's traditions and chanted her masses in Latin. In order to help converted priests to serve God more successfully, some beloved brethren have proposed to educate them in evangelical colleges. My only point at present is—Let care be taken that those who offer themselves for the work of the Lord be manifestly gifted for it, and let it not be taken for granted that because a certain brother was a Romish priest, he has ipso facto acquired a kind of right to be regarded as a minister of God.

Those who labour in Papal lands feel a special interest in the Homes for our ex-priest brethren. There they find opportune refuge, and meanwhile their natural wants are provided, and thus they have time calmly and prayerfully to consider their future. But no institution ought to paralyse personal responsibility and effort; and much can be done by individual testimony, counsel, and help, to lead converted priests on in the ways of God.

A CONCRETE EXAMPLE.

A few evenings ago, in the Gospel Hall in Florence, a crowded meeting was held. A young ex-priest, converted some months ago, presided, and very humbly and faithfully introduced to the audience a young Franciscan monk, brought to Christ in June last. It was a sight never to be forgotten! These two men, both about twenty-five years of age, told how God had opened their eyes and hearts to see and obey His word. They said they had left "Rome" out of principle, and in order to give clear proof of this, they have decided to learn a profession or trade, suited to their capabilities. By their testimony it was evident to all present that they had abandoned the Papacy with none of that carnal rancour which sometimes has marred the testimony of our "ex" brethren. Their appeals to the unsaved, and their prayers for the conversion of Rome's priests, were very touching. A Canon of the Church of Rome, who is very near the Kingdom, was present, and deeply moved by the earnest and powerful testimony of the young converted Franciscan monk.

I have mentioned these cases in order to stir up God's people to a more prayerful and practical sympathy for the many priests who are sick at heart with Rome's increasing darkness, and are waiting only to know how they may honestly gain their living. Let me, then, conclude briefly:—

(1) Suitable professions and trades ought to be sought for, and can be found if that "love which suffereth long and is kind" be exercised.

(2) If truly converted priests can thus be helped into literary and other positions, they may reach classes of men in Papal lands which others cannot touch. I know of a very learned Roman Catholic priest, who may soon become a professor in one of the Italian Universities; and he told me the other evening that he hopes to witness for God in his exalted position, and show to priests and people that the Gospel is not a mercenary profession, but a spiritual power in the heart and mind of every believer. I have been able to help another young converted priest to earn his living as a correspondent to a leading daily paper, and his pen will be used for God.

(3) We must not exclude the possibility of ex-priests becoming preachers and teachers of God's truth, but we ought to be very clear ourselves, and then make it clear to them, that this is a calling which only the Holy Spirit can bestow, and that it is in no way to be claimed a priori by those who profess to have given up Rome's priesthood for that enjoyed by all the children of God. The Gospel in Bulgaria.

WRITING to us from Sophia, Pastor Tonjoroff (of Philippopolis) says:—

For some weeks I have been visiting the towns and villages along the frontier, and have had many occasions to help sufferers in body and soul. Bania, Kostenets, Samokove, Dupnitse, Kyustandil, are full of soldiers and rebels; and thousands of refugees, mostly women and children, are coming in. Their condition is pitiable. May God soon stop this woful bloodshed!

I have been for some days preaching the Gospel in Sophia, distributing useful literature, and helping the poor and sick. Throygh my endeavours a few years ago, a poor house was established in a monastery a few miles from here. I went to see it the other day, and had a good time with the poor old people there. Mental derangement is fearfully on the increase among the people, so that the four mad-houses in Bulgaria are getting too small.

I have just returned from visiting the beautiful Divinity School, built upon one of the hills near Sophia. Having a talk with the director of the institution, about the means with which the building was built, he said with pride: "There is no government money in this building; it was raised by voluntary contributions. We have done our best not to give any cause of complaint to those of the taxpayers who are of different persuasions." The school is substantially built, with beautiful grounds around it. I suggested to the professor who showed me round, how sad it would be if there should not come from the institution men full of faith and zeal for the spread of the Kingdom of Christ. There are about 150 young men there, preparing for the ministry. Let us pray for them, that they may become real ambassadors of Christ.

In Philippopolis, there has been organized a little committee of literary Christian men, who, with their knowledge, time, energy, and money, are labouring to supply a Christian foundation for Bulgarian literature. Already six books have been translated into Bulgarian, the last being, "The Gospel as the Foundation of Life." It is written by a Russian priest, and translated by a Bulgarian officer, and is a beautiful literary and theological production, strictly Evangelical in all points. I think it will prove of great service for young men in the seminary, and also for the nation. Its broadcast circulation among Bulgarian students is much to be desired. It will cost about £9 to secure 150 for that purpose. My address for the present is, c/o Colonel Zograffsky, Sevlievo, Bulgaria.

British Syrian Mission.

THE annual meeting of the British Syrian Mission, which was held recently in Exeter Hall, was well attended. Mr. H. C. Nisbet (vice-president) took the chair, and after referring to Mrs. Bowen Thompson's noble work in starting the Mission forty-three years ago, said her mantle had fallen on the ladies now engaged in it; and he, with Mrs. Chapman, had recently a conference with the present hon. superintendent from Beyrout.

They met to discuss a scheme of temporary retrenchment, as the present income was insufficient, and only by the generous response made to a special appeal had the Mission been enabled to meet its liabilities to the present time. A careful re-organization of the work, and the self-denying co-operation of missionaries and native workers, had resulted in a plan which would reduce expenses for this year without damaging the influence of the mission, and efforts must be made to increase the income by £1,000 a year.

Miss Kendall, who has been working for five and a-half years in the Lebanon, gave a deeply interesting account of school and dispensary work. The need for the latter was urgent, and, though she was not a doctor, she was able to do much to alleviate suffering. At first, the dispensary was opened for women and children only, but now for all sorts and conditions of men (and animals!) came as well. The people, speaking of Miss Kendall's treatment, say: "She does it for Christ's sake; that is why the medicine makes us better!"

The schools established in eight villages are doing much to raise the women from a state of degradation, and the educated girls take quite a different position in their homes. The sheikhs of thirteen more villages were petitioning for schools, and Miss Kendall hardly knew how to go back to meet the question, "Will you give us a school this year?" by saying, "No."

Miss Kendall rejoiced to feel that many who had come under instruction had received the Gospel message, Druses as well as nominal Christians. She closed by an earnest appeal for more workers, and told of the happiness of the work, even though for two years she had been alone in it. The felt presence of God had made those the two happiest years of her life.

Mr. Albert A. Head, who had recently visited Syria, fully endorsed Miss Kendall's words, and spoke of the courage of the mission workers, in times of danger from cholera and riot. He spoke of preservation, protection, and power in the work, and urged prayer and practical personal effort at home in aid of the mission.

Rev. F. B. Meyer said that two years ago he had the privilege of coming in contact with missionaries and native teachers of various organizations and missions in Syria and Palestine at the Brumana Convention. He was struck by the great audience of young men and young women converted to God by these missions; and as he noted the physical beauty, wonderful intelligence, and Christian knowledge of those young people, he felt that the flower of the youth of Syria had been laid hold of, and that, as the future evangelists and the future mothers, these young people would exert an influence that we cannot estimate over the life of Syria. He appealed for more ladies to go out to help in this blessed work.

Addresses were also delivered by Rev. E. W. Moore and Rev. C. A. Manley (of C.M.S., Nazareth). The office of the Mission is 29A, High Street, Wimbledon.

Cheering Tidings from Canada.—In a recent letter from Hillhirst, Que., Canada, Rev. G. W. Thom writes: "We of Almonte are enjoying much refreshing from God's presence, and many souls are being born into the Kingdom, some with silver locks, others being gathered as lambs, their sweet young lives having never been tainted by the corruption of sin; others, again, in the full tide of youth are yielding to Christ. The Holy Spirit's presence is known by the quiet, resolute work that is going on. The Christian is a delightful weekly visitor. Its record of Christian activity and achievement is well fitted to strengthen our faith in the advance of the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ in the world."

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, December 6. Isaiah i.

THIS chapter forms the preface to the prophecies of Isaiah. It is characterized as being a clear and complete statement of the points at issue between the Lord and His people all the time that Isaiah was the Lord's prophet, and is not only the most representative of his prophecies, but a very vivid illustration of the prophetic spirit and method.

It has been pointed out that this chapter is cast in the form of an assize, in which are the actors in a judicial process. It is a Crown case, and God is at once Complainant and Judge.

The Complaint (2, 3). Note the personal element in this appeal. The conviction of sin which the prophet seeks to secure, is wrought, not by appealing to a code of laws which had been transgressed, or by comparing the present with a sweeter, purer past, but by showing the ingratitude and obstinacy with which the people had repaid the fatherly care of God. Ah, it is the personal element in sin which most quickly convicts men. "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?" "Thou art the man!"

The Witness in the Case. First, he narrates the misery which had overtaken the land (4-9); then the sins of the upper and ruling classes (10, 17, 21-23). What we call personal sins, such as drunkenness, vanity, bribery, the oppression of the poor are viewed in their public character, as bringing wrath and disaster on the entire people.

The Plea in Defence (10-17). The people point to their laborious worship and multiplied sacrifices. What could they have done more! But these only add to the tale of their sins. God could not away with the strange mixture of iniquity and the solemn meeting (13 R.V.).

The Conclusion of the Trial, which has gone hopelessly against the guilty nation, is in an offer of mercy (18). Crimson and scarlet are two fast colours, and are chosen to show the completeness of God's pardoning love.

Conditions for the Future. Happiness is dependent on repentance and righteousness; but the nation will pass through a period of suffering, in which rebels and sinners must be consumed (24-31).

MONDAY, December 7. Isaiah ii.

This and the four following chapters must be classed together (ii. to vi.) as a distinct portion of this book, belonging to the earliest years of Isaiah's public life, and may be assigned to 735 B.C., about the time of the accession of Ahaz to the throne.

A Fair Ideal (1-5). The prophet quotes some ancient prophecy, which Micah also recites, giving a fair vision of what Jerusalem will become as the light of the world, the seat of the Divine King, beneath whose sceptre the nations dwell in peace.

The Sad Reality (6-9). Into the actual city men had brought all kinds of foreign worship and heathen prophets. The idolatries of every nation were represented in the streets of the Holy City, and the idol temples were crowded by the poor and rich. It was a sad contrast; but are we not perpetually confronted with it? We, too, have our dreams of what our fatherland might be, and will be. Probably, it would be impossible to live and work without such dreams; but when we turn our eyes back from the hill-tops of vision on which the sun shines, to the actual state of things around us—especially in our great cities—ah, there is cause for heart-break! Must this be always so? Yes, until the King Himself shall come to set up His eternal reign.

Never from the fallen heart of man can you xpect the new heaven and earth. But we must constantly witness against the wrongs of time, as the prophets did, and seek to hasten the coming of the Day of God.

Judgment (10-22). Nothing in that great civilization would be preserved. The high towers, fenced walls, ships, treasures, armour, all would perish—as they did in the Fall of Jerusalem and the exile to Babylon. It seems in vain for man to hope to resist the inevitable progress of corruption which is ever at work. We must cease from man, whose breath is in his nostrils, and turn to God, who is working out His redemptive purposes with unfailing energy and love.

TUESDAY, December 8. Isaiah iii.

The Ruin of Judah (1-15). Jerusalem was becoming reduced to anarchy under its childish and effeminate king. As Isaiah became more and more acquainted with the corruption of his people, he turned his back on the ideal vision, which had dazzled his eyes at the commencement of his ministry, and became a prophet of woe. In sarcastic phrase he pictures a despairing nation choosing a certain man to be its ruler because he alone has a decent coat to his back (6), but even he refuses to assume the responsibility (7). In the midst of all, we are brought face to face with the majestic figure of the Lord Himself, in judgment with the rulers of the people, and pleading the cause of the poor.

The Condemnation of the Women of Israel (16-26). It is necessary to read these verses in the R.V. in order to understand the various ornaments and implements mentioned, and to realize the full force of the contrast of suffering, which they were doomed to incur. The women of Israel had given themselves up to insensate luxury and self-indulgence; and when the women of a State are corrupt, there is nothing to stay its corruption. The salt has lost its savour; wherewith shall it be salted?

WEDNESDAY, December 9. Isaiah iv.

Was there no hope for Jerusalem? Yes, but not in the endeavours of the prophet, nor the protests of the good people still left in her midst, but in the salvation of the Lord, after judgment had fulfilled its unwelcome and terrible mission.

First, the Lord would have to cleanse away the filth of the daughters and the oppression of the sons by the spirit of burning and judgment; then, for the remnant who should escape—for those who are written among the living—there would follow a vision of the Branch of the Lord, and of the possibility of holiness, such as had never before dawned on their eyes.

Let us ponder that vision of the Branch of the Lord, so familiar to the prophets (Jer. xxiii. 5, Zech. iii. 8). It may have emanated from a stock that had been cut down to the ground, but it is full of sap and vigour, covered with foliage and blossom, filled with fruit. What better emblem could have been selected of Him, who described Himself as the True Vine, of which the Father was Dresser and Keeper. How cheering it is to think that as He is the Branch, so we may be branches, and that the same grace and power which poured into and through Him await the appeal of our faith!

The closing verses are very suggestive; they tell us, in effect, that each home in Jerusalem shall have the same blessed signs of the Divine presence as the ancient Tabernacle had—the shadowing-cloud by day, and the gleam of the Shekinah-fire by night. It was as though God promised that each home should become a temple, and every family a priesthood. And over the whole city God would spread His presence, like a vast pavilion.

THURSDAY, December 10. Isaiah v.

The Parable of the Vineyard (1-7). In a picture of great beauty, Isaiah describes a vineyard situated on one of the sunny heights visible from Jerusalem. Every care had been given to it that an experienced vine-dresser could devise, but in vain. The vine-dresser himself is introduced, appealing if more could have been done. The lesson for that time, and for ours, is that the measure of privilege is the measure of responsibility. When God knows a people as He did Israel, and selects it to do high and holy work in the world—if, after all the care He has expended on it (or similarly on an individual), His plans miscarry, through no failure of His but through the failure of the human soul, His expostulations will be the more vehement, and His punishment the more drastic. Take care, all ye who seem to be dealt with as God's favoured ones—are you bearing a commensurate amount of fruit?

The Wild Grapes of Judah (8-24). These, catalogued in a series of woes, all result from love of money or of wine. They are land-grabbing (8-10); drunken rioting (11-16); blind atheism (17-21); injustice on the bench; and oppression in the homes of the rich (22-24).

Jehovah's Anger (25-30). Earthquakes, armed raids, civil strife and famine fever, the resistless tide of a great invasion, a desolate land, and the billows of a hungry sea—the elements of nature and the passions of men in conflict—such would be the forces of destruction which the wrath of God would unloose against His chosen. Can we read these words without fearing a similar fate for England, unless she repent?

FRIDAY, December 11. Isaiah vi.

Whilst kings die, the Lord lives. Be of good cheer!

The Vision (1-4). Above the glory of the Temple worship arose a vision of the eternal adoration of the seraphim. How great the contrast between their adoring homage and the perfunctory rites of Judaism! Their eternal chant, how greatly it contrasted with the songs that emanated from unclean lips!

The Call (4-8). When the prophet realized his sinnership as compared with the holiness of God—as a candle casts a shadow when exposed to the brilliance of the electric light—he was in a fit condition to be appointed a prophet of the Lord. It is the convicted and forgiven sinner who makes the best soul-winner. The seraph did not need directing; of himself he knew that only a coal saturated in the blood of sacrifice, and full of holy fire, could cleanse away defilement. May that same coal touch our lips; then, "Lord, send me."

The Commission (9-13). These terrible words were quoted by the lips of Incarnate Love (Matt. xiii. 15). Even the gentlest pleadings of the Gospel have a judicial and condemnatory power. Either they save, or they condemn. The sun that melts the wax, hardens clay. Each appeal of Christ has a savour of life to some, and of death to others.

SATURDAY, December 12. Isaiah vii.

The section of Isaiah's prophecies, which begins here, consists of a number of separate prophecies uttered in the years 735-732 B.C. It was the time of a great coalition against Jerusalem and Judah. Rezin, king of Damascus, marched down the east of the Jordan, and overturned the Jewish supremacy in Edom; Pekah, king of Samaria, threw himself into Judah, defeated the armies of Ahaz, and besieged Jerusalem, with the object of deposing Ahaz, and setting up a Syrian, the son of Tabeel, in his stead. Simultaneously the Philistines attacked Judah from S.W.

In this distress, Isaiah's voice was heard (3-9). Taking with him his boy named, "A Remnant shall Return," the prophet faced Ahaz and his court in the midst of their preparation for the siege, and whilst they were examining the water-supply of the city. There he delivered an assurance that if they would only trust in God and be quiet in heart, they would see the entire collapse of the invasion. These two kings were only as the stumps of expiring firebrands, almost burnt out.

So with us. There are times when our own lives and the stability of the State are menaced by the reactionary forces of evil; but do not leave God out of account. He is not dead. They cannot accomplish their will if He forbid. Be still, and see His salvation.

The Prophet offered Ahaz a sign of the terrible results which must befall if he refused to believe these Divine assurances (10-17). He said a child which would be born of a woman, then an unmarried girl, would have during his early years to feed on butter and honey, the food of privation, because the land would be devastated by its foes. But his name Immanuel was a guarantee that God would not forsake His people. We all know the New Testament application of these words (Matt. i.).

But Ahaz would not be persuaded. He insisted on appealing to Tiglath-Pileser. Instead of faith he chose sight, and took a step which led to the ruin of his country. F. B. M.

With Christ in the Army.

The Late Major-Gen. W. HATT NOBLE, R.E.

FOLLOWING the brief obituary notice already published, friends in many lands will welcome some further particulars of the "good soldier of Jesus Christ," who has been called to his rest. William Hatt Noble was born in 1828; and when a cadet at Woolwich, he was brought to decision for Christ. I knew him afterwards at Brompton Barracks, Chatham, as one of a band of Christian officers.

He was stationed in Canada, the Gold Coast, Barbadoes, Malta, and Woolwich, where he was head of one of the departments of the Arsenal. He was afterwards Commandant of the Royal Engineers for all Ireland.

He was married to Grace, daughter of the late Judge Lefroy, who proved herself a valuable helpmeet in every way. Their house was always noted for hospitality and kindness, and was a centre of Christian influence and work for God; many young people have had cause to thank God for the lessons they learned there. Settling down in Reigate, General Hatt Noble was for thirteen years a valued member of St. Matthew's Church, Redhill. When advancing years made him feel that the distance from his home was too far to walk, he attended the nearer parish church of Reigate, which had just come into the hands of an earnest Evangelical vicar. On his retirement from the Service he said: "I have tried to do my duty to my Queen and country, and now I long to give the rest of my days to the King of kings." This he did most heartily and thoroughly.

The Church Missionary Society had the first claim upon the affections of this devoted officer, who joined its Committee in 1890. The C.M. Intelligencer remarks—"His influence was ever on the side of a forward policy, trusting in the Divine promises. His humble, loving, fervent words, and his bright emphatic manner, bore testimony to a life of close communion with his Lord." "His words were always those of a man who combined high spirituality of mind with much practical common-sense." He had his own representative in the mission field.

Among other good causes, he was interested in the Evangelical Alliance. But it is at Keswick that he will be most missed. He was Chairman of the Council, and often presided at the Tent meetings. "His personality was always welcomed, as one who sought to live out the doctrines he cherished and professed." He also organized and presided over eight or nine Conventions at Redhill, and many of us "will miss his kindly word, his cheery smile, his affectionate sympathy and interest."

One who knew him well says: "His feeling about any memorial notice was the same as that of Mr. Robert Wilson, of Keswick—'I am a poor sinner saved by grace.'" But as he has now received his Master's home-call, we may trace back some of the steps which led to his being the powerful influence described by one who writes of "the intense simplicity of his faith in the Lord Jesus, not merely as his Saviour from sin, but as the One to whom to apply at all times. If he lost a letter or paper, his heart went straight to heaven, and he would say, 'If the outer world knew how He answers prayer, they would love Him more.'"

He always attributed his early conversion to the influence of a brother officer (General Cox), who, when asked to do something wrong, answered: "No, I won't; it would be sin against God!" This entered into General Noble's soul, and he never ceased to use this simple story when talking with boys.

As an officer holding a high position, the General was remarkable for being "in the world," but "not of the world." He fearlessly refused to work on Sundays, except in time of war; and through life he ever used his influence against Sunday travelling and Sabbath desecration.

He had been failing in health for some time. For the last fortnight he was very weak and suffering, and gently "fell on sleep" Wednesday, October 14. His mortal remains were laid to rest in Reigate Cemetery, "in sure and certain hope of the Resurrection" at the Lord's Coming, for which he was continually looking.

Oh, think—to step on shore; and that shore
Heaven!
To take hold of a hand, and that God's hand!
To breathe a new air, and find it
Celestial air!

Oh, think—to pass from the storm and tempest
To one unbroken calm!
To wake up . . . and find it—Glory!

Bible Class Federation.—The necessity for such an organization as the Bible Class Federation is demonstrated by its success up to the present moment; but the fact remains that, with the number of affiliated classes standing at 350, the vast majority of Bible classes have yet to be reached. There are thousands of classes in connection with the different churches in the country which might be brought into affiliation with the Federation; and the information obtained, through the courtesy of the Sunday School Union, has provided the Federation with an opportunity for immediate extension that they have not hitherto possessed. The Council of the Federation has therefore determined to organize a "Forward Movement," with a view to securing the affiliation of these classes with which they are brought into touch for the first time, and an appeal is made for the sum of £350 per annum for the next three years to enable the work to be carried out. The money will be applied (1) to securing a central office; (2) additional clerical assistance; and (3) to meet the increased expenditure consequent upon the vigorous prosecution of the work. Particulars may be had from the hon. sec., Mr. Reginald M. Waterhouse, Maybank Road, South Woodford, N.E.

God-Possession.*

By Rev. E. W. MOORE, M.A.

"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God?" (1 Cor. iii. 16.)
"What agreement hath the temple of God with idols?" (2 Cor. vi. 16.)

"CAN you tell me," asked a clerical friend of mine of a candidate for missionary work, "what Justification is?" The man gave to the question a satisfactory reply. "And what," pursued my friend, "is Sanctification?" "Sanctification," said the candidate, the fire kindling in his look as he spoke, "Sanctification is a God-possessed soul, sir." No truer answer could be given. It is one thing to possess Christ—it is a very different thing to be possessed by Christ. In the one case we have life, but in the other we have life triumphant. If God is in possession, Satan is cast out, for "what concord hath Christ with Belial, and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?" (2 Cor. vi. 16.)

It is to be feared that of this most blessed and high privilege of God-possession, many Christians know comparatively little; yet it is the one secret, both of holiness and of safety, for where God is not, there sin and Satan are, just as where light is not, darkness inevitably is. Amid the 10,000 snares that beset our path heavenward, there is absolutely no security except to obey our Lord's own words: "Abide in Me, and I in you," to be, as some one has put it, at once "Christ enclosed and Christ indwelt."

There are many emblems and analogies in Scripture by which this wondrous, mystical union betwixt Christ and His people is shadowed forth, but I do not know that there is any one more instructive than that of the Temple, which may almost be said to pervade the whole of Scripture, to run like a golden thread through the Old Testament and the New, from the earliest command of God to Moses, "Let them make Me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among them" (Exodus xxv. 8), to the final triumphant announcement, "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them" (Rev. xxi. 3). It is not possible, nor is it purposed, at this time, to attempt to trace this most interesting theme in all its varied aspects in the Word of God. All that is contemplated is to deal briefly with some of its main features, and then to inquire how far these marks of the living temple are perceptible in ourselves.

To be a temple of God is the privilege of the individual Christian. It is true that it is of the Church collectively that the Apostle writes when he says, "Ye are the temple of God" (Ephes. ii. 22). But it is not the less true that every living stone in the whole of the vast spiritual edifice is itself a temple. The shrines or side chapels of a great cathedral are parts of the universal fabrics, yet is each one a separate shrine. Even so, it has been well said, every believer, though but one stone in the Universal Church, is nevertheless in himself a separate sanctuary.

To think of God as by our side
Is almost as untrue,
As to remove His throne beyond
Those skies of starry blue.

For God is never so far off
As even to be near;
He dwells within, our spirit is
The home He holds most dear.

So all the while I thought myself
Homeless, forlorn, and weary,
Missing my joy I walked the earth,
Myself God's sanctuary.

What dignity, what honour, are hereby conferred on man! Well may we exclaim with Solomon, "Will God in very deed dwell with man upon the earth?" (2 Chron. vi. 18).

Facing London's Need.

Rev. G. H. TURNER, King's Cross.

FROM his boyhood days in Sheffield it was the cherished hope of George Henry Turner to become a minister of the Free Methodist body, the people among whom he was nurtured by godly parents and led into the light of God. That high desire was gratified when, after marriage to a lady whose whole life has been one of self-sacrifice in the work which her husband took up while still a youth, Mr. Turner was accepted for service in the colonies, going out to New Zealand in 1872. Essentially an evangelist, and possessing a terse and forcible style of preaching, Mr. Turner's uncompromising attitude in relation to national sins, and his tenderness in seeking to win souls for Christ, quickly attracted large congregations, and a deep impression was made upon the city of Auckland. A season of earnest labour bade fair to result in the upbuilding of a strong Church; but the young preacher's health broke down under the strain of work, and he was compelled to return to the home-land. At the annual Conference of his Church in 1876 he was appointed to Cheltenham.

Now commenced a period of effective service, the fruit of which is seen at Preston and Lowestoft as well as Cheltenham. Subsequently, in 1888, came the call to London as superintendent minister of the first circuit, and the inauguration of the notable piece of aggressive work which is now known as the King's Cross Mission.

IN DARKEST LONDON.

The circumstances were discouraging. It was to an almost deserted chapel in a back street of a dark slum district that Mr. Turner went. He surveyed the ground, and was moved with compassion for the suffering and sinful. It was impossible not to recognise that Satan had bound the people with chains of steel. The district had "a full share" of drunkards, Sabbath-breakers, and the most profligate. There were women who had seemingly lost every trace of womanly feeling, and children who were old in knowledge that defiled. Truly, it was a crushing undertaking, and the temptation came that at some quiet chapel in a respectable suburb a preferable opening might surely be found. The minister betook himself to prayer for Divine guidance. The answer came in the familiar words, "Behold, I have set before thee an open door." That was enough. Moreover, was there not a secret cheer in the following words, "No man can shut it"? So Mr. and Mrs. Turner took apartments in the district, and a new forward movement began.

Faith and energy soon resulted in a slight increase of the congregation. So far, so good. Even the most careless could be interested, if only common sense methods were adopted. But it was necessary to provide such services as would retain the interest, otherwise the last state of "Charlotte Street" would be worse than the first.

So the addresses were founded on interesting topics. The aid of the limelight lecture was enlisted. Sweet singers of the Gospel were invited to make melody to crowds of the poor. A large choir was formed, and the Sunday evening services were rendered additionally attractive by a preliminary fifteen minutes of hearty singing. The adjuration to the crowd was, "Come early if possible, but better late than not at all; anyhow, come." And they came.

A REVIVING CAUSE.

Mr. Turner knew, however, that really to reach the people more than this was necessary. A large and attentive congregation does not constitute a successful mission. They may hear the truth, but their work-a-day life is apt to quench it. Obviously, that mission succeeds the best which deals with the people most systematically and thoroughly in their own homes. To start on a visiting round of all those one-roomed homes was a gigantic task, but if a body of voluntary workers could be formed, there would be hope. It was a testimony to the growing strength of the revived cause that a number of industrious men and women volunteered to devote some hours per week to the work. In the course of a short time the "people from Charlotte Street" raided the neighbourhood. They were known in the public-houses; they were familiars in the garrets. A word spoken in season cheered the toiling washerwoman at her tub, bore up the burdened and underpaid father of a family, brought happy reminders of a better life, of a personal Saviour, in the oppressive, soot-laden plague-spots of Metropolitan misery.

REV. G. H. TURNER.
From Photograph by Mr. J. H. Killick, 389, Holloway Road, N.

This was by no means a hit-or-miss random effort. Headed by the minister, the band went forth to do steadfast battle with sin. Not only were tracts and invitations delivered from street to street, house to house, room to room, but Christ was preached. We cannot work up a revival by machinery; but if godly, praying men and women get to work in sincerity and truth, some measure of revival is certain to follow. Since those early days, step by step, and with sweat of heart and brain, a capital mission has been organized. The old chapel was modernized, an institute was opened with refreshment bar and cheap food depôt for the general public, and under the title of "The Red House" (it is painted bright vermilion), this "people's public-house" has attained wide popularity.

Out of the steady progress of the work, indeed, came many. Converts needed much advice and instruction. Moreover, living as they did in conditions of poverty, they required guidance to meet their engagements. Then, the children must be cared for, and the old mothers sheltered. In addition to a round of spiritual organizations, a savings bank, holiday fund, and various coal and Christmas clubs were started, not, be it remembered, amongst a congregation already existing, but in the midst of one built up from the rough material of which the bulk of our larger cities are made.

A PITIFUL CASE.

The work of visitation has entailed much labour, and under the continued strain, the health of Mrs. Turner has given way, but the band of voluntary workers are doing their best to cope with distress. The pathetic need for Christian effort in the district is shown by a case thus described by Mrs. Turner:—

> Mrs. ——, a respectable woman, a member of my meeting (whose husband had been long out of work), was ill, after the birth of a baby-girl. Through fear of troubling me (because she said I had so much to do), she did not send until hers was all but a hopeless case. On Christmas night I left her, in a cellar, in the greatest agony. In this one cellar were the sick woman, her husband, a boy of fifteen, another boy of seven, the baby, and a woman I had got to nurse her. They were absolutely destitute of food, fire, or anything to give comfort. Four times on Christmas Day we were in that cellar, watching what seemed to be a struggle with death. The day after, we had a nurse from the Strangers' Friend Society. She and the parish doctor kindly helped us to have the sufferer removed to the infirmary. I cannot give you a more vivid description of this case, because it is too distressing even to think about. She was away from home until Easter. During her absence the boys had their food, and made a home of our mission room whenever they liked. After a long time, the dark cloud passed away. The restored health of the wife was consecrated to Christ, and the husband became a decided Christian. Another home was got together, the children were cared for, and the parents did not forget others in like circumstances.

"THE DEVIL'S MILE."

The programme of weekly engagements in connection with the mission is a long one, but Mr. Turner, feeling the need to reach a greater number of outsiders by direct evangelism, has secured the Grand Theatre at Islington for Lord's Day afternoons and nights. The mission church will still be used, but the huge Theatre, fronting a thoroughfare which, from the character of those who promenade up and down, has come to be called "The Devil's Mile," brings new obligations; and we may prayerfully hope that the place may become an important centre of Metropolitan evangelism. Mr. Turner has undertaken a heavy responsibility, and in his work of faith and labour of love he should command the prayers and sympathy of all who rejoice in earnest effort to win the masses for Christ.

The Possibilities of Life.—The springs of all issues, good and bad, are in the heart and mind. Give me a perfect body to begin with, and if God's laws are my laws I shall keep that body perfect to the end of life's pilgrimage. No man is thoroughly acquainted with himself. There are depths and heights in his soul which he has never explored. In one environment he is a commonplace creature; in another he develops into a hero. The possibility of greatness is hidden somewhere in every man's nature. —G. H. Hepworth.

The Waiting Soul.—The Lord is the hearer of prayer. There should be waiting on Him, not only in the assembly of His people, not only with the attitude of reverent regard, in the forms of religion, but as the Psalmist puts it: "Truly my soul waiteth upon God." For salvation, for protection, He is to be sought; and whatever the trouble of our lives, we thus get stability. What can we ask? The fulfilment of the exceeding great and precious promises. But what plea can we present, weak and sinful as we are? The name that is above every name—the name of Jesus.—John Hall.

Rome's Advance.

RECENT events remind us of changes which the wheel of time has brought about, and whatever place Farnborough may have in ancient history, it has certainly an intimate association with an eventful period of modern times. The past generation has witnessed a neighbouring empire succeeded by a Republic, and during the past summer the President of that Republic has received a warm welcome in the Metropolis of our country, also at Farnborough, where he accompanied King Edward VII. to review the troops, comprising the 1st Army Corps, on Laffan's Plain, indicating the good feeling which happily exists between the two nations.

Near to the railway station of the London and South-Western Railway is the memorial church built by the ex-Empress Eugénie, and dedicated to St. Michael. It is a very sightly structure, and is seen for miles around. In the mausoleum are the remains of Napoleon III. and the Prince Imperial. The Priory, which is near by, has a covered way to the mausoleum. These buildings are on land which formerly belonged to the Parish Church, forming a portion of its glebe land, but was purchased by the Empress about a quarter of a century ago. The Priory was at first occupied by some Premonstratensian Canons Regular, and on their departure, several years ago, by the Order of Benedictines. It has undergone enlargement, and for some time past has shown indications of becoming

A LARGE MONASTIC ESTABLISHMENT.

Recently, there was the proof when the Roman Catholic Bishop of Portsmouth, and a number of Roman Catholic dignitaries from near and far, attended to carry out an edict (which was stated to be one of the last acts of the late Pope Leo XIII.), by which the Priory, or Monastery, was elevated to the higher-sounding name of Abbey, and the presiding or ruling Prior to the office of Abbot. The Empress has given the chapel, which now forms part of the Abbey, and the care of the mausoleum, to the Order; the new Abbot has to "guard faithfully the temporalities of the Monastery, and not dispose of them, even with the consent of the brethren, without the consent of the Pope."

TOO MUCH ROME!

Many Protestants, and others that are of no particular religious persuasion, but are loyal subjects of the Realm, think we are getting a great deal too much of the "See of Rome" influence in our midst, and that it augurs no good for the future of our country. Only about fifteen minutes' walk from the Abbey is the "Convent of our Lady of the Sacred Heart," and on the opposite side of the Farnborough Road is "St. Mary's Catholic High School."

At South Farnborough, in Peabody Road, is a Roman Catholic day school, which was also used as a temporary church or chapel, with St. Patrick as patron, previous to the opening of the new church, in February, 1902, of "Our Lady Help of Christians," in Queen's Road. Adjoining the church is the "Salesian Institute," where a number of orphan boys have their residence, and are taught in the day school before referred to along with other children in the neighbourhood.

Recalling the name of St. Patrick, as the temporary church was designated when held at the school, I fear it has been too often associated with the Irish freedom of St. Patrick Day, and that the real Patrick of history has been too often forgotten. The great figure of Celtic Christianity at the beginning of the fifth century should still be remembered by the hymn in which he sang:—

Christ with me, Christ before me,
Christ behind me, Christ within me,
Christ beneath me, Christ above me,
Christ at my right, Christ at my left,
Christ in breadth, Christ in length, Christ in height.

Christ in the heart of every man who thinks of me,
Christ in the mouth of every man who speaks to me,
Christ in the eye of every man that sees me,
Christ in the ear of every man that hears me.

I bind myself to-day
To a strong power, an Invocation of the Trinity:
I believe in a Threeness with confession of a Oneness in the Creator of Judgment.

Salvation is the Lord's,
Salvation is the Lord's,
Salvation is Christ's:
Let Thy Salvation, O Lord, be ever with us!

Well would it be for the rising race, and for the future of our Empire, if the spirit which breathes in this hymn were impressed on the minds of professing Christian teachers of to-day. England owes much to Ireland for her Protestantism, and because there has been indifference and a spurious return, Ireland has been a source of much trouble to our statesmen; and from one quarter or other England is at the present time being occupied by teachers of the young who are sapping the very foundations of Christian truth. Bishop Wordsworth said: "We are bound to remember that in a great measure we owe our Christianity to Ireland, and alas! we may not forget that Ireland owes her Romanism to us. For a thousand years the Church of Ireland was free and wholly independent of Rome." When will it again be so? Possibly when the professedly national Protestant Church in England sets the example of clearing out its semi-Romish teachers, and becomes in deed as well as name a bulwark of Bible Christian faith.

Miss Sharman's Homes.

THE wide circle of friends to whom the work of Miss Sharman is known, will rejoice to learn of the continued blessing which follows her efforts on behalf of orphans. Since the institution was founded in 1867 with ten little ones, no fewer than 1,674 have been cared for, educated, and prepared for fighting the battle of life. There are now 330 children under Miss Sharman's care. This is a larger number than the Homes will accommodate, but there are always some boarded out in families where they enjoy individual care.

THE RECORD OF THE YEAR.

Reviewing the past year, Miss Sharman writes:—"We began our Home year with 317 children under our care, and closed the year with a family of 330; fifty-five having left us, and sixty-eight having been admitted. Of those who left us—twenty-six were returned to their friends, sixteen were sent to service, nine were apprenticed or went into business, two were adopted, one was expelled, one died."

Miss Sharman and her helpers are frequently encouraged by seeing the fruits of their labours appearing "after many days." One of the instances recorded in the annual report is as follows:—

Many years ago a child was sent away for persistent pilfering. She seemed to disappear entirely; but seven years after she called to see me. I did not at first recognise the bright, open-faced, well-dressed young woman; but was more cheered than I can describe by hearing what she had come to tell me. She said that while in the Home she had got to feel that the round of sinning and being forgiven would go on indefinitely; but when she found that she was dismissed, her eyes were opened to see her sin and her danger, and she resolved that she would win a good character, and then come and tell me. She found herself a place of service (though she was younger than the age at which our girls go out in the regular way), had been faithful and honest, and had stayed seven years with her mistress, who gave her an excellent character.

The cheering character of the record of the large Home seems to have been shared by the country branches, and especially by the one at Gravesend. "With much thankfulness" (says Miss Sharman), "we look back upon a year of quiet, happy home-life. The health of the children has been good. This Home is fitted up for forty children, but the number is usually limited to thirty-five, one room being reserved in case of illness. It has been rarely wanted for patients, however, and is more often used for a few extra visitors from the West Square Home, who come back with country roses instead of London lilies on their cheeks."

The Tunbridge Wells Home has suffered a great sorrow in the death of Dr. Watson, who not only gave medical advice, but also took a fatherly interest in the children. Otherwise the year has been one of smooth progress. This Home accommodates twenty-one little ones, who form a bright, happy family, and great kindness is showered upon them by friends and neighbours. The many friends who sympathized with Miss Sharman in her difficulties with regard to the Seaside Home at Hastings will rejoice that the whole outlay has been defrayed, and a balance is reserved for enlarging the institution.

At the Stockwell branch, a twofold aim is kept in view—to assist those who would have had a liberal education had their parents lived, and to give advantages to girls from the other Homes who show signs of special talent. Some of the girls are doing well as shorthand writers, telegraphists, or postal clerks; others as trained nurses. One is in a good post as architectural tracer; another as a teacher and composer of music; and several have gone into institution work either at home or in the colonies.

Again and again in the course of her review of the year, Miss Sharman records tokens of the guiding hand of God being upon the labours of herself and fellow-workers in supplying the needs of the orphan. "We start again on another year, not knowing what it may bring, but with the sure confidence that He who has guided and provided through all the thirty-seven years will still be our refuge and strength and very present help." The headquarters of the Homes are Austral Street, West Square, London, S.E.

Medical Aid for the Sick Poor.

THE London Medical Mission is pursuing its beneficent work of preaching the Gospel and healing the sick among the poor of St. Giles', Bloomsbury, and Lambeth.

It is expected that this winter will be a specially hard one for our poor friends, so many being out of work, which means increase of poverty and sickness.

Many men and women lose temporary work by illness. They cannot leave for a morning to see a doctor, and in some neighbourhoods there is no provision for medical help for such during the evening.

Deaconesses, City missionaries, and others working among the poor, will be glad to learn that the Mission has arranged to provide for the treatment of the poor as follows:—Women only, Friday evenings, 7 to 8 o'clock, at the Medical Mission House, 33, Short's Gardens, Endell Street. Men and women, Thursdays, from 7 to 8 p.m., at the Medical Mission Hall, North Street, Kennington Road, S.E. Men only, Wednesdays, from 7.30 to 8.30 p.m., at the Seven Dials Mission House, 26, West Street, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.

The meetings are for those only who are at work during the day, and not for any who are in receipt of wages amounting to over 22s. a week. Those not in work can attend on Mondays and Thursdays, at 9.30 a.m., at 33, Short's Gardens, Endell Street, or at North Street, Kennington Road, on Tuesdays and Fridays, at 9.30 a.m. Any further informa- may be obtained from the secretary, at Short's Gardens.

A Unique Work Among London Outcasts. —"A Poor Law Guardian" bears, in A Night at Medland Hall, very high testimony to the good work done by this agency for reaching the homeless, friendless men of London. At Medland Hall the only qualification for a bed and a meal is poverty. Every month ten thousand free beds and fifteen thousand free meals are provided for those who otherwise would have no shelter. For less than a shilling a week a man is provided with a comfortable bed and every requisite for personal cleanliness; he has at least one substantial meal a day, and is helped to make himself independent in as short a time as possible. The man pays nothing, for the simple reason that he possesses nothing; but every expense incurred in befriending him—rent, furniture, wages, food, lighting, heating, &c.—is covered by the small sum named. The superintendent—a man full of tact and grace—is Mr. E. Wilson Gates, Memorial Hall, Farringdon St., E.C.

About India-rubber.

Hymn—Sacred Songs and Solos, No. 619.

THE other day, as I was using a piece of india-rubber, it struck me that this would be a novel and interesting subject for us to consider together.

(1) One thing I noticed was, HOW EASILY IT BENDS; and that reminded me of the man described in the "Pilgrim's Progress" as Pliable, who went part of the way with Christian from the City of Destruction towards the Heavenly City. (I hope every one of you has got a copy of that wonderful book; it is one that every boy and girl should read over and over again. If you have not got a copy, you would do well to ask your parents to give you an illustrated one for a Christmas present. You would find it a constant source of interest. But that is all "by the way").

There are many people, young and old, who are as easily twisted as india-rubber. When they are in good company they "feel good" and desire to be better; but when they are among those of another sort, all their resolutions fly off like birds out of a cage, and they yield to wrong influences as easily as they had to good ones. Remember "if sinners entice thee, consent thou not" (Prov. i. 10), and seek to "be strong in the grace which is in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim. ii. 1).

(2). Now we come to something more encouraging in regard to india-rubber, as we note that it REMOVES WRONG MARKS. We cannot undo the mistakes or sins of ourselves or of other people; but as "love covers the multitude of sins" (1 Pet. iv. 8), we can help to hide the faults of others, and turn them from the way of evil (Jas. v. 20).

This is what I mean—when we see or hear of things that others have done or said that are unwise or wrong, instead of making the most of them, telling our friends about them and perhaps exaggerating them, let us do what we can to lessen them and stop the backbiting habit that delights in running people down. This is what love does—it tries to find all the good, and not all the evil. A person who has done wrong will have to deal with God and with the one to whom the wrong has been done; and it is not for us to make it worse by spreading it abroad. The text does not mean, as Roman Catholics teach, that charity (that is, money-giving) can cover our sins, but that the true charity, which is love, will do all it can to cover the wrong-doing of others.

But sin (which is more than "mistakes" or "faults") can only be removed by Christ Himself—even as india-rubber will not remove ink-stains—for sin makes black marks deeper and darker than ink, which "nothing but the blood of Jesus" can cleanse.

(3) In doing its work india-rubber WEARS ITSELF AWAY. That means self-sacrifice, trouble, and sometimes pain. But we must not shrink even from that if we are to do good. "Spend and be spent" is the motto of those who work for Jesus.

You remember John the Baptist said he was willing to "decrease" if only his Master might "increase" thereby; and Christ called him a "burning and a shining light." I once had a talk with you on that subject, and reminded you how a candle gives of itself and its substance in order to produce the light. I have heard a minister say, "We all like to shine, but few are willing to burn!"

Do not think that to serve Christ will cost you nothing. That was Pliable's mistake. He was delighted to hear about the beautiful city where there would be no more pain, and where sighing and sorrow should flee away; but he would not face the difficulties and hardships Christian had to endure. Therefore he never reached the city and enjoyed its light and love.

But whatever sacrifice we make for Jesus, He will more than reward us, for—as Paul says: "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more and eternal weight of glory" (2 Cor. iv. 17).

(4) Then there is the india-rubber which is put upon bicycle and carriage wheels, and enables them to MOVE SILENTLY, and to give comfort to those who ride above them. This answers a double purpose, for the wheels do not make a noise and rattle to disturb other people, nor cause a "jar" to the nerves of those who use them.

The most effective way of doing good is not to make a fuss and noise about it, but to do it quietly, so that people hardly know anything about it until it is done. Little acts and words of kindness all help to lessen the worries of life; and even if they are not talked about in public, and do not win outward admiration, yet you have the satisfaction of pleasing Him who "pleased not Himself" (Rom. xv. 2).

(5) But india-rubber tyres SUFFER SILENTLY too. They get punctured and stabbed with sharp things along the road, and little bits of flint and glass stick in them which would be ground to powder by iron-tyred wheels.

How often, when someone treats us unkindly by word or deed, we "answer back" or "pay them out," and hurt them perhaps more than they have hurt us. Here again our thoughts turn to our loving Saviour, who "suffered for us, leaving us an example that ye should follow His steps; who when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered He threatened not" (1 Peter ii. 21-23); and even when He was in the hands of His enemies, "like a lamb dumb before His shearers, so opened He not His mouth" (Acts viii. 32).

Therefore, when we use our india-rubber at school or ride our bicycles let us think of these simple lessons, and try by God's grace to be "doers of the Word, and not hearers only." UNCLE TOM.

The Roll of Faith. (Heb. xi. 32-40.)

FAITH is the link between our souls and God. It is the capacity of entering into fellowship with the eternal power and love which reside in the Divine Nature, so that we are able to do all things with the sense that it is not we who do them, but God in us and with us; faith is the open door and window towards God. In faith our heart goes out towards God in clinging dependence, and God comes in to strengthen with His Divine fulness.

In human life, when we trust a man, we draw from him all that he is able to supply; and in the Divine life, faith draws upon the resources of God, so that they flow freely into our nature, and the results of our life-work are immensely increased, because of the blessed alliance between God and ourselves. If only all my young brothers and sisters who read these words would learn to unite themselves to Him by a quiet expectancy, which reckons upon the infinite resources of God, they too would be able to subdue kingdoms, work righteousness, shut the mouths of lions, out of weakness become strong, and turn to flight armies of aliens.

Faith is possible amid a great deal of ignorance. It is clear that Gideon, Barak, Samson, and Jephtha were very ignorant of those truths which the Gospel has revealed; possibly in our own time we should have spoken of them as freebooters, or chieftains of guerilla bands. And yet we learn that their work in the world was largely due to their faith. The more accurate your knowledge the more intelligent your faith; at the same time, and amid a great deal of ignorance and misconception, there may be a very pure and noble faith in God, linking itself with the Eternal. Dispensations come and go; the revelation of God grows from less to more; but the attitude of the believer is always the same, and there may be as much faith in the woman that touches the hem of the garment, because she thinks that there is some mysterious virtue there, as in John the disciple, who has had years of training in the school of Christ.

Faith links godly souls of every age. The family of the faithful is one. Those who lived in the childhood of the world, and those who shall be alive and remain at the coming of the Lord, are bound together by an invisible bond of union. The great cloud of witnesses that look down on us in the arena of our life, and which we shall join when our warfare is over, will comprise those who date from every age, as they come from every clime. Men have sought to invent a universal language, which should obliterate the distinctions of Babel; but faith has a language which is intelligible to all who believe, whether they talk Hebrew or English.

Faith achieves very different results. In some it produces the heroic strength that turns the battle from the gate; in some, the passive suffering that endures the long ordeal of pain. Here, it turns the edge of the sword; and there, shuts the mouth of the lion. We know how electricity may be applied to all the various machinery of human life. In one place it is used for the beaming light; in another to drive the motor car. Thus faith is able to appropriate God's might for any purpose that lies within the compass of the life-task. Here, men by faith accept torture, not accepting deliverance, and bear the privations of the dens and caves of the earth; and there, by faith they wax mighty in war. The active side, vv. 32-34; the passive, in vv. 35-39.

God bears a witness to all who trust Him. He never fails them in the hour of need. His response is the echo of their appeal. As soon as the uplifted arm of the tramcar touches the overhead wire, there is the blue spark, and the immediate entrance of the electric power. Similarly God answers faith. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

The Tiverton Baptist Endeavourers held a jumble sale recently, and out of the proceeds have sent £6 towards the new Endeavour steamer for the Congo.

During last week seventeen new societies were registered with the Christian Endeavour Union of Great Britain and Ireland. This brings the total number of registered societies in the United Kingdom to 8,700.

* * *

The anniversary meeting of the Church of England Union of Christian Endeavour was held a few days ago at St. Thomas's Hall, Lambeth, S.E. (Rev. J. B. Barraclough's). The meeting was well attended and full of interest, the secretary reporting nearly fifty affiliated societies and several just starting. Unfortunately neither Rev. F. J. Horsefield nor Rev. W. R. Mowll was able to be present, the former owing to illness, but Mr. Mowll sent an excellent substitute in Mr. Stuart, also of Christ Church, Brixton, who gave a most practical and helpful address. The whole note of the meeting was thankfulness, as from the many cheering inquiries received from all parts of the kingdom, Christian Endeavour is certainly spreading in the Church of England.

The Dedication of the Temple (1 Kings viii. 1-11, 62, 63).

Golden Text.—Psa. cxxii. 1.

THE building of the first Temple for the worship of Jehovah in Jerusalem was the chief event in the reign of King Solomon. He was appointed by God (1 Chron. xxii. 9, 10), commanded by David (xxviii. 10), authorized by the congregation of Israel (xxix. 20), and purposed himself to do it (2 Chron. ii. 1).

Materials and Workmen. 1. Collected, imported, prepared by King David (1 Chron. xxii. 3, 5; xxix. 2). Given from his personal wealth (xxix. 3). Offered by princes and people (xxix. 6-9). Solomon imported from Lebanon by Tyre and Sidon cedar, fir, and algum wood ready cut (2 Chron. ii. 8-16). The brass was molten by Hiram's men in the clay grounds of Jordan (2 Chron. iv. 16, 17). Stones hewn and made ready in the quarries still to be seen under Jerusalem. Gold from Ophir and Parvaim. Purple from Tyre (2 Chron. ii. 14). Israel were not builders, so David and Solomon employed the strangers among them (1 Chron. xxii. 2; 2 Chron. ii. 17), also hired foreigners (1 Kings v. 9; 2 Chron. ii. 13, 14). Consecrated service is harmonious and faithful (John xvii. 23.)

The Situation. On Mount Moriah, where Abraham built an altar and laid his son thereon (Gen. xxii. 2-9). Where David built an altar, and marked the place for the Temple (1 Chron. xxi 18-26). On the east of Jerusalem (2 Chron. iii. 1). Built to pattern (3). Foundations sure—of rock on rock (1 Kings v. 17). Silently erected (vi. 7). Under the Lord's inspection (12, 13). Time, seven and half years. Then the dedicated things were brought in (2 Chron. v. 1). Musical instruments, King David's gift also (2 Chron. xxix. 27, 28).

The Dedication.

The elders had place of honour in the procession (3). From Gibeon, six miles north of Jerusalem, was brought the tabernacle, the brazen altar, holy vessels, the book of the law (2 Chron. v. 5), placed there (Deut. xxxi. 26), found (2 Kings xxii. 8). From Mount Zion in the south was borne by the priests the Ark of the Covenant (1 Chron. xvi. 1). Solomon and the congregation met them with sacrifice at the court of the Temple. Thus at the Feast of Tabernacles the symbol of God's presence ceased to dwell in a tent (2 Sam. vii. 6; 1 Kings viii. 6).

When the song of praise rose "as one sound" from the great orchestra (2 Chron. v. 12, 13),

The Glory of the Lord Filled the House.

So in Moses' time in the tabernacle (Ex. xxxiv. 34, 35), and when the new wall of Jerusalem was belted with thanksgiving (Neh. xii. 27, 31, 40, 43), the priests could not stand to minister.

Solomon's prayer, from the brass scaffold in front of the porch, kneeling for himself and his people under various circumstances, and the stranger and the priest, in joy or sorrow, sickness or drought, famine, war or banishment. Hear, answer, forgive. The Lord answered by fire on the burnt-offering (2 Chron. vii. 1). "The Lord appeared to Solomon" (12, 17) with assurance and solemn warning. The feast lasted fourteen days. The people went to their tents joyful and glad.

Special Points.

(1) The beautiful temple at Jerusalem was a type, not of the building in which we worship, but of the Church, the Body of Christ (1 Cor. iii. 9; xii. 12, 28). His Holy Spirit dwells in His Church, to illumine, fill, glorify, and give life more abundant. There are "small stones" as well as large ones, bright and glistening (1 Chron. xxix. 2), precious and commonplace. Whichever I am I must come to Jesus for life, if I am to fit into His Spiritual Temple (1 Peter ii. 4-7). He is the Living Stone, the Chief Corner-Stone. The "hinges" were of gold. May I be a peacemaker! The "flowers" on the doors and the "tongs" were of "perfect gold" (2 Chron. iv. 21; Mal. iii. 3).

(2) Jesus Christ is the Mercy-Seat and the Ark (for He kept the law perfectly). He has entered "the holy place" for you (Heb. ix. 12, 24), to give you His Holy Spirit (John xiv. 17; xvi. 7). Jehovah-Jireh was Mount Moriah (Gen. xxii. 8, 14; Rom. viii. 16), (3) God visited Solomon in the midst of his work (1 Kings vi. 12, 13). He desires to dwell with us, so that we may be in His Temple (Rev. xxi. 22). Let Him "silently plan" for you.

GLADNESS IN THE LORD.

An Italian poet once inquired of Haydn the reason why his church music was usually of a happy and animating character. The famous composer answered, "I cannot make it otherwise. I write according to the thoughts I feel; when I think upon God my heart is so full of joy that notes dance and leap, as it were, from my pen. Since God has given me a cheerful heart, it will be easily forgiven me that I serve Him with a cheerful spirit." "I was glad," sang the Psalmist, "when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord" (Golden Text). If our hearts are in tune to worship God, we shall be joyful at the prospect of entering His courts.

THE GLORY OF GOD'S PRESENCE.

King Leopold of Belgium has a building attached to his palace, which is described as "the most remarkable place of worship on the Continent." It is built of glass, and has the appearance of a large conservatory. It is circular in form, and is supported by twenty granite pillars. Palms, ferns, and flowers are used for decoration, and the altar-piece is made of stone. Better than this, the poorest of us may have a temple dedicated to the Lord, and to us it may be a holy place, fitted with the cloud, the Shekinah, the glory of the Divine presence (v. 10). Both to prince and peasant, such a manifestation is gloriously possible, and we may rejoice in the possession of God, though the externals of our temple may compare unfavourably with the splendour of Solomon's house or the beauty of the palace of the Belgian King.

A FAMILY ALTAR.

John Howard, the philanthropist, was very particular with regard to family worship. He always said that wherever he had a tent God should have an altar. If only one servant was present, John Howard's duty was discharged, and the presence of an outsider was not allowed to interfere with the practice. We should erect an altar in our homes, and permit nothing to come between us and our God. Family prayer is the visible sign of such a dedication to the Lord, and in the family circle many of us have learnt to offer our sacrifices to our heavenly Father. When King Solomon offered sacrifice before the Lord, all Israel joined him (v. 62). So we may be the means of bringing others to worship God if we do our duty in this respect.

Worthing Convention.—After a long interval, a convention has again been held in Mrs. Ough's Mission Hall, Crescent Road. It has been, indeed, a time of refreshing "from the presence of the Lord," and several of the Lord's people have been greatly helped, the attendances being very good. Mr. H. W. Maynard and Colonel Walkey presided; and Revs. F. Paynter, W. Houghton, J. J. Luce, and J. B. Figgis, gave deeply spiritual and Scriptural addresses, for which the local organizers of these gatherings desire to thank them warmly. The convention had the sympathy of practically all the Evangelical ministers of the town, both Church of England and Free Churchmen, although some were prevented from attending by other engagements. It is felt that the Lord, by this convention, has been blessing the seed sown for many years in the town by past and present faithful ministers of His Word; and has also been teaching His children what is meant by "true separation unto God," so needed in these days of compromising alliance between the Church and the world.—C. THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

FURTHER PROGRESS AT MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

DURING the last week the meetings have been most largely attended, and the outward results most conspicuous. Three meetings a day have been continued—for business men at midday, for Christians at three o'clock, and for the unsaved in the evenings. Sunday-school scholars have been appealed to by means of cards distributed to teachers, and a great meeting for the children has been held. Men and women of every grade, and children of various classes, have come under the sound of the Gospel message, and at all the gatherings evidence of much power has been made manifest.

ADDRESSES TO BUSINESS-MEN.

In one sense the most telling and virile of the addresses have been those at the service for men. The closing one, on "What does the Resurrection of Christ prove?" was a powerful deliverance. Having in previous addresses proved the fact of the Resurrection, Dr. Torrey pointed out what the established fact proved—(1) that the prophecy of Jesus concerning Himself was fulfilled; (2) that Jesus was a Teacher sent from God; (3) the Divinity of Christ; (4) that there is a Judgment-Day; (5) that everyone united to Christ by faith is justified from his sins; (6) that all who believe in Him must rise also; (7) that he who trusts in Christ can have daily victory over sin.

He related with vivid and incisive power the circumstances of the death of the atheist, Colonel Ingersoll, and of the Christian, D. L. Moody. The contrast was awful in its impressiveness. The Christian is victorious over death. The address closed with an illustration of the keeping power of the risen Christ. Four men were climbing the Matterhorn—two guides and two tourists. One guide went first, to whom was roped one tourist, then followed the second guide, and the second tourist behind him, all roped together. On a difficult and slippery part of the mountain the last man slipped, and pulled after him the guide nearest to him, and that pulled down the second tourist; but the first guide immediately he felt the first sign of the pull struck his staff into the ice, and so held fast. The other three men regained their footing and the four together reached the summit.

The first Adam fell, and the one next to him fell, and the next again, yea, the whole human race fell, but our Leader and Guide held fast. He is able to rescue the fallen and to bring them to Himself and to the heavenly home. The two addresses on Infidelity—its causes, consequences, and cure—were masterly and convincing and searching utterances. At the close of the series the great audience of men broke out into spontaneous applause.

ON THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Dr. Torrey's earlier afternoon addresses were on Prayer, but this last week they have dealt with the need of a baptism of the Spirit. How to obtain that baptism he explained on Thursday afternoon. There are seven steps—First, repentance, change of mind towards Christ; second, repentance, change of mind towards sin; third, open confession of Christ; fourth, obedience; fifth, asking in the sense of inward yearning; sixth, asking in the sense of making a definite request; seventh, faith. All these steps were illustrated from Scripture, and especially from Acts ii. 38: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins; and ye shall receive the Holy Spirit"; and 1 John v. 14, 15: "This is the confidence that we have towards him, that if we ask anything according to his will . . . we know that we have the petitions that we have asked of him."

THE CHILDREN'S MEETING.

A more unfavourable day for bringing a host of children from the suburbs and outlying districts into the city it would have been difficult to think of than was Saturday afternoon. There was a fog accompanied by a steady downpour of rain; yet, by the time for beginning the meeting the vast St. James's Hall was filled to overflowing with young people from the various Sunday-schools. It was, indeed, a beautiful sight from the platform to behold the many thousands of young faces looking upward to the speaker and giving close attention throughout. We would beforehand have pictured Mr. Alexander, with his genial face and ready resourcefulness, as an essential part of this meeting, but we were much disappointed to find he could not be present, and still more so for the cause of his absence. He was confined to his room with a touch of influenza. Dr. Torrey spoke from the story of Naaman. He referred to him as "General" Naaman, and asked who the greatest general in the British Army was. Some said Lord Roberts, others Kitchener, and others Buller. Dr. Torrey asked them to vote on each of these. A good number of hands went up for Lord Roberts, much fewer for Kitchener, and quite a large majority for Buller!

The Doctor spoke in a strong, clear, kind, and fatherly way to his great audience of little folks. He guessed they liked stories, and didn't like sermons. He would give them a sermon with plenty of stories in it. He said a child can do five things—(1) can be a true Christian; (2) can pray; (3) can witness for Christ; (4) can plead; (5) can get victory over death. All these points he illustrated with telling instances. At the close he invited first those of sixteen years of age and upwards who would accept Christ to come to the front. A large number responded, and then younger ones came forward, until there was quite a host of them, so that the staff of workers was taxed to the utmost to know how to deal with them. The Hall was again crowded on Saturday evening, and Mr. Alexander was still absent. A very large number of converts were brought in at the close.

MEETING FOR WOMEN.

On Sunday afternoon the hall was packed with women, and an overflow meeting of over 2,000 (women and men) was held in the adjoining theatre. The latter was conducted by Rev. Abbey Tindall. Men were admitted to the choirs at St. James's Hall, where Dr. Torrey gave the address. The audience was apparently composed mainly of Christian women. Mr. Alexander was again absent. He went to Liverpool the latter part of last week, and has been detained there with influenza. It is expected he will be at the closing meeting on Monday night.

"MEN ONLY."

For the evening, the meeting had been advertized as one for men only. Dr. Torrey had said that while he could let men be present at the women's meeting, there were things he wanted to say to men by themselves. Some concern and anxiety was felt as to the possibility of filling the hall with men. Careful organizing and much hard work had been put into the preparation for it under the direction of Mr. Ernest Matthews of the Manchester City Mission (who has been most devoted and energetic in manifold ways), and the hall was crowded to its utmost capacity with men. There was also an overflow meeting, which filled the theatre (men and women), at which Dr. Warren spoke. The subject dealt with by Dr. Torrey with the men was SIN. He treated it in a strong and searching way, and at the close over 250 men and lads came forward. It was a meeting to be remembered by all who were present. Over 4,000 inquirers have been dealt with.

CLOSING MEETING.

The closing meeting on Monday night was decidedly the crown of all the wonderful meetings of the month. Thousands of people had to be turned away because they could not obtain admission, the hall being crowded an hour before the advertised time for commencing. Mr. Alexander was able, though looking pale, to be present, and the audience cheered as he entered, and sung the Doxology when he came on to the rostrum to lead the singing. The hymns, which had become familiar by now, were sung with deep enjoyment by all. Dr. Torrey's address was on "Rejoice in the Lord always." It was a very able and most impressive sermon. At the close a large number confessed Christ. After Dr. Torrey had addressed the inquirers, Mr. Alexander gave his most interesting and telling account of his experience with "Second Timothy two-fifteen." The Mission was brought to a close with the singing of "God be with you till we meet again," and prayer. The Torrey-Alexander mission in Manchester during November, 1903, will be long remembered, and its strong and permeating influence will yet spread far and wide. We "render thanks to the Giver."

MASS MEETING OF SCHOOLBOYS.

A mass meeting was held last Wednesday afternoon for schoolboys. Mr. Alexander conducted a preliminary song service while the four or five hundred boys were assembling.

The singing was splendid. Row by row all down the hall Mr. Alexander got the boys to sing the now familiar words—"Never lose sight of Jesus." The best song was "the surrender all." Mr. Alexander said he had never heard any audience sing it as well for the first time. There is something in it that appeals to a boy, There is something strangely strong and manly in surrendering to the claims of Jesus Christ.

Mr. R. Lowe, Mr. Alexander's secretary, and Mr. R. Harkness, the pianist, both spoke briefly on the manliness of being a servant and soldier of Christ. A short address followed by Mr. G. R. Harding Wood, the local secretary of the Scripture Union in connection with the Children Special Service Mission. Several names were enrolled for the School Boys' Scripture Union.

At the close of the meeting, all anxious to inquire the way of life were invited to accept a copy of Dr. Torrey's booklet, "God's Sure Promise." This was then carefully read and briefly explained, and boys were asked to take it home and, after prayer, to sign it honestly. All intending to do so were invited to leave their names and addresses before leaving the hall, and no less than 107 names were handed in.

A Visitor's Impressions.

The concluding days of the mission were truly remarkable. On Saturday last there was a great meeting for children, at which fully 8,000 were present, while at the night meeting, which was marked by deep solemnity, about 9,000 people listened intently to the Gospel message. Lord's Day was indeed a crowning time. The meeting for women was densely crowded, many being unable to gain admission. The sermon was on the words, "Except a man be born again." The service for men, which was held in the evening, was one of the most striking that it has been my privilege to witness. Speaking on "Fools make a mock of sin," Dr. Torrey spoke in plain, earnest, pointed terms, and the effect was most powerful. On this occasion, as at the other meetings, there was an instant response, hundreds coming forward to seek the Lord Jesus. The scene at the close was full of enthusiasm, as troops of friends crowded round Dr. Torrey, bidding him to haste back soon.

On Monday last, a reception was held by Mr. Anson, at which several friends gave striking testimony to the widespread effects of the mission. Mr. Murray, a staunch supporter, spoke cordially, and Rev. J. E. Roberts (Dr. Maclaren's successor at Union Chapel) told with deep feeling of the blessing which he had personally received. Mr. W. J. Crossley also bore witness, and one clergyman spoke touchingly of the blessing which had come to his little daughter of thirteen, who had yielded to Christ, while the governess, who accompanied her, had also been impressed. To the delight of all, Mr. Alexander, who had been ill for some days, was able to be present. Looking back on the mission one rejoices that the outstanding feature was the manifestation of the power of the Holy Ghost in the preaching of a present salvation. Robert Scott.

Incidents at the Missions.

ATTRACTED TO MANCHESTER.

One man who had come from South Africa said he could not rest in London when he heard of the big mission in Manchester, so came straight through to join in the services.

CONVERSIONS IN THE HOME.

A young man in the Manchester choir was converted, and he has been testifying for Christ in the neighbourhood where he lives. Through his faithful life and words, a mother and a daughter have been led to Jesus Christ.

EIGHT C.E. ASSOCIATES CONVERTED.

A Manchester correspondent writes that during the Torrey-Alexander Mission there a large number of young people, who had been more or less frequent in their attendance at Endeavour meetings, have been won for Christ. In one society eight of the associate members are among the converts.

INSTEAD OF THE THEATRE.

A lady was anxious that her husband should accompany her to the Mission one evening; but he preferred to go to the theatre. On the way into town she kept praying that something would happen to bring them to the hall. Just as they were entering the tram they met the gentleman's mother. "Are you going to Dr. Torrey's Mission?" she asked. "Yes," said the lady, and her husband had no alternative but to accompany them. That night he was converted.

"GET RIGHT WITH GOD"

"On Tuesday morning, November 3, at 8 a.m., we gave cards to the business men who came into the city on the train. I gave one and a tract to a young business man," says a correspondent. "The words 'Get right with God,' gave him no rest. On the Monday night following in St. James's Hall, at the close of the meeting, he came to me and said, 'I want to thank you for giving me that card at Exchange Station, "Get right with God," I want to tell you I have given my heart to Jesus Christ, and He has saved me. I can now say I am right with God through Him my Saviour.'"

A GAMBLER CONVERTED

"On Wednesday night this week I was dealing with a man in the hall," writes a Manchester worker, "who said he was brought up in America, and hearing of the evangelists he came into the hall just because they were Americans. I gave him the Word faithfully, yet he did not seem prepared to yield. Just then up came a young man I had dealt with last Wednesday night. His face was all aglow, and he told me he had read John's Gospel through. I said, 'Look here, have you not a word to say for your Master to this man?' He turned to him recommending Christ, and said, 'Will you listen to a man who was a professional gambler, used to attend all race meetings, and could make £6 weekly. My becoming a Christian brought me 30s. a week, but that is better with Christ than all the other.'"

A CONVERTED ATHEIST.

One of the most eager workers during the mission in Manchester was a man who used to be just as zealous years ago against Christianity. He has written the story of how he came out of darkness into light. He tells how he was brought up in the faith of the Established Church, and confirmed by the late Bishop Fraser. "The contentions between the 'High' and 'Low' Church parties," he says, "soon drew me into the study of what is called the 'Higher Criticism.' I read Strauss, Renan, Fichte, Hegel, Schopenhauer, and other metaphysicians, and soon became a philosophical Deist. These, in turn, gave way to more extreme critics and opponents of Christianity." Finally he became a materialistic atheist, and under Bradlaugh's teaching developed into an active anti-Christian propagandist. It was a journey of 16,000 miles through the United States that proved the turning point in this worker's experience. "The still, small voice began to make itself heard within me. 'Surely all this varied panorama is not the result of fortuitous circumstances, blind chance, matter, and force?' I asked myself. I fell on my knees and humbly asked for light. It came like a flood, such glorious, wondrous light! It was that Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Returning home, this friend confessed Christ, and began to work for Him, and during the month's mission his zeal has been much owned.

The Evangelists' Mail-Bag.

"I SURRENDER ALL."

A convert writes:—I thank God for your work in Manchester. I came to hear you last Wednesday night, and told my wife I was coming. I have learnt since she was praying for me all the time. You took for your text, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" That was exactly my case—neglecting, doing nothing. When the hymn, "My Mother's Prayer," was sung it brought memory back to the time when my saintly mother passed away, and I knelt by her bedside and promised to meet her in heaven. This hymn broke me down, and when the next one came, "I Surrender All," I could not sing it, and so left the meeting. But the words of your text and "I Surrender All" kept ringing in my ears. I could not get away from these thoughts. Theatre going and card playing I felt I could not give up; but on Sunday night out came the family Bible. After reading a chapter or two, down I sank on my knees, and my wife beside me, and all was surrendered to Jesus. Now I can sing "I Surrender All." I hope to hear you again this week, and purpose bringing others to the meetings in the hope they be blessed also.

A NOTE OF THANKFULNESS.

Mr. Alexander received the following interesting letter recently from a Manchester friend:—I am delighted to hear of several of our young men and women, belonging to our Sunday-school, coming out for Christ during last week, and hope to hear of more during this week. I expect some of our children will be coming on Saturday in charge of a few teachers. I have taught them to sing, "Never Lose Sight of Jesus." I told them not to be afraid to sing it on Saturday if you have that one. I myself am delighted with the Mission; the memory will be with us when you are gone. I have a lively recollection of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit. There is one hymn that was a great favourite with Mr. Moody, "The Crowning Day." He used to sing the chorus over and over again. I have never heard it sung since. I have sung it to myself hundreds of times, and always think of their mission at the same time. I wrote three weeks ago to a brother of mine in Nebraska, in your country, asking him to join me in prayer for this mission. Thank God, He is answering prayer. Two of my daughters are in your choir, and they don't forget to tell me the facings you put them through. May God keep you and Brother Torrey in good health to prosecute the work with greater vigour than ever. I was afraid this damp Manchester weather would break you both down in voice. Thank God it has not.'

WORKING GIRLS CONVERTED.

Writing to Dr. Torrey, the matron of Charter Street Ragged School and Working Girls' Home, Manchester, says:—It will no doubt interest you to know that thirteen of the girls belonging to the above Home have during the mission testified to the love and power of Christ to save, and, since their open confession in St. James's Hall, have, by their conduct in the Home, shown a desire and determination to prove that life is indeed worth living when the Saviour is a daily companion. In several of their places of employment they have been the means of bringing to the mission others, who have been also blessed, and are realizing the fact that to know Jesus is happiness in this life, and will be glory in heaven above. In this home working-girls who only get small wages may have kitchen and sitting-room accommodation, also a separate bedroom, for 1s. 6d. per week.

ECHOES FROM DUNDEE.

Since the mission in Dundee, a young man who professed has been much ridiculed by a companion, but has stood true. Not only so, but he has decided to give up his situation, as he has to do so many tricks in his business. Meetings have been started in Downfield (a suburb) by several Christians, and about twenty have professed conversion. A man left the meeting one night under deep conviction, and while crossing a field on his way home determined to give himself to Christ there and then, which he did. On reaching home he told his wife, who has been a Christian for ten years. They immediately commenced family worship. He laid his tobacco pipe on the mantlepiece, and told his wife he had no desire to smoke any more.

ECHOES FROM DR. TORREY.

You will never obtain the baptism of the Holy Spirit until you come to the place of absolute surrender to God.

You can't keep your sin and have salvation.

You can't have salvation unless you belong to the sinner family.

There are thousands going down to eternal darkness just because of the pride which won't let them take the sinner's place.

There will not be one soul in heaven that was not saved by the atoning blood.

We need a Christ for us on the cross for our justification, and we need a Christ in us for our sanctification.

What the whole world needs to see to-day is Christ dwelling in the heart, and manifesting Himself in the life of the believer.

Many people would like to be Christians, but are held back by the fear of man.

The only things God asks you to give up are the things that are doing you harm.

Our hearts will never be satisfied with mere philosophical speculations.

The heart of obedience is absolute surrender to God.

While you are enjoying the world you are losing the joy there is in Christ.

You can save ten drunkards where you can save one miser.

It is the birthright of every believer in a crucified and risen Saviour to be baptized with the Holy Spirit.

When God gave His best in His only begotten Son, He is not going to withhold anything from you that is for your good.

In the resurrection power of Jesus Christ I can have the victory over sin every day, every hour, and every moment.

A truth-seeker lives up to the light he has, but a mere caviller makes any difficulty he may find an excuse for not living up to the truth he knows.

FROM OUR LATEST NEWS-LETTERS:

"Our relief work is assuming larger proportions. Cold weather is upon us, and the need of bed-covering is appalling; there is no call for beds as the peasants are accustomed to sleep on the bare ground. Thus far we have distributed 408 woollen carpets, many of them large enough to cover a good-sized family. Flour is doled out in small quantities from our store here, and many loads have been sent to Resna. We have bought altogether a little over 10,000 lbs. of flour."

"Snow has covered all the ground in this region, and is frozen hard; there is a great lack of bed-covering at night."

Contributions should be promptly forwarded to Rev. W. A. ESSERY, Hon. Sec., Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society, 7, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C.

THIS was the first charity called a "Home" and the earliest attempt to make Cottage Homes.

Five Hundred homeless and destitute boys, most of whom are not eligible for other institutions, are given Christian homelife, educated, and trades taught.

Admission is not given because of the respectability of deceased parents, or their family. The need of the child, his lack of home training and Christian teaching, are the chief matters considered.

Will those who sympathise with destitute children help in the saving of these poor boys?

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Gipsy Smith at Highbury Quadrant.

GIPSY SMITH'S last mission but one in this country prior to his departure on an evangelistic tour through South Africa was held at Highbury Quadrant Congregational Church (Rev. W. J. Dawson's) from the 22nd to the 30th of November. At one of the meetings Mr. Dawson frankly acknowledged that he had been richly blessed during intercourse with Gipsy Smith at Brighton, and that the present mission was the outcome.

Gipsy Smith's effectiveness in evangelism, his crisp, vivid style of speaking, and unfailing sympathy in seeking to win souls, are so well known that one need only say, in order to convey an adequate impression of the Highbury Mission, that all the familiar features of "a Gipsy Smith mission" were in evidence. As for crowds, it was impossible to accommodate them. The spacious building was well filled every night, and on the two Lord's Days great crowds were turned away from the doors.

The meetings, rich in spiritual results, became the common theme of comment in the district. The neighbourhood is largely a residential one of superior character, but many classes of the community were represented. The addresses were marked by incisiveness and directness of appeal. There was the scathing word that brought conviction, and the wooing note of invitation to the Saviour's feet.

One of the inquiry-room workers writes:—"Times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord" have been experienced. The mission was preceded by meetings for conference and prayer, especially for Christian workers, on several successive Saturday evenings. At some of the meetings, Rev. W. J. Dawson presided, and they were truly seasons of grace and sweet delight, proving to those assembled times of spiritual quickening, and equipment for service through the manifest presence and power of the Holy Spirit. It was felt, indeed, that the mission had already begun in the hearts of the workers in an increase of spiritual fervour and earnest prayer beforehand. A goodly number of willing workers, some from neighbouring churches, eagerly accepted the blessed opportunity of giving counsel, instruction and comfort, and many of the enquirers appear to have been truly converted and regenerated by the power of the Holy Spirit.

The cases dealt with have emphasized to the mind of the writer that those who have the conduct of religious organizations ought to use means so that persons engaged in, or closely associated with, Bible-classes and Sunday-School work should be urged to seek definite and unmistakable assurance of saving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; and workers in dealing with professed inquirers should be on the watch, and by Divine Grace seek to be prevented from "daubing with untempered mortar" (Ez. xiii 11). One case dealt with was that of a young gentleman who had been for a long time in close connection with religious work, and was under a burden of grief at giving friends the impression that he was a Christian, for an address of Gipsy Smith had led him to realize he was without saving faith. After some conversation and prayer, both by the writer and the seeker, he was led into light and comfort.

Two gatherings were specially impressive. The midnight meeting on Thursday night, Nov. 26, when after a long march through several streets, accompanied by a Salvation Army band (cards of invitation being distributed at public-houses and others on the route), a great company of veritable "men and women in the street" attended the church. Numbers went into the inquiry-room and yielded themselves to "Love's resistless power." The meeting for men only on Sunday afternoon, November 29, was attended by about 1,800 men. The great volume of sound of their voices in song was truly inspiring. Earnest addresses were given by the Mayor of Islington (Mr. A. M. Torrance), Rev. W. J. Dawson, and Mr. E. Smallwood, and afterwards searching and salutary warnings and exhortations were given by Gipsy Smith, and again numbers went into the inquiry-room. Already Mr. Dawson has decided that the good work shall be continued, and has arranged for a weekly evangelistic service on Thursday evenings, a meeting for prayer on Saturday evenings, and a meeting for men only on Sunday afternoon, December 20, and after that on the last Sunday afternoon in each month. May "the pleasure of the Lord prosper in his hand!"

Leicester Ragged School Mission.

A fifteen-days' mission, conducted by Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelization Society, London, in the Mission Hall of the Ragged School Mission, Bedford Street, Leicester, has just been brought to a conclusion. Mr. Collins held the attention and interest of the people in his Gospel messages, and very heart searching was the closing service, which was attended by nearly 300 people. Many testimonies of conversion and quickening in spiritual life were freely given at the meetings, and the neighbourhood, densely populated as it is with the poorest classes, but few of whom frequent a place of worship, will be the better for the spiritual life now penetrating in the midst of it. H. L.

At Derby Races.

In co-operation with Rev. J. E. Matthews, vicar of St. Peter's, Derby, five evangelists of the Open-Air Mission have just laboured on the racecourse of that town.

The races were held during three days, and God enabled His servants to put forward a living testimony among thousands of men hardened in sin, who were thus brought face to face with eternal realities by speech and song.

Though the gambling spirit was intense and very general, there was, for the most part, a respectful attitude towards the preachers. Some services were held on the racecourse itself; others near the wall over which the people were looking to see the races; and the evening services were held in the Market Place.

Among the cases of rejoicing was that of a young man, who on the Thursday night had been entering heartily into the service, and at the close spoke to one of the evangelists, and told how he had been brought to the Lord through the Open-air Mission last year on the same spot. There was evidence, too, on this occasion that many a nail was fastened in a sure place. Tears were seen in many eyes, and anxious ones were spoken to by the evangelists, while decisions for Christ were not wanting.

A Mission to Young Men.

A fortnight's special evangelistic effort among the young men of the City of London has been in progress at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. Mr. J. B. Wookey addressed men's meetings nightly in each week, and on the two Sunday afternoons, assistance being rendered in the singing by Messrs. Goodrich and Earley, members of the Fisk Jubilee Singers' Choir.

The venerable founder of the Y.M.C.A., Sir George Williams, showed his personal interest in the effort by giving a reception on one of the evenings; and, in spite of his more than eighty years, was present in person to welcome the 300 young men who accepted his invitation.

Mr. Wookey has a deep knowledge of the tragedy of life, and appeals very strongly to the sympathetic side. His addresses were full of references to the facts of every-day life and the influence of habit on character, while the Lord Jesus Christ was powerfully set forth as the one Saviour who is able to deliver from every temptation. He preached, in fact, a gospel of life, and many young men during the fortnight were undoubtedly led to enter upon a new career. A very interesting feature in the mission was the measure in which the members of the Association were used in inducing friends to attend the addresses, and there to accept Christ as their Lord and Master. B. H.

Messrs. Olney and Spencer Johnson.

At the united invitation of the members and workers of Haddon Hall, Bermondsey New Road, S.E., Mr. William Olney and Mr. F. Spencer Johnson have conducted a ten-days' mission. Over 100 workers volunteered to visit the homes of the people, inviting them to the services. We had crowded meetings, and many inquirers were dealt with in the inquiry room after each service. Many decision-cards were given, and 102 have been returned signed a day or two after the decision was made. We have also received thirty-three letters from young children under twelve years of age professing their simple trust in Christ. When Mr. Johnson gave his life story the hall was crowded, and Mr. Olney conducted an overflow meeting in the schoolroom. Of a truth this has been "a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." To him alone be the glory! S. J. Taylor.

Messrs. Olney and Johnson have held a very effective ten days' mission at the Baptist Church, Blackhill, co. Durham. Never in the history of the church were scenes witnessed to compare with those of the two Sunday evenings during the mission. Long before the time of commencement crowds were thronging the doors, and by six o'clock church and adjoining schoolroom were packed with those eager to listen to the Gospel message, while numbers were unable to obtain admission. Very greatly has God used His servants during the memorable ten days to the blessing of souls. The work among the elder scholars was specially blessed.

The last night, when Mr. Johnson gave his lecture and life's story, was one never to be forgotten. The church was crowded. Many kinds of people were in the congregation, Roman Catholics as well as Protestants. A. Waugh, Pastor.

These evangelists have since laboured for eight days at the "Freehold" Mission, New Southgate. The district is a very needy one, and there were manifest tokens of blessing.

Work in Scotland.

At Motherwell, Rev. John McNeill has finished a fortnight's remarkable Mission, the feeling among some of the leading workers being that there has been nothing like it in the town for many years. There have been striking and noteworthy cases of conversion among both church-goers and non-church goers. Some who have not been inside a place of worship for years have been reached and saved, and the language of the hearts of many of God's people is that the Lord hath done great things for them in answering their prayers, for which they are glad. On the closing Sunday Mr. McNeill preached four times; in Brandon U.F. Church at 11.30; in the Town Hall to men at four o'clock; in the same place to women at six, and again in the Town Hall at eight to all and sundry who managed to push themselves in. Many had to turn away, room to stand not being even obtainable, so dense was the crush.

Meetings among the men at the steel works formed one of the outstanding features of the Mission. In one of the public works Mr. McNeill had meetings at the meal hours, but at another he held meetings at closing time. It was a brave endeavour, but he had his reward, for the men instead of running home, crowded around him. It has been a season of wonderful stir.

Mr. William Hill has been at Methil, in Fife, for a month, and souls have been won for Christ. The meetings held in the Co-operative Hall have been largely attended on Sundays, and on the very first night, while the Gospel was being preached, one soul entered into light, only disclosing the fact a week later. A conference was held on the third Saturday of the Mission, Rev. W. D. Moffat, from Edinburgh, and others, taking part, and at its close a great open-air demonstration was held, at which testimonies to Christ's saving power were borne by a number of friends.

Mr. Samuel McKenzie, who has been evangelizing in Sutherlandshire, has had the joy of seeing the hand of the Lord with him in his work. He has been labouring within the bounds of the U. F. Presbytery, of Dornoch, in Brora and Invershin, and many have professed to yield themselves to the Lord. J. C.

In Dartmoor Prison.

A remarkable mission has been held at Dartmoor Convict Prison, by Mr. Arthur Hanson, of the Church Army. As he had visited Dartmoor before, many of the men looked forward to the mission, and entered heartily into the services. Several new Gospel solos were introduced, the vast congregation joining in the choruses. The addresses were of a simple character, and must be productive of good.

The following letter, received during the Mission, was read to the men: "As a man who has spent fifteen or sixteen consecutive Christmas Days in prison, and mostly in a convict prison, and that prison Dartmoor, I thought I could speak as one who had gone through the mill, and would like to tell the men at Dartmoor what the Lord Jesus Christ has done for me, and what He will do for them if they will accept Him. I accepted Christ as my Saviour at the outset of my last sentence, and the knowledge that the precious blood of Christ had cleansed my sin, enabled me to work out my sentence manfully, to do my daily work with steady, plodding patience, to think less of self, and to help others whenever I had the chance. It enabled me every day to take advantage of the solitude to study for self-improvement, the effects of which I am feeling every day. The knowledge I gained there I am earning money with now. The Bible knowledge I gained there is invaluable to my Christian life, and in running the Christian race. I asked the Lord Jesus Christ to fit me for liberty, He is doing so. I asked Him to find me work, He did so. I asked Him to find me true friends, He did so. I have more kind friends now than I ever had before in my life. Dear Mr. Hanson, urge them to accept Jesus now, now, now, and then all the rest will follow. 'Only trust Him.' This is not the testimony of an outsider, but a convict of convicts, and if Christ has done this for me, has clothed me, and put me in my right mind, is anything impossible? There is not a man sitting before you at Dartmoor but what can, if he will, become a new man—a brand new man. I ask each one to think of it, and start afresh with Christ. "C. W."

A large number applied for personal interviews with the missioner. Those readers of The Christian who prayed for these services are now asked to give God thanks, to Whom be praise for ever!

A large number of young women are engaged in the pantomimes in the provinces. Friends disposed to take an interest in them, to invite them to tea, or otherwise to show kindness are requested to write to Mr. William Forbes, 71, Tollington Road, N.

Mr. Thomas Payne has just conducted a ten days' mission in the Primitive Methodist Chapel at Chapeltown, Sheffield. We are thankful to say there have been a number of cases of blessing, and altogether the church has had a real spiritual uplift. H. Hague.

A ten days' mission has been concluded in the parish of St. Peter, Upper Holloway. The services were well attended throughout, especially by young men and women, among whom a very deep impression was made by the heart-searching and convincing addresses of the missioner (Rev. A. E. Foster, vicar of Christ Church, Richmond). The afternoon Bible readings were much appreciated.

In the parish of Cairnie, Aberdeenshire, there has been held a remarkable series of meetings at three centres in connection with the Gordon Mission (Aberdeen). Gatherings were conducted nightly for about three months. Mr. Esson unfolded the Gospel, preaching and singing with power. The attendances were, for a rural parish, very large. J. S.

The Baptist Churches of Westbury, Leigh, and Penknap has just concluded a fortnight's united evangelistic mission. Mr. James Lovell, of the Evangelization Society, conducted the services. God's people have been much helped by the earnest ministry. Signs of the Spirit's working were also seen in the unconverted, although confession of Christ has not yet been made.

(Pastor) E. Ashton.

A series of Gospel meetings has been conducted in the Friends' meeting house at Staines. The attendance was well maintained throughout. Special features were the large percentage of men and the number of strangers present. Six afternoon meetings were held. The earnest addresses were attended by much blessing, Christians being helped, and several others professing to a change of heart and a desire to live a new life.

The nineteeth annual report of evangelistic work in the Border Counties Tent, concluding in September last, shows that much good was accomplished through the labours of Rev. M. N. Robson and Mr. Hill. The final meetings were held at Jedburgh, where "excellent attendances were recorded every night, and on Sabbath evenings the tent could not contain all who came. Several young people yielded themselves to God, and Christians were greatly refreshed."

Rev. Henry T. Meakin, the well-known Wesleyan minister, has been urging that at every chapel in London the minister in charge might hold a special seven days' mission. He himself has just put his suggestion into practice, and held such a mission at the Great Central Hall, Bermondsey. Many promising cases of conversion have been the result, as well as a quickening of those already won for Christ. There was an immense congregation on the Sunday night.

A successful Temperance mission has been conducted at New Milns, Scotland, by Mr. Tennyson Smith. The meetings were crowded and enthusiastic, and on the opening night sixty-four adults publicly signed the pledge. Over 600 pledges were taken during the mission, nearly 500 being adults. The missioner addressed a Young Men's Sunday morning class of over 200, and seventy-one signed the pledge (most of the class having signed previously at the mission meetings), and the whole were thus practically teetotal.

Readers of The Christian who prayed for the mission which was held in Curdridge, Hants, November 8 to 15, will be thankful to hear that God answered prayer in a very marked manner. There was a manifest work of the Holy Spirit beforehand, disposing Christians to come together for prayer; all the way through the interest was largely growing; and the spiritual work among the young and the parishioners generally was of a definite and blessed character, so that we would, indeed, ask God's people now to join with us in blessing His gracious and faithful name. H.

At the Tabernacle, Whyteleafe, we are in the midst of a gracious work of the Holy Spirit. Mr. Geo. L. Collins began the special mission on Sunday the 22nd ult., when the Word was with power. Mr. B. Dunning continued the mission to young people on the 23rd. Each night a large number of children have attended, and listened to the Gospel message with rapt attention, and quite a number have stayed to the after meetings for further prayer and counsel. We purpose forming a "Young Disciples' Band" of the young converts. We are full of praise, and trust the concluding days of the mission will be even more fruitful. Gerald R. Coultas, Pastor.

At the Working Men's Mission, Collingwood Street, New Cut, S.E., a very encouraging ten days' mission was brought to a close on November 19. It was conducted by Mr. and Mrs. George Andrews. The Lord gave many signs of His approval and blessing. We were, indeed, thankful for the work done among the young. Numbers of young people who have long been attending the mission were brought to decision. Backsliders were restored, and God's people were revived and encouraged to go on fighting the Lord's battle in this dark and sinful neighbourhood. Mr. Andrews has an admirable helper in his wife. Their singing and earnest addresses will be long remembered.

T. and J. Young.

A ten days' mission has been conducted by Mr. Charles Barraclough at Ruscombe Congregational Chapel, Stroud, Glos. (Rev. J. B. Uffen). It was wonderfully blessed; there were large gatherings each evening, and on the Sundays the chapel was crowded. Mr. Barraclough preached with fervour under the power of the Holy Spirit. Over sixty souls were led to Christ, beside many of the children in the Sunday-school. The inquiry-room was filled every evening with the anxious, and the workers who were pointing them to the Saviour. Many of the converts were praying with and for their companions, bringing them to the services, and urging them to seek the Lord. Some of the prayers of the children brought tears to many eyes. Mr. Barraclough's visit will long be remembered. E. E. U.

Rev. J. Grange Bennett has conducted a ten days' mission at Sherborne. The words spoken to the church were weighty and powerful, so that the members were stirred to prayer, consecration and faith. The meetings for men only and women only were largely attended, and resulted in great good. Some of the most notorious men of the town were present. There were converts on the first Sunday, and at every service after, until 170 had passed through the inquiry rooms. One new adult society class and two junior classes have been formed. Those who helped in the open air are being formed into a mission band for cottage meetings. About sixty temperance pledges were taken.

A fortnight's special services have just been brought to a close in the Mission-hall, Christian Street, Liverpool, connected with Islington Presbyterian Church (Rev. J. G. Hamilton, B.A.). The missioner Mr. F. G. Grogan, of the Evangelization Society, dealt with his subjects during the series in a way which revealed a thorough knowledge of the Bible. The mission hall being situated in the midst of lodging-houses and courts of the worst description, it can easily be imagined how difficult the work of a special mission would be. The meetings were, notwithstanding, fairly well attended, especially by the class as represented "down in Water Street." Several decided for Christ, and are showing by their life that they are really on the Lord's side. Miss Greenall, a Liverpool lady who did noble work in pointing souls to Christ during the recent Torrey-Alexander Mission helped the work by her effective solo-singing. James Campbell, Missionary.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

SUNDERLAND.

THE mission at Sunderland proceeds with increasing power. One of the chief features last week was a midnight meeting. A correspondent writes: "A large number of people were brought in from the streets and public-houses. Hundreds of the men were more or less under the influence of drink. Dr. Henry, however, got a sympathetic hearing as he spoke on 'Five Fateful Facts of the Drink.' The interest was intense. Over sixty pledges were taken and many hearers were personally dealt with. The stories of some of the men were most pathetic. Many of them came back later, "clothed, and in their right mind."

"'Temperance Sunday" was generally observed. 'Drink and National Paralysis' was the afternoon topic, and in the evening Dr. Henry spoke on 'The Slaughter of Young Men' to an immense audience composed mostly of men. A large number of pledges were taken, and there were not a few hearers who yielded to Christ. Just now Durham county is suffering from an epidemic of crime caused through drink, and the people are coming to see that this foe must be dealt with."

The midnight meeting was described by the Sunderland Echo as follows: "The hall was a scene of the liveliest character for some time. Every seat seemed to possess a little gang of men who had some difficulty to discuss and solve. Some were indulging in a pipe. As soon as the meeting commenced it was evident a large number were familiar with the grand old hymns, and joined heartily. Mr. Jones's singing was applauded. Dr. Henry had some difficulty at the commencement. One man would persist in speaking. At last he was content, and then as the doctor proceeded quietness ensued, and for half-an-hour intense attention prevailed. The plea for the grand old gospel touched some responsive hearts. The workers went home well satisfied with their effort."

Describing the meeting on Lord's Day last, the Echo says: "Yesterday's services, notwithstanding the inclement state of the weather, were most successful. The address of Dr. Henry, bearing on the vital relationship of drink to the well-being of the nation, and his powerful appeal to young men on "Drink, Gambling, Impurity, and Infidelity" at the evening meeting, led to a large response to the pledge and to decision. Mr. Jones and Miss Alderson rendered duets with great ability."

Encouraging results seem still to be flowing from the missions held of late. At Wishaw, three abstainers have been elected on the town council, and it is aimed to bring about ten o'clock closing, and to close all "side-door" and "back-door" public-houses. In Dundee there has been a decrease in the sale of drink; it is stated that only one publican has been able to tell of increased sales.

An Innovation.—The Mayor of Conway has introduced a rather happy departure from the time-honoured observance of Mayor's Sunday. In a letter to the local Free Church Council his Lordship suggested the holding of a Mayor's Service on a week-day, all denominations to unite upon the occasion. The suggestion has been taken up heartily, and a committee of the Free Church Council is co-operating with the rector in making the arrangements.

Temperance Reform in Wales.—At a meeting of the Wrexham Deanery Association, a paper was read by Archdeacon Wynne Jones on "Temperance Reform and Compensation." Belief was expressed in the value of legislation, and in the reduction of licences as tending to promote sobriety. Further, the opinion was expressed that while the law was with those who would refuse all compensation for the extinction of licences, equity was on the other side.

URGENT APPEAL TO PROTESTANTS FOR

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

(Established 1732.)

THE OLDEST PROTESTANT MISSIONS TO THE HEATHENS—FIRST TO THE LEPERS.

The following are some of many PRESSING NEEDS for which EARNEST PRAYER and SUPPORT are sought.

For GENERAL FUND—largely increased annual help of at least £4,000.

For LABRADOR, hitherto self-supporting, but crippled for a time. £2,000 annually for two years more is required until the Mission can be re-established; and for the erection, equipment and furnishing of NEW HOSPITAL, the balance of sum needed as quickly as possible.

So serious indeed is the general need that, unless Funds increase, Reinforcements will have to be Detained, Extensions forbidden, some Staffs reduced, Salaries and Expenditure Curtailed, Furloughs delayed, and Students in Training informed that at the end of their Course their services may not be required ! ! !

Contributions will be thankfully received and information given by the Rev. W. Wetton Cox, at the offices of the London Association, 7, New Court, Lincoln's Inn, London, W.C., who will also gladly arrange for Meetings, Sermons, Lectures, &c.

THE WORKING MEN'S MISSION

NEW CUT, BLACKFRIARS, S.E.

A LETTER FROM F. A. BEVAN, Esq., J.P., D.L.

"54, Lombard Street, London, E.C.

"I desire to commend the appeal issued by the Committee of the Working Men's Mission to the Christian public. Since the year 1876 the Brothers Young, with the help of other Christian Working Men, have been carrying on a splendid work for God among the 'masses' in the New Cut and adjoining neighbourhood, owing to which numbers of men and women have been transformed, and thousands of children have been brought under spiritual influence. It is impossible to overestimate the importance of thus getting hold of the children in these days, when there is so little of definite religious instruction. In order to carry on all the various departments of the work efficiently, it is absolutely necessary to have a hall, with rooms attached, in the centre of operations, such as the present building in Collingwood Street. But, unfortunately, the lease of these premises will shortly expire, and therefore the proposed new building ought to be commenced without delay. All who are interested in the evangelisation of the working classes of the great city cannot do better than subscribe to this important undertaking. "F. A. BEVAN, Treasurer."

An excellent site has been found in Webber Street, New Cut, near the Waterloo Road, with an area of about 3,000 superficial feet. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners have granted a lease for 999 years at the exceptionally low ground rent of £38 per year. Already a benevolent lady has placed to our credit that we open free of debt.

£1,000 CONDITIONALLY

We have received promises from F. A. Bevan, Esq., J.P., D.L., £250; E. M. Denny, Esq., £250; T. A. Denny, Esq., £100; and our own Members have collected about £500.
The cost of erecting the Mission Hall and Schools is £5,000, of which £2,100 has been promised.

£2,900 STILL REQUIRED.

And we beg the readers of "The Christian" to help us in this responsible undertaking. Donations will be thankfully acknowledged by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., J.P., D.L., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; Messrs. Morgan and Scott; or the Superintendents, T. and J. Young, 33, Nelson Square, Blackfriars, S.E.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

This Society continues to Spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row, London; and at the Office of The Christian.

REV. J. O GAGE DOUGHERTY, M.A.,
Secretary and Treasurer.

TRACT DISTRIBUTORS should send to Messrs. MORGAN and SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., for their Lists of BOOKS, TRACTS, LEAFLETS, HYMN SHEETS, etc.

MISSION OF HELP TO THE SUFFERING POOR.

Wanted.—Pensions of 2/6 per week for aged people of respectable character who are past work. Amongst others needing such help is Mrs. D., aged 70, whose minister urgently pleads her case. After rent is paid she and a daughter who goes out to work, are left with 4½d. each per day to purchase food and all other necessaries of life.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS are specially asked.

Obituary.

MRS. F. A. BEVAN.

We announce with deep regret the death of Mrs. F. A. Bevan, which supervened from an operation, undertaken hopefully and in dependence upon the good hand of God. The embodiment of grace and noble Christian character, she was deeply beloved by a large circle of friends, who mourn her departure, and deeply sympathise with the bereaved husband and family. We understand that Mr. Bevan has been prostrated by the sense of his loss.

MR. JOHN MARNHAM.

The death of Mr. John Marnham, of Boxmoor, at the age of seventy-seven, removes a leading Baptist well-known in connection with various phases of religious work. His gifts and sympathy knew not denominational bounds; but all good work found in him an earnest friend. He was a member of the executive of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and the Baptist Missionary Society, president of the Herts Federation Free Church Councils, and treasurer of the Herts Baptist Union. Mr. Marnham was also a member of several public bodies at Hemel Hempstead, and a J.P. He recently built and presented new Baptist churches at Northchurch and Stevenage; in other parts of the country he had from time to time shown similar generosity in erecting buildings for the Lord's work.

Personalia.

Mr. Thomas Payne, his friends will be glad to know, is now so far recovered from the effects of his accident of a broken leg and ankle, that he is able to resume his work, and take missions.

After twenty years spent in the Baptist ministry in Australia, Rev. J. A. Soper has settled again in this country, and is open to undertake evangelistic missions or pulpit supply. His address is East Crescent, Enfield, London, N.

Mr. James Whyte has resigned the secretaryship of the United Kingdom Alliance, a position which he has filled for nearly twenty years with conspicuous ability. Mr. Whyte will, as consulting secretary, remain in close touch with his life-long comrades, and will still assist them in the further prosecution of the campaign, both by his personal advice and by his vigorous pen.

Miss Annie Macpherson, much against her own desire, is spending the winter away from her beloved work at the Home of Industry, Bethnal Green Road. Her many friends will rejoice that she is now in a fair measure of health. Dr. Merry writes:—"It is her delight now to remember her old comrades-in-arms at the Throne of Grace, and ask for rich blessing on those who continue the fight."

Rev. J. C. Lawson, of the Industrial Evangelistic Mission, Pilibhit, N.W.P., India, writes from Brooklyn, New York: "It was my original intention to get back to India by Christmas, but there has been so much to do here that I have stayed longer than I intended. I could spend months more, but I must leave the rest to Mrs. Lawson for the next year." Mr. Lawson was sailing for Liverpool on the 21st Nov., on a brief visit to this country.

Pastor Cuff's Portrait.—It should have been stated that the portrait of Rev. W. Cuff, given in last issue, was from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, 55 and 56, Baker Street, W.

Home for Business Women.—The home for business women, successfully carried on for eighteen years by Miss Harriet Mason, has been re-opened at Framfield, Freshfield Road, Brighton.

The Church Sisters.—Many who are familiar with the Ladies' League may not be personally acquainted with that branch known as the Church Sisters (538, Kings Road, Chelsea). Beside working as district visitors, Sunday-school teachers, holding mothers' meetings and classes for young girls, they have a lodging-house for poor women, a kitchen from which food can be sent out better and cheaper than the poor can get elsewhere. There is also a Home for poor ladies in or out of situations. At the weekly jumble sale, things new and secondhand are eagerly sought after; and the Sisters take orders for needlework, which are executed by women ready and willing to work for their living. Everything is done to raise the tone and status of the life of the women who are helped by this branch of Lady Wimborne's useful undertaking.

About Books.

All About the Jews.

To Hebrew or Christian, to traditionalist or precise scholar, The Jewish Encyclopædia* is a marvel. The fifth volume is now before us; and if the entire twelve, in which the work is to be completed, maintain the character of those already issued, the first decade of the Twentieth Century will have witnessed a literary achievement, marvellous in itself, and of unique value as a contribution to history, ethnology, religion, and much beside. If, as is undoubtedly the case, these volumes introduce educated Jews to worlds of knowledge and mystery, what must be their influence upon the minds of interested Christians, who, for the most part, can confess to but a slight acquaintance with Israelitish affairs, and that gained at several removes from the main sources of information?

Each successive volume compels us to acknowledge the great value of this undertaking; and at the same time it is right to say that the great amount of matter, whether supplied by experts or summarized from works not generally available, is arranged to admirable purpose in the well-printed pages. Every now and then, as the work progresses, demands are made upon the sagacity as well as the learning of the writers, and again and again we have found evidence of sound judgment combined with wide research.

Of course we must ever bear in mind that the work is Jewish, alike in design and execution; but even then there is more than a curious interest in the writings of men occupying that standpoint, when, for instance, New Testament characters and institutions are dealt with. However much Jews may be led away with prejudice and swayed by passion, it is well that they should once in a while be called upon, in a responsible manner, to account for Gospel facts and principles, as belonging to "a new covenant, which hath made the first old." And if we would study these things from all points of view, we do well to appreciate the standpoint of the nation "of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all God blessed for ever."

In addition to names of famous Jews and of Old Testament expositors, we have here accounts of places in which, in any degree, Hebrews have congregated during the present age of Dispersion. Then come Biblical names and books, and after these in importance, moral, religious, and philosophical terms which have had a special development in Jewry, e.g., Dualism, Duty, Education (a long article), Ethics (very thorough), Emanation, Eschatology (nineteen and a half columns), Excommunication, Essenes, Fasting, Festivals, and Gnosticism. These are but a few of the host of subjects. Biblical questions are dealt with, first as such, and then from antiquarian and critical points of view, along with anything that Rabbinical, Christian, or Mohammedan literature may contribute.

In the article on England, the history of the Jews in the United Kingdom is summarized (twenty-six columns). Corresponding sketches relate to France, Germany, and other lands. Among articles specially curious may be mentioned Euphemism and Gematria. Needless to say, the theology is generally of the modern type. Did we not read it in plain words, we might hardly have believed it possible for a rabbi to say, regarding the Fall of Man: "In modern Jewish thought, the fall of man is without dogmatic importance." Doubtless many Christian expositors are content with a like treatment of Scripture teaching; but if it is comparatively easy for a Jew to say so much, it ought to be very hard for a follower of Christ, to whom the Epistle of Paul to the Romans should come as the Holy Spirit's commentary on the Book of Genesis.

All who would understand the Jews and their relation to Moses or Christ, will find reliable information and direction in this great work.

Parts I. and II. of The Origin and Nature of Man, by Dr. S. B. G. McKinney, deal in an informing and helpful way with "Analysis" and "Evolution (Inorganic)". Four more parts are promised to complete the work. (6d. each net. Oliphant.)

* The Jewish Encyclopædia: A Descriptive Record of the History, Religion, Literature, and Customs of the Jewish People from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. Prepared by more than four hundred scholars and specialists, under editorial and consulting Boards, American and foreign. Isidore Singer, Ph.D., projector and managing editor. To be completed in twelve volumes, embellished with more than two thousand illustrations. Vol. V. Dreyfus-Brisac—Goat. (Subscription price, 25s. each volume. Funk & Wagnalls Co.)

NEW YEAR MESSAGES.

Each succeeding occasion witnesses no falling off in the popularity and usefulness of the booklets which Messrs. Partridge & Co. issue with the passing of the old year and the advent of the new, and those making their appearance this season are deserving of warm commendation.

A searching word to the unconverted will be found in A New Year's Choice, by A. E. C. (1d.) In solemn terms the author presses home the urgency of responding to the plea, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve"; it is also a call to whole-hearted service on the part of Christians.

Rev. G. Martin Claris writes on The Glorious Possibilities of Faith (1d.), telling of the unlimited power and promise which God gives to every trusting heart. A message of entreaty for the new year is Dead While She Liveth; or, God's Verdict (6d. doz.). Rev. F. B. Meyer, in A Faithful Creator, touches on many points of Divine fidelity, which will help to confirm and strengthen trust in God (6d. doz.). To the Uttermost, by Rev. E. W. Moore (1d.) is a cheering word for the times. From the inexhaustible storehouse to which this sentence refers, the author draws truths and consolations which will uplift and hearten all who read them. Miss Sophia M. Nugent, with true spiritual insight, expounds our Lord's behest, Bring them unto Me (1d.)

Drummond's Tract Depôt have also published a number of similar booklets. "Ich Dien": I serve (6d. dozen), by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, has for its theme Christ—the Lord's Servant, and His claim upon His followers. A telling appeal is made in Rev. P. B. Power's Man's Heart—Christ's Home (1d.); and the large type used will enhance its value for distributing among the aged. Many Shall Come, by the late Bishop J. C. Ryle, is an eminently practical address, founded upon the promise of Christ in Matt. viii. 11. For the young we have A Mine of Wealth, written in Mr. Forbes Moncrieff's admirable style, showing what a treasure we have in the Bible; while Bright Paths is an excellent collection of readable articles and stories. (1s. 6d. dozen.)

Miss C. Maud Battersby has written a beautiful little poem, Christmas Greeting, which is printed on a dainty watered card, two tints, 4 pp. (1s. 3d. dozen. Author, Cromlyn, Rathowen, Westmeath, Ireland.)

Advice to Twentieth Century Business Juniors, with Hints and Considerations for Seniors; by Phi Rho Chi, has reached its fourth edition. There is given in compact form abundance of good advice which may well be taken to heart and turned to good account. (1s. Horace Marshall & Son.)

Triumphant Melodies, a collection of sacred songs, compiled by R. F. Beveridge. (1s. Allan & Son, Glasgow.) This collection of fifty-two hymns includes many favourite pieces which have been made popular by other publications, as well as some which are new and copyright. The advantage of having Solfa and Old Notation in the same volume will be appreciated by those who use it.

Cambridge Reference Bibles. It is noteworthy that in the preparation of the marginal references included in the new "Cambridge" series of Bibles, full advantage has been taken of the invaluable work done in this direction by the late Prebendary Scrivener, the result of which was first published in the Cambridge Paragraph Bible. By omitting chapter headings, and using all available means of compression, the bulk of the volumes has been reduced to a minimum. The editions in pearl, minion, and small pica type—each with references—are among the neatest we have seen, the last-named being calculated to bring joy and gladness to the heart of many a reader whose sight is failing.

"The writing of letters has always been a matter of conscience and prayer to me," once said that beloved brother, the late R. C. Chapman, of Barnstaple. In a welcome volume, Letters of the Late Robert Cleaver Chapman, Mr. J. Henry Hake has happily brought together a number of the choice epistles of the departed teacher. Characteristically lucid, they cover a wide variety of topics, and are well worthy of the godly counsellor who penned them. As the introduction states, they are "stored with healthful words in relation to the experiences of the soul, of the Church of God, the nation of Israel, and the world." The latter half is devoted to the journal of a visit to Ireland in 1848, and also of travelling days spent in Spain, Portugal, Switzerland, and Germany. There is a reproduction of a brief note written by Mr. Chapman in his 100th year, a few weeks before he fell asleep. This is a fragrant book; it will doubtless bring cheer and consolation to many a reader, for the letters are those of one who was careful to seek his Lord's guidance in all things. (2s. and 4s. net. Irish Notes.

MR. DAVID BROWN, of Donoughmore, co. Tyrone, has promised to pay the expense of a missionary in the foreign field in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Church.

Two Jewesses and three children of one of these ladies have been baptized at Hamburg in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Mission in that city, where Christian work among the Jews is at present in a hopeful condition.

A meeting to bid farewell to Messrs. McNeill and Sloan, who are going out to India in connection with the Jungle Tribes' Mission was held recently in the lecture hall of Townsend Street Presbyterian Church, Belfast, under the presidency of Rev. J. R. Prenter. Addresses were delivered by Rev. H. Montgomery and the Chairman, and by Messrs. McNeill and Sloan. There was a large attendance.

Notices.

Mr. EDWARD EVANS, of Shanghai, will be glad if the friend, who for so many years has kindly forwarded to him THE CHRISTIAN, will note that the address of his Missionary Home and Agency is 38, Quinsan Road, Shanghai, having been removed from 8, Seward Road.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—Mr. John Taylor, 98, West Carron, Carron by Falkirk, Stirlingshire, N.B.; Mrs. Lydia Hall, 7, Eric Road, Church Road, Willesden, N.W.; Mrs. J. Brenton, Crondall, Farnham, Surrey; Mr. A. C. W. Littler, 57, Hamilton Road, Handsworth, Staffs.

Blindness and Acute Suffering.

An Old Man, 74 years of age, blind through cancer in the eyes, which is now spreading all over the face. In addition to this sad affliction he is also suffering from an internal disease. He and his aged wife are greatly in need of assistance, as apart from the little their married children are able to give them they have nothing at all to depend on except charity. Who will help to make their old age free from anxiety? Surely pain and blindness are terrible enough without poverty.

The National Blind Relief Society.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, The Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE BALAGHAT MISSION, INDIA.

The season during which itinerant village work can be done has now commenced, and plans for wide-spread preaching of the Gospel among the 350,000 heathen of the district by the staff of Missionaries and their Native assistants are now complete. But the Mission and this and other departments of the work are threatened with curtailment and inefficiency unless substantial monetary help is speedily forthcoming. God is blessing the work of the Mission and souls are being saved.

TREASURY IS EMPTY,

Contributions may be sent to the Hon. Sec., Miss FIELD, 10, Lancaster Road, West Norwood, London, or to the Offices of THE CHRISTIAN.

Ministering to the Blind Poor.

The Indigent Blind Visiting Society.

The object of this Society is to improve the condition of the blind resident in and near London, by providing them with (1) Readers of the Scriptures at their own homes; (2) Instruction in Reading, Writing, Knitting, and other branches of education; (3) Temporal Relief where needed.

By a recent Evangelistic Mission the Society reached nearly two thousand blind persons of both sexes. The Samaritan Fund has come to the help of many who would otherwise have been thrown upon the streets. Funds are urgently needed.

Full particulars from Annual Report, to be had from the Secretary, I.B.V.S., 8, Red Lion Square, W.C.; or the Superintendent (Mr. W. Mead), 95, Gurney Road, Stratford, E.

To-day and To-morrow. The Missionary Association Conference, to consider the needs and opportunities of the South American continent, is being held this week (Wednesday to Friday, at 3 and 7 p.m. each day). The programme will be found on p. 55. Great things for Christ are hoped for as the result of these gatherings.

The Saviours of the World. With the present issue, we place before our readers in our Mission Supplement a bird's-eye view of what is being done to alleviate the sorrow and sin that are eating out the heart of our national life. Even the "dogs of war" are less terrible than the wild beasts and birds of prey let loose to destroy the bodies and souls of fallen humanity. Vice, drink, and gambling are rampant in our midst, by which men, women, and little children—the flower and strength of our people—are being done to death before our eyes. We entreat our readers to ponder, as in the sight of God, what our Christian Missions are doing to curb the ravages of iniquity, and to save the sinner from eternal ruin. The Supplement pages give food for earnest thought, and afford a timely indication as to how the season's benevolence may be wisely and efficiently employed. Shall we—nay, shall the Master—plead in vain?

The Slum Child. An article on "The Slum Child," by Lady Henry Somerset, in the Daily News, ought to go to the hearts of all who have not given any thought to this painful side of the Drink Bill. Thoroughly familiar with those many districts which are overcrowded with public-houses, Lady Henry knows only too well what child-life there means, with its environment of drunkenness and vice. She asks:—

> What of the children who are cursed before they are born? The children who come weak in body and tainted in soul, whose welcome is a drunken curse, whose nursery is the bar of the public-house, and whose childhood ceases the moment they can crawl? The pity of it to my mind is that we never seem to realize how much has been stolen from these children, and that we go on being surprised year by year at the number of our criminals and lunatics.

Yet we have our Lord's assurance that "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish" (Matt. xviii. 14).

The Real Peril. It is not always that we can agree with the Bishop of Worcester, but as a social force he has sprung into the front rank of leaders. He and the Bishop of Hereford possess a Christian daring and a defiance of foolish conventionalism which are as admirable as they are rare. Dr. Gore tells the men of the Midlands, in the very centre of the fiscal controversy, that the primary question for this country is not fiscal, but moral—"a question of individual vitality and character." The real trouble, Dr. Gore pointedly says, lies at the door of the drink-shop, and in the curse of the gambling habit. No fiscal policy will deal with these maladies, which, like a cancer, are consuming our very heart. "Missionaries" of this kind are required in the country just now. A mob can easily be collected and made to shout against the "foreigner," and such shouting is often mistaken for strength. But the men of the country seem strangely averse to examining themselves, and inquiring to what extent their vicious habits are threatening both trade and moral strength.

What is "for the Church"? In view of such utterances, it is the more perplexing to find that, in opening a new church near Birmingham, Dr. Gore should declare the splendid Christian work being undertaken by the Messrs. Cadbury and others (which is usually ranked as "undenominational"), "not of the Church nor for the Church." Of course, he meant that it was not of or for his church. It is a great pity that the word "church" should be so narrowed in its meaning. Carried out to its legitimate end, it would mean the unchurching of 60 per cent. of the English people. Augustine of Hippo, himself a great Churchman, truthfully said, "Ubi Christus, ibi Ecclesia"—Where Christ is, there is the Church—and by that definition we must hold, for it accords with the word of our Lord Himself—"Where two or three are gathered together in My Name, there am I in the midst." That surely is our final charter. On the other hand, we have as little sympathy with wilful and perverse separatism, as with that exclusivism which admits nothing beyond its own border. Not every clique of people can truly claim to be working for the Church; but for all work done "where Christ is," we should be thankful and sympathetic.

Spiritual Dynamics. Amongst the many striking pulpit utterances on Temperance Sunday, some words from Rev. F. B. Meyer ought to be remembered and acted upon, for they point to the only force that is able to overcome the terrible power of the publicans and brewers, and the numerous and varied evil influences allied with them. He said:—

> If the Church does not arise to deal with this curse, there is nothing to save our country from rapid deterioration, which all the political changes on earth would not be able to avert. The Church has measured herself against gigantic evils, and has mastered them; but her supreme conflict is at hand, a conflict in which she would come into a death struggle with drink. Legislation is not enough, there must be the moral and spiritual dynamics, which are the special province of the Church."

A Cheerful Note. Professor James Orr, D.D., is to be thanked for the "cheerful note" he has been led to strike (in the Methodist Times) with regard to the present Rationalistic fury against the Gospel. He boldly challenges the statement so confidently made by Rationalists, that the best scientific thought is anti-Christian. The great names are not on the Rationalistic side. It is increasingly necessary to repeat this, on account of the trumpet-blowing by certain presumptuous materialists, who, while in a hopeless minority amongst scientists, arrogate to themselves the right to speak with absolute authority and to override everybody else. This is not science, it is vulgarity. Any man who can speak with contempt of such men as Lord Kelvin, Dr. Romanes, the late Sir George Stokes, and Sir J. William Dawson, puts himself out of court as a serious person. Dr. Orr calls for the abolition of fear and trembling on the part of Christian people, and pleads for courage. The present infidel fury is not the portent of catastrophe; it is the call of God to the Church to proclaim the Gospel with greater insistence.

Important Discoveries. The seventeenth general meeting of the members of the Egyptian Exploration Fund Society, held recently, was of singular interest, owing to Dr. Grenfell's account of four years' excavations at Oxyrrhynchus, and in the Ptolemaic cemeteries at Hibeh and elsewhere. In one mound a large number of documents were discovered, chiefly of the third century after Christ, also Latin papyri of the second century. The theological fragments were of great value, one of them containing sayings of Jesus, resembling in many respects those discovered by Dr. Grenfell and Dr. Hunt five years ago. In this case, however, the Logia were stated to be those which Jesus spake to Thomas and another of the disciples. No doubt when the papyri are published next year, there will be renewed discussion in regard to the Sayings and the period in which the documents originated. Other papyri, dealing with the persecution of the Christians in the year A.D. 250, will be of value to students of Church History.

Doubt and Trust. Speaking of the mystery of faith, Dr. Parker once said that he preferred a mystery of light to one of darkness. To-day Mr. G. K. Chesterton is doing good service in his series of papers dealing with the sceptical rhapsodies of a weekly agnostic journal; he forces points from which those writers who attack the Christian faith generally find it convenient to run. The problems in front of the unbeliever certainly outnumber those which face the Christian, and, as Mr. Chesterton says:—

> The true religion is not that which has no difficulties. It is that which has difficulties where common-sense has difficulties. We have to swallow mysteries with it. But we have to swallow the same mysteries without it.

So in regard to the vexed question of faith and its power. That there are difficulties around it every Christian knows; but the evidence in support largely outweighs these difficulties. It needs no "submission of the intellect" on the part of the believer, who may honestly say with him of old, "Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief" (Mark ix. 24). In that attitude there is the double recognition of the infinite power of God, and of the finite limitations of the human intellect.

A Surprising Theologian. We do not suppose that the Agnostic Annual classes itself among humorous publications, but it is difficult to lay aside the new issue without a smile, even of pity, for Lady Florence Dixie has been put forward as a controversial writer against the Christian faith! This pièce de résistance opens with the crude assertion that "science has broken the legs of the Bible and all other God-books conceived and edited by bygone man." Beyond that it is hardly necessary to go. The writer professes to be one of those who are anxious "to obtain truth at any price." Certainly she does not appear to have made much effort to find it, and therefore is not to be taken seriously. But it is, at least, re-assuring that Agnosticism is leaning upon so frail a crutch.

In Him we Live. The most recent developments of science are simply astounding. It would seem as if scientific men were on the eve of remodelling many of their cherished views of the universe. The discovery of Radium has created a revolution. Sir William Ramsey, in a letter to the Times, confirms the correctness of the original suspicion, that radium gives off particles that are not radium; one substance creates another substance different from itself. Such a discovery is indeed revolutionary. Sir Oliver Lodge, recently interviewed about the matter, declared that we are being driven to the conclusion that all the forms of matter have been derived from a single origin. The universe is indeed beginning to appear to be but ONE. The materialism of a decade ago is already discredited. What does all this mean? For the Christian it means that the world is being forced to realize the truth of the great Apostle's words: "In Him we live and move and have our being." Many have not yet named HIM, but they must eventually do that. Human intelligence cannot accept as a final axiom the doctrine that mind and soul have proceeded from what is inferior to them. The superior cannot proceed from the inferior in the materialistic sense. With all this, however, men cannot reach the true knowledge of God, apart from that LORD who alone reveals HIM. By searching man cannot know God. He may know that God is, but to know Himself, man must come to Christ "as a little child."

Public Services. It would be well if the question of Church efficiency raised by Dr. Watson at Cambridge were thoroughly thrashed out. It requires more than a passing reference, since the vitality of the Church is involved in it. One thing, for example, touched upon was the question of the second service on the Sunday, and the question of the week-night service. Dr. Watson asked why there should be two services on the Sunday, and why a week-night service. He feels there should be a second service on the Sunday, and he suggests certain schemes for making it attractive. This does not seem to us to be very high ground to take. Something more than custom accounts for the idea of the twice-a-day service. It has arisen out of a double need; the need to be blessed and the need to bless. A man must have a very poor idea of things if he imagines that ninety minutes per week will suffice to gain that strength which can only be gained through association with his brethren in public service. And he must also have a most inadequate conception of his indebtedness to Christ and to men, if he thinks that a once-a-day hearing discharges all his liabilities. Discussions about a second service would be impossible if true ideas prevailed regarding the ministry and the Church as a great evangelistic agency.

The Emptying Pulpits. The Expository Times has some rather startling notes in its current number upon the pressing matter of the dearth of candidates for the ministry. We think, however, that those who discuss this matter should use discrimination. It is not every Church that bewails the dearth of candidates. Three of the strongest bodies in this country, the Baptists, Congregationalists, and Wesleyans, do not utter any such lament. But in the Church of England, the Church of Scotland, and in Germany particularly, the problem is becoming acute. We have recently given reasons for the falling off in Germany. As to Scotland, Dr. Hastings sums up the reasons in a sentence: Men are regarding preaching as no longer worth living by, or as no longer worth living for. And the reasons for this are declared to be, that there is no excitement in preaching and no joy in it. Of course, Dr. Hastings is simply voicing what many men feel. But how has this feeling come about?

The Joy of Service. It is alleged that men dare not preach what they believe, or they take care not to believe what they dare not preach. It may well be asked, Is that true? We have seen the charge repeatedly made of late, both by those who are declared hostile to the Gospel, and by those who profess to be its friends. It is said that, because of Evolution and the Higher Criticism, men cannot preach, as their fathers did, the old Gospel. If a man cannot preach the Gospel on these accounts, he is far better to remain outside the pulpit. Obviously there can be no joy in preaching unless a man absolutely believes what he declares. The man who preaches must first of all have entered into the joy of his Lord through a personal experience of redemption. Unless he has done that, he has nothing to say in the name of the Gospel worth listening to. This is where the failure is. Too many ministerial candidates approach the Gospel as a problem, and they cannot square it with Evolution and Criticism; hence they retreat, or stand still and speak falteringly. But the man who begins with his own experience of Christ, and enters into the joy of service, possesses a force that neither Evolution nor Criticism can assail. And it is there that ministerial candidates must begin.

Monastic Orders. The Education question in France continues to develop in intensity, and M. Combes has recently made the issue still more clear by his concise definition of those Orders to whom, unhappily for France, so large a proportion of the teaching, as distinguished from the education of the young, has been entrusted. These organizations are, as in fact Rome everywhere is, a State within a State, and what France is now doing in regard to them, England also will have to do in the coming days. A careful perusal of "France of To-day," by Miss Betham Edwards (a valuable book of ten years ago), will satisfy any candid mind that France has not grasped the danger any too soon.

Protestants in France. Miss Edwards, in the course of her exhaustive survey, spent some years in travelling through the out-of-the-way villages and districts of France, and made herself thoroughly familiar with the lot of the rural and village population. Her testimony to Protestantism is unique as a vindication from time immemorial of the right of private judgment, and a protest against intolerance and superstition. With half-a-dozen departments Protestant to the core, she says, "Lourdes were a survival to blush at, the cloistered convent out of date as an auto-da-fe, France saved by the remnant." To these little communities of homely, yet thoughtful men who may have changed their political and social creeds, but have held fast, through good and evil days, to the open Bible, France owes much, and of late years has come to recognize the fact, and to act upon it. This Protestantism has martyrs within its ranks even to-day. Miss Edwards says:—

> The present minister at the place I speak of voluntarily unfrocked himself for conscience' sake. I have shaken hands with more than one ex-priest in France, and ever with a sense of pride. Such men drain the cup of sorrow and humiliation to the dregs, secession in their case meaning the sacrifice of worldly prospects, the beginning of life anew, above all the severance of every earthly tie.

Some New Tactics. The Roman Catholics in this country have embarked upon a new scheme of propagating their doctrines, which needs very careful watching. Continental Catholicism would not have the ghost of a chance of impressing the people of these islands, except in an unfavourable manner, so a carefully-prepared Catholicism, adapted to the English mind, is being presented. An American idea of holding "missions for non-Catholics" has been started, and is to be extensively followed. We read that at Rugby crowded congregations of Protestants have gathered nightly to hear a Catholic missionary expound the Roman faith. His methods may be gathered from this paragraph:—

> The great feature of these missions is that they are absolutely non-controversial, the aim is to explain the doctrines of the Catholic faith, and from beginning to end not one word was said that the most critical Protestant could take objection to.

That is just where the subtlety comes in. "Not one word to which the most critical Protestant could take objection." Thus the paramount claims of Rome are, for the time being, either suppressed or explained away until converts have been gained. Would critical Protestants flock docilely to hear real Roman teaching about Confession, the Eucharist, Indulgences, and the like? Where these missions are held, pamphlets showing Rome's real teaching should be distributed. To know what Rome actually is, men should read such a book as Dr. Robertson's "The Roman Catholic Church in Italy."

The Vivisection Acts. It is far from generally known that the law in regard to vivisection does not provide that all living animals subjected to legalized experiments must first be rendered unconscious. The recent case in the Courts, to which we have already referred, certainly emphasises the need for an amendment of the Acts, now that it is insisted upon that experiments upon the living animal are made and repeated simply for illustrative purposes. In any case most charitable people, "sentimentalists" or otherwise, doubtless will take steps to ascertain whether the money which they contribute to hospitals is devoted to the relief of the sick and suffering poor, or diverted to the tuition of the medical schools. It may fairly be asked why, if an animal has been placed entirely under the power of anæsthetics, it should be judged necessary to strap it down to the operating table, when such measures are not requisite with a human being? Does it not point to at least a fear on the part of the surgeon that the animal may not be beyond a disposition to resent the treatment to which it is subjected?

The World's True Friends.

"If thou hadst known . . . the things which belong unto thy peace!" (Luke xix. 42).

IT is related of a nervous speaker that on one occasion he addressed a company of farm-labourers as "Tons of Soil," instead of "Sons of Toil!"—thus, by an unfortunate twist of the tongue, calling them by the name of the very thing which, as tillers of the earth, they spent their lives in endeavouring to improve. Somewhat similar—not unintentional, however, but deliberate—is the attitude of the world toward the noble men and women who labour incessantly to > Raise the fallen, cheer the faint,

> Heal the sick, and lead the blind.

Leaders of the Purity Movement, for instance, have been maligned as persons of impure mind, who take pleasure in stirring the cesspool of the nation's vice; and all too frequently the child of God is termed a hypocrite, and the Christian worker a canting humbug. Now, as in Hosea's day, the current maxim is: "The prophet is a fool, the spiritual man is mad!"

Those who risk both ease and reputation to benefit their fellow-men, may often find it hard to kick against the pricks of the world's malice, to face its misunderstanding calmly, and to endure wilful misrepresentation with unconcern. Like Himself, the Master's followers are, in a sense, "despised and rejected of men"; but they find solace in His own pathetic words: "It hated Me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love its own; but because ye are not of the world, therefore the world hateth you."

May they not also, with all reverence, say with Him, in reply to the taunts of the ungodly: "The works that I do in my Father's Name, these bear witness of me. If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works." In this, at least, they have the corroboration of those whom they have brought out of the horrible pit and the miry clay, as the blind man testified of his unknown Healer: "Whether He be a sinner or no: one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see!"

PHILANTHROPY V. CHRISTIANITY.

The world will appreciate mere philanthropy, but it cannot comprehend Christianity. The same crowd that shouted "Hurrah!" when our Lord gave sight to Bartimæus, cried "Shame!" when He saved Zaccheus and went to be guest with the man that was a sinner. It is popular and up-to-date to feed the hungry and clothe the poor; but penetrate deeper, and touch the springs of the sin that causes the people's misery, and the tone of the world will change at once. It cries "Right!" when you say, "Reform!" It yells "Rubbish!" when you say, "Regenerate!"

Therefore the splendid endeavours described in our Mission Supplement to-day cannot make their appeal to the world, because their aim is not only philanthropic, but essentially Christian and spiritual. To the Church of God they must necessarily turn for support.

Yet how stupendous is the fatuity of the world, thus to scorn those who have its best interests at heart! It is a sorry wit that decries the spiritual instinct, which alone has made our country, with its teeming population, a habitable place. Expunge Christianity, and the Atheist would be the first to emigrate; and we who live in our quiet suburban or country homes would be overwhelmed with the were it not that the hounds of hell are held in check by the holy influences of our Christian mission agencies. It is as true to-day as in Isaiah's time:—"Except the Lord of Hosts had left unto us a very small remnant, we should have been as Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrah" (Is. i. 9).

Do we realise how much we owe to the institutions so faithfully worked by men and women of God in our great cities? They have no support from the national exchequer, though much of their service might fairly claim a share. To the Christian public alone can they appeal; and if our Lord, when He beheld Jerusalem, "wept over it," surely our sorrow should be elicited for the woes of the helpless and the poor—victims of the oppression of the devil, and the exigencies of our highly-strung civilization. And if sorrow, then sympathy; and that of the prayerful and practical kind which recognises its indebtedness to the light that gleams in our country's darkness, and to the salt that saves the nation from becoming utterly corrupt.

The Unrest of the Age.—II.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

WHILE the intellectual atmosphere of the age is distinctly favourable to a spirit of daring inquiry, there is certainly no lack of other influences which help to foster the same tendency. The effects of this are manifold and always injurious. Naturally those possessed with such a temper are on the quest for new doctrines, and disposed to lend a ready ear to any who are willing to satisfy their craving. Where there is so large an audience ready to hear, it is perfectly certain that we shall have teachers who will pander to their morbid appetite. Hence our age is not without a number of prophets who are ready to preach another Gospel which, alas! too often is not a Gospel.

Of course, those who feel themselves called to such service are desirous to secure a hearing. They are to be credited with a belief in the value of their teaching, and as they think that they have something to say, they naturally desire the opportunity of saying it to the multitude. Nor is there any reason why this should be denied them. It is wise, however, that those who are concerned for the defence and furtherance of the Gospel of Christ should be alive to this tendency of the times, and to its relation to their own special work.

If the multitude are addressed by a number of teachers professing to give new light upon all the gravest questions of human destiny, it is impossible for those with one desire, to deliver to them a message from God, to ignore so grave a fact. Is there, they may very pertinently inquire, any neglected aspect of the truth which these new teachers are able to present? When their cry is heard, "Lo, Christ is here," or "Lo, He is there," are they able to SPEAK WITH THE AUTHORITY OF GOD?

After all, is this new message simply the dream of their own imagination? The one thing certain is that such teachers are receiving an amount of attention which has hardly ever been accorded to them at any previous period.

Of course the teachers desire to succeed, and prophets and people act and react on each other in this respect. In truth, one of the most serious features in the situation is the supreme value which is so generally attached to success as shown in the gathering of crowds, or in the awakening of public attention. Success is an idol which has never been without its temples and its worshippers in any age. The idea that they are more numerous to-day than ever, may be nothing more than one of those exaggerations to which we are all prone, when endeavouring to estimate the signs of our own times. Be that as it may, no one can deny that the cult, at all events, is sufficiently extensive. One of its most effective instruments is sensationalism, and of it we have illustrations, both numerous and conspicuous, in our newspaper Press, especially in its cheaper section. Many deplore the influence of this spirit, but it is doubtful whether any of us have formed an adequate estimate of its mischievous effect, both on the thought and conscience of the age. It provides a platform for every prophet who has, or fancies that he has, some new light to shed on any, even the most profound and insoluble, problems of human life.

MEN TO WHOM NOTHING IS SACRED have an idea that there can be no mystery in the universe which time, patience, and audacity will not solve; and (it must be added) they appear to regard themselves as appointed to this very task. The Press provides them, as we have said, with a platform; and they are pretty sure to find a large audience, the vast majority of which unfortunately is quite incapable of testing the value of their deliverances. A very considerable proportion of them have just that amount of learning which is known as "a dangerous thing."

Such men have learnt enough to give them a certain consciousness of their own power; but they have not gone far enough to understand the narrowness of the limits within which its action must be confined. It was Sir Isaac Newton who once said: "The wisest of us is but a little child. gathering pebbles on the shore of a boundless sea." Alas, it requires long experience, including frequent failure and disappointment, to teach this lesson. In the meantime, eager intellects, flushed with early success, are apt to chafe against any suggestion that would check the overweening ambition that demands and expects to know everything. The great in the present generation has tended largely to increase the number of this section of the community. It constitutes the class who fancy that every age must have a Gospel of its own, and that this demand, suitable at all times, is peculiarly urgent and pressing just now. Unfortunately there are to be found teachers who undertake to minister to this morbid craving, and who appear as unable to understand the actual condition of things as those who are so willing to become their disciples if they will only teach them a new faith.

Yet it might be thought evident, even to intellects but imperfectly disciplined, that there is no particular wisdom shown merely by starting objections to truths that are most surely believed among us. As a matter of fact, children will often ask questions more puzzling than those of the most advanced critics. A friend of mine was speaking to me recently about the education of her own little girl, a child, as it will be seen, of considerable acuteness. "She puts to me," said the mother, the most puzzling questions. For example, the other day as I was talking to her, she turned round with the inquiry, 'Mother, who made God?'" At once she had got to the root of everything. The most accomplished sceptic of the age could propound no inquiry more perplexing. The child had passed at once outside the region of possible knowledge, and was starting a problem which can be solved by faith only. "He that cometh to God, must believe that He is."

A PERPLEXING QUESTION.

But the question as to how the unrest of minds that have been started on these inquiries is to be dealt with, requires very careful consideration. Any attempt to put an embargo on such inquiries would simply defeat its own purpose. It is true that minds which have been tossed to-and-fro in this eager, if not very intelligent, quest after absolute truth, sometimes seek rest in an infallible Church. In other words, they confess the fruitlessness of all inquiry, and submit themselves humbly to authority. Having lost their own faith, and done their best to unsettle the faith of others, they end by abandoning inquiry of every kind, and submitting to the leadings of a Church which has no assurance to give them except that of its own authority. It is perhaps a natural reaction, which shows that the human mind cannot readily content itself with mere negations.

There is a lesson in such cases for those who believe that in the liberty which is in Christ is to be found the richest inheritance into which the human soul can enter. In this age of freedom, it is necessary to remind all (and chiefly those who are possessed by its spirit of liberty), that they are under the law to Christ. It is certainly not for us to try and humour the somewhat reckless temper of inquiry that prevails, by at all relaxing our assertion of the supreme authority of the Master.

There have indeed been attempts in all ages to institute

TESTS WHICH HE HAS NOT APPOINTED, and for these mistakes of the past we have to pay heavy damages at present. Men have been taught in the name of Christ that they must obey certain laws which He never instituted, and that they must accept certain dogmas which, even if they be true, have never been laid down as essential to faith in Him; and as many of these have been gradually abandoned in obedience to the spirit of truth, the idea has been gradually developed that there is really no fixed authority in religion, and that each man must be guided by the instincts of his own heart and the intuitions of his own conscience. These suggestions may be stated in a form so plausible as to make it difficult to detect their fundamental fallacy.

Clearly, if on the one hand we deny these pleas, we may seem to war against liberty of conscience; on the other, if we admit them in their bare and unqualified form, we are in danger of trifling with (even if we do not entirely set aside), the authority of Christ. While, therefore, all needless appeals to authority are to be deprecated, it is essential for Christian teachers to assert that which admits neither of change nor compromise. There are truths which cannot in any sense be regarded as open questions. Even ardent young champions of the faith are sometimes in danger of erring in this direction. I well remember an earnest young minister entering the arena with one of the strong assailants of Christianity, and commencing with the assertion that the being of a God was an open question!

Such extraordinary candour may seem very admirable at the first blush, and in this case the whole statement was an error of expression rather than anything else. But unfortunately it may be made to cover an error which is only too prevalent. To the speaker's own mind, the being of a God was the first and most precious of all truths. It was worse than folly, therefore, to suggest that he was entering with an open mind on a question which must have been settled for him years and years before. He was not fighting as "one that beateth the air," but as one who, having a great truth in which he had found life and inspiration, courage and strength himself, was seeking to convince others who were sceptical or hostile.

In his statement there was an apparent generosity which might have a happy effect on an adversary. But the soldier of Christ must not fight with even the shadow of a suggestion of uncertainty.

MY PERSONAL EXPERIENCE, especially in recent years, has taught me that this is an age which eagerly and earnestly desires to listen to the accents of simple faith and settled conviction. It is very contemptuous (perhaps too much so), of mere dogmatism; it scoffs at intolerance; but assuredly it will never be moved by the stammering accents of men who do not address it with the full assurance of faith. Such assurance will awaken an enthusiasm which without it is impossible. Alas, to-day, instead of enthusiasm we have too many signs of apathy in relation to theological truth. But that is a wide subject reserved for another paper.

The Testimonies of the Lord.

PSALM CXIX. 111.

"THY testimonies"—Thy declarations of Thyself, the unveilings of Thy truth before my opened eyes, the revelations of Thy law for my life—says the Psalmist, have I taken as my portion, the very rejoicing of my heart. So may we say and feel. However poor the believer may be, he is rich if he takes to himself what God has given—God's witness to him, of His heart, His way, His work, His written Word. Embracing, receiving these testimonies, he takes up his freedom and enters upon his heritage; upon the broad and fruitful ground of Divine truth he lives.

"Thy testimonies"—they are the believer's portion, his property, the wealth of his soul. They are his for ever so long as he needs them; in them are consolation, strength, inspiration, growth; for what can so build up and sustain, as the Word of God, in love given and by faith received? His testimonies give fresh life, keep the soul in repair, by them the believer renews his strength.

"Thy testimonies." As the believer takes them and lives upon them, let him ask for grace for power simply so to do; their wealth of blessing will be realized; he shall find them a wide domain; and more light, more sweetness, more satisfaction in them shall he find as he takes them to his soul—a never-failing spring at which he may drink and drink. Testimonies made to the believer, for him to encourage his wavering faith; its reason and base, they give faith; its authority, the testimony of God about God.

I have taken them, the Psalmist says, they are presented to me, addressed to me; so may every believer say. What is a believer but a receiver of the testimonies of God? He receives them into his soul, letting them work there, taking them to himself in all their wealth of blessing as they speak of mercy that has no bound, of love that passes knowledge, of faithfulness that never deserts, of a Saviour who is a Saviour for ever, right through unto the end, from all evil unto everlasting life. And as in all their preciousness, they discover themselves to the believer's soul by the Holy Spirit's teaching, he clasps the treasure to his heart, lifts up his soul to God in thankfulness for so great a revelation, and cries: "Thy testimonies have I taken an heritage for ever; for they are the rejoicing of my heart." Torquay.

Books for Country Ministers.—Rev. G. Coates, Western House, Willington, Durham, begs to acknowledge anonymous parcels of books from "K. T." and "M. F." Other parcels have been personally acknowledged. Both money and books are greatly needed. About 100 applications are still waiting.

The Opium Traffic.

THE latest issue of "National Righteousness" (1d. Morgan & Scott) contains a lucid re-statement of the case against the Opium Traffic, signed by Mr. Joshua Rowntree on behalf of the representative board of the Anti-Opium Societies. Among the points set forth are the following:—

The trade in opium—declared in effect by a vote of the House of Commons in 1891 to be "morally indefensible"—is still maintained and carried on by our Indian Government.

The land under cultivation for opium in Bengal is now stated as being about 600,000 acres. This is an increase of 140,000 acres since 1892-93, when the acres of land under poppy in Bengal were 454,243 acres.

The magnitude of our trade in opium may be judged by the fact that during the sixty years which preceded the Queen's Diamond Jubilee, the amount of opium exported from India averaged half a ton for every hour (day and night), of those sixty years.

The Indian opium trade is a Government monopoly. Money is advanced to the growers without interest—and, to encourage the growth, payment to the growers has been increased 20 per cent. during recent years.

Our opium trade has been carried on, and is still maintained, simply for the sake of the revenue derived from it, notwithstanding the inconceivable injury caused by it to the people of China.

Further, ENGLAND IS INJURED by the opium trade: Morally, by its permitting and maintaining an immoral trade. Commercially, by the many millions of Chinese who are brought to poverty by the use of opium, and who are thus lost as purchasers of articles of British manufacture. Politically, by the prejudice against England caused by our opium trade in the minds of the educated classes in China.

THE WORLD IS INJURED by our opium trade: by the maintenance of this trade by England an example is set of a great nation deliberately setting considerations of revenue above the obligations of Christian morality.

In a circular just issued it is pointed out that the Government of India has the monopoly of this trade, but the actual responsibility for it belongs to Great Britain. During the last four years the opium manufactured by the Government of India, according to official returns, represents the enormous quantity of 29,145,200 lbs., a yearly average of 7,286,300 lbs. The best land of India, to the extent of about 600,000 acres, is used by the government for the cultivation of opium.

THE NEED FOR ENLIGHTENMENT.

In a letter just received, a missionary urges the home churches "to send a commission of three well-known men to China, to investigate the opium question fully, by getting among the natives and seeing it at work; thus understanding the true condition of affairs, and, when full of the subject, to tell it out to the whole length and breadth of the British Isles.

"We cannot turn to China herself; emperor, rulers, people—all are weak, bound, helpless: the emperor gets his money from it, the rulers take it themselves, of the people 'no man careth for his brother'—nor can we turn to our own country's rulers to stop England's share of this ghastly traffic, for this destruction of blood and flesh means money; in this she takes her level with the heathen.

"Churches of God, we turn to you. It is a challenge to you. Will you also turn away? Will you not strike a blow for God against this thraldom of the devil in China, and if successful (and why should it not be?) save millions by the stroke? Livingstone called Africa 'the open sore of the world,' because of the slavery rampant there. I question if this is not a more putrid and more extensive one, because of its curse.

"I suggest that those chosen be of different Protestant denominations. Of all peoples I still believe the British is in the van for honest-mindedness and fair-play; and in the power of God we shall not appeal in vain. But the public need light and truth."

The Distress in Macedonia.

I FORWARD a summary of Rev. E. B. Haskell's canvass of Deburtsa, Mudirluk, north of Ochrida, in the Monastir vilayet. Burned villages, 17; burned houses, 1,300; houseless people, 7,330; villages partly looted or injured, 3; total families injured, 1,336; and persons, 7,563. Unarmed men killed, 87 (10 after surrender); women killed, 9; children, 4; in all 100. Women dishonoured, 38. Four churches and one monastery destroyed. Fourteen churches gutted and defiled. Six schools burned and torn down, one gutted. Six villages of 305 families, and 1,779 people never had a school.

A day's relief work in Resna has also come to hand:—"The men with thirty sacks of flour arrived about 10 o'clock this morning. We had but eight sacks left, and a large crowd had gathered and was waiting. Many of those who got an oke or two of flour on Sunday had eaten it up, and others in the villages who had heard of Sunday's distribution arrived to-day. By noon all but one sack had been given out, and that will be gone by night. We are getting matters systematized little by little, and hope soon to have alphabetical lists of all refugees in Resna arranged in a book. When they come for flour, &c., we can ask the village and name, and mark at once what they take. I have taken lists from the head men of Kurshia, Lavtsi, Leoroka, Perovo, Petrine, and Zlatari. When it comes to the distribution of bedding, the people may insist on our giving it into their own hands. I almost dread to have only a small supply arrive, as so many mothers will plead it for their little ones that I shrink from disappointing the MULTITUDE WHO MUST BE DISAPPOINTED.

"From what I learn, I judge the people of Leoreck to be as badly off as any. There is no village near which is able to give them refuge, and they have but six houses left standing for 350 people. They beg me to come out and see their condition. We are sending back to-day fifty-three empty bags and four new ropes for bales of bedding. I hope more flour will come to-morrow as well as bedding. If the English party arrive they may prefer to come right on here and see what we are doing. They will be very welcome, and will hear many blessings invoked upon them. The comfort to the people of a sympathetic face is great. They usually speak of us as 'the brothers who are giving.'"

Permit me to thank your readers for past help, and to say also that for the last few days our contributions have almost ceased. There is great urgency.—W. A. Essery, Hon. Sec., Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society.

Mrs. Marriage Allen writes from Bourgas: "We arrived here yesterday morning, and have been enabled to acquire a good deal of information and work. We are much impressed with the thorough way in which the Bulgarians are organizing relief committees all over the country, with the head office at Sofia. The plan of sending the refugees off into the villages is extensively carried out. Each village has its committee, composed of the mayor, the priest, the teacher, two of the leading people, and two or three of the refugees. A careful list is kept of relief given, clothing, &c.

"Each person receives bread. The great need is beds. We have ordered 5,224 metres of strong canvas or ticking for them. The straw will be found in the villages. We have also ordered 1,306 yogans, or wadded quilts—some bought here, some made with wool from the country, and some to come from Constantinople. Then, too, we are hoping the blankets from England may come to hand before long. To-day we have met some ladies connected with a benevolent committee, and hope on Monday to commence a sewing and knitting class for the women.

"I expect to leave Bourgas in about a fortnight, and may possibly visit Tambol and Slevin on my way to Sofia, where I wish to stay two days. Funds are greatly needed, especially for beds and coverings. We are at present only helping the district of Bourgas, with its thirty-five villages. Clothing from England will not be adapted for the people. They wear coarse warm clothing of marvellous patterns. The Russian consul and his wife were to-day distributing to the refugees who came here two days ago. They are to be sent into Slevin soon. They came from a village in the Adrianople district—half was destroyed by the Turks some time ago—now the rest has been, and then fled.

"I have heard of terrible cruelties, some suspected persons being tortured to make them tell of others. One poor man is now in the hospital at Sofia, having managed to escape by crawling on his hands and knees to a house near. While the guard was away, his friends carried him to another place, and thus he was handed on to a place of safety."

The Nile Mission Press.

THE purpose of this organization, which has been initiated by Miss A. Van Sommer, is to establish a Mission Press in Alexandria for the Nile country, and for the peoples of North Africa and Arabia.

It is sought, by means of magazines, booklets, leaflets, and the like, to convey the knowledge of the Gospel to the many millions of people living in those lands. To this end a suitable site will have to be bought for the superintendent and manager, and also for the printing-works. This new effort will supply help to all missionaries working in North Africa.

A meeting in support of this organization took place at Exeter Hall a few days ago under the presidency of Mr. Eugene Stock.

Rev. Dr. St. Clair Tisdall (C. M. S.), gave an interesting address, in which he emphasized the pressing need of the work. "Imagine, if you can, the whole Press of England arrayed against the Gospel of Christ. Imagine, not only the newspapers—we know what very great power they have for good or for evil—but all other forms of literature, or nearly every other form, either tacitly anti-Christian or most decidedly anti-Christian. Imagine that going on from age to age, and if you can imagine such a state of things, you have therein a picture of what at the present time exists in Egypt and all Mohammedan lands, more or less.

ONE IN TEN THOUSAND.

We have a certain amount of literature in the Arabic language which is Christian literature produced by Christian missionaries, but for every 10,000 books, pamphlets, and newspapers in Arabic, you have 9,999 dead against the Gospel. I think, therefore, you will see at once that the only one possible means under God of meeting that power, the only way of counteracting the evil done by the Press, is by using the Press itself for the spread of the truth. In Egypt, there are, leaving entirely aside the grown-up generation, 80,000, at least, children in Egypt who are now learning to read."

Proceeding, the speaker answered the question, "What are they going to read?" by instancing the lighter literature of the country, with its indecencies; and theological literature "which is directed to the object of hindering the spread of the Gospel of Christ. Mohammedan controversialists abound in Egypt, in Syria, in India, in Persia, and also in the Turkish Empire generally. Some of these men are very able indeed, and they are pouring forth a regular stream of controversial literature and attacking the Bible, attacking Christianity, and doing their very best in this way to prevent the spread of the Gospel amongst their own people."

Mr. J. B. Braddon (Chairman of the Executive Committee) said that in Egypt there is a publication committee who advise them in the different stages of the work, and to whom they look to be the guides. At present there is about £1,000 in hand, but double that amount is required before the Press can be actually set on foot.

Rome in Ireland.

THE Board of Trinity College, Dublin, has recently approached Cardinal Logue, the head of the Irish Branch of the Roman Catholic Church, with an offer to provide religious teaching for Roman Catholic students within the walls of the College, on precisely similar lines to those on which religious teaching is given to Protestant students. The Board suggested that the teachers be nominated either by the Cardinal himself, or by Dr. Walsh, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin. Cardinal Logue met this proposal with a "flat refusal." Now, we have been told repeatedly by the heads of the Roman Catholic Church that their chief objection to Trinity College was its "Protestant atmosphere." Here was an offer that would have enabled Roman Catholics to carry their "atmosphere" with them, while availing themselves of all the educational advantages which Trinity affords. Moreover, the attendance of Roman Catholic students at Oxford and Cambridge is sanctioned on similar lines; and among the past thirty years some hundreds of Roman Catholic students have, despite the prohibition of their Church, passed through Trinity College without any apparent injury to their faith. Rome's uncompromising attitude will deprive her of the sympathy of many who have hitherto believed that her plea of a "Protestant atmosphere" constituted a real grievance.

There are three reformatory schools for boys in Ireland, two of which are Roman Catholic, and one Protestant. From the recently-published report of the inspector, who, by the way, is a Roman Catholic, we find that while the average cost of a boy per annum in the Roman Catholic schools is £24 7s., the cost in the Protestant school is only £18. There are nearly 400 Roman Catholic boys maintained in these schools. The extra cost to the State for having them under Roman Catholic management is about £2,500 per annum.

Mr. Frank Hugh O'Donnell, M.A., a pupil of the Jesuits, and a prominent opponent of an Irish Roman Catholic University, gives the following among other reasons for his opposition to his old teachers. "I discovered," he says, "that for three centuries the Jesuits made it a regular rule of their school discipline that the prohibition of public entertainments might always be relaxed for their scholars, when the entertainment was

'THE EXECUTION OF A HERETIC.'

This abominable provision was only withdrawn about 1830."

"I discovered that down to the present hour the great Jesuit canonist, Marionus de Luca, teaches in the Vatican University itself all these fearful doctrines of the rights of the Church to kill heretics, and the right of the Pope to depose heretic sovereigns, which caused rivers of blood to flow in Europe in the dark centuries of old." Mr. O'Donnell is still a Roman Catholic, though a formidable opponent of the Jesuit Order.

A distinguished Dutch priest, Rev. A. M. Claesen, has recently left the Church of Rome and joined the work of Rev. Thos. Connellan in Dublin. He has been for more than ten years a priest of Rome. For the greater part of the time he has been an Augustinian monk. He was twice decorated for distinguished services by the late Pope. An interesting account of his reasons for leaving the Church of Rome will be found in the December issue of The Catholic, edited by Rev. T. Connellan. Both Mr. Claesen and Mr. Connellan recently addressed meetings at the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin.

Helping One Another.—Founded eighteen years ago, the Hoxton Hall Help-One-Another Society has done much to assist poor women in the neighbourhood and to encourage them to help each other. Judging from the numbers who attend on Monday evenings, the restful hour of prayer and praise is widely appreciated. The membership roll numbers 123, the "rainy day" receipts show a good increase, and the Maternity and Nursing League has benefited not only members, but outsiders also, who have applied for help. The president of the society is Miss Davidson, 16, Darenth Road, Stamford Hill, N.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, December 13. Isaiah viii.

THIS chapter contains a collection of addresses to the people, as chapter vii. was an expostulation with their king.

1-4. As yet, in these verses, which probably were spoken before the rest of this chapter, the Assyrian had not been summoned by Ahaz. The prophet's son was called Speed-spoil-hurry-prey; and his name foreshadowed the certain doom of the kingdoms of Damascus and Israel, which were threatening Jerusalem. Why, then, should the people be afraid, or go about to seek foreign alliances? Was it not enough that God had foretold the overthrow of their dreaded foes within a few months?

5-8. In these verses Ahaz has appealed to Tiglath-Pileser, the great king of Assyria, to come on his behalf against the two kings of whom he was afraid. This was a gross insult to the Divine Protector of Jerusalem, who had promised deliverance. Ahaz and his council had refused the waters of Shiloah, and had invoked the aid of the Euphrates, with its strong and many waters. But they would live to repent of their insensate choice, and in the remainder of the chapter the Prophet sketches the evils that would come, not only on Damascus and Samaria, but even on Jerusalem, in consequence of this invitation to Assyria. The ally would become the inveterate foe. He would "fill the breadth of the land" in which the babe Immanuel had been born.

9-18. The Lord was willing to be the sanctuary and hiding-place of His people, but they would have none of Him, but preferred to form a confederacy with Assyria, which could only end in disaster. Yet God would not utterly forsake His people, and, in spite of all their sin, He would finally break in pieces the Assyrian and set them free from his yoke, because He could not run back on His own name, Immanuel; and where God is, the enemy cannot prevail (9, 10). He will be the same to us to-day.

19-22. But the people still further placed themselves and their lands in jeopardy, by turning to them that had familiar spirits, so that they still further alienated the Divine help. Ah, how often have we sought help from any quarter rather than "seeking unto our God"!

MONDAY, December 14. Isaiah ix.

The previous chapter ended gloomily enough. The Assyrian invasion is about to descend on the whole land of Canaan, on Samaria and Jerusalem alike; but in the far future the prophet sees gleams of light shoot athwart the dark landscape (1). This hope ripens to triumph (2). Instead of the nation being mutilated, it will be multiplied; for the fret of hunger and the curses of defeat, will be heard the joy of harvest and of spoil after victory. And why? Ah, the blessed reason is given in verses 6 and 7, which can only be fulfilled in the Son of God, "who was incarnate for us of the Virgin Mary." Because the government has been put on His shoulder, He will secure a glorious triumph, war shall roll away for ever from the horizon, and all the relics of the war that had desolated the land should be swept together into the fire. O Gracious and Marvellous Child, who of us shall not put on Thy dear shoulders the empire of our lives, that Thou mayest reign over us with justice and righteousness for ever, and give us Thine own perfect peace!

The prophet resumes the enumeration of the woes which he had commenced in chapter v. (25). 8-12. Loss of territory had made them more hardened and obdurate. 13-17. War and decisive defeat, which spared none in the community, had left them impenitent. 18-21. Internal anarchy, which spread with the awful rapidity of a prairie fire, had not bent them from their evil purposes. Indeed, jealousy and distrust had awoke their lust for blood, and no man spared his brother in murderous hatred. This subject is closed in chapter x. (1-4), where the dread threat of captivity is uttered. The day of their visitation would surely come, and the prophet sees it closing in the night of their captivity. Where would they then turn for help? Sorrow is often God's last message to men; to reject it, is to run headlong into destruction.

TUESDAY, December 15. Isaiah x.

In this chapter Isaiah turns to the Assyrian, who had been the rod and executor of the Divine anger. Samaria had already fallen. The judgment which he had predicted had taken effect. Ephraim had become an Assyrian province, and Judah stood face to face with Assyria. From Samaria to Jerusalem was only a two days' march. What could prevent the Assyrian King from making Zion as Samaria, and carrying her people also away into captivity?

7-11. The prophet puts into the conqueror's lips the intention of doing this, and makes him boast of the ease with which it can be accomplished. 27-32. Isaiah even describes the probable course which the invader will take from the time when he crosses the border of Judah till his arrival on the heights that overlook the Holy City. 12-19. The Assyrian expected to take Jerusalem as easily as a boy takes a nest of eggs. He believes in nothing but his own will and power. Who is there to hinder or thwart his purpose! He forgets that he is but the instrument of God, the axe or saw in the hand of the workman—as if a rod, says Isaiah, should shake them that lift it up. Let us not fear the hatred of men; they are under the hand of God, and may not go a step further than He permits. 20-23. After the Assyrian had done his worst, there should be a remnant, which he would not be able to injure, because protected by their Divine Friend. 24-34. Why, then, should they be afraid? O soul, fearing thine Assyrian, yet a little while and the indignation shall cease, for the Lord shall lop off his boughs with terror.

WEDNESDAY, December 16. Isaiah xi.

As the previous chapter closes, we hear the crash of the Assyrian tree to the ground, and there is no sprout from his roots. But out of the trunk of Jesse's line the prophet sees a fair and powerful branch uprising. The nation might be almost exterminated, and the dynasty of David reduced to a stump, but there should be a scion of wonderful vitality.

2-5. The vision of a King is presented to us, who can be no other than the Divine Redeemer, on whom rest the Seven Spirits of God. It has been affirmed that no other single text of Scripture has more impressed itself upon Christian doctrine and symbol, than the second verse of this chapter, interpreted as a definition of the work of the Holy Spirit. It is evidently the model of that royal hymn, the Veni Creator Spiritus. But He on whom this Divine Spirit rested waits to share His gracious influences with the humblest of His disciples.

6-9. The prophet cannot be content with the establishment of a strong government; he anticipates the redemption of nature also from chaos. This passage, therefore, is parallel with Rom. viii. 19, &c.

10-16. But still further the prophet's vision extends. He beholds the ingathering of Israel. "All Israel shall be saved." The ancient enmity between Ephraim and Judah shall have passed away, and together they shall have vanquished all their foes. As they were brought out of Egypt, so shall Assyria and all countries that have received them yield them up again to their own land. Boundless blessing lies in store for all who will order their lives according to the will of God.

THURSDAY, December 17. Isaiah xii.

Here is the counterpart of the song of Moses (Exodus xv.). When the enemies of the Lord's people are overwhelmed in sudden and inevitable destruction in that last great battle of Armageddon, then the Church of united Jews and Gentiles shall burst forth in this anthem. But how befitting it is for our lips, as we are daily receiving proofs of God's salvation.

There is no anger now for those who are in Christ Jesus. Because He was forsaken, we need never be; because He bowed beneath the storm, we may evermore dwell in safety.

Notice the repetition of the personal pronoun: My salvation, My strength and song, and again, My salvation. It is not enough that God should be willing to be all this; He waits for us to lay the appropriating hand of our faith on His resources.

The third verse was chanted when the priest, on the great day of the Feast of Tabernacles, brought up the water from the Pool of Siloam, and poured it out in the Temple Court. How many wells of salvation there are!

6. Hide God in your heart, and you may ridicule the stratagems of your foes—human and demoniacal. But be sure to acknowledge it with glad acclaim—"Cry out and shout."

FRIDAY, December 18. Isaiah xiii.

Here is the doom of Babylon. The drama opens with the setting up of a standard, around which the nations are summoned, upon a bare mountain (2). In a moment more, we behold the gathering of the nations, which Jehovah is mustering to the overthrow of the wicked city (3-5). The day of the Lord is next announced, in which, after long delay, His justice and power shall at last break forth and be satisfied (6). Then, as human hearts melt, and the world is punished for its iniquity, sun and moon seem to aid the horror of darkness, and between the shivering heaven and the quaking earth the people shall be as shepherdless sheep. It is an awful vision of judgment! (7-16).

At verse 17, &c., there is a more specific prediction that Babylon shall be overthrown by the Medes, and thereupon a graphic picture is drawn of its ruin and abandonment to wild beasts. Modern investigations have verified the exactness with which this fate has been fulfilled. Babylon had supposed that wealth would procure her immunity from capture, but the Medians, whose banner was a leathern apron, cared nothing for gold. Our money will not avail to screen us from the wrath of God; only the blood of Jesus can do that!

SATURDAY, December 19. Isaiah xiv.

Here is the Song of Triumph which Israel was to sing over the fall of Babylon. The scene of the poem is the Underworld—the abode of the shades of the dead. The earth is glad to be rid of the presence of the tyrant, but Hades trembles as the King of Babylon descends into its depths. He had thought to scale the heavens, and set his throne among the immortals; but his fate is that of all mortals, to go down to the weakness and oblivion of the pit. Each of the kings which, in other days, he had subjugated, is depicted as stirring in his niche, in the long corridors of death, asking satirically how it could be that one so boastful could become as weak as himself. What a comment this on Psa. ii., "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh." Not only does God deride the arrogance and boastfulness of man, but He sets them forth as subjects of universal derision, even in the pit. This song will some day be applicable to Death and the Grave.

Appended to this magnificent prophecy, and as the chapter closes, there is a prediction of the fate of Philistia. That land, so long hostile to Judah, need not congratulate herself because one Assyrian king was dead (Sargon), because a worse would arise (Sennacherib); and whilst Philistia dwindled away, Zion would stand.

The Christmas Boat.—The December muster of the Christian Lifeboat Crew was held at the Welcome Home, Canning Town, on December 1, when the text for the month was "Glory to God in the Highest" (Luke ii. 14), reminding us that Christmas was approaching. Speaking with Miss Child on the work, we found she was preparing for the unloading of the Christmas boat; but as yet little of the cargo had arrived. No doubt friends are waiting for the last day, so as to send all they have prepared; but will those who have not yet thought about this need kindly do so. Last year some 300 honest sailors had presents of woollens, socks, helmets, steering gloves, &c. That a similar company may be similarly served will friends please send cargo to Miss Child, Welcome Home, Canning Town, London, E.—William Luff.

THE ROBIN DINNER FUND.

A FUND OF DELIGHT.

The Christian said: "The children seemed immensely delighted, and evidently enjoyed a thoroughly happy evening. THE ROBIN DINNER IS A FUND OF DELIGHT."

The Daily Graphic said: "It is a touching and pretty sight to watch the gatherings of the hungry clans. It is a grand thing to teach the ignorant, but it is a much grander, simpler, more necessary thing to feed the hungry; and to give cheerless lives something to look forward to and to look back upon is, perhaps, the most useful of all."

The Daily Telegraph said: "Nothing could be more satisfactory. The Robin Dinner speaks for itself."

To the Readers of "The Christian."

Dear Reader,

Last year, by the kindness of many friends of Robin, many little Robins had their usual winter's treat.

This year thousands of young Robins will be opening their beaks. Who will help to throw them some crumbs? Nearly £1,000 needed to feed the usual number. Will not the rich (are we not all rich compared with our Robins?) follow our Lord's own words and make a feast for those who can make no return?

Donations will be most thankfully received and acknowledged. Yours faithfully,

ROBIN.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

(which are urgently needed if we are to provide for as many children as last year) should be sent addressed to the Hon. Secs., JOHN KIRK and C. ASHTON BULLOCK, "Robin" Dinner Fund, 11, Ludgate Square, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C.

For a Quarter of a Century Robin has given, by the kind help of friends,

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR PARTIES

To the Children of the Poor.

Will you help to give a Robin Dinner this Year?

WHAT IS THE ROBIN DINNER FUND?

A Fund, started over 25 years ago, to give a Christmas Dinner and Evening's Enjoyment to children of the great city, who have never known a Christmas party.

HOW MANY CHILDREN DO WE REACH?

About 24,000 every year at present. But there are thousands on thousands more we could and would entertain right royally if you will help us with Christmas Bounty.

WHAT DO WE WANT?

Your sixpence at least to entertain one child, and then the sixpences of your family and friends.

HOW IS THE FUND ADMINISTERED?

By a Committee of well-known Clergy and Laymen working in the poorest districts. There is no rent of offices or payment of officials. The whole work is voluntary, and every penny goes directly to the children through the agency of those who know best how to use it—either the clergy living and labouring in the poorest parishes of London, or through the Ragged School Union

MOST URGENT APPEAL.

This Society, in which Queen Victoria took so warm an interest and whose Patron is now Queen Alexandra, pleads most earnestly for help towards its unique work, It has, besides its many Shore Institutes, three Hospital Steamers with four sailing Bethel Ships, in home waters; and two Hospital Steamers and three Shore Hospitals in Labrador and Newfoundland. Without further and immediate aid it will be compelled to curtail operations, and what this would mean during winter's storms few can adequately realise. It has no invested funds, but is absolutely dependent on the voluntary gifts of the public.

National Blind Relief Society,

A Blind Musician.

A lady of great talent and refinement, aged 42, blind from infancy, has had to return to England from abroad, where she was making a good living by teaching singing, through large bank failures, in which many of her pupils were involved, and most of her savings lost. If with timely aid her mind were relieved, and her health, which has suffered much, were restored, she could earn a fair income, being a very good singer, and wonderfully successful in "voice production." Assistance is urgently needed in providing the necessaries for receiving and visiting pupils, such as hiring suitable rooms, a piano, and also the services of a guide and a music reader; besides the essentials of food, clothing, &c. If help were obtained now, in due time this lady would, in all probability, have the happiness of being able to succeed in her profession and provide for herself."

An Irish Gentleman Suddenly Bereft of Sight.

Suddenly, a year ago, an Irish gentleman became blind at the age of 56. He is now unable to help himself in any way, and is often at a loss to provide the necessaries of life, his only source of income being the small profits from poultry keeping on the little portion of land surrounding a cottage which was left him by an old friend. A small allowance, paid monthly or quarterly would be the means of relieving him of much anxiety, as the sale of eggs only realises a fair sum during six months of the year.

The great courage and cheerfulness shown by this gentleman under his great affliction only add to the earnest desire that more lightness should be brought into his darkened life.

The Rev. J. PULLEIN-THOMPSON, Hon. Sec., The Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W., will gladly receive and acknowledge donations for these sad cases.

FACSIMILE OF THE LORD MAYOR'S LETTER.

The Mansion House,
London, E.C.

29th October 1903.

Dear Alderman Thong.

The Lady Mayoress and I as well as the Sheriff's and their Ladies, were much interested in all we saw on our visit yesterday to the London Temperance Hospital.

I was very gratified with the up-to-date character of all the arrangements made for the successful treatment and general well-being of the patients accommodated within the various wards of the Institution.

I was also impressed by the numbers - averaging more than 1200 weekly - receiving medical and surgical attention in the out patient departments, and having regard to the fact that all this has been done in an old disused Vicarage, I was quite convinced that you had fully made out a case of pressing necessity for the immediate rebuilding of that branch of your Hospital on a scale commensurate with its ever growing requirements.

This I hope you may succeed in doing in a manner worthy of the general efficiency of your main building. I enclose with pleasure my own promised contribution towards the £10,000 and shall be glad to learn that you have secured from other well-wishers the remaining balance required for this much needed extension.

Yours very truly.

Modern Miracles!

I.—The Story of a Diamond Ring.

HANNAH meant some day to drown herself! She had vowed it over and over again when hard beset, until it became a fixed idea with her, an open door of certain escape. At length she was caught in the very attempt. She had become desperate, and the river was near. Things could not look blacker nor be worse than now. What did she care or even know of a future life, child-heathen that she was? Religion of any sort had never come in her way. Blows, brutal kicks from heavy boots, semi-starvation: all these were hers. She knew what it was to be turned out of the squalid home at night with only one thin garment on, to pass the hours till day as best she could, amid wet and cold; grim hunger meanwhile gnawing at her vitals. Could it be much worse to drown? She thought not. If she drowned, she knew at any rate it would soon be over, whereas this tortured life went on and on. And so, straight to the river bank she rushed, heedless and blind with passionate despair, and there on the very brink, she was arrested only just in time!

(1.) HANNAH, THE MISERABLE CHILD-VICTIM.

Hannah Glover, this child sufferer, was but twelve and a half when life no longer seemed worth her living, and the other dark alternative appeared the best way out. The mere chance, as men say, of a neighbour's unexpected presence, with a strong will and an even stronger arm, alone averted the tragedy. The motherless Hannah had a father and a brother, both brutal drunkards of the violent order. Kicking, beating, starving, were the changes most frequently rung by them on the young child's life. And viler conduct still, that may not be even named, fell to poor Hannah's lot. Was there a girl-child in all Great Britain in more woful state? The ill-conditioned dwellers in the fœtid slum of the cathedral town where Hannah was born and bred, at length rose up in protest against the continuance of such foul and brutal cruelty towards the child. You may kill your child with a kick if you like, or even starve it, but you must do it expeditiously if you desire such neighbours to look on inert, or, perhaps, even tacitly to approve; for have not they, some of them, troublesome brats of their own? But you must not "draw out the agony" too long! You may not keep it up for years, day in and day out! Not pity nor piety, but patience, will be outraged by limitless prolongation of the martyrdom. And it was even so with Hannah's tyrants. Public opinion, even among drunkards and degraded women, was too strong for the two brutal bullies who "sought the young child's life to destroy it" body and soul.

Then my aid was invoked. Why? Ah! was I not another way out—perhaps the easiest? Poor Hannah! Her father's final words touched the nethermost hell: "Don't mind what becomes of her—not a jot!"

"LET HER DROWN—GOOD RIDDANCE!"

So it was that I came on the scene, and then there began for Hannah a new life, never before considered even possible by her. Will you follow her to our Village Homes? Imagine the change if you can? Even now as one tries to write of it, the sharp contrast seems almost too vivid for words. Home, sweet surroundings, good food and enough of it, warm clothing, a comfortable bed, and simple education—in exchange for all that desperate and loathsome past! And then there was womanly kindness, gradually deepening into MOTHERLY LOVE for the forlorn and worse than orphaned bairn!

Imagine, too, the wounds and bruises alike of body and mind that had to be healed, the memories of evil to be effaced, while the little soul was being assuredly led, by example and precept, along gentle ways into the light of life, and until the dawning of the HEAVENLY LOVE in her heart at length broke down all opposition in Hannah's nature, and she knew she was loved for her own sake, and for herself.

It is not easy, perhaps, to imagine all that, but such was Hannah's record until she left us—saying farewell with many tears to her sweet Village Home and cottage mother. One fine summer day she found herself with eighty-six other little damsels, her companions, on board the good ship bound for Canada.

(3.) HANNAH, SOON TO BE A BRIDE!

Shortly after her arrival in the Dominion, Hannah was placed in a charming Christian home, in the service of a medical man and his wife. Here our ladies who have the care and oversight of our girls in Canada regularly visited her, and meanwhile correspondence was steadily kept up between her cottage mother and others of her old friends in the Village Home. The reports of Hannah's progress in Canada have always been encouraging. She has continued during all the time to this very hour to bear an unblemished character.

For a while she suffered from ill-health, and it was feared that the privations and ill-treatment of her youth had made an indelible impression upon her physical frame; but she received such constant professional care and such assiduous attention from her employers, who from the first became deeply attached to her, that eventually she outgrew her delicacy and blossomed forth into vigorous health and beautiful womanhood. No one would have recognized in her, as she attained her nineteenth year, the unhappy little creature, desperate and forlorn, who had been admitted to our Homes only six years before! She remained all this time in the family of the good doctor and his wife, as their treasured maid, beloved with almost the affection of parents for a daughter.

(2.) HANNAH, AGED 15, ON LEAVING THE VILLAGE SCHOOL.

Finally, not so many months ago, she, being then twenty-three years of age, was married from her master's house to a well-to-do young farmer to whom she had been engaged for some time. What transformations had been accomplished in Hannah's condition and prospects since her first admission to our Homes will be best indicated by the photograph (3), taken a short time before her marriage!

Let me say, however, that there was one very quiet and unobtrusive, but very effective, agent in bringing about all this change from wretchedness to prosperity which must not be altogether overlooked when telling Hannah's story. It is true that the agent referred to could neither speak nor write, but it possessed, nevertheless, considerable influence, and it may be said to have been the largest contributor to Hannah's permanent happiness. It was simply an old-fashioned diamond ring, and it was in the following manner it entered so intimately into Hannah's life.

A short time after her rescue, and while as yet my mind was full of her pathetic and almost tragic story, I was entertaining some visitors at our central offices in Stepney. The girl's photograph, recently taken, lay on my table, and naturally became the subject of remark. I ventured to tell my guests the whole sad story. They were all deeply interested in my recital.

"What will you do with her?" was the question put by several who were present. Another visitor inquired—

"If the villainous relatives try by and by to get this girl into their hands again, how can you prevent them?"

I explained what were my methods of training and my plans for her future. The girl was now nearly thirteen. The first thing would be to send her down to our Girls' Village Home, and allow her to remain there for two or three years, learning the secret of its happy child-life, and forgetting, if that were possible, the horrors through which she had already passed. Then, perhaps, Canada would open up to her, and if I could place her with really good people in the Dominion her future would probably be assured. I spoke confidently, indeed almost prophetically, because I had already had such a wonderful experience of the potentialities of the training we give at Ilford, when followed by wisely-planned emigration.

One gentleman present inquired: "But what will all that cost?" To which, after a moment's consideration, I answered: "If Hannah stays with me, say for two or three years, the expense will work out at about £14 per annum, that is at £28 or £40. Add to this the £10 needful for outfit and passage money, if the girl is emigrated, and the whole cost for three years' training and emigration will amount to £50."

An old lady, who had been gazing thoughtfully at the photograph, started up from her chair as I spoke, and asked:

"Where is the girl now? Can we see her?"

I at once assented to the suggestion, and a note was written to the "Quarantine House" adjoining, where the girl still was, asking the Matron to let Hannah and two other girls come in to me on some errand which would disguise the object I had in view. Presently they appeared, and I easily indicated Hannah to my guests by calling her by name. After awhile, my old lady visitor drew the child aside, and chatted with her in so friendly and familiar a fashion that Hannah soon became quite at her ease and waxed confidential. Presently she and her companions went off, each made happy with a cake from our tea-table.

"She is worth it," said my old lady friend aside to me, "and I will do it." Then, drawing from her finger a fine, but old-fashioned diamond ring, she placed it in my hand, saying quietly:

"Do you know that I was offered £50 for this ring by Mr. Spink a few days ago? Take it and sell it, and use the money for Hannah." I obeyed with gratitude, and Hannah to this day has abundant cause to thank this little magic ring!

CHARLIE ROLLER AS HE WAS WHEN ADMITTED.

HAVE MIRACLES CEASED? Some people say "Yes." I, with good reason, and arguing from a wide experience, think differently. Examine with care the three portraits on the previous page of the sweet young creature whose early life and entrance to our institutions I have described. See her as the miserable child-victim of cruel oppression and wrong; then as the girl of fifteen just leaving her village school; and last, but not least, as the pretty young soon to-be bride, the beloved daughter of the kindly folks who had opened wide their hearts to let her in! Ponder the details of her whole story. Think of what Hannah was saved from and what, by God's grace, she has become. See all the mighty change, not merely of outward circumstances, but in course of life; consider, also, the prospects yet lying out before her. Then tell me, Do you now believe that "the day of miracles" is really over?

II.—The Story of Two Boy Tramps.

Two lads, veritable tramps, clad not exactly in rags, but in very poor clothing indeed, applied at our Ever-Open Door in Leeds some eight years ago for a night's shelter. Of course they were admitted at once. Both were half famished. They gladly and gratefully accepted the proffered hospitality, and showed their gratitude the next day by offering to remain and do any kind of jobs the manager would give them, in order to work off their debt. Poor fellows! It was hopeful to hear them talk like that, for there are so many of the tramp class who will take all you give them, and never show one iota of gratitude.

The story of the boys was commonplace enough. One fellow, whose face I show here, was eighteen years of age; the other was sixteen. They were entirely homeless. The father had died fifteen years before, and then the mother went to the bad. Eventually she and her children had to beg their food from door to door. Charlie Roller, the subject of this sketch, had had many strange vicissitudes, and finally he lost a situation which he had obtained, through falling downstairs and seriously injuring his back. On recovering, he did odd jobs for a furniture maker in Bradford.

When the two lads came into our Homes, I traced all the places they had stopped at and the persons who had given them chance employment, and, in fact, became thoroughly acquainted with their history. It was a pleasure to discover that almost every word the boys had told me about their career had been strictly true. Everywhere they had left a good record behind them. Eventually Charlie began to travel the country with a waxwork show; but he was dismissed by his employer at Darlington three months before he applied to me, for not selling enough programmes.

Needless to say, like many thousands of other young fellows, derelicts on the Sea of Life, Charlie was at once and freely admitted to our Youths' Labour House. I did not need to keep him long in the Homes. At his age it would not have been wise. All I needed was to test him to ascertain if he was honest, if he was decent in his habits, if he was really industrious and willing to work; and four months sufficed to prove that I need have no fear either of him or of his brother. In due course the twain went to Canada.

Charlie has been there now for some seven years, and has won golden opinions for himself. He is a farmer, not in a very large way, indeed, but doing thoroughly well, and accepted by his neighbours as a citizen who has been an acquisition to the Dominion. Look at his strong, manly face, on which high purpose and strong resolve are plainly stamped, and consider how great a change has been wrought in this once homeless tramp! The brother has also done exceedingly well. But the great point of their little history is this: neither of these boys, thus lifted from a life of tramping and idleness, of suffering and of temptation to themselves, need ever again cost the charitable public, or the country where they live, one single shilling. At what expense has all this been accomplished? Let us see. What would a year's residence in the Homes for fellows of this age cost me? Perhaps £18. They were there only four months; so that they cost me but £6 a-piece for all I did for them while in England. Then came the great expense of going forth to Canada, which cost another £10 each. Add £1 for the cost of further inspection and supervision until they settled down steadily, and you have a total expenditure of only £17 each on these young lives saved, our own country released from a possible burden of taxation for their support in a less worthy fashion, while Canada is enriched by two fine citizens who are contributing every day they live to the prosperity of their country. Nor is that all. They are consumers, and therefore customers of ours! They require articles which are manufactured in England. It is by these, and the like of these, that much of our export trade with Canada is sustained. Even if they had never returned a single farthing by way of direct gift to the Homes which had befriended them, they have by their industry and success become important factors in the general commonweal and prosperity of us all.

But these lads have, from the first, as, indeed, might be suspected by any one who looked at the fine face of the elder brother, here represented. Now carefully compare the two photographs, and then rejoice with me because of the successful harvest we are, by God's goodness, being permitted to reap from all our patient sowing!

STEADILY CONTRIBUTED TO OUR FUNDS,

III.—The History of our Homes.

Begun in the humblest fashion, our Institutions may be likened to that grain of mustard seed which, sown in feebleness, but in faith, became a great tree; yet it was the sun and the showers of heaven that nourished it. It had no capital; not a penny in the bank, nor the promise of a shilling. It was simply and solely a tiny effort made by an altogether insignificant individual to follow what he then strongly felt to be the manifest leadings of the Holy Spirit. But the prayers of Christian friends were around it like an atmosphere, and true prayer was, as always, accompanied by blessed sympathy and earnest unceasing effort; so the growing work never lacked any good thing. Often the last shilling was expended, but always the coffers were replenished from our Lord's own inexhaustible treasury. Thus it has been even unto this day; and now, our large family of over 7,000 children, saved by God's help from the direst evils, is still, as ever, dependent upon supplies sent down from heaven, as literally as if an angel brought them, in direct response to the petitions of Christ's servants, which ascend as daily incense to our Father's footstool from every country throughout the world.

CHARLIE ROLLER AS HE IS TO-DAY.

I verily declare that this continuous and gracious transformation of "the waste material of our slums," which is going on daily under our eyes, into the precious and well-ordered lives of rescued boys and girls, "serving their generation by the will of God," is nothing short of a SUCCESSION OF MIRACLES before which I reverently bow my head and worship, giving thanks and praise to the great name of Jehovah-Jesus, "crowning Him Lord of all!"

On the Dogger-Bank.

MISSION TO DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

WE have here to deal with some thousands of the best type of our fellow-countrymen, who dig their trawls into the soft sand of the storm-swept Dogger, and other fishing grounds, for the benefit of the people of these islands. The veriest land-lubber will not need to be told that we refer to the fishermen—chiefly the trawlers of the North Sea—or, for that matter, labouring wherever the ubiquitous steam trawler may be found, with its sturdy crew literally plucking from the deep her spoils of fish; every reader of The Christian has some responsibility with regard to the physical, moral, and intellectual well-being of these men.

Life in the fleet is not a picnic during the equinoctial gales; still less during the heavy gales of winter, when the North Sea is literally swept by the cold blasts which blow across at frequent intervals during the Christmas season from the Siberian Steppes, turning the dark, shallow waters of the North Sea, for a time, into white foam, reminding one of the snow in the region from whence they came, and leaving

WRECK AND DISASTER IN THEIR WAKE.

In September last, during an equinoctial, the lugger Snowflake grounded near Yarmouth, and eventually became a total wreck. Her crew, consisting of nine men, were saved, and taken in by the Royal National Misson to Deep-Sea Fishermen at their refuge.

Again, in October last the same institution received and cared for three survivors of the ill-fated Swedish schooner Christian, which went ashore on the Cross Ridge Sand. These poor unfortunate foreigners, after enduring hours of exposure, found a warm welcome awaiting them at the Refuge, where a hot supper and other comforts were provided.

From Brixham and Aberdeen the workers are appealing for extension of premises in order to cope with the increasing opportunities which the popularity of these resorts, among the fishermen and lads, enjoins; and yet the herring season has been less fruitful than in former years, and the Mission is carrying on its praiseworthy efforts in face of an urgent and growing need of funds, for it is its very success which has produced this undesirable effect.

CHURCH AND HOSPITAL.

Out among the fleet also, in the very midst of these toilers of the deep, a noble work is carried on by the Mission Hospital steamers. Imagine a church, with a hospital, having a resident qualified surgeon, a fine dispensary, and a library attached, and all the services conducted in a simple, fervent, Evangelical spirit; where the "pastor" is "all things to all men," and works with his fellows in their arduous toil—and you have a faint idea of the Mission steamer! From this vessel, too, the trawlers are visited.

A volunteer worker visited, during very bad weather, from this "church," no fewer than five steam trawlers, and held in all twelve services. In one instance a skipper, erstwhile a victim of drink, was led into a Christian life. In another instance, as the result of his visits, an engineer gave up his atheism in favour of Christianity, and an inquirer for Christ bore testimony to the help he had received.

The relief which injured men receive is no small portion of the work. Fisherman suffer very frequently from bruises, sprains, and sea cuts and rope burns, and as the writer has experienced the agony of the two latter ailments when surgical aid, even of a meagre kind, was absent, he writes feelingly when he states that major accidents do not always produce the pain and constant torture that such minor ailments will, if not at once treated by proper methods. To the fishermen, then, the hospital is, indeed, a boon, and the surgeon is, in fact, kept busy. most mornings, attending to his patients.

In addition to the work on the North Sea, the fishermen of far-away Labrador are the object of the Society's solicitude. At Indian Harbour, a poor fellow, a Romanist crippled with rheumatism, lies near to an old fisherman also suffering from rheumatic fever, and it is terrible to imagine what the scores of sick fishermen in this region, or for that matter, the fishermen of our own coasts, would do without the Mission.

In addition to caring for shipwrecked crews, ministering to the sick, helping the distressed in body and mind, and telling one and all of a Saviour's love, the Mission distributes wearing-apparel, gloves, mittens, stockings, underclothing, and tons of good, wholesome literature, tracts, and bibles.

Thus, though you and I cannot personally assist the fishermen, we can at least feel that we are helping them if we support the Mission which, in a direct, practical sense is undoubtedly undertaking our responsibility, and more probably than not, putting into operation our desires.

I have before suggested the query as to the fate of the fishermen without the Mission, and I may be excused if I suggest to the reader his fate without the fishermen? With this terse question I leave you to reflect on the consequences of that undesirable condition, and as to whether you are doing what you can to help those who gather for you the harvest of the sea?

"The Mixed Multitude."

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

OF the many societies which "go out into the highways and hedges, the streets and lanes of the city," in the service of Christ, there is none more energetic and steadfast than the Christian Community. Its annual report reflects the highest credit on its committee and secretaries, and should greatly encourage and satisfy its generous supporters and stimulate them to continued and increased liberality. This society endeavours, above all things, to meet the requirements of the Gospel at its many points, and thus comprehensively expresses the scope and function of Christianity. It not only preaches the Gospel; it applies the principles of the Kingdom of Christ. It identifies itself with the "least" of these conditions with which the Great Master identified Himself, viz., the hungry, the sick, the naked, the homeless, the abandoned; and in serving them, it becomes identified with Him. It is His work.

Nothing in the report is more inspiring than the fact that the manifold work of the year has been accomplished

BY VOLUNTARY EFFORT.

The helpers have given themselves freely, devoting their spare time in seeking by "all means to save some," or doing something for the welfare and happiness of their poorer brethren and sisters. Four hundred and fifty have thus laboured during the year, from no other reason than their love to Christ and His cause, and seeking no other end than the glory of God. This is the right motive and the right end in the Christian service.

This year the Society has, at all times, in all things, and in all wise ways, ministered to the varied needs of the "mixed multitude" with whom it has to do. It has attended to the mental wants of the neighbourhood in the distribution of 2,160 books from its excellent free library, which, in addition to its "reference department" for the use of teachers and students, has also a "lending department," which contains 8,000 volumes. It has ministered to the needs of the soul by the faithful preaching of the Gospel in its eight mission halls, at its twenty-one open-air stations, and through the distribution of 84,742 tracts, booklets, and religious periodicals. By such means many have been converted to Christ, many have been comforted and cheered. The seed of the Kingdom has been cast broadly. The results are with the "Lord of the Harvest."

It has ministered to the needs of the body, by means of its magnificent organization for supplying the necessaries of life—food to the hungry, clothing to the naked, and means of restoration to health to those who have been enfeebled by sickness and disease. What self-denying effort is revealed in the report that during the year 21,000 breakfasts, teas, and suppers were given to the starving; 1,000 bread, lodging, and other relief tickets were distributed to the needy; 13,500 breakfasts and dinners were provided for children; 1,025 garments were sold or given to the poor; and 500 sufferers were sent into the country, that nature might make their hearts beat with new life and bring back the roses to their faded cheeks.

There is a large class of unfortunates in this great city whose great need is the touch of sympathy and the word of cheer. Some of them have sunk into the "horrible pit and the miry clay," through no direct fault of their own; but most of them "have only themselves to blame." Of all men to be pitied they are those who, in addition to their failure, carry about with them the dreadful consciousness that they "have only themselves to blame." Very hard is the way of transgression, and very lonely and dreary is its end.

HOPE FOR THE DESPAIRING.

We have in this great city, happily, many Refuges for all sorts and conditions of castaways. Within their hospitable walls many despairing ones find shelter from the winters of poverty and loneliness; but no earthly refuge can shield them from the winters of bitter memories, present despair, and future foreboding within their breasts save the Gospel of Divine Mercy, as expressed in Christ-like speech and deed, that alone can "minister to a mind diseased" and souls forlorn. In this direction the Society has rendered splendid service during the year. It has visited 15,000 workhouse inmates in twenty-three workhouses, infirmaries, and casual wards. It has carried words of hope to 2,000 lodging-house inmates every week in six of the great boroughs, and in one lodging-house at Hastings. It took 3,319 workhouse inmates to Epping Forest for a day, and entertained 11,000 of the same class at Christmas, to their unbounded benefit and delight.

A very interesting and useful branch of the Society's work is that of the employment of widows in needlework during the winter months. They are employed three afternoons each week; and, according to the testimony of ladies all over the country, who have sent orders for the articles, the work is of a very high order. During the past year the number of attendances made by the poor widows in making clothing was 2,200.

We have to note also the work of the Society in connection with in Herts and Essex. There tracts and books have been distributed, cottage-meetings held, the people visited in their homes, lantern services given, and other enterprising labours have been accomplished with much success, and with fuller promise of result if only more workers were able and ready to enter this needy and inviting part of the vineyard.

The Society has erected a new Mission Hall in Canning Town, a most needy locality, exposed to seasons of deep want and poverty, and composed largely of the labouring classes. A most successful work has been done already, especially among the children, and it is hoped that when the new hall is opened the work will be extended, and greater results will ensue.

A special appeal is made to all friends of mission work, and the sum of £100, for which this appeal is tendered, ought not to be difficult for the many stewards of God's gold to find.

A very promising branch of the Society has also been started at North Kensington, in a very needy part. "Royal borough" though it be, it has its slums, and every grade and phase of physical and spiritual degradation and destitution are to be found within its borders.

It is to such societies as the Christian Community that we must continue to look to carry the Gospel and apply the principles of the Kingdom of Jesus to the multitudes of such people who "sit in darkness and the shadow of death"; and it is through such blessed and practical ministry, continued and enlarged, that we can hope for the day when it can be said of such people: "On them hath the light shined."

J. Fleming Shearer.

"For whom Christ died."

THE BRIDGE OF HOPE.

ALL the readers of The Christian know something of the work that is going on at the "Bridge of Hope." It has been before the public now for a quarter of a century, sustained by the generous help of many kind, faithful supporters. But I know by comforting experience that it is well to remind our friends of the scenes and circumstances which, though hidden from the vista of sheltered lives, do still most truly exist in this great city of London, and never more acutely than during the winter months. Our threefold work, however, continues all the year round. Forlorn young girls press to our Shelter every day, and shoes and food for our large family are needed both summer and winter.

Christmas, time in happy-sheltered homes is the festival of the children, the time for good-will amongst men. What well-spring of peace or joy can rise and mount at Christmas-time in the heart and soul of such a little one as M.A.T.? She was only twelve when she was brought before the magistrate, taken into custody, poor child, for wandering about the streets at night. "Why don't you go home?" the policeman asked, not unkindly. But Mary's "home" was far less inviting than even the bitter streets at night; it consisted of one room—if one can call such a place a room—which she shared with her father—one of those poor, wretched creatures whose very aspect is an offence to the sun, who haunt our public parks and the benches of the recreation grounds, and appear to have lost all that makes a human being any degree higher than the brute creation; worse than the beast, indeed, for the beast does not descend to the depths to which drink brings a man.

Poor little Mary! Such was her father—could we send her back to sleep in such surroundings? We took her in. She is a good, dear child, and is doing well.

Happy are the children to forget so soon the misery when it is past! We "empty by filling;" fresh air, interesting lessons, healthy play, and useful work. All the knitted stockings, also the warm woollen garments we make, are the work of our young girls, who, as they leave school, before taking a place, spend a time in our knitting or work room.

Mary's story is not a singular one. Among the many who find refuge in our children's Cottage Homes, very many little ones are sweet, pure little buds, only waiting for the sunshine of love to develop into healthy blossoms; but often the former neglect, or the hereditary sin, leaves its mark, and it takes years to remove the traces of evil. The little cripple, whose picture we give, is the brightness of one of our Cottages, absolutely content, and happy in the love which surrounds her. By-and-by, with great care, we hope she may walk, but though between four and five years old, she is small for two.

EARLY CRAVING FOR DRINK.

We cannot begin our temperance work too early. I have had children who would resort to any ruse, hoping thereby to get drink. One child of eight years feigned epileptic fits (and feigned them extremely well, too), expecting in this way to obtain brandy; while another (who however, is doing remarkably well now) was sent to us because she got tipsy on every possible occasion at eleven years of age! The baby who stands with her hand on the handle of the door, has already her distinct preferences. "I like a glass of beer," she told her cottage mother. "I can't abear whisky, but I love a glass of port or sherry"! One would shudder for the future of such little ones, and fear for the temptations they must meet, only we have seen and know that the grace of God is sufficient to overcome even this most terrible curse, handed down from parent to child.

YOUNG-LIFE TRAGEDIES.

From our Shelter, perhaps, comes the largest sheaf of pathetic stories. The spirit of gratitude which sometimes animates those we have helped, speaks far more eloquently than I can, of the need which originally called it forth.

H.K. writes this touching letter:—"Please accept this trifle from your humble servant, who has ever been so grateful for the kindness shown her when she was in so much need." This girl was in a state of utter destitution when she came to us five years ago. The first situation she obtained after she left us, she has kept ever since. We most of us forget our sorrows after they have passed away, and have but a hazy recollection of help which has been rendered us. Humanity is not, as a rule, very grateful, and we especially deal with a very average quality of creature. It is significant that five years after her misery is remedied, and in the midst of present comfort and comparative plenty, such a girl as H. K. should recall the past with a shudder, and utter a prayer of thankfulness for her escape from it.

The iron must have entered pretty deeply into that not too sensitive soul.

E. L. once said to me: "I never touch the knocker of the door of the 'Bridge of Hope' without remembering how I first came, at the age of seven years, to plead my own cause. My mother was then working in a public-house in Ratcliff Highway. I remember I came two or three times to ask you to take me in, and I was so small that I had to bring a stick to reach the knocker. I do thank God for sending me to that door!" I remember well what she was then. She is doing well in service now, and looks so respectable and happy (while the mother has become a gentle Christian woman) with what one so rarely finds in servants nowadays, a perfect passion for ministry.

We have not, as Mrs. Bramwell Booth says, discovered the way of doing God's work without money; and a large share in the happiness of saving others, and the comfort of helping many whose struggle for life is so hard, will be the portion of those many generous givers whose first thought at this Christmas-tide will be for Christ's little ones, for those "out of the way" and ready to perish, for whom He died.

For the Aged Poor.

ONE of the most pathetic figures of any generation is the worn-out veteran of industry, who from no fault of his own is at last obliged to lay down his tools, with the knowledge that he is now "past work"; and that those two words mean to him want of bread, and eventually loss of the home that is so dearly loved. That some provision should be made for all such, otherwise than that provided by the State within the dreary walls of the workhouse, is a fact readily acknowledged; but in the hurry and bustle of the present century the aged are too often overlooked, and their sad fate forgotten.

It is now thirty-four years since the charity known as "Homes for the Aged Poor" was started, by an elderly lady, with the idea that the weekly rent was the cause of obliging many to seek the refuge of the workhouse, and that if a room rent free were provided, the few weekly shillings needed for subsistence would be found by co-operation with others. The scheme has proved successful. The one small house, with eight rooms, started in 1869, was speedily filled, and now there are no fewer than fifteen Homes, containing 145 rooms, 171 inmates being in residence; and, alas, the sad statement must be added that fifty eligible candidates are waiting for admission, to whom the answer "No room" must be given.

Every inmate must have an assured income, not less than four nor more than six shillings a week, or in the case of married couples or pairs of sisters not less than six shillings nor more than ten. These incomes are in many cases the result of thrifty savings, which, totally inadequate to provide entirely for the possessor, supplemented by a room rent free and coals in the winter, render old age what it should be—a time of peace and rest. A large number are supported by children, who gladly hold out a helping hand, though unable wholly to provide for their aged parents; others have pensions for long service, or are receiving help from other charitable societies. Since the first Home was opened, no less than six hundred aged persons have been sheltered and cared for in their last days.

Coal, sick, and nursing funds, have been found necessary additions to the original scheme; good fires are a necessity for the aged and infirm, and, alas! sickness is never absent among so many, and many a life is prolonged, and in numerous cases health restored, by careful nursing and extra nourishment. As a rule, the old folk are very happy, in spite of their years. Their rooms are filled with the treasures of bygone days. Books and work are a great delight, and the plain and fancy work of many far on in the seventies are exceedingly creditable.

Bible-readings are held in many of the Homes, and every effort is made to cheer and comfort those who belong to the household of faith, also to lead into the way of peace those who, in the struggle of life, have neglected "the one thing needful." Both in its philanthropic and religious aspects, the work is well worthy of consideration and help. The Homes may be visited any afternoon, and a report and further particulars will be sent on application to Miss C. E. Harrison, 86, Penge Road, Anerley, S.E.

Orphan and Fatherless.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.

WE take this opportunity of thanking the "Readers of THE CHRISTIAN" who have so kindly sent assistance to the emigration work carried on at these Homes during the year. They may be interested in hearing of some of the cases of distress we have been privileged to rescue and help through their generous aid.

A lady sanitary inspector called our attention to a family of orphans who had lived with drunken parents, in neglect and starvation, in a wretched cellar-dwelling, until they had all been taken to hospital with typhus fever. Father, mother, and grandmother had died in hospital. When the children recovered, there was neither home to go back to nor clothes for them to put on. We received them one by one as they were discharged, and they are now bright and happy, and look much more intelligent and purposeful than when we first saw them.

Another girl, aged fourteen, recently received from Glasgow, has not been to school since she was nine, never to church or Sunday-school. Asked "Why not?" she said, "I never could get out." Her mother was dead, and for five years she had been kept by a paralysed but drinking father as his constant attendant and drudge. He took his two boys' earnings and spent the greater part in drink, while poor Lizzie waited on him, and was utterly neglected.

The wonder is these three children stayed so faithfully by this wretched father, and that they have not become corrupted by such a life; they seem industrious and most anxious for a chance to do well. Lizzie's younger sister we were allowed to take to Canada some years ago, because she was of no use to the father. It is such a contrast to think of Jeanie; for the past three years the only child and cheer of a worthy Scotch couple in Canada, attending school all the year round, and, I am very sure, never allowed to miss Sunday-school, as her foster-father is an elder in his church, and superintendent of the Sunday-school.

OPENINGS IN CANADA.

The openings in Canada are greater than ever before. We should like to see Boards of Guardians and orphanages, or smaller private homes, sending out their well-trained boys and girls to find warm welcomes in Canada, especially those who have no friends to help them into employment here, and those who are better separated as widely as possible from such relatives as they have.

A PATHETIC GROUP.

As our children work their way up in Canada, they are able to assist other members of their families. One girl who has grown up and married a farmer, sent the money back this summer to furnish her old mother with suitable clothing, and to pay her fare out to Canada to share her comfortable home. The poor old body in the workhouse was overjoyed to go.

Another lad, taken to Canada at the age of ten, saved up £50 by the time he was twenty, came home, and took out his mother, sisters, and brother. He found them in a bare room, with no food until he went out himself to purchase some, and no decent clothing till he set them up with clothes. He obtained good situations for them all among his friends in Canada, and they have promised to repay him for what he has so generously expended on them.

Readers, if you have not hitherto contributed to our funds, may we ask you to weigh the claims of this charity to your earnest support?

(1) We receive the most needy and friendless children. (2) The method is most economical, and by passing the children on to Canada, instead of keeping them long years in our institution, we are able to assist a much greater number. (3) It has been successful in developing good, sturdy, useful colonists, out of poor little city starvelings. (4) Earnest Scriptural instruction is given in the Home, and many of the children give evidence of changed lives, and become useful members of Christian churches in Canada.—L. B.

Buttons.

BY V. J. CHARLESWORTH,

HEAD MASTER, STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE.

WHETHER designed for use or ornament, buttons must be regarded as amongst the necessaries of civilization. To the Chinese the button is a symbol of rank or office; and to be stripped of a button is a degradation to be feared. For a Chinese official to be a button short is to be deprived of an honour which, in a country where life is so cheap, may be the prelude of an ignominious death.

"To have a soul above buttons," is equivalent to saying that we deem ourselves worthy of a position to which we have not attained. The proverb owes its origin to the remark of a young man who said: "My father was an eminent button-maker, but I had a soul above buttons, and panted for a liberal profession." Another proverb, "he is a button short," is applied to one whose intellectual powers are not held under control by a sound judgment.

The absence of a button at a critical moment must answer, we fear, for the loss of temper, and the use of language far from considerate or polite. What proportion of an ordinary human life is occupied with buttons, is an interesting inquiry, to which an American journalist recently devoted some attention; and the result at which he arrived was certainly somewhat startling. But it was left to the quick wit of an Irish tramp to discover that a button is the basis as well as the bond of a garment. Finding a button, he went to a friend and asked him to sew a shirt on it! Whether he gained his suit or this portion of it, we do not know; but the garment he solicited would have been a suitable reward for his wit. I told this story at several of our meetings; and added, should there be a button in the collection for the Orphanage, I shall be glad if the donor will redeem it, and contribute a guinea, so that we may add a suit of clothes to it for one of the orphan boys.

When the first button was claimed at the close of a meeting, a guinea was handed in for a suit of clothes in exchange.

A boy was promptly selected in the presence of the audience; and here he is, having been duly photographed in the suit, upon which he will wear a special button as a badge.

In subsequent collections for the Orphanage, when the story has been told, several buttons have been contributed, and the donors have promptly crowned the gift with a guinea; so our choir of sixteen boys may, in due course, deserve the designation of "The Button Brigade!" And what of the other boys? Will they not feel that they are "a button short," if they are not able to sport a badge? Will the reader bear in mind that, to provide and keep upwards of five hundred suits of clothes in proper repair, our tailor's bill is a very serious item in our annual expenditure?

ONE OF THE "BUTTON BRIGADE."

Should any readers wish to dispose of superfluous buttons, we hope they will do so when there is a collection for the Orphanage, and then fine themselves for as many shirts or suits of clothes for the orphans as equal the number of buttons they have deposited.

The Secretary is Mr. F. G. Ladds, Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

*Out of the Ranks.

BY EDITH GILLING CHERRY.

Out of the ranks they have fallen
In the terrible march of life;
Some were unfit for the conflict,
And all unused to the strife;
And others, in dire temptation,
From their places fell away,
Suddenly, sorely wounded, by
The foes that in ambush lay.

Out of the ranks they have fallen—
Ah! Little it matters how;
Enough, that weary and wounded,
They lie by the wayside now;
Or wander with stumbling footsteps,
With none to pity or care,
Nor even a former comrade
To ask them "how they fare?" . . .

Out of the ranks they have fallen;
And only the Lord can tell
How oft 'tis the innocent suffer
For those who deserve it well.
He judgeth the poor and oppressed,
And the tempted and tried ones too;
Who, sinned against rather than sinning,
Ask pity to-day from you. . . .

I plead for them! Brothers and sisters!
I plead in His own dear Name,
Who for us, "outside the city,"
Once hung on the Cross of shame!
Who, His whole life long was an outcast,
And hath pity and love to-day,
For the lonely and lost and straying,
And those that are "out of the way" . . .

National Danger and Duty.

THE PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.

THERE is in England and Wales an estimated Roman Catholic population of 1,500,000 souls. There are eighteen archbishops and bishops, 3,073 priests, besides monks, friars, nuns, &c. There are now 1,568 Roman Catholic churches, chapels, and mission stations, besides many convents, schools, and other agencies. Cheap convent schools, magnificent churches, splendid ceremonial, elaborate ritual and fine music, as well as literature, are amongst the means employed for the perversion of England to Romanism.

The influx of foreign monks and nuns is a fresh menace to England. These Orders have given an impetus to the Romish propaganda. A return in the St. James' Gazette shows that from 1900 to 1903 the following increase of monastic establishments took place:—Houses of men, 17; total, 283; houses of women, 63; total, 635.

MOST HARMFUL CONSEQUENCES

have followed upon this Romish aggression. Upwards of 4,000 persons are known to have joined the Church of Rome between 1833 and 1899. Notwithstanding this, however, Rome admits there is an enormous leakage from her ranks in England. The late Cardinal Vaughan states: "Our losses are to be counted not by the hundred but by the thousand. Our people . . . drop out of practical Christianity, and are carried away, at least for a time, on the stream of materialism, indifference, and vice that surges around them."

Contemporary evidence from Roman Catholic countries goes to show that this abandonment of all religious profession is general amongst those who leave Romanism; and if they are not pointed to a faith which does not drive them to repudiate all religion, they must inevitably go to swell the tide of infidelity in our country.

This Romish propaganda is serious enough, but this is not the only danger which confronts us. A greater peril threatens England in the so-called "Catholic Revival"

WITHIN THE NATIONAL CHURCH.

It is notorious that many within her fold are busily striving to undermine our Protestant constitution, promote lawlessness in the Church, and bring England once more under the bondage of priestcraft.

Our national greatness rests upon the principles of civil and religious liberty obtained by the glorious Reformation. The presence in our midst of this double onslaught upon the Reformation, constitutes a national danger of the gravest character. As the danger is twofold, so also is the duty. First, England is bound to seek the salvation of the Roman Catholics in her midst. Secondly, she is bound to preserve her Protestant people who are assailed by Romanizing agencies.

Great and effective work can be done by agents thoroughly trained in the Romish and Ritualistic controversies, and well acquainted with the aims and methods of the Romish Church. The only society in England which sends out such trained missionaries to the people, is the Protestant Reformation Society.

Besides this, the Protestant Reformation Society seeks by the issue of literature expressly designed, and in many other ways, to instruct and warn those in danger of being led astray, and to recover those already misled. Its clerical and general superintendent, Rev. Dr. C. H. H. Wright, labours unceasingly in all parts of the country, while the Secretary, Mr. Walter A. Limbrick, delivers lantern-lectures of a popular character all over England.

Altogether, the Society is employing fifteen workers in its great work. These either labour, as above indicated, in all parts of the country, or have been placed in important centres. But effectively to reach the whole country, there should be at least one missionary in every English and Welsh county. Unfortunately, the Society's funds are at present far from equal to supplying this need.

The guiding principles of the Society are—

MISSIONARY, EDUCATIONAL, EVANGELISTIC.

Its missionary operations are conducted in a spirit of love for the souls of men.

In its educational work the Society aims at the enlightenment and systematic instruction of the English people. In this connection attention is specially directed to The Protestant Dictionary produced by the Society.

Its evangelistic efforts are carried on in the desire to win souls for the Saviour; and the journals of the missionaries all furnish records of the direct preaching of the Gospel in places where its simple, saving message is rarely or never heard.

Such a Society ought not to lack funds for the carrying on of its work, and yet the support given is entirely inadequate. If only Christians would realize the truth of Rev. Canon Christopher's remarks at the seventy-third annual meeting—"If you do not support this Society, you are doing simply nothing for the evangelizing of the Roman Catholics in England"—there would be no lack of means. The secretary is Mr. Walter A. Limbrick, and the Society's office is at 62, Berners Street, Oxford Street, London.

The Needs of the New Cut.

REVIEWING the year's work for God in connection with the Working Men's Mission in the notorious neighbourhood of the New Cut, S.E., the Brothers Thomas and James Young (superintendents) do so with joy and thankfulness at the thought of the rich blessing which has rested on the labours put forth. It has pleased the Lord to save men and women by the ministry of the Gospel—husbands are led to the Cross, find peace and pardon, and very soon wife, sons, and daughters follow. Thus thirty new members have been received into Christian fellowship during the twelve months.

A soldier who was invalided home from South Africa, and was working as a carman, writes of a Saturday when he was walking about rather surly and disagreeable, as he had no friends in London. "I came to the corner of Bermondsey New Road, and heard some Christians preaching and singing. I stopped to listen, and when they had finished I was asked by their leader if I would come to their Mission. I went, and there heard of how the Lord had died to save sinners. Knowing that it was through a former sin I joined the service, and had not lived a very good life while in the ranks, I was upset over what I had heard. I felt myself a sinner, though I would not own it at the time; but when I went home I prayed for forgiveness, and received salvation. The Lord said, 'Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest,' and He is true to His word. I came, and He gave me rest.

I FELT AT PEACE WITH EVERYONE, and never before had a music hall pleased me a quarter or a tenth part as much as the services I then began attending. When I was called up again to join my regiment, I went back a different man, and have been able by God's help to testify for Him in the ranks, and have had the joy of being instrumental in leading at least one, a sergeant, to the Lord Jesus Christ."

Conversions are the regular seal of the work at all the three centres, and at a mission just concluded there were at least thirty satisfactory cases, mostly young men and women. Open-air work is the backbone of the Mission, and it is believed of the members as well, calling on them as it does, soon after they are converted, to make a public confession of Christ.

The Mission is at present the centre of a very distressing state of affairs, caused by the lack of employment, especially in the building trade. Looking back over an experience of forty years, Mr. Thomas Young assured a member of our staff the other day that he did not think he had ever known the position and the outlook so serious. Winter conditions have made the poverty and want more acute; but the great outstanding fact is the want of work caused by dull trade. Men spend whole days tramping about London, as well as far into the country, and return without a vestige of encouragement. Hardest of all are the cases where sickness has come in the home, when, in addition to the denial of special nourishment required, there is scarcity of the plainest food.

A great boon over a wide area is the soup kitchen open every day at Collingwood Street, where no fewer than 1,500 people go regularly, between £3 and £4 a day being drawn in halfpennies and pennies. In a normal season the loss on the kitchen is over £40, but there is every sign that during the current season the demand will be much more than doubled. Touching appeals for food and other necessaries of life crowd in on the superintendent, in numbers far beyond the means at his disposal.

The last statement of accounts showed that the general expenses exceeded the income by nearly £40. The lease of the present premises expires in March, 1906, and one friend has promised £1,000, on condition that the cost of the new hall now being built—estimated at £5,000—be raised before it is opened. The pressure of current needs causes this fund to be drawn on for cases of absolute want; but the need for the new hall again is so great that contributions for it will react on the daily ministration. Unless the Building Fund be contributed, there will by-and-by be no hall in which to feed the hungry. Only the lack of funds delays building operations. Poor widows will be looking even more eagerly than usual for the customary help at Christmas. The address of the Mission is Collingwood Street, New Cut, S.E.

A Practical Mission.

THE North-East London Gospel Mission maintains Gospel services, temperance meetings, Sunday-schools (attended by about 1,200 children), young people's meetings, a factory girl's institute, a school for elder lads, mothers' meetings, and a great number of social undertakings, such as the provision of free meals for hungry children and house-to-house visitation among the poor. The naked are clothed, the sick and dying cared for, girls are trained for domestic service, and weekly pensions granted to aged and infirm Christians. A Home for poor aged and dying women of good character is another feature, while coals, provisions, and other necessaries are carefully distributed.

Who does not count it a joy to serve in any small way to bring comfort and relief to the stricken and halting upon the hardly-fought battlefield, where to-day in East London thousands of honest and decent poor vainly struggle for existence against untold odds? The surroundings are perennially depressing, and tend to weigh down our spirits, but to these must be added the heartaches, involved by a close personal touch day by day with the couch of suffering, and the cry of the needy; for the pinch of poverty is ever felt in the centres of "slumdom."

The bell of our Mission House never seems to cease ringing morning by morning—during the colder months at least—as now a child in tatters holds up her fragment of a cup for a bit of oatmeal; for "mother has nothing to give us to eat"; next a pale, bedraggled woman, with a scrap of what was once a shawl thrown over her head, pleads for a drop of soup for her sick husband; next a boy begs for his mother, who has a new-born child, with never a bit of fire or food in the place. Another brings a message that one of our aged widows has fallen downstairs and seriously injured herself; would we go and see her? And yet another, to say that a gentle child of our Sunday-school, whom we kissed "good-bye" the day before in deep consumption, died at two o'clock. And so the morning goes by, and another comes, with experiences scarcely varying.

The treasurer of the Society is Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

WILLIAM CHORLEY.

Down in Deptford.

IN a recent number of the Contemporary Review there appeared an article, entitled "Four Days in a Factory," from the pen of the Hon. Mrs. Bertrand Russell. In the course of some startling revelations, the writer says:—"I visited ten public-houses in High Street, Deptford, in thirty minutes. There I counted 118 women; fourteen of them with babies in their arms, and sixty-three girls only just in their teens. The drink is the chief cause of the factory girl's downfall, and the greatest obstacle to reclaiming her from the lowest depths of vice."

This is the district which forms the sphere of the labours of Rev. J. Gregory Mantle—a district which in a small area has no fewer than 173 public-houses, 1,974 families living in one room each, and 3,313 two-room tenements.

The opening of the Victoria Hall, Deptford, a few weeks ago, as a Wesleyan Methodist Mission centre, will be fresh in the minds of many. Mr. Mantle, surrounded and supported by a band of devoted workers, entered upon his duties as superintendent with great expectations, and it is gratifying to know that the most sanguine hopes have been realized; indeed, the greatest difficulty has been experienced in keeping pace with the natural development of the work.

ENCOURAGING CONVERSIONS.

In conversation with a representative of The Christian last week, Mr. Mantle spoke in hopeful terms of the outlook so far as the mission itself is concerned: "From the time of opening the Hall has been full, and there has not been a Sabbath without conversions taking place, and most of them are men. This week I am meeting some 150 converts, who have been gathered in as a result of our services at the Central Hall, or during our meetings in the Broadway Theatre. We have now commenced a Sunday evening service for slum children in the lecture hall, which is filled with the little ones of the poorest of the poor. One of the most pathetic sights we witness is the number of children who come carrying a baby brother or sister, the parents meanwhile, it is feared, spending their time in the gin palace."

Such, it seems, is the eagerness of these children of the slums to be present at the service, that many of them gather an hour before the time of this one bright interval in the dull monotony of their cheerless lives.

THE DOUBLE BURDEN.

Three Sisters devote their time and attention to the aged, deserving poor, going in and out among them, helping them by kindly ministries to bear their misfortune, and directing their thoughts to Him who alone has the balm for life's woes. But those who weigh most heavily upon the hearts of the workers are those of the poor who are bearing the double burden of sickness and poverty. Mr. Mantle is anxious to do something more than is at present possible to alleviate the sorrows of this class, and is hoping that the practical sympathy of friends will enable him to do so. It is certain that a hard season is before us, and in common with other poor districts, Deptford is already feeling the pinch of winter. A commencement has been made in relieving the sufferings of the children by supplying them with a meal of nourishing food.

THE HOLD UPON THE MEN.

One of the most cheering features of the work is the manner in which the men of the district are being gripped by the Mission. Three weeks ago a Men's Brotherhood was commenced, meeting on Sunday afternoons. The first of these gatherings was attended by 300, while on the third afternoon the number had increased to 350. "Our aim," says Mr. Mantle, "is to get the men to give up the drink, and to remove them from the influences and surroundings of the public-house. We felt the necessity of doing something for them in the week, if we were to accomplish our object; and have now set aside two spacious rooms for their use, which are open every night. Here they are provided with abundance of wholesome reading and innocent amusements."

Then there are mothers and wives who claim attention. Mrs. Mantle has started a Mothers' Meeting, which already has a membership of 150. Many of the women are extremely poor, but they allow nothing to prevent them being in attendance.

The London County Council has opened Carrington House, with its accommodation for 804 single men, in the sphere of the Mission's operations. The house is erected on the site of one of the worst slums in Deptford, and it is felt that the undertaking will be an unmistakable aid to the work at the Victoria Hall, since the conditions under which the men will live will render them more amenable to the influences of the Gospel. Altogether, the outlook of the Mission is full of promise of wide usefulness, and Mr. Mantle only needs proportionate sympathy and support in turning to good account the manifold opportunities with which he is confronted.

In Prison Cells.

IT would be difficult to over-estimate the value of social and evangelistic work in connection with the prisons of our land.

For many years past the Church Army has had the privilege of holding annual eight-day missions in the majority of the prisons. The address by the evangelist in chapel at morning prayers is followed by cell-to-cell visiting. Many a story could be told of men who, as they knelt on the cell floor, have determined to make a fresh start by Divine grace. It has been estimated that more than 3,000 prison cells were visited by Church Army evangelists last year.

OFFICIAL TESTIMONY.

In their latest "Blue-book" the Prison Commissioners say:—"Reports from nearly all the prisons testify to the admirable work done by the Church Army through its missions and Labour Homes. . . . The Church Army has grown by steady and cautious development into one of the great reclaiming influences of the age."

The chaplain inspector also reports:—"The assistance which the Labour Homes of the Church Army have rendered is deserving of wide recognition, and it is pleasant to note that nearly all the societies speak of their obligations and gratitude to these institutions. One society states that 'the Labour Home has taken about thirty seemingly hopeless cases, and has in many instances effected remarkable improvement.'"

During the twelve months referred to in this Blue Book, the Army dealt with 1,260 discharged prisoners. Of these, 201 were discharged direct to that organisation (which is specially licensed by the Home Office for such work), and Mr. Colin Campbell (hon. social secretary) visits each convict prison every quarter, and interviews men about to come out into the world again.

Of the 201 convicts, the great majority were helped in various ways, and only thirty were proved unsatisfactory.

In addition to these, the Church Army dealt with 1,059 other prisoners in the same period. Of these 518 were London cases, and 514 provincial. The manner in which these men were dealt with was as follows:—214 were found situations; 7 were emigrated; 3 enlisted; 2 went to sea; 30 were restored to friends; 10 were sent to hospital; 98 were still inmates of C.A. Homes at the end of the prison year; 111 were found temporary work and otherwise helped; 5 were transferred to other Homes; 4 were re-arrested; 1 died; 374 were admitted to Homes and helped, subsequently leaving of their own accord; 68 were dismissed for breach of regulations, &c., and 132 refused help, or otherwise proved unsatisfactory.

An important department of this work deals with the wives and families of prisoners, for the innocent often suffer the severest distress and privation through another's guilt. The women are visited, and work provided for them, that they may keep their little ones from starvation. Orders for all kinds of plain needlework, which provides employment for these unfortunate ones, are always gladly received.

For their important work among the criminal population (so many of whom God has raised up into honest, respectable men through these efforts), the Church Army relies upon the practical sympathy of Christian people. In addition to financial help, all kinds of old clothes for men, women, and children are particularly welcome. The hon. sec. is Rev. W. Carlile, 130, Edgware Road, London, W.

The Rescue Society.

AFTER fifty-years' work, the Rescue Society is found pursuing its useful course, with more encouraging results than ever. The total number helped during the past twelve months, including re-admissions, has been larger than for several years, which is chiefly due to the increased number of those helped a second time. It is gratifying to know that many of those assisted regard the Home where they have been trained as their true "home," and the matron as their "mother," so that when in need or in any difficulty they resort thither, and if there has been no serious misconduct they are welcomed, and the helping hand is again extended. One matron has over 150 former inmates with whom she is in touch; and when it is remembered that there are seven Homes of the Society, it will be understood that this part of the work is by no means light. The after-care of the girls is, however, a most important feature of the work, and is encouraged as much as possible; for it is partly due to this that the work is eventually so permanent and encouraging.

The actual work of the Society—the rescue and training of the young women and girls—has been most promising; the large majority have valued the help given, which has so materially benefited them, and lifted them from their former associations of vice, that the Committee are able to give

A MOST HOPEFUL REPORT.

A summary of the work shows that 479 young women and girls were aided last year, and thus helped to a better life. Of these only twenty-three left the Homes unsatisfactorily. No fewer than 185 inmates can be accommodated in the various institutions at one time, including those in the Lock Hospital and the Maternity Home.

Very striking are the personal testimonies received by Mr. Stuart Thorpe at the offices of the Society, 80, Finsbury Pavement, E.C. A recent letter says:—

"When I look back more than two years, and picture myself, at this moment, first standing in your office, and how good God has been to me, and the thorough good friends He found me, true the tears are standing in my eyes, as they were then, but to-day they are tears of joy and gratitude."

PENITENCE AND GRATITUDE.

Another wrote:—"I can see now what a lot of good the Home has done me, but I did not think so at first, for I was very unruly, and I am afraid I gave the matron a great deal of trouble; but I think God will repay her for all she has done for the girls. Since I have been there, I have learned to trust God, and He has helped me a great deal. May God bless and keep you through all your work for the Homes."

Yet another, who gives evidence that she has become a Christian, writes:—"Words seem very poor to express all the gratitude that I feel in my heart towards you and dear 'mother' for the great kindnesses you have bestowed on me and my baby since God directed my feet to you. God bless and reward you for it, dear sir. I trust, by God's help, to prove worthy of the position you have placed me in, and I pray that you may never be sorry or disappointed in me. Pray for me, dear sir, that I may be a light shining for Christ, to win many of the souls of the dear ones around me for Him."

The "Liberator" Relief Fund

By Rev. J. STOCKWELL WATTS.

WITH warmest thanks to the readers of The Christian for their past generous help in this Good Samaritan effort, I have much pleasure in reporting to them its present condition and prospects, in the confident hope of their continued sympathy and support.

STILL THE BITTER CRY.

We have still nearly 600 annuitants over seventy years of age that we are caring for, whose permanent relief is in some measure provided for; and we have 300 others from sixty years of age and upwards—many of them verging upon seventy—all of whom need the help quite as much as the annuitants, and who have yet to be provided for. In addition to these, we have nearly 100 cases under sixty years of age, but being afflicted, and in many instances confirmed invalids, must be a charge upon the Fund for some time to come. Further, we have more than 100 cases needing temporary or occasional help; and still the bitter cry is coming to us—for this year my committee have again been constrained to deal favourably with more than fifty entirely new cases—many of them as pitiable as any we have previously dealt with; with this additional claim upon our sympathy, that they have struggled on in privation as long as they possibly could, and have only been driven to apply to the Fund by starvation staring them in the face. To provide anything like adequate relief for all these victims, it is already perfectly clear that we shall need, at least, another £10,000.

OUR LORD'S LEGACY TO US.

As followers of Christ, it has been well said that "our legacy is never exempt from duty," or, as Longfellow beautifully puts it:

——Our Lord and Master,
When He departed, left us in His will,
As our best legacy on earth, the poor!
These we have always with us.

But it has always seemed to me that these poor sufferers have a special and peculiar claim upon our regard when we remember the feature that differentiated the "Liberator" failure from all other commercial disasters—viz., that these industrious, thrifty, and provident working people were unwittingly brought into this great trouble by their trusted Christian leaders, who had themselves lived in "a fool's paradise" with regard to the truly rotten character of the Balfour group of companies. "As we have, therefore, opportunity," says the Apostle Paul, "let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith," and may we not add, in the same spirit, "more especially still to those who have been plunged into privation and misery through the folly of some members of the household of faith."

PATHETIC LETTERS.

But apart from Christian love, what humane heart can peruse the following pathetic letters without being touched into tears of pity—honest tears that will soon be turned, if there be the ability, into practical sympathy and help by sending a cheque or postal order, crossed, either to the office of this journal or to the office of the fund, 16, Farringdon Street, E.C.

"For God is not unrighteous to forget your work, and the love which ye showed towards His name, in that ye ministered unto the saints, and still do minister." Heb. vi. 10, R.V.)

TEMPORARY HELP.

A typical instance of those still needing temporary relief, and, who in many cases, come to be practically pensioners upon the fund, chiefly through age or affliction:—

An architectural draughtsman (age sixty, Congregationalist), who lost his situation in the City through the death of his employer, immediately following the loss of all his savings in the Liberator crash, ever since then, with an afflicted wife, has had a desperate struggle to keep the wolf from the door, through his repeated failure to find anything more than very occasional employment. His wife is now staying with poor relations, whilst he tramps himself footsore and weary in his abortive efforts to get work. "They must have gone to the workhouse," writes his reference, "but for the continued help of the Relief Fund."

He writes, October, 1903:—"I am sorry to have to trouble you again, but I am in such low water that I have not a penny left. For the last three days I have been obliged to go on credit for bread, which I chiefly subsist on, and that will be stopped if I do not pay up this week, and I am behind with my rent. I cannot get any employment, which I try and pray for daily, but in vain.

MY AGE PREVENTS ME.

What I am to do I am at a loss to say, and the winter coming on my prospects are most gloomy. Trusting to hear from you soon, I remain, yours faithfully, &c."

SOME TYPICAL NEW CASES.

An afflicted nurse (age sixty-seven, Church of England), with a brother dependent upon her, who is a helpless cripple, writes, July, 1903:—

"Rev. Sir,—I lost the whole of my hard-earned savings in the Liberator Building Society, £200, and am now, through bad health and advancing years, unable to earn my living any longer. I therefore beg that you will do all in your power to assist me, especially as my poor brother (aged sixty-five) is a helpless cripple, and quite unable to assist himself in any way. Our mother, with whom he lived, has recently died, so that I will now have to look after him. Trusting that my sad position will be taken into consideration, and that I may soon obtain some help from the Relief Fund, I am, your humble and respectful servant, &c."

An aged widow (aged eighty-one, Congregational), who lost £850; whose husband, a smal draper, lost all his savings in the "Liberator Building Society," and died soon after he heard of the failure, has been living upon the little that was then realized by the sale of the business and stock—almost hoping, as her reference testifies, she would die before she would be compelled to seek relief. But, alas! that is now exhausted. "I have two married children," she writes, "but they have been almost dependent on me ever since, and one daughter living with me is in delicate health. This has driven me to ask for relief."

Her ministerial reference writes, October, 1903:—

"Dear Sir,—I am sending you particulars of a case in which I feel a very deep interest. It is really

A MOST SAD, BUT VERY DESERVING, CASE.

"Mr. G. and wife, drapers, of——, put their savings of forty years into the Liberator, and when the smash came, Mr. G. died, leaving a widow and five children.

"And for eleven years she has been doing her best to live, and never sought help; she is now eighty-one years of age, and has been obliged to keep a woman-daughter home to look after her for several years past. And they have no income to depend upon.

"The mother and daughter are devoted members of the Christian Church, and, so far as one can judge, likely to live for years yet, but the thought of the future is most painful to them, because with the £800 or £900 lost in the Liberator their all went. Can you, my dear sir, suggest or advise any means of help to assist this dear old Christian? I shall be so glad to hear you can help her."

FATHERLESS CHILDREN.

A labourer's widow (aged fifty-five, Baptist), with three young children dependent upon her, since her husband's death, in 1901, has tried hard to earn a living by taking in lodgers; but this has failed, and she has often been in great distress. What they had stored, with great self-denial, from scanty wages, against the rainy day, was, alas! not available when the time of sore need arrived.

She writes, October, 1903:—"Rev. Sir,—You will, I feel sure, pardon the liberty I take in writing to you, but circumstances have driven me to do so. I much regret to inform you that I am another of the 'Liberator' crash victims, whose interest you have, I hear, so generously taken up. Together with my late husband, I invested £100 in the 'Liberator' and 'House and Land Trust' in '89 and '91, and, as you know, all is gone. We did not intend troubling you, did health remain with us, but unfortunately this is not so. My poor husband is dead, and I am left a widow with three children unprovided for; two of them still unable to earn their living, the other earning 13s. 4d. per month."

Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "Liberator" Relief Fund, crossed "The London City and Midland Bank," and sent to the Sec., Rev. J. Stockwell Watts, 16, Farringdon Street, E.C.

"No Quest, no Conquest."

WHITEFIELD'S, TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD.

IN the course of an interview last week with a representative of The Christian, Revs. C. Silvester Horne and James Holmes expressed deep satisfaction with the beginning which has been made under new auspices at Whitefield's, Tottenham Court Road, W.C., and with the outlook for the future. These brethren were first associated, along with Rev. George Currie Martin, in work connected with the Young People's Union, Mr. Holmes being then minister at Chiswick, as Mr. Horne was at Allen Street, Kensington. A club was opened in the Thomas Binney Institute for resident assistants of both sexes in West-End business houses. The idea in view was to provide some substitute for home life, rather than any educational advantages.

After more than two years' experience, the experiment at the Institute is proving a gratifying success. It was when much had been learned in this way that the proposal reached Mr. Horne to become superintendent at Whitefield's; and, when a cordial consent was given to his condition that a second man of his choosing should be invited, he at once named the colleague with whom he was already so happily associated, and with whom he was of one mind on methods of aggressive Christian effort.

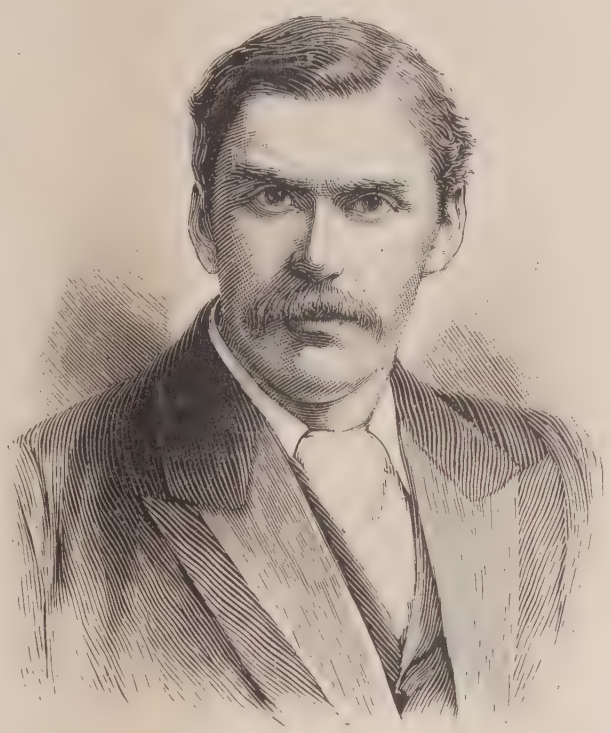
The scheme under which the work in Tottenham Court Road is taking shape has already been well thought out by the two ministers in the spirit of their motto which stands at the head of this article. It is their own, not a copy of any other mission. The problem presented by the special circumstances and surroundings has been faced in the light of experience gained by many workers at other centres, but the main lines of action will be marked by freshness. This position is not being taken up with any desire to be odd, but with a distinct feeling that there are sides to such work, as well as needs in London, which have not yet been touched, and with a consciousness that the leaders and helpers at Whitefield's are peculiarly fitted to approach these by past experience and an ideal situation.

No one can stand on the front steps of Whitefield's for a few minutes at any hour of the day without being glad that such a site has been acquired by the Church and dedicated to the service of Christ. The thoroughfare is one of the great arteries of city life between north and south, and every year seems to see an increase in the amount of traffic. It is considered a fair estimate that 10,000 vehicles and 200,000 pedestrians pass the doors in the course of every twenty-four hours. In addition to all these wayfarers, there is on every hand a dense resident population.

Going to the heart of the subject, the ministers indicated that, broadly speaking, there are several distinct classes for whom provision must be made. On the east and west there are "the squares" occupied by the wealthy, and one of the surprises of the past weeks has been the number of ladies and gentlemen from the mansions there who have attended the services, and shown an interest in the whole movement. The readiness with which these hearers have intermingled with the less well-to-do has been very gratifying; and the fact that on the Sunday evenings all seats are free has not in any way acted as a deterrent to their attendance. Undoubtedly, the ideal Christian congregation is one that embraces all classes, rich and poor alike benefiting by the close contact, and very many will from this point of view, as well as from many others, wish God-speed to Mr. Horne and Mr. Holmes.

The main body of those who are being influenced for good so far, however, belong to the class of business young men and women who "live in." Large numbers of the employees of such firms as Messrs. Shoolbred and Maple are housed in the neighbouring streets; while each of the smaller business houses adds its quota to the great company who are living away from home. With all that can be done to improve the conditions of life under such circumstances, there remain much loneliness and yearning for real friendship.

These young people are already attending the services in large numbers, and show a warm appreciation of the "at homes" which are being held for them. These are arranged on Sunday, as being the time when they are liable to feel most down at heart and homesick, and when otherwise they would probably, in many cases, be spending the time wandering aimlessly up and down the streets. The large hall is opened from four o'clock till 6.30, during which period tea is provided—any appearance of charity being removed by a uniform charge of threepence—good literature is plentifully scattered about for reading, and the encouragement of sacred music leads to much hymn singing. At 6.30 all are invited to the evening services, after which there is another social time till ten o'clock.



Rev. C. SILVESTER HORNE.

Last Sunday the available accommodation was all required both in the afternoon and the evening. The young people are delighted that there is such a place to which they can come, and the workers are thankful that in so simple a way large numbers can be brought into direct contact with the preaching of the Gospel. When the institute behind the church is built, there will be accommodation not only for carrying on this department on a larger scale than is now possible, but for doing so on seven days a week instead of only on the one. In fact, the ideal kept in view throughout the whole organization is that of "a seven-days-a-week church."

Asked about the spiritual results of these gatherings, both ministers declared that they had been deeply impressed with the hunger and thirst manifested for real leading and light on spiritual matters, emphatically adding that the young people would never have come in such numbers for any other reason. A social club would have appealed to them in vain. The great attraction of Whitefield's is spiritual, and the conclusion is forced home by the experience gained there that the younger side of London life is yearning for a spiritual leadership above anything else, if men could be brought to the front who would inspire sufficient confidence to draw out their inquiries.

Better educational advantages can be obtained elsewhere than could be provided at a mission, but there is a hunger for something to supply the place of a Christian home, and the number who have sought opportunity for directly spiritual conversation has been both cheering and noteworthy. Another section, shy, but equally anxious for help in the matters of eternal life, have provided Mr. Horne and Mr. Holmes with much to do in way of correspondence. Need we say with what gratitude to God such labour has been undertaken?

A dark picture is presented by the strange cosmopolitan population living immediately to the west of Whitefield's. This is large and growing, but it differs from corresponding areas in the East End in not being to any considerable degree Jewish. In the streets are to be met Russians, Swedes, Frenchmen, Germans, Spaniards, Portuguese, and people of many more nationalities. A curious medley of tongues is to be heard in the everyday life of the district. That these people find their way to the services is proved by the mixture of foreign coins found in the collection boxes.

Part of the ideal in view consists in the enlistment of the sympathies of Christian ladies of leisure, who might or might not be identified as "sisters," and who by education and travel have acquired familiarity with other tongues. It could then quickly be made known that Whitefield's was a centre to which all could come with the assurance of sympathy in the time of trouble, the fact that each man and woman would be spoken to in the language in which they were born not only removing difficulties of communication, but providing a bond of sympathy which could be used for the highest of all ends. This is a field of Christian service of which we feel sure some will be glad to hear.

The deepest colours of the picture are supplied by the immorality rampant all around. The two pastors have already spent one whole night on the streets, with the chief of police, to see the state of affairs for themselves, and they describe the prostitution as frightful. The gaming clubs of the neighbourhood are also notorious; and altogether, when it is remembered that so many young people of respectable and Christian parentage must spend their leisure as well as their busy hours not far away, there is a new note of urgency in the call that "the King's business requires haste."

The Men's Meeting proves, as such gatherings have done in different parts of London and other cities, that the self-respecting English mechanic has no quarrel with the Lord

Jesus Christ, or even with the Church. Working-men come to Whitefield's readily and with pleasure. Indeed, the meeting grew so rapidly that it may almost be said to have sprung into being whenever the invitation was sent broadcast. There is a successful Women's Meeting, a discussion class, and many more agencies which go to make up the activities of what is denominated in America an "institutional church."

Mr. Horne has a hope that out of such intermingling of the rich and working people as he already sees at Whitefield's may in the end come the solution of the problem of self-support in great missions. His years in Kensington as well as these last months, have taught him that young people are generous givers. We agree with Mr. Horne that Christian London should not leave the workers at Whitefield's saddled with a debt of £7,000. Then the coming Institute, though the cost of the building is generously provided by Mr. W. H. Brown, will involve other heavy expenses.

Popular Protestant Papers.

THE Protestant Alliance has long been foremost in the production and extensive circulation of popularly written Protestant papers. The recent publications include "Popery Portrayed." A series of sixteen booklets under this general heading have been published, each having the following secondary titles, and written by Rev. W. Kennedy Moore, D.D.:—"Popery, the Curse of Nations; Popery, the Great Apostasy; Popery, a Huge Idolatry; Popery, the Betrayer of Souls; Popery, the Antagonist of Scripture; Popery, a Blasphemous Priestcraft; Popery, a Gigantic Fraud; Popery, the Corrupter of Conscience; Popery, the Poison of Purity; Popery, Babylon the Great; Popery, the Most Cruel of Tyrannies; Popery, a Pretended Peace; Popery, Incurable and Increasingly Malignant; Popery, the Mother of Infidelity; Popery, the Service of Satan; Popery, its Hopes and Doom."

In these forcible booklets the Church of Rome is arraigned as the Apostasy and also as Babylon the Great.

A quotation from Booklet No. 10 may be interesting to our readers:—

"Rome is the historic counterpart of Babylon the Great. The beast that carries the woman is a strange monster with seven heads. We are not left to guess the meaning of this, for we are told expressly that 'the seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth.' Has there, then, been any famous seat of empire distinguished as the City on Seven Hills? Who does not know that this City is Rome?"

For the recent anniversary of the Gunpowder Plot an interesting series of papers was published, and these, with those entitled "Popery Portrayed" already referred to, are reprints from a monthly magazine that has a very large circulation, and which is known as The Protestant Alliance Magazine.

Contained in a handsomely bound volume (comprising the twelve monthly issues of this magazine for the present year), will be found articles that have been written with studied accuracy, always with moderation, though vigorous and valiant for, and in defence of, the truth.

A glance at the very copious index will be sufficient to convince anyone of its great value as a book of reference. It is one which covers the entire field of controversy as between Protestants and their adversaries, both Anglican and Roman. At the beginning of the present year a series of lectures were delivered in the Town Hall, Kensington, by Roman Catholic priests. The lecturers of the Alliance very promptly occupied the same hall for reply lectures, and the magazine contained an article (extending over several pages), headed: "Replies to Romanists." This article, we understand, will shortly be published in booklet form. The work of the Alliance calls for the prayerful sympathy of readers of The Christian.

Work in the Royal Navy.

By Miss AGNES E. WESTON, LL.D.

IT is thirty years since I wrote to The Christian, telling how it had been pressed on me by the men themselves that a public-house without the drink was wanted. I explained that a house suitable for the purpose had fallen vacant close to the Dockyard gates at Devonport, and that if it were God's will, I was prepared to take it and open it as a safe anchorage for men who desired to lead sober and godly lives ashore. In answer to that letter the readers of The Christian sent me their gifts for God's work, and I took heart and went forward. What a tiny place it seems as I look back on it, wedged in with public-houses on all sides, and it could have told ugly tales itself if walls could have spoken! But it was God's work, and it went on growing. This year we have been obliged to pull down the last vestige of that little old house, which was our first foothold—it had grown unsafe with its bulging walls and rocking floors—and now the new wing goes up where it stood, five times its size, to add to our other buildings beside it.

The British Navy is continually growing in size. That of itself necessitates continual enlargement of our premises, and of the number of our workers. The numbers who frequent our Royal Sailors' Rests at Devonport and Portsmouth are continually growing. The beds at both Rests—and we make up a thousand beds, to say nothing of shake-downs—are constantly pre-engaged, and the "full-up" sign has not infrequently to be hung out when the Channel Fleet is in port. Our sociables were crowded out with Jack and his friends, so that a new hall at Devonport became a necessity. Lockers, bathrooms, cabins—all were insufficient.

ROYAL MEMORIALS.

There was but one moral, which was to build a new wing which should double the size of the Devonport, as a few years ago we doubled the size of the Portsmouth Rest. That Portsmouth extension was opened by one great and good woman now gone to the unseen land—the Empress Frederick, our own Princess Royal. The Devonport extension is to the memory of another great and good woman—her mother, our Empress—Queen Victoria. During 1904 we hope that this new great block will be formally opened. It joins our present premises, so that from the gates of Devonport Dockyard the Royal Sailor's Rest will stretch down the street in cheering, cheery, and even imposing fashion. It is the sailors' harbour at home, from the storms of strong drink and the cross-currents and shallows of evil temptations.

This Victoria Memorial Wing will cost £20,000 before it is finished and furnished. I want 100 more memorial cabins at a cost of thirty guineas each. These cabins are twice blessed, for they are a blessing to those men—all members of His Majesty's Navy or Marines—who use them, and a pleasant memory to those who give them and who can thereby perpetuate the name and remembrance of some dear one.

In these small rooms many a brave bluejacket has given himself to the service of the King of kings. In the solitude obtainable by those wooden walls, so rare and so precious to those who are bound by circumstances afloat to live herded together, many a man has reconsecrated his life to his God.

THE HANDY MAN FUND.

But Jack's needs do not end with bed or food or drink, nor even with the food and stimulus for mind and soul he can get in our meetings. He develops new needs, or our eyes get opened to see old ones, and we have to grow new shoots on our tree to meet these needs. Thus my "Handy Man Fund," as I call it, arose in response to a call of need from men who wanted immediate and temporary help as a bridge to gaining some better days. Widows and orphans obviously needed help; but Jack himself was dimly supposed to be cared for throughout his life by the paternal Government in whose service he was. But it needs twenty-one years of service to qualify for a pension; and many things may happen, before twenty-one years are up, to throw him back into civil life, maimed and unfitted, to begin life anew.

One man, whose eyesight was irretrievably gone, was taught a trade and set going; another, thrown up high and dry on the cruel highway of life, weak and half-crippled after rheumatic fever, was sent to the country and easy employment found for him. One particularly sad case was brought to my attention a little while ago, and though we cannot cure, we can alleviate. In the slums of Birmingham a district visitor found a young fellow dying of consumption, and learned from him that he had been in the Navy, and knew me and the Royal Sailors' Rests. So she wrote to tell me of it, and by means of my "Handy Man Fund" I have been able to send him to pure air, good food, and kindly care in a Warwickshire village, where, even if he cannot be cured, he will end his days in comfort. I would like to ask help for this Fund which is constantly paying out, and often almost reduced to nil on the credit side.

CHEERING FEATURES OF THE YEAR.

One of these was the visit to Portsmouth of the American fleet, and the visit of 400 of the men to our Royal Sailors' Rest. The American sailor is by no means a stranger to us; isolated ships often come and anchor in our ports, though never before has one come alongside the dockyard jetty, a place reserved for our own vessels. But this time, not only did a large squadron visit us and anchor right in our harbour, but the Admiral's flagship, the Kearsarge, was accorded the place only possible to those who are our kith and kin, our cousins across the sea. London and Portsmouth did the honours of hospitality with zest to officers and men, but we at the Royal Sailors' Rest had the pleasure of entertaining too, and our little effort at cementing the friendship of nations was pronounced by themselves one of the brightest days of their visit.

LITERATURE FOR U.S. NAVY.

Of course, for years those travellers, Ashore and Afloat, and my Monthly Letters have been known on board all ships of the United States Navy, eagerly welcomed visitors, for by special request of the U.S. Government, I send them to every U.S. ship.

Every year I send 32,400 copies to the U.S. warships, and I often hear from American friends how they value them, and how often they lead to a better life and new thoughts of God and holiness.

But it is not only America which sends me letters; from every civilized country, every country which has sailors and ships, I have letters—pathetic, confidential, amusing, or merely begging letters. Many contain requests from men who know of our Rests at home and want similar ones in foreign ports; some are from foreign governments, who want information so that they may start similar Homes for their sailors. If by waving a wand Sailors' Rests could rise mushroom-like in a night, they would now be in every port in the world. But they take money—much money—time, knowledge, patience, and common-sense; and after you have built the house, unless God's Spirit is in it and His blessing on it, it is built in vain. Nevertheless, I have been able in very many cases to give help or money to start these Rests in other ports, glad and thankful that thus a chain is provided round the world to bind the sailor to Godliness and temperance.

WHAT GOD HATH WROUGHT!

But home claims have to come first, and it is only by keeping on and on that we go forward. I am continually travelling up and down the country, speaking at meetings (large and small), in halls and drawing-rooms (when ladies are kind enough to arrange drawing-room meetings for me) telling the story of my work, now beginning its thirty-first year.

How glad I am I could not see through the veil of the future, for though now I am glad and thankful at the great things God hath wrought, then, in looking forward, I should have shrunk back terrified at so vast a responsibility. But He who has made will hear, and I know that the men and boys of our Navy are near His heart as they are near the heart of the nation.

Christmas Flowers.

WATERCRESS AND FLOWER-GIRLS' MISSION.

ONE evening in the middle of last December the present writer received, by post, a box containing a few flowers—a spray of lilies, pansies, and a cluster of roses.

They were quite dead, and yet they were very beautiful. They had, in one sense, no scent at all, and yet they were as full of fragrance as of beauty, and the fragrance was the fragrance of charity, kindness, and Christian benevolence. They were made, not grown, and the place of their manufacture was well known to the recipient of the blossoms.

Instinctively and instantly he pictured the place from which they had come, and thought of the lessons the flowers must have taught to those who had been employed in their making. The lilies had taught purity, the pansies ("heart's ease") had spoken of ease of heart and contentment, and every rose leaf had taught its lesson of Christian love and consideration.

Feeble little fingers—the fingers of cripples—had fashioned the delicate beauty of them all, and in the fashioning had been learning a trade which would keep the hungry wolf from the door of their future lives. These had all been saved from destitution and despair; from cruel and neglectful parents often, and from wretchedness always—had been taught, and were still being taught, a light and pleasant occupation which would ensure them independence and happiness.

So when the box of flowers was opened, the one who received it saw something more than flowers merely; he saw the practical and beneficent outcome of the work of a Christian Mission, an outcome which those who commenced the work thirty-seven years ago could hardly have dreamed of or foreseen.

The sender of the flowers was Mr. Groom, the superintendent and secretary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission, in Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell. His premises are a home of industry and cheerfulness, of warmth, brightness, and colour; a shelter and a training place for girls who, though crippled for life, are not so helpless as at first appears. From a small beginning the Mission has grown into a work of national importance, and for perfection and finish the productions of these crippled girls compare with some of the best of foreign manufacture, and indeed are generally sold by the buyers as of French make.

This successful effort to enable crippled girls to enjoy "the glorious privilege of being independent" and to be cannot fail to commend itself to the common sense, sympathy, and financial support of all those who are willing and anxious to help weak children, handicapped in life's race, and burdened for life's battle.

The directly and specifically spiritual work of the Mission must not be forgotten, and, indeed, those who have witnessed it could not easily fail to keep it in remembrance. In a poor neighbourhood (and it is all that), in which there is much to depress, and little to elevate the crowded population; in a district where the gin-palaces and public-houses are all too many, and the Christian agencies, however valuable, are all too few—the work carried on by Mr. Groom and his co-workers year in and year out, is of untold value. The Mission has never sought to advertise spiritual statistics, and is content to know that in that great harvest day, when the angels shall be the reapers, it will be found that many, very many, have been spiritually strengthened by, and owe their conversion to God, to the work which has been done so long and so earnestly. A large hungry family of 7,500 men, women, and children, are, for lack of other resources, looking this year, as hitherto, to the Mission for their Christmas dinners, and such other assistance as will make the festive season endurable. We use the words deliberately and advisedly, for without such help the "festive season" of Christmas is, to thousands, one of the most unendurable and gloomy periods in the whole of the year. The holiday, with its loss of work and pay, is, to many of the hard-working poor, a time to be most heartily dreaded.

Last year the distribution of the Christmas dinners commenced early in the forenoon, and it was quite late in the evening when the last recipient left the Mission premises with the greatly needed and welcome gift provided.

We have referred to "Christmas flowers" in connection with the work of this Mission, as we cannot help being struck with the brightness and gladness it spreads abroad of this joyous season of the year; but we would remind our readers that not at Christmastide only, but all the year round, the Mission is brightening and elevating the lives of some of London's saddest and most depressed inhabitants.

The superintendent of the Mission is Mr. John Groom, 8, Sekforde Street, E.C.

Ten Thousand Nights!

TOWER HAMLETS' MISSION.

THE ten thousandth night of consecutive meetings, extending over twenty-seven years, at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E., was celebrated on September 17 last, concerning which the following apposite lines were penned.

TEN THOUSAND NIGHTS.

By Rev. John T. Vine.

Ten thousand nights of service for the Lord,
Ten thousand nights of publishing His Word,
Ten thousand nights of prayer and cheerful song,
Ten thousand nights of fight against the wrong;
Ten thousand nights of seeking for the lost,
Ten thousand nights! Oh, who can count the cost
Of tears and sighs and anxious moments spent
That men may hear the news that God has sent.
Ten thousand nights! What multitudes have heard
The loving message from His Holy Word!
Ten thousand nights! 'Tis not too much to say
That thousands here have found the narrow way.
Sinners of every kind have here been blest,
And found in Jesus life and peace and rest.
The harlot has been washed in Jesu's blood;
The drunkard found that temperance is good;
The sceptic, too, has had his doubts removed;
The infidel confessed there is a God.
Friend Charrington, ere nears the other shore,
May you be spared to see Ten Thousand more!

Mr. Charrington has issued the following letter to his friends and well-wishers:—

"Dear Friends,—It is with thankful hearts that we are able to state that we have been spared to complete 10,000 nights of consecutive meetings. That is, for over twenty-seven years we have been enabled to keep an ever-open door for the poor and needy of the East End to enter. This, we think, is a record in Christian work, and constitutes a strong appeal to the sympathy of Christian people.

"On the strength of what has already been accomplished, and to enable us still to continue the inestimable blessing of having one great hall in this modern Babylon ever open, night after night, all the year round, for the benefit of all who will avail themselves of these spiritual privileges, we earnestly appeal to our readers this year for increased support for our work. Although we have thus continued for so many years, we have a heavy debt of over £14,000 still resting on the Great Assembly Hall. Will our friends help us with a special donation to clear off at least part of this heavy burden?"

Another effort which is sought to be carried through, is the erection of a Convalescent Home for the poor. When the bread-winner is laid aside, and the doctor says "nothing but a change of air can do any good," such an institution must needs prove of untold value. The desire is that it shall be erected on Osea Island, off the Essex coast, on the "Temperance Island," which promises to become so popular a holiday resort.

The continued assistance of Christian readers is needed for the current expenses of this good work. Everything points to a winter of distress, and a sad Christmas to many, in this poor East End, unless our friends come forward very generously in this time of need.

Old and Grey-headed.

THE AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

THE aged ones for whom this Society pleads are believers "well stricken in years," "found in the way of righteousness," and bearing witness to God's unwavering faithfulness. The needs which are met are well illustrated by a letter lately received from a new pensioner in Cornwall. "When the pension reached me, I was reduced to circumstances I have hardly ever before experienced, for I had in money only one halfpenny. I sit at my needlework most of the time, doing for those who pay very stintingly, and my hardest week of sewing will only earn from 3s. 6d. to 4s., so that I have indeed to economize."

During the ninety-six years of its existence more than 7,500 aged pilgrims have received life pensions, amounting to a total of upwards of £334,000, and who can gauge the burdens that it has, by Divine blessing, lifted from the minds of weary ones; the misery averted; and the light and cheer introduced into life's eventide? Within the boundaries of Scriptural and Protestant truth, the institution is undenominational, members of many sections of the Christian Church being upon the pension lists. The life pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas per annum are indeed a help to these weary ones, who, through the disabilities of old age, cannot support themselves, and whom it is desirable should be aided in their own homes and domestic circles in such a way as to involve no loss of self-respect or of the feeling of independence.

1,660 PENSIONERS

are now upon the books, and the total amount expended in pensions alone is upwards of £12,000 per annum.

The four Homes of the Society, in which 178 of the recipients dwell, are situated at Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Stamford Hill, and Brighton; an afternoon is well spent in visiting these "quiet resting-places," and conversing with the old folk, who are delighted to welcome their friends. One room, rent free, is provided for each inmate, together with coals, medical attendance, and other comforts.

Archdeacon Madden, in a plea for the Society, says: "In ministering to the needs of the aged Christian poor, this Society makes a unique claim upon all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth. To all who have stood beneath the cross of Jesus and have felt the power of His dying love this Society says:—'These men totter to their graves; these women, weak, sad, and sorrowful, are your brethren and sisters—part of the one family. Let us in the evening-time of their lives bring into their homes and hearts gleams of light and love, that they may take courage, and know that the Lord reigneth, and will not let His people want.'"

The following letters recently received testify to the benefits conferred by the pensions:—(a) "I return my grateful thanks for the increase in my pension. It came so unexpectedly, I cannot tell you what a blessing it is! How true are our Lord's words, 'Your heavenly Father knoweth ye have need of these things.' These words have comforted me often when I have wondered what I should do later on, when unable to work, for after the many years I have received His love, forbearance, and providence I feel sure that as my needs increase He will never forsake me or my sister. It is always a pleasure to listen to the few words of kindly counsel and Chistian conversation from our dear visitor when he comes. May the Lord give me of His grace that I may indeed be an aged pilgrim." (b) "What a boon the pension is to our good old villager, Mrs. M.! I saw her yesterday, and she was as usual, full of gratitude. From the help she has now received I was able to get her a new winter dress. She has not had one for years, and needed it badly; her delight over it was quite touching.

"As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith."

The office is at 83, Finsbury Pavement, E.C., and the secretary is Mr. John E. Hazelton.

Men, Women, and Babies.

AT FIELD LANE.

IT has been said that "the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." If there is any truth in this statement, and we all know there is, can we over-estimate the value of the work carried on week by week in connection with the Mothers' Meeting which is one of the many useful branches of the Field Lane Institution?

It was a cheerless wet afternoon on which we wended our way to this district. Outside, things looked dull and dreary enough; but inside, in a large, airy room, where some 400 women were gathered, the cheerful hum of voices engaged in subdued conversation, and the cooing of numerous babies, made one feel that the weather had in no way succeeded in damping their spirits.

At a long table at one end of the room, ladies were busy measuring off yards and yards of calico, flannel, and other household materials, for eager purchasers, which are paid for by small weekly instalments. The business is very brisk just now, for it is nearing three o'clock, and some of the late comers are anxious to get served before the materials are put away.

By three o'clock all is ready, and the service begins. Mr. Peregrine Platt and several ladies take the platform, while Mrs. Chadwick (the wife of the hon. secretary) takes the organ and renders valuable service, not only here, but also in singing an impressive solo later on during the meeting.

All rise and sing heartily one of Sankey's hymns, which is followed by prayer, a solo, Scripture-reading, and an earnest Gospel address by Mr. Platt.

It was gratifying to notice the absence of officialism, so often found in the management of large charitable institutions; and the kindly personal interest taken by the workers in the women, told plainly that they were being constrained by the love of Christ. Then too, it was pleasing to observe how prominently the main object of the work was kept in view. These workers are not content to give the women a pleasant hour, and to help them in their poverty; all this is made to subserve the higher object of bringing them to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. Eternity alone will reveal the result of such work in such a neighbourhood.

Some of the very poor members of the Mothers' Meeting are further helped by a gift of food, some of which is the remains of warehouse dinners sent from large business houses in the City.

On leaving the building, we noticed one very respectable-looking woman wending her way into the main street, carrying a basket of food. She was soon met by her husband, evidently a man who had seen better days; in true gentlemanly fashion, he relieved his wife of the basket, and taking her arm in his, the two plodded on happily to share the feast which generous hands had provided for them; and we thought of the words, "For the poor shall never cease out of the land; therefore I command thee saying, Thou shalt open thy hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy."

WHAT ABOUT THE BABIES?

Well, by some magic spell, the mothers were able to keep them wonderfully quiet, and what little noise they made, to our surprise did not disturb either Mr. Platt or the meeting, and the earnest attention given during the appropriate address showed plainly that the seed being sown was in many cases falling into good ground.

Closely allied with this work among poor women is that done for the babies in the Crèche. Here numbers of children are taken care of between the hours of eight o'clock in the morning and eight o'clock at night, thus setting the mothers free to go and earn a livelihood. Their ages vary from three weeks to three years. One woman we heard of brings three such every day. Her husband, a clerk, was ill for nine months, and is still delicate, and only able to do occasional work. The mother has become the mainstay of the family, and but for the Crèche these little ones would get no proper care or food, and would grow up with weak, decrepit bodies, ill-fitted to face the battle of life, hard enough for the poor without these drawbacks. A charge of twopence a day is made, which prevents the mothers from being pauperised; but even this is remitted in cases of need. But this is only a very small portion of the work carried on in this veritable hive of Christian industry. There are many of the frequenters of which only need temporary relief, and are thus set on their feet again, and started in the way to earn a respectable livelihood.

Every Sunday morning the Ragged Church service is held, attended by tramps, vagrants, casual labourers, and a sprinkling of discharged criminals. This congregation, averaging four hundred of London's poorest, pays reverent attention during the service, and at the close, the men are regaled with a mug of cocoa and a piece of bread.

Then there are Bible-schools, sewing-classes, Bible-classes, Bands of Hope, and Temperance Societies, a Certified Industrial School (at Hampstead), Country Holiday Funds, and many other operations, the whole involving an expenditure of between £7,000 and £8,000 per annum, details of which are found in the report.

All who can, should visit the Field Lane Institution, and they will see, as we did, how efficiently all this work is being done. There is absolute order everywhere, obtained, not by an overbearing masterful manner, but in the spirit of loving friendship among all classes of workers.

One feels the Committee are doing, under God, a grand work, and that in the Secretary they have secured the right man in the right place, and that all is being done in the most praiseworthy and conscientious manner. Shall we not hear again our Lord and Master's words: "I command thee saying, Thou shalt open thine hand wide to thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land"? It is with great regret that one learns that the committee have an overdraft at their bankers of £3,000.

Reports and all particulars may be obtained from the Secretary, Mr. Peregrine Platt, Vine Street, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.

Somers Town, N.W.—The Christian Men's Union Gospel Mission (64, Chalton Street, N.W.) directs its activities towards aiding the very poorest in a district which contains many miserable homes. Large numbers of people are on the verge of destitution. Meals are provided, the poor visited, and an important religious and philanthropic work carried on. Old clothing, Gospel works and tracts, provisions, &c., would be welcomed, in addition to support for the general fund. Address Mr. P. A. Ball, secretary.

George Yard Mission.

GEORGE YARD, as in the revered founder's time, still reaches out a helping hand to the very poorest of Whitechapel; and truly it may be said, the naked are clothed, the hungry fed, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them in all its fullness, to save and up-lift lost men and women.

The Sunday services are well-attended, and God is graciously blessing His Word spoken, to the salvation of precious souls.

The meetings held in Yiddish, on Saturdays and Sundays, for God's ancient people the Jews, are most encouraging to the devoted and earnest men engaged in this work; resting on the sure promise of God that His Word shall prosper in the thing whereto He sends it.

The temperance work amongst adults and children is going forward and increasing.

The schools are in a prosperous condition, nearly 400 of the poorest children attending, food and clothing being supplied to the hungry and needy ones.

The Sunday-schools and week-day classes for children are very well attended. Many of the voluntary teachers in this blessed work have been taking part in it for years; and God has lately sent in other kind friends to assist in both the Sunday-schools and classes.

The work amongst the young men and young women is increasing; and the classes for the latter, held in the Kinnaird Rooms, are very well attended. The mothers' meetings, numbering 390 members, are being greatly blessed and owned of God.

Dwelling ourselves in comfortable homes, may we, now the winter is upon us, each contribute in some measure to brighten the dwellings of the poor, and to help the many who are homeless and in distress. The cries of "No work," "no food," and "nowhere to sleep" are sounding loudly in Whitechapel.

"Rescue the perishing, care for the dying." Already some with kindly forethought have been sending in help, and the practical sympathy of all God's people is asked on behalf of this Christ-like work.

Any visitors wishing to see the mission or schools, would be heartily welcomed by Colonel Hayne, 87, High Street, Whitechapel, E.

In Home and Hospital.

GREAT need exists for the further visitation of the sick poor in infirmaries and in their own homes. Although, in various parts of London and other cities, efforts are made to bring the Gospel to the sick, invalided, and dying, these seem very limited in view of the great scope that exists.

In several Metropolitan infirmaries deaths take place at the rate of over one a day, and it may be said that it is largely to these institutions that the poor of London go to die. In the quiet of the wards, with eternity (it may be) approaching, men and women will listen and speak on religious subjects much more freely than under ordinary circumstances. A great opportunity is thus presented of bringing the message of hope and peace to thousands who have hitherto been careless or indifferent.

In the homes of the people, also, a large amount of sickness exists. What severe illness means in a home of one or two rooms, can hardly be described. Suffice it to say that thousands are lying ill in London tenements, receiving but scanty attention, and in great want of a ministering hand. The present winter promises to be marked by special distress among the poor, and much poverty means much sickness.

Communications from those who feel it laid upon their hearts to aid the objects of the Society for the Visitation of the Sick Poor, may be sent to Mr. A. Boake, hon. treasurer, Messrs. Boake. Roberts. and Co.. Stratford.

"Social Service."

THE SALVATION ARMY.

"THIS work, going on so busily, taken up with a laborious energy, co-extensive, actually, with its brightness and its cheerfulness, is one to be admired and gloried in by every country in which the Salvation Army exists; and I commend that organization, not only for all the reasons that inspire the devotion and self-sacrifice of its soldiers, but for its magnificent work, in doing for the State what, perhaps, no other agency has ever been so well able to do."—The Right Hon. Sir Edmund Barton, G.C.M.G., Prime Minister of the Australasian Commonwealth.

This pathetic letter from the officer-in-charge of the Salvation Army's Shelter for Women in Whitechapel—the Army has now 169 Shelters and Food Depôts for the poor, and shelters some 20,000 people nightly—is extracted from "Social Service in the Salvation Army," which a distinguished journalist has just described as "one of the most human and fascinating books a man can read." Every reader is urged to write for the book, which will be sent upon receipt of six stamps addressed the Secretary, the Salvation Army's Headquarters, 101, Queen Victoria Street, London.

"MY DEAR FRIEND,—The Women's Shelter at Hanbury Street exists chiefly for the comfort and help of old women—that class whom so few seem to care to help.

"When one thinks of one's own old folks, and the tender care they need, one shudders to remember that equally frail old women, with tottering limbs and failing sight, are jostled about all day long in great City streets, having to stand for hours on their aching feet, offering matches or shoelaces for sale, and with no one to care for them, and no place to call or think about as 'home.'

"Some of them, probably, have reached this condition through their own fault, but a greater number are suffering from sheer misfortune, bereavement, or the neglect of those who should care for them.

"And how they learn to love the Shelter! It becomes truly home to them. Think what a privilege they feel it, only to have an address to which a letter can be sent! And what stories I could tell you about those letters!

"These old women spend their days at a variety of employments, which include selling crochet-work or iron-holders—made here in the evenings—shelling peas or walnuts, picking over fruit, mending unbrellas, carrying baskets about the markets, or scrubbing. They are generally so old and poorly dressed and dirty looking that they cannot get employment in any but the very roughest houses, and often an old woman will scrub all day long for a few pence only. Many have to sally forth in the small hours of the morning to reach the distant markets in time. When, after an unsuccessful day, they come in the evenings without the necessary twopence for their bunk, we trust them, and it is wonderful how careful they are to pay up. They do so appreciate our confidence.

"We get many women, too, who are the wives of respectable working-men, but have ruined their homes and worn out their husbands' patience with their drinking habits.

NO FOOD FOR THREE DAYS!

"Then there are cases of sheer misfortune or improvidence, who want tiding over a bad time. For instance, quite a respectable young man and wife, with two children, came here lately. Through loss of work his home had been sold up, and they went on tramp. Late one night they strayed into a Salvation Army Hall, and the officer, speaking to them and learning of their condition, gave them a little help, and sent them here. It was three days since they had tasted food, except one small piece of dry bread. Think of it. That poor woman, walking about all day, nursing her little baby, and with nothing to eat herself!

"I told the husband we would take care of his family while he went to seek work, and oh! he was grateful. He lodged at the Men's Shelter, and presently found something to do, and as soon as he had taken one week's pay, he found a room, and came for his wife. The wife had professed conversion during her stay with us, and I shall visit them in their little home, and quite expect they will become good 'soldiers.'

"We are able to help so many by giving them cleaning to do in the Shelter. In this way a woman can climb to a better position. While they are our cleaners, they live in our Shelter, and nearly always get truly saved; and after three months they move up into the Metropole, a better class of lodging, reserved only for cleaners, where they have beds instead of bunks, and receive a little pay, so that they can get some clothes, and be ready for any situations or regular employment which we can secure for them. We move them on in this way as soon as they are ready, and so make room for others.

"Sometimes, when it seems that all our efforts are proving fruitless, we are gladdened at the last. One old woman, who had walked about when too ill to be out of bed, at last dropped in the street, and was taken to the infirmary. She was put on the 'dangerous list,' and on being asked if she had any friends, replied, 'Yes; the Salvation Sisters at the Hanbury Street Shelter.' So we were sent for, and as she caught sight of an officer in uniform approaching, the dying woman exclaimed, with such a bright face: 'O Sister, I just wanted to let you know that while I have been lying here everything I've heard in the meetings has come up before me, and I've given myself to my God. I wanted to tell you I'm saved.' We were encouraged.

"Another woman, while lying sick in the infirmary, said to the officer who visited her:

"'Oh, you don't know what the meetings are to us women. Many a time we come in disheartened and discouraged, after trying all day to earn something and not succeeding; and the meeting does cheer us up, and help us to face the next day's struggle.'

"You ask whether we get the Shelter full? Indeed we do. But if we had room for 376 instead of 276 how thankful we should be, and we could deal with all with very little more labour. We now turn away scores nightly.

"I am sometimes asked how I can love such dirty people as our lodgers are. To this I reply, firstly, that nobody can help these people who does not love them; and, secondly, that we aim at making them clean, and certainly succeed in doing something towards this end. All who have ever been clean, are glad to become so again, even though, through poverty, sickness, and despair they have sunk to the dirtiest depths.

"One day a young foreigner, studying medicine in England, passed a woman sitting on a doorstep, clothed in rags and covered with vermin. Full of pity, he inquired for the nearest Salvation Army place, and was directed here.

'YOU'RE AN ANGEL!'

He asked us to send and fetch her, and said he would call again and meet all expenses. She was sent for, and fed, and then an officer, who had never done quite so difficult a job before, volunteered to clean her. The task of clipping off her matted hair, removing her terrible clothes, and instantly burning the whole, and then getting her into a hot, soapy bath, was really worthy of the poor creature's grateful ejaculations: 'Oh, but, my dear, you're an angel! God Almighty bless you, my dear! To think of you being willing to do this for me!'

"What I tell you of Hanbury Street applies practically to all our other Shelters. Major Simmons, who has had several years' experience at Dundee, Edinburgh, and Glasgow, finds that the same love and patience and care devoted to needy Scottish women produce the same gratifying results. Lodging-houses, prisons, and police courts are visited by the Shelter and Metropole Officers in the Provinces; drunkards and harlots are drawn into the salvation net by means of the Shelters; and for stories—well, the Major can tell some that are more thrilling than any I have to record. The police and magistrates of those great Scottish cities have the greatest respect for the Army, and work into our officers' hands most happily. Many a 'first offender' is handed over to the Army instead of being imprisoned, and sometimes a very case-hardened drunkard is 'given a chance' at the Shelter by the magistrate's suggestion, to see whether she will not reform under our care.

Master Pickard's Holiday.

THIS letter chances to be uppermost on my writing desk. It is in schoolboy hand:—

Dear Sir,—I am very glad to tell you that we arrived there quite safe. About a quarter of an hour after we were there, we had our dinner of roast beef and potatoes and pudding. After dinner we had a game at football and cricket, etc.

This is all I have to say, as it is time to have our tea. From J. Pickard.

Except the transposition of letters in "ect.," the spelling and composition of this epistle reflect credit upon the school teaching of this lad of eleven in Hoxton. The place represented by "there" was one of the delightful country Holiday Homes used by the Ragged School Union, as fair a spot as one could wish to see. J. Pickard was one of a party of twelve boys whom I had seen before leaving Waterloo Station, and this was the way he had kept his promise to write me.

Note the one feature on which his memory lingered—not the green lawns around the Home, nor even the ride in the train or from the station, but food—the good dinner he had enjoyed. It may be well to note in passing the excellence of the meal. But if the reader had seen the of the boys before they started, he would hardly be surprised. Yet the honorary superintendent of the Mission was such a wise man that he insisted on each mother contributing 2s. in weekly payments of two or three pence, in order that the brief holiday might be really valued alike by parents and child. Then, through the generosity of its subscribers, the Ragged School Union and Shaftesbury Society came to the rescue, as in thousands of similar cases this year, and was able to provide the holiday, costing ten or twelve shillings in all.

I should like to carry this story a step further. Four months had elapsed when, on a certain October evening, I found two dozen lads seated round the Mission tea-table. The chief point of expectancy, however, was not the tea, but the Matron of that Home, who was spending a night in London, and had promised to give a little talk to the Band of Hope meeting at seven. I had another appointment, but managed to remain until Mrs. S—— arrived.

I wish I could picture in words the delight and enthusiam of those boys when she entered the room. They chattered, they cheered, they shook her hand, they would almost have limbed her if the superintendent had not announced tea! Then they asked questions about Mr. S——, the master, about her daughters, about the dog, and the poultry, and the horse, and so on. It was a fine tribute to the Christian influence wielded by the custodians of that Home during the two weeks which the two groups of boys had spent there. And after the Band of Hope talk, they all accompanied Mrs. S—— to the station. Two, I think, announced their intention of starting on Christmas Eve and walking down to Windsor in order to eat a Christmas dinner.

The Mission superintendent assured me that the fortnight spent in this country Home had not only refreshed the physical systems, but had wrought a complete change in the boys' lives, altering their mode of speech and behaviour. Such is the value of wise discipline and the influence of Christian teachers. The fame of the Ragged School Union is daily extending in caring for its 7,000 child cripples; in issuing each year scores of thousands of garments to the poor; in reaching the waifs of the streets by its Drift Mission; in encouraging faithful service by factory hands and domestic servants; and in fifty other ways with which readers of The Christian are not unfamiliar: but that fame reaches its highest and noblest point in the attempt all through its 150 affiliated missions and its Holiday Homes to touch the spiritual nature of young and old.

The aim of its noble leader, Lord Shaftesbury, has never been lost sight of, and after nearly forty years' experience the name of its secretary, Mr. John Kirk, is synonymous with enlightened, economical, and Christian philanthropy. Its Patron, the King, has long been a liberal helper, and there is no society at this Christmas season more deserving of the liberal assistance of His Majesty's Christian subjects.

The offices at 32, John Street, Theobald's Road, W.C., are worth a personal call, but cheques can always be made payable to Mr. John Kirk. J. S.

SURREY CHAPEL CENTRAL MISSION.

BLACKFRIARS ROAD with its off-shoots are too well known to need description. They are close to the heart of our great world-city. The conditions of life tend more and more to make Christian work difficult, while they increase the necessity for it. The outward drift of the well-to-do elements of the population, and the crowding, on limited areas, of the poorer and less fortunate classes, with the consequent drunkenness, sickness, and misery, and the appalling indifference to anything beyond the present, are the circumstances that make the existence of mid-town churches so difficult, if not impossible, for all but the most vigorous of them.

In such a district stands Surrey Chapel. On Sundays and on every evening in the week it is distinguished, not only by its brilliant lights, but by the busy groups that surround its gates or pass to and fro through the one centre of brightness and life in Blackfriars Road. The premises are OPEN ALL THE WEEK.

So limited is the accommodation for the work being done, that the same room has to be occupied two or three times in succession each evening. The Sunday congregations are well maintained, varying, as all city congregations do, according to the weather. There is a heart-breaking decrease in attendance at public worship throughout Southwark, a matter which calls for the prompt attention of all Christian men. How can we be satisfied when those who attend God's house are so few as compared with those who do not?

The difficulties and discouragements of the work are not to be described. The constant removals of whole families and fellow-workers, the poverty and spiritual indifference of the masses for whom it caters, the exhausting toil, wearying anxiety, and small results, would, but for the sustaining presence of the Lord Jesus, break down the stoutest-hearted. But the workers love Him and all men for His sake, and are consequently full of hope and confidence in the future. Their eyes are towards the hills, and the vision of the morning is in their hearts. The superintendent of the Mission is Rev. James Watkin, 7, Albert Square, S.W.

Kirkley Run Mission Building Fund.—More than twenty years ago this Mission at Lowestoft was started by some fishermen in a cottage. In 1888 a small wooden room was built on leasehold ground, and services held on Sundays, and a Sunday-school maintained. The lease of the ground is now expired, and, in addition, the room is far too small for the congregation, besides being in bad repair. It is proposed to build a new room to hold about 250 people. Mr. A. G. Boyd, of Lowestoft, has given a suitable piece of land, and it is desired to raise the necessary funds for the building, which will be as simple as possible. It is estimated that £450 will be required. Mr. Boyd's address is, "Stronsay," Kirkley Cliff Road, Lowestoft.

"Joy for Mourning."

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

A LITTLE more than half a century ago, four Christian gentlemen met in a room in a quiet street off Gray's Inn Road, King's Cross, to seek God's blessing upon a missionary tour they purposed to commence that night in the streets of London. About ten o'clock they sallied forth into the darkness and gloom of the night, and for several hours continued their errand of mercy. Nor were their labours in vain, for, as a result of their self-denying efforts, some twenty young women were afforded an opportunity of commencing a better life.

These missionary tours were continued with blessed results, and out of the work commenced that first night, there sprang the many agencies now being carried on in the streets among young women and girls.

One of the four gentlemen referred to was the late Mr. E. W. Thomas, who became the Founder of the Homes and Open-all-Night Refuge, so familiar to the readers of The Christian, who have by their gifts and their prayers done very much to help, under the Divine Blessing, the work that has been successfully accomplished.

Hopeless, indeed, had been the condition of unfortunate young women and girls, until God put it into the hearts of His servants to "go after" (like the Good Shepherd) the lost sheep. Happily, upwards of 38,000 have been found; and, whatever may be the results which the great day of the Lord will reveal, it is thankfully recorded that every one of this large number has been pointed to Him who is able to save them to the uttermost.

Did space allow, I could tell of one and another, and yet another, who has been restored. As I write, there is before me a letter, telling of the recent happy marriage of one who was not very long ago in the depths. Another informs me, "E—— was married. She sent me a piece of wedding-cake." In yet another instance, a girl herself wrote, and said, "I do not know what I would have done if I had not been allowed to have gone to your Home. I feel that I can never thank you enough. . . . By the grace of God

I AM KEEPING ALL RIGHT."

Such testimonies abound, and in the published reports and papers (which may be had post free on application) many are recorded in fuller detail. Truly in all such instances there is "joy for mourning" and a stimulus for further effort! The Homes receive 180 inmates, all of whom are under Christian instruction and industrial training. The needs of such a large family are necessarily very great; upwards of a quarter of a million meals have to be provided every year. To meet all expenses, £15 is required daily. Do not these facts, apart from anything else, constitute a most powerful appeal to God's children to help us? To the praise of His Name, who feeds the sparrows and clothes the grass of the field, it is thankfully recorded that the generosity of His servants has sustained the work for the past forty-six years. Every contributor is a sharer in the blessed results which have followed, and will "rejoice together" with those who reap, when the great Lord of the harvest shall gather the sheaves into His garner. In that day, even the "cup of cold water" given in the Master's Name will have its reward. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me." Let us give something more than a passing thought to the Homes this Christmastide, by sending a token of "Goodwill" towards the support of their pitiable occupants. We need your help, your sympathy, and, above all, we need your prayers, that the God of all mercy, who has had compassion on us and saved us, may restore the penitent woman to Himself.

Kensit Crusade.

THE most encouraging sign in the Protestant world during 1903 has been the marvellous progress of the crusade initiated by the late John Kensit. It was hoped by many Romanists and Ritualists that the work would die with Mr. Kensit, but the reverse has been the case. While his death has been an irreparable loss in many ways, we greatly rejoice that in the inscrutable Providence of God, this great human sacrifice has not been in vain. Our contemporary, The Rock, in a recent issue remarked, "The Kensit Crusade must go on increasing; it is God's will, for it is His work."

The movement has been carried on by Mr. J. A. Kensit, who has shown the same energy which characterized his late father. Under his able leadership, the staff of Wickliffe Preachers has been increased, and the permanent staff now numbers thirty workers. This year two new bands of Preachers have been sent forth, and on New Year's Day, 1904, it is proposed to start an extra band of Preachers to work in the Southern Counties. The useful work accomplished by these bands of carefully-selected messengers cannot be over-estimated, and our columns have frequently borne witness to the spiritual revivals that have followed their labours in many dark priest-ridden places in our land.

Every mission is conducted in the spirit of prayer, and during the past twelve months the preachers have had the joy of pointing many to Christ as the Saviour from sin and superstition. The following encouraging note has just been received by Mr. Kensit from one who attended the services in Macclesfield:—"I feel thankful to God that you ever sent your preachers here, as it was the means in God's hands of my conversion. I feel sure you and your preachers have been the means of many leading new lives in Christ." Such testimonies, which could be multiplied ad infinitum, demonstrate the distinctive evangelistic feature of the work, and the rich blessing which has crowned the labours of the preachers.

There can be no doubt that this Crusade occupies a foremost position among Protestant agencies, and but for its operations under God, aggressive Protestantism would in some places have been practically extinct. The force of the present Protestant revival is traceable to the colossal work of education which has been carried on during recent years by this organization. Herein lies the secret of the hostility which has been manifested by opponents to the truth, who have sought to arrest the onward march of the preachers by persecution and prosecution. During this year four of the Preachers have been imprisoned for preaching the Word, but in each case this persecution has aroused the people, and brought thousands under the sound of the Gospel who would not have been reached otherwise.

In the past twelve months, 441 towns have been visited, 2,561 meetings held, and 200,137 pamphlets distributed in all parts of the country. In addition to this great itinerating effort, the necessity of permanent local work has been recognised, and over fifty active branches of the Crusade have been started. This work takes the form in various localities of prayer-meetings, educational classes, lantern lectures, village work, Press work, Parliamentary work, and evangelistic services. A van movement has also been started for the villages, and much good has already been accomplished among the people who gladly hear the message of light and life.

God has supplied the means to carry on the work in a wonderful way, and the increase of the efforts in the field has been accompanied by a similar increase in the finances. The work is entirely dependent upon voluntary contributions, and Mr. Kensit has appealed for a further increase in the funds to establish Wickliffe Preachers in every county. The project for the foundation and endowment of a Wickliffe Preachers Training Home, as a memorial to the late John Kensit, appeals to all interested in this work, and has met with success; but £8,000 is required to make the scheme an accomplished fact. This very practical memorial should commend itself to the generosity of all lovers of the Gospel, as it is proposed not only to train the workers for Protestant warfare, but also for evangelistic and ministerial fields of labour.

The need for the Wickliffe Preachers becomes more necessary every year to voice the people's protest against priestly encroachments, and to raise a warning against the perils of departure from God's truth. All communications and remittances should be sent to J. A. Kensit, secretary, 18, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

Relieving the Blind.

THE work of the National Blind Relief Society is national in its character, extending its operations throughout the United Kingdom; blindness and poverty are the only qualifications required in those who apply for its relief. The Committee have a praiseworthy method of giving relief. This help, while allowing the recipients to remain in their own homes (wherever situated in the United Kingdom) and continue their occupations, at the same time affords them the comforting assurance that they may depend upon a small certain sum every month—in addition to their own earnings. By this means they retain the sense of independence so dear to the British heart. A notable feature in the working is the absence of heavy outlay upon offices and salaries. Nearly all the work is carried out by those who have volunteered their services; consequently, the smallness of the amount used for working expenses is unique.

Some typical instances of the Society's work will be noted with interest:—

BLIND FROM INFANCY.

A lady of great talent and refinement, aged forty-two, blind from infancy, has had to return to England from abroad (where she was making a good living by teaching singing) through large bank failures, in which many of her pupils were involved, and most of her own savings lost. If with timely aid her mind were relieved and her health, which has suffered much, were restored, she could earn a fair income, being a very good singer and wonderfully successful in "voice production." Assistance is urgently needed in providing the necessaries for receiving and visiting pupils, such as hiring suitable rooms, a piano, and also the services of a guide and a music reader, besides the essentials of food, clothing, &c. If this help were obtained now, in due time this lady would, in all probability, have the happiness of being able to succeed in her profession, and provide for herself.

A DARKENED LIFE.

Suddenly, a year ago, an Irish gentleman became blind at the age of fifty-six, he is now unable to help himself in any way, and is often at a loss to provide the necessaries of life—his only source of income being the small profits from poultry keeping on the little portion of land surrounding a cottage, which was left him by an old friend. A small allowance paid monthly or quarterly, would be the means of relieving him of much anxiety, as the sale of the eggs only realises a fair sum during six months of the year. The great courage and cheerfulness shown by this gentleman under his great affliction, only add to the earnest desire that more brightness should be brought into his darkened life.

A fitter, aged fifty-three, met with an accident about two-and-a-half years ago, and so seriously injured his sight that he has been discharged from the Eye Hospital at Birmingham, as incurable. This poor man and his wife are in the greatest need, as he is unable to earn anything, and their slender savings have become exhausted.

The case of a girl, ten years of age, stone blind for the last six years, has been taken up by the Swansea School Board, who have decided to place the child in the Blind Institution there, upon her father engaging to pay a small sum per week towards her maintenance, and to find her in clothing, &c. This he is quite unable to do without aid, having a large family to maintain, and in receipt of but low wages. The vicar of his parish speaks of him in the highest terms, and considers it a most deserving case.

The hon. secretary of the Society is Rev. J. Pullein-Thompson, Christ Church Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.

Considering the Poor.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

"BLESSED is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble."

A wretched soul, bruised with adversity,
We bid be quiet when we hear it cry;
But were we burden'd with like weight of pain,
As much or more, we should ourselves complain.

On Dec. 4, 1902, The Christian contained the following paragraph:—

"WHEN STARVATION BEGINS.

"A daily contemporary, in a thoughtful leader, says:—'Starvation kills long before its victim dies. The delicate child and the decrepit labourer or artisan, are oft-times beyond the reach of compassion and of help at the date when compassion has found out their straits. The mischief has been allowed to be done in those lost days when plans of assistance were not matured, and while honest poverty was trying to fight its own battles.'"

On January 12, 1903, a Daily News correspondent wrote:—"A very small boy, of lean and hungry look, crept shyly one day this week before one of the committees administering a Relief Fund. The little chap timidly asked whether he could have a ticket for soup. It is against the regulations to give tickets on the application of children only, and he was asked why his mother hadn't come. 'She's dead,' said the timid lad in a whisper. Then why hadn't his father come? 'Please, he's a-looking for work,' in the same nervous, shrinking tone. 'But surely somebody else could have come for you. Who looks after you?' The little chap gave a look which showed he didn't understand what they meant. 'Can't you tell us who looks after you? Who cooks your dinner?' 'Please, it don't never want no cooking; we haves bread!'"

The foregoing are mentioned as specimen references to the vast amount of poverty prevalent in the Metropolis. Possibly some writers have fallen into exaggeration, and painted the pictures in colours too dark and deep; but beyond all doubt—we speak from experience—destitution, hunger, and suffering prevail to an extent which calls for our constant and unabated succour.

Last winter, Mr. Wheatley, the superintendent of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, received the following letter. It contains a account:—

"I am writing to ask you if you would kindly "help me a little longer. Dear Sir, I have got "a plaice of work 8 shilling per week, which "out of that I have to pay 5 shilling for baby "to be looked after and 2/6 Rent which only "leaves me with 6d. Dear Sir, I should be very "thankfull if you would help me a little longer, "and Oblidge

"Your respectfull,
"Mrs. J. O."

The Mission's workers are now face to face with their arduous winter's work. They are using every effort to mitigate the misery by which they are surrounded. Last year 5,000 Christmas dinners were distributed, beside other much-needed relief, including food, firing, clothing, blankets, &c.

Mr. Wheatley will gratefully and immediately acknowledge all contributions sent to him at his office, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, London, W.C. He and his co-workers are endeavouring to bring about for the poor and needy that to which reference is made in the following lines; and hopes, with the help of the readers of The Christian, that during this Christmas season he will see—

Eyes with joy shall sparkle
That brimmed with tears of late;
Orphans no longer fatherless,
Nor widows desolate."

Moravian Missions.

THE story of Moravian Missions, full as it is of stirring incident, affords a striking illustration of what can be accomplished, by God's blessing, through the consecrated missionary labours of a comparatively small body. Other Protestant churches send out to the foreign field only one in about five thousand of their communicant members, but the Moravians send out about one in sixty.

The history of the Moravians, in their devoted efforts on the Continent to maintain Evangelical truth against the tyrannies and superstitions of Rome, is familiar. That heart must indeed be cold that is not moved by the record of persecution and bloodshed, of harryings from country to country at the hands of the Papacy. It is, however, of the Moravian present-day foreign mission work that we now desire to speak. The labours of the missionaries are world-wide. Connected with the missions there are about 212 stations, 450 missionaries, thousands of native agents, 100,000 converts, 250 schools, and 22,000 scholars.

JERUSALEM LEPER HOME.

Lepers in the Holy Land go by the name of "The Poor." That is how the common people designate them; when you speak of the poor in a general way, the vision of a leper rises before the popular mind. It is accepted that, while other afflictions may leave something to a man, leprosy leaves him nothing. And this is the sober truth, for a leper loses his home, his family, his friends, his associations. Here the ministry of the Moravian Leper Home steps in. If leprosy inevitably deprives a person of the rights and associations which are his natural inheritance—in the Home, he is restored to them. The sufferer who passes through its portal is treated with courtesy, his self-respect is no longer outraged by indignities, he returns within the pale of humanity.

NORTH OF LAKE NYASSA.

Unabated progress, both in extension of the work, in the employment of native agency, and better still in spiritual results, continues to characterize the youngest of the mission fields, East Central Africa. Though begun only eleven years ago, its actual commencement, owing to hindrances of climate and local hostility, dates back less than ten years; and yet to-day the dream of the late Alexander Mackay (at whose suggestion the Mission was begun), of a chain of stations starting from Nyassa until Moravian missionaries should shake hands with the missionaries in Uganda, is within measurable distance of fulfilment. Yet another station in the Unyamwezi district has been founded, which means that, with the addition of another station or two southward to complete the chain from Nyassa and Igumila, more than two-thirds of the distance will have been covered, and to a large extent conquered for Christ in this short period of time.

CARD-BURNING IN LABRADOR.

Special difficulties have beset the work in Labrador, and urgent help is sought on account of the much-needed new hospital at Okak, to which Dr. Hutton, after a serious illness, has returned. An incident reported from one of the stations illustrates the growth of spiritual life:—Card-playing had been introduced by Newfoundland fishermen, and in the case of several it developed into a sinful passion. Missionaries and native helpers did their best to check the evil, and not without good results. They were ably assisted by the newly-elected congregation council. At the time of writing, there was not, so far as the missionaries were aware, a single pack of cards left at the station. After the receipt of a small sum of money in compensation for their loss, the owners of cards all consigned them to the flames.

Good tidings come from the various stations in South Africa. At one station in Kaffraria, a farmer built a church for the benefit of a congregation of coloured people employed on his land, who had been influenced and drawn together by a Moravian evangelist.

How greatly the people of Kragakama, an outlying station, appreciate their missionary's visits, may be easily seen from the following:—"The high road leads across a common, which is enclosed to keep the cattle from straying. In connection therewith are several gates, which have to be opened whenever a vehicle passes along. The people had deputed a boy to open these gates whenever they saw the missionary coming, and this office had become so important in his eyes that, when, shortly afterwards, the poor little fellow was seized with a fatal illness, he solemnly bequeathed his duties to his sister, and this legacy was regarded by the family as of much importance, so highly do they esteem the preaching of the Gospel."

To give an adequate description of the many missions would occupy much space. Briefly, let it be said that recent reports tell of many converts won for Christ. From places so far apart as Central Africa, Central Asia, Central America, Alaska, and Jamaica, come tidings of candidates seeking baptism. Among the degraded blacks of North Queensland, the Indians of California, and also at Kalatse, a comparatively new station in Tibet, the missionaries are seeing spiritual fruit gathered in.

New doors are being opened in answer to prayer; but on the other hand, owing to financial difficulty, not only are reinforcements of necessity held back, but despite the readiness of the brethren to obey the call to the foreign field, the directors are faced with the painful duty of reducing the staff and curtailing the work. Detailed information may be obtained from Rev. W. Wetton Cox, London Association in Aid of Moravian Missions, 7, New Court, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

Shaftesbury Institute.

I HAVE been visiting to-day one of our dear "old" factory girls, now in an advanced stage of consumption, and who has lain on her back fourteen months. At sixteen years of age, she was one of the most exceptionally wild, rough, high-spirited girls we have ever known, added to which, even at that early age, she was a heavy drinker. But God, in His infinite love, "called her out of darkness into His marvellous light," and now she can say, "He brought me up out of an horrible pit;" she is truly converted, respectably married, and has one little girl.

After her conversion, she joined the Salvation Army, and in due course became "lieutenant," then "captain." But whether her former life undermined her constitution, or the trying work of speaking and singing in the open-air, together with the lack of nourishing food, had proved too much for her, we do not know; but about a year after her marriage, phthisis appeared, which gradually developed, until she became changed, from an apparently robust girl, to that of a constant sufferer, on a water-bed, which has been lent to her, and never knowing day or night what it is to be free from pain, which she bears with great patience. Most trying are the long, sleepless hours at night, when she feels the cold, and her cough troubles her. "Coals are so dear, and 'he' is out of work just now; so I must do without a fire at night." We supply her with some of the nourishing food she needs; but we have received no coal tickets this winter as yet, and we have many applications from our fireless neighbours.

LYING ON HER BACK

OUR FACTORY GIRLS AND SLUM CHILDREN are cheering us, both by their attendance and order; the girls and little ones evidently appreciate their evening home. We try to make Sunday afternoon bright and happy for them. At five o'clock they meet for Bible-class, at which the attendance is good; at six o'clock they have tea with the lady workers; and at half-past six they go down to the Mission Hall and sing hymns till seven o'clock, when the mission service begins. Christmas is a time of strong temptation for them, and we are making special effort this year to provide on Boxing Day a variety of counter-attractions to degrading places of amusement and public-houses. We propose to invite them at half-past five, and keep them till half-past twelve, when the public-houses will have closed, giving them tea when they arrive, and supper when they leave.

THE WOMEN'S SHELTER, which is full nightly, is an unspeakable boon to poor, hardworking women who cannot earn sufficient to maintain a room of their own. Not a few who have been unable to obtain situations owing to illness, or an unprincipled mistress, who dismissed them in a moment of temper, and refused them a character, we have helped. We took Mrs. —— into our own Institute kitchen, and after testing her for nearly two years, we got her a place as cook at £22 of wages, and she is doing well. "B." came to the Shelter seven years ago; she was then drafted into the Women's Labour Home as one of the scrubbers and cleaners of the Shelter, and from there, at her own strong desire, we let her go into the Crèche as assistant nurse. There she proved herself invaluable, and on the death of our old nurse, in June last, we gave her the full charge.

The London County Council is still causing us anxiety, for requirements as to safety from fire, and other additions, are costly. Wil the readers of The Christian pray that the means for this valuable part of the work may be provided, and that all difficulties may be overruled for God's glory?

Female Mission to the Fallen.

PERHAPS the most prominent distinguishing feature of the Female Aid Society is that it seeks the fallen by sending missionaries out in all directions—into the streets at all hours; into the parks, workhouses, police-courts, and prisons. To carry on this work, the Committee endeavour to find missionaries filled with the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, who came "to seek and to save that which was lost." At the same time, care is exercised to guard againt a demonstration of merely emotional religion, and the missionaries are careful not to encourage a profession of belief which has no real foundation in the heart and life.

The missionary at Clapham gives the following particulars of one over whom, she says, "I have many times rejoiced":—

G. O., aged 16, a self-willed girl, ran away from home and went on the streets; three months later she was charged at the Police Court with being in the company of immoral women. The magistrate kindly allowed her to go to a Home. The matron writes—"G. is doing very well; we all like her. She is showing by her life true penitence for the past. Her father, who at first refused to see her, has, because of the good reports I have been able to give him, fully forgiven her; and the earnest 'God bless you, miss,' of her broken-hearted mother was indeed a sweet recompense for the little I had been able to do."

The Ladies' Committee at the Richmond Mission say in their annual report:—

Seventy-two girls have been inmates of the Mission House, and many have passed from there into positions of respectability—a large proportion of them into service with ladies who are kindly willing to receive and help them; some into more permanent Homes for further training and discipline; and five have been restored to friends. These cases, with fifty others that have been visited and assisted, represent a large amount of laborious work outside the Home.

And a similar statement might be made concerning each of the other Mission Houses.

PREVENTIVE WORK.

Primarily, the Mission is designed to rescue the fallen, but from the commencement it was felt that preventive work must not be neglected; and that any girl, obviously in grave moral danger, whom the missionaries might meet with, must be saved, if possible.

The missionary residing in Islington tells of the following preventive case:—

C. S., aged eighteen, was brought to me one Sunday morning in a terrible state of neglect and illness. I got her into the infirmary at once, and the doctor said she could not have lived if she had not gone there then. For six weeks she was very ill. When she left the infirmary, I got her into a refuge for a few weeks, and then to a convalescent home for four weeks. The matron there found her so useful that she has kept her on as housemaid, and when I went to see her two months after her admission, I hardly knew her, she looked so well. She has led a truly Christian life since being helped, and her gratitude is very great. I do not know when I have ever had such a sad case turn out more satisfactorily. To God be all the glory!

Many other cases might be given, showing how effective and far-reaching are the operations of the Society. The secretary is Mr. Arthur J. S. Maddison, 32, Charing Cross, S.W.

The Topical Bible.

More than Twenty Thousand Topics and Sub-Topics and One Hundred Thousand References to the Bible.

EXPOSITORY TIMES:—"Whatever the subject may be, get this book, turn to the subject, it is sure to be here, and you find all the texts that belong to it. . . . Its place is its own. It is perhaps as useful, perhaps as indispensable as a concordance or a dictionary. It will save time as they do, it will give important instruction. It is superfluous to add that the book is extremely handsome in appearance and workmanship."

METHODIST TIMES:—"We have tested the book in many places, and found it to be invariably accurate. Its production must have been an immense labour on the part of the compiler, and should considerably minimise the labour of the student. . . With this book at hand there should be no difficulty in ascertaining the actual teaching of the Bible on any of the given subjects. We are not acquainted with any book like it of equal value."

ONE MILLION C. H. SPURGEON'S SERMONS to be GIVEN AWAY.

A UNIQUE JUBILEE.

THE 50th YEAR OF C. H. SPURGEON'S SERMONS.

HOW THE SERMONS HAVE BEEN ISSUED WEEKLY FOR 50 YEARS, AND WILL BE PUBLISHED FOR YEARS TO COME!!!

It was the usual practice of Mr. Spurgeon to preach three times weekly—twice on Sunday, and on Thursday evening—the Sunday morning Sermon being published the following Thursday. These Sermons were all taken down in shorthand. The Publishers are now using the remaining manuscripts, namely, those preached on Thursday and Sunday evenings, and are thus able to continue the weekly issue of the Sermon, together with the Exposition of Scripture, for many years to come. May be ordered through any Booksellers.

To Mark the Unprecedented Event of the Sermons of one Preacher having entered the 50th Year of Publication,

MESSRS. PASSMORE & ALABASTER,

OF 4, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, LONDON,

Make the Following Offers——

1. They will forward FREE during the months of December, 1903, and January, February, and March, 1904, 50 Sermons for Distribution, upon receipt of Postage only; namely, for Addresses in the United Kingdom, 6d.; Abroad, 1s. 4d.
2. Any of the 49 Yearly Volumes, published at 7s., will be sent Post Free, in the United Kingdom at the rate of 4s. 6d. per Volume; Abroad, 5s. per Volume.
3. They will send the weekly Sermons, as issued during the Jubilee Year, 1904, to any Address in the World for 5s., usual Subscription 6s. 6d.
4. With all orders a copy of the first Sermon in the 50th Volume, printed in Gold, will be Given Gratis as a Memento of an unparalleled event.

Those wishing to avail themselves of the above offers must apply direct to the Publishers, but the Weekly Sermons may be had of all Booksellers.

The Publishers will gladly send a Textual List of 2,800 Sermons on application.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

The English Churchman, referring to the Jubilee issue, which forms part of the volume, said:—"We offer our heartiest congratulations to this admirable contemporary—and to its Editor—on the attainment of its Jubilee. An illustrative retrospective sketch, recounting in brief what has been done by the Alliance during the past half century is given, and the hope is expressed that within the next decade the publication may be a weekly instead of a monthly. There are twenty-one excellent illustrations, commencing fitly with a portrait of the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Founder, and first Chairman of the Alliance. The majority of the pictures are of the Memorials which have been erected at Smithfield, Lewes, Londonderry, Plymouth, and numerous other places, in many instances through the instrumentality of the Alliance, to commemorate the Noble Army of Martyrs and valiant Champions of the Protestant Cause. A descriptive account is given of each. We are persuaded that if Protestants who do not already subscribe to the Magazine see this number they will want to read it regularly."

The Record says:—"A veritable storehouse of information in regard to all the leading questions of the day."

The Christian states:—"A very considerable space is given for articles on the sayings and doings of the Roman Catholics, and also of Romanizers in the Church of England. Such matters are critically considered, and discussed with great ability, and always in good taste."

Referring to THE PROTESTANT ALLIANCE MAGAZINE, the Rev. Thomas Spurgeon wrote:—"We have gained much useful information, and the work we heartily commend."—The Sword and Trowel, February, 1903, page 54.

As a Protestant Educational Medium, as a thoroughly up-to-date informant, it has no rival, being the brightest and the best of Monthly Magazines; and we believe that it has a larger circulation than any other Magazine of its kind.

JOHN GEORGE WHEELER,

250, Amhurst Road, London, N.

All Nations Missionary Union

THE necessary limitations of human nature prevent any one society, much less any single individual, from literally obeying our Divine Leader's call and preaching the Gospel in "all the world." Many of our honoured missionary societies connected with special groups of Churches cover an immense arena in their operations, but no one Society claims to have a representative in every region of the globe.

CHANGE OF TITLE.

It would, therefore, appear to be somewhat presumptuous of the organization known as the Missionary Pence Association and Information Bureau to announce that, after January 1, it will adopt the title of "All Nations Missionary Union." Much larger and even representative societies are content with more modest designations. Yet during the past sixteen years, since its first inception at the Mildmay and Keswick Conventions of 1886, under the original title of the Missionary Information Bureau, it must have held out on various occasions substantial and timely aid to workers connected with every recognised mission field, as well as those laboriously pioneering amongst aboriginal tribes little known. Passages and outfits have been provided for over 200 labourers, many of whom, as their letters testify, would not otherwise have been able to proceed to their stations, and at the present time accounts are running with over 180 missionaries in Europe, Asia, Africa, America (North, Central, and South), and in the Pacific.

Glancing over a long list of candidates, the writer sees that the Holy Spirit has, indeed, wrought great things through many of them. Some have exhibited marked powers as translators, others as industrial missionaries; and head hunters like the Lushais, grim warriors such as the Matabili, cannibals on the Congo, and naked savages in Interior Brazil, are now sitting clothed and in their right mind through these patient persevering efforts.

CAREY'S WEEKLY PENNY.

During the past six years the Society has relied upon the systematic collection of farthings and pence for the main supply of funds for its world-wide, though greatly scattered operations. Its Treasurer, Mr. John Jackson, the Organizing Secretary of the Mission to Lepers, to whose efforts are due the modern resuscitation of William Carey's Weekly Penny movement in the churches, has seen this branch of its operations rise from a few hundred pounds to over £2,600 per annum; though in endeavouring to follow out the command "to look also upon the things of others," by allowing its collectors the singular privilege of nominating the Society to which they design their remittance to be allocated, probably the missionaries most immediately connected with it have somewhat suffered.

LEPROSY AND FAMINE.

Those two gaunt spectres of India, leprosy and famine, with their twin sisters, plague and cholera, have figured largely in the Society's correspondence of late years, and over £6,000 has been raised towards attempting to mitigate their horrors and to bring comfort and alleviation to the sufferers.

South America more especially has attracted its attention, and whilst Mr. George K. Witte and Dr. James A. Graham were sent to labour amongst the almost unknown Indian tribes of the interior, a sum of about £400 has been found to equip and send a party of five with a printing press to Buenos Ayres. The Victoria Gospel Press will itself materially aid all Evangelical effort carried on in Argentina, Brazil, and other States, besides conducting its own Mission.

Alas! how little is known at home of the vast tracts of unoccupied territory even in the comparatively well-evangelized country of India. Many districts of over five million inhabitants still remain untouched and uncared for. During the present month a Macedonian cry has reached us from Hyderabad, where Mohammedanism rules with high hand, and the heart of the solitary worker in the town of Bidar (Dr. Batstone) has been gladdened by the M.P.A. undertaking to find all the funds necessary to enable him to carry on a small medical mission. Drugs and instruments have been ordered, in faith that the Lord will provide all that is necessary to support and carry on what promises to be a remarkable work.

THE ONLY SOLUTION.

How to meet the numerous demands made by excellent and well-deserving Missions at home and abroad for support, how to assist the new evangelistic and philanthropic agencies continually springing into existence, are problems ever present before every Christian mind. Have I fulfilled my duty by subscribing to the funds of all those efforts more particularly associated with my own shade of thought, or have the 33,000 famine orphans and the 500,000 lepers of India a further claim on my purse? Is there not some point where I can call a halt and say that further appeals must be met with deaf ears? What is the limit of the Master's "Inasmuch," as far as I personally am concerned? There is only one key to unlock these enigmas, and that the Bible provides us with. Regular, weekly, systematic laying aside of some portion of our income, however small, will meet the difficulty. The M.P.A. has enrolled thousands who know the joy of weekly self-denial in pence, shillings, and even in a few instances pounds, and with a separate purse for charitable purposes it is a real pleasure to receive an appeal and to carefully consider it on its merits. This Society will cheerfully provide cards for weekly tithing, and from the amounts thus laid on one side the holders can allocate small gifts to the missionaries personally appealing to them in church or chapel, or to any worthy society whose need appeals to their sympathies.

"ALL NATIONS" CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

As the preliminary announcement of the change of address in All Nations, the organ of the Carey's Weekly Penny Movement, indicates, the new title has been forced upon us by the urgent necessity of a substantial increase in the Society's income, which averages about £4,000 per annum.

Two stamps sent to All Nations Offices, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C., will bring the Christmas number (if not already out of print), and we are sure that the recipients will find it full of good stories and pictures.

The secretary would draw attention to the urgent need for special Christmas gifts of £320 to provide passages, outfits, drugs, &c., for nine outgoing workers in December and January. Cheques should be made payable to Mr. John Jackson, and crossed London and South Western Bank.

Winning Kaffir Girls.

AMIDST various discouragements and trials in her work, Miss Coote raises a note of praise to Him who is faithful, and who had called her to be a witness among the Kaffirs at East London, South Africa. "More and more," she says, "do I see the importance of this work, and how God is developing it by showing and supplying spiritual needs. Humanly speaking, the work is hindered by want of room, as the ground granted by the Town Council for a mission house has not been surveyed yet, notwithstanding all the efforts I could put forth in this matter. But as this is God's work, there must be a wise purpose in the delay being permitted. In the meantime I have been able to earn enough by massage to pay my rent and to supply my personal wants."

Miss Coote speaks of the bright faces attending the weekly prayer-meetings for revival in her little earthen-floored room, of prayers answered and blessings received in her labour. She values the prayers of her friends at home, and never had she realized their efficacy more than during the time of the terrible plague, when in her house-to-house visitation she came within the reach of this dreaded foe without the slightest danger to her personal health.

Sailors at Canning Town.

SO many friends, old and new, are looking for news in connection with this work at the "Welcome Home for Sailors," Canning Town, E., that I feel I must write a few lines telling of the Lord's dealings with us, and how that He is leading us on step by step. His presence is still with us in a very marked degree, His power being manifested in our nightly meetings by the conversion of precious souls and the building up of His own people, for which we give Him hearty thanks.

It is not, however, all sunshine with us. The clouds sometimes hang heavily over our heads, and when the gales which have been so numerous lately sweep along the ocean, and some of those to whom we have bidden farewell but a short time before are numbered among the dead, our hearts ache as we think of some of them who seemed unwilling to yield to the Gospel's claims.

During last month forty-six British vessels were wrecked, involving the loss of 120 lives. The numbers of the seafaring men who give way to drink are greatly lessened, I am thankful to say, and the money formerly spent in drink we have now the pleasure, in many instances, of sending home to wives and children or aged parents. The anniversary of our "Christmas Boat," is arranged for Saturday, December 19, when we hope to have tea and gifts for some hundreds of sailors of various nationalities, as well as Gospel and Gospel-temperance meetings. Friends who kindly send these gifts, and in any way help towards the success of the evening, will be gladly welcomed to see and hear for themselves.

Racing Stables' Mission.

PRESIDING at the annual meeting of this Mission, held at Exeter Hall, the BISHOP OF KENSINGTON enlarged upon the hitherto unknown and untouched character of this new field of Christian enterprise. Every other section of men, he remarked, has been to a large extent provided for; but it is only by the Racing Stables' Mission that any adequate attempt has at last been made to carry the Gospel to that large class that lies buried from ordinary thought and observation in the training stables of our own and foreign countries. He deeply deplored the carelessness that prevails in regard to the lives and destiny of the hundreds of lads who are employed in the business, and begged those present to see to it that, so far as lies in their power, the need of the Mission shall be made known, in order that these lads may be saved from the evils that are constantly surrounding them.

Rev. A. J. POYNDER gave a telling address on the aims and methods of the Mission. He illustrated his remarks from the story of a naturalist in his study of wild birds, and described how those engaged in this enterprise, through sympathy and kindness and all intimate knowledge of human nature, secure the confidence of the lads, and get round the defences behind which boys and men are always inclined to entrench themselves.

Sir MATTHEW DODSWORTH, hon. sec., and Mr. ELIOT WALTON, superintendent at Newmarket, cheered those present with the evidence they were able to give from personal observation of the work of God among the lads. Some have been won for Christ, both at Newmarket and Chantilly, and the large numbers that gather on a Sunday afternoon for Mr. Walton's Bible class are a cause of much encouragement.

Mr. MILTON HORNER, treasurer, described how God had answered prayer in making provision for the needs of the Mission during the past year, and appealed for the funds that are required for present and future wants. Office of the Mission, 26, Paternoster Square, E.C.

Gibraltar.—Sir George White, the Governor of Gibraltar, opened an institute for soldiers and sailors on November 23. Expressions of admiration were heard on all sides as to the adaptability of the building, and the spaciousness of its rooms, &c.

The Guardian Angel.

AN ALLEGORY: By G. Blake.

ONE cold frosty evening long ago, a little girl named Evangeline, who had been sent out to gather sticks, missed her way and was lost in a wood. She had wandered far and was very weary, and coming to an open space she sat down and gazed tearfully up at the sky, where the sunset reflections hung like fading banners in a Cathedral dome. As the twilight deepened, and the stars stole out, a great stillness came over everything, and cold and tired the little girl fell asleep while trying to say her evening prayer. As she slept she had a beautiful dream. She thought that while she gazed at one star, it grew brighter and brighter and seemed to open, and gradually its rays took the shape of wings bearing nearer and nearer some heavenly messenger.

More and more distinct became the vision, until, at last, an Angel, such as Evangeline had read of in her Bible and often longed to see, alighted by her side. "My child," said the bright form bending tenderly over her, "I am thy Guardian Angel, and my Master has sent me to comfort thee. Clasp thine arms around me, and I will take thee with me and show thee how little cause for fear have the little ones who trust in a heavenly Father's care." Then with soft dove-like flight they rose and rose far up into the dusky, azure dome, dotted now with myraids of jewel-like stars.

But as they drew nearer and nearer, how different looked the sky from that which Evangeline had seen from earth. Over the whole heaven was spread a lattice work, the stars themselves being the bright apertures through which gazed each Angel Guardian on its special charge.

No wonder, then, thought Evangeline, had that one star looked to her, when she was below, like a bright heavenly eye following her wanderings. The beauteous, comforting thought was then a reality; and their Angels did "always behold the face of their Father which is in heaven."

Even as the thought passed she heard from within the sound of "harpers harping with their harps," and the Angel that held her bade her listen to the song, which was borne in rythmical waves of sweet sound upon the midnight air.

Unlike any music Evangeline had ever heard, came the heavenly words to her ears, "He, watching over Israel, slumbers not nor sleeps;" and with a wondering thrill of joy she whispered to the Angel, "May I hold for one moment the harp? I would fain add my Hosanna to the temple song, as did the children of old."

"My child," said the Angel, "thou must wait a little before thou canst join the heavenly worship. Each redeemed one must learn his own song."

"Oh! tell me, then," pleaded Evangeline, "when shall I be able to sing the song of God and of the Lamb?"

"Evangeline, if thou wouldst join the perfect praise of heaven, thou must learn the prelude first below, by bringing thy heart and will into unison with the perfect will of Jesus. He only holds the key to thy heart-strings, and can tune them to His own, until they give no discordant sound. Then will He give thee the harp of glory, and out of thy mouth also He will perfect praise."

"Good Angel," pleaded Evangeline once more, "I have then but one wish. Oh, set me in my place on earth, that I may learn my lesson quickly!"

. . . . . .

Then Evangeline awoke, and found herself in her little bed at home, with her mother bending over her.

"Mother," she whispered, "how did I come here?"

"My poor little one," said her mother, "you have been very ill; your father found you in the wood where you had lain all night upon the ground, and he carried you home."

"Oh, then I have had a lovely dream!" And Evangeline told her mother of the Angelic Watcher; and all through the weeks of pain and suffering that followed, she strove to sing the praise of God with a well tuned heart, until He called her to join the multitude that no man can number, who come out of great tribulation, and sing: "Salvation to our God, which sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb" (Rev. vii. 10.)

Annie and Wilfrid Bullough, Ruth Harris, Queenie Francies.—I am glad to welcome you among my "nephews and nieces." You are too late to take part in the competition this term; I trust you will be successful next term.

Violet Davidson, Edward Newell.—You may remain in the old division if you wish, but you must compete in the new division.

Charles Groves.—If you wish you may study beforehand from "helps" outside the Bible, but the questions will not include any of these. You must then use your Bible only.

Mary Bentley.—You have been correct so far ten times.

Mildred Long.—Your answers to question 6 (407) were incorrect. Edith Smyth.—In 407, question 6 was incorrectly answered, and in 408, question 9; also you gave no age. Kathleen Hobbs, Faith Luckock.—Your answers to question 6 (407) were incorrect, and in 408 you gave a wrong answer to question 3. Guthrie Larwill.—In 408, question 5 was wrong. Willie, Charlie, and Nessie Cooper.—In 408, question 4 was wrong. Gertrude Jones, Mabel Clarke.—Your answers were incomplete (410).

A Cure for Worry (Psa. xxxvii. 1-11; 34-37).

THIS Psalm breathes the spirit of the most glorious optimism. It reminds one of some noble words of one of the great social workers of the end of the last century: "Lies and oppression, whether they are throned by false religions in heavenly places, or seated by usurpation in the high places of the earth, are cursed and doomed—the cries of the weak and suffering are stronger than they are." Young brothers and sisters, this is my invincible belief. I am sure that ultimately Christ will conquer. As He was the first, so He will be the last; as the Beginning, so the End. Only so can He reap of the travail of His soul and be satisfied. Therefore vv. 1, 2, 34-37 are true universally. There is a worm at the root of the rank gourd, an axe at the foot of the upas-tree.

Therefore, says the Psalmist, Do not fret (1, 7, 8,). Evil is so transient, evil-doers shall be cut off, in a little while the wicked shall not be. It is not worth while to lose your peace of mind. You will not remove the evils of the world by all your anxiety, by losing your temper, or by wrath. Be quiet in your heart, full of prayer, looking up to God that He would interpose to deliver. There is an inevitable justice in the world, which will give every man his due. In the meanwhile God keeps watch over His own. Those that wait on Him shall inherit the land, and the meek shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. We often are tempted to retaliate, to give blow for blow, sneer for sneer, whereas if we can be quiet, and hand over our cause to God, He will care for our interests. Don't fret, but trust.

Here are three excellent preservatives of the inward tranquillity of the soul when face to face with high-handed wrong—Trust in the Lord (3), Delight in the Lord (4), Commit thy way unto the Lord (5), Rest in the Lord (7).

Trust in the Lord (3). Reckon on Him. He would never have placed you in your present circumstances to mock you, and you may be sure that He can see the way out. Expect great things from your Almighty Guide and Friend. He cannot fail.

Delight in the Lord (4). If your life twines about earthly things, as the hops to their pole, of course you will be at the mercy of externals. Every storm that threatens the hop-pole threatens to bring the climbing plant to the ground. No, let your desires go out towards God. Take pleasure in Him. Think His thoughts. Familiarise yourself with His way of thinking and looking at things. If this is the bent of your life, you will lose your taste for things of the earth, while you will have great desires for the things of eternity, and God will give you a perfect satisfaction of these, because He will give you Himself. The petitions of the heart (R.V. marg.) are very sacred to God, and He never, never forgets them. As soon as ever He can He will meet them, albeit that they are largely unspoken. "He shall give thee the petitions of thine heart."

Commit thy way unto the Lord (5). The margin suggests Roll. It is not enough to roll the responsibility of selecting our way on God in the great crises of life. We must do so in the small decisions of every hour. Our lives are made up of trifles. To neglect these is to leave it to drift at haphazard. Perpetually we need to look up to our Heavenly Friend, saying, "I cannot see over the hedge to catch a view of the lie of the country, I must leave with Thee the decision whether I should go this way or that."

Rest in the Lord (7). "Be still before (Heb. silent to) the Lord" (R.V.). There is so much clamour in the world, and often our heart becomes filled with clamour, so much so that we cannot hear the still small voice. Every voice must die down into silence, and we shall hear the voice of God telling us of things which will answer our questionings and still our doubts. Let your requests be made known unto God, and the peace of God shall sentinel your heart against all intruders. F. B. M.

The Birth of Christ (Matt. ii. 1-12).

PROPHECIES. The Psalms of David had been sung by the Levites, taught by the Rabbi (Deut. vi. 7), learned by the boys and girls of Israel for a thousand years. Strangers from Egypt, Arabia, India, Persia, and other lands had caught the news of a coming "king of Glory" (xxiv. 7-10), the "Redeemer" to whom "the kings of Sheba shall offer gifts" (lxxii. 10). The "First-born, higher than the kings of earth" (lxxxix. 27), whose feet and hands should be pierced, and His garments parted among them, and on whose vesture lots would be cast (xxii. 1, 16, 18). Solomon had written of the "Rose of Sharon," and the "Lily of the Valley," whose "Name is as ointment poured forth" (Sol. Song ii. 1; v. 10). Before Balaam spoke his wonderful vision (Num. xxiv. 17), while Israel was still in the land of Egypt, Job had written, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand upon the earth" (xix. 25). Isaiah spoke of the "Rod" and the "Branch" from "the stem of Jesse" (xi. 10), and the Ensign, the rallying Standard of the Gentiles (Luke ii. 32). Of a "child born," a "Son given," the "Prince of peace" (ix. 6). "Immanuel," the "Man of Sorrows" (liii. 3). Jeremiah, of "Jehovah Tzidkenu" (xxxiii. 14), the righteous Branch." Daniel spoke of "Messiah, the Prince," who should be "cut off, but not for Himself" (ix. 25, 26). Zechariah, of the "Fountain opened," the "Shepherd smitten," "my God shall come and all the saints with Him," "His feet shall stand on the Mount of Olives," "King over all the earth" (xiii. 1; xiv. 4, 5, 9). Simeon and Anna had read Malachi (iii. 1), and they waited in the Temple for the "Messenger of the Covenant," and the "Sun of Righteousness" (iv. 2) arose upon them, even as the star appeared to the wise men in the East, and guided them to the town of which Micah had spoken (v. 2.)

"Jesus was Born in Bethlehem."

"The Prince of Life" (Acts iii. 15).
"The Son of God" (Heb. i, 2).
"The King of Saints" (Rev. xv. 3, 4).
"Among you" (margin) (Luke xvii. 21).
"Whom ye know not" (John i. 26).
Jesus spoke of His Kingdom (John xviii. 36).
Is crowned now (Heb. ii. 9).
"Many crowns" (Rev. xix. 12).
"King of kings" (Rev. xvii. 14).

"Born King of the Jews."

Son of the King of Israel, "Jehovah of hosts" (1 Sam. xii. 12; Zech. xiii. 7).
Rejected (1 Sam. viii. 7, with John xix. 14, 15).
Robed and crowned in mockery (John xix. 1, 2).
Crucified under the title (John xix. 19, 22).
Acknowledged (v. 11).
Proclaimed (John xii. 13).
Waited for (Luke ii. 25).
"Before Abraham was I am" (John viii. 58).
"In the bosom of the Father" (John i. 18).
"A greater than Solomon" (Matt. xii. 42).
Will be acknowledged (Rev. i. 7).

Who was Herod the Great?

An Idumean placed on the throne of Judea by Pompey nearly forty years before. He built many notable public works; but the Jews never became reconciled to having a foreign ruler. He was shrewd, unscrupulous, and cruel. Murdered a wife and three sons for fear of a rival. Hated and feared (v. 3). Character, pride, jealousy, hatred, murder, hidden under-craft, intrigue, lies, and hypocracy. No wonder (v. 16). He used the Scriptures for his own evil purposes, not for salvation (v. 12). Did he think he could contend with the Almighty? (Job xxxvii. 22-24; xxxviii. 4-7).

Special Points.

1. Searchers for Jesus. The Queen of Sheba travelled 1,500 miles to hear from Solomon for herself "concerning the name of the Lord." The Wise Men came from Persia or beyond. Heathen tribes to-day will travel hundreds of miles to hear of Jesus. None were disappointed. As surely as the Scriptures are, the star guided the wise men into the presence of the young King. So will the Holy Spirit by the Word of God guide you into the presence of Him who is called Jesus, because he shall save you from your sins (Matt. i. 21).

2. What do you give to Jesus, what give up for Him? Read 2 Chron. ix. 12 and ask—"What did Jesus give up for me?" (Phil. ii. 6-9). "What did He give for you?" (1 Pet. i. 18-20). "What does he give you in return for your trust and love?" (John xv. 7; xvii. 22-26).

3. Jesus is not always found where the seeker looks for Him (vv. 1-5). If a companion is seeking the Saviour, will he come to you, knowing you will be sure to help him, because Jesus reigns King in your heart and life? (Matt. v. 19).

4. What birthday gift can I offer to Jesus, and whom can I invite to meet Him this Christmas? My own brother (John i. 41). My sister (John xi. 28). My friend (John i. 45). My master (2 Kings v. 3.) My friends and relatives (Acts x. 24). My acquaintances (Jonn iv. 29-39). My work-people (Acts xvi. 13, 14). My fellow-prisoner (Philemon 10.). My work-fellows (Luke v. 27-32).

A Christ-mass is a feast with Jesus. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear My voice and open to Me, I will come in to him, and sup with him, and he with Me."

A present for the king.

IT was recently recorded that two natives of Bethlehem were found wandering about the streets of London. They had come all the way from their native place to present to "The Great White King" a beautiful specimen of their workmanship, a representation of "The Last Supper," carved in mother-of-pearl. The bewildered natives knew not how to approach the King, and were grateful at an introduction to the proper department. Eventually His Majesty was reached, and he expressed his pleasure at accepting the offering of the Easterns. Such a mission reminds one of the wise men who came from the East to Jerusalem, saying, "Where is He that is born King of the Jews?" (1, 2). We also may come to the Lord with our gifts of love and devotion, and He will be more willing than any earthly king to accept them.

Kneeling down to Christ.

On one occasion Charles Lamb gave a dinner to a number of his literary friends. They were afterwards discussing various topics, and the question arose as to the attitude they would adopt if certain notable men of the past were to appear in their midst. Charles Lamb is said to have remarked, "If Shakespeare were to enter the room I should rise up to greet him; but if Christ entered the room I should kneel down and keep silent." So was it with the wise men from the east. "When they were come into the house they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshipped him" (11). That is the proper attitude for us all if we would approach the Saviour. His name is above every name, and He is worthy of all homage and adoration.

Giving him our treasures.

Dr. Cuyler relates that he once called on a rich merchant of New York, and on leaving, remarked on the bitterness of the night. His wealthy friend thereupon handed Dr. Cuyler a roll of bank bills, and asked him to pass them on to the poorest people he could find. The good doctor afterwards wrote expressing the grateful thanks of the poor he had been able to relieve, and added: "How is that a man so kind to his fellow-creatures has always been so unkind to his Saviour as to refuse Him admission to his heart?" The letter affected the rich merchant, and resulted in his conversion and consecration to God's service. Many of us have treasures of some description which we may lay at the feet of Jesus. We, too, often devote our talents and possessions to concerns apart from the Saviour, forgetting that He has the first claim on all we are and all we have.

Personalia.

Mr. Newton Jones, the Sunday-school Union evangelist, has a few open dates for missions. His usual plan for week-nights is to have a meeting at 6.30 for boys and girls, and one at 8 p.m. for adults. Applications for Mr. Jones' services should be addressed to Mr. Stephen Bailey, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

Many will hear with sorrow that Mr. S. Arumugam, of the Dravidian Mission, is lying at Southport seriously ill. He has been compelled to cancel immediate engagements for addressing meetings in the interests of his mission, and will value the prayers of friends on behalf of his work.

Rev. J. C. Lawson, of the Industrial Evangelistic Mission of Northern India, is making a brief stay in this country on his way back to India. He will be glad of opportunities for representing the work of his mission to gatherings of friends interested in his great family of famine orphans. His address is: Care of Mrs. Wm. Lawson, West Burton, Aysgarth, Yorkshire.

Philippine Islands.—Mrs. Jansen writes in grateful terms of the contributions sent by our readers for the purchase of Scriptures. Missionaries scattered over the islands are much cheered by such help, where it is greatly needed. The work is carried on under great difficulties. A good-sized launch or Gospel ship is much required; but, above all these, the workers, the support of home Christians in prayer before the Throne.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

THE EVANGELISTS IN SCOTLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

To Backsliders.

A LETTER FROM DR. TORREY.

DEAR FRIENDS,—Everywhere we go we find a good many persons who tell us that they were once Christians, but that they have gone back into the world. I am persuaded that many of these never were truly Christians. They have gone forward in mission services, or united with the church, or done something of that sort, but have never really fully accepted Christ; then having made a failure of their first attempt they hesitate to make another. This hesitation is unreasonable. The fact that one has attempted to do a thing, and done it in the wrong way, is no reason for not doing it in the right way. If people would begin the Christian life right they would not be so likely to go back, and if they have begun it wrong they had better begin it over again in the better way. The right way to begin is:—

First. To accept Christ as Saviour. That is to believe God's testimony concerning Him, that He bore all our sins in His own body on the cross; and to trust God to forgive us, not because of anything that we have done, but because of what Christ did when He made full atonement for our sins in His own body on the cross (1 Peter ii. 24; Gal. iii. 13).

Second. To accept Jesus Christ as our Lord and King (Acts ii. 36.) This involves the utter surrender of our thoughts to Him to teach, and of our lives to Him to govern. We must put ourselves completely at His disposal. We must not only sing with our lips, but make it a fact in our lives that "we surrender all." I am confident that this lack of absolute surrender at the time of starting the Christian life is the cause of a large measure of the backsliding.

Third. To accept Christ as the risen Son of God, who has all power in heaven and on earth, and to trust Him to keep us day by day from falling, and from all the power of sin and temptation (Matt. xxviii. 18; Heb. vii. 25; Jude 24).

Having begun right, most of the battle is won; but we must go on right. In order to go on right four things especially are necessary:—

(1) That we feed our spiritual life daily upon the Word of God (1 Peter ii. 2). We can no more live spiritually without spiritual food than we can live physically without physical food. Neglect of the daily study of the Word of God is a cause of much backsliding.

(2) That we take plenty of time for prayer each day. It is by waiting upon the Lord daily that we renew our strength (Isa. xl. 31). No matter how great a blessing one may have received at conversion, no matter though they have been definitely baptized with the Holy Spirit, they need to be filled anew each day in order to meet the emergencies of that day. New fillings with the Spirit come in answer to prayer (Luke xi. 13; Acts. iv. 31).

(3) That we confess Christ openly before the world whenever we get an opportunity. Neglect of confession of Christ is one of the frequent causes of backsliding. I have talked with many backsliders, and I have rarely found one who, when I put to them the question, "Did you keep up a public confession of Christ?" could answer yes.

(4) That we go to work to bring others to Christ, and keep working. The more we work to bring others to Christ, the stronger we grow in Christ.

Continuance in the Christian life is not at all a question of our strength but of Christ's. If you have begun the Christian life once and failed, begin it again and succeed. Many of the strongest Christians to-day are those who were once backsliders. The Apostle Peter himself was once a backslider, but after Pentecost he was one of the mightiest servants of Christ that the world ever saw. Pentecost is possible for you. No one can be more miserable than the backslider. Jeremiah was certainly right when he said to backsliding Israel, "It is an evil thing and a bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God." The one who forsakes Christ forsakes the fountain of living waters, and hews himself out cisterns, broken cisterns that can hold no water (Jeremiah ii. 13). Leave the broken cisterns of the world and come back to Christ, the Fountain of living water.—Sincerely yours, R. A. Torrey.

Good Work in Scottish Towns.

Fresh from their month's work in Manchester, Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander arrived in Dumfries on Tuesday afternoon, and were met at the station by several local ministers and Christian workers, with Mr. William M. Oatts, who had gone from Glasgow in order to arouse interest in the mission by holding services on the previous Sunday. Rev. R. Stevenson (of Gargunnock) had also paid a visit for the same purpose on an earlier week.

No time was lost between the time of arrival and the commencement of the first meeting, for within one and a half hours a great meeting was in progress in the large Drill Hall, where some 2,000 people had assembled. A choir of 200 voices had been specially organised by Mr. Muir, and all the members were present at this first meeting, which assisted very materially in the success of the meeting. Coming direct from the immense gatherings of the enthusiastic Lancashire people, it seemed rather strange to face the stolid, cautious Scotch audience; but Dr. Torrey very soon warmed up to his subject, and aroused the interest of his hearers to a marked degree. He spoke from the words, "Ye have not, because ye ask not." This address produced a profound impression. In the evening fully half an hour before the advertised time for the commencement, the choir had been singing many of the favourite Alexander "Revival Hymns," and by eight o'clock the hall was filled. Dr. Torrey took for his subject, "What it costs not to be a Christian," and at the close a number responded to his invitation to accept Christ.

On Wednesday, at the afternoon meeting, the doctor delivered a very powerful address on "Soul-winning." A fall of snow did not in any way militate against the attendance in the evening, for, besides the large number of Dumfries people who attended, parties came in from surrounding districts. At the conclusion of Dr. Torrey's address several anxious souls were dealt with, and confessed Jesus Christ as Lord. Although the results for this two days' Mission have not been large, they have been far-reaching.

A very interesting incident occurred at the close of the Wednesday evening meeting. As Mr. Oatts and one of the local ministers were leaving the hall at about ten o'clock, they passed a group of young men. One of the group asked Mr. Oatts to speak to his companions, with the result that no less than eleven young men made a definite decision for Christ. Truly this was worth going to Dumfries for, and should cause the hearts of all to rejoice.

RIPE FOR A VISITATION OF GOD'S POWER.

The missioners next went on to Ayr, where great preparations had been made for the two days' campaign. For a week united prayer meetings were held, at which numbers of earnest Christians gathered together and pleaded for an outpouring of the Spirit of God. The mission services were held in Dr. McCrie's church, which was packed to the doors at most of the services. On Thursday afternoon, Dr. Torrey delivered an address on "Prayer," and in the evening, at the close of his address, nearly a score of people stood up and accepted Jesus Christ.

On Friday, the first meeting for the day was held at 3.30, when a large company assembled. Following this a meeting was held for children, attended by several hundred, who listened attentively to Dr. Torrey's sermon on "What a child can do." At the conclusion of the address many of the young people went into the inquiry room, where they were dealt with.

In the evening, the final meeting attracted a large crowd, and proved to be most inspiring. The address on "Why tarriest thou?" made a deep impression, and at its close many came to the front seats, thereby signifying their acceptance of Jesus Christ. After addressing these converts, Dr. Torrey urged God's people to give themselves to prayer for a revival in all the churches. He said that he was fully convinced that Ayr was ripe for a visitation of God's power. He exhorted the church members to uphold their ministers and pray them into power.

PRAYER AND EXPECTATION.

After a well-earned rest the evangelists arrived in Kilmarnock on Saturday evening, and on Sabbath morning held their first meeting. This was for Christian workers, and was held in the Corn Exchange at 9.30. A goodly company of several hundreds received much help and blessing from the practical address Dr. Torrey gave on "Personal Work." It was evident that great preparation by prayer had been made for the meetings, and one and all were full of great expectation for a time of power and blessing. At 5 p.m. a meeting for women only was announced, but such was the crowd that fully half an hour before the time the Corn Exchange was packed with an audience of some 1,200, which overflowed to the adjoining Art Gallery, filling that building also to excess with some 600 women. A choir of sixty voices aided the singing in the Exchange considerably, and made easy a task which otherwise would have been very heavy for Mr. Alexander.

Dr. Torrey preached powerfully on "What it costs not to be a follower of Jesus Christ," and in response to his invitation a large number announced their acceptance of Christ. Mr. Wm. M. Oatts ably conducted the large overflow meeting, and had the joy of seeing many definitely take their stand on the side of Christ.

No sooner was the women's meeting over than the Exchange was immediately crowded with men. This meeting was commenced thirty-five minutes before time, and proved to be one of great power. With great heartiness the men sang "There's not a friend like the lowly Jesus," then gently glided into that familiar favourite, "Sun of my Soul," until they were calm and quiet and ready for the doctor's discourse. With what eagerness did they drink in the penetrating words that fell from the lips of the speaker, as he spoke on "The Cost of a Christless Life." Then when Mr. Alexander sang that song of decision, "Tell mother I'll be there," many a head was bowed and many a heart touched. God's Spirit was working in the meeting, for, at its close, twenty-eight men and boys came forward and publicly confessed their allegiance to King Jesus.

After some words of counsel and advice from Dr. Torrey, Mr. Alexander spoke briefly to the converts, exhorting them to be steadfast in the faith. He asked one and another what had led them to decision. One man said that the singing of "I surrender all" had been the means of reclaiming him. He had been a backslider for many years, but he thanked God that through that hymn he had been led to think on the error of his ways, and to come out boldly on the side of Christ. The meeting closed with the benediction.

Prayer in the Manchester Choir.

It is not surprising to hear of the blessing which followed the singing at Manchester, when one learns of the movement which was early initiated among the members of the great choir of 1,200 singers. Soon after the beginning of the Mission the following letter was circulated among the choristers, and met with a most sympathetic response. Its publication may suggest a similar idea at other centres:—

Some of us are very grieved to find that there is a great mass of indifference to the love of Christ abroad in the choir. On Wednesday night our singing was very poor indeed, and it was felt to be through lack of spirituality.

We have felt the deadening influence of that lack while singing, and some of us have had it laid upon our hearts very specially to start a little informal prayer movement among the members of the choir. I wondered if you would join with us—in spirit—at ten o'clock every morning to pray:—

1. That every member of the choir who has experienced the power of the Holy Spirit in his or her life may receive a fresh outpouring, and be a clean channel for the constraining love of Christ to flow through to those around.

2. That every member of the choir who has not given his or her heart to the Lord may specially be led to do so, and then receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

3. That every member of the choir that does not know the power of the Holy Spirit in his or her life may be led to ask for and receive the baptism during the next few days.

4. That Dr. Torrey, Mr. Alexander, and Mr. Harkness may be kept in perfect health and strength; that the voices of the two former may be kept clear and strong, and that they all may receive a very great blessing while with us.

5. That every member of the choir may have it laid on his and her heart to pray earnestly during the solos, that the invitation the soloists give in Christ's name may be given with irresistible power and sweetness; and that every member may offer up a special prayer for power and strength before each hymn that is sung by the choir.

6. That the love of Christ and the hunger for souls may come upon the choir in such mighty power during the next few days that the seats may be filled with men and women "endued with power from on high," who will sing every word from their hearts, and so constrain the people to come to Christ that they cannot resist the invitation.

If you should know of any others who would be glad to join with us, will you kindly pass on the "headings" and the time, as we want to make this little movement as far-reaching as we can in as short a time as possible? It—the movement—is quite informal, no names and no written consent are asked for. It was felt that a united effort of prayer would add power to our moment by moment ones for a "united consecrated choir."

SINGING WITH DOUBLE POWER.

A lady rose in an afternoon meeting and said, "There were 150 of us came from Didsbury to the evening meeting. Going home in the train, we were singing 'The Glory Song' so heartily that a man said, 'It sounded more like 300 people singing than 150.'" Another young lady from Birkenhead said she heard "The Glory Song" at the mission in Birkenhead. "We sang it afterwards in our own home meeting," she said, "and so great was its influence that thirty-six people got up and wanted to surrender their lives fully to God."

Incidents of the Missions.

"IT'S JUST LIKE HIM."

A Manchester friend writes: "A little child five years old has been attending and hearing the hymns, among others, 'It's just like Him to take our sins away.' His mother was speaking to him yesterday morning about the Bible and the Old Testament sacrifices, and then said that the blood of bulls and goats was of no account with God and that Jesus was the sacrifice. He said, 'Yes, mother, Jesus was the sacrifice, and "It's just like Him to take our sins away."'"

THE DOCKMEN SINGING.

As a proof of how the tune of a hymn lingers in the memory, a friend says that a city missionary at Liverpool was down at the docks and heard the bargemen singing, "The Old Time Religion." He shouted out to them, "Is it real to you?" and back came a chorus of answers, "Aye, aye, sir!" Later on he heard another man whistling the tune which has laid hold of the men working on the banks of the Mersey. He went home thanking God for the Torrey-Alexander Mission in Liverpool which has left such happy memories.

WHAT HINDERS A REVIVAL.

An experienced worker writes: "The disastrous effect of unbelief in the Bible, and the saturating of the people with the idea of 'a larger hope' or 'another chance'—all these things have had great influence in determining the kind of people we reached in the Torrey-Alexander Mission. The difficulty of getting a breakdown among men of ripe years and the cold antipathy of many make one very sad."

MINISTERS HELPED.

One of the happiest features of the Manchester mission has been the acknowledged help given to many of the clergy. The definite note of authority in Dr. Torrey's addresses, and the constant witness of the Spirit's power, have raised the faith of many Christian workers. The uncompromising words uttered to the gathering of ministers made a deep impression on several of them. Dr. Torrey always shrinks from appearing to censure his brethren in the ministry, but he is wonderfully guided to speak definitely about some of the hindrances to the Spirit using men for His work.

BAPTIZED, CONFIRMED, BUT NOT CONVERTED.

A lady at Liverpool writes to Dr. Torrey: "When you told the Christians to speak to the person next to them, I lifted up my heart to God for power. I turned to a young lady next to me, and asked her if she was a Christian. She could not answer me at first, and then she told me she had been baptized and confirmed at the cathedral where she attended. I asked her if she had been converted, and she said she had never heard of conversion in the Church of England—it was only for chapel people. I saw a Church of England clergyman coming down the hall, so I asked him to speak to her. He explained to her Isaiah liii., and after he had prayed with her she said she would trust in Jesus to save her. When I saw her happy face I was glad I had not let the opportunity pass."

AN IMPORTUNATE STEWARD.

The value of importunity in Christian work has been often proved. One who was converted at Liverpool writes to say that it was only after one of the stewards had asked her for the third time to give her heart to God that she surrendered to Him. "Thank God I came home at last," she says. "He did not in His mercy close the door. He was waiting with open arms to receive me, and I have felt happy ever since. He will do the same for others if they will only come to Him. Soon afterwards I and a friend were sitting next to a young lady who had not been converted, and we tried our best to get her to come to God, but she would not. My friend gave her one of the cards with 'Get right with God,' but she crumpled it up and threw it on the floor. May the words pursue her until she surrenders her heart to the Master."

THE GLORY SONG.

In Liverpool a poor blind man was singing the "Glory Song" on the street, and a crowd gathered round and joined with him in the singing. Several young ladies who were passing, and who had received much blessing in the late mission, could not refrain from joining with the others.

HER MOTHER'S BIBLE.

A Liverpool convert writes: "The week before last I was one day thinking about my Bible being very small, and I happened to say aloud, 'I do wish somebody would give me a Bible for a present.' The same evening I was going out to my brother's house, and on the way the car passed the street where another brother lives. Something told me to go and call on him, and on the moment I got off and went. I began to say to them that I had learned to love Christ, and my sister-in-law began to cry and said she would like to do the same. I told her your tale, and do you know, she said she had my mother's Bible upstairs among her treasures. She brought it down and gave it to me. That is the only thing I possess of my mother's, and she has been dead eleven years. I know God took me there to get it, and I will trust Him more and more every day."

COULD NOT GIVE UP DANCING.

A Manchester friend received a beautiful letter from a young woman who had previously said she could not become a Christian because she could not give up dancing. "I now write these lines telling you I have accepted Christ as my Saviour and my God. I surrender all to Him to keep me day by day, trusting Him that I may have no longing for the world again. Oh, how different I feel now. I have got something better, for I can say 'I am a child of a King.' Dr. Torrey's sermon touched me that night, but still after they had spoken to me I could not give up my heart to Christ. That hymn kept ringing in my ears—'Are you ready for the judgment day?' When Dr. Torrey gave out on Monday 'Those who have taken Christ to-night, stand up,' I longed to do so, but I had not taken Him as my Saviour. Now I can stand brave for Christ, but I could not then. I can sing now, 'I surrender all.'"

ECHOES FROM DR. TORREY.

It is good to be honest, but it is safe to be sure.

What the whole world is hungering for is the pure Word of God.

The first purpose of the ministry is to seek and to save the lost.

Out of Christ man is a mere caricature of what God meant him to be.

You cannot have peace down in the depths of your soul unless you take Jesus Christ.

One of the most important functions of ministers is to train and perfect the saints for service.

The minister who is not seeking and saving the lost is a failure so far as his ministry is concerned.

You don't know what real happiness and sunshine are unless you have the love of Christ in your heart.

A real Christian who is out-and-out for Christ has joy unspeakable and full of glory, and no one else has.

If you want the deepest, highest, purest, and most unspeakable joy on earth, take Jesus Christ this very moment.

Just as surely as you receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost will you receive power for service in that sphere to which God has called you.

By a Christian I understand anyone who comes to Christ as a lost sinner, surrendering his will to Him, and confessing Him before the world.

To be a real Christian you should be ready to go anywhere God wants you to go, do anything He wants you to do, and be anything He wants you to be.

If a minister engages himself in every social function and philanthropic movement to which men invite him, he will leave himself no time for the work God wants him to do.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Gipsy Smith at Highbury Quadrant.

HIGHBURY Quadrant Congregational Church, of which Rev. W. J. Dawson is minister, is one of the largest churches in London, capable of accommodating 2,000 people, but few people would consider it the ideal church for a great mission. It lies off the main roads, it is not easily found, and is immediately surrounded by the residences of the well-to-do and the wealthy. Nevertheless, it has been the scene of one of the most successful missions ever held in London.

In nine days over 20,000 people have passed through its doors, and between 600 and 700 persons have entered the inquiry rooms. On the Sunday evenings thousands of people have been turned away. How have these good results been attained? In the first place, by most earnest spiritual preparation on the part of the minister and his people. For many weeks special prayer-meetings had been held, and meetings arranged for the instruction of those who worked in the inquiry rooms. Gipsy Smith declared at the last meeting that no one had ever stood by him with more loyalty than Mr. Dawson. So far from the church proving unsuited for a mission, it has proved admirably suited, as Mr. Dawson always declared it was. It is the focus for large districts such as Finsbury Park, Islington, Canonbury, and Stoke Newington, standing at a point where three districts meet. If the houses of the wealthy surround the church, a very poor population are its neighbours. Thus the congregations assembled have been representative of all classes. In the same inquiry room have been found cultured young people of good families, working men, drunkards, men of criminal lives, and the dregs of the streets.

One of the most remarkable gatherings ever seen in any church was the midnight meeting. It was a wonderful audience; the "people of the abyss," indeed; many in drink, many in rags, but orderly and earnest. They sang the hymns as though they knew them, listened to the addresses of Gipsy Smith and Mr. Dawson with intense interest, and many came into the inquiry room. The Sunday afternoon meeting for men only was not less memorable. Again the church was filled with men ranging from the top-hatted youth of immaculate appearance to the man just out of gaol. Throughout the mission, in spite of a severe cold, Gipsy Smith was at his best. His humour, his pathos, his intense earnestness, his unique power of direct appeal had full play. It is impossible to estimate the good done. The 600 people who entered the inquiry-rooms did not represent by any means the positive effects of the mission; quite as many stood up in the services, in token of surrender to Christ, who did not come to the inquiry room. And, besides this, there can be no doubt that hundreds of church workers have been quickened and stimulated, and that the whole neighbourhood has been profoundly moved.

Two practical results of the mission may be noted. One is the establishment of a meeting for men only on the last Sunday afternoon of each month. Another is a people's evangelistic service every Thursday at eight o'clock, conducted by Mr. Dawson. The Quadrant Church is fully alive to its opportunity as an evangelistic centre. Mr. Dawson told the people with great emphasis that the work must not stop, and the workers would not be disbanded. Gipsy Smith, in his closing address, promised to come back again in a month or two to see how things were moving. Much is expected from the Thursday services, and those who have worked all through the mission believe that the week's services may and should be the starting point of a great revival, which may touch the whole of North London.

Mr. W. R. Lane at "Spurgeon's."

An evangelistic mission has just been conducted at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, S.E., by Mr. W. R. Lane, November 22-30. For some weeks previously a great number of friends devoted themselves to preparation for the work. The districts around the Tabernacle were visited by a band of men and women, and the people were invited and urged again and again to come to the services. During the week before the mission largely-attended prayer meetings were held, conducted by Pastor T. Spurgeon and Pastor C. B. Sawday, at which brief addresses, admirably to the point, were given by neighbouring ministers. We felt and recognised that "this kind goeth not forth but by prayer."

When Mr. Lane commenced on the Sunday night he found pastors and people full of confidence that the Lord would work, and that the slain of the Lord would be many. The congregations in the Tabernacle throughout the mission were most encouraging, both by their size and the evident interest of the people. Not a few were drawn in from the homes around the Tabernacle. On the Friday night a great crowd assembled to hear Mr. Lane's lecture on the "Pilgrim's Progress," illustrated by magnificent dissolving views, and also on the last night of the mission, when Mr. Lane was expected to tell the story of his conversion, "From the Gambling-table to the Mercy Seat." But his voice had failed him after the arduous labours of the Sabbath, and Brethren Harrison and William Olney, who, in the providence of God, were in the meeting, thrilled the audience by telling of the way in which they were brought from darkness into light. Two other meetings call for special mention. On the first Sunday afternoon the senior scholars from several of our schools, and the young men and maidens from the Bible-classes, joined the congregation in the Tabernacle.

On the second Sunday afternoon, "Men only" were invited to listen to a "straight talk." Ten thousand special invitations had been carefully distributed, and the workers were rewarded by a splendid attendance, mostly of young men, who listened breathlessly to solemn words uttered in manly, pleading tones, against gambling, intemperance, and especially against impurity.

In response to the appeals to come out for the Lord Jesus, nearly 200 have given in their names, expressing their confidence that God for Christ's sake has forgiven their sins.

The Pastors and officers of the church and schools, and all helping in the mission, praise God that our dear friend Mr. Lane has come among us.

Our hearts were gladdened night after night during the mission by the good news from the Pastor's home that Mrs. Thos. Spurgeon was slowly but surely recovering. She is now, we believe, out of danger, and will, we hope, be among us again ere long.

C. B. S.

Mr. Henry Varley in Germany.

Praise the Lord with us for already giving great blessing to Mr. Henry Varley in his mission! From day to day the interest and numbers increased; for this first week of the mission we have concentrated our efforts in Charlottenburg, and friends from all parts of Berlin have come to hear the message of truth and life.

On December 1 we had a special meeting with a good number of the Free Church ministers, who were deeply interested, several coming regularly to the services. On December 3 we had a special gathering, for those who spoke or understood English, of different sections of the Church of Christ, at the house of Miss von Blucher. Other meetings include one for students from the University, and for this we desire prayer. The Lord is with us, and His power is being realized among us.

Julius Rohrbach.

Mr. Frank Weaver at Lichfield.

On November 27, Mr. Frank Weaver concluded a twelve days' mission of much power and earnestness at Lichfield, where nightly increasing numbers gathered to listen to soul-stirring addresses. On Sunday, the 22nd, the missioner spoke to a crowded audience at St. James's Hall at the P.S.A. meeting, where many were impressed by his address on "Going Down." During the first week he gave Gospel addresses, and appealed to all to be "out-and-out" for the Master. He was especially outspoken on the "drink" question, much more so than "Brewery city" people are accustomed to; and doubtless his remarks struck home in some quarters.

The last five nights were devoted to special subjects likely to attract the working-classes, among which the "Life Story and Conversion of Bendigo," and the "Story of my Father's Life" stood out prominently.

Many professed to give themselves to God, while others were awakened to their state of unsafety, and the workers were much blessed and strengthened.

A. E.

Rev. James Lyall in Colombo.

Mr. Lyall's mission closed with a converts' meeting in the Baptist Church, Cinnamon Gardens. During the month over which the mission has spread we have had continuous blessing, and the results exceed our highest expectation. Mr. Lyall conducted twenty-six Evangelistic evening services, and held twenty-five morning services for Bible studies. He preached each Sunday morning in one of the city churches, and in addition took a service in the Military Theatre, where he had a large gathering of soldiers, visited the City College, the Colombo Industrial, the Wolfendahl Sunday School, and other places.

Night after night immense crowds filled the Public Hall, the Racquet Court Theatre, or the Wolfendahl Church. Wet nights, dirty roads, and attractions in the city had little effect on the audiences. It was found in the converts' meeting that 411 persons had signed the card which Mr. Lyall uses in his mission. Nearly all the ministers of the city, and many other workers, have given invaluable help.

Robert Tebb.

Mr. George Clarke at Weston-super-Mare.

Under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. a very encouraging mission was conducted during the first three weeks in November at Weston-super-Mare by Mr. George Clarke. In the afternoons Bible readings were given, and in the evenings mission services were held. The Victoria Hall, which contains 1,200 seats, was on every occasion crowded by attentive and deeply interested hearers, many of whom, at the close of the address, went into the inquiry-room. Mr. Clarke is a most powerful and impressive speaker, and there can be no doubt that his appeals to the reason and the consciences, as well as the hearts, of his hearers stirred up many careless and worldly ones earnestly to seek salvation. On the afternoons and evenings of Sundays the 8th and 15th ult., meetings were held in the Pavilion, at each of which it is calculated about 3,000 people were present. It is, of course, impossible to say what will be the permanent effect of the mission. We feel that the Holy Spirit was convincing many of sin, and leading them to Jesus as their Saviour; and our earnest prayer is that they may be "strengthened, stablished, and settled." One happy result of the mission is that many Christians have been greatly stimulated. We required a stirring up, and we got it. Many of the clergy and Nonconformist ministers were present at the meetings, and supported Mr. Clarke on the platform.

D.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Maidstone.

An interesting, powerful, and fruitful mission of sixteen days has now been concluded. Maidstone people are proverbially hard to move; they furnish the best examples of Kentish stolidness. Yet they have been greatly moved throughout the whole course of the mission. In the opening meetings we said one to another, "This much exceeds our best expectations."

Mrs. Baeyertz's gifts as an evangelist are favoured by her early Jewish life and her later training. Zealous as a Jewess, upon her conversion she made the Bible her one book. We were sensible of a freshness, originality, and a practical utility which have helped thousands attending the meetings. Her voice, rich in tone and compass, expresses not only thoughts, but what is of more importance, the deep feelings which belong to the language of the heart, and gave life, fire, and reality to messages which were listened to with breathless attention by crowds attending the meetings. An early call to the inquiry room, viz., on the first Sunday evening, was responded to by numbers, and the work went on increasing in the power and sensible presence of God's Holy Spirit.

Personally, we have never heard the Gospel more impressively presented to the minds and the hearts of the people, and we were also impressed with the great practical utility of Mrs. Baeyertz's ministry as tending strongly not only to the conversion of the unsaved, but what is of first importance to righteousness of life.

Wm. Woods Smyth.

Mr. W. H. Jude, the preacher-musician, paid his third visit to Wellington Street Baptist Chapel, Luton, on Sunday and Monday of last week. There were crowded congregations at each service, who listened with spellbound interest to the beautiful songs and eventful life-story.

W. J. H.

Mr. Wm. Grove has conducted evangelistic services in the Clarence Road Baptist Chapel, Grays, Essex. The chapel has been packed each Sunday evening, and good congregations have been gathered in the week. The services have been much blessed in bringing people to decision for Christ.

Mr. Henry Collins recently held a fortnight's Gospel mission at the Memorial Buildings, Roscoe Street, St. Luke's, E.C., the home of London adult schools, and one of the largest places of worship of the Society of Friends in London. The mission was opened by a gathering of 150 workers to welcome Mr. Collins. On two Sundays he addressed the adult school members, numbering over 360 men. The attendances increased night after night, notwithstanding the inclement weather. Addresses were given on Friday evenings to young people, who gathered in large numbers, and also given to those attending the Medical Mission, where some of the poor and afflicted of the district heard of the Great Physician. At the prayer and praise meeting the hearts of the workers were filled with gratitude to God for His goodness as they saw young men and young women rise one after another to testify to the blessing they had received during the mission.

Obituary.

Mrs. Bateman, Leeuw River.

AFTER an illness of only four days, Mrs. Percy H. Bateman fell asleep on November 2 at Leeuw River, vid Bloemfontein, O.R.C. The prostration was sudden and complete. Even to her dearly loved husband of twenty-one years, she never spoke beyond saying "Thank you;" but affectionate looks testified to the desire to say farewell words. Those who knew her will share, and pray for the devoted husband in, his sorrow.

Ever "esteeming others better than herself," Mrs. Bateman's career was marked by devoted service and a generous spirit. A beautiful life was crowned by a peaceful homegoing. She knew what it was to have her love responded to on every hand. One influential friend writes, "I know of no lady in the country who was so genuinely looked up to as Mrs. Bateman. She will be missed and mourned by all."

Rev. John Ireland Jones.

News has reached this country from Ceylon of the death of Rev. J. Ireland Jones, who has passed away at Colombo in his seventieth year. To him belonged the honour of being the oldest missionary of the Church Missionary Society on active work abroad. For a period of five years he was rector of Brampton, Norfolk, and for two years served as curate of Christ Church, Chislehurst. But the greater part of his life was spent among the Singhalese, a people to whom he was warmly devoted, and with whose language he was fully acquainted.

Mrs. Henry Clapham.

Christian and philanthropic workers in Newcastle mourn the loss from their midst of Mrs. Clapham, widow of the late Mr. Henry Clapham, who has just been called to her rest. She was one of the daughters of the late Mr. Joseph Watson, of Birkenhead, and sister of Dr. Spence Watson. As the wife of one of the best known ship-owners and merchants of the city, she devoted much of her time and influence to the seeking of the spiritual and temporal benefit of her less fortunate fellows.

Mrs. Clapham was a life-long member of the Society of Friends, and as a minister of that body took an active part in the direction of its affairs. She was one of Mr. D. L. Moody's faithful friends and helpers, and organized various evangelistic missions in the city. Among many associations which claimed her warm support, were the City Mission, the Young Women's Christian Association, and the "Clapham Memorial Home."

Rev. Dr. J. Hood Wilson.

A career of singular fruitfulness in the Gospel has come to a close through the call to higher service of Rev. Dr. James Hood Wilson, Edinburgh. Born at Duns in 1829, he was educated in that town until he went to Edinburgh University, which in later years conferred on him his doctorship of divinity. Dr. Wilson's first charge was at Irvine; but after a short time there he was invited to the city with which he was identified during the remainder of his life.

Taking charge of a mission established by Free St. George's congregation in the Fountainbridge district, he found full scope for the exercise of his genius and enthusiasm for evangelistic work. As the first minister of the Barclay Free Church, he has made the name of that congregation known among aggressive workers throughout the world. Mr. D. L. Moody found in him a useful friend and coadjutor; and conductors of the mission work among the Jews could always count on his hearty support. His zeal knew no denominational limitations. He was known first of all as a leader in home mission work, but all who were earnestly seeking souls could count on him as a friend. We hope to give a fuller account of Dr. Wilson's career, with portrait, in an early issue.

Mrs. Henry Sturge, Dawlish.

An earnest Christian and a most patient sufferer has recently passed away at Dawlish in the person of Mrs. Henry Sturge, at the age of seventy-two. Mrs. Sturge was the youngest daughter of the late William Dudley and his wife (née Anne Sophia Steele). Both her father and uncle, Charles Dudley, were well-known to a former generation as most acceptable speakers on behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society. The announcement that either of the brothers was to be a deputation from the parent society was sure to draw a good audience to the local Bible meeting. Their sister Elizabeth and their mother Mary Dudley were esteemed ministers in the Society of Friends, so Mrs. Sturge came of good Quaker stock. Mrs. Sturge joined the Church of England, and also was much interested in the work of the Temperance Society at Penzance, where she was actively engaged as a district visitor, and in Rescue work. She was president of the local branch of the British Women's Temperance Association.

To one so active, the years of suffering which were her lot in later life must have been a heavy trial, but her acute pain was always patiently borne, and never prevented her thinking of some act of kindness to others. She was much beloved by all who really knew her, and her departure will leave a great blank to many. Mrs. Sturge passed peacefully away on November 21, and the earthly casket of a beautiful soul was laid to rest in Dawlish Cemetery. Mrs. Sturge leaves a family of sons and daughters to lament her loss. E. F. E.

Mr. J. J. Gurney, Newcastle.

On Thursday last at the White House, Newcastle-on-Tyne, in the fifty-eighth year of his age, Joseph John Gurney, J.P.—second son of the late Joseph Gurney, of Abingdon Street, Westminster, and Wimbledon Common—passed to be with the Lord. Mr. Gurney was educated at Leatherhead and King's College, London, and afterwards became a partner in the firm of Clarke, Chapman, and Co., at Gateshead-on-Tyne, where he married a daughter of the late Joseph Watson, and sister of Dr. R. Spence Watson, of Bensham. About twenty years ago he retired from business, and has since devoted his time and strength unceasingly to Christian and philanthropic work. His active and personal interest as a member of the Committee of the Baptist Missionary Society was as hearty as had been that of his father in the Religious Tract Society. In connection with foreign missions, he was greatly interested in geographical research, and was a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. He was also much interested in the Evangelical Alliance, the Bible Society, the Christian Police Association, and the Newcastle Town Mission, and especially in the Mission Baptist Church at Elswick, which owed much to his efforts. The Newcastle Royal Infirmary, the Children's Hospital, the Whitley Convalescent Home, the Abbott Memorial Schools, and in fact almost every local institution for the relief of the sick and suffering, and for the spread of the kingdom of Christ, could count on his ready energetic help and efficient advice in all matters of business.

To the workers in these institutions he was not only a member of committee, but a trusted and beloved personal friend, giving words of cheer and encouragement and sound advice which will be sadly missed. From his earliest boyhood his motto has practically been, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

Wherever work was to be done for his family, his city, or his church, he never spared himself. One who had worked with him for twenty-one years writes: "His energy, rectitude, and purity of character, his high ideal of duty to God, and love to all sorts and conditions of suffering humanity, were really wonderful."

Mr. Gurney's house was always open to every good cause. Many a lonely missionary abroad will remember the kindly welcome and loving sympathy extended to them by Mrs. Gurney, himself, and their only daughter, and will think and pray now for the two left behind. When the call came to him he was ready "resting solely on the merits of the One who had loved him and given Himself for him," and very calmly and peacefully he fell asleep, to awake in the presence of the Saviour he had known and loved from his boyhood. "His servants shall serve Him, and they shall see His face."

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

Sunderland.

ON Dec. 4, Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones concluded a mission in Sunderland which will long be remembered for its results in enlisting new recruits, and in stimulating Christian people to renewed and zealous efforts in the interests of Gospel temperance. The crowds that assembled in the Victoria Hall were deeply impressed, and profound conviction prevailed. In Sunderland, of course, great numbers of men are employed in various important industries, and they rallied in vast numbers to the various meetings. Dr. Henry's addresses maintained their high value throughout. Logical, vivid, and telling, they enlisted the sympathy and carried the judgment. An esteemed correspondent writes:—"During the mission there was an exceptionally large number of heavy drinkers, who not only signed the pledge, but gave themselves to God." Mr. Armon Jones sang with much acceptance.

North Berwick.

Following Sunderland came North Berwick where the missioners had a brief but effective campaign, December 5-8. The Sabbath was a day of remarkable blessing. There were large and enthusiastic audiences. In the morning Dr. Henry occupied the pulpit of Blackadder U.F. Church, and the evening meeting was held in the Foresters' Hall. Over 100 new pledges were taken, and deep spiritual impressions were made. In the afternoon, Mrs. Blaikie, the honoured president of the Scottish B.W.T.A., presided, and gave a beautiful address to a large company of women. It was Mrs. Blaikie's eightieth birthday, and she celebrated it by attending these important services. Among others who contributed largely to the success of the campaign were Revs. James Davidson (Blackadder Church) and Robert Small.

Cambridge Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

AT the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society Mr. C. F. Foster presided. The report showed a slight deficiency; but the University Branch sent in rather more than the previous year. The deputation were Rev. Arthur Taylor, from the Bible House, and Rev. T. M. Gwynne Owen. About thirty sermons were preached the previous day for the Bible Society in various churches and chapels.

A missionary mission was held recently in some of our Evangelical churches by Rev. Prebendary Fox in connection with the special effort of the C.M.S.

The Lees and Raper lecture was delivered—for the first time in the provinces—recently in the Guildhall, by Professor G. Sims Woodhead. The meeting, which had been well organized, was splendidly attended. The subject was, "Recent Researches on the Action of Alcohol in Health and in Sickness." With very clear and lucid statements, and with striking illustrations, Professor Woodhead showed the deleterious influence of alcohol on various forms of life. The lecture doubtless carried greater weight because it was apparent that Professor Woodhead spoke as a scientist who had weighed his words carefully.

TRUSTEES: J. H. Tritton, Esq. (Chairman); Sir Thomas Brooke, Bart., D.L., J.P.; Col. E. H. Carlile, J.P.; Sir Algernon Coote, Bart., H.M.L., J.P.; John Cory, Esq., J.P.; E. M. Denny, Esq.; Miss Catherine Gurney, Hon. Sec.; A. A. Head, Esq.; J. E. Mathieson, Esq., J.P.; A. B. Stoney, Esq., LL.D.

WANTED.—ONE MILLION SHILLINGS as Free-will Offerings from ONE MILLION PEOPLE who have benefited by the services of the Police, continuously rendered by day and night, seven days a week, in heat and cold, in town and country.

The Association was started in January, 1883, to promote the welfare (both temporal and spiritual) of all Policemen and their families. It has Branches in London and the Provinces, the Colonies, Canada, the United States, India, Japan, &c. Institutes, Orphanages, and Convalescent Homes, all on evangelical, unsectarian basis.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS ARE MUCH NEEDED.

The MILLION SHILLING FUND is to provide a permanent and suitably central POLICE INSTITUTE in London for the use of all Police Forces; also to complete the Orphanages and Homes already established, and to further the general work of the Association at home and abroad, as approved by the Trustees.

Will each reader send at least ONE SHILLING and ask twenty Christian friends to do the same.

Contributions will be thankfully acknowledged and information given by the Hon. Secretary,
Miss CATHERINE GURNEY, at the Police Institute, 1a, Adelphi Terrace, Strand, London, W.C.
Cheques should be crossed "Messrs. BARCLAY & CO.," 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Monday, December 7, 1903.

 All amounts received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott for charitable purposes are remitted WITHOUT ANY DEDUCTION WHATEVER to the institutions for which the gifts are sent.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank, Ltd." This will effectually prevent loss.

THE BALAGHAT MISSION, INDIA.

The season during which itinerant village work can be done has now commenced, and plans for wide-spread preaching of the Gospel among the 350,000 heathen of the district by the staff of Missionaries and their Native assistants are now complete. But the Mission and this and other departments of the work are threatened with curtailment and inefficiency unless substantial monetary help is speedily forthcoming. God is blessing the work of the Mission and souls are being saved.

TREASURY IS EMPTY,

Contributions may be sent to the Hon. Sec., Miss FIELD, 10, Lancaster Road, West Norwood, London, or to the Offices of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE RAILWAY MISSION

urgently needs Funds to prevent the withdrawal of Workers from large Railway centres where work is greatly needed among the men.

400,000 Railway Men are employed every Sunday in the British Isles in running trains.

About 500 Railway Men are killed and 15,000 injured every year through accidents.

Who will help to send the Gospel to these men who are hindered from attending places of worship by Sunday duty, and to whom the public are indebted for the faithful way in which they perform their dangerous duties?

1,000 Meetings are held every week by the Railway Mission for the men.

Contributions will be gratefully received by S. G. SHEPPARD, Esq., Treasurer, 57, Old Broad Street, E.C.; or R. NIXON, Secretary, 1, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Whitechapel Evangelical and Medical Mission.

279, WHITECHAPEL ROAD, E.

In addition to the Gospel work of seeking and saving the lost, this Mission is giving Free Breakfasts to destitute children five mornings per week, a Week's Supper to homeless men, and Medical Aid to hundreds of the suffering poor. Funds are greatly needed to sustain the work and to give a little Christmas cheer to starving families. Please help us!

A Special and Urgent Appeal is made for FUNDS to carry on Christian effort among the fourteen thousand cab drivers.

At no time was the work of the Mission more needed.

Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by JOHN DUPEE, 165, Hemingford Road, Barnsbury, N.; or, Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Report sent on application.

The Adrogue Evangelical Mission.

Founder - SENOR EMILIO OLSSON.

An Earnest Appeal is made for £500 IMMEDIATELY for this needy work in the neighbourhood of Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, to which Senor Olsson is shortly returning.

Senor Olsson has distributed many thousands of copies of the Word of God in that "Neglected Continent."

Miss Bell has kindly given £100; Mr. Dence, £50; Rev. F. Paynter, M.A., £25; per Keswick Convention, £25 10s.; Mr. R. Cory, £15; and Sir George Williams, £10 10s., towards this Mission.

Contributions should be sent to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, THE CHRISTIAN, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.; or to the Hon. Secretary, Mr. ROBERT CALDWELL, F.R.G.S., 6a, Colonial Avenue, Minories, London, E.C.

SICK POOR IN SOUTHWARK.

Southwark is the poorest district in all London. It is deplorably overcrowded, and a large amount of sickness is inevitable, besides the casualties incidental to the life of a vast working class riverside neighbourhood.

The outlook for the poor this winter is much darker than for many years past. Great numbers are out of work, and there is much distress. Unfortunately, the very poorest are always the first to feel the pinch of bad times, and when sickness is superadded to destitution, their helpless plight is terrible.

Our Medical Mission ministers to the souls as well as the bodies of the sick and dying poor through a Christian Doctor and a Staff of Trained Nurses and Nursing-Deaconesses.

We do not give free meals to crowds, but we relieve the needy we know well in their own homes—often a single room, with bare boards, fireless grate, and empty cupboard—especially widows, orphans and the aged and sick poor.

This will be a very sad Christmas for many of our sick poor. Let us try to put a bright fire in their cold, dark grates, a warm blanket on their beds of pain, some little seasonable comforts on their bare tables—let us try to show the lonely widow, the disabled breadwinner, the dying Magdalen, that they are not forsaken, but the love of God pursues them to try and win their hearts to Himself; let "Glad tidings of great joy" fall on their sad and despairing hearts, touched and softened by "the kindness of God" through this ministry of mercy in the hour of their dire need.

All gifts will be Distributed only to the sick and aged who have been under visitation, and whose real need is well known to our doctor, nurses, &c., and with each gift there will be some ministry of grace to the soul as well as of relief to the body.

Nurses' Missionary Union.

AN interesting meeting was held recently at the Church Home of All Souls, Langham Place, W., in connection with the Nurses' Missionary Union, an organization whose object is to interest all members of the nursing profession in foreign medical missions, and to help them to take their peculiar and important share in this work. About 140 nurses, representing a large number of hospitals and infirmaries, responded to the invitation, besides many who are engaged in district and private nursing. Every nurse was warmly welcomed by Rev. F. S. Webster and Mrs. Webster.

Dr. G. W. GUINNESS gave a deeply-interesting address on the great need of medical missionary work in China, and instances of how wonderfully the hearts of the Chinese have been won to Christianity through the love and skill of those who can alleviate their bodily sufferings. In reply to a question from Mr. Webster, he also very briefly gave some incidents in his wonderful escape from the Boxers, and showed how marvellously God can deliver His children out of whatever "tight corners" they may be driven into.

Miss K. MILLER, Secretary of the Nurses' Missionary Union, gave a short account of the nature and aims of the Union, and of its progress during the last few months. She told of the pressing need of nurses in mission hospitals abroad, and showed how the Union seeks to be the link to bring into touch with the missionary societies such nurses as have the God-given desire to devote their lives to the work. She also emphasized one of the chief aims of the Union, viz., to help nurses during their hospital course, to prepare themselves for this work.

Rev. F. S. WEBSTER gave the closing address, and showed most clearly and solemnly what are some of the indispensable qualifications of a missionary. Philanthropy and enthusiasm for humanity are not enough; there must be the constraining power of the love of Christ. If any wanted to have the assurance that they were being sent forth by God, they must have heard (1) the call of God, (2) the cry of the heathen, and (3), have the special commission of the Holy Spirit.

Further information concerning the Union may be had from Miss K. Miller, 26, Horbury Crescent, W.

West London Noon Meeting.—Mr. Charles Cook writes of the Thursday mid-day service at Westbourne Grove Chapel, W.: "As an old Sunday School scholar I was drawn to attend to show sympathy with and encourage Pastor George Freeman in his efforts to maintain a truly Evangelical midday service. About a dozen ministers were present, and Church of England clergymen and other friends are helping to make it a success, and the increase in the numbers is proving that there was a needs-be for such a service, and that many are appreciating and valuing it. The whole service was bright and breezy, and all too short for many of us: and one felt how much good such a service was capable of doing. I understand not a few of those attending are quite unable from various reasons to attend any Sunday service, and to such it must come as a boon and a blessing."

Mrs. Penn Lewis. Many of our readers are acquainted with Mrs. Penn Lewis, personally or through her writings; and they and others will be glad to be informed that our next week's issue will contain an article from her pen, entitled, "The Leading of the Lord," giving some account of her spiritual history. It will be accompanied by a portrait.

Advent. It has been said that the darkest hour is that which immediately precedes the dawn, and the thought is closely applicable to the history of humanity. When all was sunk in the deepest gloom, the true Light arose "that lighteth every man that cometh into the world" (John i. 9), and "in due time Christ died for the ungodly" (Rom. v. 6). As in these darkening days of Advent there is a promise of the brightness of the coming summer, so the accumulated sin of the world heralded His glory, "the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth" (John i. 14), and the rising of "the Sun of Righteousness with healing in His wings" (Mal. iv. 2). A thoughtful American writer has well said:—

It is significant that Christmas should fall in this season of holy nights. Milton, with his poet's intuition, seizes upon the characteristic aspect of the wintry world at its bleakest and stillest, as the note of his Hymn of the Nativity, as if (following the characteristic Hebrew thought) it must be the desert that shall bloom.

The Second Advent. In our young days the Lord's Coming was "the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ." Now, through the endeavour to map out the details of His appearing, which are not so mapped out in Scripture, controversies have arisen which have divided prophetic students into opposite camps. May we not appeal to brethren beloved of the Lord, and highly esteemed in love by ourselves for their work's sake, to study in their teachings to be quiet, content with what the Scripture hath said, and feeding the people with the manna which comes down from heaven, the sincere milk of the Word.

Mr. Herbert Spencer. Last week we referred in a paragraph to the passing of Mr. Herbert Spencer. He has been so much quoted, so much relied upon by Agnostics and others who have broken away from faith, that a word is necessary about his influence. In power of intellect he was, of course, a giant—no one would doubt this. He had also a high sense of morality, and in this he contrasted favourably with many who became his disciples. But it must not be forgotten that he was the son of a decidedly Christian schoolmaster. Had it not been for his early training, we doubt if he would have expressed himself upon ethical questions as he did. But his philosophy led directly to Agnosticism. Possessing a far greater mind than that of the much-belauded Haeckel, he never descended to such vulgarity as that which is to be found in the "Riddle," nor did he claim the omniscience of the German. He remained an Agnostic.

God and the Universe. It is pathetic to think that he could fight so hard for a "Power, Inscrutable and Independent," which accounts for all things, and yet remain without faith. Mr. Spencer thought, as too many people do, that the intellect could compass everything that may be known. Hence he remained within the area of material conceptions of the universe. He had to correct and revise his earlier work. Time made it useless. And time will make his final conclusions useless. The world can never ultimately accept any statement about the universe which omits God, and fails properly to account for man's unceasing desire after Him. The fact that Mr. Spencer had continually to revise his work, should make smaller people careful of rash assertions and over confidence.

The Church in the Mud. The report in our last issue of the visit of Gipsy Smith to Rev. W. J. Dawson's church at Highbury Quadrant indicated the real solution of the problem "How to reach the Masses." The fact that many hundreds of genuine non-church goers crowded night after night into a fashionable Congregational church, proved that even they will attend places of worship; and the fact that a congregation of men, very much mixed, contributed a sum of £10 in a collection disposes of the fiction that men are afraid of giving. But the midnight march into the streets to pick up the drunkards and wanderers seems to have most deeply impressed Mr. Dawson. In writing of this, he says:—

One of these poor sots gathered into these services said, "When I saw all these gentlemen walking in the mud I thought there must be something in it, so I comed to see." . . . The Church wants to do a little walking in the mud in the quest of lost souls.

It is the old word of the Master to which we must return: "Go out, and compel them to come in." But before that can be done, there must be a quickened spirit of compassion for lost souls. The feet will go anywhere the heart dictates. Mr. Dawson reveals the secret when he says: "Before the mission commenced, the spiritual life of the church was greatly quickened." It is to that we must give attention first of all.

Sunday-School Encouragement. A great preacher has said that he believes many a man is born "to help one soul." This may well be a comforting thought for the Sunday-school teacher, who goes on patiently and faithfully, Sabbath after Sabbath, and does not see any result from his labour. The magnificent possibilities of the salvation of one soul should not be forgotten in despondent moments. In that wonderful autobiography written by "The Old Potter," an influential minister who began a life of toil when he was only seven years old, and worked fourteen or fifteen hours a day, there is a passage which illustrates the influence of the quiet hours spent in the Sunday-school. He says, after showing how in the midst of unfriendly and perilous surroundings of his life, amidst the brutality and lust of the Potteries, the teaching of the Sabbath stood him in good stead:—

My education came from two sources—Old Betty's school and the Sunday-school.

The former soon ceased to flow directly, but never indirectly; while the latter, Nile-like, has spread its fruitful waters over all my life.

The Army and Drink. If further testimony be needed as to the cost to the nation of the drink curse, it can be found in a recent statement by the Governor of Gibraltar, Sir George White, who, although admitting that the evils of drink are only too potent in military life, claims that soldiers are better than civilians in this respect, "as they are more disciplined." Sir George said:—

As a soldier, I naturally regard the question in its incidence upon the efficiency and discipline of the Army. I have before said that I believe nearly all the crime in the British Army may be traced directly or indirectly to drink, and a great proportion of the disease also.

A Noble Example. The growing interest which Christian people are evincing in municipal government, as a means to the noble end of the furtherance of the Lord's kingdom upon earth, has been illustrated in a striking manner at the recent Borough Council elections in London. It is very gratifying to note that of the 108 candidates either publicans or friends of the drink interest, sixty-seven were defeated; and in one case the secretary of the London United Temperance Council, with a majority of no less than 400, took the place intended for a drink partisan. These results point the way to what might be done throughout the entire kingdom if only all Christian men fulfilled their duties in the full recognition of the obligation upon them to do all in their power to sweeten and purify municipal government, and to remove stumbling-blocks out of the way of those who are subjected to such terrible temptations to intemperance and immorality.

Looking Zionwards. In the Empire Review for December, Mr. Hyamson, the hon. secretary of the Union of Jewish Literary Societies, discusses, with a remarkable impartiality, the pros and cons of the Zionist question. If he is not so hopeful as some of his co-religionists, he is at any rate sufficiently candid to say:—

The masses, absolutely on the brink of despair, clutch at the hope offered them, careless even if it prove a mirage. The majority, claiming foresight, and become conservative through comfort, denounce the dream as a hallucination—a will-o'-the-wisp that would drag its followers to perdition. Humanly speaking, the latter are right; but more than once in the world's history enthusiasm has proved all but invincible, and in its course has prevailed over reason. Who knows but that the dreamers may once more succeed and the thinkers fail?

Mr. Hyamson apparently has not taken into account the prophets of his race, who assuredly are on the side of the dreamers. In the light of their inspired utterances, the possibility becomes not merely a probability, but a certainty.

Reasons for Our Hope.

"Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you." That was the Apostle Peter's counsel to the Christians to whom he wrote his first Epistle. It is a counsel which is as timely now as then. The recent challenge to faith, so violently made, is a call to all who possess the living hope to say definitely why they hold it. There is a French saying that certain people "have the faith of a woodman," i.e., a simple, unreasoning acquiescence in the truth. For a woodman this may be all right; but such a faith is not worthy of men to whom God has entrusted the gift of higher intelligence. No one will mistake our meaning. It is with the heart that man believeth unto righteousness; and both savant and sweep enter upon the possession of eternal life in this one way. The loftiest man must become as a little child in order to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. There are no exceptions to this eternal rule. But when the heart loves God, the mind must also follow and love Him too; hence the necessity of giving an answer, which is also a reason, for the hope that is in us. To Christian young men and women in particular, we would at this time commend a study, not only of the Word of God, but also of those great works which illuminate the truth of the Gospel. These will confirm them in their faith, and give vigour to their testimony.

Bishop Westcott's Conversations.

Thousands of readers who have derived profit from the deeply spiritual writings of the late Bishop Westcott will turn with interest to some fragments of his conversations, which have been contributed to the December Contemporary Review by Archdeacon Boutflower, who was his chaplain for eleven years. It is a pity they are so meagre, but some of them, in their bearing upon present day disputes and troubles, are of more than passing interest. Two or three of them may well be quoted:—

I believe in Mazzini's words: "If anyone shows me a good man, I say, How many souls has he saved? and if anyone shows me a religious nation, I ask, What has it done or suffered to bring others to its faith?"

Of course I dislike the idea of "a Life" of Our Lord. It is impossible; no one ought to attempt such a thing. The Gospels never were intended to be pieced together in a connected "Life." They will baffle and disappoint you. But what I do think one may do with wonderful profit, is reverently to trace what is shown us of the progressive self-revelation of the Lord.

Forgiveness of sin is not the removal of consequences, but their transfiguration.

Scriptures for India.

Lord Radstock writes that, although it is some time since this scheme was started, there is still a great need in India for Scriptures, requests continuing to come from missionaries for copies in connection with the scheme. We wish to remind our readers that there is a fund for this purpose. Bibles, Testaments, and Gospels are specially bound in a style chosen by Lord Radstock, and approved by the India Office. These are delivered free in India at the following prices—Bibles 5s., Testaments 1s., Gospels 2d.

Russia and Japan.

The friends of peace have been anxiously watching the moving of the war cloud in the Far East. The movements are so swift and changeful that it is difficult to see what the end will be. For every reason we hope that sane counsels will prevail, and that war will be averted, for it would evidently mean a great conflagration, spreading into Europe, which, on account of treaties, would have difficulty in keeping out of the struggle. So far as Japan is concerned, we have a striking object-lesson in that country of what an irreligious civilization means. Japan has suddenly risen to the position of a great power—greater than most Westerns suspect. She has a strong fleet and a strong army, and has adopted Western manners. She has overthrown the old paganism, but her heart is not converted. Japan is the leopard that has changed its spots, but not its leopard nature, while Russia can show little more than a Christianized paganism. The sceptic speaks of the "failure" of the Gospel! It is exactly because the true Gospel is rejected that these wretched animosities prevail.

The Reviving of Italy.

All who have watched the struggles of Italy to free herself from the old shackles which for several centuries have bound her, will be delighted to read the statement made in the Roman Parliament on Wednesday last week, by the Minister of the Treasury. The country is emerging from her financial difficulties; and the dream of her best statesmen, that a country consisting of a happy and prosperous people, enlisted on the side of peace and social order, will yet arise, seems to have a chance of being fulfilled. The misery and vice of the people in former days, particularly in the Papal States, was due to the iron grind of priestcraft. Filth, poverty, brigandage, and the vendetta, flourished under the very nose of the Pope. To-day, all that is changed, and Rome itself is becoming a city worthy of the capital of a great nation. On the material side all this is satisfactory. We wish things were as satisfactory on the religious side. There is no doubt that intellectual Italy has abandoned the Papacy with all its works, and too frequently it is "freethinking." It is in the transition state, which is always a perilous state. Concurrently with this material regeneration of the country, there is needed a forward movement in Evangelical propaganda. Italy wants the Gospel. Evangelical truth was never more successfully preached there than now. There is every encouragement. But we should like to see a grand advance. The hour is ripe for it.

The Bookmaker's Business.

An accountant's clerk sends to a daily paper an account of his experience in a recent audit of the books of a professional "bookmaker." The figures he gives are startling. In one month this man received 815 telegrams investing sums from five shillings to £20, and no less than 18,768 slips dealing with sums from one shilling to a sovereign. These latter papers represent the money of the poor, and reveal to some extent how prevalent is the practice of betting. The sequel to this is, that while one shilling was converted into nearly ten pounds as a casual and most rare thing, 467 papers produced nothing at all. The poor dupes who hope to gain a fortune by placing their money on certain horses invariably lose, whilst the bookmaker reaps a great harvest. This betting mania is at once a sin and a disease, and it is menacing the country in a terrible manner. With such facts as are continually coming to light concerning the professional bookmaker—the man who invites and systematizes betting—it is high time that the Legislature struck one last blow at his business and utterly crushed it. There should be no quarter given to any class of persons who traffic in human folly and sin.

Theological Apathy.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

A GROWING indifference to theological distinction—theological apathy as some call it—is a characteristic of the times, quite as much as the unrest to which my previous articles have been devoted.

Who would contend now about the five points of Calvinism, which occupied so much of the thought of our fathers? If that were the limit of the tolerance of the times, it might be regarded with satisfaction. But the movement has gone far beyond this. One of the ablest writers of the Daily News recently gave us a lively and suggestive article on "Breaking the Fences"—the fences being the dividing lines of theological opinion. The writer was impressed with the prevalent tendency to break them down to such an extent that numbers fail to recognise any distinction between Trinitarian and Unitarian, or even between Christian and Agnostic. Good men, we are told, are found among believers of all shades of opinion, and among some who are not believers at all. They are righteous, kind, faithful to their word, loyal friends, good citizens—que voulez-vous? The practical result is there; why attach so much importance to the mere belief? It is a matter of mere opinion at the best, and it is worse than presumption—it is arrant bigotry, for us to undertake to pronounce as to the condition of men who are an example of all the virtues, merely because they fail to accept what we regard as

VITAL CHRISTIAN BELIEFS.

Even in this very plea, plausible as it seems, and fitted to beguile the unwary, we may find one secret of the evil tendency in question. The Church has been too prone to judge men, and to judge them very largely according to their beliefs. Judgment belongs to God. He only, who knows the heart (that is, knows what is in man), can pronounce on their character. "Who art thou?" the Apostle asks, in emphatic words, which cannot be too strongly impressed upon us, "that judgest another man's servant?" Alas! this love of judging is only too prevalent. We do not know the heart, but we may know the creed, and so it happens that the Church has from an early day set up standards of belief, and judged men by their conformity to them. In the recoil from enforced uniformity, with all the evils by which it has been attended, there has been the inevitable swing of the pendulum. To-day there are numbers to proclaim that creeds are of no particular value—the noble life is everything. This truism is but half a truth, which may be admitted without disproving the value and the NECESSITY OF A DEFINITE CREED.

The introduction to the Athanasian Creed sets forth in the most pronounced form the error, of which the present apathy is one of the most pernicious results. "Whosoever will be saved, before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic faith: which faith, except everyone do keep whole and undefiled, without doubt he shall perish everlastingly." What need be, could be, more terrible than this utterance? Attention has been too much fixed on the metaphysical subtleties of the various clauses; so difficult to understand, much more to accept. But this prelude to the definitions of the great "mystery of godliness," which it passes the skill of human intellect to describe at all, itself contains the most pernicious teaching of the whole. No wonder that men have revolted against this fulmination of infinite wrath against the errors or infirmities of the human intellect. For by whom have these formularies of belief been prepared? They are not found in the New Testament, they have no Apostolic seal of sanction, they are simply a human interpretation of the Divine message, "the Gospel of the Grace of God." The creed is the ultimate product of a long series of discussions, angry controversies, even violent struggles. It is only necessary to place it by the side of the simple truth it professes to explain to man, in order to perceive how unsupported is its claim to the authority it has too long usurped. "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." There is a word of grace and salvation, the unfolding of a hope that is full of immortality and life "to every one who will receive it." The other is an anathema, couched in the most appalling terms, to everyone who does not accept the conclusions of priests and councils.

The Athanasian Creed is the most flagrant illustration of these translations of the message of Divine love into the hard language of human theology. Our Puritan fathers cannot be acquitted of the same egregious mistake. The result was evil in two respects. It gave a false conception of the spirit of the Gospel itself. Its message was that of the Master—an invitation to the weary and heavy laden; the other sounded rather a stern note of warning and exclusion to all who were not prepared at once to accept the severe, may we not say the impossible, conditions so positively laid down. But there is a more fundamental error in the assumption that salvation was mainly, if not entirely, a matter of intellectual correctness. The penalty for this misapprehension we are paying to-day.

THE TRUE VALUE OF A CREED.

In the stress laid upon the acceptance of a creed, there has been too often an indifference to the real place which the creed holds in the formation of the character. For its value lies in its influence upon the heart, upon the will, upon the whole spiritual nature. The assertion, too frequently heard, that it does not matter what a man believes, is a folly so evident that no one would venture on it in any region but that of theology. Tell a patient that he may safely take a poisonous drug, provided only he sincerely believes it to be medicine; or give a speculator to understand that he may safely invest in the most rotten shares upon the market, provided only that he himself believes it to be sound and profitable—and either of them will simply laugh you to scorn. But, on the other hand, it would be equally absurd if these men in their turn were to insist, the one that his medicine would cure him because he sincerely believed that it was a healing drug, although he himself refused to test its qualities; or the other that he would be enriched by a speculation in which he never invested a penny because he honestly regarded it as a wise investment.

"By grace ye are saved through faith." But how? Everywhere in the New Testament faith is represented as

THE FOUNDATION OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

But on the other hand, it is also true that with the heart that man believeth unto salvation. How then is it that faith has this marvellous effect? Let theology be taken as one of the appointed subjects of a collegiate lecture room; examined with the same minuteness, and discussed with the same thoroughness, as any of the other subjects which engage the attention of students. Is it to be supposed that the man who attains proficiency in the knowledge of the subject, and whose reasonings lead him to what are held to be orthodox conclusions, is therefore in the enjoyment of saving faith? Alas! there are too many evidences that the intellect may arrive at right conclusions while the heart remains entirely unaffected. The faith which saves, is faith which grips a man, which stirs heart and conscience to their very depths, which works by love, which brings the life into subjection to the will of God. Surely it is only necessary to look, either at the work itself, or to the influences by which it is accomplished, to see the folly of the suggestion that it is of no moment what a man believes.

The effect produced in the great cities of the East by the early Apostles certainly remains one of in the history of mankind. The elevation of character and of life in the case of multitudes who had been educated in the midst of influences calculated to debase the intellect and corrupt the heart, slaves alike of superstition and vice, has ever been a subject of amazement to the critics of Christianity. Where was the secret to be found? In the power of their faith. That faith was a simple trust in Christ. Surely, then, everything depended on what they believed; and, so far as their own destiny was concerned, the effect of their faith must depend upon whether what they had received was an eternal truth or a wild delusion. "If in this life only we have hoped in Christ, we are of all men most pitiable." Nothing could be more true of early believers, for they had sacrificed much in the present world because of the glorious hope on which they had built up a world that was to come. The preacher of the Gospel must take precisely the same ground to-day. His work is not to start theories of his own, as to the Divine government and cognate questions. He is an ambassador, to proclaim God's message, not his own ideas. "God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." That is the foundation of his own hope, the inspiration of his own life. To tell him that it is all an open question hardly means even a serious treatment of the subject itself. Either true or false it must be. If true, the most wonderful truth in all the universe; if not true, the most fearful delusion by which the hearts of men have ever been beguiled.

(To be Continued.)

The Everlasting Arms.

Eternal God, my soul would rest
Secure within Thy care,
And when by many trials pressed,
Find all its comfort there.

I need no love but Thine to make
My pathway sure and right;
I dream in darkness, but awake
To find the morning bright.

Or if the mist hangs weeping still
Upon the trees of day,
I rest me simply in Thy will
Until they pass away.

But keep not silence, O my God!
Let me Thy glory see;
Rather to bow beneath the rod
Than dwell apart from Thee.

I need the sunshine of Thy love,
E'en through a mist of tears,
Else I should stray, like Noah's dove,
Upon a sea of fears.

Ah, restless heart! No more distrust
Thy Father's tender care;
But know that all His ways are just
And God is everywhere.

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

DEAR SIR,—An impending financial crisis in the affairs of this valuable Society forms the subject of an article in the Church Missionary Intelligencer for this month. Under the well-known initials of Mr. Eugene Stock, the late Editorial Secretary, a lucid statement is given of the Society's position; and alarming particulars are furnished of the difference between income and expenditure which has resulted in large deficits during the past two years. Unless the supporters of this great Evangelical Society exert themselves so as to raise the Society's income for the current year by £88,000 beyond the income of last year, they are informed that the Committee seriously intend to take a great step towards retrenchment. Their words are:—

"The Committee will not then begin to consider whether they will take the step or not; they will actually take it at once. That is, they will put a sudden and peremptory stop on new missionaries going out to the field—such missionaries at least as have to live on the Society's funds."

The Committee suggest that the faith and zeal of their supporters has not risen in proportion to the success that God has granted to the Society's labours since the year 1887, when a forward movement was initiated. Since that date the number of the Society's missionaries, clergymen, laymen, and single women (not wives) has been more than trebled. All the agencies, the native teachers and evangelists, the schools, the hospitals, the dispensaries, have multiplied in corresponding degree. But the expenditure has now outrun the income; and each recent financial year has closed with a deficit. The actual expenditure for 1902-3 was £350,659, and the available income for that year was £317,977. For the estimated expenditure of the current year, £53,700 is required beyond the ordinary available income of last year. Hence an impassioned appeal from the Committee to their supporters for more prayer, stronger faith, and greater sacrifices. The able writer who in this article gives utterance to the anxieties, and fears, and hopes of the Committee, would certainly not appeal in vain, unless there are solid and serious reasons to the contrary. He has some evident misgivings under this head, and the following is one of the passages that allude to them:—

"We are quite conscious that in some quarters a retort is ready. We shall be told with fresh incisiveness that the Society has been unfaithful to Evangelical principles, and that God has withdrawn his blessing. This will be a reproach that we shall try to bear patiently, because it will be a reproach for persevering in the straight paths of our forefathers, and refusing to swerve from them in obedience to unreasoning clamour. It will be a reproach for doing what our consciences assure us is right, and what we believe to be in accordance with the will of God.

"We do not here enter into details, or we might show that some of the charges against us are unfounded and others unreasonable, and declare for the thousandth time our unfaltering allegiance to Evangelical truth. We regret that a few friends here and there should have been so misled regarding us as to feel unable to continue their support, for we are sure it is pain and grief to them. But we shall not be turned from what we hold to be the right and the Christian course for fear of losing money. To do so would be a failure indeed in steadfastness and in faith."

In answer to this view, some plain speaking appears necessary at the present crisis. As a life-long supporter of the Church Missionary Society, and well acquainted in past years with its secretaries, its committee, and its missionaries, I venture to say that I share with many others the opinion that the Society has declined, and is declining, from its old Evangelical principles of action; and that God is calling on it to be zealous and repent. While taking credit to themselves for preserving in the straight paths of their forefathers, the Committee need to be reminded that the Church of England is in a very different condition now from that which our forefathers witnessed. In their days the archbishops and bishops of the Church, who, by virtue of their office, are entitled to a voice in the counsels of the C. M. Society, were not, as they are now, practically belonging to one party in the Church. This is now the case, with a very few exceptions; and the party in the Church to which its rulers belong is not the Evangelical party which founded the C. M. Society. Let any impartial person take in his hand the list of archbishops and bishops who are vice-presidents of this Society, and say what manner of men these are known to be. Those who are staunch supporters of Evangelical truth could easily be counted on the fingers of both hands. Of the rest, a considerable number are only a hindrance and a scandal. Among them may be found numerous prelates who are responsible for some of the worst evils which disturb the Church of England, and who can only be considered as entirely hostile to Protestantism. These men are entitled to exercise authority in the counsels of the C.M.S., by virtue of their office as vice-presidents.

But it may be replied that it is now impossible to exclude the archbishops and bishops from a missionary society belonging to the Established Church. Therefore, while observing that their presence and action often sorely discourage the supporters of an Evangelical body, I would urge that it is incumbent on the committee to be doubly careful in the Society's proceedings. But the ill-omened connection with High Church leaders is frequently exhibited in the Society's publications and in its meetings. I observe that of recent years a new departure has been taken in holding joint meetings of the C. M. Society and Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. The clerical and lay officials and supporters of each society are found on the same platform, and there has been a grievous failure to discriminate between truth and error by the speakers and in the speeches.

In reading the C. M. Intelligencer every month, I discover small things which, separately, might attract little attention; but cumulatively they are like straws which show which way the wind blows. If I were to give instances of these little "pinpricks" which irritate us, I might, perhaps, incur the charge of censoriousness. But I will mention two or three. In a recent number of the Intelligencer, a bishop is mentioned who requires a clergyman as a helper in an Eastern colony. A good voice for intoning, is mentioned as an important qualification. In this colony there are disadvantages which make it difficult to obtain clerical help, and the suggestion as to intoning will add to the difficulty. Intoning is distasteful to Evangelical clergy, and few are likely to accept this invitation conveyed through the C.M. Society.

The same number contained an account of a C.M.S. meeting in a parish where the vicar presided. His speech seems to have contained elaborate praise of Roman Catholic missions. The C.M. Society is not to be blamed on account of the chairman's unfortunate speech; but their reporting it adds to the harm done.

In this month's Intelligencer the reader will find inserted between the leaves an advertisement of a Ritualist magazine (with a colourless title), published at the office of the Church Times, together with a blank form of order and remittance. I have carefully perused this magazine, which, as might be expected, is full of insidious error. The publisher at the Church Missionary House has thus introduced it to the notice of the readers of the Intelligencer.

That many old friends and subscribers are now ready to limit, or even to withhold, their gifts on account of dissatisfaction with the Society, is not a matter of conjecture: it is a fact. In one case well known to me, a friend who has hitherto subscribed about fourteen guineas annually under different heads, would long ago have sent fifty or a hundred pounds to meet the extra needs of the C.M. Society. But, for the reasons which I have ventured briefly to express, he sends his gifts to other missions, and awaits the purging process which the C.M.S. must undergo if it is to be reinstated in its position as a faithful Protestant and Evangelical body. At any cost, this return to old paths must take place. Let us unite in praying that our honoured brethren who manage the affairs of the C.M. Society, may be guided by Divine wisdom in this matter. At present their condition seems to be described in Hosea vii. 9: "Strangers have devoured his strength, and he knoweth it not: yea, gray hairs are here and there upon him, yet he knoweth not." Senex.

MR. EUGENE STOCK'S REPLY.

DEAR SIR,—I am grateful to you for giving me the opportunity to comment on the letter of "Senex" in the same number in which it appears.

1. If I were to attempt to answer the suggestions of "Senex" that the Society has changed its lines or deviated from its principles, I could only repeat the words of mine which he quotes, and which are strictly true. We hold with all our hearts to Evangelical truth; we stand upon the old C.M.S. principle —"Spiritual men for spiritual work"; our one object is the extension of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

2. But it is true that while we are Evangelical, we are not undenominational. We honour and love the China Inland Mission, which is bound to no particular church; but our position is different. We are by our fundamental laws a Church of England Society, with the consequent advantages and disadvantages. We cannot, even if we would, ignore the chief officers of our Church. Those who object to connection with the bishops have their remedy: they can leave the Church of England.

3. It is absolutely untrue that any bishop or other Church authority has even attempted to interfere with the Society's Evangelical lines. But the bishops have of late years recognised, as the chief officers of any church ought to recognise, the duty of the Church of England to foster missions. This has resulted in many meetings having been held under their auspices, on the general subject of missions. In these cases they usually ask for one or more speakers to represent Evangelical Missions, and members of the C.M.S. have felt it important, in the interest of the Evangelical cause, to accept such invitations. It is a mistake to call these gatherings "joint meetings." We do not arrange "joint meetings" with other societies.

4. The three matters which "Senex" calls "pin-pricks" are really not worth explaining in your columns. There is a simple and sufficient answer in each case. Are they not just the kind of thing about which friends might write to us direct?

"I wish "Senex" would come to our committee meetings. He would understand us better then. He would find an assembly of praying men who earnestly desire to work only for the glory of God. Eugene Stock.

Church Missionary Society, Salisbury Square, E.C.,

Work Among Coloured People in America. —Through Mr. James Wharton we have received an account of a remarkable convention of workers among the coloured people, held at Atlanta, Georgia. The members came from all parts of the South, and there were present also a number of representatives from the North. The most important recommendations were, that there be an evangelist placed in each one of the Southern States, that the churches should so far as possible be responsible for his support, and that a paper shall be devoted entirely to the interests of the work in the South. This paper will be published in Nashville, Tenn., and is to be supported entirely by the coloured people. The race question continues to occupy the thought and attention of the best minds in America. One of the most prominent coloured teachers was recently riddled with buck-shot while he was, perhaps, riding from his work. It is believed that this dastardly deed was done by some of his white neighbours, and that it was the result of prejudice. For Prof. Plannving had the reputation of being an excellent man, so that neither he nor his friends ever thought of his having an enemy.

Christian Literature for India.

THE annual meeting of the Christian Literature Society for India was held a few days ago at Exeter Hall, Lord Northbrook, president, occupying the chair.

Mr. H. M. Birdwood laid stress on the importance of the Society's work, especially in the present circumstances of India. Owing to the comparatively large advance made during recent years by popular education in that country, the love of reading has on all hands greatly increased. A great amount of unwholesome literature now finds its way into the homes of the people of India, and hence there is a corresponding need for the reading matter provided by the Society, which during the last forty-five years has issued publications in eighteen different languages. The copies printed numbered nearly 31,000,000. No fewer than 1,268 native teachers have been trained for the mission field. The work done has been thoroughly appreciated by the civil administrators of India.

Lord Northbrook said that a programme of further useful work by the Society had been drawn up, but there were doubts, owing to lack of funds, as to how far this could be carried out. He urged that the Society should be supported, because a Christian literature is one of the most important helps in the dissemination of Christianity in India. The work is one in which all sections of Protestants can join.

The British Opium Traffic with China.

A vision Oriental
Of waving wheat I view,
The fancy sentimental
Delights the starved Hindu.
Where grew the deadly poppies,
Which poisoned the Chinese,
There grew the smiling trophies
Of plenty, love, and peace.

A shout through India rises,
The cause she shall explain,
"When Providence chastises,
Withholding needful rain.
No terror of starvation
Shall our poor souls invade,
For our full preservation
Provision now is made."

"Hear, hear," the reapers shouting
(What mirth and gladness there),
"They leave no room for doubting,
There's plenty and to spare.
No need for us applying
To Briton's tribes for aid;
Now ends our grievous sighing,
Full stores for us they've made.

"An item, more amazing
(Tell it the wide world through),
By this sublime wheat-raising,
So charming to our view;
The revenue demanded
For India's special need,
Is regularly handed
To those its claims who plead!

"For why? the soil's productive,"
The choicest fruits it rears!
By ways and means constructive,
Look at those full-sized ears!
Has Providence not bless'd them—
That noble British race?
Yes! God they serve has kiss'd them!
His special love we trace!

"What, now, for their religion?
Why! like the lark it sings!
'Tis gentle as a pigeon,
And joyful news it brings!
Farewell! ye heathen fancies,
Great Britain's God is ours;
His service us entrances,
Above all others towers."

From China, too, is wafted,
A hymn of sacred sound;
"To Britain, now, we're grafted!
Its sap is in us found!
Our million spreading branches,
With blossoms bright appear!
The cause of God advances!
Millennial days are near!"

SUNDAY, December 20. Isaiah xv.

MOAB, together with the surrounding states, came under the cloud of Sennacherib's invasion, and it is to this that the Prophet alludes. The picture of disaster is very vivid and complete. It was so sudden—"in a night," twice repeated. It was so grievous—"on all heads baldness, every beard cut off" (the Oriental expression of excessive grief). It was so universal—from Heshbon to Jahaz, the limits of the land.

Notice especially the profound sympathy of the Hebrew Prophet for one of the hereditary foes of his people (5). The old exclusiveness was beginning to break down, and the Spirit of God was unfolding the vision of the world-wide brotherhood of man, the full force of which was revealed by our Lord. Let us live in the lives of others, trying to understand and sympathize with each other. Half the misunderstandings and quarrels of the Church and the world originate in the caste and national prejudices which, like high walls, shut us off from one another. But before the spirit of true religion those walls are broken down, and we realize our oneness with the Boer as the Briton, with the Frenchman as the American.

There was a remnant even of Moab (9), for God is not unrighteous to forget His people in any land, when the storm of judgment falls. Out of every land there are some who have not bowed the knee or kissed the hand to Baal, and they shall be remembered in the day of wrath, as a bride remembers her jewels (Mal. iii. 17).

MONDAY, December 21. Isaiah xvi.

The chapter continues the prophecy respecting Moab, commenced in the foregoing (1-5). The harassed nation is urged to send tribute in her dire adversity and anguish to the daughter of Zion (1); and Zion is urged to shelter her outcasts and take up her cause (4).

That conception of darkness falling in the midst of the noon-day, under the cover of which her fugitives may escape, is very beautiful, and reminds us of the stories of the clouds which settled down on conventicles of Covenanters, in the days of Claverhouse, hiding them from pursuit. The Moabites are still further urged and encouraged to flee for refuge to Israel, because of the conditions of justice and righteousness which had been established. What a beautiful Gospel thought is here! Fugitives may be urged to take shelter in the kingdom of heaven, because of the righteousness of the King who rules there. The justice of God is our hope. It is because He is faithful to His promises and just to His Son, that sinners who plead the blood are sure of welcome and pardon.

6-12. But there is one great obstacle to Moab lying down under the shadow of Judah. The people were so arrogant. "We have heard of the pride of Moab, that he is very proud" (Jer. xlviii. 29, 42; Zeph. ii. 10). This pride would not avert the inevitable doom, but it would prevent prayer being heard. This admission of the possibility of prayer being answered or refused, though offered in heathen temples, is especially noteworthy.

13-14. The prophet added a postscript to say that Moab's fate would befall speedily, "within three years," with the precision with which a hireling's time of service is meted out.

TUESDAY, December 22. Isaiah xvii.

1-11. Damascus. This prophecy applies to the time when Syria and Ephraim were in league (as we have seen) against Judah. Note the vivid imagery! That the land should be swept as clear as a harvest-field, or as an olive tree after the boughs have been beaten for fruit (5 and 6). Just as the ancient cities of the Canaanites were forsaken, and finally engulphed by primeval forest, after the Israelite conquest had swept over the land, so should the strong cities of Syria be forsaken and desolate. It is worth pausing to notice, also, the reference to man's impotence to arrest the inevitable result of apostasy from God—he may plant his vineyard and hedge it in, but he cannot command the harvest or ward off the day of desperate sorrow (11). Are you learning that lesson? Then, be sure to look unto your Maker, and have respect, sinner though you be, to the Holy One (7)!

12-14. This magnificent paragraph is generally interpreted of Sennacherib's attack on Jerusalem. Here is the advance of the Assyrian, whose hosts were composed of many different peoples. It is as the rush of a swollen torrent that has broken from its bed. But God rebukes the invader, and he flees as chaff before the gale. We are reminded of the overthrow of the Armada, and the retreat from Moscow. No weapon that is formed against God's people can prosper.

WEDNESDAY, December 23. Isaiah xviii.

The prophet here deals with Ethiopia, which lay to the south of Egypt, and from which the Ethiopian eunuch came to Jerusalem to worship (Acts viii.).

When Ethiopia heard of the Assyrian invasion, the first impression was one of panic; and it was proposed that ambassadors should be sent to make terms of peace. "Go, ye swift messengers," the people cried to their delegates, "make haste to conclude a peace."

"It is not necessary," cries the Prophet; "I have been admitted into the council chamber of Heaven, and have heard the voice of the Almighty; I know His secret plans; He is only abiding His time, till the Assyrian is ripe for destruction. When the blossom is over, and the fruit appears, He will cut it off with pruning-hooks; and the spreading branches, which had overshadowed the world with terror, shall be a lair for wild beasts, and a perching-roost for birds." In these remarkable words, a prediction is given of the sudden overthrow of Sennacherib by the Angel of Jehovah.

Inspired with gratitude for this unexpected interposition, the Ethiopian kingdom is depicted as sending a present, by way of a thankoffering, to the Temple of Jehovah. Be sure to yield your sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving when you have received some special mercy!

THURSDAY, December 24. Isaiah xix.

1-15. The judgment which was to befall the land of Egypt is the burden of the first paragraph of this chapter. It would appear that it would come in the form of civil war and internecine strife (2); and the people would betake themselves to necromancers in the agony of their dread. Probably the prophecy was fulfilled in the days of Alexander and the Ptolemies. The blows that would befall the land would strike destruction into its widespread commerce.

Is not this always the case? Do not a nation's sins bring commercial depression? Little wonder that there is anxiety to-day in our manufacturing and commercial circles, and a fear for the future, when we remember that, as a nation, we are pressing our opium on China, are spending £180,000,000 a year in strong drink, are permitting all kinds of sin to lurk unrebuked in the very heart of our civilization. They that work in the cotton mills of Lancashire are ashamed (9), and they that work for hire are grieved in soul, because they can obtain no employment (10). There is a dearth of notable and leading men to guide the State, and a failure in lofty ideals (12). There is failure in our plans of war and peace. In how many respects the picture of the condition of Egypt summarizes the condition of our own land!

16-25. How blessed the contrast in this paragraph to the former! It has been called the most missionary of all Isaiah's prophecies. Only one city in five should be a city of destruction; pillars should be erected to commemorate Jehovah's name in the land of Egypt; there should be a returning to the Lord, a confederacy between the two nations formerly locked in deadly conflict, and a blessing on Egypt and Assyria equal to that of the Hebrew people. What an encouragement to those who work for Christ in the land of the Nile! What glorious scenes of peace our mother earth shall yet witness!

FRIDAY, December 25. Isaiah xx.

At this time there was great conflict in Jerusalem between two great parties. On the one hand there was the Royal and Court party, which was anxious to preserve the goodwill of Assyria, but on the other hand the people favoured an alliance with Egypt. The cities of Philistia, together with Moab and Edom, were all of the same mind, and a confederacy was formed against Sargon, the King of Assyria, and the standard of revolt was raised at Ashdod.

Isaiah in the meanwhile had done his best to stop this movement. From the first he opposed it, and to make his protest more striking he put off his outer garments, and for three years walked in his tunic, to enforce his prediction that so far from Egypt being able to give efficient assistance, her people would be soon on their way into captivity, stripped of their garments as Isaiah himself was. This prediction was fulfilled in the conquest of Thebes, which is referred to in Nah. iii. 8. We are all fond of making alliances against the day of trouble, and have to live to see our cherished hopes disappointed, and our house of cards thrown down. The expectation, whither we fled for help from the King of Assyria, is overthrown, and how shall we escape. Ah, there is no shelter that can suffice us in the hour of tribulation save the clefts of the Rock of Ages. Flee thither, O, soul of man, and be in safety.

On this morning we cannot forget Him who stripped Himself of His glory, and came to our world to walk its difficult and rugged paths "barefoot"; but He saved us from being taken into captivity, and has made us free with an eternal liberty. Let us praise Him! Not for us is the bitter inquiry—"How shall we escape?" Our soul is escaped as a bird from the snare.

SATURDAY, December 26. Isaiah xxi.

1-10. Isaiah, in the previous chapter, had foretold that Egypt would fall before Assyria; he now goes on to say that it is useless for his people to make alliances with the (then young) kingdom of Babylon, for that also was destined to fall before the same dread power. Assyria's full power, associated with Elam (Persia) and Media, would be brought to bear against her. He travails in pain as he watches for the result. Babylon is not expecting the siege; she is eating and drinking, when suddenly there is a cry, "Arise, anoint the shield, the foe is upon us." Sargon, the King of Assyria, falls upon his foes before their weapons are ready. From his watch-tower the Prophet tells us what is transpiring. First, he sees a military column on the march—troop, horsemen, asses, camels. Then, after an interval, the tidings are brought to him that Babylon is fallen. There is an inscription of Sargon's which attests the truth of this. But a few months later, he was murdered, and this tragic event led to the break-up of the Assyrian power.

11-12. Dumah, or Silence, probably stands for Edom, and signifies the silence of decay which had already settled down upon that land, once so prosperous. A voice asks eagerly how much of the night had gone. It was as though Edom could not bear the silence and darkness of the night, and longed to know when respite would arrive. Is not the world crying out in the same way for the manifestation of the sons of God? We cannot be sure of the reply. The answer is uncertain. Night and morning strive for supremacy; but there can be no doubt as to the final result.

13-17. From Edom the Prophet passes to their neighbours, the travelling merchants of Dedan. They have to avoid the Assyrian armies, they had to go aside from the great trade roads, and as fugitives seek for water and sustenance. And still worse calamities would befall. In that day of wrath, shelter us, O Lamb of God, by Thy blood! F. B. M.

The "Neglected Continent."

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY CONVENTION.

THE Missionary Association, which has already demonstrated its usefulness, both in binding closer together workers on the foreign field and those in the homeland, and in arousing fresh interest in missionary operations in many lands, was wisely advised in organizing the three-days' South American Missionary Convention, which was held last week at Exeter Hall.

Gladness and sorrow were mingled during the first assembly, on Wednesday afternoon, as the striking story was unfolded of the spiritual darkness of Brazil, and of the spreading of Gospel light. Rev. James Stephens, who presided, said that until recently the vast Continent of South America has not had its rightful place in the thoughts of Christians. Its people have special claims. Roman Catholicism there reveals itself in a particularly debased form, while the native tribes are Pagan. Despite all obstacles, however, we must remember regarding South America, as well as other lands, the Lord's command to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. South America is not to be regarded as a competitor with other fields for our sympathy and support. Rather we must look upon missionary enterprise there as an integral part of the evangelistic labours of God's people.

THE OUTLOOK IN BRAZIL.

Dr. J. G. Rocha, who followed, said that Brazil is, of course, the youngest and the largest of the South American republics. It is three times as large as India, and equal in size to the whole United States, omitting Alaska. Itinerant missionary work in so gigantic a field is necessarily difficult and expensive. The population is, perhaps, nearly 20,000,000, and there are only five to six thousand miles of railway. Dr. Rocha briefly surveyed the missionary operations of Presbyterians, the "Kalley" churches, Methodists, Brethren, the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., the Sailors' Mission at Rio, the Bible Societies, and other vigorous bodies; but despite the faith and energy manifested, the need for extension is very great. Some causes, indeed, have had to be forsaken for want of workers. Hundreds of places are unoccupied, both among Brazilians and Indians. Who is going to take to them the precious Word of Life?

ROMANISM AND RATIONALISM.

The next speaker, Rev. James Fanstone, said that in the south of Brazil, Rationalism prevails, and in the north, Romanism. As regards education, only a small proportion of the people can read and write, and they are taught by the priests. During the past few years priestcraft has been very active in opposing the Gospel; nevertheless, there has been a widespread forward movement of the Evangelicals. At Pernambuco the membership of the Protestant churches has grown to 1,000. Throughout the south the good seed has sprung up, and there are thousands of members. The deepest disgust is felt by the people at the profligacy of the priests, whose immoral conduct, indeed, is notorious; and with such examples before the people, it is no matter for surprise that the standard of morality is generally very low. Yet nowhere, perhaps, has missionary effort reaped a richer harvest.

The last speaker, Rev. W. L. Tweedie, secretary of the "Help for Brazil" Mission, expressed the earnest hope that the Convention would mark the inauguration of a new era. Briefly touching on the history of missionary work in Brazil, Mr. Tweedie recalled the mission sent to that country by Calvin, which was soon stamped out with cruel persecution by the Jesuits. Coming down to the present time, and describing the devoted labours of the late Dr. Kalley, Mr. Tweedie contended that the chief reason why missions to Roman Catholic countries are but scantily supported is because people forget the history of Papal tyranny, and fail to realize the debasing character of Romanist rule. In the best interests of missions to such countries as Brazil, there should be a more general study of such works as Dr. Robertson's "The Roman Catholic Church in Italy."

THE BIBLE IN SOUTH AMERICA.

The evening meeting was devoted to the statements of the South American work of the Bible Society. Mr. George E. Morgan, who presided, earnestly advocated the cause of the Society—"the John the Baptist of missionary work"; and Rev. J. H. Ritson, the next speaker, said that the sparsity of population in South America may account to some extent for the neglect of the continent. Churches eager to show statistical results are thus discouraged.

Moreover it is thought that a form of Christianity prevails, but there, "Roman Catholicism is more ignorant than heathenism." South America needs evangelizing as much as Central Africa. The Bible Society is expending much money, and endeavouring to make the Bible the book of the people. The Society has for nearly a hundred years been despatching consignments of the printed Word to various parts of South America.

Describing the intolerance and persecution of Rome, Mr. Ritson said that at one place the priests, anxious to hinder the dissemination of the truth, distributed tracts in which Protestants were accused of praying to the devil, saying, "Holy Satan, hear us for Martin Luther's sake." Colporteurs in the Society's employ are stedfastly maintaining the work, and Bibles have also been supplied to large numbers of European immigrants to the Argentine. The speaker paid an earnest tribute to the labours of other societies, and showed that in view of the liberty now accorded in various places to sell the Bible, there is a wide field for extension right away to remote places hitherto untouched by Protestant missionaries.

Rev. John Sharp, dealing with the work of the Bible Society from the linguistic standpoint, showed that for the Spanish-speaking peoples a new version must soon be prepared, while progress is being made with a version for those who speak Portuguese. As for the Indians, they are scattered and illiterate, and much has yet to be learned as to their languages and dialects; hence many are unprovided with the Scriptures in their mother tongue. For the Moravian missions in Dutch Guiana, and for Hindoo coolies employed in the plantations of British Guiana, translations have been provided; but how much more remains to be done!

Mr. R. Caldwell, in a few concluding words, pleaded for the union of Protestant missions in Brazil, and for co-operative effort in other parts of the continent, with a view to preventing overlapping or waste of money and labour.

SOME RELIGIOUS AGENCIES AT WORK.

At Wednesday afternoon's assembly, Mr. Robert Caldwell occupied the chair, and the addresses dealt with some of the agencies at work for the enlightenment of the people apart from the direct preaching of the Gospel. Mr. Chas. W. Elam described the operations of the Victoria Gospel Press, which is sending out monthly over 20,000 Gospel papers. Where the preacher's voice cannot be heard the printed tract finds its way, and again and again proves the instrument whereby men and women learn for the first time of a Divine Being.

As secretary of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, Rev. E. W. Matthews recalled the circumstances which led his Mission to take an interest in the spiritual welfare of seamen visiting South American ports. One of the latest evidences of the growth of the movement is found at Buenos Ayres, where last year a commodious building, the Victoria Sailors' Home, was opened, the ground being a gift from the Government, showing that prejudice has given way to sympathy and support.

PENETRATING THE INTERIOR.

In vivid terms Mr. Emilio Olsson pictured some of the difficulties to be encountered by the colporteur. Having spent twenty years in South America, Mr. Olsson is able to draw upon a wide and varied experience. During these years he has travelled 50,000 miles, visiting every country on the continent, disposing of 20,000 copies of the Scriptures among no fewer than 242 nationalities and tribes. The speaker made an impassioned appeal for a closer study of the present need and opportunity, that the responsibility resting on the Christian Church at home may be more deeply realized.

A particularly interesting phase of service was described by Miss Edmondstone, who represented the Postal and Telegraph Christian Association. She had encouraging progress to report—progress very largely the result of the wonderful way in which God has used the little publication, El Correo, in bringing to the darkened minds of officials and others, the light that has dispelled the gloom and chased away the last shadow of superstition and unbelief.

A USEFUL SOCIETY.

In the evening Dr. Warren was in the chair, and there was a much more numerous attendance than had been the case at previous gatherings. The object of the Conference was the burden of prayer offered by Revs. R. Nicoll and W. L. Tweedie. The addresses were devoted to the setting forth of the aims and work of the South American Missionary Society. The first speaker was Rev. E. P. Cachemaille, who gave a comprehensive survey of the operations of the Society. He spoke of the many respects in which the "Neglected Continent" differs from other mission fields. The Society dates its origin back to 1844. God in His providence forced the workers from the first tilled fields, and many doors stood open to receive them. Among the most influential phases of the work are the schools and institutions of Rev. W. Case Morris, which are now attended by 2,400 children. Evangelistic work is cultivated by the chaplains, and is showing signs of development.

Passing to speak of the labours of others outside the South American Mission Society, Mr. Cachemaille recalled the noble endeavours of the Moravians, who settled 170 years ago in Dutch Guiana, and now have a constituency of 29,000 members. In 1829, the Church Missionary Society established stations in British Guiana, where Protestant missions have grown apace with remarkable results.

Captain E. Poulden, following, furnished some informing statistics, showing the large percentage of British imports and exports with South America. He spoke in encouraging terms of the Society's ministry among seamen in the different ports.

Mr. E. Bernau brought tidings of a cheering nature concerning the efforts made among the Inca, Chaco, and other Indian tribes of Paraguay. He interested his hearers with a recital of many of the curious customs and beliefs which served to emphasize the great need and opportunity which this field presents. Numbers of these Indians have been won to a knowledge of God's great gift to men, have thrown aside their superstitions, and are seeking in simplicity of faith to follow Christ.

LESSONS LEARNED BY EXPERIENCE.

On Friday afternoon the chair was taken by Mr. R. C. Morgan, who raised a note of thanksgiving for the devoted workers who have gone to South America, although the number is altogether inadequate for the need. When God has a people wholly given up to Him, we shall hear tidings of what He can do such as we have never heard before. We untie God's hands by prayer.

Representing the Paraguay Evangelical and Medical Mission, Mr. John Hay pictured the need of the country as he had seen it during his ten years of work. Alike among the Indian and the so-called Christian populations, the colours of the picture are so dark as to be almost incredible to any who have not seen it. Romanism is seen in the grossest form in that fair republic; chief among the gods of the land is the Virgin Mary, and the thoughts of the people rarely, if ever, go beyond the painted representation. Ignorance stands in the way of all progress, intellectual or social, life is held at a low value, and the priesthood is a barrier to all uplifting of the people. The Jesuits have wrought their purposes with deadly effect, leaving in Paraguay a festering and open sore due to European influence. The Mission was organized last year, and five labourers are now at work, one of the aims in view being that medical and evangelistic missionaries should itinerate in company.

Speaking as director of the South American Evangelical Mission, Mr. Bryce W. Ranken passed in review the whole continent as a mission-field, and showed that there are at least 800 cities and towns and 1,200 villages and hamlets, in which forty millions of people are living. The mistake has been that Christians at home have thought, because Romanism was there, the people had a measure of light, whereas the spiritual darkness is in many cases denser than even among the heathen. Only those who could imagine a land or a life with the Word of God blotted out, could have any conception of what is the state of religion in these lands. If the missionary conditions of South America could be applied, we should have in London about thirty labourers in the Gospel, working in couples.

Three lessons learned by the Mission are (1) the necessity of concentration on the field, (2) the desirability of administration also on the field itself, and (3) the clamant call for a native ministry. As one of the results of this recognition, it has been arranged that he and Mrs. Ranken should leave as soon as possible for Brazil, spending a preliminary year at San Paulo, and settling ultimately in one of the southern provinces to found a new missionary base. South America he thought of as a battle-field where three forces are struggling for supremacy—(1) the Jesuits, who are returning to the continent in great numbers; (2) spiritualism, which is spreading like a canker; (3) the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. A. T. Dence, speaking on behalf of Mr. Reginald Young's Colporteur Mission (San Paulo), graphically described the measures taken for the preaching of the Gospel in untouched regions by means of itineration; and related striking instances of awakening among the people, with miracles of grace in the bringing of men and women out of darkness into light.

Among others who took part in the proceedings were Dr. Cronin, Mr. James Stark, Mr. R. Caldwell, and Mr. Lister Newton.

WHAT HARLEY HOUSE IS DOING.

From the chair on Friday evening, Mr. William McCall read Isaiah lv. as sounding forth the message required by South America. "What Harley House has done for South America," was the subject of a résumé given by Mr. E. A. Talbot. He recalled the interesting fact that Dr. Grattan Guinness, sen., originally intended, more than thirty years ago, before the foundation of the first training college, to join the mission begun by the heroic Captain Allen Gardiner in Tierra del Fuego. A few of the fifty workers who have gone to South America from Harley House were named, including Rev. James Fanstone, Mr. Frederick Fletcher, the veteran self-supporting missionary, Mr. J. H. L. Ewen, whose story is told in "The Neglected Continent," and Robert Lodge, whose body was laid in the first missionary grave in Bolivia.

Describing Argentina as "a land of promise," (as far as South America is concerned), to the missionary, Mr. Talbot declared that the only lack is that of Spirit-filled men to bring the Gospel of Jesus Christ to the people. (1) The spiritual need is that of over 4,000,000 people, the State religion being Roman Catholic, though very many are outside that influence. The spread of education is leading to a decline in the power of Rome, while the governing classes are awakening to the fact that the progressive nations are Protestant, the dying ones Roman Catholic.

Evangelical enterprise in Argentina is constructive, rather than destructive; and everywhere the preachers of the Gospel find those who are longing for a better state of things, and have sent their cry out into the Christian world, until at last it is being heard and heeded. A brief sketch of what is being done to meet the need, gave the premier place to the work of the Bible Societies; while special mention was also made of the efforts put forth by the South American Missionary Society.

Speaking of Buenos Ayres, and the work there of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union, Mr. Talbot mentioned that although education is both compulsory and free, at least 25,000 children are roaming the streets because there is no accommodation for them. Besides other Gospel work, much is done for these little ones by Pastor George Smith and his colleagues, while a new department is being organized for the conduct of nursing and maternity work among the poor women of the city. But the Union concerns itself specially with "the regions beyond," and is meeting with much encouragement in connection with its efforts at Las Flores, Coronel Suarez, Tres Arroyos, and Tandil, the two last named stations having been opened during the past year.

The congregations are truly cosmopolitan—Argentines, Spaniards, Dutch, Germans, Danes, French, Italians, English, Belgians, Austrians, and other nationalities being represented. The message is being prospered, but the work is stayed by a lack of financial support, and doors that are wide open are left unentered by the heralds of the Good Tidings.

Attention was turned to Peru by Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness, who gave a striking view of the contrast between the liberty of Argentina and the denial of freedom in Peru. He reviewed briefly the changes that were introduced by the establishment, about the time of the Norman Conquest, of the Inca empire, the most important form of government that South America ever saw. Then Spain came with her confiscadores, her priests, and all her terrible doings. The land was conquered, the Incas being subdued more easily because at the time they were divided.

There has been a mixture of blood ever since, and the Quichuas have lived a despised life among the conquerors. By-and-by the dominion of Spain was thrown off, and the country has since improved in many directions. To understand the position of affairs, the geography must be clearly understood. There is the long coast line, with the Andes very near, causing the short rivers, with charming valleys breaking through the deserts. A beautiful illustration of spiritual truth was found in the seeds which lie sometimes for ten years in the desert before the rains reach them, but living all the time, and springing up ultimately into beautiful flowers.

ROME OVERREACHING HERSELF.

In the ports there is a population representing all the races of the earth with every degree of admixture. The life is irreligious and immoral, and for a long time no revival had been known; but in 1897 he himself saw a time of grace, in Iquique and Callao especially. Referring with much enthusiasm to the labours on the coast of Dr. Wood, of the American Methodist Episcopal Church, he reminded his hearers of the barrier interposed to aggressive Gospel effort by the Peruvian constitution, which forbids the establishment of any form of religion save Romanism. Where there has been unrelieved Romanism, there has been unrelieved immorality, with an utter absence of political rectitude. What is wanted there, as here, is the preaching of the Word. There is plenty of scepticism, but the best antidote is proved to be the Word of God itself. The bitterness of Rome has, however, overreached itself, and led to a revulsion of opinion to a certain extent on the part of some of the rulers, so that practically a small amount of liberty is allowed, though theoretically there is none.

With graphic touch the lessons were driven home that if Rome be allowed to gain power in this country the results will be the withdrawal of religious liberty, and the forbidding of the spread of the Scriptures.

Among the mountains live the descendants of the old Incas amid surroundings strangely similar to those of the Congo region in Africa. Harley House workers began on the coast, and supported themselves by teaching and otherwise for a time, after which God opened the way for Dr. Guinness to go out on a visit. The result of consideration was a determination to leave the coast and go inland. The city of Cuzco had been twice visited unsuccessfully, but a settlement was ultimately effected in 1897, and work for God begun where fanaticism had reigned so long. A school was not allowed, but a photographic shop was opened, and a solid position secured, affording many opportunities for tract distribution and other forms of testimony for Christ.

Before the meeting closed, Mr. Robert Caldwell gave expression to the feeling that the Convention would lead to much in the way of Gospel effort for South America. He asked for the foundation of a Prayer Union, and it was arranged that once a month the Friday prayer-meeting at Harley House should be set aside principally for South America. He also asked for a move forward specially in Brazil, as well as for the Andino Republics, suggesting that these might be special topics of prayer.

Impressions from the Platform.

The South American Missionary Convention has come and gone. Looking back over the three days during which the Convention lasted, and trying to gather together the results, it would seem that the following points emerge:—

(1) Speaking generally, it may be said that the Convention was decidedly a success. Representatives of missionary organizations, and of smaller Christian efforts not possessing any definite organization, came together to consider the needs of South America as a whole, and separately the needs of the various Republics into which the Continent is divided. The very coming together of so many workers in South America, and friends interested in its evangelization, was of itself a good thing, and clearly indicated that the spirit of prayer so manifest everywhere has compassed South America also. It was plain to all who had the privilege to attend the meetings that the Holy Spirit had been at work in the hearts of many, and was very manifestly present. The spiritual tone was all that could be desired. Everyone seemed to realize vividly the vastness of the territory to be evangelized, and the excessive need for a great strengthening of present missionary efforts; and of the going forth, in one capacity or another, of a much larger band of workers burdened with a desire to live for Christ, and thereby to witness for Him, especially in the unreached towns and scattered villages lying away from the sea-board cities—where alone Christian workers are at present found.

(2) Corrupt as those best acquainted with South America knew the Church of Rome to be, it may be safely said that the moral degradation and spiritual destitution of the vast territories over which it has held uncontrolled sway, for more than four centuries, was but dimly guessed at, even by those most conversant with the state of affairs. The immoralities, the drunkenness, the nameless sins in which the priests welter unabashed (members of the Church of Rome itself being witnesses) make one's flesh creep with very shame that humanity could sink so low. To know how deplorable things are, and to sit idly by, would surely be to brand the Church of Christ with ineffable guilt. The blood of the millions perishing in their sins, through lack of knowledge of the true way of salvation, will assuredly lie at the door of every Christian man and woman cognisant of these things if they do not rise up in the name of outraged humanity to put an end to the iniquitous tyranny of a Church by which such abominations can be perpetrated.

(3) The need of South America has by this Convention been brought home to the Christians of Great Britain in a way that it has never been before. Hitherto the evangelization of that continent has been largely looked upon as the duty of the Church in North America. That duty has been acknowledged by the American Church, and in some measure met. But the Church of Christ in this land has now been brought face to face with its responsibility for the neglected peoples in such a way as to make it imperative on all who truly seek to follow the Master, and to obey His command, to attempt something far beyond anything that has hitherto been attempted by British Christians.

"The Sleeping Sickness;"

AND PRESENT APOSTASY.

IN the interesting extract which appeared recently in the CHRISTIAN from Dr. Harry Guinness' book, "These Thirty Years," a painful comparison is drawn between the mysterious and fatal malady which is decimating the native population of the Middle Congo, and the spiritual lethargy which at present prevails in the Churches at home in regard to the Master's great commission. "Does it not seem strange," asks the beloved author, "that when all the doors of gracious opportunity are widest open, there should be a universal complaint on the part of missionary societies of a dearth of suitable candidates for foreign service?* The problem," he says, "must be squarely met, and the causes of this decadence remedied." Then follows the mention of some of the "antagonistic forces" operating towards the production of this lamentable lack of missionary zeal—materialism, worldliness, pleasure-seeking, money-making, &c. But one MAIN ROOT CAUSE of the "present distress" I believe to be

"INFIDEL BIBLE TEACHING UNDER CHRISTIAN AUSPICES."

These are multiplying in ever-gathering volume. Publication after publication follows one another in rapid succession, each being in advance of the other in the daringness of its attack upon the Divine origin and supreme authority of the written Word. "As the world crucified the Son of God, so the critics crucify It; and as those divided His garments by casting lots, so by an equally haphazard process these divide Its garments." Yea, some laying violent hands on the sacred seamless vesture of Inspired Writ are even tearing it to pieces, only to make of it a mere heap of "shreds and tatters." Soon we shall have no Bible left. That would be a small matter comparatively, it is true, if the Book were what the destructive critics claim to have discovered it to be—a book with no higher inspiration for its source than might be ascribed to the writings of a Shakspeare or a Milton—"a collection of books so riddled through and through with spuriousness and deception that they can no longer be reverenced as 'the Holy Scriptures.'"

I know it is said, "Criticism tends to paralyze action until it has been freely ventilated and its true significance guaged, and that when the critics have done this work a new enthusiasm for missions will result." But will this be the case? I feel sure it will not; yea, it CANNOT. "A new enthusiasm for missions" begotten of a wholly discredited Bible—a BIBLE NOT EVEN TRUE—a Bible "built up of materials direct from the living fountain of popular saga and folk-lore"—a Bible, its "kernel of fact and history only recently discovered behind the traditions in which it has been enshrined by the creative genius of a people singularly gifted with imaginative powers." Impossible!!

A Bible founded largely on fables, forgeries, and falsehood of the worst kind, knowingly and deliberately sent forth as "religious facts" by their numerous and anonymous authors, accompanied by a "Thus saith the Lord," thus stamped with the very imprimatur of the all holy and true God.† Such a Bible create missionary enthusiasm! Impossible! A Bible in which "the faculty of poetic and historic imagination" is employed as a suitable medium of instruction by the Spirit of Truth. Can we conceive the Holy Spirit of truth a party to fraud and deceivableness—that Holy Spirit whose voice we hear speaking in the inspired Psalmist, and saying, "I hate and abhor lying, but Thy law do I love"? Can such a Bible supply fuel for Christian missionary zeal? Impossible! impossible!

"Imagine the position of a missionary obliged to tell those whom he has admitted, or was about to admit, into the fold of Christ's holy Catholic Church, that while one part of that Bible which he could not withhold from them was true and genuine history (even thus much is denied to-day), the older and larger portion was only fabrication and fable, leading up to, and preparing for the later; and indeed only real Revelation, simply in the sense (if there be such a sense) in which the stories of King Lear or King Arthur may be said to prepare the minds of children for authentic history! Already the question has been significantly asked by one representing the extreme left wing of Rationalism: "Why should we unteach our converts Hindoo mythology, only to teach them Hebrew mythology instead? Why, indeed!"*

* Mr. Montagu Beachamp, who has recently secured a footing in Kwei Fu', an important city on the Upper Yang-tz, writes that he is much burdened with the awful need of the district, in which there are hundreds or even thousands of enquirers. He could open twenty centres to-morrow IF HE HAD THE MEN. Bishop Cassels, in a private letter writes: "In regard to the stability of the work, in most places it goes steadily on. Nevertheless, we lose immensely by not having sufficient workers to take advantage of the openings. So far as I know, MY APPEAL FOR MORE WORKERS HAS HAD NO EFFECT UPON THE HOME CHURCHES."—"China's Millions" for December.

† More than 300 times Jehovah's name appears in connection with Levitical appointments in the Book of Leviticus, a book which it is asserted was written by one or more of the "pious" priests of the captivity in the days of Ezekiel. Would a pious Israelite have so treated the Sacred Name? An impious priest could not.

"The Life Line":

STORY OF REV. E. S. UFFORD.

DURING a short visit paid to London in October, a representative of THE CHRISTIAN had the pleasure of an interview with Rev. E. S. Ufford, author of the hymn, "Throw out the Life Line." He is now a man of 52, who was converted at the age of 21 in Stratford, Conn. An important feature in the moulding of Mr. Ufford's life was the reading soon after of a volume telling of the work Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were used of God to accomplish in Great Britain and elsewhere; and from that time forward he was filled with a desire to do Gospel work.

Starting at once to speak and sing about the Saviour on the sea shore, his testimony was blessed. Several very intemperate men were converted, on whom he called when in the town last year, and found them living useful and honourable lives. Entering a Baptist seminary at Portland (Maine), he passed through the course of training, and thereafter held five pastorates. The last was at Holyoke, Mass., of which he was the first settled pastor. He ministered to that congregation for seven years, and witnessed a manifest work of grace.

A taste for music and a firm belief in the power of the singing of the Gospel had led Mr. Ufford to compose and publish a number of hymns; and it was when labouring at Westwood, near Boston, that his best-known work took shape in his mind.

He had seen something of the terrible effects of storms on a dangerous coast, and the thought grew on him of the analogy between these breakers and the breakers of life, in which so many human wrecks go down. Words and music of "Throw out the Life Line" came to him simply and naturally, and the hymn won its way into favour wherever it became known.

After singing the song in a number of places in New England, Mr. Ufford felt called on to carry it, with its telling story and lessons, round the world—praying that God would give him the joy of seeing a thousand souls saved. The effect of his message is heightened by the wearing of a neat uniform which he has himself designed, and the using of life-saving apparatus for illustrative purposes. Starting westward some twelve months ago, he travelled viâ the Sandwich Islands, Japan, China, India, and Italy.

Addressing all kinds of audiences on land and on ship-board, he has met with striking experiences. At Honolulu, 300 convicts were assembled under a tree to hear his testimony for God. In California, when he held up a life line by which sixteen people had been saved from one ship, a sailor called out that he was one of the men. Numbers have testified that by the grace of God they had been enabled to lay hold on the Life Line, and were now rejoicing in the Saviour.

Romanists and the Bible.

A ROMAN priest residing at Irvington, near New York, Rev. Father Earley, recently forbade the children of members of his church to attend a free kindergarten and industrial school maintained by Miss Helen Gould, the well-known philanthropist. The reason for this was that at the annual reunion, which this year took place on a Friday, some ham sandwiches were served, of which certain Roman Catholic children partook! One or two letters passed when Miss Gould heard of the ban that had been placed on her school, in one of which Father Earley said:—

"The Catholic Church has never prohibited any of her members reading the Scriptures or Bible. In every family whose means will permit the buying of a copy, there you will find the authentic version of God's Word, as authorized by the Church, and which has come down to us unchanged from the time of Christ Himself. But the Catholic Church does object to the reading of the Protestant version, which goes back only to the days of Henry VIII. of England, and was then gotten up for obvious reasons. Neither will the Catholic Church allow private interpretation of the Scriptures, for there would be as many interpretations as there are men and women whose interests and passions would suggest."

Later, Miss Gould, through her secretary, wrote to Dr. W. W. White, President of the Bible Teachers' Training School in this city, offering prizes of 400dols., 250dols., and 100dols. respectively, "for the best essays on the double topic: (1) The origin and history of the version of the Bible approved by the Roman Catholic Church; (2) The origin and history of the American Revised Version of the English Bible." The competition is not to be confined to the students of the school named, and the essays are to be sent in before March 1, 1904, Dr. White and three members of his faculty to be on the committee of judges.

Dr. White has, of course, accepted the offer, and says that the other five judges will be men of the highest scholarship in the country; he proposes that some shall be prominent in the affairs of the Roman Church. In view of Miss Gould's prominence not only in religious and philanthropic circles, but in Society, the outcome of this sacerdotal attack on her, and the extraordinary statements about the Bible, is likely to produce effects that will be felt, not only all through this country, but over South America as well.

Religious Education.

Come, ye children, hearken unto me: I will teach you the fear of the Lord (Psalm xxxiv. 11).

By Rev. Dr. BALGARNIE.

"RELIGION" may be defined as Heart and Life "Attachment" to God our Father in Christ. It is the infusion of new light, new life, new love, into the soul through God the Holy Spirit. It begins with conversion, in turning to Christ with all our mind and heart, for pardon and peace with God through the Cross, for a renovated nature and character through the power of the Holy Ghost, and for grace to help us to live and die in His service. In other words, it begins by the acceptance of Christ as Saviour and Lord for ever. It grows and expands with increasing knowledge of Christ, by daily prayer for His presence and blessing, and by the exercise of all the faculties of body, soul, and spirit in the work of His kingdom. And it is perfected in complete assimilation to Him at His glorious appearing.

Religion is the consciousness of being "always with the Lord." Next to the New Testament, the most religious book I know is "The Pilgrim's Progress." Religious education, therefore, will consist in the drawing out of the thoughts, affections, hopes, and aspirations of the young towards God our Father in Christ. As an English mother can bring up her boy to trust, honour, and obey his absent father in India or elsewhere, by the way in which she speaks of him, by the letters she reads from him, by the affection which she herself shows to him, so may those who have children to train for Christ bring them up in heartfelt loyalty and obedience to Him who loves them, and who gave Himself for them: "Whom having not seen, we love." If children at school can be taught to love their king and country, and to grow up good and useful citizens of the empire, by what they see and hear of them in their daily lessons, surely the same children can be brought up to trust and love the Great King of their king, and the kingdom of truth and righteousness. "Suffer little children to come unto me . . . for of such is the kingdom of God."

Observe, I am not speaking of national education. In the Christian home, first of all, in the Sunday-school, in the Church, and here and there, in exceptional cases, under spiritually taught preceptors of the day schools, the work of religious education is effected, and children are brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

I. The Chief Thing to be imparted to a child in Religious Education is the Knowledge of Christ. What every religious teacher has to aim at is to get some image and likeness of Christ the Son of God into the mind, heart, and memory of the young. They must know Him, whom they have to trust, honour, and love. They must see His face, even if it be as in a mirror darkly. As a painter has to give many final touches to the human form he is depicting, before the perfect "speaking likeness" is produced, so the children's teacher must add lesson after lesson from the Gospels before they can apprehend the truth as it is in Jesus. The saving moment comes when they can see by faith "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." Paul dates his conversion from the moment "when it pleased God to reveal His Son in me."

There are instances on record in which, in a dream of the night, the soul of the sleeper has been enabled to realize in unity the varied delineations of its instructors, and has read its hope of pardon and acceptance in that face that is fairer than the sons of men. Does not Dr. Doddridge relate some such experience of Colonel Gardiner? But here let me sound a note of warning. It is the image and likeness of the risen and glorified, that is to say, of the living Christ, which we must strive to reproduce in the minds and hearts of the children. "We are saved by His life." The crucifix is fatal to the conception of the risen Redeemer. Pictorial representations of Christ "after the flesh," that so often disfigure our Bibles, are hindrances, rather than helps, to the realization of the beauty that is in Christ. The countries of the great masters in painting, and the native worshippers in the churches which they have decorated with their Madonnas and Infant Saviours, are perhaps the least enlightened and least spiritual in Christendom. It is more to admire the artist than his subject that so many flock to see them.

To see, by faith, God in Christ we must reascend with the three disciples the Mount of Transfiguration. There for a moment or two at midnight, "His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment became white and glistering." It was the inner glory of His Deity shining through the veil of His humanity; God looking at the prostrate disciples through human eyes, speaking to them with human lips, and touching them with human hands; it was Incarnate Deity. Yes, "great is the mystery of godliness—God manifest in the flesh." That is the image and likeness of the King Invisible which we must see for ourselves by faith—see and worship and adore.

II. The Text-Book for Religious Education is the Bible. No systems of doctrines, Church Articles, Confessions of Faith, or Catechisms, can afford much help in the effort to impress on youthful hearts the image and likeness of God our Saviour. They are all serviceable in their own province and department of instruction, as safeguards of truth, as records of Church triumph over error and heresy, but they are practically useless as means of conversion and salvation.

It is not the truth in doctrine, in ritual, or in symbolism, but the truth in Christ that saves. No book, therefore, can be made a substitute, in this work of soul-winning, for the Word of God itself. The Bible is Bunyan's "light" over the gateway that admits to the pilgrimage—

> The Light that shines upon the road
> That leads us to the Lamb.

That light, as reflected in the Old Testament pages, has been described as dim and fitful, vague and uncertain, and therefore unsuitable for the guidance of children. And yet there can be no question that it was clear enough and steady enough to secure a following. Abraham's life of faith testified that he had seen Christ's day, albeit "afar off." The author of the Twenty-Third Psalm followed a light, scarcely less intense than ours. Isaiah saw "the King, the Lord of Hosts." Even the authors of the uncanonical books appealed to their countrymen to wait for the promise of His coming. From Genesis to Malachi, from Enoch to John the Baptist, there was light enough to lead, and light, too, ever increasing in brightness till it reached the perfect day.

But it is in the New Testament pages that we see light in God's light clearly. It would almost seem as if the Gospels had been written for the children. How simply they describe the deepest "mystery of godliness," in the birth of their Saviour at Bethlehem! His words of fathomless wisdom are given in parables. His work of healing the nations is foreshadowed in miracles. His invitation to the children themselves, and gracious reception of them, even in infancy, are given in the incident at Salim. And what child cannot understand the words, "He died for me"? Let our children grow up in familiarity with His example and teaching, with the story of His death and resurrection, of His Divine personality as Jesus the Son of God as displayed in Scripture, and they will see for themselves the face of their Saviour and Friend.

> The words of men grow old;
> They lose their taste and power;
> But Thy sweet words, O Jesus Christ,
> Are life for evermore.

III. Christian Life is the Best Practical Commentary for schools and families. The best commentary on the Bible, for those who have children to educate for Christ, is a Christian life. It is not so much what we say or do to children, as what we are, that helps them to understand the truth as it is in Jesus. Lessons are forgotten; warnings, admonitions, and counsels are neglected; but the memory of what father, mother, and teachers were will abide with them for ever. Augustine carried the image of his sainted mother, Monica, to his life's end. She was his ideal of what a follower of Christ should be. Every Christian parent or teacher is to the child "a living epistle of Christ," the translation of Bible truth into life, the embodiment of New Testament Christianity, the practical religion of everyday life.

"Example is better than precept" is an old saying and a true one. What we are has more influence with others than what we say. To preach the happiness of a religious life will make little impression on our hearers, unless we ourselves are filled with the joy of God's salvation. A sermon on "Contentment" will fall on incredulous ears, if it be seen that the preacher is suffering from disappointed ambition. "Ye shall keep my Sabbaths, and reverence My sanctuary: I am the Lord!" should not be followed by the silent "commentary"—"My father and mother have surely never heard the words!" Yes, we have all a commentary of the inspired text to make, a translation of the old Book to render, a "revised version" to write; and the book that is to bear the record is our own Christian life and conversation for the instruction and benefit of others. How else shall they take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus? Next to this living commentary, the Revised Version is the cheapest and the best.

But let me say to the children themselves that it is Christ they have to trust and follow, to imitate, obey and love. Even if ministers and teachers should fail you, though father and mother forsake you, the Lord will take up your cause. Give your heart into His keeping, put your life into His hands, ask Him day by day for His help and protection, and He will guide you by His counsel while you live, and afterward receive you into glory.

The After-Care Association.—Among the cases recently assisted by this Society (which seeks to facilitate the re-admission into social life of poor persons discharged recovered from lunatic asylums) are the following:—A respectable girl from the West of England; unsuitable home surroundings; boarded out for some weeks at the seaside, and afterwards excellent situation found for her.—A young woman, whose parents could not be traced; her clothes and other belongings had been lost at the time of her illness. She was boarded in the country for seven weeks, her boxes were found and restored, and a situation was found in which she gave great satisfaction.—An elderly woman, many years in an asylum; after a rest, a situation was found for her, where she is comfortable and greatly valued.—A superior young woman, very delicate, after a long rest in a country home, she was placed in service, and is doing well. The secretary is Mr. H. Thornhill Roxley, Church House, Dean's Yard, Westminster, S.W.

CONGREGATIONALIST PHILANTHROPIES.

IN several of the very darkest districts of the metropolis, the London Congregational Union is carrying on important evangelistic and philanthropic work, with encouraging results, under the experienced supervision of Mr. E. Wilson Gates.

At Collier's Rents Hall, in the densely-populated Borough, steady progress is being made. The missionary's own testimony is specially interesting. Deeply pathetic are some of the instances where help in kind has been rendered to people in extreme poverty. Every department has been sustained and attendances steadily increased, while internal structural alterations have been made to meet the requirements of the Sunday School, six new classes having been added to the upper school.

At Old Gravel Lane, Wapping, E., the work is carried on upon hallowed ground. A church was formed here in 1680, by Edward Veal, one of the 2,000 ejected ministers. In 1716, the existing building was erected, and in 1885 it was converted into a mission hall. Here, too, the statistics give much encouragement. St. Luke's, another poor district, has in it the Hope Mission. At one department, the Babies' Home, many little ones are "mothered" day by day, while their real mothers are at work earning a few shillings by washing, charing, or needlework. The fact that this "Babies' Home" recorded a total of 7,844 little guests in the course of the year is an indication of how much it is needed and appreciated. Other organizations of this Mission show a total of 736 meetings, and 39,158 attendances in the course of the year.

The Convalescent Home at Folkestone is the latest addition to the philanthropic work of the Union. It has thirty-seven beds for the benefit of the suffering poor.

Poor children are specially cared for in connection with this philanthropic work. In the winter, when labour is scarce, and thousands of men willing to work are numbered among the unemployed, the pinch of poverty is felt, and children as well as fathers and mothers are among the sufferers. The London Congregational Union's part in the children's ministry has been, to some extent, met by the establishment of free breakfast and dinner centres in various parts of London, by means of which many thousands of needy children have been provided with at least one substantial meal a day.

Our attention is next directed to Medland Hall,

THE ONLY FREE SHELTER IN LONDON

open to homeless men all the year round, irrespective of creed or nationality. A year's figures show no fewer than 124,458 admissions, while 174,544 free meals were supplied. A sad feature was that over 50,000 were turned away for lack of room. Summarizing the work of this splendid institution, Mr. Gates says:—

"At Medland Hall everything is free to homeless and penniless men. To each man is given ½lb of bread-and-butter, and coffee in addition on Sundays. Facilities are given for repairing boots and clothing. Free baths and lavatories are provided. 160 gallons of boiling water are ready when the hall is opened, and this supply is continued as long as it is required. Men are admitted at 6 p.m., and can leave early in the morning to seek work. The hall is cleared at 6 a.m. No labour task is imposed, by which men would be hindered in their search for work. The cost, including rent, wages, food, and every expense, works out at 1½d. per man per night."

An outstanding feature of the work is the Sunday night Evangelistic service. Over 400 men have been sent from Medland Hall to Canada, a happy arrangement for permanently aiding those who seek to start life afresh which has been afforded by the Self-Help Emigration Society, of which Mr. Gates is also secretary. Emigrants are sent to Canada principally during the spring, exception being made in the cases of persons going to homes provided for them by their friends, or to situations. A responsible representative of the Society accompanies each large party. The emigrants, however, are not merely assisted to the port of landing, for there are seventy-three correspondents in various parts of Canada, to whom they are sent. These correspondents inform the Committee in London what class of emigrants they can receive, and for how many they can find employment. They are also provided by the Committee with funds to enable them to supply the emigrants (in case of need), with food and lodging for a day or two, until employment is secured. The Society has, in addition, thirty-seven correspondents in Queensland, Victoria, South Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, and Florida.

A TYPICAL CASE.

J. T., an ironmoulder in the Midlands. Application was made early in 1902 for assistance to emigrate husband, wife, and three young children. Circumstances rendered it advisable for the husband to act as pioneer, and satisfactory arrangements having been made for the wife and children, he started to find a new home in the Dominion. Needed financial help was given by the Society, and work was secured for him immediately on his arrival. The fact that he was "a life teetotaler" was in itself a recommendation. The vicar of his parish, and also his employers in this country, testified to his sterling character.

Later, J. T. did what he could to meet the cost of sending out his wife and children, the Society supplied the deficiency, with the result that a reunited and happy family assembled in their new home. In a later letter, he said:—

I am taking this opportunity of thanking you for your continued kindness. I am now comfortably settled, and from all appearances trade seems likely to be brisk here for a long time to come. The farmers around are constantly asking me if I know of any other Englishmen who would like work, and they offer me all sorts of terms if I will send for one or two. There are four of us who came out through the Society on the ss. Irishman, and we all meet together once a week at my home for a comfortable chat. I have a beautiful home standing in its own land of two acres, meadow and garden land.

In all these passionate efforts to benefit the deserving poor and win them for the Master, Mr. Gates seeks the co-operation of friends everywhere, for the work is carried on quite irrespective of denomination. His address is, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, E.C.

Special Services in Theatres.

AT the kind invitation of Sir George and Lady Williams, a large gathering of workers in connection with the special religious services in theatres, halls, and mission rooms in London, took place on Wednesday, last week, at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate Street. Mr. J. W. Berry, of Ealing, hon. sec., presided (in the absence of Sir George Williams, who is in the South of France). He specially alluded to the work at the buildings more recently opened, viz., at the Ealing Theatre and the Foresters' Music Hall, Mile End, in which evidence of the power of God had been manifested in cases of conversion. This was true also of the other places. He stated that from his ten years' connection with this work, during which time he had gone round to the various buildings in different parts of London, he was convinced of its reality, its sincerity, and as well of the great need for its extension.

Rev. T. S. Hutchinson, clerical secretary of the London City Mission, and Mr. H. R. Walker, of the Stock Exchange, and a member of the committee, spoke to the workers, their addresses being of a deeply spiritual and practical nature. The larger part of the evening, however, was spent in prayer, workers from all the buildings taking part.

Rev. T. C. Udall, financial secretary, alluded to his long connection with the work, dating back, as a steward at St. James' Hall services to the year 1859, and to Sir George Williams' connection with it from its commencement at that period. The new report (forty-fourth) records a large number of conversions. It can be obtained at the offices of the Society, 3, Bridewell Place, London, E.C. It was agreed to send a letter to Sir George Williams, thanking him for convening the gathering.

Sailors of All Nations.

AN open-door for seamen of all nationalities is provided at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway; hence the useful and wide purpose it serves in this dark spot of sailor town. At the annual meeting a few days ago there was much to encourage. Not only was the gathering of friends numerous, but the report presented showed that God is using the efforts of His servants who are seeking to win men to a saving knowledge of the Gospel.

Large numbers of seamen avail themselves of the reading-room, and in the afternoon many a conversation takes place between the men and the resident deaconess. The men are deeply touched by the attention shown to them, and are grateful for the opportunity of pouring their troubles into a sympathetic ear.

There is the young lad from home with his home sickness, to be encouraged; the young man growing reckless, to be warned; the despairing man, who has lost ship, clothes, and money, through drink, to be told of One who will not cast him out; there is the cheery man, leaving for a voyage, trying to smile through a mist of tears, as he says good-bye; there is the old man getting past his work, to be advised, and if possible, helped. There are letters to be written, bags to be received and given out, pledges to be taken, in fact, endless opportunity of doing good in a quiet way.

From time to time Dr. Neatby and his helpers are cheered by receiving testimonies from some who have come under the influence of the mission. Two of the most recent are given, with many others, in the annual report:—

I am getting to know more of God's Word. My shipmates won't have anything to do with me, but I don't mind so long as I can continue to read God's Word. Nothing in the wide world can part me from it. My Lord has been doing much for me. I have asked Him to help me in my work, and He has. I can't tell you how happy I am with Jesus. My shipmates wonder what is the matter with me, because I never swear.

I cannot understand how I managed to exist—I cannot call it live—without the knowledge that I was saved. Now I have something to live for, I have opportunities to do something for Jesus, which I pray I may not let slip by unnoticed. Dear Miss ——, pray for me, that I may not do anything to disgrace the name of Him under whose banner I serve. I realize the responsibility that rests upon me, how others will watch me.

Speaking in sympathetic terms of the Strangers' Rest and its ministry, Mr. A. Garstin (who occupied the chair) referred to the greatest cause of thankfulness in connection with the work—the fact that from week to week God's spirit had convicted men of sin, and led them to roll their burden of sin upon the great Burden Bearer. In the absence, through illness, of Dr. A. M. Neatby (the secretary), a few outstanding features of the work were given by Mr. Searle. He emphasized the fact that the only attraction at the Rest is the preaching of the Gospel, and in this connection recalled a conversation heard by one of the workers between two men in the street. One was explaining the various places of amusement he had visited, where he had a "good time;" "but," he added, "if you want real friends go to the Strangers' Rest." Some of the most encouraging meetings of the week are those for Germans and Scandinavians; while the children's gatherings draw together over a hundred little ones off the streets. Miss Cleaver followed with a cheering account of the numerous channels through which the "good news" of the Gospel flows from the Rest. She cited some telling incidents that had come to light during the year, and confessed that while there has been much to dishearten, there has been far more to encourage.

Drawing upon his long experience among mariners in all parts of the world, Mr. J. Bennett Anderson appealed for personal effort and a deep sympathy on the part of Christians in bringing wanderers into the fold. Other speakers included Mr. Milton Horner; while Mr. Leng took the place of Madame Annie Ryall, and sang several Gospel melodies.

Pastor Hsi of North China.

GREAT as is the need for Spirit-filled men and women to carry the story of the Cross to far-off lands, another equally great forces itself continually on the attention of those responsible for the direction of foreign missions: that is for Spirit-filled men and women to be raised up in growing numbers from among the native Christians, who shall declare the whole counsel of God, with an appreciation of the mental position and attitude of their brethren which must remain beyond the reach of many of the missionaries who belong to another race. Mrs. Howard Taylor has placed all who take a part, by prayer or otherwise, in the carrying out of our Lord's command (Matt. xxviii. 19, 20) under fresh and great obligation, by the preparation of a fuller account of the remarkable life lived for God, by PASTOR HSI: ONE OF CHINA'S CHRISTIANS (3s. 6d. net. Morgan & Scott); and in an introduction, Mr. D. E. Hoste lays emphasis on some aspects of the present outlook which call for prayerful consideration.

With the prospect of a wide and rapid spread of Christianity in China, it is apparent that an important factor in settling the character of the coming church must be the spiritual level attained by the Chinese Christians who should lead their fellows. The foundations have been so far laid under European and American supervision, but not many of the members have yet developed such qualities as are necessary for leadership. Where suitable men have come to the front, there have been indications that a self-governing native church may prove its reality by following lines different from those which outsiders might have chosen. But as the evangelization of China will not be accomplished without the initiation of independent native enterprises, so it is very much to be desired that these should be ruled according to Oriental and not Occidental ideas. Not until responsibility is placed on native shoulders will it be known how many are capable of bearing that burden to the glory of God; and not until Chinese Christians are acting without even counsel from outside sources will it be known to what extent God will reveal to them the true means for winning their countrymen to Christ.

Much wisdom will be required by missionaries in taking the proper attitude of helpfulness and encouragement to qualified native leaders and their proposals, where these differ from conclusions arrived at by Western modes of thought. In the anticipation of such times as these, Mrs. Taylor's book cannot fail to be of the highest value; and the importance of the patient gathering and piecing together of all information available regarding such a man as Pastor Hsi would be difficult to exaggerate. Here young missionaries and friends of missions at home, not to speak of some with much experience on the field, have placed in their hands an important contribution to the discussion of the most pressing missionary problems now facing the Church. The book is at the same time an eloquent testimony to the marvellous grace of God in the individual life, and has other outstanding attractions which combine to make its possession a sine quâ non to those who would be up-to-date in this respect.

CONSECRATED ORIGINALITY.

The beautifully told life-story of this Chinese gentleman affords a striking example of the adaptability of the Christian faith to different races. Pastor Hsi never became a mimic Englishman; he was Chinese of the Chinese to the end. So testimony like his is a tool which the Spirit of God uses with great power among kinsmen and neighbours, while revealing Himself in ways not fully understood even by the missionary used as the means of conversion.

A few of the facts of Pastor Hsi's spiritual history are already well known to English readers. Here we have a wonderful record of simple faith in God honoured while as yet there was little instruction, and of steady growth in grace as the Lord led His child onward. Deeply interesting is the account of the early years in which Mr. Hsi acted as the Christian headman of his village, an office only resigned under the pressure of his ever-growing evangelistic usefulness. He was a man of independent mind, and as one taught of God was used from the first to lead others to the Lord. The problems presented by the persecution of the young believers were great, but he never flinched in applying to them the simple teaching of the Word of God.

Among other steps Mr. Hsi opened a medical mission station on native lines; and the crisis in his life came when foreign medicines failed for an Opium Refuge began by his friend Fan. As the outcome of much prayer there came the guidance necessary for the preparation of pills from ingredients then in Hsi's stock. So was the door opened to a wide future of opportunity and promise. The need was great. In the words of a paradoxical native saying, "eleven out of every ten" of the people of the province smoked opium; and, as the result of the experiments, the Refuge became famous. Others were opened in other villages and towns, until tidings of the work spread throughout all North China. Christ was lifted up to every needy one who came for bodily help, the Holy Spirit was honoured in every step taken, and the Lord provided the means required by His servants. Mistakes were made, and persecution arose, but the Lord was with His servant.

Pastor Hsi laboured on in the Gospel till he was over sixty, when the results of overstrain in bearing the burdens of his fellows told on him. He was laid aside for six months, during which a singularly beautiful testimony for God was given by his expressions of child-like faith. His thoughts were never of himself, but of those who were yet out in the darkness.

A feature of the book is the information supplied regarding the casting out of evil spirits in answer to prayer. Practically without addition the accounts are given in the words of the native sufferers and observers, and the reader is left to draw conclusions. But as God is seen to have been honoured again and again, light is undoubtedly shed on the awfulness of the principalities and powers with whom battle must be made in the strength of Christ.

For much more to gladden the Christian heart we must refer the reader to the volume itself. It is no mere chronicle, but a true biography, showing the growth and fruition of the different sides of a strong personality. Patient research, consecrated literary ability, and keen spiritual insight have combined to put into our hands a book which may confidently be expected to be used of God as a great force in the evangelization of China. We heartily concur with Mr. Hoste when he asks whether it should not awaken solemn searching of heart before God as to how far our own aims and practice in life can compare with the unremitting toil and unreserved devotion of one whose advantages fell far short of our own?

LETTER FROM REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

I HAVE just been reading the manuscript of a large part of a book now in the Press, by my daughter-in-law, Mrs. Howard Taylor, entitled PASTOR HSI OF NORTH CHINA.

It has given me great pleasure, and has caused me to thank God and take courage. Intensely interesting, it will carry the reader's attention from beginning to end. Great pains have been taken to ensure thorough accuracy in recording the facts of this remarkable life. Personally acquainted with Pastor Hsi, and with many of the events recorded, I can but long that it were possible for me to bring about the speedy sale of the whole edition.

The book is a sequel to "One of China's Scholars," and far surpasses in interest that earlier part of the story. It ought to do much towards deepening the spiritual life of the Lord's people, and in calling forth prayer that many more such men may be raised up among the literati of China.

I am hoping that friends of Missions will secure early copies, both for themselves and as Christmas and New Year gifts for others.

Chevalleyres, Vevey. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

About Books.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

At the end of a quarter of a century the Boys' Own Annual promises to be as great a favourite as ever. Those who have outgrown many of the charms of such literature will do well at this season of present-giving to recall their enthusiasm for earlier volumes, and we can assure them that their successors at school will be just as much delighted with this. Dr. Gordon Stables is among the story tellers, with a tale of the days of Nelson, and among others who contribute to that department are Rev. Dr. A. N. Malan, V. L. Going, G. Manville Fenn, and other favourites. While the contents are of what may be called a secular order, there is much that will educate while entertaining, knowledge being imparted in a popular fashion likely to make it stick in the memory. Amusements, outdoor and indoor, are interspersed with natural history, numismatics, fishing, gardening, and other pursuits. (8s. Religious Tract Society.)

In the Girls' Own Paper the gentler sex is provided for in a fashion that deservedly wins general favour. Household hints, cookery recipes, with needlework and dress papers, are frequent enough to show that the readers are qualifying for much usefulness. Hints on law, literature, art, and other subjects appeal to a wider interest. Recreations and games are not forgotten, while the Guild of Sympathy and other papers point to the development of human character on its best side. Mrs. Vaizey's "More About Pixie" is one of the best girls' stories we have read for long, and it is well supported by the work of Evelyn Everett-Green, Flora Klickman, Leslie Keith, E. Davenport Adams, and others. (8s. Religious Tract Society.)

Sermons, stories, poems, and all the other varied contents of The Fireside (7s. 6d.) are well suited for family reading. Those who live busy lives will find these pages attractive for any brief intervals that may present themselves, and such half hours will be profitably spent. Children and "grown-ups" are all provided for, and among Church of England families especially the volume will be a favourite. Home Words (2s.) is well-known in many parishes, and fully deserves the hearty welcome it receives. The stories and pictures are as good as ever. Among other popular contents we would call attention to notes on hymns and their authors. Daily lessons and other useful information are given. The Day of Days (2s.) is also bright and interesting, with much that will build up young people in the principles and history of the Church of England. Hand and Heart (2s.) contains eighteen well illustrated and popularly-told tales, by Rev. P. B. Power, Mrs. Garnett, Sarah Doudney, &c. All these volumes are decidedly Evangelical, the truths of the Gospel being kept in front, and expressed in simple telling fashion. ("Home Words" Publishing Office.)

Under Mr. T. B. Bishop's care, Our Own Magazine is a valuable help to parents and others in the Christian instruction of children. The stories are edifying as well as interesting, a special feature being those illustrating certain texts. Short papers, notes on the daily Scripture portions, and pictures, are also of the most helpful and useful description. (2s. Children's Special Service Mission.)

The minor annuals of the Religious Tract Society will entertain, instruct, and elevate the minds of different classes of readers. Friendly Greetings (2s.) is a repository of admirably chosen readings for the people. Stories, poems, and exhortation are alike Evangelical. The Cottager and Artisan (1s. 6d.) well merits its second title—"The People's Own Paper." The large-type pages will make it a favourite, especially among the old and imperfectly educated. Those who place The Child's Companion and Our Little Dots (1s. 6d. each) in the hands of their young friends will be assured of genuine gratitude. Light in the Home (1s.), is excellent for persons who can only read a little at a time. All the volumes are splendidly and profusely illustrated.

Dawn in the Dark Continent; or, Africa and its Missions. The Duff Missionary Lectures for 1902. By James Stewart, D.D., M.D., African missionary. (6s. net. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) To what we have already said regarding this excellent book we take occasion to add that it describes with admirable succinctness the work that is in progress to establish the rule of Christ on the Dark Continent. A desire is shown to recognize the many and varied agencies that are being employed, and the present is compared with the past in a forcible manner. Dr. Stewart knows his subject, and he deals with it as an enthusiast as well as one fully informed. A score of side issues and allied problems are considered, and a number of maps and statistical tables are given. The work is a splendid introduction to the study of mission work, as it relates to Africa both in its interior and along its ample coasts.

The Sun and the Looking-Glass.

WHEN I was a little girl one of our favourite games was to have some fun with a looking-glass; we used to buy little penny looking-glasses, and then, when the sun shone into our nursery window, we used to stand up with our looking-glasses, and catching the rays on them reflect them off to someone else, and it amused us to see the wonder of some of the people who could not tell whence the bright light suddenly came.

You all know about God making the sun, as we read about it in Gen. i. 14-16. All through the Bible we are reminded of this, I will just give you two texts: Psa. lxxiv. 16; Jer. xxxi. 35. What does the sun do for us? It gives us light, heat, colour, healing, health, life, sight, fruit, purity, and power. What a wonderful sight the glorious sun is, whether rising or setting or in the noon-day. "Nothing is hid from the heat thereof" (Psa. xix. 6), and it is impossible to hide it, even when there is an eclipse of the sun, and the black moon comes and hides it, bright flashes of light are seen darting out from the edges of the black shadow, as it seems, thousands of miles in length. No wonder that people who do not know about God worship the sun. God warned His own people from this (Deut. iv. 19).

The Bible tells us that the sun is to teach us about God. He is compared to the sun (Psa. lxxxiv. 11), and we read often of the shining of His face (Num. vi. 25; Psa l. 2; Dan. ix. 17). This is all written to help us to understand what He is like, and what He can do for us. Now remember what the sun does for us and find out how it teaches us of God—Light (1 John i. 7), Heat or Fire (Heb. xii. 18), Colour or Beauty (Psa. xc. 17), Life (John vi. 33, 34), Healing (Ex. xv. 26), Health (Psa. xlii. 11), Sight (Psa. cxix. 18), Fruit (Gal. v. 22), Purity (Titus ii. 14), Power (2 Cor. xii. 9). Jesus Christ is called "The Sun of Righteousness" (Mal. iv. 2), and He calls Himself "The Light of the World." Just what the sun does for our bodies, He will do for our souls. As we open our windows to let in the sunshine, so we must open our inner being and let God's light in, and never go into dark and wicked places away from His warmth and love. When you let in the sunlight it shows you the dust and dirt, so when God shines into our heart He shows us the sin. What must we do then? (1 John i. 6-8). One way to keep God's light in our heart is to read His Word (Psa. cxix. 130).

But what about the Looking-Glass. Well, if God is the Sun, His children are to be the looking-glasses. Live in His sunshine and reflect His light. You know the moon has no light of its own, it just reflects the sun light; but you must not be like the moon, for it does not always turn its full face to the earth, and then it only sends us a very little light. Isa. lx. 1 is God's message to us. When Moses had lived for forty days with God on the Mount, his face shone so brightly that the children of Israel could not bear the sight, and he had to put on a veil, so if we have God's light in our souls, it will shine through our faces, into dark corners, and dark hearts, for people can only see Jesus through us. I heard of a girl who was always called "Little Sunshine," because wherever she went she always made people happy; her heart was so full of the love of Jesus that it came out in all her actions.

Turn to 2 Cor. iii. 18 (R.V.), and you will find the looking-glass text, "We all, reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord." To reflect properly we need a clean, bright glass; so we rub it till it is bright. If sin rests in our hearts we cannot reflect God's love clearly; so let us take every sin, as soon as we find it, to the Saviour, and have it washed away. I am afraid we do not give a very good picture of Jesus to the world. We are like some looking-glasses I have seen, which, when we looked in them, made our faces into all kinds of queer shapes, and we have said: "Oh, that is not a bit like me." But let us finish our text and we can get comfort; we are better off than the looking-glass, for, however much we leave it in the sunshine, it never gets any brightness into itself; but our promise is, that if we keep in God's sunshine we shall, little by little, be changed into His image until we are "like Him, for we shall see Him as He is" (1 John iii. 3). Then we shall be in that glorious land, described in Rev. xxi. 23, where there is no need of the sun or the looking-glass either. E. J. Banks.

Dinners for Destitute Children.—The annual report of the Destitute Children's Dinner Society notes a marked improvement in the position of the organization. The number of dinners served reached 197,772, an increase on the previous year of 27,838. On the amount of children's pence there is an advance of over £50, and the grants to rooms have increased by £95. The need has been demonstrated by thirty-seven years' experience, and it is hard to imagine anyone refusing a trifle towards providing good meat food for this poor and helpless class, when its great value in promoting their health, sustaining their life, and aiding in their elevation is proved by the testimonies from all directions. The treasurer is Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East, S.W.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

Sunday, December 20, 1903.

A Vision of World-wide Peace (Isa. xi. 1-10).

AT the close of the previous chapter we are brought face to face with the ruin of the proud kingdom of Assyria. We are told that the Lord of Hosts should lop off his boughs with terror, and the high ones of stature should be hewn down. It is as though we were standing in the midst of a forest, and hear the crash of timber before the woodman's axe. In contrast to this we can see a shoot like a young sapling arising from the stock of Jesse, which had been cut down to the ground level; and a branch from the buried roots of the royal line bears blossom and fruit. There could be no resurrection for Assyria, but there would be for Israel, even though it might be temporarily overwhelmed in the catastrophe of the captivity. Who can this be but He who ever loomed before the minds of the prophets as the Messiah Prince (Zech. iii. 8; Luke i. 68-71)? The Lord Jesus is pre-eminently the Branch in whom we are branches.

2, 3. This is a classical passage on the sevenfold Spirit (Rev. i. 4). In sevenfold fulness the Holy Spirit descended upon our Lord in His Baptism, and rested upon Him, so that learned doctors marvelled at His wisdom, and could not understand the power by which he spake. For us, too, that anointing waits. Let us not be content until we have received the anointing, that we may be of quick scent (v. 3 R.V., margin) in the fear of the Lord; i.e., that we may detect the first approach of temptation, just as the nostril detects the noisome smell which denotes peril to health. The great need for the Christian is to be quickly aware of temptation when as yet it is only a suggestion, and it is only possible when the Holy Spirit richly abides upon us. This glorious Christ shall bring to the world the justice for which it pines; to the poor and the meek His advent shall be as the dawn of a new age, and the earth shall obey the rod of His mouth, that is, His words will be the sceptre of His power, if He speaks it shall be done, if He commands it shall stand. (4) Absolutely righteous in His Government; absolutely faithful to His friends (5).

6-8. The prophet sees the effect of Christ's blessed reign upon the animal creation. We are told that in lands unvisited by men the beasts show no hostility to the first settlers, it is only after man has betrayed his murderous instincts that the animals take fright. The tigers tamed by hunger, or scared by flood, will take refuge in human dwellings, and give no sign of molesting the inmates. Man's eye still evinces its ancient power over the brute creation. It is certain that man's sin has brought heavy suffering on the dumb creation. Perhaps Satan's fall entailed a curse upon the entire province over which God has made him to be vicegerent. In any case, the whole creation groans for its redemption, nor shall it groan in vain. (Rom. viii. 20-22). Banish sin, and God's first intention in the creation of all things shall be realized.

(9). It is as certain that universal peace shall gird the world as that the sun shall rise to-morrow, and all the wonderful movements towards arbitration of which our own age is full, are but symptoms of the dawning of the day of universal peace. We ought to be specially glad at the recent drawing together of Great Britain and France. We are thankful for the efforts of our King in the direction of peace wrought by his personal influence. We must use our personal influence to allay the war-fever whenever it arises. They that take the sword perish with the sword. Christ's servants are not called upon to fight, but to bear witness to the principles of eternal truth. The minorities rule the world, and if only every Christian Endeavour member will grow up to disseminate seeds of peace and truth, such sowing will soon be repaid with abundant crops which shall be gathered from the broad acres of the world, to the song, "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth." F. B. M.

C.E. NOTE.

The anniversary gatherings of the Young People's and Junior Societies connected with the Seamen's Chapel and Institute, London Docks, were held recently. It was reported that the membership had increased, that over 20,000 tracts had been distributed in house-to-house visitation, over 150 open-air services held, £18 raised and expended by the Senior Sunshine Committee, two pensions of ten shillings and four shillings being paid to aged Christians, and also £6 raised by the Missionary Committee for the sending out of current literature to two foreign missions, and the maintenance of an Indian famine orphan.

11. Temple. (2 Cor. vi. 16; 1 Kings viii. 1-11, 62.)
12. Waiting. 1 Cor. i. 7.

1. God and His worship must have the first and chief place in our heart and life. God is holy (1 Sam. vi. 9). He must be "served with reverence" (Heb. xii. 28, 29). The joy Jesus gives is "full of glory" (1 Pet. i. 8).

2. God values motives (1 Kings viii. 18; 1 Sam. ii. 3). Answers prayer, according to His own measure, "abundantly" (Eph. iii. 20).

3. The Spirit of God convicted David of his sin and the need of "a clean heart" (Psa. li. 10). Constrained him to confess, for pardon (Psa. xxxii. 5).

4. God only has power to forgive sin (Heb. x. 17-19). He will "blot out" (Isa. xliii. 25), "remove" (Psa. ciii. 10, 12); but results like scars remain in this life (2 Sam. xxiii. 5).

5. Youth without God's guidance is like a beautiful vessel sailing without rudder or captain. The crew will take command (Matt xv. 19). Jesus is walking near, receive Him willingly into your ship now (John vi. 21).

6. God loves the sinner but hates sin. David loved his son when he was a rebel. Absalom's "calamity came suddenly" (Prov. vi. 12, 15).

7. Jehovah-Jesus (Isa. xl. 3). David's shepherd is "the Good Shepherd" to all who trust Him through life and through death (Psa. xxiii. 4). On earth and in heaven (Rev. vii. 17). The lambs and the suffering are His special care (Is. xl. 11; Luke xv. 5).

8. Strong drinks deceive, ensnare and ruin body, mind and soul. Serpent-like, they fascinate first, and then grip their victims in their relentless toils (Is. lvi. 12).

9. I must know God for myself before I can serve Him with a willing mind and a sincere heart. Love is the motive power of real service (Mark xii. 30). "The Lord searcheth all hearts" (v. 9, Jer. xlviii.).

10. God offers His best Gift, "Christ the Wisdom of God" (1 Cor. i. 24). His Holy Spirit will teach me what to pray for always (Rom. viii. 26, 27).

11. The Temple of Solomon was beautiful but, without the "Ark of the Covenant" and the Shekinah, was dark and empty as a heart without Christ and His Spirit dwelling within (Eph. ii. 12, 22).

12. Do "we look for the Saviour" from heaven? Will He really come? (Heb. ix. 28). What will He do for us then? (Phil. iii. 20, 21). Who will dread His coming? (2 Thess. i. 8). What will give confidence? (1 John iii. 28). Who will love His appearing? (1 Tim. iv. 8). Why do we love Him? (1 John iv. 19).

REPOSING IN GOD.

A story is told of Benjamin Parsons, who in his day was an eminent preacher of the Gospel. He was lying on his death-bed, and a friend who was visiting him asked: "Well, how is it with you?" "I am resting sweetly," was the reply, "on three pillows—Infinite power, Infinite love, and Infinite grace." David's trust in God was just as calm and serene. He could lie down in green pastures and beside the still waters; and as with Benjamin Parsons, David, though he walked through the valley of the shadow of death, was able to say he feared no evil, for the Lord's rod and staff comforted him. We may have a similar peace, both in life and in death, if we will make the Lord our Shepherd, (David's trust in God.)

A FATHER TO HIS SON.

In Venice there is a valuable picture called "Paradise," painted by Tintoretto. The commission for the picture was originally given to Paulo Veronese, who, however, died before he had completed his sketches. Tintoretto was the only Venetian painter considered capable of completing the great task. His great age unfortunately prevented him from scaling the ladder to give the finishing touches after the picture had been placed in position. Tintoretto, therefore, stood below the ladder, while his son mounted and completed the painting under his superintendence. This illustrates the attitude of David to his son Solomon. He stood, as it were, at the foot of the ladder after a long and honourable career, and charged Solomon, who was taking up the work of government, to serve God and keep His commandments. (David's charge to Solomon.)

CONSECRATED SERVICE.

A few weeks ago a new baptistery was dedicated at Battersea, in which many working men were interested. In its erection a number of masons, painters, smiths, and carpenters had given their labour during the evening hours and on Saturday afternoons. The font, raised on stone steps, surrounded by singularly fine rails of wrought iron, are alike the gift of the men of the parish, and the building is the outcome of much consecrated labour to the service of God. Just as Solomon dedicated the Temple to the service of God we may give of our substance, or our labour, to the House of the Lord. Whatever our position in life, we may place our possibilities on the altar of sacrifice, and God will accept us, according to the measure of opportunity he has given us. We ourselves should be dedicated, and then all we are, and all we have, will be offered to the Lord. (Dedication of the Temple).

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

NORTH BERWICK.

ON Tuesday week Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones concluded their three days' mission to North Berwick. Although the time was very short, the mission has made a profound impression on the whole community.

The meetings were remarkable alike for their size and for the preponderating proportion of men. The interest was great, and the number of pledges—nearly 200—also. But there were two things that were still more striking, and these were: the entirely new light in which Dr. Henry set the temperance problem, and the level to which he lifted it. He showed to Christian men and women that—judged by the number of people connected with them—there were just two great institutions in our land, the Church and the public-house, the one labouring for the salvation of the people, the other labouring for their destruction. He pointed out that the progress of the one meant the defeat of the other, and that it was therefore impossible to support both. He appealed to them to enter the lists—to take their stand. And from end to end of the town Christian men and women are looking into their affairs to make sure that they are helping the drink trade neither directly nor indirectly.

We have had innumerable temperance missions in the past, but none that has approached this in conscience-arousing, moving, spiritual power. Many are blessing Dr. Henry to-day. A great feature of the meetings was the splendid singing of Mr. Armon Jones.

J. D.

Subsequently Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones proceeded to Alloa, a place well known for its distilleries, and where, in consequence, there was reason to anticipate a somewhat arduous campaign. We hope to give particulars next week.

THE

Torrey-Alexander Mission.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

In Kilmarnock.

MONDAY, December 7.—Encouraged by the season of blessing experienced on the preceding Lord's Day, Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander began the afternoon meeting full of hope and expectation. In his accustomed happy manner, Mr. Alexander roused the gathering by the singing of many favourite hymns, and made one and all feel that, despite the inclemency of the weather, the meeting would be one of sunshine and blessing.

The Exchange was well filled with an audience of men and women of all ranks and conditions, who listened most attentively to the pointed and helpful remarks of the evangelists. A beautiful effect was produced by the singing of "I surrender all." As the thoughts of the congregation were directed towards the significance of the words of this hymn, many were led to see that while they were trusting in Jesus Christ they had not made the absolute surrender that was His due. Following this hymn one of the local ministers led in prayer for the meeting, and particularly those who had not yet given themselves absolutely to the Lord.

A beautiful solo by Mr. Alexander, entitled "I know my heavenly Father knew," brought tears to many an eye, and was a source of comfort to many a weary discouraged soul. "I always sing this song at our meetings," said the singer, "for I know that in every congregation there are some who are broken-hearted and in need of comfort."

Dr. Torrey seemed to speak with greater power and freedom than usual. His earnest and practical address on "Prayer" brought home to many a conscience the need of more earnest diligence and expectation when approaching God.

The evening was fraught from the very beginning with blessing. Fully three-quarters of an hour before the advertised time for commencement the hall was crowded, and before eight o'clock the adjoining Art Gallery was taxed to its utmost with an audience disappointed at not being able to secure even standing room in the large hall. As is his custom, Mr. Alexander took charge of the first part of the meeting in the Exchange.

With little difficulty he very soon had all singing most heartily "Never lose sight of Jesus," the Glory Song, and many other well-known hymns. Dr. Torrey discoursed on the "Cost of a Christless Life," and characterized his remarks by an unusual earnestness and power. He was loudly applauded when he referred to "Scotland's blight"—whisky—and denounced in strongest terms its use and effects. He appealed not to the emotion, but to the intellect of his audience. "Let us have a repetition of the days when Scotchmen stood for their convictions, even though it meant death," said he, as he invited all who would there and then accept Jesus Christ as their Saviour. In response forty-six men, women, and young people, ranging in age from sixty-five to twelve, stepped boldly to the front and publicly announced their determination to live for Christ.

In the overflow meeting God's power was also manifest in the conversion of nine people. This result was very gratifying to Dr. Whitelaw and the Rev. Mr. Hamilton, who took charge of the meeting.

Tuesday, December 8.—At 3 p.m. the Hall was again crowded, and a meeting of great blessing and encouragement was held. Mr. Alexander turned the first part of the meeting into one for reports of what the Lord was doing in and around Kilmarnock. As one after another arose and told with glowing heart of the gracious mercies of God to them and their friends, many had to exclaim, "Praise the Lord!" One minister, with a heart full of gratitude, reported that on the previous evening his daughter had definitely decided for Christ. Another minister said that in all the forty years of his experience as one of God's servants he had never seen such a demonstration of Divine power. The secretary of the mission felt constrained to say that "never before had he seen it in that fashion." One after another the ministers spoke of the great blessing they had individually received, and all expressed keen regret that the evangelists had so soon to leave for another sphere of labour.

Dr. Torrey's address was listened to very intently, and was a source of help to many.

In the evening the great crowd which tried to gain admittance to the hall was considerably larger than on the previous evening. The Art Gallery had to be secured for the overflow meeting, but it proved altogether too small. Dr. Whitelaw and Rev. Mr. Hamilton took charge, and Mr. Oatts gave an earnest appealing address. Mr. Alexander went in from the large meeting and sang with great effect "Tell mother I'll be there." A number of decisions were recorded, and many others were dealt with about their souls' salvation.

In the Exchange Hall the scene was one never to be forgotten. After the usual "song service," Dr. Torrey addressed the magnificent audience on "Heroes and Cowards," and throughout the entire discourse held his hearers in a most remarkable way. At the close scores accepted Christ, and made a public confession of their faith in Him. Altogether the two meetings produced about eighty-five decisions, making in all during the three days' mission a total of nearly 200 souls. To God be all the glory!

The local ministers are considering ways and means whereby this remarkable visitation of God's power might be made a blessing to many more in and around Kilmarnock.

Good Results at Dunfermline.

The three days' mission was commenced this afternoon under the most favourable circumstances. The way had been thoroughly prepared by much prayer and work on the part of the local ministers, assisted by a great number of God's people. When the afternoon meeting opened, one felt that he was in an atmosphere of prayer. With an unusual readiness the people responded to Mr. Alexander's appeals to sing, and when Dr. Torrey delivered his stirring address the large audience listened with marked intensity. All the meetings were held in St. Margaret's Hall, which accommodates about 1,400 people. A large choir rendered material assistance in the singing, and Mr. A. W. Bell with his cornet was of great service. At the close thirty-two people, young and old, came forward and accepted Christ.

On Thursday the afternoon meeting was largely attended. The address was delivered with a directness which appealed very forcibly to the many Christians present. In the evening a large body of ministers occupied seats on the platform, and during the after-meeting went down into the audience and engaged in personal work. The result was that no fewer than sixty-nine people came to the front seats and confessed Christ.

The meetings on Friday were the best of the series. On the platform in the afternoon were a number of friends from Dundee, one of whom reported that besides being blessed himself, he had knowledge of a hotel keeper who had been converted, and had given up the liquor business. A position was advertised, this man applied, and when it was known that he had been converted he was appointed. One young lady said she had been led to full consecration. Another spoke of the blessing attending the Girls' Home Bible classes inaugurated.

In the evening hundreds had to content themselves with standing space at the back and sides of the hall. Mr. Oatts read a letter he had received from eleven young men whom he had pointed to Christ at Dumfries a week or more ago. In it they expressed their thanks for his words of counsel and wisdom, and asked for prayer.

At the close of the address a wonderful sight was witnessed. Ministers and Christian workers went through the audience beseeching men and women to forsake their sins and turn to Christ. As a result, 120 names were received. Although the hour was late, people still loitered about the hall, and were loth to go home. Mr. Alexander seized the opportunity, and had a praise and testimony service. One after another the ministers spoke of the great uplift they had received. One said that what had struck him most was the sublime simplicity of Dr. Torrey's message. Another said that the unadulterated Word of God as proclaimed by the doctor impressed Him more than anything else. In all, some 220 names were received.

Visit to Greenock.

On Saturday the Missioners were accorded a hearty reception on their arrival by many local ministers and workers at Greenock; and a preparatory prayer meeting was held for an outpouring of God's Spirit.

On Sabbath morning the missioner met the Christian workers in the large Town Hall. Although the attendance was not large (there being some 300 present) the meeting was owned and blessed by God. Dr. Torrey endeavoured to rouse up his hearers to activity in soul winning, and evidently made a good impression. In the afternoon a great meeting of women was held, and as a result many came to the front seats and confessed Christ, about fifty names being taken by the workers.

In the evening all the available space was taken up by the men who crowded in. With one accord they entered into the service of praise as conducted by Mr. Alexander. It was evident during the address that many were being hard hit. At the close Mr. Alexander sang, "Tell mother I'll be there," in response to the usual invitation. Sixteen men and boys came to the front.

THE MANCHESTER RESULTS.

Rev. S. F. Collier, the head of the great Methodist Mission in Manchester, said recently, that the last Sunday night service, attended by 8,000 men, in St. James's Hall was a proof of the great force of human organization behind the mission, and of the evangelists' power. It was, indeed, a memorable sight, and one which Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander will often recall with pleasure. About 4,000 names were handed in during the month's work at Manchester, and these will be dealt with carefully, so that the converts may be built up in their faith.

ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

A correspondent writes that one day during the early part of the mission in Manchester, at the prayer meeting in the Y.M.C.A., he prayed for the conversion of the only unsaved member of his family, a son whom he supposed to be then in West Africa, but expected home at Christmas. A fortnight later, his son arrived in Liverpool quite unexpectedly, came on a visit to a friend in Manchester, went to hear Dr. Torrey one afternoon, and on the following evening was with the greatest difficulty persuaded to go to the meeting. Eventually he consented, and got a seat on the platform, where, at the close of Dr. Torrey's sermon, Mr. Alexander himself induced him to come out on the side of Jesus Christ. He stood up, and publicly confessed Him as his Lord and and Saviour. Curious to relate, another son who was in America had arrived home unexpectedly during the mission in Liverpool. He came to the Philharmonic Hall, and was converted as related a few weeks ago in THE CHRISTIAN. God does answer prayer.

ECHOES FROM DR. TORREY.

A Book which has the power to lift men up to God, which no other book possesses, must have come down from God.

There is constantly new light bursting forth from the study of God's Word.

The Bible is not only up-to-date, but is always ahead of date.

Who but God could pack so much wisdom in so small a compass that the world has not got to the bottom of it yet?

A will surrendered to the truth clears the eye to see and know the truth.

Never make your prayers an excuse for neglect of duty.

The Society was founded sixty years ago to deal with the poorest children of the London Slums — Lord Shaftesbury becoming its first President in 1844.

The Council promotes agencies for body, mind, and heart, and to-day exercises an influence for good weekly upon about a hundred thousand souls, through the co-operation of about 5,000 Voluntary Teachers and Workers, in addition to some paid Helpers.

The Holiday Homes' Fund entertained last year 6,231 children, factory lads and girls, with some run-down adults, in the Country and at the Seaside for a Fortnight. 58,500 enjoyed a Day in Epping Forest and elsewhere. The Society possesses Holiday Homes at Bognor, Southend, Bournemouth, Brenchley, East Grinstead, Margate, and other places.

The Cripple Department has 6,790 little sufferers on its register. These Children are visited regularly in their own homes for Christian teaching, the Loan of books or toys, and Kindergarten instruction for the brighter children, and industrial training for the Seniors, in addition to long holidays by the sea, surgical appliances, food, clothing and other comforting ministries.

The Barefoot Mission clothes ragged children, supplies boots and garments on loan through Board School teachers and other workers amongst the poor.

The Benevolent Fund relieves special cases of distress, besides maintaining Soup Kitchens, Breakfasts and Dinners, and Food for the Destitute.

The "Drift" Children's Branch endeavours to gather in the outside children to the local Missions and Schools. But for some such aggressive agency these would probably drift away from all religious influences.

The Ashley Mission, Bethnal Green, the Shaftesbury Welcome, Doddington Grove, Battersea, the Cabul Road Mission for the Gipsies, and the Shaftesbury Holiday House, Loughton, are wholly sustained by the Society.

The Ragged Church Union, the Poor Children's Aid Society, the Barefoot Mission, and the Sea-Shell and Children's Scrap Book Mission have all been incorporated with, and now form an integral part of, the Central Organization.

Emigration is promoted under careful restrictions.

Prizes are awarded to old scholars for faithful service in situations.

Lanterns and Slides are gratuitously lent for entertaining both child and adult.

There are affiliated with the Parent Ragged School Union 153 Local Schools and Missions, each with its separate responsible Committee. In these local centres there are Sunday Schools, Children's Services, Evening Schools, Bible Classes, Industrial Classes, Mothers' Meetings, Bands of Hope, and other beneficent agencies.

The Importance of the Little.

IN that wonderful "Story of My Life," written by the blind, deaf, and for awhile, mute Helen Keller, she tells of her visit to the Sea, and of her learning "how, in the midst of dashing waves, the little polyps build the beautiful coral isles of the Pacific, and the foraminifera have made the chalk cliffs of many a land."

Nothing in nature teaches more fully the value of the little than that coral belt of Australia—a thousand miles long, and ten to a hundred miles in width—built up from a depth of nearly 200 feet by those tiny creatures whose liquid exudations harden into rock, or produce the lovely red coral of the Mediterranean, worth £10 an ounce.

The reference is typical of Helen's own life. Guided by a patient teacher, the helpless child, through her one channel of touch, absorbed morsel by morsel of impression, of information, and of knowledge, until now she holds her own with the most acomplished of students.

It is thus that the great task of spiritual upbuilding, of moral reform, and even of physical relief, is to be performed. You may spend a million on rearing a cathedral of pyramidal permanence, but if you would relieve the misery of East or West, or alleviate the lot of the thousands of helpless child-cripples of London, it must be done by personal and individual dealing. It is not only the money contribution, but in its careful distribution that there lies the full value of the gift. Doubtless many readers of The Christian are restrained from giving because of uncertainty as to its wise dispensation.

Happily, no one ever has any anxiety about the use made of help rendered to the Ragged School Union and Shaftesbury Society. There is a very small paid staff at headquarters (32 John Street, Theobald's Road, W.C.), but help to cripples, to the poor, to the shoeless, to the ragged, is disbursed through thousands of unpaid workers who, though poor themselves, often give of their slender means, and spend, besides, many hours in patient teaching and visitation.

Here, again, is shewn the value of the little. One visit to the sick cot or to the child-cripples' home sheds a ray of Divinest light. It is no wonder that Sir William Treloar, with his Christmas Hampers, and Pearson's Fresh Air Fund, and many another agency should use the Ragged School Union, as its medium of distribution. There is an ever-increasing call upon the Society's Council and Secretary (Mr. John Kirk), and therefore an ever-widening circle of usefulness.

What a blessing to Britain it is that each Christmas season should prompt more and more those who have enough and to spare to take a part in the general gladdening of the least-favoured classes. We plead not only for the poor and destitute, but for those honest, sober, industrious workers who are trying to maintain families on small, and often uncertain, wage.

Perhaps YOU could help in some way. Possibly, by a box or parcel of worn-out clothes, children's or adults'; or by unused material; or by making garments; or by toys; and, very specially, just now, by cash, with which to buy shoes for the shoeless; or by helping to maintain the five Holiday Homes in which cripples get good food and loving care.

And even if, reader, you are poor, and have small, if any, surplus, you will recall that our Lord praised most highly the tiny coin, and the cup of cold water. The joy of the receiver can never equal that of the giver, and a strain of glad rejoicing will run through all your own Christmas experiences, if you have aided in making happier the lot of some stranger child.

Contributions by postal note or cheque for the Ragged School Union and Shaftesbury Society should be sent to the Editor of The Christian; or to Mr. JOHN KIRK, Secretary, 32, John Street, Theobald's Road, London, W.C.

Blest of God and happy are the Christian homes where the Christmas Carol in the true Christian spirit is sung, and where parents and children meet to celebrate the Birth of Christ.

But there are "Homes" where the festivities will be held under the shadow of sorrow for past wrong-doing; where recollections of bygone ill are only mitigated by the hope of restoration yet to come.

The reader is earnestly asked to send some token of goodwill this Christmas-tide to brighten the lives of the 180 inmates of the Five Homes and Open-All-Night Refuge.

Canon Aitken at Thetford.

THE town of Thetford, in Norfolk, has just recently received a great awakening by means of a United Mission, in which the three churches took part under the auspices of the Church Parochial Mission Society. The missioners were Rev. Canon Aitken, assisted by Rev. James Nunn for St. Peter's and St. Cuthbert's Churches, and Rev. Gordon Roe for St. Mary's, while Mrs. Crouch held daily meetings in all three parishes for women only. The gatherings increased in number daily until the churches were crowded with eager seekers after God. In the mornings first at St. Peter's, and then at St. Cuthbert's, for a fortnight, Canon Aitken gave very impressive and heart-searching addresses on the spiritual life.

During the first week the evening mission services were held at St. Cuthbert's; gradually the ice got broken down with the power of the Word, and when the second week came round, with the evening services at St. Peter's, the church was literally packed, and not a service was concluded without surrenders to God.

Special services were held each day for children by Mr. Nunn, which will long remain fresh in their memories for many a day. Without the slightest compulsion, at the close of the Board Schools, the church was thronged by 4.30 with young people.

On each of the Sunday afternoons, taking each church in turn, Mr. Nunn held a service for children at one church, which was literally packed, while the Canon held a special service for men only at another church. This grew in numbers from a moderate congregation on the first Sunday to a crowd of men assembled on the last Sunday in the largest church in the town, capable of holding some 500 people.

The last day of the mission was very helpful. A morning service was held at St. Peter's with a most earnest farewell message on 2 Cor. xiii. 11, followed by the Lord's Supper. Among the communicants on the occasion was the Wesleyan minister of the town, who had attended most of the morning services of the mission. In the afternoon the Canon conducted a quiet hour, which was really a consecration service and largely attended. The closing service will not soon be forgotten. After a very earnest word based on Phil. ii. 13, 14, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of His good will and pleasure," as a last word both to those who had profited by the services, and to those who still were holding aloof from the claims of Christ, a public distribution of souvenir cards took place.

A large number came forward to one or other of the missioners to receive from them a card as a sign that the Mission had been a blessing in some form or other. It was an affecting sight when the Canon called up the Incumbents at the close to his side, and with a few words to them and to the people gave back the people to their various charges, commending both them and their flocks to God and to the Word of His grace. The Canon and both Incumbents then led audibly in prayer, after which with very full hearts the Doxology was sung, and a most blessed and encouraging Mission was brought to a close. The Bishop of Norwich showed his sympathy with the Mission by coming to Thetford for the last Sunday, and preaching in St. Mary's and St. Cuthbert's Churches. In the afternoon he also addressed a large number of lads in the schools. The opinion of one and all is that a mission of such a character and of such far-reaching influence for good has never before been held in the town. To God be all the praise!

C.

Rev. John McNeill at Rothesay.

Mr. McNeill has been conducting a mission in Rothesay, in connection with which he met with an enthusiastic reception from the local workers. Beginning on Sunday morning of last week at Craigmore U.F. Church, he explained in a few preliminary remarks, that he was here at the request of the ministers of Rothesay, Established as well as United Free and others. Some people said there was no need for such a mission, as they had their own minister, but the answer to that was that it was their own ministers who had asked him, and there was something in a special effort. He asked them to look forward to a happy week, Jesus and joy always went together. Taking his text from Daniel vi. 10, and dealing with Daniel's continuance in prayer three times a day in Babylon after the edict had gone forth against it, he went on to speak of Christian adherence to duty in the face of all consequences. Religion was not a thing to be slipped off and on like an old glove or an old slipper—it was not a thing for a particular day of the week, for a particular place associated with certain dear forms—religion was one's very life, a something with which they dare not trifle. They could not put off their religion as they put off their Sunday clothes on a Sabbath night, saying, "Good-bye, Religion, I'll be back again next Sunday."

In the afternoon a special service was held in Chapelhill U.F. Church, when Mr. McNeill preached to a crowded congregation. In the evening there was a united evangelistic meeting in the Public Hall, the evening services in the churches being curtailed to enable the people to attend. In his opening remarks Mr. McNeill asked the shopkeepers to close early, to enable their assistants to attend, and, in concluding his preliminary remarks, said: "I want you to pray. Lift your mouth to His ear—get on to the telephone—the people who pray are the people who work."

On Monday evening the hall was again well filled, and as the week advanced the audiences increased steadily. Testimony abounds to the effect that a deep impression has been made on the hearers. Ministers from other parts of Bute have taken their place beside those belonging to the town, in supporting the effort.

Notes from Cardiff.

"The place you are speaking in to-day has a history," said my host. "Over forty years ago, when I built this house, it was surrounded by fields, and one of my nearest neighbours was a man over sixty, named Morris Goodfield, whose temper and language were dreadful. I have heard him cursing his men a hundred yards away. About that time Richard Weaver came to Cardiff to preach, and, sure enough, Goodfield went to hear this uncommon preacher, who was attracting the masses of the people. They flocked out to see 'Undaunted Dick,' the converted collier.

"Well, to make a long story short, Goodfield was soundly converted to God, and he very soon made it known by preaching himself in his own house. It soon became crowded out, and he said one day to his wife, 'I've got a few hundred pounds in the bank, wife, I'm going to build a chapel.' Sure enough he did, and spent his all, and what is better, his son (who had also by this time been blessed through Weaver) stood on the foundation stone and invited others to follow his father's example and give themselves to the Lord, and to the help of the work in the building being erected."

"Is Morris Goodfield alive still?" I asked.

"No, he died some few years ago, after preaching in the place many years; he was beloved by all, specially for the gentleness and loving manner which so marked his Christian character, and which was so in contrast with his hasty and violent temper before conversion. The building you are re-opening for the Forward Movement of Cardiff to-day is the same which he built; it has since been enlarged, and many souls have been blessed within it."

The work of the Forward Movement is, of course, under the care of Dr. Pugh, and the above mission building is under the charge of Mr. John Grey, who has done sixteen years' service in the S.A., and, with his noble wife, is doing a splendid work here.

I enjoyed the two meetings on the Lord's Day. The Mayor was present, with some of the councillors, and he gave a short and spiritual address. A small but effective choir sang as only the Welsh can sing.

The evening service was held in the Cory Hall—built by Mr. John Cory some ten years ago—and at the close we were busy dealing with anxious ones.

The most remarkable case of anxiety I ever witnessed was that of a captain of a steamer, who asked me to stay behind with him when all the rest had left. Thank God, before he left he accepted Christ and surrendered himself to Him; and I have since written to him.

After lecturing on "The Prisons of the World" in the Memorial Hall on Monday evening, I went to stay at Llanishen, a suburb of Cardiff. My host, a warm-hearted worker in the Lord's vineyard, invited me to speak to his men in the office. "I hope before this time next year," he said, "to see them all brought in. My old aunt prayed me into the kingdom, and I want to get others in. She said to me, 'This is the last time I am going to ask you to go and hear the Gospel.' So I went, and it resulted in my conversion. John McNeill was holding a mission here."

It had been arranged by my host that I was to have a meeting in the John Cory Seamens' Rest near the docks. The place was full of seamen, with a score of coloured men, and a few soldiers, while among them were a number of Christian workers. After I had spoken, from Acts xiii. 38, voluntarily a man rose, came out of his seat, and fell on his knees seeking salvation.

"Are there others who would value our prayers?" I asked. Three other seamen came right out, among them one coloured man, and joined the first.

"I'll be the fifth," cried out another, and came boldly out. Then two redcoats followed, and two more coloured men knelt by the platform; these were followed by three others, till all the space was occupied by penitent, weeping souls. Many others evinced their anxiety, and we were busy taking every name and address. The missionary in charge, Mr. Richards, is a most spiritual worker. Next day I was at Penarth, enjoying the fellowship of other brethren.

Charles Cook.

Rev. Seth Joshua at Dowlais.

A Free Church Mission has been conducted at Dowlais by Rev. Seth Joshua, of Cardiff. This is the second mission he has held in the town. The Oddfellows' Hall, the largest public building in the town, was secured. The various churches (Welsh and English) were well represented, and the ministers being prominent on the platform and looking after those who remained to the after-meeting. Some fruit was apparent every evening, but it was felt that there was much deeper work going on than appeared on the surface. Mr. Joshua clings tenaciously to the grand old Gospel truths, and his addresses are solemn appeals to the hearts and consciences of the people, turning away the rags of mere profession. Most of the meetings were very large. The hall, seating 1,200 or more, was so crowded that many have stood the whole service through. On the night of Sunday, November 22, the crowd was specially great; Mr. Joshua had already preached twice, in chapels, but again made a powerful appeal.

J. G.

Holy Trinity Church, Kilburn, N.W.

At this well-known church an effective Gospel Total Abstinence Mission has been held. The vicar, Rev. Henry Dening, kindly forwards some notes, which appear in the Parish Magazine, from which we glean: "The excellent addresses delivered during the week by the fifty speakers were all of a high order. Canon Fleming's magnificent address touched all hearts, and our neighbour, Dr. Bonavia Hunt, was in good form, the audience being highly delighted. The Dean of Hereford and Canon Barker gave excellent addresses. The women's meetings were fortunate in having so eloquent a speaker as Lady Biddulph of Ledbury, whose deep sympathies commended the cause to all present. Lady Hope, whose efforts in the temperance and coffee house movement are well known, was listened to with wrapt attention, and Dr. Kelynack gave an instructive speech from a medical and scientific standpoint, asserting that alcoholism was one of the chief causes of the physical degeneration of the nation. The children's meetings were largely attended, over 1,000 being present at the first meeting. Nearly 700 pledges were taken. The sacred solos by Miss Mabel Knott and Miss Mabel Dening were much appreciated."

Rev. Thomas Waugh at Launceston.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has concluded a mission in the Wesleyan Church, Launceston. The services were commenced on the 15th ult., when the earnest, telling words of the preacher made a deep impression on the large congregation. On each evening of the following week the audience steadily increased till on the Friday the capacious chapel was well filled. So great was the quiet spiritual power attending the services that before any invitation was given several pressed their way forward to seek salvation.

On Sunday, the 22nd ult., the service was one of great spiritual power. During the sermon two young people walked out of a pew into the inquiry-room. On the Monday, when Mr. Waugh told the story of his conversion, the chapel was more closely packed than ever, and many inquirers came out. The most remarkable day was Tuesday, when the mission concluded. It was the day of the St. Leonard's Fair in Launceston, the busiest day of the year, when farmers from the surrounding districts for many miles came to the cattle market and to settle their amounts for the year. Mr. Waugh held an afternoon service.

At the closing meeting, as Mr. Waugh discoursed on the subject of the "Impenitent Thief," a great awe and stillness came over the congregation, and resulted in many converts. At the close, the cases of conversion during the mission were most encouraging. Almost all the boys of the Dunheved College passed into the inquiry-room and sought the Saviour. Some fine lads have given their hearts to God, and the head master, (Mr. B. B. Hardy), who has been in the forefront of the work, has received many touching letters of joy from delighted parents. Young ladies of the North Hall School have experienced similar joy. In one family a father, mother, and six children have received blessing. Several gifted young men and women have also professed Christ, and many from the country villages. One great feature of the mission was the hold it secured on the villages.

R. B.

Mr. Henry Varley in Berlin.

Mr. Varley's mission has been a thorough success. After we had a series of special services at Charlottenburg in our commodious hall, to which many friends from Berlin came, we had last Sunday a large audience of most attentive listeners at the hall of Miss von Blücher, and though Mr. Varley's address had to be interpreted by me, yet the greatest and most intelligent and appreciating interest was manifested. On Monday night we had hired a large public hall at Charlottenburg, and it was crowded with men only, at some at least 150 students being present, to whom Mr. Varley gave his lecture to men only.

And after he had spoken plainly yet lovingly for over an hour, and asked the audience if he should stop, they clapped their hands to go on for another half an hour. It was one of the best meetings we had. On Tuesday evening Mr. Varley spoke to a good number of young men at the Y.M.C.A. about "the Reasonableness of the Atonement." On Wednesday afternoon we had a closely-packed audience at Moabit, and in the evening at the large Baptist Church in the East of Berlin. On Thursday evening we had a good meeting in a public hall at Heglitz, under the assistance of our friends, Pastors Späth and Mascher; on Friday another large meeting. Mr. Varley's practical way of presenting the Divine principles of revealed truth, his clear statements as to the utter ruin of man by sin and the full atonement by the Lord Jesus Christ tell mightily among the people.

Julius Rohrbach.

A great awakening has broken out in Westray, Orkney. Very many souls are being saved. Prayer is asked for the movement. G.

Mr. William Grove has been holding a fifteen days' mission at the Clarence Road Baptist Chapel, Grays. In the presentation of the Gospel he instanced cases which had come under his personal observation where some of the most abandoned characters had been transformed "from lions to lambs" as the result of their belief in the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. During the mission several persons have professed conversion.—A. D.

We have just concluded a twelve days' special service at the Pre-ton branch of the Railway Mission, conducted by Mr. John Hawkins. Each night the Holy Spirit carried the faithful messages home to many hearts in convicting and converting power, until over sixty persons professed to take to the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. It was truly a blessed sight to see big, strong railway men walk into the inquiry room, in some cases along with wife and children. God's people have been revived and encouraged. Mr. Hawkins held services in the men's mess rooms during their dinner hours which were much blessed. The time of blessing still continues. All praise to Him alone!

Advent Addresses in Gloucester.

We were favoured last week with a series of very helpful addresses by Mr. R. C. Morgan, delivered in the cosy hall of our Y.W.C.A. The subjects have been varied and comprehensive, including "The Blessed Hope," "The Man of Sin," "Daniel's Visions, "The Witnesses," &c., but our brother has dealt with general principles rather than with particular interpretations; for history is continually repeating itself on every platform, and in every change of circumstances—whether to a nation or a man only. Lines were traced through the Scripture, each leading up to the great crisis at the coming of our Lord. For instance: (1) Lucifer, the usurper, after a series of falls, is shut up in the bottomless pit; (2) Man, poisoned by the lie, "Ye shall be as God," pursues his course down the ages, until the Man of Sin sits in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God; (3) The history of Israel; (4) The times of the Gentiles; (5) The saints prepared as a bride adorned for her husband; (6) The destruction of Babylon, the mother of all abominations; (7) The Coming of the Lord is the blessed hope to which all these converge.

There may be a special fulfilment of the prophecies in detail at the time of the great event—these probably, and, as many would say, certainly will be—but, meanwhile, that which leads up to such fulfilment is constantly occurring, at least in the moral sense.

Another thing insisted on was that the mere study of the history of the past, or of the prophecy of the future, will do us little good, if we do not gather the lessons which lie underneath the general principles of both. What we need to ask is, What does the prophecy teach in the moral and spiritual realm? How does this teaching affect me? How am I to apply this teaching to my own case? Such study of the future has a most practical effect on the present.

The remarks on the "locusts" (Rev. ix.), as shadowing forth the lusts which would bring their own punishment, were very much to the point, and very solemn. And the thoughts on the reasons for the different formulas—"time, times, and a half," "forty-two months," and "a thousand two hundred and threescore days," were as valuable as they were interesting.

Many in Gloucester are thanking God for the visit of our beloved friend. May our hearts be ever saying, "Come, Lord Jesus."

The Education Act.—It has been decided in the High Court of Justice that when demand is made for rates, and only the part due under the Education Act is refused, distraint can be effected for that portion of the rates alone, and not for the whole. When tender has been made, part payment must be accepted.

Christmas Appeals.

Mr. J. W. Brimson (2, Argyle Road, Stratford, E.) appeals on behalf of the sick and needy in connection with the "Beacon Light" Gospel Mission.

Rev. W. Hope Steen (St. Matthew's Vicarage, 29, Douglas Road, Canonbury) asks for help towards Christmas cheer for the Christian poor.

Rev. S. A. Griffith (Christ Church Vicarage, Endell Street, W.C.) will be thankful for assistance to meet the spreading distress on every side.

Mrs. Agnes Welin appeals for help to brighten the lives of the sailors at the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, Poplar, E.

The needs of the poor in the Islington district are great, and the Sermon Lane Mission appeals on their behalf. Address, Mr. J. Dix Lewis, "Penrhyn," Hornsey Lane, N.

Rev. James J. Ellis (109, Plashet Grove, East Ham, E.) writes:—"There is much need in East London. Gifts of clothing and money will be gratefully accepted."

Mr. A. W. Fairet is arranging to entertain a large number of children to a Christmas dinner and tea in connection with "St. Crispin's children's service." Address, 5, New Place, Southwark Park Road, S.E.

Pastor T. Maycock, Kensal Rise Tabernacle, N.E., appeals for the poor of the district. "There is very much illness. Six large Board Schools are closed through illness among the little ones."

At Kent Street Ragged Children's Mission, S.E., help is sought that the destitute children of the district may be provided with a Christmas dinner: Hon. Sec., Mr. John T. Smith, 459, Old Kent Road, London, S.E.

Mr. William T. Russell (11, Manor Place, Paddington Green, W.) writes on behalf of the work at John Street, Chapel, Edgware Road, W. Coals and bread are to be distributed, and a meat tea given to the aged and infirm poor.

At Scovell Road Mission, S.E., Christmas dinners are to be given to the poor. With the new mission hall there are increased apportunities of usefulness. Address, Mr. Thomas Arnold, Hon. Secretary, 9, Prince's Square, Kennington Park Road, S.E.

Mr. R. T. Smith appeals on behalf of the Homes for Motherless Children, "The Royston's," Grove Park, Chiswick. "The instituntions are conducted upon Protestant lines and meet a real need. Just now there are 120 children in the Homes."

From St. Phillip's Vicarage, Bethnal Green, Rev. W. J. Ferrar writes: "Our many children will be expecting their Christmas treats and gifts, the poor families their Christmas cheer, and the lodging-house tenants their supper."

Rev. Jas. Watkins, of Surrey Chapel, S.E., writes: "We shall entertain some six hundred poor children to tea, provide dinners for aged widows, assist solitary women, and send help to the sick and ill-clad." Address, 7, Albert Square, Clapham Road, S.W.

The conductors of Gifford Hall Mission, Islington, N., appeal for help to give 500 dinners to the poor of the neighbourhood on Christmas Day, New Year's treats to children, and creature comforts to the aged sick, Contributions will be thankfully acknowledged by H. W. Whittenbury, 59, Holloway Road, N.

Mr. C. A. Pavey, Surrey Square Mission, Old Kent Road, S.E., asks help to cheer the hearts and homes of our poorer friends by giving them a parcel and some firing. Living in the midst, we are able to discern the real from the counterfeit cases.

Limehouse poor are in great distress, and food and clothing are urgently needed. Cases helped are fully investigated. Address Mr. W. Bromley, church secretary, care of chapel keeper (Coverdale Congregational Church), 1, Mill Place, Commercial Road, Limehouse, E.

Bermondsey Great Central Hall is situated in the midst of great poverty, the percentage being fifty-two, and the highest in London. Rev. Henry T. Meakin, 252, Bermondsey Street, London, S.E., appeals for Christmas help for crippled and poor children, and poor people More than 2,000 children are associated with the Great Central Hall, and large numbers of poor deserving adults, including widows.

The Samaritan work of Field Lane Refuges is well known. Mr. Peregrine Platt writes that in addition to the important work regularly carried on, it is hoped to give a hot dinner to hundreds of homeless people, provisions to many poor families, and a New Year dinner to children. Address, Vine Street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Writing from 101, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., Mr. George J. Jolliffe says:—"Mrs. Bramwell Booth would be obliged if you would ask your readers to enable us by their gifts to give Christmas dinners to the very large number of inmates of our various shelters and homes. We have 6,000 of the poorest people sleeping under the roofs of our social institutions every night in this country alone.

SEVEN HOMES.

BRIEF STRIKING FACTS.

The 50th Annual Report tells of 18,429 girls and young women sheltered, fed clothed, and trained, 9,112 placed in service since formation of the Society, and the greater number of the remainder otherwise well provided for. Seven Homes now maintained for rescue, preventive, maternity, and medical cases.

THE FACT OF THE MOMENT.

As the response to the Jubilee Appeal, thus far, has not been good, and the Fund for General Expenses is more than exhausted, the Committee most earnestly appeal to the Christian Public for Jubilee Gifts to enable the continuance and extension of their Preventive and Rescue Work for the aid of Forsaken and Suffering Women and Girls.

All Cheques and Money Orders should be crossed "BARCLAY & Co., LTD.," and made payable to the Secretary, Mr. C. STUART THORPE, 79, Finsbury Pavement, London, E.C.

MOST URGENT APPEAL.

This Society, in which Queen Victoria took so warm an interest and whose Patron is now Queen Alexandra, pleads most earnestly for help towards its unique work. It has, besides its many Shore Institutes, three Hospital Steamers with four sailing Bethel Ships, in home waters; and two Hospital Steamers and three Shore Hospitals in Labrador and Newfoundland. Without further and immediate aid it will be compelled to curtail operations, and what this would mean during winter's storms few can adequately realise. It has no invested funds, but is absolutely dependent on the voluntary gifts of the public.

F. H. WOOD, Secretary,

Christmas is Here Again!!

TO THE RICH IT MEANS JOY AND HAPPINESS. TO THE POOR IT MEANS ——!!

I am sure the readers of "THE CHRISTIAN" will again kindly help the Committee of the Field Lane Refuges and Ragged Schools

TO MAKE THE POOR CHILDREN HAPPY and to BRIGHTEN THE HOMES OF THE POOREST of the poor.

YOU ARE HEARTILY THANKED FOR THE KIND HELP YOU GAVE LAST YEAR.

The Committee were enabled to give 888 Dinners to the Homeless on Christmas Day.

827 New Year's Dinners to Poor Children.
1,030 Christmas Parcels to the Poor at their homes.
They also helped the Poor of the neighbourhood, with Bread, Coals, &c., all through the Year.
3,000 of these poor people attend at the Institution every week.
19,185 Breakfasts were given to Homeless Men and Women who attended the Ragged Church Service.
In the Refuges 733 Men and Women were sheltered, and 280 were helped back to employment.
In the Crèche 5,911 dear little Babies were taken care of.

THEY WILL DO THIS AGAIN IF YOU WILL HELP THEM.

Bankers—BARCLAY & Co., Ltd., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

THE Committee have an overdraft at their bankers of £3,000, which they are most anxious to clear off before the end of the year.

Secretary—PEREGRINE PLATT, The Institution, Vine St., Clerkenwell Road, E.C.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., will also receive donations.

Blindness and Acute Suffering.

An Old Man, 74 years of age, blind through cancer in the eyes, which is now spreading all over the face. In addition to this sad affliction he is also suffering from an internal disease. He and his aged wife are greatly in need of assistance, as apart from the little their married children are able to give them they have nothing at all to depend on except charity. Who will help to make their old age free from anxiety? Surely pain and blindness are terrible enough without poverty.

Did It Pay?

By J. W. C. FEGAN.

The First-Offender.

ABOUT twenty-eight years ago, long before the First-Offenders' Act was passed, a youth (we will call him Henry Williams) applied one evening for shelter at our Home, which was then at Deptford.

Under the gentle pressure of a brief cross-examination he confessed that he had run away from an uncle, we will say, in Sheffield. His father was on foreign service; his mother was dead; his uncle, a large baker, had employed him in his business. A good deal of money passed through his hands daily. There was no effective check upon his honesty.

HE YIELDED TO TEMPTATION

and embezzled several small amounts. At last his pilfering was brought to light. Fearful of his uncle's anger he levanted. Soon the few shillings he had when he reached London were gone, and he was friendless, penniless, shelterless, and starving in our great city.

He seemed of a gentle, nervous disposition. Under his arm he carried a small box, carefully packed in brown paper, which contained Sunday-school prizes. As far as I could judge and I promised to see him out of his trouble and secure him a new start in life if I possibly could.

HE WAS SINCERELY PENITENT,

I telegraphed to his uncle, and soon had a reply that he was on his way to London. In the evening he arrived in a towering rage, vowed with the utmost rigour.

HE WOULD PROSECUTE HIM

After a while he asked if I would take charge of the lad till the morning? I consented to do so with pleasure, hoping that after a night's reflection he might be more leniently disposed.

However, when he called for his nephew the next morning I found him as determined as ever to send him to prison. He asked if I had a yard or so of rope I could lend him, and when I asked him what he wanted it for, he answered, "To tie the rascal's hands together so that he shan't give me the slip." I told him for that purpose. As I found I could not persuade him to leave the boy in my care to give him another chance in life, at last I announced my determination to accompany them to Sheffield and plead with the magistrate before whom Henry would be charged. He was obdurate and defied me.

I HAD NO ROPE TO LEND

He marched the boy over to Deptford Station and took tickets for Cannon Street. I took another. He hailed a cab for Euston; I followed suit. He booked for Sheffield; I did the same. He got into a compartment with his nephew; I got in too. He bundled his nephew out of that compartment into another. I moved after them. He and his nephew sat at one end. I sat at the other. He looked scowlingly out of the window; when there was a chance I exchanged winks with Henry.

As we got near Sheffield the uncle hummed, and sighed, and coughed, and by-and-by sidled over to where I was sitting, and began: "You know you're taken by that boy's smooth face and plausible tongue. So was I, but if you have anything to do with him you'll rue the day the same as I have had to. However, that's your look-out. I have been thinking I don't see why I should put myself out. I've lost enough already. I'm not afraid of what people will think or what the magistrate will say about not regularly checking the lad's cash; but the truth is

MY WIFE

'I don't like to upset her, so if she is against his being sent to gaol I think I'll let you try what you can do with him."

The aunt, I found, was a very sympathetic, motherly body. She would not hear of her nephew being charged at the police-court, so in about half an hour Henry and I were on our way back to London.

His conduct with us was most exemplary. After a time he confessed Christ as his personal Saviour, walked in consistent joined in Church membership, and took an active part in Christian work till he emigrated to try his fortune in America.

"NEWNESS OF LIFE,"

The Sequel.

I was told one evening that a gentleman wanted to see me. I was when I found the refined, precise, be-spectacled visitor, who spoke with the deliberateness, directness, and clearness which are characteristic of the American man of business, was my old protégé Henry Williams.

GREATLY ASTONISHED

After being a little while in the States, and hearing how one and another were making fortunes by some improvement in the manufacture of articles in common use, he considered one item and another till at last he thought of one to which no one had apparently devoted much attention, but which is indispensable in almost every household.

First of all, he experimented in improving its quality, then in devising a machine to reduce the cost of production, so that he might be able to offer an article than any yet in the market. One of the great Trusts heard of what he was doing, encouraged him, and lent him money to perfect his machine, and finally lay down adequate plant. To-day he supplies 75 per cent. of the article that is used in the States.

He handed me his business card. For obvious

> The Williams . . . Manufacturing Co.
> (Williams' Process),
> 226, Grand Avenue,
> Chicago.

reasons I omit the name of the article and alter the address.

He told me his machine turns out thirty times as much daily as any machine in use in England, and that by a system of standardization, adopted by all manufacturers in the main industry, all the side industries can guarantee an exact fit by this size being called for instead of a shop assistant having to try ever so many kinds and sizes to find a fit.

He was staying at one of our mammoth hotels here with a view to establishing a branch business in this country.

So much for his business success. Better still, he is an office-bearer in a Chistian Church, and his two eldest children are already Sunday-school teachers.

"Did it pay?" If you think so, then let me tell you that there are hundreds more of erring lads like Henry Williams needing a helping hand, with lives to be trained in honourable industry, and for the Saviour; that our Homes offer "An Open Door—Day and Night," not to London lads only, but to cases from all parts of the country, and, I may truthfully add, the distant ends of the earth. I wrote, "a helping hand"—"an empty hand," will not meet the exigencies of their plight, but with our and empty store, we must soon have nothing else to offer. Yet often a few pounds—sometimes a few shillings—will save a boy from the gutter and the gaol, and give him or perhaps for the first time "a chance in life." Will you help us to do so?

HEARTS TO BE WON

"ANOTHER CHANCE IN LIFE,"

The Widow's Importunity.

About thirteen years ago a widow in delicate health, with four children dependent upon her, sought my advice and help. She was a Christian woman—a church member at Pastor Charles Spurgeon's Baptist Chapel at Greenwich. I need not hesitate to give her name—Mrs. Baker—for all that follows only reflects credit upon her and hers.

I saw at once that she could not possibly bring up her four children without some supplemental assistance. To attempt it would inevitably mean or a living tomb in a workhouse.

My proposal was that I should train her elder boy a little, and send him to Canada; then take the younger one and do the same for him; and to comfort the poor mother, rather than in any expectation that it would happen so, I said, "You don't know, Mrs. Baker, but what some day your two boys may send for you and their sisters, and you may be on the other side of the Atlantic." With the yearnings of a mother's heart she clutched at the straw of hope, and as she knew the value of prayer, she made this her petition day and night, in the faith that is not deterred by improbabilities, but faces even impossibilities in the calm assurance that "the Lord reigneth."

. . . . . .

The Sequel.

The elder boy went to Canada when he was eleven. The younger boy followed a few years later. From the time the elder boy set foot in Canada he had only one aim—to be the means in God's hands of answering his mother's prayers. At first, of course, he earned very little, but he denied himself every boyish indulgence, and saved every cent he could. By-and-by his wages increased. He took no holidays, was most careful with his clothes,

BANKED EVERY DOLLAR HE COULD, only remitting his mother a pound or two occasionally, sending enough to buy his elder sister a sewing-machine when she was too delicate to go to service, and regularly contributing to the New Year's Gift our old boys in Canada send each year to the support of their old Home—£3,222 in fifteen years—every cent out of their own savings.

In the spring of 1899, when he was only eighteen years of age, he came into our Distributing Home in Toronto and planked down enough to bring his mother and two sisters out to Canada, and he had a house furnished to receive them on their arrival.

I went down to Liverpool to see Mrs. Baker and her two girls off, with a party of my boys a few weeks later, to Canada. On the way she gave me to read a letter from Walter, received just as she was leaving Greenwich that morning, with a few parting instructions. In it he said he had two pigs the boss was minding till she arrived, and they started housekeeping, and the mistress had promised some poultry. He hoped she would think he had laid out the money all right in the furniture. "All the women in the neighbourhood have advised me in the matter." Poor Walter! I imagine all the women in a Canadian village as a consulting committee on the purchase of furniture!

At Liverpool the officials on the landing-stage, accustomed to strange scenes, tragic and pathetic, heard some of the facts, and warmly and congratulated her on having such a noble son.

A few weeks afterwards I had a letter from Walter, telling me that the first night in their new home as a reunited family was spent in weeping and praising God till daybreak.

* * *

Since then I have had several letters from Mrs. Baker sending thankofferings

FOR OUR WAIFS AND STRAYS, with her heart's grateful thanks for what had been done for her and her children.

"Did it pay?" If you think so, then let me tell you that there are thousands of poor widows like Mrs. Baker; that, while they are out at work all day, their children are under no supervision, and are liable to be led into all kinds of evil; the poor widowed mother's heart is almost broken by the struggle to earn, not a living, an existence, and the sight of her boys drifting to ruin. Is it not a double duty to "save this lad" and fill the widow's heart with praise and hope in place of anguish and despair?

* * *

Face to face with the claims of another winter we have towards the maintenance of our four Homes for orphans and waifs and strays, or our comprehensive home-missionary work (Mission Hall, Medical Mission, Factory Girls' Institute, &c.), in S.E. London.

NOT ONE PENNY IN HAND

This great work for God entrusted to our care (built up by increasing toil is in most pressing need of immediate and substantial support. I feel I need say no more.

DURING THE LAST THIRTY YEARS)

THE WORKING MEN'S MISSION

NEW CUT, BLACKFRIARS, S.E.

A LETTER FROM F. A. BEVAN, Esq., J.P., D.L.

"54, Lombard Street, London, E.C.

"I desire to commend the appeal issued by the Committee of the Working Men's Mission to the Christian public. Since the year 1876 the Brothers Young, with the help of other Christian Working Men, have been carrying on a splendid work for God among the 'masses' in the New Cut and adjoining neighbourhood, owing to which numbers of men and women have been transformed, and thousands of children have been brought under spiritual influence. It is impossible to over-estimate the importance of thus getting hold of the children in these days, when there is so little of definite religious instruction. In order to carry on all the various departments of the work efficiently, it is absolutely necessary to have a hall, with rooms attached, in the centre of operations, such as the present building in Collingwood Street. But, unfortunately, the lease of these premises will shortly expire, and therefore the proposed new building ought to be commenced without delay. All who are interested in the evangelisation of the working classes of the great city cannot do better than subscribe to this important undertaking. "F. A. BEVAN, Treasurer."

An excellent site has been found in Webber Street, New Cut, near the Waterloo Road, with an area of about 3,000 superficial feet. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners have granted a lease for 999 years at the exceptionally low ground rent of £38 per year. Already a benevolent lady has placed to our credit

£1,000 CONDITIONALLY that we open free of debt.

We have received promises from F. A. Bevan, Esq., J.P., D.L., £250; E. M. Denny, Esq., £250; T. A. Denny, Esq., £100; and our own Members have collected about £500.
The cost of erecting the Mission Hall and Schools is £5,000, of which £2,100 has been promised.

£2,900 STILL REQUIRED.

And we beg the readers of "The Christian" to help us in this responsible undertaking. Donations will be thankfully acknowledged by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., J.P., D.L., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; Messrs. Morgan and Scott; or the Superintendents, T. and J. Young, 33, Nelson Square, Blackfriars, S.E.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION,

TELLING OF

GREAT and WIDE-SPREAD BLESSING ON ITS WORK.

Converts write, gratefully recording their new-found joy in Christ. Clergy and Ministers write in warm appreciation of the labours of the O. A. M. Evangelists in their districts, Christian workers write, telling of many who have been gathered into the Saviour's kingdom through the work of the Mission at RACES, FAIRS, FÊTES, SHOWS, FACTORY GATES and RAILWAY WORKS, and IN NEEDY COUNTRY VILLAGES.

Help is earnestly sought for the JUBILEE FUND in aid of the still further extension of these evangelistic efforts.

Offices: 11, Adam Street, Strand, London.

Christmas. In the best sense, and without the least tinge of formality, we wish our readers a Happy Christmas. It is frequently said that the Christmas of to-day is a very different thing from the Christmas of half a century ago. Then there was a sacredness about it which touched the depths of the soul; to-day it has become more material—a feast of cheer and good will. In some respects, this is undoubtedly true, but it is a general statement, which cannot be taken for all in all.

Its Deeper Import. To men whose eyes have been opened to understand something of the glory of the Incarnation, and all that is involved in it, Christmas must of necessity have a meaning which it can never have to people who possess no spiritual rapport with God. But these two classes have always existed, and Christmas has never had the same message for both of them. Formerly, however, men concealed their real feelings by an outward observance of religion at this season of the year. To-day the mask is dropped. That is probably the difference which is observed as subsisting between fifty years ago and to-day. But they who want the feast without Christ would do well to ask themselves what the world would have been like had He never come to it.

The Mystery of Bethlehem. There is a deep mystery eternally hanging over Bethlehem. Human reason cannot penetrate it. It is one of those secret things which belong to the Lord our God. But what reason cannot comprehend, faith rejoices in—nothing can alter the fact that at Bethlehem God was manifest in flesh. The how of that manifestation is beyond us. But we reverently accept the Divine word—"When the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman" (Gal. iv. 4). We quite agree with the words of a learned theologian: "It is impossible to conceive of our Lord, who came down from Heaven, entering into our world, save by a miraculous gateway." If we believe in a real Incarnation, we must believe in miracle. It is a mystery, but it is a mystery of God's working, and the Christian heart reverently adores it.

The Opium Traffic. We invite special attention to the letter by Mr. B. Broomhall, on "The Opium Traffic," published on p. 15. Inquiry among friends well informed on the subject elicits a unanimous expression of opinion that all the information available on the subject is already in the possession of English workers; and we cordially agree that the facts are indisputable. The indictment of the trade as one of the greatest curses to humanity is complete; the terrible apathy of even Christian people alone delays action which shall lead to the renunciation by the British nation of what is practically the price of blood.

The Pilgrim's Progress. John Bunyan wrote for generations yet unborn, because he wrote of the Gospel of Christ and its appeal to human need. Grave and reverend volumes come and go, leaving neither name nor influence; but "The Pilgrim's Progress," with its commonplace language and piquant style, outlives thousands of them.

> This book is writ in such a dialect
> As may the minds of listless men affect;
> It seems a novelty, and yet contains
> Nothing but sound and honest Gospel strains.

So said the immortal dreamer himself, and in hundreds of languages these aims and qualities have manifested themselves, because the object of the book is to bring the sinner to realize his lost condition, and to venture his all upon the one and only Saviour. Bunyan's great work is as good for to-day as for the seventeenth century, and we are delighted to welcome new editions of it. That just issued by Mr. Henry Frowde (Oxford University Press Warehouse), illustrated from twenty-five drawings on wood by George Cruikshank, is a superb production in every way, and well suited for presentation purposes. (25s. net.) There is not only a biographical introduction, but (what is of special interest) there are indices of Scripture texts and general topics.

Other Foundations. In his new volume, "The Bible in the Nineteenth Century," Rev. Estlin Carpenter, Lecturer in History at Manchester College, Oxford, claims that the present day "Higher Criticism" is helpful to Unitarianism. Rejecting, with other foundation beliefs of the Christian faith, the doctrine of the sinlessness of Christ, the "Lamb without blemish and without spot," Mr. Carpenter, on the plea that "there are those to whom the doctrine is a hindrance rather than a help," sets aside the inspired declaration, "For we have not a high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, —without sin," and he puts himself in the attitude of those Pharisees to whom Jesus put the question, "Which of you convinceth Me of sin?" To a writer who professes to be satisfied that all evidences of our Lord's Divinity have been destroyed by modern critics, it may be easy to believe that Unitarianism will soon be in the ascendant. At present, however, its hands still continue full of ashes.

Little Hands. A deeply-interesting paper in the current issue of The Quiver, giving details of a number of noble charities, the funds of which are contributed by children, furnishes a striking answer to the question, often put, "What can children do?" The record furnished by Mr. Curry is simply an astonishing one. It includes such various objects as the maintenance of cots in hospitals, the purchase and support of missionary ships, the support of deformed and afflicted children, the giving of help and pleasure to poor little ones in their homes, the maintenance of a school for the blind in Alexandria, and of a chapel for the Red Indians in South Dakota, the founding of coffee-houses, the establishment of drinking fountains, help to the Indian Famine Fund, training native children, providing funds for missionary work, and quite a host of other enterprises. In all these things, and in that which underlies them and is their foundation, Jesus is still calling the children unto Him and blessing them.

A Soldier's Battle. Rev. Dr. Gregory, in a thoughtful paper headed by the question, "Is Christianity adequate for meeting the present emergency?" draws a sharp distinction between Christianity and what he terms Churchianity; and although he shares Mr. Moody's conviction that the churches are on the eve of the greatest awakening in the history of modern times, he does not hesitate to express his opinion that the "forward movement" does not really move as it ought to do. He argues that a spiritual transformation, and a return to the primitive faith and life and aim, must be attained before the nation can be roused and moved. What is wanted, he urges, in place of "spasmodic eruptions of thoughtless zeal," is real spiritual energy, "working from the central citadel in the regenerated heart of the living Church from within outward, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit," and he says:—

> If the desired awakening and quickening does not come, there will be no question at whose door the responsibility rests. . . . Every Christian is a witness and worker for Christ, and in the new order of things now called for he must be led into that work of witnessing and soul-winning. . . . The simple process of carrying out the will of God in this regard, is that of personal witnessing and winning, to which every soul in Christ is called.

Deceiving. Probably few of our readers are aware by personal observation of the soul-deceiving error which is taught in some parish churches. The following is from the Okehampton Parish Magazine for November:—

> At a dedication festival does not the thought of affection for the parish church come specially home to us? It was here that we were made members of Christ in baptism, whilst original sin—that which we inherited at our birth—was washed away in "the laver of regeneration." It was here too that many of us received in confirmation at the hands of the bishop a strengthening of that spiritual life which was implanted in holy baptism. It is here that we are refreshed continually through the holy communion; it is here that we meet together for prayer and praise; and it is here for many of us that the words of hope will be read as our bodies are committed to the dust "in sure and certain hope of the resurrection to eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ."

And—Being Deceived. Such flagrant contradictions of Scripture truth are to be instilled into our children's minds by Sunday-school teaching machines, who are to repeat to their classes on Sunday morning the instructions given them, and the children are to be clerically catechized in the afternoon to see that the machines have worked automatically. We quote from the same magazine:—

> It is probable that in the future, beginning on Advent Sunday, there will be a new plan adopted in regard to the working of our Sunday-schools. A skeleton outline lesson will again be given to the teachers, who will meet once a week, and we hope every teacher will make a point of being present. The instruction that will be given them will be repeated by them to their classes on Sunday morning, and in the afternoon the children will be catechized by one of the clergy regularly on what has been given in the morning by the teachers. This plan ought to work well, and we hope it will.

Truly, "the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means——and the people love to have it so.—AND WHAT WILL YE DO IN THE END THEREOF?"

Is Suffering Service? A Reply. Not only is suffering service, but the highest kind of service. "Here is the patience and the faith of the saints"—in the endurance of persecution, or sickness, or pain, or loss, or distress of mind, or body, or estate. We were not redeemed by what Jesus did, but by what He suffered. Be assured that the trials and pains are the Refiner's fire, and the Fuller's soap, that we may be purified from the dross of our Adam-nature, and that our garments may be white and glistering, as our Lord in His Transfiguration. "Be not conformed to this age, but be ye transfigured by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what that holy, and acceptable, and perfect will of the Lord is" (Rom. xii.).

The Temporal Power Again. Readers of the striking first chapter of Rev. Dr. Robertson's "The Roman Catholic Church in Italy," will be surprised if they should come across the recent declaration from the R.C. Bishop of Liverpool, in regard to the question of the Temporal Power. Perhaps the pronouncement, which was read in all the R.C. chapels in the diocese, would scarcely call for comment, however (although it seems somewhat late in the day to attempt to bolster up so vain a dream), were it not for the fact that Dr. Whiteside distinctly declares it to be obligatory upon Roman Catholics to accept the teaching of the Holy See on the subject, that the Temporal Power is necessary, "not for the existence of the Church, but for that well-being and perfection which its Divine Founder wished it to have," and warns them as to the consequences if they attempt to keep "an open mind."

Beside the assent of Faith, there is a second kind of assent of the mind, that of religious obedience, which the Church may demand. Were a person, then, to refuse assent to the declaration of the Holy See or of the Catholic Episcopate on the subject, he could not escape the imputation of a culpable temerity in setting up his own opinion against the teaching of the Divinely-appointed teacher; he is guilty of error and rashness who questions doctrines made known by the Church, and a person cannot, without grave sin, refuse obedience and sincere submission to the authority of the Holy See.

Could mental and spiritual slavery sink deeper than this?

Working in Peace. There is a message of restfulness and peace in a little sketch, all too brief, of the late Lady Augusta Stanley, from the pen of one of her intimate friends, and in these days of feverish hurry such a message is far from being out of place. A devout Christian of deeply spiritual mind, abounding in good works, and with a multiplicity of engagements, royal and other, it is recorded of her that even when she had to go down to Windsor to the Queen Victoria, whose closest confidence she retained to the last, she yet found time to precede that engagement by a visit to a poor creature dying of cancer in a Westminster slum. So, too, when the Deanery was full of distinguished visitors, she and Dean Stanley invariably "made time" on Sunday afternoons to visit a poor lodging-house, "so wretched and dirty," says the biographer, "that but few would venture into it." Surely such a life, full, yet without haste, has in it a mastering element of that Divine peace which Jesus has promised to give to His servants, "My peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, give I unto you." (John xiv. 27.)

The Symmetrical Life. In the Apocalyptic vision of the Holy City—the New Jerusalem descending out of heaven from God—the Seer describes the city as lying four-square, and "the length, and the breadth, and the height of it are equal" (Rev. xxi. 16). Obviously, under a material form, we are introduced to a spiritual conception. That city, which is lightened by the glory of God, and from which all evil is excluded, lies four-square—its length, breadth, and height are equal—that is to say, it is thoroughly symmetrical; there is nothing excessive on one side, and lacking on another. That will be the characteristic of the heavenly city. It will also be the characteristic of the citizens yonder; their lives will be symmetrical. And surely it is meant to be characteristic of them here also. Too many have length without breadth—their energies are extended, but there is little substance in them. Others have breadth without length—there is substance, but no great outreach. Others have height without breadth or length—they aspire, but they do not extend. The symmetrical life is that wherein the length, breadth, and height are equal. It is service extended in length as far as possible, and supported by a broad love and a high aspiration.

Jesus in His Miracles. Naturally to those who do not accept the Divinity of our Lord, the miracles must present grave difficulties, for they cannot look upon them in their true nature, "an epitome of God's processes in nature beheld in immediate connection with their source," a source too often lost to the eyes and hearts of men in the far receding gradations of continuous law. Instead of being, as they are frequently defined to be, violations of the law of nature, they are a fulfilment of her deepest laws. As a gifted writer has well said:—

The miracles are mightier far than any goings-on of nature as beheld by common eyes disassociating them from a living Will, but the miracles are surely less than those mighty goings-on of nature with God beheld at their heart. In the name of Him who delighted to say, "My Father is greater than I," I will say that His miracles in bread and wine were far less grand and less beautiful than the works of the Father they represented, in making the corn to grow in the valleys, and the grapes to drink the sunlight on the hillsides of the world with all their infinitudes of tender gradations and delicate mystery of birth. But the Son of the Father be praised, who, as it were, condensed these mysteries before us, and let us see the precious gifts coming at once from loving hands—hands that love could kiss and nails could wound.

India and the Gospel. It has been said, with much force, that we at home lack that vivid imagination which enables people to comprehend a distant situation, and so actualize it as to result in enthusiastic work on its behalf. The Indian religions are already broken up through the contact of the East with the West; and now the question is whether they are to be replaced by the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, or by Atheism. It is this we in the West have not yet realized.

C.M.S. We have in hand correspondence regarding the Church Missionary Society, which we are obliged to hold over till next week.

A Christmas Meditation.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

BEFORE discussing further the feeling of the age in relation to theological opinion, it may be of advantage to turn aside and indulge in a Christmas meditation. There may be much about the celebration of Christmas which, to the philosopher, the unsentimental man of the world, or, on the other side, to the spiritual Christian, may be extremely distasteful. Unreality, affected sentiment, debasement of that which professes to be sacred, are displeasing to all sound minds, and it would need some hardihood to deny that these elements are to be found in much that is passed off upon us as celebration of Christmas.

But, after all has been said, it remains true that even this pretence or affectation is itself an unconscious and certainly undesigned witness to the grandeur of that which is thus strangely travestied. The world celebrates the most memorable day in its history. There is no fact in its long record which can be compared, in interest and sublimity, in its own intrinsic grandeur or in its bearings upon the happiness of the family of man, with those "glad tidings" proclaimed by the angels as they chanted their Christmas anthem over the manger of Bethlehem: "We bring unto you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all the people, for there is born to you this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."

If there were nothing else in it than the mere fact that the echoes of this song are rising to-day from multitudes, in lands so far removed from each other, and from peoples who are so out of sympathy with each other (except in their devotion to the Babe who slumbered in that manger)—that itself would be

A MARVEL NOT LIGHTLY TO BE DISMISSED.

Take the case of the English nation as an example. We belong to a different race, live on another continent, represent a contrasted type of civilization, are at a remote stage of history. Tradition, temperament, environment, state of knowledge all divide the two peoples far as the poles asunder. But here, after 2,000 years, Saxons are found celebrating, in every variety of form, the birth of a Galilean Child. Sceptics, who pride themselves on what they are pleased to regard as their superiority to vulgar superstitions, may sneer at these manifestations, but they cannot quench the spirit which disposes such numbers to keep the festival; and, whether they keep it in a religious spirit or not, that the man is looked upon with suspicion who does not believe that the coming of Jesus into the world, is to be regarded as an event of great joy.

Nor can any sneer get rid of the fact, whose significance is apt to be obscured by its familiarity, that the true spirit of Christmas is recognised as that of brotherhood; and that the hard, vindictive, selfish man is treated as an offender against Christmas. That was the lesson of Dickens' early Christmas books. It would have been impossible even for that brilliant genius to have kindled such enthusiasm, had not the ground been prepared by the reading of the old Book—this wondrous record of

THE BIRTH AT BETHLEHEM.

It is necessary to carry the line of reflection still further, if we are to get any adequate conception of the message Christmas brings us. All kinds of changes have passed over the world since this earth was trodden by the Son of Man. Even in our own island, since first the Gospel was brought to its distant Western shore, society has passed through a wonderful process of evolution. But, strange to tell, this old feast has maintained its hold upon the popular imagination and the popular sympathy.

There was a day in which, in the strong recoil from rites and festivals of man's appointment, some of the truest and noblest Christians in the land looked on Christmas observance with more than doubt. But the Christmas sentiment has proved too strong for a criticism, which yet had much to urge in its own behalf.

Not only in this land, but among all English-speaking communities, and throughout all Christendom, the day is hailed from year to year as a time of gladness and rejoicing.

There are those who will be prepared to dismiss the fact, in very light and airy fashion, that Christianity by this, as by many other infallible signs, is shown to be a living power after 2,000 years of strain and conflict. What are 2,000 years, as compared with the periods of which Huxley used to tell us? was a question once put to me. The contrast may seem striking, but there is this at least to be said in reply—If the two thousand are known to us, the hundreds of thousands belong to cloud-land, of which we know, and can know, nothing. For practical men the shorter time is sufficient, indeed, to form a judgment upon a Teacher, and the influence he has exerted on the progress of Humanity. The tests to which the Gospel has been submitted have been infinitely varied. It has had to face perils of prosperity as well as of adversity, contradictions of sinners and inconsistencies of saints, misrepresentation of the Divine message, and human attempts to provide substitutes for it. But it has passed successfully through them all. It lives, it retains its primitive character, it has

LOST NOTHING OF ITS EARLY FORCE.

The old confidence remains unshaken: "The Word of our God shall stand for ever."

The phenomenon is surely instructive. The continuance of Christmas Day does not prove that the "glad tidings" were from God, or that they are the message of love for the salvation of the world. But at least it is evidence that the birth thus announced has made a deep and lasting impression on mankind.

It becomes even more marvellous and instructive when we turn from the manger to the life at the opening of which it stood. That life is the only one which was voluntarily accepted by Him who lived it, and accepted by Him with the certain knowledge that it would end in a cross—in a death of suffering and shame. Other men are born, they live and they die, but at death they shudder, and in the great majority of cases would fain escape. The special feature in the case of our Lord was that He was BORN IN ORDER THAT HE MIGHT DIE.

The shame, the agony, the apparent defeat and disappointment, were all forgotten in view of the infinite love which led Him to take our nature in order that He might bear our burden and suffer in our stead—"wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities."

This is the real message of Christmas; it has produced an impression on the world which it is not possible for us to estimate. It is doing the same to-day. A simple but very interesting illustration came under my notice recently. Among the attendants at a mission service conducted by a devoted Anglican clergyman was a youth, whose aspect and demeanour marked him out as a child of vice. The hereditary taint of drink was in him, and it had been deepened by constant indulgence. Towards the close of the service he was observed to leave the church. He speedily returned, however, and walked up to the clergyman who was conversing with some inquirers, and asked him to pray for him, telling him something of his own miserable story. "I went out of the church to go to the public. But I could not, and I am back again.

"OH, PRAY FOR ME."

Having complied with his request, the clergyman then urged him to pray for himself. On this the unhappy boy burst forth in petitions so impassioned, so piteous, so agonized, that they might have touched a heart of stone. His own heart had been reached by the simple presentation of the Saviour's love. Who can calculate the number of souls that have been conquered by the same marvellous power?

It is not too much to say that on this Christmas Day we hail once more the mightiest power to bless humanity that the world has ever known. A multitude which no man can number of human lives have been rescued from evil, purified, ennobled, transformed into the image of the Divine by the Saviour. He has from age to age made the wilderness and solitary place glad, and the desert to rejoice and blossom as the rose. To-day throughout the world are oases kept green and made fertile by the gentle influence which comes from the manger and the cross. Can it be that this wondrous power to restore the image of God in man is based upon a mere illusion? At all events the answer is not one which can be left in uncertainty. The hope of the world depends upon it. To tell us that on that we must keep an open mind, is a simple mockery, unworthy of men who treat life with any seriousness.

Christmas Poetry.

CHRISTMAS PRAISE.

Bright angels still are near,
As in the days of old;
Their joyful tidings banish fear,
And grace unfold.
To lowly and to high,
Their message peace imparts,
And starlit Bethlehem seems nigh
To humble hearts.

O faithful souls, and wise—
Go worship and adore!
The Day-star risen to cheer your eyes,
Shall set no more.
The Prince of Peace is born,
Your Saviour and your Friend;
And shadows flee before the dawn,
And sorrows end.

O height and depth of love!
In deep humility
The eternal King left heaven above
For you and me.
What offering can we bring?
What anthem can we raise?
Lord! give us hearts Thy praise to sing
Thro' all our days!

Annie E. Woodcock.

CHRISTMAS COMFORT.

So many links are gone, I cried,
Between the past and present
I miss mine old familiar friends,
Their kindly words and pleasant.
I miss the method each one had,
Their faults and jests and sorrows—
My yesterdays seem now so short,
And very long the morrows!

. . . . .

Hush! Strong and beautiful a thought
Came to me, like a token.
God may be drawing in the chain,
But not one link is broken!

Naomi Alder.

THE MANGER CHILD.

A stranger—yet the Heir,
Unnoticed—yet the King;
The lowly, peaceful manger His,
The wise their homage bring.

Earth raised no shout of joy,
His own no welcome gave;
The world could only these bestow—
A manger, then a grave.

'Twas "grace and truth" He brought,
No meretricious glare—
A glory veiled, a patient love,
To suffer and to bear.

The heart of God to show
A grace before unknown;
To raise the beggar from the dust,
And seat him on His throne.

Incarnate Love revealed,
Earth's fulness to restore;
Thee, wondrous Babe of Bethlehem,
We worship and adore.

Albert Midlane.

"JESUS . . . CROWNED."

Empty now the lowly manger,
Jesus hath gone up on high!
Earth had scorned the homeless Stranger,
Men had coldly passed Him by.
But the golden gates are lifted,
And ten thousand wistful eyes,
On this happy Christmas morning,
Welcome Him through parted skies.

Lucy A. Bennett.

CHRISTMAS GREETING.

Joy and peace, goodwill to mortals,
Let the nations all rejoice;
Heaven and earth with praise resounding,
Join with one united voice.

Glory be to God Almighty,
Him in highest heaven adore;
Worthy is the King Immortal,
To be praised for evermore.

Life eternal sent from heaven,
In the Son of God behold:
God in Him descends to bless us,
As the prophets have foretold.

Praise Him, men and angels praise Him,
For His word hath never failed;
Sing the song of earth's redemption,
Love hath mightily prevailed.

Hallelujah, reign for ever,
Son of God Thy right maintain;
Triumph over sin and Satan,
Breaking their infernal chain!

Let the world, redeemed for ever
Chant salvation's wondrous plan;
Hallelujah! Hallelujah!
See the love of God to man!

C. M. Handley.

EMMANUEL.

Hear the seraph choir proclaim it—
Love's almighty deed is done!
From the Bosom of the Father,
He hath given His Only One;
Heaven reveals, and earth receiveth,
As an Infant, God the Son.

Now the blessed Star of Morning,
Through the darksome night doth stream;
Tender "Day-spring," softly breaking
O'er earth's gloom with brightening gleam;
Gentle "Light of Light," outshining
Evermore each earthly beam.

"Lamb of God, the Meek and Lowly,
Grant us faith Thy power to see;
Soon in love and joy abounding,
Glorious will Thy Kingdom be;
Child of Peace, the warring nations
Yet shall be subdued by Thee!

Until then, the faithful praise Thee,
With a new and joyful strain;
Blessed Jesus, our Emmanuel,
Dwell among us once again;
Come, Lord Jesus! oh, come quickly,
In Thy majesty to reign!

Caroline Tickner.

THE MESSAGE OF THE BELLS.

Hark! the Christmas bells are ringing!
Pealing forth o'er hills and plains,
Wakening the midnight stillness
With the music of their strains.
Harbingers of welcome tidings,
Echoing yet once again
Song which angels in their gladness
Sang at first with glad refrain.

As I hush my soul to listen
This is what I seem to hear
In the song the bells are pealing
To the slowly-dying year:
"Banish ev'ry bitter passion,
Bid each angry voice be still,
Let the angels' song possess thee—
'Peace on earth, to man goodwill.'

"Let the Past be all-sufficient
For the bitterness of strife,
For the enmity that saddens,
For the sin that mars the life.
Let the Present find thee ready
For the advent of thy King,
Let thy heart express its gladness
In the song the angels sing.

"Let the Future prove how truly
Christ is born within thy breast;
Living, moving, working in thee—
Fill thy soul with perfect rest—
Purifying every motive,
Hallowing each earnest plan,
Bidding thee extend the message—
'Peace on earth, Goodwill to man.'"

Shall I be content to listen?
Shall I not the voice obey—
Spread abroad the joyous tidings
Which the bells to me convey,
Tidings of a living Saviour
Born the guilty to redeem?
Yea, my voice shall swell the chorus
Of the bright angelic theme.

S. E. Burrow.

Joy to the World!

(Luke ii. 8-22.)

ONE of the greatest joys born into the world with Christ was the knowledge that He was the promised Messiah and Saviour of the world; that at last the One who for centuries had been prophesied as able to deliver Israel, "the Everlasting King," had come.

Do we wonder at the beautiful song of praise that burst forth from Mary's lips as she realized the words of the angel, "That He should be great, and called 'The Son of the Highest,'" that her child was the Christ? Or at Simeon (who was waiting only, ere he died, for the consolation of Israel), taking the Child up in his arms and saying, "Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, according to Thy word; for mine eyes have seen Thy salvation, which Thou hast prepared before the face of all nations; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of Thy people Israel"? Or at the shepherds, and even the heavenly host themselves, glorifying and praising God?

No, the wonder of to-day is, that after so many of these joys have been realized, our hearts are not tuned to more perfect praise, and that others do not partake of it more.

Then we have the great joy of the manifestation of God's love to us through His Son Jesus Christ, who is "the express image of His Person." That love is still to us incomprehensible, and yet partly realized; seen from the commencement of Christ's life, and which has no end; born into this dark world, that the hearts of men might become continually saturated with it, that it might rule every principle in life.

Another joy was peace—that new-born peace, which was brought and left in the world through Christ's victory over sin and death; which the world cannot give nor take away; which can only be realized in the hearts of those who trust Christ, and whose minds are stayed on Him. That peace which comes to the mourner, the tired, and the restless, which shall quench all doubts and fears, and still the aching heart—the peace of God which passeth all understanding, given through Jesus Christ.

He came to make "the crooked paths straight and the rough places smoothe." To create goodwill toward men, instead of bitterness and strife; to up-root the awful evils of sin, and to substitute righteousness and true dealing from man to man.

Further, is the joy of a perfect ideal—of One, human and yet Divine, who has passed through all the experiences of human life, in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin, and so able to succour them that are tempted.

As we study that life, how every page is marked with sympathy and love toward our fallen humanity! And though He, as a human being, has left this earth, He has left us an example that we should follow His steps, who went about doing good, and bids us make this dark world brighter, by passing on His love from one to another. That love, when once enkindled within us, changes the whole atmosphere of life, giving light to the eye and fire to the heart—the love that "faileth never," but "suffereth long, envieth not, beareth all things"; the love that is moved with compassion on any in need, whether friend or foe; that will bear and forbear; that will sacrifice anything or all (if needs be) for love's sake; that weeps with those who weep, and is given, not only where it is returned, but to those from whom it is not expected.

And what of that supreme joy of life—the fact that all who take Christ as their Saviour, are accepted as God's sons and daughters, having the high privilege of calling Him Father, entitling them to life and fellowship with Christ on earth, and the great and lasting joy of reigning eternally with Him in heaven?

Reality, Reality!
Lord Jesus Christ is crowned in Thee—
In Thee is every type fulfilled,
In Thee is every yearning stilled.
For perfect beauty, truth, and love;
For Thou art always far above
The grandest glimpse of our ideal,
Yet more and more we know Thee real,
And marvel more and more to see
Thine infinite Reality.

Reality, Reality!
Of grace and glory dwell in Thee,
How real Thy mercy and Thy might!
How real Thy love, how real Thy light!
How real Thy truth and faithfulness!
How real Thy blessing when Thou dost bless!
How real Thy coming to dwell within!
How real the triumphs Thou dost win!
Does not the loving and glowing heart
Leap up to own how real Thou art?

*Striking Prison Scenes.

By CHARLES COOK.

"SPECIAL Services" are not usually held in prisons; but one day I found myself in the pulpit of a prison church in "the Land of a Thousand Lakes."

It was at Helsingfors, the capital of Finland, and the service was for women only. A few days previously, I was in another part of the country holding meetings for men, and on one day had an audience of 450, of whom 286 were undergoing life sentences. At such times one cannot but feel a special rejoicing at having a Gospel that can meet the needs of outcasts from society such as were before me in this convict gaol. But to return to the gathering of women. The church was crowded with anxious hearers, for a stranger from a foreign land was to speak to them. Usually the chaplain, with, perhaps, keys jingling at his waist, officiated. There was evident surprise when the text was announced, "This Man receiveth sinners."

I endeavoured to speak to them as a brother; descended to their level; told them "only grace made us to differ;" and then preached the love of God, offering a full and free salvation to all or any who would accept Christ as their Saviour, from the penalty and power of their sins. I confess I was not prepared for what followed. A deep sob was heard from some poor woman whose head dropped on to the wood in front of her; then another penitent sobbed aloud, until hardly a face could be seen for bowed heads; the throbbing hearts showed that once again love had conquered where harshness failed. The Baroness Wrede, who was interpreting for me, and Mrs. Cook, who was with me, were somewhat overcome, and I confess to feeling a something in my throat which cut my sermon short. How could one speak when one's words were drowned by the sobs and the griefs of one's congregation?

MOROCCO.

The late Miss Hanbury told me that, when travelling in the interior of Morocco, she met a caravan containing 147 prisoners, one of whom had fallen from a camel and broken his thigh. The officer in charge refused to stop in order to have the man seen to; but Miss Hanbury persisted, and after much backsheesh, induced him to permit her doctor to set the man's limb.

When it was concluded, the man heaved a sigh of relief, and said to Miss Hanbury—Mohammedan though he was—"May the Lord dress you in the dress of His own Righteousness!"

ALGERIA.

The prisons of the neighbouring country—Algeria—are in a better condition from a sanitary point of view; and, of course, there is a measure of justice administered. But, alas! there is no spiritual provision for those immured; and the light of the Gospel has no more chance at present of shining in the Algerian gaols than in those of Morocco. My medical friends told me, that in the last-named country "half the population were diseased." I believe it was there that I contracted gaol-fever. The morals of the Moors of Algeria are certainly not improved by their French conquerors; for these are bad colonists, and carry their vices with them.

It was whilst visiting the prisons of Algiers recently that I found myself in the most hopeless condition to help my fellow-men that I have ever experienced in my life. Ariski, the celebrated Kabyle brigand, with his chief lieutenant and twelve of his men, had been arrested, tried, and condemned to death. When in their presence I discovered they could not speak French, and knew nothing but the Kabyle language. My friend who accompanied me, though conversant with Arabic in many dialects, could not speak to them in their own tongue, and I had to leave these fourteen immortal souls to go into eternity without ever having heard of the glorious Gospel of the Grace of God. We shook hands with each of them, looked the love and sympathy we felt, and, leaving a few francs to get them some extra food, departed with sad and sorrowful hearts.

The Scriptures had not then been translated into their language; but now the New Testament has been completed by Mr. Cuendet, of the North Africa Mission.

In the morning the roll of musketry told of those precious souls, for whom Christ died, having passed out of time, never having been told of the Evangel of His love, though well nigh two decades of centuries have elapsed since the command was given.

"It is All Excitement."

SO has the world exclaimed, from Pentecost till now, concerning those who renounce all its values for the service of their Saviour. Yet has this taunt received, all the ages through, absolute refutation in the patient continuance, with ever-increasing devotion, of self-denying ministry for Christ. We think no stronger illustration of this fact could be found than in the case of the many men and women who, having years ago left all to carry the Gospel to China, have now, after sufferings indescribable during the Boxer outbreak, followed by enforced retreat, as soon as possible returned to the scenes of their arduous toil, countless privations, and persecution which was well-nigh unto death.

"If ever there were heroes, this little band at Hwailuh are such, to venture back to the place where they went through so much three years ago," writes a missionary couple who were at home during the awful massacres of 1900, which cost the lives of their sister, brother-in-law and child, among the fifty foreign workers butchered in Shansi; to which blood-stained field these labourers have just returned. Pathetic is their account of the present scenes of that reign of terror; the filthy prison-cells where the last hours on earth of so many loved ones were passed; the stories told by natives of the unbroken patience and Christian love of these missionary martyrs; the wrecked homes, hospitals, chapels. "And if," writes Mrs. E., "the desolation of once happy homes tended to sadden us, much more saddening was the remnant of the once flourishing little church, of whom many had recanted, and some had acted basely. But the memory of the many Chinese Christians who had nobly confessed Christ in the face of death, was an inspiration and great cheer for the future."

With the little band, designated "heroes" by Mrs. E., it was my privilege to travel home from China three years ago, as they returned to England, shattered in health, and mourning the loss of their little daughter, caused by the terrible privations of their captivity in Boxer hands. Mrs. G. has now written to me, on arrival at their former station, Hwailuh in Chih-li: "I did at one time shrink from returning to this land, when the thought arose, 'Suppose the Lord does not need you again in China, and will therefore close your way?' The pain caused to me by such a possibility, showed to me my heart's deepest longings, and led me to put myself afresh into the Master's hands for China; and praise be to His Holy Name—He has accepted me."

Would that in the Church of Christ there were more of such "excitement" of wholehearted devotion to His cause!

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, December 27. Isaiah xxii.

IT was the fortieth year of Isaiah's ministry, and the twenty-sixth of Hezekiah's reign. Sennacherib was threatening Jerusalem. For half a century Zion had been preparing for this final struggle with Assyria, and now the hour had arrived. The metropolis was crowded with fugitives, soldiers, and statesmen, idle crowds and opposing factions, constantly agitated by the tidings of the enemy's advance. Great preparations had been made both in fortification and defence (6-12).

Under the pressure of fear, Hezekiah's government had made an alliance with Egypt; but that country had sustained a crushing defeat, and there was nothing to interpose between Jerusalem and her foe. In a moment despair seems to have settled down on the people, who gave themselves up to feasting and blasphemy (13). This, more than aught else, filled Isaiah's heart with anguish (2-5). That such things should happen in the valley of vision, i.e., in the very home of prophecy, that the people should be overwhelmed not by the foe in fair fight, but by their own lusts; that their joys were not in God, but in dissolute carousals—this broke his heart. He could not be comforted (1-4).

The leader of the government at this time was Shebna, whose name betrays his Syrian origin. He had counted on his permanence in Jerusalem, and built a huge sepulchre; but he would die in exile, as a rolling-stone, a perpetual fugitive. Eliakim would take his place (xxxvi. 3), and would seem a peg in a sure place, though even he would give way, if too much were hung on him (25). What a contrast between Eliakim and Him who has the keys of death and of Hades, who opens and none shuts, and on whom we may hang all our weight for time and eternity, sure that He can never give way beneath the weight (Rev. iii. 7).

MONDAY, December 28. Isaiah xxiii.

This chapter is full of fascinating interest to a commercial people because it deals with commerce as represented by the Phœnicians, whose Tyre and Sidon were the Liverpool and Bristol of their day. They established great trading depôts on the Nile and Euphrates, their fleets passed through the Straits of Gibraltar into the Atlantic, and their daughter-colonies surrounded the basin of the Mediterranean. They carried Egyptian art and Babylonian knowledge to the Grecian Archipelago, and brought back the metals of Spain and Britain (2, 3).

The Phœnicians sacrificed all the nobler aims of civilization to a mercenary and venal spirit. They reared no art nor literature, but became a nation of slave-dealers, employing mercenary troops to do their fighting. Everything was sacrificed for gold—this, says the prophet, is the spirit of the woman who counts her very charms as so much marketable value (15, 16).

The desolating scourge of Assyrian invasion would sap the springs of Phœnician commerce, both on the Nile and in Chaldæa. Indeed, the proud cities of Phœnicia should be overrun by invasion, and her peoples would have to take refuge in the neighbouring island of Cyprus (10-14). For seventy years Tyre would disappear from the attention of the world, at the end of which time her fortunes would again revive, but the gains of her trading should become consecrated to God's service (18). Commerce is full of God-like possibilities; and if only our commercial men would consider that they can co-operate with God, and render great service to man in the manufacture and distribution of goods, commerce would become a powerful ally to religious life.

TUESDAY, December 29. Isaiah xxiv.

It is very difficult to fix the epoch to which this chapter refers. Man is called indefinitely the inhabitant of the earth, and God is described as cleaning the earth out as one might clean a soiled dish (1). Such are the judgments which overwhelm society, that man cannot escape them (18). Indeed the overwhelming deluge of trouble reaches the very stars—the high ones on high (21). It would almost seem as though this chapter contains an anticipation of the overthrow of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar in years far distant from the date of Isaiah's earlier prophecies (12-14). The people are scattered, some toward the fires of the East, and others to the isles of the sea (15). But beyond these dark and lowering clouds, the prophet beholds a bright and blessed time when the Lord should reign in untarnished glory (23).

There is a precise parallel here between the visions of Isaiah and of the beloved Apostle. The New Testament also looks out on a scene of judgment and dissolution—"I saw a great white throne"—but beyond, there are the new heavens and the new earth, where God shall dwell with His people and be their God. The only anchor that can keep us from drifting into despairing pessimism is the God-given hope that good will prevail over evil, and progress conquer reaction. The good old days are not to be compared with the new best days when the mystery of God shall be finished. Let us anticipate the coming of those days!

Let all that look for, hasten the coming joyful day;
By earnest consecration, to walk the narrow way.

WEDNESDAY, December 30. Isaiah xxv.

This hymn seems to celebrate the overthrow of Babylon (2, 3), and therefore is in strict accord with the interpretation we placed on the preceding chapter. If that celebrates the desolation of Jerusalem at the time of Nebuchadnezzar's invasion, this celebrates the fall of the proud, oppressing city at the close of the exile, when the success of Cyrus over the feeble Belshazzar, and the downfall of the Babylonian empire, prepared the way for the Jews' return to their own land.

The people of God are described as the poor and needy (4; see also xxvi. 6); but God has interposed on their behalf. During those bitter years of captivity He sheltered them, and now He was prepared to make a feast in the mountain of Zion, in which all peoples were to participate (6-8). What can this be but a prevision of these Gospel days, when Jerusalem has given to all the world, in her noblest Son, who was also Son of God, the Bread of Life and the Wine of His Blood?

Moreover, there is a prevision of Resurrection. The nation, as such, anticipates a coming forth out of the grave of obscurity and defeat, to resume her former place with more than former beauty. But the Apostle Paul reads in these glorious words (7, 8) the immortal hope of the Church, that death shall be swallowed up in victory, and that God's own hand will wipe away all tears (1 Cor. xv. 54, 55).

O weary souls, wait in expectant faith for this! You cannot be disappointed; the day of Resurrection and Final Victory is hastening towards you on the wings of every hour. The fortresses of Sin and Death shall be laid low (9-12).

THURSDAY, December 31. Isaiah xxvi.

This glorious hymn was prepared in readiness for the return of the exiles from Babylon, when the mighty empire that had held them in durance was levelled to the earth (5, 6). Their trust had not been misplaced. They had found God to be their everlasting Rock and Shelter, in whose keeping they had been able to abide in perfect peace (3, 4); and as they passed through the open gates, they celebrated His love and care with everlasting joy upon their heads. They had waited, desired, trusted, and had not been ashamed (8, 9). They had even begun to understand some of the reasons by which their Divine Lord had been actuated (10).

It would seem, indeed, as though the captivity in Babylon had suggested hopes of resurrection that passed far beyond the national revival and resuscitation which they were joyfully celebrating. The restored people could not but remember those who had fallen in the ineffectual fight for their liberties, or whom they had buried in the land of their exile; but as they considered the power of the living God, they cherished the God-given hope that even these should rise again. What a contrast there is in this paragraph between Israel's foes and her children! They were dead, and should not live; they were deceased, and should not rise; but in answer to her groanings, prayers, and intercessions, Jehovah promises that the children of the covenant should rise again. God says not to the returned exiles only, but to us all, "Thy dead shall live." O glorious morning, when we shall see our beloved again, in the dewy beauty of immortal youth! Till then let us hide ourselves in the chambers of God's faithful care. It is not for long! It is but a little moment, and the indignation will be overpast.

FRIDAY, January 1. Isaiah xxvii.

It is evident that the theme of the two previous chapters is the underlying thought of this. In the first verse we are told of the approaching destruction of Babylon and Egypt. But He who slays the great wild beasts of empire, defends His vineyard (3). But that vineyard is to-day His Church. "My Father," said our Lord, "is the Husbandman." Yes, He will help and water each individual soul (3). If one reading these words has been a persecutor of the Church, like Saul of Tarsus, let him no longer oppose himself to God, but take hold of His strength, and be at peace (5).

Throughout this chapter there are bright anticipations for Israel's future—"shall take root," "shall blossom and bud," "shall fill the world with fruit" (6). "The iniquity of Jacob shall be purged" (9). "A great trumpet shall be blown, and they that were ready to perish shall come" (23). Notice the finality of God's judgments on His foes—broken off and withered boughs (10, 11); but, in contrast to this, Israel is gathered one by one (12). Other fruit may be shaken or beaten off the trees, but the chosen people are carefully gathered. "One by one"—that is God's method. Gathered fruit is neither bruised nor trampled in the field; it is mellow, juicy, and unbroken in skin. There is a band of earnest workers among us known as the "One by One" Band, and there is no doubt whatever that this is the true policy of soul-winning. The four bearers concentrated on their fifth, paralysed, friend—they brought him to Jesus, but he went away on his own feet, and whole.

SATURDAY, January 2. Isaiah xxviii.

1-6. In this chapter, Isaiah addresses to the politicians of Jerusalem a warning derived from the impending fate of Samaria. Fifty years before, Amos had denounced the citizens of the Northern Kingdom for lolling on their couches, and drinking wine out of basins—women as well as men. Upon those same drunkards, Isaiah now fastens his woe. They are depicted as lying stretched on the flowers at the heads of their fat valleys, while God's storm of judgment is creeping over the sky. In contrast to this scene of sensuality, the Lord of Hosts waits to be the crown and strength of His people. There are two qualities we all need—wisdom when we sit in judgment, and strength when we resist the battle at the gate.

6-13. The men of Jerusalem are, however, too far gone in sensual indulgence to heed the prophet's words. Are we school children? they asked, that he should treat us to these perpetual reiterations; and they mimicked and mocked his words. But Isaiah said: "You laugh at me, but God is speaking by my voice; and if you will not hear it He will speak in deeds that will stun you, and you shall be broken, snared, and taken."

14-22. The politicians answered: "We have bought off destruction; we have made a treaty which will secure us against attack." "Ah," retorted the prophet, "nothing will avail against God's overflowing scourge, which is soon to visit the land, but the foundation that He Himself has laid."

23-29. God is a God of method. As the husbandman has his method in every process of the field, so has God His. The stern and the gentle, grinding and threshing—all are necessary for the results in the mass and the individual whom He loves.

Social and Evangelistic Work

AT MR. MEYER'S CHURCH.

"ALL things to all men," is certainly one of the mottoes of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, for with the variety of agencies for social and evangelistic work, there is hardly a class of the community that is not catered for. Men and women, growing lads and girls, and the little ones from almost the earliest age, find a true home in the buildings connected with the church.

For the tinies, there is the crèche, where they are provided with bottles, mattresses, and playthings of all kinds, while their hard-worked mothers enjoy an hour's rest. At a later age the girls find employment and recreation at the club in Oakley Street, where the younger ones have singing, drill classes, and the elder ones a variety of occupation with dressmaking, millinery, cookery classes, &c., the gymnasium and drill being given them by a qualified instructor in Hawkstone Hall adjoining the church.

Meanwhile, the boys are getting discipline as well as enjoyment in their two battalions of the Boys' Brigade, for seniors and juniors respectively.

It does one good to see the results on even the physical aspect of the boys and girls of the crowded neighbourhood, who would otherwise have no means of physical development, and therefore would fall an easy prey to disease. Each one of these boys and girls comes under individual Christian influence, and is found in one of the fourteen Sunday-schools, the Bible-classes, and Junior and Intermediate Christian Endeavour Societies.

These agencies cater for the neighbourhood; for the young men and women of the church, by which we mean children of church members, &c., and those in business houses or elsewhere who are attracted by the services, and the helpful preaching; there is the Young Women's Christian Union, with its "At Homes" for needlework, music, &c., its consecration and devotional meetings; the Young Men's Union, with its early Sunday morning breakfast and meetings, its Institute, and swimming, cricket and football clubs, with the "Forum" for the debate of matters of daily interest as citizens; the Christian Endeavour Society, with its usual weekly meetings, and outgoings in Sunshine, Cripple and Missionary Work. All of these societies are fully organized with committees of their members.

The latest addition is the Saturday Young People's Social, from 8 to 9.45. Quiet games and music occupy the time, with refreshments paid for by a collection, while the Assistant-Minister and two or three of the leaders of the above-mentioned organizations move quietly about, getting to know strangers, often by teaching a new game, finding an entrance into hearts hitherto unreached. Mr. Meyer is always there part of the time, and, perhaps, the greatest enjoyment is the fifteen minutes in which, in his own peculiarly sympathetic way, he reads some poetry, such as Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," pointing out his favourite thoughts, drawing attention to beautiful phrases, and striking passages. Family prayers close these happy evenings. "Saved to serve" is written over every effort, and each one is a recruiting agency for Church membership, while the whole physical, intellectual, and morale of the young life clustering around the Church is being raised to a higher level.

Perhaps the culminating point on the distinctly religious side is the Thursday evening service at 8.30, which might almost be called the Young People's Own, so largely do they attend. Mr. Meyer is always the preacher, and is now dealing with the Poetical Books of the Bible.

The men and women have their separate organizations. The women meet in their "At Home" on Mondays, where they sit in circles round their "elder sister," and enjoy their cup of tea and biscuit (price one halfpenny), and listen to the reading, singing, and bright talk from Mr. Meyer, who says he feels his work is never accomplished until he has brought a smile to their faces, many of them so wan and weary. It is touching to see the attention given to the Bible talk with which he closes the meeting. In connection with this, there is a weekly prayer-meeting conducted by the Bible-woman, with an attendance of between forty and fifty mothers. The usual clubs are in full working order, while a fully trained nurse is always ready to minister to the sick and dying. A Women's P.S.A. is also held on Sunday afternoon, and there is a large branch of the British Women's Temperance Association.

The Men's P.S.A. work has been often spoken of, and truly it is doing marvellous work, with its average attendance of 800-900 men, its Institute, and Friendly Societies and Clubs, with a yearly income of over £1,500, most of which has been saved from the publican.

Over every one of these agencies Mr. Meyer presides, and knows personally the ins and outs of its working. He does this mostly by means of a monthly council for each organization, where he meets the leaders and representative members of the committees, all bringing their report. He also visits each meeting periodically. He thus has his hand on everything.

A soup kitchen is now being started for the relief of the distress of the very poor in the neighbourhood. It is to be opened twice a week, and a quart of soup and a large piece of bread will be served for one penny. This will be only a third of the cost, but the prevalent spirit at Christ Church is, that if there is any demand for help of any kind, God will see to the supply of the money by touching the hearts of those who can afford to help.

The church is one great family, with rich and poor, educated and unlettered, all working loyally under the leadership of Mr. Meyer, known always as "The Pastor," with the one object of bringing glory to Christ. E. M. W.

Evangelizing the Blind.

A STRIKING scene was to be witnessed at the Shoreditch Tabernacle a few days ago on the occasion of a large gathering of blind poor of London for a tea and evangelistic meeting. Despite the inclement weather some hundreds, led by their guides, rallied from all parts of the district, and a hearty meeting was held.

It was the concluding gathering of a series of mission services organized by Mr. W. Mead, which have been held at various metropolitan centres. Both Church of England and Nonconformist ministers have taken part, and the friends have been encouraged by manifest tokens of blessing. It was the seventh annual mission of the kind, and has resulted in gathering no fewer than 3,636 of the sufferers and their guides. In addition, gifts of books have been sent to 353 invalid blind in their own humble homes, while those in workhouses have also been remembered.

The work is quite undenominational; for example, the first meeting of the mission was held in a Church of England building, and concluded, as we have mentioned, in a Baptist Tabernacle. Wesleyan and Congregational chapels have also been placed at the disposal of the society. The audiences have been made up of many classes of the community. Among them Mr. Mead has had to deal with some rough and disorderly characters, for there are "roughs" among the blind as well as among those who can see. One such individual was quite wild and uncontrollable at the earlier meetings. He had been in prison, and seemed to have a passion for fighting and creating disorder. Christian influences, however, gradually told, and the fierce blind man is tamed and well-behaved.

It was at the age of nineteen that Mr. Mead became blind. Not long after, he resolved to devote his life to ministering to other sufferers. In this he has prospered, not only in connection with the special missions referred to (the cost of which is defrayed by one generous lady), but in its main work of visiting the blind of London in their own homes, and furthering their spiritual and physical welfare. The visitors are themselves blind, thus there is at once created a bond of sympathy between them and those to whom they deliver the Gospel message.

Some of the blind have, inevitably, a difficult struggle to earn a living, and the Society has given timely help in not a few pathetic instances. A typical case was that of a mat-maker who was brought to a stop in his work by the breaking down of his loom. The Society paid half the expense of a new one, and a friend paid the other half. So the poor fellow was re-started in life, and it is interesting to note that the new loom was made by another of the blind cases, who is a carpenter by trade.

West London Poverty.

GRAY'S YARD RAGGED-SCHOOLS AND MISSION.

LITTLE would anyone passing down Oxford Street, noting its tokens of affluence and prosperity, imagine that within a stone's throw there was destitution as pronounced, and misery as abject, as perhaps exists in any of the great cities of the earth. That such is the case, a visit to Gray's Yard Mission will abundantly prove. The entrance for visitors is at 23, Duke Street, Manchester Square, and anyone who takes an interest in the very poor, or would like to see somewhat of the seamy side of London life, would be heartily welcomed at either of the services of the Ragged Church, which are held on Sundays at 11 and 3.

At those hours they will find a congregation of some three to four hundred men, and perhaps fifty women, of the very poorest that the greatest and most opulent city in the world contains. It is no ornate service at which the visitor will find himself present. There is no choir, for the four hundred outcasts are choir enough; but after one or two hymns, in which the audience join heartily, and a brief prayer, the preacher stands up to deliver his message.

Well does the writer remember his sensations when he first faced that audience. Below him was a mass of faces, scarcely one of which displayed the slightest sign of hope, The vacant eye, the pallid apathetic face, told all too plainly of grinding poverty endured till hope itself had fled. Surely it were Christ-like work to seek to awaken and to rescue such. And how can this be done? Only, as the preachers on that platform believe, by the Gospel of Jesus Christ; and they preach it as God's power unto salvation to everyone—be he prince or outcast—who believes.

Nor do the preachers believe in shutting up their bowels of compassion, and leaving their audience to starve. At the end of the address, each man is furnished with a hunk of bread and a mug of tea, and the cost of the above works out at over two guineas each Sunday. Afterwards any that desire it are spoken to, and on Monday those who care to come are met, their cases gone into, their trades ascertained, and, if possible, places found for them.

In addition to this, the Mission building is a hive of Christian activity. There are schools for boys, girls, and infants; Gospel services for the poor of the neighbourhood; girls' and boys' classes; clothing clubs, coal clubs, and mothers' meetings. And the whole of this vast enterprise is carried on for less than £700 a year!

One would marvel at such a work for such a sum, did one not know that nothing is spent in salaries or office expenses. All is done freely for the love of God and man. And perhaps because this work goes so quietly on its way, it is not so well known as it deserves to be, and is at the present time in need of new friends. Many of the Lord's people who cannot themselves join actively in this work can manifest practical sympathy toward this unsectarian and much-needed enterprise in the West of London. Mr. Alister Fraser, 13, Harley House, Regent's Park, N.W., is the secretary, and Mr. F. A. Bevan, president. John Fort.

The Bible League.

CONFERENCE AT NEWCASTLE.

UNDER the auspices of the Bible League a conference was held at Newcastle, for the purpose of considering some of the baneful effects of the Higher Criticism, and the best means of meeting the attacks being made on Holy Scripture. Among the speakers were Rev. C. J. Hamar (vicar of St. Paul's, Newcastle), Mr. J. C. Halliday, Pastor F. E. Marsh, and Rev. Paulus Ashkenazie.

Asking the question, "How far can I trust my English Bible?" Dr. WALLER gave a logical and conclusive reply, showing, among other things, how the testimony of Israel has tended to increase the value of the Word of God.

Speaking on the "Hypothetical Basis of the Higher Criticism," Rev. JAMES DOUGLAS pointed out that Scripture was not a hieroglyphic, requiring hypotheses for its elucidation, but a revelation requiring faith for its acceptance. He showed also, that if any part of the Bible were impeached, Scripture as a whole was. They could not question the historical accuracy of the Fall without subverting the Apostolic testimony in Romans, Corinthians, and elsewhere. Passing to some of the speculations of the Higher Critics, Mr. Douglas showed that their leading assumptions were all necessarily involved in the critical hypothesis that the Bible was to be taken, not as a God-given product, but as an ethical evolution in common with all religions.

Rev. RICHARD LEITCH opened a discussion on "The Book of Psalms." He remarked that the Psalms contained much that has direct and special reference to Jesus Christ, but there is a danger of them being supplanted by human hymns. They form a bond of union between the ancient and the modern Christian Church. Continuing the discussion, Rev. JAS. DOUGLAS complained that the critics refused to accept the supernatural phenomena of prophecy; and, whatever were the contents of any one Psalm, they persisted in attributing the Psalm in question and its contents in regard to things that were then, not to any future case.

Pastor F. E. MARSH gave an address on the subject of "The Scriptures themselves the best proof of their Inspiration"; and Sir ROBERT ANDERSON spoke on "The Old Testament and the Higher Criticism."

MEETINGS IN GLASGOW.

A series of meetings have also been held recently at Glasgow, in the Christian Institute. Presiding at the opening gathering, LORD OVERTOUN made a vigorous speech in defence of the inspiration of the Bible. They were told, he declared, that all scholarship was on the side of the Higher Critics, but he did not believe it. They had no fear of the Bible, for the preservation of which its Divine Author was responsible. God worked through human instrumentalities, and they were called to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints.

Rev. Dr. WHITELAW (Kilmarnock), speaking on "The Higher Criticism in its Relation to the Religious Instruction of the Young," contended that the best-informed critics knew well that they had not succeeded in placing the conclusions beyond the region of debate. Rev. W. FULLER GOOCH also spoke.

Having traced, at the evening meeting, the origin of the Higher Criticism, Sir ROBERT ANDERSON went on to remark that some of the eminent men who stood upon the Bible League platform were Higher Critics of repute. They boasted of the results of Higher Criticism, and the results were entirely on the side of the Bible. There was no logical connection whatever between Higher Criticism and that sceptical crusade against the Bible. These men, who now called themselves Higher Critics, had no exclusive title to the claim.

Saturday's meetings were also well attended. Mr. WM. SLOAN presided at the forenoon gathering. Continuing his address of the previous evening on "The Word of God without Blemish and without Spot," Dr. Waller remarked that many people built the truth on the inspiration, and then the inspiration had been called verbal; and people had been troubled not a little by confusing verbal inspiration of Scripture with something which differed entirely from that, namely, the preservation of the deposit exactly in the form in which it was given at first.

Sir ROBERT ANDERSON, in his address, again dealt with the Higher Critics and their methods, remarking that the question raised by the psuedo Higher Criticism was precisely the same as that which was raised in the early centuries. It was not a question of an infallible book; it was a question of an infallible Teacher. It was not whether we had a Bible; it was whether we had the Lord Jesus Christ. This pseudo-Higher Criticism was an ephemeral craze, which originated in sheer rationalism, and had seduced many of the people of God. It was a craze that would die hard, but it was a craze that would die.

Winter at Costers' Hall.

IN addition to the regular operations, which show no falling off in any season, Costers' Hall has continued to put forth extra activities during the winter, and well may this be so when the great building stands as a Gospel lighthouse in one of the poorest and most densely-crowded quarters of north-east London. There may be less of romance about the work in these days of rate-supported elementary schools and of sentimental invaders of the slums than there was in Golden Lane forty years ago, with its unmeasured needs and unmitigated squalor; but quite as much earnestness and sympathy still require to be put into the work.

Mr. W. J. ORSMAN, J.P., a friend of the late Lord Shaftesbury, as well as an ally of C. H. Spurgeon, is now a veteran, who has stood at his post as honorary superintendent for over forty years. The work has shown a continuous growth, and was never more needed than at the present time. Its extensive and far-reaching character is shown by the fact that the superintendent, or pastor of the working Mission Church, as Mr. Orsman might be called, is assisted by his brother-in-law, Mr. E. C. Collinson, and 157 voluntary helpers, who show to the work

A DEVOTION WHICH NOTHING CAN DAMP.

The preaching of the Gospel in the large assembly-room on Sundays attracts full congregations, while the Sunday-school crowds the building to its utmost capacity. Services in common lodging-houses, as well as in the open air, are also carried on regularly. During a hard winter, as the present season promises to be, through slackness of trade, the boon of the free breakfasts to the poorly-fed children of the elementary schools cannot be over estimated.

As many as 126 cripple children received attention according to their need; but while some of these may only require surgical instruments or spinal carriages, others are bedridden. Then it will be remembered that it was Mr. Orsman, who took the initiative in commencing the aggressive work of caring for dritt children, who closely resemble the neglected class for whom ragged-schools were originally instituted.

Those who work in Hoxton have realized that, on account of numbers having migrated thither from quarters whence they have been driven by improvements, the neighbourhood has become more overcrowded, more criminal. Thus, whether the street-traders after whom the building takes its name, or those who are still lower down in the social scale—all alike urgently need the uplifting agency of this mission, which, as a leading authority lately said, preaches and practises a very genuine Christianity. Mr. Orsman wrote last week: "We are doing as much as ever at Costers' Hall, and the services are well attended." The funds are low, and the need is great, however. As President of the work, and writing from Castle Ashby, Northampton, the Marquess of Northampton says; "I can heartily recommend this appeal to all who desire the spiritual and moral improvement of the poorest children and their parents." Mr. Orsman's address is Milton House, Shacklewell Green, N.E.

The Opium Traffic.

REFERRING to the proposal recently made in our columns, by a missionary, that three representative Christian men should be sent to China to investigate the opium question, Mr. B. Broomhall writes:—

The oldest and most respected missionaries in China, of all sections of the Christian Church, after twenty, thirty, and more years of experience in China, have told us, with all possible earnestness, about the evils of opium smoking. In one document alone seventeen missionaries of long experience—so long, indeed, that the aggregate of their time in China actually represented 521 years—bore testimony to the evils of this trade.

Could any three men after a temporary visit tell us anything which could equal such testimony as this, seeing that among these men were Bishops Burdon and Moule, Archdeacons Moule and Wolfe, Drs. Muirhead and Griffith John, David Hill, Hudson Taylor, and others? Some of these brethren, and a host of other missionaries, have appealed over and over again to British Christians with all the energy they possessed, until in the case of some of them they have almost despaired of rousing the Christian people of this country. Archdeacon Wolfe writes:

My silence on the subject has arisen, I must confess, rather from a cowardly feeling of despair in any further human effort to arouse the conscience of the Christian people of England against the injustice and the wickedness of the entire subject from first to last; or to influence the British Government to withdraw from a position in reference to the opium traffic which its own House of Commons has pronounced to be "morally indefensible."

Testimony the most unexceptionable and trustworthy, and argument the most cogent and unanswerable, in proof of the incalculable injury in every way which the opium has inflicted upon the Chinese Government and people, as well as of the great injustice on the part of our Government in imposing such a traffic as that of the Indian opium on the Chinese nation, have been brought forward during a long period of years, and presented times without number to the people and government of England, without, alas! producing any satisfactory result.

It is not a further Commission of Inquiry that is needed. We have evidence more than enough. If there has been on the part of so many Christians a shameful unconcern about the suffering and ruin caused to the people of China by our opium trade; if there has been in this country to the dishonour upon the Christian name by this trade—the question for us is how to remove the apathy. But it will go on until Christian ministers, and the Christian Press of this country, take larger and more just views of their duty in this matter. For the most part, they do condemn the trade, but they have not grasped the magnitude of our national wrong-doing, and what it means to China, what it means to England, and to the world. As a consequence, they have not taken this question to heart as they should.

Happily, as I have good reason to know, there are not a few, both among ministers and people in Ireland, Scotland, England, and in other countries, who are daily crying to God about this evil trade; and herein is our hope. In answer to prayer, we cannot doubt, that the deliverance of this country from its connection with, and responsibility for, one of the greatest crimes ever committed by one nation against another, will come, or our own destruction will follow.

Last year the quantity of our Indian Opium imported into China exceeded fifty-five and a half tons per week! If we persist in this stupendous national wrong-doing, can we expect to escape national retribution?

I have recently reprinted the testimony to which I have referred of a number of missionaries whose names are known and honoured throughout the United Kingdom, and I shall be glad to send a copy, and also a copy of Archdeacon Wolfe's powerful letter on the subject, to any readers who may wish for them.

Ipswich Martyrs' Memorial.

UNVEILING BY DEAN WACE.

AMONG those faithful followers of the Lord Jesus Christ who, under Rome's persecution, sealed their testimony with their blood, were the nine Ipswich martyrs, to whom a memorial lately erected in the Christchurch Park of the ancient East Anglian town, was unveiled on Wednesday of last week, by the Dean of Canterbury.

The memorial, of which we give an illustration, was designed by Mr. H. T. Edwards, of the Art Memorial Company, and is executed in Ketton stone, with a shaft of polished granite. It is a handsome monument. The inscription states that it is "erected to the memory of nine Ipswich martyrs, who, for their constancy to the Protestant faith, suffered death by burning." Then follow their names and the dates of martyrdom:—

N. PEKE, 1538.	JOAN TRUNCHFIELD, 1556.
— KERBY, 1546.	JOHN TUDSON, 1556.
ROBERT SAMUEL, 1555.	WILLIAM PIKES, 1558.
AGNES POTTEN, 1556.	ALEXANDER GOUCH, 1558.

ALICE DRIVER, 1558.

Underneath is the verse:—

"Oh may Thy soldiers, faithful, true, and bold,
Fight as the Saints who nobly fought of old,
And win with them the victor's crown of gold.
Alleluia."

A statement compiled by one of the secretaries, and circulated among the large company which assembled for the unveiling, was to the effect that the movement began in November, 1902, when a public meeting was called by the Mayor (Mr. W. J. Catchpole). The question was mainly brought to the notice of the public through a delightful book, entitled, "The Seventeen Suffolk Martyrs," by Miss Nina Layard.

WHERE BILNEY PREACHED.

The company assembled in the baronial hall of the Christchurch Mansion, and was thoroughly representative of Evangelical Churchmen and the Free Churches of the borough, while many came from distant parts of the county. Mr. CATCHPOLE, who presided, said that if they had not obtained the site they originally desired, still he thought an appropriate place had been selected, for this reason—that one of the martyrs, Thomas Bilney, met his death for a sermon which was preached within a very few yards of the mansion in which they were assembled. Proceeding, Mr. Catchpole expressed hearty agreement with the remark of Canon Garratt, in his preface to Miss Layard's book, that "it would be an evil day for England, if she should become unmindful of these martyrs."

DR. WACE'S ADDRESS.

The DEAN OF CANTERBURY, who next addressed the assembly, said that he could not but be a little surprised to learn that there should have been any difficulty whatever in erecting a memorial of this nature to the Suffolk and Ipswich martyrs in the cause of their Reformed Faith—because, first of all, there is one aspect of their act which must always appeal to men and women, quite irrespective of their particular views—that is, the extreme heroism displayed by those men and women simply from the point of view of humanity.

ALONE, YET NOT ALONE.

"Much as people may honour those who for great causes have laid down their lives in the excitement of the struggle of great hosts, more honour is due to those men and women, who deliberately and quietly, knowing what was before them, and for the sake of a moral and spiritual cause, resolved to endure all that torture. There is one circumstance connected with these martyrs which ought to impress us with their nobleness in an extreme degree—that when they laid down their lives, they were practically alone. They had against them the whole Church and the whole State of that day. When Thomas Bilney and the first of the Ipswich women-martyrs were burnt, there was no existing authority to encourage them. The early Protestant martyrs were scattered—they stood, one by one, almost alone in the various villages and towns, and they had no authority whatever to sustain them—they endured suffering simply in reliance on the witness of God in their consciences, and in God's Holy Word. That men like Thomas Bilney, and noble women like Peke, the daughter of a ploughman in the village of Grundisburgh, stood up alone against the whole authority of the Church and State of the day, enduring unto death—those are specimens of heroism which, I think, cannot be surpassed.

THE INSPIRING MOTIVE OF MARTYRDOM.

"When we contemplate this spectacle, we must ask, What was the influence, the power, which enabled these men and women to endure these sufferings unto death? However heroic men and women might be, they do not submit to death without some very deep motive indeed. When we inquire into that, we find the one supreme sustaining influence was that they were convinced that the Word of God had brought a direct message to their souls, and that they were bound to obey that message. That which undoubtedly sustained these men and women was the Bible—the Word of God put into their hands by the translations spread over England, and particularly over this part of England, in the reign of Henry VIII., for which we are indebted to another hero—William Tyndale. Those early Protestants awoke to the momentous fact that God had sent to them a message through His Son and His Word; they felt themselves in communion with God, and the sense of His presence in the soul becomes ennobling in the hearts and minds of men. In the Middle Ages the mind and will of God had become obscured, and when it was revealed by the works of Luther, it aroused new spiritual and moral life everywhere.

JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH.

"The idea brought to light by Luther was for men and women to stand face to face with God, and claim forgiveness and God's blessing direct from Him, without the intervention of any human being—then it was that a new spirit of life arose wherever the doctrine was believed. It was the sense of spiritual freedom embodied in the phrase, 'justification by faith'—and in the light of that doctrine, these simple, unlearned souls in the villages of Suffolk, as well as in the town of Ipswich, felt that they were endowed with the blessing of Divine communion, and that they could face Pope and King, and all the authorities of rule.

"There is no doctrine which has ever commanded such a sense of freedom of soul and power of mind as this: that the soul can have direct communion with God, and be sure of safety in this world and in the next. That is the charter of moral and religious freedom, of all freedom."

EMANCIPATION FROM ROME.

One other point Dean Wace said he must touch upon—the emancipation of England was emancipation from Rome. "The Church of Rome at that day, as the Church of Rome at this day, was a standing and eternal enemy of all liberty. We have only to look at the history of Europe in order to be convinced of this. Apart from moral or religious questions, it is an historical fact, which can never be sufficiently borne in mind, that what happened at the Reformation was, not merely that certain erroneous doctrines were cast out, but that Europe passed through a great revolution, and was divided into two great parts; one part adhered to Rome, and remained under Roman domination; the other part, under various Reformers, adhered to Protestantism, and asserted the great principles of Christian liberty. That was the great dividing point of history, and we have only to see what was the result in the course of subsequent centuries to be convinced that this country took a right step. We must never again part with that freedom; there may be various differences of opinion on certain points of doctrine, but back to the domination of Rome this country never will go."

LATIMER'S CANDLE.

After heartily recognising the co-operation of the Free Churches in the matter, Dr. Wace said, in conclusion, that the Memorial should lead the thoughts of men and women to the fact that it was the Word of God which produced the martyrs' heroism, and sustained them in the struggle. "This country has been made by the Word of God. The effect of that Word upon the English character has been incalculable. I trust thatthe Memorial will help to keep in mind the reading of the Bible, and above all, simple trust in God. The words of Latimer to Ridley, I would repeat to all—'Play the man, for by God's grace we shall to-day light a candle in England which shall never be put out.'"

"THESE 'GOOD, POOR LAMBS.'"

After a few encouraging words from Sir W. BRAMPTON GURDON, Miss LAYARD said: "The monument is 'in memoriam'—the natural outcome of our love for these 'good, poor lambs,' as they have been pathetically called. We cannot ponder over their humble, holy lives, their devotion to the Bible, their courage, the agonies they endured, and the triumphant faith that upheld them, without our hearts burning within us. Our second object in view is, that the memorial may act as a warning of what happens when religious dogma is forced upon people by means of bodily suffering and painful death; and the third is to keep the example of these faithful ones in mind—the examples of these nine men and women, singled out of thousands who were put to the same test, and who dared to die. We carved the names of these in stone. Can we, dare we, imagine our own names being chiselled there?"

THE MEMORIAL UNVEILED.

The company then adjourned to the site of the Memorial, where a large crowd had gathered, and the monument was unveiled by the Dean, saying—"To the glory of God, and for the perpetual memory of those who, belonging to this city and county, laid down their lives for the true faith of Christ. I unveil this memorial; and let us pray we may all have grace to direct our lives according to their good example, that when life is ended, we may rise with them to Eternal Life hereafter."

The Leading of the Lord.

By Mrs. PENN LEWIS.

In response to a request—which came to me bearing the mark of its being the will of God—to tell the story of the way in which God has led and taught me in His service, I have sought to do so briefly and from the spiritual aspect alone. It can easily be seen that it is but a surface sketch. I have also written in the first person, feeling it to be more in accord with the simplicity which is in Christ. It is to the glory of His grace that He should pick up a frail broken vessel, and fulfil its petitions more abundantly than heart could ask, or mind could think. That He may do the same for every reader, is my one desire in telling of His grace.

I was brought up in the very heart of the religious life of Wales, for my grandfather was a Welsh divine, well-known throughout the Principality in his day, and my father's house was a rendezvous for the ministers as they passed hither and thither on their Master's work. My childhood's memories gather round their visits and the great meetings of the Sunday-schools, when often I sat as a tiny child in the midst of the grave elders in the "big pew," listening with intense interest to the "hwyl" of the minister. "The mercy of the Lord is . . . unto children's children," but as it is often with children brought up in the midst of religious surroundings, the true inward change of heart did not come until I had married and moved away to England. Then it occurred without the aid of any human instrument, but the day—New Year's Day—and hour are imprinted on my mind.

Only a deep, inward desire to know that I was a child of God; a taking down of my (too little read) Bible from the shelf; a turning over the leaves, and the eye falling on the words, "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all;" again, a casual turn of the sacred pages, and the words, "He that believeth hath eternal life." A quick facing out whether I did believe that God had laid my sins upon the Lamb of God on the Cross; a pause of wonderment that it really said that I had eternal life if I simply believed God's Word; a quick cry of "Lord, I do believe"—and one more soul had passed from death to life, a trophy of the grace of God, and the love of Him who died. The Spirit of God instantly bore witness with my spirit that I was a child of God, and deep peace filled my soul.

The new life bore fruit in that I sought to conquer my besetting sins, whereas hitherto I had found myself at their mercy, as I feebly attempted to restrain them. But my attempts still ended in abject failure, and the succeeding few months was a record of bitter repentance, and many tears over sins I could not conquer. At this point we removed to Richmond, Surrey, and found our way to Holy Trinity Church. The first sermon I heard from Rev. Evan H. Hopkins was an opening of heaven to my soul. I learned the secret of victory, and it was not long before I proved the power of God to deliver from the bondage of sin through the precious blood of Christ.

Under the Spirit-lit teaching of Mr. Hopkins, and the earnest loving help of his noble wife, I learned the joy of full surrender, and the possibilities of a Spirit-filled life. But active service for Christ seemed far away from me, for, from childhood, my health had been frail, and now winter after winter was spent in increasing suffering from bronchial and lung attacks. It seemed as if my life was slowly ebbing away. Nevertheless, in 1890, with apparently only a brief span of life before me, I ventured to take the hon. secretaryship of the Richmond Y.W.C.A. Institute—"If only for six months," I said, for my whole heart was drawn out in service for the King.

Gradually I learnt to draw upon the Lord for strength for His work, so that in spite of continued ill-health and suffering, for three whole years, I worked, and organized, and laboured incessantly. In 1891, I became conscious that the spiritual results were not equivalent to the labour of the work. I began to question whether I knew the fulness of the Spirit. Without doubt I had received Him, and had "entered into rest" as concerned my own life and fellowship with God; but, when I compared the small results of my service with the fruit given to the apostles at Pentecost, I could not but own that I did not know the Holy Spirit in the fulness of His power. My weekly Bible-class also was a great trouble to me, for I had no power of utterance. Organizing work was much easier, but meetings were a sore trial. Self-consciousness almost paralyzed me, and no practice ever made speaking less difficult. Others might have the gift of speech, but it was clearly not given to me, I said!

"But did God promise to us to-day as full an indwelling and outworking of the Spirit as in the days of Pentecost?" was my question, and I began to read book after book on the subject, until I was more and more confused. Finally, I put all on one side, and threw myself upon God to teach me Himself to know the fulness of the Spirit in power for service, as I had known Him for sanctification of life. For months I prayed, until my soul became "a furnace of intense desire," and I was ready to count all things loss, if God would but grant me that which I desired. I did not know then that He was already beginning to answer my prayers, by preparing me for deeper surrender to all His will. The more I prayed, the more there seemed to be a blight upon my much loved work, and I was greatly perplexed. The fulfilment of my petitions seemed further away than ever. Then the Spirit of God began to question me, and to bring to light the "thoughts and intents" of my heart.

Why did I desire the fulness of the Spirit? Was it for success in service, and that I should be considered a much used worker? Would I desire the same fulness of the Spirit if it meant apparent failure, and the becoming "the offscouring of all things" in the eyes of others? This had not occurred to me before, and I quickly agreed to any conditions the Lord should please to set before me.

Again came a question: Would I be willing to have no great experience, but agree to live and walk entirely by faith on the Word of God? This, too, was a new aspect, but I quickly answered "Yes." Then came the climax when one morning I awoke, and, lo, I beheld before me a hand holding up in terrible light a handful of filthy rags, whilst a gentle voice said: "This is the outcome of all your past service for God." "But, Lord, I have been surrendered and consecrated to Thee all these years. It was consecrated work!" "Yes, My child, but all your service has been consecrated self; the outcome of your own energy; your own plans for winning souls; your own devotion. All for Me, I grant, but yourself all the same." Then came the still small voice once more, and this time it was with one little word—"Crucified."

"Crucified!" What did it mean? I had not asked to be crucified, but to be filled. But since the Spirit of God kept ringing the word "Crucified" in my heart, He must know best. As a little child, I rested on the word thus given; and then, "it pleased God to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him." I knew the Risen Lord.

The Holy Spirit already dwelling in my heart had fulfilled His office, and revealed the glorious Lord in full possession of His temple. "Glorious, indeed, is this Anointing! Where will it end? Waters to swim in, no little trickling rivulet!" wrote Mrs. Hopkins to me on March 25, 1892. Immediately the living waters broke out as "torrents" in the work, and like a "tidal wave" lifted it, so to speak, on to a new plane, my fellow-workers coming into the tide with joy.

The Bible-classes were thronged; on all sides souls were convicted of sin, and brought to Christ. The converts became, in their turn, soul-winners. The dead prayer-meetings were changed into times of blessed access to the Father. In such an atmosphere of the Holy Spirit none could be dumb. Answers to prayer rejoiced our hearts. Souls were won for Christ even at our social gatherings.

The usual trouble over finances changed into records of sometimes romantic answers to prayer; we learnt that where the Holy Ghost was free to work, He provided the funds, and deficits in our yearly balance-sheets were things of the past.

We had sought to arouse missionary interest with difficulty, but in the atmosphere of the Spirit our hearts became enlarged. We began to pray for the whole world, and to ask that the living waters flowing amongst us might reach to the ends of the earth—the Lord answering these prayers by the scattering of one and another to various parts of the world, whilst calls poured in upon me to carry the message of abundant life to other places in Great Britain.

Two years had I laboured in my own strength without the anointing Spirit, and four happy years afterwards was I permitted to watch what He could do, when we consent to be crucified, and to give Him right of way through us to souls. My "six months" had been prolonged into six years by the wondrous grace of God.

Then came the wider service which God had purposed for me, and which I had not dreamed of, when I sought the fulness of the Spirit; and which, from physical frailty, it seemed impossible ever could be mine. But by this time the knowledge of my resources in God had grown, and I was able to cast myself in utter abandonment upon Him, and find all-sufficiency for all my need, at all times and in all circumstances.

In 1896, we removed to Leicester, and at once came a call to Swèden. Another crisis in my life had come. Raised from the grave, so to speak, for the Lord's service, my husband felt, with me, that my life was a trust from God to be used only for the Master's Kingdom. With one mind we yielded that life anew to Him who claimed it, that He might make the fullest possible use of the frail vessel. Not disobedient to the heavenly vision, I crossed the North Sea to Stockholm for the first Scandinavian Conference of the Y.W.C.A. Delegates from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Finland gathered together, and the devotional meetings held in the Freemasons' beautiful hall were thrown open to the public. It was my first experience in speaking through an interpreter, and on the last day I saw the Holy Spirit move upon the large audience in a remarkable way; at the close of the afternoon meeting, many broke out into prayer at the same time in their own languages—yet there was no discord. It seemed to me like the music of a rippling brook. Was it thus at Pentecost?

The year after this, came a call to Russia, where I went for a few weeks two winters in succession, visiting Copenhagen, Denmark, twice, on my way home. In 1898, I went for a second visit to Finland for a great Conference held at Helsingfors, when about eighty delegates were present from all parts of the country. Most of the devotional meetings were entrusted to me, and on the last day I gave the Lord's message, morning, afternoon, and evening, with two translators—Swedish and Finnish—the power of God upon us making the message as clear and full as if it were in the original language of the people.

In the summer of 1900, the way opened for a brief tour in America, where I held meetings amongst the people of God in Canada and the United States, visiting Ottawa, Kingston, Toronto, Chicago (Moody's Bible Institute), Northfield, Philadelphia, and New York City. Again, during the early months of 1903, I visited Southern India, giving Bible-readings in Bombay, Madras, Bangalore, Coonoor, and Ootacamund.

What has been the purpose of God in the wider service thus given to me?

The change in my own life as a Christian worker—working without and with the fulness of the Anointing Spirit—has been so definite and marked, that from the time of my own emergence into liberty, Christian workers have been the burden of my heart. From the hour the Spirit of God whispered, "Crucified" to me, I also saw clearly the principle of death with Christ as the basis for the full working of God through the believer. It was as great a revelation to me as when at the first I saw my "iniquity laid upon Him" on the tree. In one instant I understood that if my sins were there, they were not on me. In like manner, when I was seeking, with all the intensity of my being, the fulness of the Holy Ghost, after the word "Crucified" came I understood very quickly the key to the full possession and out-working of the blessed Spirit in co-operation with our surrender, trust, and obedience. Crucified with Christ, there is room for Him to fill us; and we have only to consent to be out of His way on the cross, and yield implicit obedience to His workings. How simple the plan, yet how deep, for it gives no place to the creature to glory before God!

The light given of God that day has never since been unseen or questioned. The Lord had revealed to me a principle which, if applied and acted upon, would lead out into unknown realms of blessing, and undreamed of possibilities. We speak of "applied chemistry." What discoveries are made in the laboratory of the scientist, as he applies the principles he knows! So in the spiritual realm. The Lord had mightily sealed His Word to me with a glorious outflowing of the rivers of life; but this would not do to rest upon as a basis for future service. The "experiences" varied and changed, and passed away from my memory; but the principle upon which God would work out His purposes through me never changed. I found it "work" in every circumstance; every new test; every new aspect of life. Every fresh call to wider service was only a fresh occasion for proving the secret I had learned. When each "impossible" thing confronted me, or trial of any kind, I would simply appeal to God to prove His own Word that I was crucified with Christ, and then in childlike faith I would cast myself upon Him to undertake the service, or meet the need through me.

I found also, that, as I thus "continued in the faith, grounded and settled," the Holy Spirit wrought deeper and deeper into my inner life, unveiling aspects of one's being hitherto unknown; but all was met with the word "Crucified," and as I thus consented daily to be made conformable to the death of the Lord Jesus, I found richer and fuller outgoings of the Spirit of God to others. The words of Paul became aglow with light—"death worketh in us, and life in you." Clearer and clearer grew the wondrous plan. Crucified with Christ, the Risen Lord takes the inner throne; and leading us on into ever-deepening fellowship with Him in death, He manifests His life in glorious power, working in us that which is well-pleasing in His sight; fulfilling His promise that out of the depths of our being shall be poured forth torrents of living water.

Thus was I led on, until in the fulfilment of His greater purposes, He took me again to the place called Calvary, and gave me such an unveiling of His death, that it eclipsed all the previous revelations of Himself. The Holy Spirit had whispered "Crucified," and revealed to me the Risen Lord; but now the glorious Risen One Himself poured the light upon His death, until my cross was lost in the sight of His. I could only cry, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world hath been crucified to me, and I unto the world!"

Then I knew the purpose of the wider service He had given me. I saw the word of the Cross to be the power of God, and determined henceforth to know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified. He had spoken the word "crucified with Him," and I had proved the deliverance it brought to me; but now I saw what Calvary meant to Him, and yielded myself afresh to the Eternal Spirit for the special service of proclaiming the Cross and passion of the Son of God, that He might see of the fruit of His travail, and be satisfied.

From this time—a few years ago—I have been kept under the "burden" of this message, increased by watching the darkness that is slowly creeping over our beloved land at the very same time that the light of God in His people is burning brighter and brighter. The increasing darkness on the one hand seems to intensify the light on the other.

As to the darkness—"the worst of all the social symptoms is religious indifference, scepticism or unbelief, and its corollary—the growth of superstition. Superstition has spread everywhere; its adepts live upon it, and their victims are legion. Necromancy, clairvoyance, crystal-gazing, palmistry." . .* Do not these words speak of retrogression to the darkness of the Middle Ages? Can it be possible that the Most High God will look on, without giving His people a renewed and mighty testimony to the Gospel of Calvary?

May God the Holy Spirit lay upon every messenger of God to-day, at home and abroad, the supreme need of proclaiming the "Evangel"—the Gospel of the atoning death of the Son of God—and clothe each one with the Holy Ghost to preach the Cross in all its aspects, as Paul the Apostle preached it; and then will come the Revival we look for, ere the Lord returns for His own.

Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think; according to the power that worketh in us, unto HIM be the glory in the Church and in Christ Jesus unto . . . the age of the ages. Amen.

"Want of Thought."

"The labourer is worthy of his hire" (Luke x. 7).

Is he worth it? The Lord of the Harvest says he is; some of His followers seem to think otherwise. An evangelist who has laboured faithfully for many years, mostly in quiet but needy country places, writes, in a private letter to ourselves (but, as we withhold names, we think we may justly bring the matter before our readers):—

It seems strange how many who thank me heartily for my preaching, who wish me God-speed, and "hope I will soon come again," never seem to think a preacher needs money like other people. I can vouch for the truth of the following incident:—

A little girl came running in to her mother, and said: "Mother, I thought you said Mr. —— lives by faith." "So he does, my dear," said the mother. "I know he don't, for I saw him in the butcher's shop buying some meat!"

I have sometimes thought what an eye-opener it would be if some little known, but true, servants of God gave some of their experiences in The Christian; but as a rule these things are left until the brother is gone home to be for ever with the Lord. Do not suppose I am unhappy when funds are low, for I am not. I always accept the first invitation that comes, money or no money; but it certainly is rather trying if you have to preach three Sundays out of four, and perhaps only get 5s. or 10s. on the last Sunday, and not a penny for the other meetings. The Lord knows all about this, and He often sends money from most unexpected sources; so we praise Him, and go on our way rejoicing, seeking to win precious souls to Christ.

We know of another case in which an evangelist went from London to the Isle of Man, conducted a week's services, and was rewarded at the close with half-a-sovereign, out of which to pay his travelling expenses and keep his wife and family at home!

Evangelists, as we know them, are earnest men, whose paramount desire and purpose is to win souls to Christ. They are not money-seekers; but they must live! Such treatment as described above may be due to want of thought rather than want of heart, but "these things ought not so to be." A little private effort among local friends could easily meet an evangelist's very modest needs in the immediate present; but even then, he is unable to make any provision for future illness or old age. His life is by no means a bed of roses.

* Review of Russell's "Notes on Social Changes."

God's Fellow-Workers.*

1 Cor. iii. 9, R.V.

By Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS.

WHAT are we doing with the solemn gift of existence? Are we making the best and the most of the passing years? These are considerations which we do well to ponder. Then—turning our thoughts to Y.M.C.A. work—what is our present attitude in relation to it? Is our interest as keen as it was? Are we as prayerful, as earnest, as energetic, as enthusiastic as we once were?

The past year, like the preceding years, has been marked by vitality and growth. By general agreement, there is a vast leakage of elder scholars from our Sunday-schools, and it is felt that the Association may become increasingly a link of connection between the school and the church. Elder scholars who are leaving may be passed on in some regular way to the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A., and many, it is certain, will continue to be passed back again to the schools as trained teachers.

Thus we have overwhelming reasons for gratitude and thanksgiving. But in the multiplication of agencies, let us carefully guard against overlooking the primary object of the work—that of winning young men for Christ.

THE SUPREME NEED IN THE ASSOCIATIONS

is a quickening of spiritual life. Now is a favourable time for self-scrutiny, for reflection, for communion with God, that we may discover where and what we are in the sight of our Divine Master, and gather from Him fresh power and inspiration for the fulfilment of our sacred trust.

God is the great Agent and Director of the work. We work with Him, and under Him, and for Him. God is perfectly independent of us. His power is limitless. Nevertheless, He works out His designs by human agency. In both the natural and spiritual world God does not do for us what He has given us the power and capacity to do for ourselves.

Our dissatisfaction with past attainments, our aspirations after a nobler and better life, our hungerings after righteousness, our reachings after God, and all our best and noblest feelings, are manifestations of God working within us by His Spirit; but these have by us to be worked out and into the actualities of our daily life.

Let us seek to realize, as we have never done before, the grandeur and dignity of our calling in Jesus Christ, and, by the embodiment of the principles of Christianity in our actions, endeavour attractively to RECOMMEND THE RELIGION OF CHRIST.

Be it ever remembered that, although we are "labourers together with God," we labour as instruments only in His hands. Our sufficiency is of God. Apart from Him we are useless, and useful only as He is pleased to use us. The best qualified have the greatest sense of their own insufficiency, and are desirous that God should have all the glory.

Every labourer derives all his qualifications from God. He makes use of every variety of instrument, and fits them to their several uses and intentions. When God calls a labourer into His vineyard, He appoints to him the work for which he is best suited. Let us never seek to choose for ourselves, but be Content to fill a little place,

If God be glorified.

Our one aim should be usefulness. There is no room among the members for strivings after place and power. No man possesses a monopoly of gifts. They are distributed by God. According to the measure of our gifts, so is our responsibility. We have absolutely nothing to do with results: the "increase" is with Him, and if we labour in the right spirit He will assuredly own and bless our endeavours.

The employment ennobles and enriches our character. Working with God has a transforming influence over our life: we become more like Him. There is no higher joy than the consciousness of being used as God's instrument. A good action produces corresponding goodness in ourselves. Service for others produces a thrill of happiness which can only be understood by experience.

This is our present reward. Yet more is promised. "Every man shall receive his own reward, according to his own labour." Payment is not by result, but by endeavour. Let those who are discouraged take heart. In God's vineyard no labourer will go unrewarded, and the reward is proportionate, not to the success, but to the labour.

The outlook is bright with promise. The Y.M.C.A. affords a splendid field for labour. At no period since its formation was it more needed than now. As an organization it is in every way adapted to meet the needs of young men. If we will but embrace the opportunities which are presented to us, our possibilities of usefulness are boundless.

* From Annual Address to members of the Y.M.C.A.

"Wilt Thou Go?"*

By Rev. J. STUART HOLDEN.

'WILT thou go?" That is the word of the Holy Ghost. Wilt thou? God help us to say, I will go. If you "go with this Man," there must be an absolute and a complete renunciation of all known sin, for you cannot take into vital partnership the unclean, the licentious, the God-condemned. If you are going with Jesus Christ, you must go to your place of business and set things right there. At the close of a mission service, a fine young man came to me and said: "Sir, I want to tell you what it means for me to-morrow morning—what I have got to do. I am a carpenter, and two months ago I was working in a place in a shop where there were a great many tools, and I saw lying about me some of the tools of which I was in want. I took them, knowing they would never be missed. For those two months there has been a worm gnawing here all the time, and to-morrow morning I have got to take back that chisel and that saw."

That is what it means to go with Jesus Christ. It means your going and to a man whom you have robbed, to a woman whose character you have pulled to pieces, bit by bit. It means your going and setting wrong things right—relationship between father and child, husband and wife. It means glory to God, and the world will believe in that kind of thing. That is what it means to go with this Man—the absolute putting away of the sinful and unclean and God-condemned in our lives.

It means a definite choice of Him as the Object of our love (love born of that which He is to us) as against all things else—against the world, its allurements, its hopes, and all that it offers to us. To those who go with Jesus Christ, it means a dead cut with the world, a dead cut with all hopes and aims which are not founded on and centred in the Lord Jesus Christ Himself.

Some years ago, at the Royal Academy, I saw a beautiful picture portraying a beggar woman, a poor peasant with a beautiful face; and kneeling at her feet there was one dressed in the garb of a prince. He kneeled before her, offering to her his coronet and his hand. Her gaze was half averted from him to a wonderfully painted light through which shone the thorn-crowned face of Jesus Christ. The name of the picture was this—"The World or Christ?" Are you going to live for money, for pleasure; and you, my brethren in the Church, for preferment, or for love of Jesus? Are you going to live for the fleeting pleasures that the world offers to you; or are you going to walk with Jesus Christ? Is it to be the world, the social world, the commercial world, the religious world, or the Man of Calvary?

Wilt thou go with this Man? It means not only a choice of Him, but it means an absolute submission to his plan, if I walk with Him. As I have already said, He chooses the direction of the walk, if I go with Him. As the bride sinks her identity in the bridegroom, so I sink my identity in my Bridegroom, Jesus Christ. Henceforth the one prayer of my life is—

"LORD, WHAT WILT THOU?"

It is going to mean inevitably that you face the question of going for the Son of God into dark heathen lands. Jesus Christ says, "Wilt thou go with Me, and instead of sovereigns thou shalt have souls." There is a girl living the ordinary life of a girl in the West End of London, and Jesus Christ says, "Wilt thou go with Me? and instead of thy fathers thou shalt have children whom thou mayest make princes of the blood royal."

Parents, your responsibility is to put no hindrance in the way of any child of yours to whom the Holy Ghost is saying to-night, "Wilt thou go with this Man?" I will tell you a better marriage for your daughter—married to Another—that is the marriage the Holy Ghost has got for her. I heard the other day about the Canon of a Church and his daughter, who went to a friend of mine. "I believe," she said, "that God has laid a burden on me, and I rise in the night to pray for the perishing souls in China." Very shortly after, during a series of missionary addresses, the Canon preached a most eloquent and inspiring sermon, appealing to the young men and young women to go forth to the evangelization of the heathen. The next day his daughter followed him into his study and said: "God has spoken to me; I want to go to China."

Not only does it mean a choice, a surrender, and a submission, to the blessed Lord, but it means the identification of the Bride with the Bridegroom, it means that you will receive no better treatment than He received, it may mean what it meant to Him, tears and crucifixion, the cross, the suffering; but blessed be God, it means the glory that shall follow—that is the pathway, it has got wonderful possibilities. O men, women, you who keep your lives to yourselves, except you, like a grain of wheat, fall into the ground and die, you will abide alone, but if you die, with Christ, you shall bring forth fruit a hundredfold.

* Notes of an Address.

The Trumpet Call to Victory!

"More than conquerors, through Him that loved us."
Tune—"Scots wha hae."

SAINTS, for whom the Saviour bled,
In your Captain's footsteps tread,
Follow Jesus and be led,
On to Victory!
See your foemen hold the ground,
Hear the signal trumpet sound,
Instant summons pouring round,
Thrilling melody!

You must take the battlefield,
You may fall, but must not yield,
You shall write upon your shield,
"Victory! though I die!"
And when life's last hour draws nigh,
When death clouds the glazing eye,
You shall with the parting sigh
Grasp the Victory!

You shall then your Captain meet,
Lay your trophies at His feet,
While His soldier He will greet,
On the Victory!
"More than conqueror" in His sight
Through His own imparted might
You shall reign with Him in light,
His, the Victory!

A Call to Prayer.—During last summer, in the province of Fuh-kien, representatives from most of the Mission centres, representing six different societies, met together to consider the local needs of the work. In view of the present situation, it was resolved to form a Prayer Union to seek for an outpouring of God's Spirit. This Union is formed of missionaries and members of the native Church, who pledge themselves to pray once every day for this object. It is also hoped that some experienced Christian worker will visit the province for a special six months' mission, and for this the missionaries intend themselves to raise the necessary funds. Earnest prayer is asked that God may send a revival throughout the whole province.

The West London Mission.

THIS is the seventeenth winter of the work of the West London Mission, and only those who have been intimately associated with its organization and growth have any idea of the multiplicity of its branches, and of the wide and varied work that it is doing, in face of the problems of West London life.

West London has become now, at the beginning of the twentieth century, what Paris was fifty years ago, a world-centre of pleasure and amusement, and, consequently, it has also become a world-centre of luxury and vice. The victims of these social conditions meet the workers of the Mission at every turn in the half-starved army of "season workers," who earn what they can during the short London season, and then "exist," during the rest of the year; in the families crowded into small, unsanitary, single rooms as their dwelling-place; in the thousands of children for whom the street is the only nursery and playground, and in the

of young women and girls, who are selling body and soul in order to live. What sad and pathetic stories our "Rescue Sister" has heard from the lips of many of these—girls who were once bright and innocent, but who have been betrayed and tricked into a life of shame by those agents of evil ever on the watch to procure fresh victims for the market of vice!

One such girl known to our sister was K., a bright, affectionate, high-spirited girl, and a great favourite amcng her hapless companions. K. had been sold to a man when only fifteen years of age. He kept her for a few years, and then deserted her, leaving her to earn her living on the streets. One night K. had more drink than usual. She was consequently riotous, and the police coming on the scene, she was locked up. Her poor companions were in great distress about her, and night after night that week they purposely kept sober, and waited about the streets where Sister Faith (our Rescue Sister), is accustomed to go her rounds. At last, one night between twelve and one o'clock, she appeared, and the girls instantly seized upon her saying, "Sister, we have been waiting and praying for you to come. We know you can help K. You are the only one who can, and you must promise us that you will go to the police court on Friday morning and speak to the magistrate for her. He will listen to you."

Nothing would content or pacify these poor girls until Sister Faith had promised that she would go to the police-court, and do what she could. She went, and the magistrate consented to allow Sister Faith to take K. away with her to our little Home at Paddington. When first she arrived she seemed very reserved and hard, but by degrees she softened and melted, won by the kindness of the matron and sister. One day Sister Faith was suddenly taken ill, and it was then that K. was discovered locked up in a room crying as though her heart would break. We have great hopes that she will turn out a good and happy woman yet. She is but a type of many, many others whom God has enabled us to rescue from a life of degradation.

Last year, forty-seven girls were received into our home, forty-three of whom at the present time are doing well. Besides these, there are numbers who are helped in many ways outside, without coming into the Home at all. We do all we can to prevent girls from falling, as well as to rescue them when they are down.

Best of all, in many instances, under the influence of the services at St. James' Hall our girls are truly converted, and become Christian members and workers in the Mission, striving to help others as they have been helped. The rescue work is but one branch among many, many others.

There is the Guild of Play, into which we gather the children whose only playground is the street, and teach them pure and beautiful games that do them good in mind and body, and prepare the way for the highest teaching of all. There is the Relief Office for the men who are out of work, and who have come down in the world often as a result of their own sin and folly, but where by wise counsel and timely aid many have been helped on to their feet again. There is the work amongst the aged poor in the great West London workhouses, who on their tri-weekly holiday, when they are allowed out, have an invitation to come to one or other of our mission halls, instead of passing their time in the public-house. Tea and entertainment are provided for them, and God's message of hope and love made known to them in hymn and prayer, and kindly conversation. Our provides for those who are handicapped in the battle of life by the loss of sight or limb, and other physical infirmity. We strive to teach them to be happy in their lot, as brave soldiers of Jesus Christ, and do all we can to help them.

For the boys and girls who are just leaving childhood behind for the terribly dangerous period of early youth, we have our evening clubs, which supply as far as they can the need of home, and of good and pure home influences, which are so terribly wanting in their young lives. We have the crèche, or day nursery, for the babies, which requires a chapter to itself to do it justice, and, linked to that, the Kindergarten classes.

The mothers' meetings, "At Homes," and People's Drawing Room, provide social entertainment and recreation for the older people. For the hundreds of young people in West-End houses of business and other situations we have our popular Saturday evening concert at St. James' Hall, and our large devotional classes. They also become the teachers and workers in our Sunday-schools and Bands of Hope, and the members of the Wesley Guild, which is an association pledged to aggressive Christian work.

In Temperance work we are ever active. On Temperance Sunday seventy-four pledges were taken at St. James' Hall, and at every meeting and class in the Mission, TEMPERANCE IS CONTINUALLY ADVOCATED.

We are just now starting a coffee cart, which we hope to place in a conspicuous position where crowds of people come out from work and passers-by are numerous. If space allowed I could speak of our open-air work, which God has signally blessed, the medical work done by our dispensary and staff of trained nurses.

The nurse is the pioneer of Christian missions. By value of the blessed healing art she gains ready admittance everywhere. Into the houses of ill-fame, into the desperate foreign quarters she goes, and prayers have been offered by many strange bedsides, amid surroundings that would astonish and terrify many of your readers.

Into our St. Luke's House for the Dying we take those who have reached the last stage in life's journey, and who have either been discharged as hopeless cases from the London hospitals, or are too poor to be nursed in their own homes. We try to reserve the Home for those who have struggled hard all their lives to be independent, and for whom the workhouse infirmary is the last dread drop of bitterness in their cup of woe.

Last and best of all I must mention the one supremely spiritual object and aim that runs through all the varied organizations and activities of the mission, and that is to make known to every human being by these varied means the love of Christ, to lead them to feel His power and love in their own lives.

KATHERINE PRICE HUGHES.

Work for Jewish Converts.—One of the means inaugurated by the London Jews' Society for the upraising of Israel, is the House of Industry at Jerusalem for the training of Jewish converts. Lodging, board and clothing are provided, in addition to regular instruction in the truths of Christianity. The inmates are admirably trained in carpentery and joinery, and many are the beautiful articles in olive, cedar of Lebanon, and other fancy woods that are made. A capital assortment are on sale in this country, and price lists with all particulars may be obtained from the secretary, London Jews' Society, 16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.

From East to West.

MISS MACPHERSON'S WORK.

THE Home of Industry in Bethnal Green has for nearly half a century been a medium for helping the poor to fit themselves for useful lives, and to exchange the squalor of East London for healthful conditions in the Far West of Canada. The following excerpts from the annual report indicate some of the outstanding features of this year's activities:—

OUR CHILDREN IN CANADA.

Our first party this year, consisting of sixty-five lads and lassies, set sail per ss. "Tunisian," May 7, 1903, from Liverpool, forming the eightieth band of children sent to Canada. The voyage lasted eight days—they were days of pleasure to us all. Every evening our fellow-passengers were entertained by the singing, &c., of the children, and day by day the good food, and fresh sea breezes made their mark on many a little pale London face, so that when we reached Montreal, the ruddy, healthy faces of the young emigrants were commented on by many. The usual hearty welcome waited us at the Stratford (Ontario) Home.

In a few days, all arrangements completed, the boys and girls were sent to their new homes, each taking his or her well-filled trunk, and longing for the moment to arrive when they might examine the beautiful outfit that had been so lovingly provided by kind friends in the homeland. Miss Macpherson adds:—

One Sunday afternoon we visited a Sunday-school about three miles out of the town, where we had the privilege of meeting eleven of our children who are in various farm-homes in the neighbourhood. The children were well spoken of by the teachers, and the eldest, a lad of fifteen, came up to us and said: "I am so glad I ever went to the Training Home at Hackney, for the texts, &c., I learned there are such a help to me, and I have been converted since I came here, and now I am trying to serve the Lord by my life." He has been seven years in Canada. We also saw many more of our married girls, who are comfortably situated, many of them truly serving God.

Sixteen years ago, a bright lad of twelve years was admitted by Miss Macpherson, having been sent to her by a lady who had found him utterly uncared for, living in the streets. His story was one of horror; since his mother's death he and his young brother had been at the mercy of a drunken step-father. They had been left for days together without food. Willie was turned on the streets, until rescued by a lady and placed in the Training Home. His anxiety regarding his little brother was great, and ultimately Miss Macpherson was able to get hold of him, and in Canada now each has a good position.

To be locked in a room from morning till night was the fate of five little children, whose mother strove to maintain them by charing and washing. No wonder she was thankful, at the instigation of a lady district visitor to place two of the little girls, aged four and eleven, in Miss Macpherson's Training Home. They were sent to Canada in the year 1893. Eva, the elder, made herself useful in the farmhouse, was taught to milk, bake and sew; while little Louie, for some years was the pet and sunshine of the home. Eva has worked faithfully and well, putting by a little bank account.

In the home-field, there is the Medical Mission, the influence of which is felt in many a poverty-stricken home. Through the Weekly Sewing Class many a widow has been warmed and comforted by the garments supplied. Sunday morning in Bird Fair furnishes a unique opportunity for open-air evangelistic effort. From all quarters of greater London, bird and dog fanciers assemble in hundreds, and hear the Gospel. With his Colportage and Bible Barrow, the colporteur has sold during the year 2,086 Bibles, 3,590 Testaments, and over 1,500 other books and text-cards. He has made over 10,000 visits to the homes of the people, and has had many tokens of real blessing following his labours. In addition to the work among young women in factories, there are the Bible Flower Mission, fulfilling, in hospitals, infirmaries, and unions, a comforting ministry to some hundreds of sufferers; and the work among railway gate-keepers, who are supplied with Gospel literature.

Miss Macpherson is always thankful for different kinds of clothing for the children in the Home and the young emigrants in the spring. These and other forms of help should be addressed to her at 29, Bethnal Green Road, E.

CHRISTMAS DAY AMONG THE HILLS OF BETHLEHEM.

AT this happy season of the year, when all civilized lands observe Christmas with some kind of festivity or devotions, multitudes of boys and girls will think of peaceful Bethlehem beneath its Syrian skies, where the Saviour of mankind was born.

If you happened to be in Jerusalem, five miles from Bethlehem, when the sun's western rays had sunk over Judea's brown, rocky hills on Christmas Eve, you would immediately see countless lights appear from candles and lamps in the small windows of the houses in Jerusalem's narrow, winding, and puzzling streets. In the interior of these homes, you would find women making preparations for the Feast of the Nativity, before joining other pilgrims on Christmas Eve making their way to the "hill city." Much as the Oriental women delight in jewellery, yet on this special evening they lay aside armlets, bracelets, necklaces, and every kind of adornment, and clothe themselves in a simple white veil, in place of their gaudy, coloured dresses. Long ere midnight comes, they join the throng from all parts of their country and distant lands gathering around the hallowed site of Christ's birth.

Nineteen centuries earlier, wise men from the East travelled a part of the very same road (roads seldom change in Eastern countries), and followed the bright star to the manger of Bethlehem. On their route thither, says a legend, after calling upon Herod in Jerusalem, they lost sight of the guiding star, and went forward haltingly, down the path to Bethlehem, until they reached a well, where they paused to water their animals. They were then greatly troubled; but, to their surprise and joy, one of them noticed the image of a large star in the water, and, looking skywards, he saw the star itself, which "went before them, till it came and stood over where the young Child was."

On climbing the stony hill and entering Bethlehem, which is poor and decayed in appearance, and not very clean or sweet-smelling, there is seen on the south side the dome of the Church of the Nativity, one of the oldest Christian edifices in the world. To this point eagerly look the pilgrims from every quarter of the globe. The Church of the Nativity (which is within the Convent of the Nativity, a large square building), is sub-divided among the Latins, Greeks, and Armenians, to prevent rivalry or conflict in what should be the most peaceable ground on earth.

Pilgrims make their passage to the far end of the church and descend into the crypt, where the Saviour's birth is said to have taken place. The walls are hung with bright, costly drapery and other hangings, and also a silver star with the words, "Hic de Virgine Maria Jesus Christus natus est" (Here, of the Virgin Mary, Jesus Christ was born). The manger stands in a low recess cut in the rock, and the site appears to have been an object of veneration since the second century, A.D. Hither have streamed pilgrims for well nigh 2,000 years, who find it hard to realise that it is, indeed, the birthplace of Jesus Christ. Year by year these pilgrim travellers prostrate themselves, kiss the very stones again and again, and weep for joy at what is held to be the most hallowed shrine in the whole world. Strange and pathetic are the scenes often witnessed. At midnight, when thousands have gathered in tiny Bethlehem, the Latins celebrate the event with a pomp and ceremony which cannot fail even to impress those who differ from their beliefs and form of worship.

It is curious to notice that, in Bethlehem alone, in all the world, Christmas is observed three times every year. This circumstance is explained by the fact that the Latins, or Romans, keep it on December 25; the Greeks twelve days later; and the Armenians celebrate the Feast of the Epiphany instead of Christmas. Hence, the pilgrims who are in Bethlehem on December 25, are mostly of the Latin Church. In Bethlehem, the Bible city, the home of Christmas, the celebrations are always picturesque and memorable, recalling the promise-laden words, "And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda; for out of thee shall come a Governor that shall rule My people Israel." Truly has the "handful of corn upon the top of the mountains" caused the fruit thereof to shake like Lebanon.

Bethlehem, as the scene of our Saviour's birth, tends to draw all nations together in the bonds of love and peace; it helps to create a spirit of worship and praise; and also points to a life of consecration and service in response to a Redeemer, who, "though He was rich, yet for our sakes He became poor, that we through His poverty might be rich."

Of the many beautiful Christmas hymns probably Mrs. Alexander's—

Once in royal David's city,
Stood a lowly cattle shed, will be heard more widely at Christmastide among children than any other of a similar kind. Respecting this famous carol, it has been justly remarked that it will be sung as long as there are children in any land.

The Birthday of Jesus.

Keeping the birthday of Jesus
We are united to-day!
Joyful the hearts that adore Him,
Eager their homage to pay!
Sweet unto Him be our praises,
Songs of a glad Christmas morn;
Dear unto Him our thanksgivings—
Jesus, in Bethlehem born!

Keeping the birthday of Jesus,
Oh, what rejoicing to-day!
Bright are the faces around us,
Touched by love's beautiful ray.
This is the spring of our gladness,
Joy of this new Christmas morn,
God has provided a Saviour—
Jesus, in Bethlehem born!

Keeping the birthday of Jesus,
Oh! What re-unions to-day!
Peace on the earth and good wishes
Driving ill-feeling away.
Who can be still unforgiving?
Who can be grudging or mean?
Everywhere kindness is flowing,
Everywhere good-will is seen.

Keeping the birthday of Jesus,
What are the gifts we may bring?
Nothing seems worthy to offer
So rich and exalted a King!
By "Inasmuch" He has told us
What are the gifts He would choose—
Kind deeds to the poor and the needy—
These He will never refuse.

Our Treasures.

(Matt. ii. 2, 9.)

To Bethlehem's manger,
So poor and so mean,
The Wise Men had followed
The star they had seen.

With Mary His mother,
The young Child they saw;
And fell down to worship,
In wonder and awe.

Aglow are the heavens,
For all who believe;
The Saviour is given,
For all to receive.

. . . . .

Open we our treasures
At the Saviour's feet,
As the Christmas season
Joyfully we greet.

Offer we the tribute
Of a grateful love;
Worshipping our Saviour,
Praising God above.

Jesus, gentle Jesus,
Saviour meek and mild,
Take a Christmas-offering
From Thy grateful child!

H. S. Bainbridge.

A Christmas Prayer.

We celebrate Thy birth,
Thou wondrous Son of God;
And joy that on our earth,
Thy sacred feet have trod.
Lord, give us grace to follow Thee
Till we Thy face in glory see!

Life's Day.

Welcome to the rosy morn,
Birds are singing;
"Peace on earth"—a child is born,
Good news bringing.

Welcome to the busy day!
Christ ere dying
Bade us work, and watch, and pray
Self denying.

Welcome to the peaceful night!
Angels calling;
Restful as the stars of light,
Sleep is falling.

A Missionary Retrospect (Eph. ii. 11-22).

WE must never forget in studying this Epistle of Paul to remember the great principle for which he stood. The religious leaders of the Jewish people were quite prepared to accept Christ's interpretation of the old law, if only it were granted that His disciples should remain loyal to themselves. There would have been no persecution of the early Church if only it had been clearly understood that it was willing to be a branch of the great Jewish community. The Scribes and Pharisees would have welcomed the Gentiles of every nation under heaven, if only they would have passed into Judaism, by the initial rite of circumcision, before they became members of the Christian Church.

Paul, on the other hand, insisted that faith in Christ was altogether sufficient to link the soul with the invisible spiritual Church of God, apart from Judaism with any of its rites. He said, in effect, the time when the proselyte must pass through the portal of the Hebrew religion, in order to find the true God is over. Henceforth, through faith in Jesus, men like the Phœnecian jailor may become members of the mystical body of Christ. It was this that raised the whole indignation of the Hebrew leaders to the Apostle Paul in particular, and the bitterness of the conflict was to the end a thorn in his side.

This is the point of the present paragraph. Addressing the disciples in Ephesus, and probably those who were distributed over a wider area (for this seems to have been a kind of encyclical letter), the Apostle reminds them of the time when they were known as uncircumcised Gentiles, alienated from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers from the covenant of promise, without hope and without God; but he lays great stress upon the change which had been brought about through the Blood of Christ. Notice that delightful phrase, "made nigh in the Blood of Christ"; how much it implies! We are not only made nigh to God, we are made nigh also to all who are united to Christ, by the living bond of faith. As the spokes of a wheel converge upon the axle they approximate to each other.

We are not permitted by the religion of Jesus Christ to be at enmity with any who belong to Him; we may not agree with them, we may have reason to believe that they are uninformed and in need of the operations of God's Spirit, but we have no right to introduce the bitterness of conflict into our relations; hence, throughout this paragraph, the Apostle lays great emphasis upon the oneness of all who believe. He has made both one; has broken down the middle wall of partition; has created one new man; has reconciled both in one Body unto God; has given us access in one Spirit. The unity of believers is not yet unveiled; but it is a living reality, and we should discern it, and endeavour to manifest it.

How great the contrast between then and now for these Ephesian Christians, built into the Living Temple, fellow citizens with the holy men of the Hebrew race, part of the home in which the Spirit of God dwells; and this same change passes over every race and nation which truly embraces the Gospel of Christ. Think of our forefathers, whether in the forests of Germany, or on the plains of Stonehenge, and how marvellous a change was wrought when they by faith entered into union with Christ, and became identified with all holy souls of every land who recognized Him as King. The same transformation has been witnessed wherever ignorant and superstitious tribes have abandoned the religion of their forefathers, and have accepted Christianity. In Africa, Polynesia, India, the same process has been observed, by which those who were afar off have been made nigh, and strangers have become members of God's great commonwealth of souls.

International S.S. Lesson.

Sunday, January 3, 1904.

The Boyhood of Jesus (Luke ii. 40-52).

Golden Text—Luke ii. 52.

THE incident described in to-day's lesson, with the hints which accompany it, is the only one recorded in the Scriptures from the life of Jesus between the time of His recall from Egypt and His entry on His public ministry at His baptism. Growth and obedience are the key-words.

Nazareth, the former residence of Joseph and Mary, was an unimportant hamlet, situated in a narrow vale, built up the slope of a steep mountain, and hemmed in by lesser hills. Possessed only one fountain, whence doubtless "the carpenter's Son" would often carry home a pitcher of water for His mother "as the fine healthy boys of the same village do to-day." Nazareth lay off, but close to the great caravan route for traders into Palestine from the North, and five miles from the Sea of Galilee, where Roman luxury displayed itself in sinful indulgence; therefore, it was by no means a village free from the temptations of the world, rather a by-word for evil. "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?"

Jesus, a Child in the Home.

1. His mother, a pious, devout worshipper of God, for such only claimed the privilege of attending with the men at the yearly feast of the Passover. A woman of faith and joy in the Lord. Thoughtful, loving, and tender. Had "found favour with God."

2. His first teacher and His last care (Deut. vi. 7) is a glimpse into the humble Godly home at Nazareth. The Word of God was "hidden in His heart," He was early taught to love the house of God.

Jesus in the School.

At six years of age the son of Jewish parents attended school in the audience room of the synagogue to be taught the Scriptures, reading, writing, Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic; to be trained in national patriotism, for the Roman yoke was irksome and taxes a burden. Elsewhere to be taught an industry of manual labour, which was a necessary part of a boy's education.

The child-life and school-life of Jesus had, like children of to-day, its difficulties, trials, temptations, battles, hindrances, perplexities. He was "Thy holy Child Jesus," but His mental powers had to develop by learning, His spiritual by divine wisdom through the truths of the Scriptures and prayer, His body by food and healthful exercise. "The grace of God was on Him."

Good seed will not develop fully in bad soil; seek of God the grace of a clean, pure mind, that wisdom may enter, grow, and bring forth fruit.

Jesus in His Father's House.

At twelve years of age a boy would go up to Jerusalem and be accepted at the Temple as "a son of the law," begin to wear the phylacteries in token of, and to remind him of his obligation to keep the law. The youths attended the "Searchers" classes in the Temple for conversational instruction. Hence v. 49 was a surprise that Mary had sought anywhere else for Jesus.

The doctors were probably the famous Hillel and his son Simon, his great rival Shammai, with Gamaliel and Nicodemus.

Verse 49 is the first recorded utterance of Jesus. God, His Father, was His central thought. God's will His business (Psa. xl. 7, 8). Jesus, "the Son," in His Father's house.

Jesus in the Workshop.

For "He went down with them, and was subject unto them." The word means habitual, continuous submission. In a mechanic's garb, content to work in the station of life into which he had been born. "Diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Still learning and doing, and waiting on His father's business for some eighteen years. "Growing in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man."

Points to Remember.

He knows the wish of your heart; if you ask Him He will help you to "grow" like Him—loving, obedient, gentle, happy, good-tempered, and sweet every day. Read what He did to some little children (Mark x. 16).

Are you at school? He knows your need. Ask Him to help you in your lessons—for teachableness, attention, perseverance, memory. Ask Him to be with you in the playground, that the games and the language, and the unselfish enjoyment, be pure and such as He can watch with approval.

Do you want to become a member of the Church? Jesus will welcome you. He is the true Paschal Lamb and the High Priest to receive you. "Give the hand, enter into His sanctuary" (2 Chron. xxx. 8, marg.).

HAVING THE MASTER'S SPIRIT.

When Whitefield commenced to preach, his juvenile appearance excited sneers of contempt. When, however, he opened his mouth, the excellence of his sermons produced a marvellous effect. From his youth to the close of his days, Whitefield's preaching always awakened deep interest, and was followed by remarkable results. Throughout his life he spoke with authority, and demonstrated that the power of the Spirit was possessed by him. Our Lord was misunderstood, even by His parents, and as He sat in the midst of the doctors, hearing them and asking them questions, they were amazed (v. 46). Like the Master, we His disciples may be often misunderstood. Let us, like Whitefield, seek to be fitted with the spirit of the Master, and we shall be able, in His strength, to preach effectively either by word or life.

ATTENDING TO THE SOVEREIGN'S BUSINESS.

Queen Elizabeth on one occasion gave an important commission to a leading English merchant, who was inclined to demur at the command. "If I undertake this, what will become of my affairs?" asked the man of business. "You attend to my business," replied the Queen, "and I will take charge of your affairs." So it should be with us when the work of God is before us. Our Lord said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" (v. 49), and we following in His footsteps should place God's work before all else. The Lord is more faithful than any earthly monarch, and if we honour Him, by placing His business before our own mundane considerations, He will take charge of and guide our affairs.

HONOURING A PARENT.

Once when Abraham Lincoln was asked to sample some rare wine he refused to do so. He explained that he had once promised his mother that he would never taste intoxicating drink as a beverage, and considered that promise to be binding upon him. "A promise is a promise for ever," said he. In the keeping of his promise, Abraham Lincoln was imitating our Saviour, and was subject unto his parents (v. 51). Often do we fail in this respect. We forget our obligations to our parents, and the extent of the debt we owe them. Our Lord would have us honour our fathers and our mothers, and be subject unto them. Then shall we increase in favour with God and man.

THE

Torrey-Alexander Mission.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

Future Plans.

THE evangelists will now take a few days' much-needed rest, after their continuous work in this country, prior to beginning the great mission in Birmingham on January 17. For this mission most careful and excellent arrangements are being made, under the auspices of a committee which is thoroughly representative of the Evangelical Churches of Birmingham. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander have been mercifully preserved in good health through the last two years, in which they have travelled through Australia, India, and—as regards Dr. Torrey—China and Japan. They have now completed a year's work in Great Britain, and it has been marvellously blessed in its results. Scotland, Ireland and England have shared in the spirit of revival for which God's people have long prayed. During the present month the evangelists have enjoyed short but happy visits to various Scottish centres of population, and the verdict of all on the spot has been to the same effect as workers have witnessed in all the other places they have visited—that it was a pity they could not stay longer.

Prayer is sought most earnestly that in the new year which is dawning Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander may be used by the Holy Spirit to do "even greater things than these," and that in Birmingham and the various English cities they go to they may find an open door for the Gospel. In Scotland and Ireland numbers of God's people are praying for a revival in Dublin, which the evangelists hope to visit later on. Many invitations are still under consideration, and it is hoped that the evangelists will be sustained through all the heavy strain which is put upon them. At the lowest computation they must have spoken and sung in the hearing of five million people during this world-wide tour.

A Minister's Testimony.

Rev. J. E. Roberts, M.A., B.D., who has succeeded the venerated Dr. Alexander Maclaren in the pastorate of Union Chapel, Manchester, writes as follows concerning the mission:—I believe that the mission conducted by Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander in Manchester has been used by God to bring great blessing to our city. Dr. Torrey's preaching is so strenuous and Scriptural, and so manifestly in the power of the Holy Spirit, that one cannot be surprised at the numbers who profess conversion. Mr. Alexander's singing, and especially his power of making others sing, go a long way to prepare for the sowing of the seed on good ground. I greatly enjoyed the meetings I attended, and profited by them. My own soul has been blessed. The methods employed by the missioners are excellent, and I have been struck with the clear testimony of the converts with whom I have conversed.

What the Converts are Doing.

Being privileged a few days ago to meet in Edinburgh several prominent workers who took a deep interest in the mission held there in February last, Mr. Curr, who has charge of a converts' meeting in Carrubber's Close Mission, said that so far from being luke-warm, the members were active and zealous in the Master's cause. Many had associated themselves with the various Churches, and were progressing well in the Christian life, while others had joined forces with the Carrubbers Close Mission, and were giving evidence of bright Christian lives and useful work.

I next interviewed Mr. J. Farmer Brown, superintendent of the Free Breakfast Mission, who said it had been not only a time of great ingathering, but one of blessing and stimulus to great numbers of God's people. "In the Free Breakfast Mission we have a great number of the converts doing splendid work. The Mission gave us some of our best workers, and we thank God for it."

The next friend I met was Rev. Mr. Wemyss, the energetic secretary of the Mission. "What has struck you most in connection with the results of the Mission?" I asked. "Well," he said, "the method of Dr. Torrey in making the converts publicly confess their acceptance of Christ has appealed to me most. When a young convert opens his mouth in public confession of Christ, he necessarily burns the bridges behind him; and I think that this method has saved many a convert from going back to his old ways in sin."

"Has the work stood well?" "Yes, it has. To-day most of the converts are keener in the Lord's work than they were the first week after their conversion."

GLASGOW.

Cheering news comes from Glasgow regarding the converts of the mission held there in March. Every Monday night additions are made to the Converts' Fellowship meeting, and at the present time there are 1,800 names upon the register. It is now nine months since this meeting was started, and already several of the members have been called home, some have gone to different parts of the country, many have gone into Christian work in connection with the various churches. The interest is, if anything, deeper now than when the meeting was started. R.

ECHOES FROM DR. TORREY.

A Spirit-taught man believes in judgment.

The Holy Spirit illuminates the face of Jesus Christ, so that men can see and believe.

It is not our work to convince men of sin, but the work of the Holy Spirit.

You may have just a theological knowledge of Christ, or else a personal and experimental knowledge of Him.

Many a rabid infidel becomes a believer in a moment when the Holy Spirit does His work in revealing Jesus Christ to him.

The greatest mistake we can make in Christian work is to try and do the work of the Holy Spirit.

Any hope which is not saving you from the power of sin here will never save you from the consequences of sin hereafter.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

ALLOA.

DESPITE the obvious difficulties attendant on a Gospel Temperance Mission in a place where the manufacture of drink is carried on, much encouragement was met with by Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones in the services at Alloa which, commencing on December 9, lasted for a fortnight. The interest steadily increased, and a large number of bearers, especially young men, have been greatly blessed. A crowning blessing was experienced in the concluding meetings, and in many quarters expressions of high appreciation were heard regarding the lofty tone of Dr. Henry's addresses, and the telling character of his appeals. Mr. Armon Jones again sang with much acceptance.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Bible Training College.—To encourage Christian workers to undertake a thorough course of Biblical study, evening classes will be held on Monday and Friday evenings (beginning January 1), at 7.45 p.m., at the Baptist Chapel, Commercial Street, Aldgate, E. It is hoped that correspondence classes will be established at an early date. The support of this work is commended to the notice of the Lord's people as the expenses will be considerable. Principal, Mr. Percy Heward, 14, Pier Head, Wapping, E. We also cordially bespeak the attention of readers to a series of Motto Cards for 1904, containing: "He faileth not," "Solemn Questions for a Solemn Season," "Perfect Peace," "A Loving Earnest Appeal," and "A New Year's Prayer," with a booklet, "Be not Weary"—with sound Scriptural poems. Each 1s. per dozen of the authoress, Mrs. S. A. Heward, at same address.

Obituary.

REV. J. S. RAE, Edinburgh.

A MINISTERIAL life of outstanding usefulness has just been closed by the passing to be with the Lord of Rev. James Slater Rae, Edinburgh, at the age of sixty-two. Educated at the University of Glasgow, Mr. Rae's first pastoral charge was at Ecclefechan, from whence he was transferred across the border to Sunderland. During a highly appreciated pastorate of fourteen years in England he took a special interest in the Presbyterian Church extension movement, being mainly instrumental in the foundation of congregations at Seaham Harbour and Harrogate. Accepting a call to Newington United Presbyterian Church, Mr. Young passed the remainder of his life in Edinburgh, where he was greatly beloved. He was known as a friend of the poor and the needy, as well as a faithful minister of the Gospel.

REV. GEORGE ENGLISH.

On Wednesday, December 9, Rev. George English, Rector of Combe Hay, was called suddenly to his rest, at the ripe age of eighty-five. In his younger days he was a fellow Sunday-school teacher with Captain Allen Gardiner. Later he went to India as a C.M.S. missionary, but not long afterwards he was appointed as an Indian chaplain, and threw himself into the work with all his accustomed zeal and energy. Wherever he went he was unceasingly at work for his Master, and with his great love for souls was greatly blessed for the spiritual good of all around him. For the last nineteen years of his life he was rector of Combe Hay, near Bath; and some thirteen years ago met with a serious carriage accident, after which he retired very much from public life and work, though still taking a lively interest in Church matters, especially in the work of the C.M.S. and many of the societies working for the maintenance of Evangelical truth.

A JAPANESE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN.

The Christian forces of Japan are mourning the loss of one of their most trusted leaders, for death has claimed the Hon. Kenkichi Kataoka, at the age of sixty-one. As president of the Lower House of the Japanese National Parliament and also of Doshisha College, Kyoto, he commanded a far-reaching influence.

It was in 1871 that Mr. Kataoka first came under Christian influence, when on a visit to the United States and Europe. The modesty, kindness, and faithfulness of the missionary who acted as interpreter and guide made a deep impression upon his mind, as did also Christian life and work, as visible in the homes, schools, and benevolent institutions in America. When in England these impressions were confirmed, as the traveller discovered that influential men of the middle and upper classes, including such men as Mr. Gladstone, were sincere believers in Christianity, and that their faith was in direct proportion to the nobility of their character. He became an earnest seeker after truth, and eventually made an open confession of his faith in Christ, and from that time forward took a prominent part in religious movements in his country.

In the course of time the Liberal party became the most powerful political organization in Japan. Mr. Kataoka has been vice-president for many years, and has steadily grown in the respect and esteem of the people of all classes. When he was ultimately elected its president there was some fear that in the important position he was thus called to fill he would be less zealous and faithful as a Christian; but the noble qualities of the man shone forth as never before, and in the face of every obstacle he followed the path of duty, and boldly testified for his Lord. Missionaries and evangelists were welcomed to his province, and on the occasion of Mr. J. R. Mott's visit to Japan, when an unprecedented spiritual awakening among the young men of the country was experienced, Mr. Kataoka helped forward the movement by every means in his power.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Gipsy Smith at Macclesfield.

MACCLESFIELD has been visited at different periods in its spiritual history with marvellous tokens of the working of the Spirit of God on its town and neighbourhood. The work of Rev. William (now General) Booth still abides; a little later my dear father, Richard Weaver, began a mighty work when hundreds were brought to Christ, and the whole town and district shaken; with other towns we also shared in the great awakening of the simultaneous missions throughout the country. Gipsy Smith's mission had been looked forward to for months, and much preparation and prayer had been made. He began by addressing the workers in the Drill Hall (in which the mission was held, holding when full about 2,000 people), on the Saturday evening, December 5th, and all felt we were going to see great things.

On Sunday afternoon and evening he addressed large gatherings, and immediately many were led to decision for Christ. On the Wednesday the Hall was crowded, and each evening great blessing accompanied the searching messages of the preacher. On Friday evening Mr. Bewley Weaver gave the address, and at ten o'clock this same evening had been arranged the torchlight march round the town, headed by the Salvation Army band.

Many of the ministers and leading Christian workers took part in the march, and when the hall was reached and service commenced at 11.15 p.m., a motley crowd was seen—some being drunk. Gipsy Smith showed aptitude in managing this meeting, and as he sang "Looking this way," and then spoke to the fallen and degraded out of a true brother's heart, tears could be seen coursing down the faces of many who had been reminded of old-time scenes of a mother or father who had loved and prayed for the sons and daughters; it was a sight never to be forgotten. It was felt that here the Church was following the example of its Saviour, and grappling with sin in its grossest forms; many came out to be spoken to, and one touching incident was seen in the inquiry room. A father, drunk though he was, had gone to be prayed for, and his daughter, who went with him, touched all hearts as she knelt and prayed for God to make her father to be kind and loving to her mother. The devil very much tried to rouse opposition to this service, but he failed, and we believe many were blessed, while some who had come to upset and annoy came forward and signed the pledge. Sunday was a red-letter day. In the afternoon a meeting for men only was held, and the large hall filled, and it was splendid to hear them singing. In the evening many hundreds had to be turned away, and many were the slain of the Lord. About 900 passed through the inquiry-room, but this does not include many others who had risen for prayer. Gipsy Smith gave his lecture on his life-story on Monday evening to a crowded audience.

The whole town has been influenced, and in mills, warehouses, &c., through the decision for Christ of someone who works there, a spirit of interest and inquiry has been aroused. Hundreds have been blessed and helped. The writer can tell of numerous Christian workers who had grown formal and cold. To them this mission has been an inspiration.

Reginald Weaver.

Rev. John McNeill at Rothesay.

The mission just concluded by Rev. John McNeill at Rothesay has left a profound impression in the town. The interest awakened in Divine things gives every sign of being deep and lasting. When the closing services came the difficulty was to find accommodation for those who sought admission. On Sabbath of last meeting four services were held. In the morning Mr. McNeill preached in North Bute U.F. Church (Rev. John Dunlop) to a crowded congregation. In the afternoon there was a meeting of men only—a novelty in Rothesay—in the Public Hall, when over a thousand were present, and a powerful address was given from the text, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." A crowded meeting for women only followed.

The final and principal gathering was in the Public Hall at eight o'clock, when the resources of the building were taxed to their utmost capacity. An hour before the start the people were streaming in, and long before eight o'clock every available seat was occupied, many having to content themselves with standing room. The united choir, under Mr. P. M'Arthur, discoursed a number of Gospel hymns.

Mr. M'Neill said it was a great pleasure that the people of Rothesay and Bute generally had turned out so well to the meetings in the midst of all the backsliding and formality. He hoped it was not to be an end but a new beginning. That day was the termination ad quem and also ad quo, and he hoped a new start would be made from which the regular work would receive impetus and blessing. He was anxious that the tide should now be found flowing in the regular channels.

He hoped all the regular meetings on the Sabbath and week-days would receive an impulse, and that after the mission was over the water would be found flowing in the regular channels, only a little deeper. The parish minister of a town he had visited said that his prayer meeting had never been attended by more than forty, but as a result of the mission it had never sunk below 120; that was something, as week night meetings went. Others said that whereas it was like pulling teeth to get Sunday-school teachers, they found people able and willing to come. He had also heard it said that as a result of the mission the purse was opened, and if the heart was touched everything was touched. He thanked the ministers for standing round and helping them.

Mr. Musa Bhai, Indian evangelist, has just concluded an encouraging eight-days' mission in connection with the Y.M.C.A., Walsall. Many young people were led to accept Christ as their present Saviour.

A three weeks' mission has just been conducted by Mr. B. R. Mudditt, from China, in the new Gospel Hall, New Stevenston, Lanarkshire. Many of the unconverted have been awakened, and saints have been revived. To God be all the glory! H. Caulfield.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith (Evangelization Society), since completing his summer's tent work in Somerset, has been labouring in Midsomer-Norton and Radstock, where much blessing has been vouchsafed; sinners have been awakened, and believers much encouraged.

The Men's Mission conducted by Mr. W. A. Boyd in connection with the Armagh Y.M.C.A. has closed. The power of God was very manifest, and we believe definite blessing was received. Mrs. Boyd assisted by solo singing. C. J. Mates.

At the second service held by Rev. A. G. Rogers in the Londesborough Theatre, Scarborough, the place was densely crowded. The singing was very hearty, and the address of a simple and impressive character.

In connection with the Royal Small Arms Factory at Enfield Lock, a Thursday dinner-hour service is carried on and blessing is being given. Valuable help has been afforded by the Open-Air Mission, whose evangelists, Mr. Parker and Sergeant Pullinger have taken acceptable part. F. O. H.

A fifteen days' mission recently conducted by Mr. Harold H. Cook, of the Evangelization Society, at Limbury Baptist Chapel, near Luton, resulted in great blessing. A number of young people and children, as well as older persons, found the Lord as their Saviour, and great joy was also caused by seeing several who had grown indifferent coming back to full allegiance. E. A. M.

A fruitful mission of nine days' duration has been concluded at Shaftesbury Institute, Railton Road, Brixton, conducted by Mr. E. and Miss Alice Beaumont. Prayer has been very abundantly answered, many anxious souls have sought the Saviour; and the work of God altogether has been revived. S. Williams.

Rev. Jesse Mayo has recently conducted an encouraging ten days' mission at Stanley Congregational Church, Liverpool. The addresses given were earnest and powerful, and impressed all who were privileged to hear them. Without using any sensational methods, the minister sought, night by night, to bring his audiences to face the most important of all questions, and not a few were led to declare themselves on the Lord's side.

W. M. Rawlinson, co-Pastor.

Mr. Newton Jones's mission at Widcombe Baptist Chapel, Bath, was a time of blessing. The Gospel in its fulness was proclaimed and owned of the Spirit of God to the conversion of sinners—some of them being scholars in our school. Mr. Newton Jones held the attention of the young people with happy results. His warning words concerning strong drink and tobacco are greatly needed.

J. R. Huntley, Pastor.

During the past ten-days the little village of Satterforth, Yorkshire, has been the arm of the Lord made bare. The services conducted by Pastor Howton, of Glossop, will long be remembered. The Church attendance has been gradually increasing Sunday by Sunday under the ministry of Pastor E. P. Thorpe, until the old building was filled with worshippers. In spite of inclement weather the companies were large night after night, and an awakening followed, especially among the young men connected with the Bible Class, who have long been prayed for. Mothers and daughters also found their Saviour, till scarcely a family in the village was not rejoicing in the salvation of one or more of their relatives. T.

A mission of much power and blessing has been held in the Baptist Church, Coventry, by Mr. E. P. Telford. Over 200 have been led to make decision for Christ. A marked feature of the mission has been the variety of characters seen among the inquirers. There has been the bright, business young fellow, and his very opposite—the almost hopeless drunkard. The cry of one of the latter when on his knees in the inquiry room was, "Oh, Lord, make me a better man"; this prayer he made as the tears rolled down his face. A few nights after his wife also decided for Christ, and told what a change in the home had taken place through her drunken husband's conversion. On the second Sunday evening's service, after preaching from the text, "How long halt ye between two opinions?" Mr. Telford cried, "Who will decide for Christ now?" from all parts of the church the response came, "I will," "I will." And some seventy persons that night ceased their indecision and confessed Christ.

Mr. M. Collings has just finished a very encouraging mission at St. Michael's, Hanworthy, and from first to last there was distinct evidence of God's blessing on the effort. The Services were held in the church, which was well filled each evening, and the message came home with real power to many lives. The Bible Readings each afternoon were also greatly helpful to all who came, and altogether the special services have been the means of infusing a deeper spiritual life in the parish. The address on the Second Coming aroused many from indifference to an earnest attention to this solemn message of God—the last message given by the angels as Christ ascended into Heaven before his disciples. All the workers in the parish, especially those in the Christian Endeavour, have been wonderfully helped by the Mission, and the blessing has overflowed to other parishes in the neighbourhood.

N. B.

"The Freehold" is an isolated working-class district, situate between Muswell Hill and New Southgate, N., and for many years it was much neglected. About two and a half years ago the Freehold Mission was commenced in small premises, but God has so abundantly blessed the work that a new hall, holding about 400, with class-rooms in the rear, has just been completed through the kindness of Mr. Hales, a local builder. The work is on a genuinely undenominational basis, and welcomes workers from all the churches. The opening of the new hall on November 21 was immediately followed by an eight-days' mission, conducted by Messrs. W. Olney and F. Spencer Johnson. On the Sundays and Thursday, Mr. Olney was unable to be present, and Mr. G. E. Morgan took his place. The peculiarities of the neighbourhood, and the terrible power of drink, present unusual difficulties, but during the week the attendances kept up in a most encouraging manner, Mr. Johnson's singing forming a strong attraction, which helped to bring the truth home to many. In a considerable number of cases God has once again shown Himself "mighty to save," several notorious characters being reached. On Monday, 30th ult., Mr. Johnson delivered his lecture on "The Dangers of the Stage," and this formed a God-owned close to a God-owned mission.

Requests for Prayer.

That three friends may be led to attend Dr. Torrey's meetings in Birmingham and be truly converted to Christ.

For much blessing upon a mission to be conducted in Bures, Suffolk, by Mr. James Lovell, Evangelization Society, beginning January 10, 1904.

For the beloved wife of Mr. T. M. Wintle, of the Christian Mission, Pontymoile, Mon. She suffers agonies from rheumatism, and prays to be taken Home. But her husband entreats prayer that the Lord will put his healing hand upon her, deliver her from her malady, and restore her to be again his helpmate in the work so dear to them both.

Praise.

One who has been blessed in answer to prayer, and his hope in God revived, desires to offer praise.

About Books.

The South African Year Book, 1903-4, is a compendium of information which will be found invaluable by all who have connections with the Cape, whether missionary, social, or business. (10s. 6d. net. A. Bywater, 64, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.)

For the twenty-eighth year the Ministers' Pocket Diary and Clerical Vade Mecum makes its appearance. Besides the usual features of a Church Calendar and Diary, there is a list of Missionary and other societies, the Scripture lessons for the Sunday-school, and additional information which ministers constantly need to have at their command. (2s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Adaora: A Tale of West Africa. By Mary E. Bird. (1s. Religious Tract Society.) An interesting, instructive, and every way valuable book, picturing to English readers the manners and ways, and, far more, the dark and cruel superstitions of the poor demon-worshipping race of the Ibos, on the banks of the Southern Niger. Several experienced missionaries of those parts bear testimony to the fidelity and accuracy with which Miss Bird has represented the people of whom she writes, and the desirable characters they are capable of becoming through the influences of the Gospel. The book, and the series of which it forms a part, are well adapted for presents and school prizes.

Mr. A. H. Stockwell has already published several volumes in the "Congregational Pulpit" series. In Sermons on Immortality, Rev. Bernard J. Snell phrases his conception of the life to come in language reverently restrained, and such as befits the theme. Vol. II. is by Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon, its keynote being found in its title—Times and Seasons. These utterances, appropriate to the occasions on which they were delivered, are marked by that singular frankness and force which one is accustomed to look for in sermons by Mr. Gibbon. The Theatre of Life forms the subject of Vol. III., by Rev. J. J. Cooper (Northampton). It comprises twelve discourses on as many aspects of human life: its director, training, music, tragedy, &c., combining simple exegesis with practical appeals to the heart and conscience. Rev. J. Pandy Williams (Derby) is represented by Vol. IV., The Duty of Exercise. In these twelve sermons Mr. Williams presses home, with urgency and affection, obligations which young Christians will do well to take to heart. Each book has a full-page photograph of its author. (2s. 6d. each, net.)

True sympathy with those who are in trouble marks every page of From Behind the Veil; or, Life Studies from the Book of Job, by Rev. H. E. Stone (2s. 6d. net. E. Marlborough & Co.); and the book cannot fail to bring light to readers who are perplexed by sorrow upon sorrow, in their own experience or that of others, when they expected only unbroken joy in the Lord. This frequently overlooked or neglected book of Scripture is shown to be a perennial spring of comfort. There are many clever home-thrusts as the characters of the three friends are stripped of mere incidentals, and shown to be identical with those of the men and women who would read to us the purposes and teaching of God in the light of their own preconceptions and prejudices. The able and thorough treatment of the subject brings the argument down to our own day, and shows how truly it fits into our circumstances. Attention is called again and again to Satan "behind the veil," as after his two great failures he strives through the advice of Eliphas, Bildad, and Zophar to bring Job to the point of cursing God; but over against these his limitations and helplessness to go beyond the permission of God are emphatically insisted on. Loyalty to the Word of God, and to the cardinal doctrines of the Christian faith, marks a volume which we warmly commend for the instruction of young believers, and as one which teachers and preachers will find full of helpful suggestion for dealing with different classes. The style is particularly simple and clear, so that none may misunderstand; and crisp, telling sayings and definitions abound which will stick in the memory and be ready for use in the time of emergency.

The Baptist Almanack and Directory, 1904, brings denominational facts, so far as the Metropolitan area is concerned, up-to-date, and forms a handy and useful manual for the use of all concerned. (2d. R. Banks & Son).

John Ploughman's Almanack, 1904, is too well known and highly appreciated to need commendation. We can only say that it is at least as good and bright as ever. Spurgeon's Illustrated Almanack also continues on its way of usefulness, well fitted to be useful in the life of many a home (1d. each. Passmore & Alabaster).

Continuing their series of the Century Bible (the New Testament portion of which is complete in thirteen volumes) Messrs. Jack announce the commencement of the Old Testament on similar lines. "Genesis" will appear early in January, the Editor being Professor Bennett, of New College, London. The next volume, "Judges and Ruth," by Rev. G. W. Thatcher, B.D., of Mansfield College, Oxford, will appear in February, and other volumes monthly.

Christmas Appeals.

For the Christmas Meals' Fund of the Ark Mission, S.E., Mr. W. Joyner appeals. Address, 88, Paradise Street, Rotherhithe, S.E.

Rev. J. W. Coad, Primitive Methodist Mission (64, Brayburne Avenue, Clapham, S.W.), writes on behalf of the distressed poor of Battersea, S.W.

Mr. W. R. Bullock (93, Grove Road, Upper Holloway, N.) appeals for the North London Gospel Samaritan Mission, "to give Christmas cheer to the poor."

Lady Frederick Bruce (11, Gloucester Terrace, Regent's Park, N.W.) appeals on behalf of the Children's Aid Society, which "for nearly fifty years has been striving to save the children."

Rev. Edwin H. Ellis (East London Tabernacle, E.) writes:—"We have very many in great need: sickness is on the increase. I have had to engage a doctor to visit those who cannot afford to pay."

The South London Association for Assisting the Blind hopes to provide (for the thirtieth consecutive year) a substantial meal for 300 very poor people. Hon. Sec., Mr. J. T. Edmonds, 155, Brixton Road, S.W.

The Society for the Relief of Distressed Widows (who apply within the first month of widowhood) appeals for help. Every case is investigated before assistance is given. Secretary, Mr. Samuel Rayson, 32, Sackville Street, W.

Mr. William Wheatley (St. Giles' Christian Mission, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C.) writes: "Last year we provided over 5,000 Christmas dinners, and this year we hope to provide as many, if not more."

From Providence Mission Chapel, Pirbright, near Woking, comes an appeal for warm clothing, groceries, or financial assistance, to be devoted to relieving the necessitous poor. Address, Mr. R. Fifield, 2 Commercial Road, Woking, Surrey.

Mr. J. W. Weston (treasurer of "Southwark Feeding the Hungry Fund") pleads for special help just now to relieve present distress; also to provide a good dinner and tea on Christmas Day for many poor families. Address, Grove Mission, Great Guildford Street, S.E.

Rev. F. W. Newland, Claremont Hall, Pentonville (Central Mission of the London Congregational Union), appeals on behalf of the many poor people of the district. "We shall be grateful for gifts of money, clothing, boots, &c., and we are always needing surgical aid letters."

The objects of the Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution are "to grant pensions to aged and infirm domestic servants of good character, and to assist those in temporary distress." There are many pressing applications for relief. Secretary, Mr. William Sly, 32, Sackville Street, Piccadilly, W.

Miss Clementina Kingdon, foundress and superintendent of the Protestant Governesses' Home, writes: "Elderly gentlewomen are in great distress, needing pecuniary help for food, firing, and rent. In times of sickness many have only the infirmary to go to." Address, 22, Chatham Place, Brighton.

Rev. Philip Gast, minister of Spencer Place Chapel, Goswell Road, N.E., who has laboured for forty-six years in a very poor district, appeals for funds for supplying Christmas dinners, food, clothing, and coals to the needy. "Widows with large families, and those where the husband is prostrate in sickness, have my first consideration, and are helped irrespective of creed or party."

Mr. A. H. Ward, Camberwell Mission and Ragged Schools (Toulon Street, Wyndham Road, Camberwell, S.E.), writes: "Following the practice of previous years, a Christmas Day dinner will be provided for some of the most destitute families; a robin dinner to 300 children; a Christmas tree for the little tots; and a tea for afflicted children.

Rev. J. Menzies Love appeals on behalf of the mission and relief work at the Lighthouse, Bow Common, E. "We are once more confronted with sickness, poverty and want. This year is especially trying for those who earn their daily living in factories, as many of these in our neighbourhood are being closed on account of lack of work. Will you also remember our Christmas dinners to the poor?" Address, 102, Malmesbury Road, Bow, E.

The Benevolent, or Strangers' Friend Society has, for the last hundred and eighteen years, systematically ministered to the necessities of the sick poor of all creeds and nationalities. One hundred and fifty visitors of both sexes, belonging to various sections of the Christian Church, devote many hours every week throughout the year to this work, without fee or reward, and the relief claims on the fund are constant. Secretary, Mr. B. H. Gerrans, 72, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

Mrs. Bishop, Hon. Sec., London City Mission, North Place, High Street, Stratford, E., appeals for "the many out-of-works and those too old to work."

Mr. Thomas Fagg (136, Pentonville Road, N.), of the Fox Court Ragged School, Gray's Inn Road, W.C., seeks help to provide Christmas dinners for poor families and cheer for children.

For many years Mrs. Anna M. Wilkes has carried on a beneficent rescue work in East London. "The Home has been a haven of rest to many a wandering sister." Address, 31, Sturry Street, Poplar, E.

Rev. J. W. Atkinson (Latimer Church, E.) is arranging to give some thousands of Christmas dinners to the respectable poor. Address, "Claremont," Cowley Road, N.E.

Miss Reid, 33, Keildon Road, New Wandsworth, S.W., appeals on behalf of the Lambeth Creche and Mission. There are services for poor women who work in dustyards; a soup kitchen; and at a branch Home homeless women and children are received.

Mr. C. W. Wannell, leader, Victoria Wesleyan Mission Band, Barrow Hill Road, N.W., appeals for means to provide a Christmas dinner for adults and tea for the hundreds of poor children in St. John's Wood and Portland Town.

In connection with the Dock-Labourer's Mission, Mr. C. H. Coleman (150, Boleyn Road, West Ham Park, E.), is arranging to give clothing and fuel to destitute families, and hopes to provide 600 Christmas dinners for those out of work.

Mr. W. J. Leaper (96, Wandsworth Bridge Road, Fulham, S.W.), who does a great amount of personal visitation among the very poor, would be glad of cast-off clothing for the ill-clad.

Mr. G. C. Hobden (Sutherland Needy Children's Aid Society) appeals for help to give a Christmas treat to 600 poor children and 2,500 free meals to the needy of Camberwell, S.E. Address, 6, St. Bartholomew Chambers, 61, West Smithfield, E.C.

Mr. Walter S. Robbins (Hon. Sec. "Silver Star" Society), writes from 20, Balfour Road, Ilford, E.:—"We are arranging to give Christmas cheer to the poor children attending our various halls, or known to be in want. Gifts of money, food, or clothing (new or left-off), will be gratefully acknowledged."

Rev. David Roe, Queen Victoria Seamen's Rest, Poplar, E., appeals for help to provide a substantial Christmas dinner for 200 homeless sailors. Free meals are also provided every day to starving men who have tramped about the docks all the morning seeking work.

The honorary secretaries of the Homes for the Aged Poor, Misses E. G. and S. A. Harrison (5, Grandacre Terrace, 86, Penge Road, Anerley, S.E.) appeal for funds to supply with coal and extra comforts during the winter months the 171 inmates, whose ages vary from sixty to ninety years, a large proportion being octogenarians.

Mr. W. J. Orsman, of the well-known Costers' Mission, at Hoxton, N., writes: "Just now there is a real need of help, for the winter season is at hand when heavy demands are made upon our purse and energies." It is hoped to supply meals to poor, ill-fed children, besides aid to cripples, sick and aged Christians, &c., in addition to the usual operations.

Canning Town Christian Mission is surrounded by great docks and factories, and the workers come in contact with many dockers' children. Mr. Alex. Smith (hon. supt., 65, Beckton Road, Canning Town, E.) writes:—"Over 500 of these children attend our meetings every week. We are now giving free meals to nearly 200 a week, and are also anxious to help poor parents, and hope likewise to provide a substantial dinner on Christmas Day for the little ones. We invite any friends to see the poor children at the free meals any Wednesday or Friday, 6 to 8 p.m."

Much in the way of relief of distress has already been done by the Ragged School Union and Shaftesbury Society through its voluntary visitors. The local centres for children's breakfasts, penny dinners, cocoa suppers, &c., have been at work, and at this Christmastide all of them will be sending family dinners to the homes of the poor. A great amount of special efforts are put forth at Christmas time. Address, Mr. John Kirk, 32, John Street, Theobald's Road, W.C.

The number of poor people who look to the Waterloo Road Chapel and Royal Victoria Hall Mission for temporal help in times of stress and poverty is growing year by year. Rev. D. J. Rounsefell (9, Kempsford Road, Kennington, S.E.), writes: "We have for several years undertaken to provide a Christmas Dinner for many poor families, and hope to do so this year. On Thursday evenings in our Ragged School 300 or more of the poorest children of this district have a substantial meal."

Mr. E. H. Kerwin (Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E.) writes on behalf of Mr. F. N. Charrington's work: "For twenty-one years we have given to the poor and needy in the back streets and alleys surrounding our great hall materials for providing a Christmas dinner in their own homes. Every case is investigated. All workers give their services gratuitously. Every penny is spent in food. One thousand families were helped last year.

The Evangelistic Mission.

AFTER nearly forty years' work, the Evangelistic Mission still maintains useful and far-reaching operations for taking the Gospel to the masses. During the past season tent meetings have been conducted with much blessing in the winning of souls, despite the adverse weather.

The new hall in the populous district of Wood Green, erected on the spot where the iron building proved utterly inadequate to the requirements, and was literally crumbling to pieces, will be opened on January 1, and £800 is still required towards the cost of its completion.

The work at Bignold Hall in the East of London, including the Medical Mission, calls for more support, particularly at this time of great distress. At Willesden and Malden Halls the friends are encouraged by hearers making the great decision. "It is with gratitude to God that we record His blessing on the work at the above halls. During the summer months the attendances have been good, with growing interest as the friends returned from their holidays. The open-air meetings have been large, and the earnest attention has been remarkable." The village work, too, has been very encouraging.

At this season, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch seeks the co-operation of friends in the many special efforts being put forth in the interests of Gospel work and Christmas relief among the sick and destitute. His address is 164, Alexandra Road, N.W.

Personalia.

Dr. Colin Valentine, finding that his health will not permit of his spending the winter in this country, hopes to proceed immediately to San Remo. He will greatly value the prayers of God's people on his behalf.

Mrs. Tennyson Smith (wife of the well-known Temperance advocate), who has for the past eighteen months been seriously ill, is now sufficiently recovered to be able to again accompany her husband as usual on his lecturing tours.

Miss Mielecka, 48, Waterloo Road, Wellington, Somerset, begs all friends of the Barcelona Protestant Hospital to send their gifts, letters, and stamps direct to the above address. She hopes friends will not forget the little hospital.

Gipsy Smith's recent effective mission at Highbury Quadrant was incorrectly described as the last but one before the evangelist sails for South Africa. The date of sailing will probably be late in March, and prior to that our friend is fixed for missions at Leeds, St. Helen's, Southend, and Bournemouth.

Miss Annie R. Taylor, writing from Yatong, Tibet (viâ Darjeeling, India), on November 18, says: "There is now a most anti-foreign feeling among the people here, especially among the chiefs. They say that if Colonel Younghusband takes soldiers into Tibet they will fight him. Our part is but to watch and pray."

Rev. A. B. and Mrs. Fisher (C.M.S.), of Toro, are staying for awhile in the homeland. The remarkable work at Toro, which has been vividly described in our columns from time to time by Mrs. Fisher (née Ruth Hurditch), was the subject of a brief address by Mr. Fisher at the noon meeting at Aldersgate Street a few days ago. The story of the revival and of the abolition of the shocking "devil worship" roused the interest and enthusiasm of the assembly.

Scriptures for India.—The testimony of missionaries in all parts of India is clear and emphatic as to the need for such distribution of the Scriptures as that undertaken under Lord Radstock's scheme. As was shown in our last issue, the scheme is one in which rich and poor alike may take part. Arrangements are made under which donations may be made to pay for a single Gospel at 2d., or for any number of Bibles at 5s. and Testaments at 1s. each. Many letters have been received expressing the deep gratitude of workers for the generous part taken by our readers in this effort; but the need is still very great, a small part of it only having been met.

Book Fund for Country Ministers and Others.—Rev. G. Coates begs to acknowledge an anonymous parcel of books from Starbeck, Harrogate: also a parcel of "The Power of a Quiet Life," and several other parcels acknowledged direct. Applications are received almost daily, and funds and books are greatly needed. Send to Rev. G. Coates, Western House, Willington, Durham.

Church Notes.

In connection with his Ramsgate Sands services, Mr. Nott has held his 34th annual meeting at Exeter Hall. Mr. A. Garstin presided, and a number of friends spoke and sang. The Gospel testimonies were full of earnestness, and a profitable evening was spent.

Mr. and Mrs. George Kendall, of the People's Mission, Bedford, have taken meetings of late at Luton (in the Central Hall) and other towns, with much encouragement, and are about to undertake a six months' evangelistic tour. They have a few dates still open. Address, 24, Brereton Road, Bedford.

Rev. J. Edward Flower has received from Mr. John Blackham the £100 offered as a challenge if another £400 was raised for the organizing and promotion of Congregational Lay Preaching, and the £500 is now available for this purpose. Mr. Flower is issuing a circular to the County Union Executives seeking their co-operation in the movement.

An estimate to be presented to next Presbyterian Synod will show that the sum of £22,000 would be required to provide a Church House in the City of London for the accommodation of the secretarial offices and the publishing department. No less than £17,000 of this sum would be expended on the site. An upper floor of the building would be let as offices.

Mr. J. H. Millard has resigned the position of Sunday School Superintendent of St. Mary's Church, Reading, on removing to Coggeshall, after thirty-seven years' work. During his tenure of office Mr. Millard paid ten thousand visits to the parents of the church, and was only five times absent through illness. At a farewell meeting Rev. J. Consterdine and other friends spoke hearty words of appreciation.

Wesleyans have learned with sincere regret the news that Mr. John Cooper has intimated to the General Chapel Committee his intention of resigning the general treasurership of the Chapel Fund at the ensuing Conference. The services which Mr. Cooper has rendered to that Fund during the forty-two years he has been a member of the committee, and the twenty years he has held office as one of the general treasurers, are inestimable. For a long period he has acted as chief legal adviser to the Committee without fee.

To meet the distress prevalent in London, the Church Army is again issuing the "Work Food Tickets" which answered so well last winter. Each ticket entitles the bearer to a good meal of soup and bread, on completion of fifteen minntes' wood-chopping. The object of the system is to ensure that help is only given to the really deserving. The tickets are issued to the public at 4s. per 100, and may be presented at Church Army depôts in various parts of London. Women and children holding one of these tickets get a meal free.

At Robertson Street Congregational Church, Hastings, Rev. Charles New recently delivered a protest against the erection, adjoining Christ Church, St. Leonards, of a "Calvary"—a sculptured cross bearing a figure of the Saviour, with two other figures at its feet, which was publicly consecrated by the clergy and the choir, to the accompaniment of incense and holy water. Mr. New described the ceremony as undiluted Popery, and declared that to let such an offence pass without a solemn protest would be wrong.

It is now some six years since Friends at Needham, Market, Suffolk, commenced mission work in the village of Barking, a few miles away. At first the meetings were held in the sitting-room of one of the cottages. As the attendance grew the free use of the old village schoolroom was granted. The interest in the work so increased that these premises became, in turn, unsuitable for the purpose, and it was therefore decided, about fifteen months ago, to purchase a plot of land and erect a mission hall. The opening meeting was a very interesting gathering.

At Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, N.W., on Saturday and Sunday, December 5 and 6, the annual missionary meetings took place and were greatly appreciated. An interesting account of his escape from the Boxers was told by Rev. W. A. Wills, of China, who also testified to the heroism and martyrdom of many Chinese converts. Their self-sacrificing spirit may be gathered from the fact that they intend building a chapel destroyed before they rebuild their own houses. A special collection to help the rebuilding realized over £6, whilst a cheque for £100 was handed over for the Baptist Missionary Society.

At a meeting of the London Primitive Methodist Council, Mr. H. Jeffs urged that they needed in London some bold denominational leadership. They took too parochial and sectarian a view of their circuit and chapel work. They must decide whether their chapels were to be evangelistic centres for the population around them or merely meeting places for handfuls of country Primitive Methodists who had migrated to London. The key to the problem of how to fill the chapels was to make the services generally more attractive and the sermons more interesting.

Ever since 1876 the Dean Close Memorial School at Cheltenham has occupied an important place among institutions existing for the education of the sons of clergymen. Commencing with fourteen pupils, it grew in popularity year by year, and is now the largest Evangelical public school in England, accommodating upwards of 200 boarders, who receive a sound and liberal Scriptural education. Excellent scholastic results have been achieved. For some time the school has been full to overflowing, and extension has become necessary. The school is self-supporting, but no capital for building is reserved. Of the £7,000 required for the additions of the building necessary, £2,500 has been collected, while an anonymous donor has offered £1,000 on condition that the whole amount is raised this year.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. James Goring, a deacon of Clarendon Baptist Chapel, Camberwell New Road, S.W.—Friends at West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, have mourned the loss of Miss Maria Tayler, who fell asleep on Sunday evening, November 22. In her youth she was an earnest worker in the cause of peace, temperance, and many other forms of good work. Later on the villages of Verwood and Three Cross knew her as she laboured for Christ there, and many humble village folk are grieving for the loss of her ever-ready sympathy. Later still she lived at Bournemouth, and interested herself in work among the cabmen, in the missionaries connected with West Cliff Tabernacle, and in many ways of loving service.—At Dalkey, Dublin, Rev. T. T. N. Hull, believed to be the oldest Methodist in the world, in the ninety-eighth year of his age and seventy-eighth of his ministry.

Blindness and Acute Suffering.

An Old Man, 74 years of age, blind through cancer in the eyes, which is now spreading all over the face. In addition to this sad affliction he is also suffering from an internal disease. He and his aged wife are greatly in need of assistance, as apart from the little their married children are able to give them they have nothing at all to depend on except charity. Who will help to make their old age free from anxiety? Surely pain and blindness are terrible enough without poverty.

The National Blind Relief Society.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. Pullein Thompson, The Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.; or at the Office of The Christian.

Notes & Comments

The Dying Year. That was an excellent custom of the Puritans which made of the last day of the year an occasion for a serious review of life. The pace at which we live nowadays leaves too little time for self-examination and a thorough review of the quality of our life. Yet how necessary is such a contemplation! There are two extremes into which people fall—the one, of excessive introspection, which is mischievous because it makes people morbid and unreal; the other, of carelessness, which is even more dangerous, because it benumbs the soul. We need to keep to the mean. Would it not be well for every Christian to put to himself such questions as the following:—What has been the motive of my life and service? What has been its extent and power? Wherein have I chiefly failed? How much have I realized what it means to be a worker together with God? What is my influence for Christ upon my unconverted friends? And such as are not saved might well ask: How shall I escape, if I neglect so great salvation?

"The Thing Nearest Thee." A recent masterly review of a noted scientific work, given in one of our leading journals, terminates by asking whether it would not be an excellent thing if men ceased for a while their speculations about the dim and mysterious past (of which they have no authoritative history) and the infinite depths of space, and turned their attention to their own lives and the lives of their fellow men. An excellent suggestion, indeed; but it really ought to be superfluous to make it. The history of speculation does not commend the method. It is surely not wisdom to lose oneself in imaginings about origins, while the actual facts of existence are ignored. What does it avail a man to speculate upon the origin of evil, if the evil of his own heart remains uncured?

The Practical Thing. Life is too intense, too solemn, too responsible to fritter away in speculations, which are valueless for all practical purposes. The wise thing is not to waste time in asking how evil came to be, but frankly to face the fact that it is here, and that it is evil, and that it is hateful to God and harmful to men, and that it must be expelled. That is the practical thing, and it is the note of the Gospel. Our Lord satisfied no one's curiosity about origins, but He came to "take away the sin of the world;" and His Gospel is not an intellectual solution of problems, but a practical force for the removal of the thing which stands between man and God. Let us attend to that, and let the speculations wait until a more convenient season.

Profession and Belief. Much is being written in regard to the letter from the Bishop of Worcester, which led to the recent resignation of his parish by Rev. C. E. Beeby. The Bishop condemned the now notorious magazine article, as directed against the whole conception of miracles as holding a place in God's revelation of Himself, and against the Virgin birth of our Lord. With Dr. Gore's view that a man cannot, consistently with public honour, hold an official position in virtue of constantly saying, "I believe such and such a proposition to be true," unless he does believe it, thoughtful people will assuredly agree.

Breaking the Fences. We bespeak careful and prayerful attention to the important article by Dr. Guinness Rogers (p. 18), on "Theological Lawlessness." It might equally be called "Clerical or Ministerial Lawlessness." Dr. Rogers has more to say on the responsibility of preachers and teachers to maintain the truth of the Gospel.

"God sent His Son made of a Woman." Meanwhile, we lose no time in uttering the strongest protest we can put into words against the notion that the Virgin birth of the Son of God is not a truth essential to the Gospel of our salvation. The first utterance of the Judge of all, after the Fall, declared that the Seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. Isaiah (vii. 14) prophesied that a virgin should bear a son; Matthew (i. 18-25) quotes the prophecy as fulfilled in Jesus; Luke (i. 26-56) still more fully rehearses the fact, and declares, as Matthew had done, that it was by the power of the Holy Ghost. The affirmation of the Apostle Paul that God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, has no significance if He were born of ordinary human generation. No man born from fallen Adam, nor even an unfallen angel, could have been our Redeemer. The men who preach otherwise falsify the Gospel of God, and are deceived deceivers of souls.

The Gist of the Matter. A clergyman has no right to some special liberty in the contraction of obligation which he has voluntarily accepted. The State grants him certain privileges on distinct conditions. For him to get rid of the conditions by giving them a private interpretation, is to introduce into public life a principle fatal to all mutual confidence.

Poverty and Riches. The new Bishop of Manchester has scarcely reached his diocese before he finds himself face to face with the question of the great dearth of candidates for the ministry, or, as Dr. Knox terms it, "the dearth of clergy." Whether the cause in that diocese, as in others similarly affected, is the absence of "a living wage," or is a deeper and more serious one, may be a matter for conjecture; but many thoughtful men who accept the truism that "the labourer is worthy of his hire," certainly incline to the former view. One of these, in a letter to a leading daily paper, asks for attention to the fact that while the vast majority of benefices in the diocese are thoroughly inadequate—"£90 and less," the Bishop said—"the cost of Liverpool Cathedral will be, roughly speaking, a quarter of a million pounds." The contrast undoubtedly is a painful one, and perhaps it may be taken as justification for the correspondent's expressed doubt as to whether, whilst hundred of ministers are battling with bitter poverty, such an expenditure can be entirely to "the glory of God."

The Aftermath of Mammon. The aftermath of Mammon is strikingly illustrated in the report just issued by the Inspector-General in Companies' Liquidation. The public is familiar enough with the fairy visions which are painted to allure speculators. But we rarely hear of the final result. Now it appears, according to the report we have alluded to, that during the last decade nearly eleven thousand of these companies either went into liquidation or ceased to exist; and during that time the British public lost, through speculation, no less a sum than 380 millions sterling! It is well that we should know this. A generation that is simply mad upon making money, needs a wholesome check of this kind to bring it to its senses. Where the god Mammon reigns, the people have no higher vision. The practical materialism which is involved in money-making, as an end in itself, is a far greater menace to the soul than that professional and intellectual materialism which proclaims itself to-day. The latter can be destroyed by human reason; the former will only yield to the power of the Holy Spirit of God operating a thorough conversion of the soul.

Life in the Potteries. Naturally there is much excitement in North Staffordshire with reference to the crusade of the Vicar of Fenton against drunkenness and immorality in the Potteries area. The painful illegitimacy statistics which Mr. Tyrwhitt has quoted in sermons, certainly point to a terrible condition of things, which would hardly be thought possible outside a huge cosmopolitan city. As is usual, overcrowding is at the root of much of the evil. One of the medical officers has designated some of the houses as plague spots of indecency. In one of them, he states, with only two bedrooms, fourteen persons lived, and at week ends lodgers of both sexes were taken. In another of the same size, two families of eleven persons resided. In the midst of such surroundings, what possibility is there of morality?

The Potteries Children. By an apt coincidence, the Duchess of Sutherland contributes to the January Pall Mall Magazine a paper in which she deals trenchantly with the subject of child life in the Potteries. It is painful reading, but it will strengthen the hands of those who, in the name of Christ, are labouring to bring about a better state of things. Her Grace says that, for the size of the population, the number of weakly, crippled, and starving children is "simply staggering." Coming down one day from the West End of London, she found the gardens at Trentham "full of broken lives." The paralysed, the blind, the lame, the twisted, and the maimed were taking part in a cripples' treat. She adds in reference to the girl-life in the district:—

They go to work directly they leave school, and their health often breaks down from the heavy, unskilled labour which they undertake. They marry at ridiculously early ages. Till within a few days of the birth of a child they work, and they return a week or two afterwards.

Those of the weakly and deformed children who survive become the fathers and mothers of children still more deteriorated, with the curse of an inherited taste for drink and vicious excitement. Yet the air is full of vain boastings of our Imperial destiny.

"Petticoat Pestering." The award of Lord James in regard to the prolonged dispute in respect to the question of lead poisoning in the pottery trades, has gone further in the way of concession than the friends of the workers had anticipated; but, to judge from a recent meeting of employers, he has not gone far enough for those who are interested in the old and dangerous system. The chairman of that meeting took occasion to refer to the new legislation, and the rules for the protection of the workpeople, as due to "petticoat pestering," a phrase which indeed may be taken as a compliment by all those who have had any part in the movement against the notorious preventible waste of health and life in the pottery trade. It has taken half a century of this "petticoat pestering" to build up our present protective legislation, and those who do not understand what horrible conditions have been swept aside, especially in regard to women and children, have only to read the story of the Factory Acts, or such autobiographies as that of "The Old Potter."

The Judge and the Publicans. The following letters have just passed between the Croydon Licensed Victuallers' and Beersellers' Protection Society and Mr. Justice Grantham. They are the outcome of certain remarks made by his lordship recently when trying a case whilst on circuit:—

Croydon Licensed Victuallers' and Beersellers' Protection Society

At a meeting of the above society held on December 17, 1903, the following resolution was unanimously passed: That the members of this society much regret that Mr. Justice Grantham should have again cast vile aspersions upon persons engaged in a lawful and respectable trade. Especially do they consider it bad taste on his part, having regard to the fact that it was through the action of the licensed victuallers of Croydon at the election in 1885 that Mr. Grantham was returned to Parliament, thereby leading the way to his election to the judicial bench.

The following is his lordship's trenchant reply:—

I am extremely sorry to have received such an insulting resolution from a body of men, most of whom, at any rate, at one time were carrying on their business in a respectable manner, many of whom I was glad to know as friends, and many of whom assisted, with the aid of numerous other bodies and individuals, in returning me to Parliament. Now, apparently, all this is changed.

I have lately been brought face to face for weeks with the conduct of publicans in the carrying on of their business, which has resulted in the most heart-breaking crimes that it is possible to imagine—husbands murdering their wives, wives their husbands, fathers their sons, friends their own best friends—all through the maddening influence of excessive drinking. Twelve murders, eighteen attempts at murder, and woundings without number that were just as likely to have ended in murder as far as the conduct of the criminal was concerned, have been mine and my brother judges' daily fare for the last four weeks on one circuit, and in almost every case, as appeared in evidence, drink was the cause—drink served by publicans, and not at clubs, and drink proved to have been served in the public-house where the man was openly drunk. These are the men whose conduct I complained of, and these are the men who the Croydon publicans consider are carrying on a lawful and respectable trade, and on whose behalf they speak of my strictures as being "vile aspersions."

Among sensible people those who assist a trade to eliminate its worst characters are looked upon as its best friends and not its worst enemies. If the trade will not help those who are endeavouring to stop this fearful amount of crime caused by public house drunkenness, its members must not be surprised if measures are introduced which will of necessity affect the good and bad alike.

The Lay Preacher. We are glad to find that the Congregational Union is taking practical steps to carry out the resolution passed at the autumn meetings with regard to Lay Preaching. A circular is being sent out to the executive of the County Unions, calling upon the churches "to seek a great increase, both in the numbers and efficiency, of our lay preachers . . . in order to reach the multitude who are outside of all Christian Churches." This is a move in the right direction. It is certainly only in this way that the work of evangelization can be effectively done in our country.

The Work of the Oppressor. Such a case as that which came to the notice of the Brentford magistrates last week, ought not to be allowed to remain where it is. A respectable woman, with a family of small children, was compelled to seek the assistance of the court, in order to ward off starvation. She stated that during ten years she had worked on an average sixteen hours a day for a large West-End firm, as a trousers finisher, and at the quickest rate of work allowed by experts she could only earn three-farthings per hour. The magistrates regretted they could not publish the name of the firm. We regret it too. Sweaters of this type should be driven from business. The public has a right to know who these people are.

On the Watch-Tower.

"Howbeit when the Son of Man cometh, shall He find the faith on the earth?"—Luke xviii. 8 (R.V.).

By Rev. W. T. TURPIN, M.A., Eastbourne.

THE evening shades of another year are fast falling upon us, and remind us of how rapidly each grain of sand rushes from the hour-glass of time. It is a moment of transcendent joy to the soul when the Lord Jesus, the Bright Morning Star of the heart, is the grand compensation for the declining shadows of our life here. And how true it is, that as we connect the unknown future with Him, we can more easily allow the past with all its chequered hopes and sorrows to pass from before our eyes.

He is, blessed be His name, not only the Bright Morning Star, but as well the Sun of Righteousness. As such He is before us. On His side all is unchanging and abiding, while on our side it is sunset, and everything is shifting, and by degrees yielding up its beauty and freshness.

The year just closing has been one remarkable in almost every department of our national history, and the rapid progress of decline on every side is both astounding and heart-sickening. At the present moment the political world resounds with a perfect Babel of voices, all clamouring to be in the ascendant. How few there are who seem to see that the real secret of the national decadence at the present crisis, lies in its solemn departure from the principles to which England owes its greatness and prosperity. The first dawning of the light was in 1380. In that year Wycliffe published his translation of the Bible, and England entered, the first of the nations in modern times, upon the glorious path of circulating the Scriptures throughout her realm.

Confessors were never wanting to the Gospel from that day in Britain. But the era proper of the Reformation extends from 1516, when Erasmus published his New Testament in England, to 1688, when the ecclesiastical and political constitution of our country was settled on a Protestant basis under William of Orange.

It seems as if the nation and her rulers are very far removed from that wise and prudent mind which would lead them to profit by the experience of our forefathers, and the peril seems to be imminent of making the experiment over again in these our days. The pandering to the power of Rome in this country at the present moment, is simply incomprehensible with such a past.

Then in the ecclesiastical world things are just as bad, if not worse. The National Church is so leavened with the false and anti-Christian doctrines of the Italian mission, that some of her chief rulers are the principal revilers of that Protestantism to which England owes so much; and her ministers and people are so deeply engulfed in the luxurious and ease-loving character of the time, that scarcely a voice is heard in that direction which would indicate any true sense of our national danger. Alas! alas! the cry of the moment is "Peace, peace," where there is no peace.

The Education Act, with all the uproar and consternation it has caused, and the mode of opposition to it which it has produced, is one of the most serious evidences of that national decline which stares us in the face, as the year hastens to its close. And what are we to say to the scheme to establish and endow a Roman Catholic University in Ireland? Is it not another solemn proof of our national downgrade? And does it not point to a very manifest desire on the part of our rulers to pander to the clamour and aspirations of Romanism in this country, and to bind more closely on the Irish people the chains of a cruel, degrading, and tyrannical superstition? Verily England is at present under the shadow of an ominous darkness, which, if God in His infinite grace and mercy does not disperse, has the appearance of a setting sun.

The present moment in our national history bears a striking likeness to two past years, viz., 1806 and 1829. In the former year the Ministry were, as we know, pledged to introduce Popery into the Legislature. National disgrace and disaster marked this short-lived Administration. In 1829 the Catholic Emancipation Act was passed, and was followed by two years of unexampled depression in every department of the great interests of the empire. God grant that the present tendency towards Romanism, and its twin sister Ritualism, may be in His grace arrested. Otherwise, what can we expect but the inevitable consequence of those former years? The inflow of the religious orders, banished from France, not because of their religion, but in consequence of their obnoxious influence so hostile to all good government and order, is a very serious menace to the peace and well-being of this country.

Finally, the passage of Holy Scripture which heads this paper, suggests the most solemn decline of all, viz., the amazing and rapid spread of departure from the faith. The truth as to the Incarnate Word, the Written Word, as well as the personality and divinity of the Holy Ghost, is alas! being surrendered on every side. This leaven of evil doctrine is working in the National Church, and also in the so-called Free Churches of our land, so much so that soundness in the faith will soon become a description of days that are passed. The outlook is depressing, but the uplook of faith steadies and consoles the heart that is true to Christ, brightening before it the blessed prospect of His near return, and His own words sound out distinctly through the confusion and strife of the moment—"Behold I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown" (Rev. iii. 11).

Irish Coastguards.—There is ample opportunity for earnest servants of God to join with others in seeking to spread His kingdom among the coastguards of Ireland, by corresponding with them at intervals, and supplying them with small packets of Gospel papers monthly. Many of the men are stationed in remote parts of the country, far distant from any place of worship. Friends willing to kindly help in this direction should communicate (stating the number they can take) with Mr. William A. Garratt, Glenvar, Blackrock, co. Dublin.

The Passing Year.

As another year hastens to its close, we would lift our hearts to God, who, in a thousand ways, has crowned it with His goodness. Like its predecessor, it has known stress and strain, sorrow and suffering; and in some directions there have been "wars and rumours of wars, men's hearts failing them for fear." But to multitudes, in all lands, the God of all grace has given rest, and the indwelling Christ has ministered comfort, so that the soul has been enabled to rise above the depression of circumstances, and to realize peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.

Blessed be God, the year has been a year of grace in another way; the Master hath not yet shut to the door, but it is still a timely truth that "Christ receiveth sinful men." Hence, while believers have been "comforted with the comfort of God," those who are without have had proclaimed in their ears, whether they will hear or whether they will forbear, the glorious Gospel of the Blessed God. And from reports that have come to hand week by week, we have rejoiced to find that many have left the ways of worldly idolatry, "to serve the living and true God."

Political Events.

In the political sphere the year has been one of rapid movement. The question of Venezuela, which was to the fore twelve months ago, is now out of mind. South Africa knows peace once again, but the wounds of the war are not yet healed. Apparently it will take years to settle things on the basis of an assured contentment. God hasten the day! The eyes of Europe have been turned upon the Macedonian frontier of Turkey, where once more the Sultan and his hordes have been washing their hands in Christian blood. The action, or rather inaction, of the Powers, has pained many; and, so far, little seems to have been done to stay the oppressor's hand. Meantime, God's people are praying, and doing their utmost to bring the civilized Governments of Europe to a sense of their urgent duty in the distressful circumstances.

In the Far East, the war-cloud has been balancing during recent weeks. Japan distrusts Russia, and, maybe, not without reason. The immediate dispute has arisen on the relative influence of the contending Powers in Korea; and at the moment there seems no sign of an adjustment of the differences. Neither country can afford war; and it is doubtful whether a pitched battle would decide the issue. May God grant wisdom to those in authority, so that a modus vivendi may be found! Another foreign transaction of peculiar importance has brought Tibet, "the roof of the world," before the public. Britain has sent an expedition from India to the Tibetan capital, Lhassa, to arrange a commercial treaty. May this lead to the Great Closed Land being opened to the Gospel as well as to trade! For many years, as our readers will remember, workers have been waiting on the borders of "the Forbidden Land," ready to enter with the message of salvation.

At home, two subjects have almost monopolized public attention. The Education question was received from the previous year; and the end is not yet. The struggle has been severe and pitiful, and there seems to be no hope of compromise. Meantime, Church and Dissent are opposed in a painful conflict, and thoughtful observers are prophesying that the inevitable result will be that which has been experienced in other lands—the exclusion of the Bible from the elementary schools. This would be a manifest wrong to the youth of our land. Therefore we do well to pray that God will intervene, giving a spirit of wisdom and knowledge, that His Word may have a larger, rather than a smaller, place in the education of the young.

The other question, passing under the name of Fiscal Reform, has caused a distinct cleavage in the ranks of the great political parties. It would seem as if we shall not hear the last of it for a long time to come. A year ago such a controversy was undreamed of. Now in every corner of the land it is being debated; and in the colonies and in foreign countries the position is being reviewed, and public utterances are criticised. With issues impending that are so far-reaching, we should seek from heaven the blessing which God promised to Israel by the mouth of Isaiah: "I will make thine officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness."

Social Affairs.

We have to thank God for social mercies. He has favoured the King with health, and quite recently our beloved Queen was, as by a miracle, delivered from death by fire. When we pray "God save the King," let us also be thankful for the many blessings that we have received in the past by way of answer to such heart-petitions. During the year their Majesties have been remarkably active, first in travelling, and then in entertaining distinguished guests. Their visit to Ireland in July and August will be long remembered. Not only in the capital, but in the northern, southern, and western provinces they were greeted with great loyalty of feeling by all classes. Earlier in the year the King visited Portugal, Italy, and France; and, later, he went to Austria. Though complimentary on the surface, these journeys had all the importance of State transactions, and we cannot but believe that they will prove influential for good along several lines, especially in the maintenance of European peace.

Last year we recalled with interest the visit of the Kaiser to our shores. This year the President of the French Republic and the King of Italy have both been guests of King Edward. These incidents in the lives of rulers cannot but serve important political ends. Bonds of respect, if not of affection, are forged, and in the sphere of international relations these may weigh when other considerations fail of satisfaction. May we not also hope that foreign missions will be assisted by such amenities?

Religious Movements.

An event in the religious world has been the Daily News census of Church attendance. As the results, first for London and then for the suburbs, have appeared week by week, they have been scanned with much interest by Christian workers of all sections of the Church of Christ. The figures have caused heart-searchings in all directions, and many have been humbled in the sight of God by reason of the indifference of the population to the claims of Christ. All the same, preachers and teachers have laboured on, spending and being spent; and the volume of labour week by week is as truly wonderful as the prevalent disregard on the part of those who live for self, and shut their ears and hearts to the Gospel, is deeply to be deplored.

In the field of evangelization the year has been, on the whole, one of rich harvest. Readers will have noted with thankfulness the blessing which has attended the meetings of our American brethren, Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, recalling in crowds and spiritual results the great days of D. L. Moody and his surviving yoke-fellow, our honoured friend, Ira D. Sankey. In addition to these, such well-known missioners as Canon Aitken, W. R. Lane, John McNeill, Gipsy Smith, Josiah Nix, and a host of others—equally consecrated if not so much before the public view—have been privileged to hear, in many Gospel campaigns, the pleadings of the penitent soul, and the fresh, fervent testimonies of troops of new converts. Two developments may be specially noted: the clear-cut witness of evangelists against social sins; and, more particularly, the midnight meetings, through which, it is not too much to say, thousands of drunkards and other notorious characters have been gathered under the sound of the Gospel and pointed to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Such vigorous efforts in evangelism have brought a twofold blessing; while the sinful have been guided into the paths of salvation and service, God's people have found fresh inspiration while engaged in the hallowed work of soul-winning. Nor should recognition fail of missions held, not amid dense populations, but in villages and solitary places. There, too, despite the familiar difficulty that "everybody knows everybody else," not a few have broken through the barriers made of fears and conventionalities, and have realized the consolations of true religion.

During the year the cause of Gospel Temperance has been greatly strengthened by the missions of Dr. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones. Particularly among the masses in the great cities of the north of England, as well as in Scotland and the Sister Isle, the eloquence of Dr. Henry and his cogent arguments have led to a widespread awakening. New interest has been kindled, new enthusiasm has sprung into life, and from all sides come tributes of esteem and affection for these devoted workers. Dr. Henry has set the temperance problem in a new light, and lifted it to a higher level, as he has contended in the name of righteousness, and vividly pourtrayed the conflict between the two great opposing forces: the Church and the drink-shop. Men's hearts have been stirred by the clarion call:—"Let us begin in the Church; let us banish the intoxicating cup from the Lord's Table, teach our children the truth regarding this great evil, and thus help to liberate the Church of Christ from all complicity with the trade in strong drink." Such missions as those of Middlesbrough, Sunderland, and Dundee will long be remembered with gratitude.

"Change and Decay."

The hand of death has taken from our side many who were active in Christian work and a stay to the State. A year ago we were mourning the loss of Joseph Parker and Hugh Price Hughes. These have been followed by Deans Farrar and Howell, men whose fame lay along divergent lines, but whose testimony was no less powerful than distinctive; by Messrs. Quintin Hogg and W. S. Caine, whose philanthropy was as essentially Christian as it was above sectarian limitations and prejudices; by Dr. Langham, the Apostle of Fiji, and Hugh Macmillan, the interpreter of Nature's parables as they illustrate Divine Revelation. Sir George Stokes, the Christian scientist, is no longer with us; nor Dr. Weymouth, the accomplished educationalist and New Testament scholar.

A wider survey of the changes wrought by "Time's effacing finger," brings in the name of the third Marquis of Salisbury, who was three times Prime Minister and four times Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. Just a year ago Archbishop Temple was gathered in; and in July Pope Leo XIII. ended his course. More recently Mr. W. E. H. Lecky, historian and philosopher, and Mr. Herbert Spencer, a master exponent of agnosticism, have been called away. Men of thought, as well as men of action—all pass on, and their places are filled by those who remain. Among the women whose departure many have mourned, may be mentioned Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon and Mrs. Booth Tucker.

Among those who are resting somewhat from the activities of life are: Mr. Ira D. Sankey, the celebrated Gospel singer; and Dr. Maclaren, that prince of preachers, who, after a pastorate extending over forty-five years, lately resigned his charge at Union Chapel, Manchester. If some are putting off the harness, others are putting it on—relatively, if not in an absolute manner. Dr. Randall Davidson, after serving for seven years as Bishop of Winchester, was called to the Archbishopric of Canterbury; the new minister of the City Temple is Rev. R. J. Campbell, formerly of Brighton; and Rev. C. Silvester Horne, of Kensington, has thrown himself heart and soul into a new mission enterprise, having its home and centre at the Whitefield's Memorial, Tottenham Court Road. Rev. C. Ensor Walters has undertaken the superintendence of the West London Mission; and Mr. Quintin Hogg's place at the Polytechnic is filled by Mr. J. E. K. Studd, whose work in that important institution has for many years been the admiration of all who have followed it. Finally, the year has witnessed the election of a new Pope at the Vatican, Cardinal Sarto, patriarch of Venice, who has taken the title of Pius X.

Travel-Stains.

(A MEDITATION FOR THE OLD YEAR AND THE NEW.)

(John xiii. 10.)

By Rev. E. GRIFFITH-JONES, B.A., Balham.

THE "feet-washing scene" is pregnant with many suggestions; but here we will limit ourselves to one or two which are full of significance and comfort as well as warning.

(1) The point of this verse lies in a contrast which the Revised Version has recovered for English readers after being obscured for 300 years by the Authorized Version. I refer to the words bathe and wash. The idea is of a traveller who has taken his morning bath in some wayside pool or running stream, and has started on his day's journey clean in body and refreshed in spirit; or, with possibly greater accuracy, that of a wedding guest who has performed all his sanitary and ceremonial ablutions, and reached the marriage-feast after a short walk through the dusty street. On his arrival, he is courteously accommodated with a laver and towel in which his bare feet are washed free from the dust that has accumulated on them, and enters the audience chamber "clean every whit." He does not need a second bath; but after even a short journey, he has need to cleanse himself of the "travel-stains" which he cannot help contracting on his way.

And this is a happy parable of the heavenly journey through life. Those "who are Christ's" have received their great cleansing in the one supreme act of self-surrender and of faith in His Blood, which is to them "Sanctification and Redemption." There is but one such cleansing needful for the believer, and it is always spoken of in the New Testament as a single act and not a continuing process (cf. 1 Cor. vi. 11; Titus iii. 3-7, and parallel passages). In other words, we do not need to enter the gate of the Kingdom more than once. Having received the Spirit of promise, and accepted the offered redemption, we are His for ever, who has "redeemed us" with His "precious blood" (1 Pet. i. 19), and has "sealed us, and given us the earnest of the Spirit in our heart" (2 Cor. i. 22).

This is a fact that many Christian people would do well to remember; for conscious of much failure and imperfection, and realizing how often they seem to fall back in the effort to attain a higher level of life and character, they are prone to doubt their condition, and to wonder whether, after all, they are Christians in any true sense. We are to remember that what gives us a place in the Kingdom is not our merits or attainments, but the free forgiving grace of God in His Son, and that His blood "cleanseth us from all sin." Nor is entrance into the Kingdom a guarantee of immediate perfection. But it is a guarantee that we are His, imperfect and slow of heart though we be, and that being His, nothing shall be able to separate us from His love, not even our own imperfections and lapses and manifold failures. Conscious and deliberate and persistent unfaithfulness alone can "undo what once was done" for us in the act of self-surrender which made us Christ's. "He that is bathed needeth not save —."

Once that is clear, we are in a position to enter on the meaning of this verse in its second clause. Though the great act of cleansing is for ever, yet are we not freed from the need of a perpetual watching and solicitude as to our spiritual condition. What settles our entrance into the circle of the redeemed is the free grace of God: but what settles our place in that circle is our earnest effort to live a pure, holy, active, and untainted life in His love. We live in a wayward and evil world. We are in constant touch with its contaminating influences. Its hands are ever upon us, drawing, seducing, hindering. There is thus no pilgrim to the celestial city who does not need to watch his own ways, and even if his heart is sound he will have need to cleanse his feet from the travel-stains of the world. "He that is bathed needeth not save to wash his feet."

(2) Looking back on another year's journey in our heavenly pilgrimage, do we not all realize the truth of this? We started it, let us hope, with many solicitous self-questionings, and many a good resolution to live nearer to the centre and to do the will of God more worthily. And then once more we took our place in the world, and strove to realize our vows in practice. Have we been able to attain our ideal? Have we passed through this year without a trace of contamination? Are we proof against every seduction, and thoroughly case-hardened against the impact of "the evil that is in the world"? Can we say that the journey day by day through the dusty or miry highways of life has been free of all stain?

One man is in business, and this leads him into contact with people of every grade of religious or irreligious character. He has to maintain a standard of purity and honour, of fair dealing and integrity, against rivals who have no moral scruples, and in a market where as there are sellers and buyers. Is it easy for him to pursue a high and undeviating course of conduct where there is so much temptation to lower his flag in order to secure "business," without which he must "go to the wall"?

Not a day passes with many a business man during which he is not tempted a score of times to deviate from the perfectly straight line, either himself or through his subordinates (and every trader must bear in mind that he is morally responsible for all that his employees do in his name and with his tacit approval).

And, with certain differences, all callings are alike in this matter. The man of high honour has to maintain himself at a disadvantage against unscrupulous and grasping rivals, and it will not be an easy thing to avoid a certain tendency to fight his battle on their level, since they will never think of coming up to his. It needs courage of no ordinary kind, and an unconquerable faithfulness to principle, to pursue an undeviating course of honourable dealing without at least some minor accommodation of one's ways to those of others. Were it not for yielding to this temptation, there would not be so much cheap sneering on the part of the world at the inconsistency and hypocrisy of Christian people.

Or, take one whose sphere and function is the home. The temptations here are of a very different order; none the less are they real and hard to resist at all points. The peril of the home is in the direction of faults of temper, and that easy selfishness which forgets the claims of those outside for help and consideration. Fretfulness, idleness, loss of self-possession, absorption in one's own affairs —how hard it is to avoid these pitfalls!

Or, let us take the case of young men and women who go into business, and carry with them the high ideals and pure atmosphere of a Christian home. They have never as yet been in actual contact with the worldly, the vicious, the openly irreligious. Is it easy for tender minds and uncontaminated souls to meet the coarse laugh and ribald scoff that awaits them in most places of business? The shock is always hard to bear; and even when the first onset has been resisted, perpetual contact with open and boastful immorality, with cold and calculating selfishness, with the spirit of worldly pleasure and self-seeking, is most difficult to resist successfully. Generally some effect is produced, even though no overt act is committed of surrender to temptation, the mind loses its bloom of innocence, the heart its strong repulsion against wrong; and unless the soul is perpetually cleansed of the contaminating influence, it will ultimately sink in, and then work out all kinds of hidden mischief.

All of us have to pass through this perpetual test and trial of our faith. The books we read, the company we keep, the influence of the social atmosphere which we breathe—all these things bear upon us with a pressure and an influence which can be resisted only by constant renewals and cleansings. The "inner man," which is the holy place in which the Spirit of God dwells in us, can only be kept fit for His constant presence by a watchful care over the outer courts, in which we meet with the spirit of this world, and where many a careless foot leaves its defilement.

(3) "Except I wash thee, thou hast no part with Me." The great Soul-cleanser is also the One who alone can keep us "clean every whit." Only by unbroken friendship with Him, and entire surrender to His gracious and healing power, can we avoid the process of slow deterioration which affects the spiritual condition of so many of us. We fall into a lower plane of living chiefly because we think we can take care of ourselves, and imagine ourselves immune from the contagious and defilements of the world. The trouble is that apart from a constant re-adjustment, the very standards against which we measure ourselves are affected, and we imagine ourselves to be growing in grace when in reality we are steadily degenerating. Now and again, however, we come into touch with choice and saintly souls who seem above and beyond all contamination, who carry the freshness and glow of their early faith into the snows of old age, and whose purity, disinterestedness and consecration continue to become ever more conspicuous and undimmed. And if we come closer to these souls, we shall find that they live in an unbroken fellowship with their unseen Lord, whose cleansing hand is ever upon them, and whose influence ever plays on them like a heavenly bath of light.

During the coming year, let us see to it that we cultivate this Divine fellowship, and remember the condition laid down here, that we have no part in it if we fail to maintain a a childlike willingness to submit to our Master's purifying touch, which is also the hall-mark of His saving power. So, while still in the world, we shall be preserved from the evil of it, and be at last "set before the presence of His glory without blemish in exceeding joy."

The Second Coming.—A number of special meetings on this subject are arranged for the beginning of the year. Prayer meetings will be held on Wednesdays, January 6 and 13, at Morley Hall, 21, George Street, Hanover Square, eight p.m.; speakers, Dr. McKilliam and Mr. J. H. Lowe. On Wednesday, January 20, there will be a conference in the same hall, meetings at eleven, three, and seven; speakers, Sir Robert Anderson, K.C.B., Rev. J. J. Luce, Dr. McKilliam, Rev. S. Wilkinson, and Mr. J. H. Lowe. A course of five Bible lectures are to be delivered by Dr. McKilliam on the Sunday afternoons in January at Portman Rooms, Baker Street, W. (entrance by Dorset Street). Particulars, &c., from A. R. H., 27, Devonshire Street, Portland Place, W.

The Farewell of 1903.

"A CONVENIENT SEASON."

FOR those who can afford to pay for it, life can be got through with wonderfully little effort or inconvenience. What with accelerated train speed, motoring, telephone, telegraph, typing, and the hundred and one inventions to lessen labour, it sometimes seems as if there would not be much left for man to do, beyond using his brains. Inconvenience and difficulty are words not to be found in the gilded vocabulary of to-day. Ease, affluence, and convenience are sought by the many.

An inconvenient religion, i.e. one that costs, one that is not easily lived, is what the twentieth century man and woman shuns. A convenient religion is what they seek, and if they cannot find this they will go without any. They make no secret of the fact, it is quite patent, they simply ignore anything in the shape of a religion—be it creed or practice—which is inconvenient and disturbing to their way of thinking, living, working, loving. They leave Eternity to—so to speak—take care of itself; but as for them, they care not how they will fare. The most popular creed of to-day will naturally be the one whose followers will suffer least inconvenience to their carnal desires, thoughts, and ways; but that does not prove it to be a Divine creed.

SINNING CONVENIENTLY.

Even in the matter of sinning, men like to do it conveniently, for we read of Judas, "He sought how he might conveniently betray Him" (Mark xiv. 11). The Devil will always see to it that we shall find no difficulty in sinning; the temptation will, as it were, be always at hand. It has been truly said, "The Devil leads a man down a winding staircase, he does not let him see the next step. "It is always an easy thing to go down," anyone can do it. But it is when we begin to go upward that the inconvenience comes in, for as in Bunyan's time, so to-day, "the narrow way lay right up the hill, and the name of the going up the side of the hill is called Difficulty."

Yes, the enemy of souls will never be long in showing men and women a way by which they may "conveniently" betray their Lord. Even in the days of Felix there was the same disinclination to follow the teaching of One whose precepts would ruthlessly upset the existing arrangements and associations. The words of Felix, "When I have a convenient season I will call for thee," were what we would call to-day an undisguised "snub." They meant, in other words, "You need not trouble yourself any further about me; when I have more leisure I will send for you."

THREE REASONS FOR REPENTANCE.

Many a man thinks that a death-bed is the only "convenient season" to honestly face the great question of preparing to meet his God; but the word of the Lord rings through all ages, "Now is the . . . time" (2 Cor. vi. 2). And of all times, surely the close of a year is a "convenient season" to look on the past and turn to seek the Lord. It is "convenient" not only because it is suitable, but because it will never be so easy as it is to-day. And why? For three reasons. Because (1) your guilt is growing greater; (2) your heart is growing harder; (3) your time is growing shorter.

If you wait till next year, your guilt will be greater, your heart will without doubt be harder, and not even you, yourself, can deny that your time will be shorter. In another sense, a turning from sin is never easy, and if in that way you seek a "convenient season" it will never come. If Jesus Christ had waited for a convenient time—in the sense of its being easy—to go to Calvary He would never have reached the Cross, for so truly as "no way has ever been found to make heroism EASY," as truly has no way ever yet been found to make the path of the Cross easy, in the sense in which we use the word.

Many hold the creed of Mr. By-ends, in Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," which was "(1), we never strive AGAINST wind and tide, (2) we are always most zealous when religion goes in his silver slippers; we love much to walk with him in the street, if the SUN SHINES and the people applaud him." As this man despised Christian and Hopeful in not agreeing with him, so will all such as hold his beliefs despise those whose religion is allied with inconvenience, difficulty, and disadvantage. Paul was not in the enjoyment of a "convenient" religion when he said, "I have suffered the loss of all things," when his environment was "stripes, imprisonments, tumults," &c. To the life which will often be "against wind and tide," Jesus Christ calls us, at the threshold of a New Year. May we not cross it until we willingly choose to follow Him who alone is worthy of our hearts' best devotion.

H. E. GARRATT.

A Memorable New Year Eve.

IT was the first New Year's Eve spent by Rev. H. Shaw in the large town in which he had recently taken charge of a new and most important mission. He had an impression, which he soon found to be a mistaken one, that there was no opening for any service for the people on that special night, and so was anticipating settling down to the rare treat of an evening of home leisure and social enjoyment, when he was summoned to attend to one of his many callers.

It was a little careworn, pock-marked man, well-known to him already by his regular attendance at the mission service, and by unmistakable signs of quiet devotion to the Divine Master; but bearing, as the missioner had heard from sympathizing mates, a most cruel burden in the drunken habits of his wife. He lifted a white, scared face as Mr. Shaw entered the room, and burst forth impetuously:—

"Oh, sir, can you help me? I think you know my trouble, and its getting too much for me; she's been awful to-day, and I'm about at my wits'-end. I've been praying and praying, and all of a sudden it came to me that, perhaps, you could do something, if you'd be good enough to come along."

The despairing look of the poor fellow went to the minister's heart. "What can be done?" he said, "are you thinking of getting her away to some Home?"

"It's no use thinking of that," was the despondent reply. "We have two lads, eight and ten years old, and, bad as their poor mother is, they do cling to her most wonderful. I did put her outside the yard gate one night, thinking it might sober her a bit, and when it got near bed-time the boys were missing, and they had taken some food out of the pantry and climbed over the wall, and set fire to an old basket to warm her, and were feeding her as if she were a baby! No, we'll have to keep her at home for their sakes, poor little chaps; and ah, sir," with a break in his voice, "she'd be a

"GOOD WOMAN IF IT WEREN'T FOR DRINK."

"Just wait a moment and I will go with you," the minister said; and in a very short time, with a face as bright as if he were setting it towards an evening's entertainment, he was keeping pace with the eager steps of the little man, who explained, as he hurried along, "I asked her to look after the shop till I came back, but I'm so afraid she'll be giving me the slip!"

She had not done so, however, but it was not a festive scene that greeted them. The room into which they entered, about ten feet square, was shop, warehouse, and living-room, all in one, the window darkened with a display of the ordinary wares of such an establishment—sweets, tobacco, gingerbread, cotton-reels, &c.—the atmosphere reeking with the mingled odours of red herrings and tripe, which were also articles of sale; whilst beside a small fire at the end of the room the two boys crouched, watching uneasily the movements of their mother as she tottered about, with uncertain step, to attend to an occasional customer. As her husband and Mr. Shaw entered, she turned a startled glance on them, and the minister noted the wreck of a once comely woman, with possibilities of a blessing even yet, could she be rescued from the spell of the drink demon; and all his will-power and all his faith rose up in protest against the fatal grip of the "strong man armed," and in the determination that by God's grace another chance should be given her of escape from this terrible thraldom. I heard him tell the history of that evening, and I wish I could reproduce here the graphic account told with sparkling eyes and many a bit of humorous description of their joint efforts to keep the poor woman indoors that night. Every art of invention and adaptation that, sanctified by Divine grace, has since made Mr. Shaw such a brilliantly successful missioner, was brought into play. The boys quickly caught the cue, and proved valuable allies; and the poor husband, trembling with excitement, did his best to second the announced purpose of their guest, "to have a right down pleasant evening."

So they made coffee and drank it, engaging Mrs. Clarke's reluctant services in the strange carousal. Then they played games and called upon her to watch them, and the motherly instinct thus awakened, a gleam of pleasure brightened her face to see her boys for once having a bit of enjoyment brought into their grim lives. Never was clock watched more eagerly, nor the flight of time more gravely doubted, as the hours passed that were to bring victory or defeat.

But there was no word of appeal to her, no breath of suggestion that all this excitement was a counterfoil to the Devil's tactics. At times her restlessness was distressing, but a spell seemed upon her, and their fears that she would make a determined effort at flight proved unnecessary. Music had evidently a soothing influence on her, and many a bright Sunday-school hymn was taught to the boys, their clear young voices mingling with the tired notes of the missioner, as he sat there in the sweltering atmosphere wondering if he could hold out till eleven!

But he did, and as no more drink could be bought that night, he sprang to his feet and grasped Mrs. Clarke by the hand.

"Has it not been a jolly evening?" he said; "thank you so much, and now I must be going, only we will have prayers first, and then, Mrs. Clarke, I want you to sign the pledge."

She was almost sober by this time, and strangely subdued, and a glimpse of his self-sacrificing purpose in the evening's entertainment broke over her confused senses.

"I'd do that and more for you, sir," she said, "only the pledge had better come first, and then you'll

"PRAY THAT I MAY BE HELPED TO KEEP IT."

God is not unmindful of such works of faith, and He did help that poor captive to struggle against her bonds and become free. On the next New Year's Eve Mr. Shaw had a bright gathering of workers and converts in another part of the city; but before the meeting commenced he found time to go by tram to look in upon the home where he had spent those eventful hours twelve months before, and to gladden his spirit by the wonderful change in its whole aspect, now that the mistress of the house was clothed and in her right mind. And when, later in the evening, he was speaking to the people of what the grace of Christ can do in making dark homes bright and blessed, he told this incident, carefully suppressing names, and feeling sure that no one present would have any clue to identify them. But, as he shook hands with the people as they passed out, he saw, to his dismay, the pock-marked visage of John Clarke. "I had no idea you were here," he said, in confusion, "or I certainly should not have told that story." But John beamed upon him. "It's all right, sir. Thank you kindly. I came in late, but I was just in time for it, and I would not have minded if you'd given name and address as well, for my wife's a new woman, and no mistake, and I'm that proud of her that I'd be glad for all the world to know." "Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, January 3. Isaiah xxix.

THERE was a strong party in Jerusalem (1-3), which favoured an Egyptian alliance as the only hope of being able to withstand the power of Assyria, which was now governed by Sennacherib. To arouse his people to their danger, and warn them against reliance on creature-help, the prophet uttered the striking prophecy of this chapter. Ariel may mean either the Lion of God (2 Sam. xxiii. 20), or the Hearth of God (Ezek. xliii. 15, 16). In a year from the time of speaking, Jerusalem, now so careless, would become full of lamentation and mourning, because her besiegers would come at Jehovah's instigation and would execute His verdict.

4-8. Jerusalem would be reduced to the very dust, when suddenly the besieging force would disappear. At the very hour when it seemed likely that the city would fall into their hands, it would escape them, and they would be as the hungry dreamer, who dreams of a rich banquet, but awakes to realise that it was but an unsubstantial fancy.

9-12. This prediction fell on Jerusalem like a thunderbolt. The people were like men suddenly startled from their sleep, too dazed to understand a missive thrust into their hands.

13-24. A lifeless religion had demoralized the people. Their conscience was steeped in lethargy, and they were lulled in false security; therefore God would break in upon them with startling suddenness, or turn all things upside down—so much so, that it would be as though the surface of the earth were altered, a Lebanon turned into garden-land. Then the proud oppressor of the poor would be abashed, whilst he humble and meek should shout for joy.

MONDAY, January 4. Isaiah xxx.

1-8. Isaiah's words, recorded in the previous chapter, seem to have stirred up Hezekiah's advisers to do something, yet they only flung themselves with more haste into their negotiations for an Egyptian alliance. But the prophet set himself in this and the next chapter in stedfast opposition to their proposals. He pictures the useless caravan sent with tribute to Egypt, its asses and camels struggling through the desert to no profit (6). He called her "Egypt that sitteth still," being sure that she would not stir to their help.

9-11. This Egyptian policy was rooted in rebellion against God. The people were wanting in truth, reverence, and obedience, and these had culminated in this senseless and suicidal alliance. It was befitting, said the prophet, that a nation which demanded fair speeches of its religious guides, should be betrayed by Egypt that blustered and sat still.

12-14. They had refused God's voice in guidance, now they must listen to it in judgment. The iniquity of linking themselves with Egypt would be as a bulging wall, which topples to the ground, overwhelming those who shelter beneath. The fancied buttresses of false alliances and mistaken policy, would prove a weakness rather than strength, and of all their fabric there would not be left more than a sherd of pottery.

15-18. The politicians demanded an alternative policy to that which Isaiah condemned, and he gave it them in two words, Returning and Rest. "Call back your embassy," he cried, "and trust God." Is not this the advice which many of us need, who run to and fro for help, instead of looking up and awaiting the indications of God's plan.

19-26. An exquisite description! The siege would surely come, but the Lord would be in the midst. Space, light, and food, would be freely granted to the besieged; and presently the enemy should melt away, and the people be set free to pursue the toils of husbandry. To besieged and suffering saints, God sends clear shining after rain. But the Divine judgments alight on the ruthless persecutors of those who make God their refuge (27-33).

TUESDAY, January 5. Isaiah xxxi.

In this chapter Isaiah continues his protest against the alliance with Egypt, which the politicians of that day advocated.

1-3. They thought themselves clever and successful, but they had forgotten that God also was wise—that He, too, had a policy, and acted reasonably and consistently. Do we sufficiently realize that God has a policy, and that all the wisdom in selecting a path is certainly not with us. When Heine, Germany's great satirist, lay upon his deathbed, to which his evil living had brought him, "Alas!" he cried, "the great Author of the universe wished to show me how my most trenchant satires are only clumsy patchwork with His." It is well said that by these words he wrote in his heart's blood his corroboration of Isaiah's affirmation, "He also is wise."

4. Here is a startling figure. A lion has a lamb in his claws, while a crowd of shepherds, afraid to kill him, are trying to frighten him away by their shouts. But he will not let go his prey. So, says the prophet, God will never let go His hold on men. He will have His way, whatever the shepherds may do or say to the contrary. When God has chosen His policy, He will go through with it, though the heavens fall.

5-9. Sennacherib was descending on Jerusalem as a hawk from the sky. But as under such circumstances the anxious mother-bird hovers over her nest, so would God spread His covering wing over the city that He loved. Do you feel weak and defenceless? Remember that Christ waits to gather you near His heart, as the hen gathers her brood under her wings. Surely such thoughts of God should lead us to cast away our idols. The Assyrian shall pass away as a dream of the night because God's watch-fires burn around Jerusalem. Oh to live within that girdle of flame!

WEDNESDAY, January 6. Isaiah xxxii.

1, 2. Having finished his prophecies about the Assyrian, Isaiah now presents a vision of the future, giving us a picture of a new society. The government shall be just! The King shall be righteous! The central figure would be A MAN. Who is this but the Son of Man? In the East a rock will often stay the drift of the sand, so that on the leeward side there may be a garden—shadowed and sheltered; and our Lord is just that. He has stood against the drift of the ages, and those that shelter in Him are safe-guarded. Ah, it is good to be on the leeward side of Christ, and to know that the storms of sand-grit and the sultry heat have expended themselves on Him, never to touch us.

3-8. The influence of Christ is a beam of absolute truth, which discriminates the false from the true, the evil from the good, which sweeps away conventional lies, and makes men's characters stand out for what they are. In His kingdom, the vile, i.e., the man who has run through his health and fortune, shall no longer be accounted and flattered as large-hearted and generous, but shall be known in his true colours.

9-14. In a former chapter, Isaiah had accused women of vanity and haughtiness; now he charges them with thoughtlessness, and easy contentment of things as they are. Oh that women would live up to their loftiest ideals, then they would raise the tone of society! But when they relax their high standards, the community is in danger of the fate that overwhelmed Jerusalem (13, 14).

15-20. When the Holy Spirit is poured out, there shall be fertility and purity; and on these shall be built the quiet resting-places and the regular labours of the future. Hailstorms may burst, but where the Holy Spirit is we are made righteous, and righteousness leads to peace, and peace enables us to pursue the sowing beside all waters, and the reaping of harvests of revival.

THURSDAY, January 7. Isaiah xxxiii.

This is the psalm of Sennacherib's overthrow. We can hear the scream of the cypress trees and cedars of Lebanon cut down to make a roadway for his army (9). The people have left homes and lands to flee to the nearest places of secrecy and refuge (8). The ambassadors, sent by Hezekiah to arrest the onward march, fail in the attempt (7). The priests in the Temple plead for help and deliverance (2). It seems as though there is no help for the doomed city, on which 200,000 of the fiercest soldiers that the world has ever seen were marching. Then it was that God arose (10, 11).

He would surround His city with a rampart of fire (13-16), which would be terrible only to those who hated Him. The sinners in Zion would be afraid, but the saints would rejoice in the environment of His Presence. Let us live in the inside of those flames that consume only our dross! Then follows the promise that the citizens should behold King Hezekiah donning his royal robes again, whilst they would be no longer cooped up within their city walls, but be able to see the far-distant horizons (17). Their heart would only meditate of the terror which had passed for ever, and the soldiers with their deep guttural speech would no longer threaten them (16-19). The Lord would not only be as fire, but as a river engirding their city walls, which should be only a blessing (20-22). It could not be otherwise, because God's honour was implicated in their defence (22). The Assyrian would reel like a doomed vessel before the storm, whilst poor lame Jerusalem should gather the spoil of the camp (23). This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, who delight to do His will.

FRIDAY, January 8. Isaiah xxxiv.

The subject of this chapter is God's judgment upon all nations, and especially on Edom. From early childhood there seems to have been an inveterate hatred between Jacob and Esau, which broke into open feud as they became the heads of great clans and nations. When the Hebrews asked leave to pass through Edom on their way to Canaan, their request was refused; and in after centuries they did not scruple to repay the wrong with terrible massacres. Esau hated Israel with no less virulence (Psa. cxxxvii. 7; Obad. 10-14; Ezek. xxxv. 10-15). Edom, with a profane and earthly nature, was incapable of understanding the spiritual claims of Israel, and set them at nought, as Herod, the Edomite, did our Lord's. But instead of bearing taunts and gibes with the patience and silence of Christ, the Israelite wrath flamed forth. In these words the prophet predicts the inevitable doom which must overtake sensuality, and the absence of spiritual faculty on the part of any people; but there are no tears, no signs of compassion and pity in his stern voice. He sets forth the punitive aspect of God's character; His Love was for a later age of the world's history.

SATURDAY, January 9. Isaiah xxxv.

1-2. The Prophet throws himself forward into the future, and depicts the scenes of joy and blessedness which shall visit the earth after judgments like those described in the last chapter have done their work. After the N.E. winds of March have broken down the dead wood of the forest, the sweet flowers of spring appear. Ah, poor travailing earth, how fair thou wilt be when the millennial age shall dawn!

3-7. These words are addressed to the people in captivity. They were to come back to the land they loved. However weak their hands and feeble their knees, however fearful and depressed, however blind and deaf, however long and difficult the desert march—nothing would prevent the accomplishment of the Divine purpose. "The parched ground, or mirage, should become a pool, and the withered grass of the jackal's lair should be green and fresh."

8-10. This description of the road from Babylon is a fit picture of the highway of salvation, which traverses human life from the City of Destruction to the New Jerusalem. It is unmistakably plain; the wayfaring man cannot miss it. It is secure; no lion is there. It will certainly bring the redeemed to their reward, yes, with singing. F. B. M.

Central Morocco Mission.

DURING the past year there has been almost continual insurrection in Morocco, and the murder of one of the staff of the North Africa Mission naturally intensified the feeling of unrest which prevailed. Yet in some cases mission work has gone on without interruption. This has been the case at Rabat. At Salli, when possible, the workers have continued their endeavours, though they have not crossed the river so often this year, as the town has been twice besieged by the Arabs.

The annual report, however, is altogether an encouraging record. Attendance at the Dispensary has been well maintained. It is open every day except Sunday, and often on the Sabbath there is much to be done in attending to accidents and needy cases. Over 9,000 patients, including 1,000 women, have been treated, and 965 visits paid to the sick in their homes. Jews and Moslems have petitioned for a dispensary to be opened in Salli, and Dr. Kerr is convinced that if this request can be complied with, it will be the means of establishing a more settled work there in the name of the Master. There have been forty-six patients in the hospital, one of them being a slave.

In the course of his report, Dr. Kerr speaks of the work among the women as particularly interesting. "We have had visits from the beggars of the street, and from ladies belonging to the best families in the city. Ladies of the upper class do not wish their neighbours or the general public to know that they have consulted the Christian Doctor. Hence, as they are always veiled when out of doors, they can come with more secrecy to the Mission House than I could go to visit them in their own homes. Usually a day is fixed for a consultation, and, when the time arrives, a faithful slave is sent on to see if the way is clear, while another remains at a safe distance with the lady. When the signal is given, the patient enters the Mission House, and, after I have seen her, Mrs. Kerr carries out the prescribed treatment in the lady's home."

Thursday is always a busy day, as students and teachers are then free. Many journey from the surrounding districts for books, some a distance of thirty miles. The number of books sold and circulated this year among Jews and Moslems has been considerably greater than in previous years. Dr. Kerr is frequently cheered by visitors asking for Gospels and New Testaments: "About a month ago a young teacher, who had an engagement in a Dooar in Zimoor, came to me for a New Testament. He informed me that his caravan had been attacked by a raiding band a few miles from Salli. Several of his party had been killed, and he himself had lost all his possessions, including his New Testament. 'Do you think that the raiders would destroy it?' I asked. 'Oh, no,' he replied, 'thieves never destroy anything that will bring money. If any of the party could read, they would keep possession of it; and, if not, they would give it to the teacher of their village.'"

The hon. secretary and treasurer of the Central Morocco Mission is Mr. Grahame Wilson, 191, Meadowpark Street, Dennistoun, Glasgow.

The Loneliest Fragment of the Empire.—For the inhabitants of the island of Tristan da Cunha, the Bible Society has made a grant of fifty Bibles and Testaments, which are being sent out, by request, to "Peter Green, the chief man of the island." This island, which is the loneliest and least-known fragment of the British empire, lies in the Atlantic Ocean, midway between the Cape of Good Hope and South America. The population, which numbers about sixty, consists of shipwrecked sailors with their wives and families, who have now made the island their permanent home. One of His Majesty's ships pays an annual visit to the island.

Jewish Converts at Budapest.

SINCE November 22 we have had three baptisms of peculiar interest—two Jewish youths (one of whom had been in Cairo and had attended there a Bible class conducted by American Missionaries, made public confession of their faith in Jesus), with a Jewish gentleman of riper years, who had been led to anxious enquiry about the way of salvation by the reading of the New Testament, and by intercourse with an earnest Christian family in Breslau.

The last-mentioned case is very striking. The gentleman was quite unknown to us till recently. He wrote to Pastor M., requesting a visit, and then at his suggestion wrote to me. I found him at his writing-table unable to move about, one of his limbs being swollen and so weak that he cannot walk. As soon as I was seated, he gave expression to his anxiety and distress. "Ich bin sehr unglücklich" (I am very unhappy), he said. The New Testament was on his table, and there was evidence that the word had touched his heart. Further conversation brought out that he had for years been occupied with the question of the Messiahship of Jesus. When the Zionist movement commenced, he wrote to a Vienna Rabbi asking, "Why do we Jews not lay claim to Christ as ours?" but got no answer. I had the privilege of proclaiming to him the good news of salvation. When I next visited him, he said that he had made up his mind to "cross the Rubicon."

Accompanied by two theological students he drove to the rabbi's office; with their assistance and that of a servant, got upstairs, and made his declaration that it was his purpose to leave the Jewish community, and join the Reformed Church. This was repeated, as required by law, after the lapse of fourteen days. After that, arrangements were completed for his baptism. We received him yesterday into the fellowship of the Church.

I preached from the words, "His holy covenant . . . His tender mercy" (Luke i. 72, 78), and addressed him before the baptism from the words, "My peace I give unto you" (John xiv. 27). An arm-chair had been brought in for him, and he sat during the address; but when the moment came for his making confession of his faith, he rose, leaning on the arms of his witnesses, Dr. Lippner and Mr. Buss, and with a clear voice gave utterance to the words of the confession, "Ich glaube an Gott . . . und an Jesum Christum Seinen Eingeborenen Sohn." (I believe in God . . . and in Jesus Christ His Only-Begotten Son.)

During my address and the administration of the ordinance he was deeply moved, and as he bowed his head, his tears, it was observed, mingled with the water of baptism. Pastor Sörös added a few words in the Hungarian language, and many joined us in giving him the right hand of fellowship, and welcoming him as a brother. ANDREW MOODY, D.D.

Ex-Priests in Rome.

DURING recent weeks, Dr. Burt, of Rome, and Sig. Cozza have addressed meetings in different parts of Great Britain, on behalf of the Home Refuge for Converted Priests in Rome. Much interest has been awakened by this visit. Speaking as one who has devoted eighteen years to the evangelization of Italy, and who has at present thirty-five churches under his superintendence, Dr. Burt's words have come with deep weight and conviction.

With a master hand Dr. Burt sketched the working of God through history for the unification of Italy. He told of her degradation and slavery before the fall of the temporal power in 1870, and of her glorious upspringing to light and liberty since. While as, before that time, the Bible had to be smuggled into Rome as contraband goods, there is now no book of which so many copies are printed in Italy. Miss Ward (Gottesruhe, Montalt Road, Woodford Green) writes that the funds for the new building are not yet fully raised.

Protection of Indian Children.

TWO meetings were held in connection with the Society for the Protection of Children in India, last week, in Finchley and Crouch End, Rev. John Oates presiding at the former, and Rev. Charles Brown at the latter. The speakers were Rev. W. G. Brockway, Miss S. Mulvany, and Miss Ewing, who have all recently arrived from Calcutta. The testimony was uniform as to the great need for such an organization, and to its assistance to friends of the neglected and cruelly-treated children. Leading native gentlemen of the principal Indian communities have joined the Calcutta Committee, whose advice and assistance is of great value. The secretary's help is sought from all parts of the country on behalf of waifs and strays, and magistrates avail themselves occasionally of the Society's help for children who have no lawful guardians. Almost every form of cruelty to which boys and girls are exposed has been dealt with during the year.

Attention has of late been specially drawn to a particular evil which is found to be very widespread. Women of bad repute are found in possession of girls, and even infants, whom they have either entrapped or bought to bring them up to the worst form of slavery. Experience in connection with three or four children who have with great difficulty been rescued, has shown that the law is defective and inadequate. The Society's memorial to the Government of India, and another from Bombay which accompanied it, have made so deep an impression that the Viceroy in Council has proposed to the local governments a more summary procedure, by which magistrates may remove girls under sixteen years of age from such improper keeping, and enacts that "the onus of proving lawful guardianship shall lie upon the person in whose possession the minor is." If this or something like it is passed, hundreds of children will be rescued from an awful fate.

It is encouraging to note that great attention is being given to social questions all over India, and the time is ripe not only for passing a measure of the above kind, but also for discouraging the evil custom of child marriage and for raising the legal age at which girls can be married. If even permissive bills be introduced, it may encourage the very many to save their girls from the moral and physical evils which accompany infant marriage.

Though the Society is young, it has proved its seasonableness, and the labours of the brethren and sisters who are working it, or with it, are tending to create a conscience in Indian minds as to their responsibility for the children. Already several girls without lawful guardians have been entrusted to those who will bring them up for better things. India must learn that it is a sin to "offend" against Christ's "little ones."

A Neighbour of Nepal.—Writing from Landour, North India, Mr. W. H Greet says: "The native State of Teeree Garhwal is a country unreached with the Gospel. Preaching tours throughout the State are possible if preachers have power to climb as well as to preach. Tours have been made in times past in some parts of the State by workers of the nearest missions, but the State as a whole lies untouched. Four years ago in London we picked out its map, and, following after the will of God, we are working here. In the nearest villages they say that 'shikar' (hunting) sahibs come for bears and leopards; in the farther ones they know of 'compassi' men (compass men—surveyors) sent by Government to spy from the heights that divide their wide valleys, on the sides of which their hundreds of villages lie; but a preacher of the Gospel they do not know. 'Do no preachers come?' I asked in one of many places. 'Oh, yes,' answered the man I spoke to, 'pandits and Brahmins visit us.' He only knew of preachers of Hinduism. For some time we have been supported while pioneering, but of late we have been made to feel our inability to work alone. We are asking the Lord and His people 'Where are the calls or Teeree's help?' and 'Where are the answers?'"

An Evangelist's Memories.

MR. WILLIAM GROVE.

WHAT a power in the mission field is consecrated sympathy! Men with hearts full of the message that Christ died for sinners, and that He had saved them, seldom fail to get a hearing when, in their personal dealings with fellow-sinners, they exhibit something of that love which is the essence of the Gospel—"God is love."

Mr. William Grove, a veteran in experience, though not so much so in years—for he is only just turned sixty—is one of those evangelists whose very demeanour on the pulpit platform commends the good news of salvation. His frank manner of expression is an excellent testimonial to the faith he preaches. The winning way in which he gets the confidence of the people is, speaking from a human standpoint, most successful in drawing persons into the Gospel net. He preaches as if he would like to grasp his brother sinner by the hand, and lead him right up to the Cross.

The subject of our sketch had the advantage of having praying parents. It was in 1860 that William was convinced of sin under the fervent preaching of Richard Weaver, when he first came to London, and held a mission in a chapel in the Borough Road and at the Surrey Theatre. Though a wayward lad up to that time, William Grove regularly attended these meetings, and for three months was deeply concerned about a fact he had never seriously thought about before—that he was a sinner needing salvation. More particularly was this so when Richard Weaver spoke from the words in the twelfth chapter of Jeremiah, "How wilt thou do in the swelling of Jordan?" From that time the lad had little peace of mind, and no peace of heart, until, on the first Sunday morning in 1861, at the Baptist Chapel, Alfred Place, Old Kent Road, Mr. Edward Colliver, a devout servant of the Lord, asked the lad about his soul's welfare, spoke to him of the Friend of sinners, and, putting his hand on young Grove's shoulder, said, "William, look straight to Christ!"

Like C. H. Spurgeon, this seeking one soon left off looking at self and works, gazed by faith at the crucified Son of God as his Saviour, and was born again. He did at once what many converts do not do in their early days of conversion—he started to work for the salvation of others. It is remarkable that on the very day when he could sing from his heart, "The Gospel of Thy grace, my stubborn heart has won," God permitted him to win his first soul. This convert, whose name was William Priter, a boy four or five years younger than Grove, afterwards entered Spurgeon's College, and was a pastor of great promise at the time of his death twenty years ago.

About the period of young Grove's new start in life, a great stir was being made by the Woolwich Boys, a band of Christian lads, whose open-air labours in the Gospel at Woolwich attracted much notice. As he then lived at Walworth, it occurred to Grove that a number of Christian youths might be organised in that neighbourhood, and eleven lads, most of whom had been converted under the organizer's preaching, held their first open-air meeting near a notorious public house in the Old Kent Road. They commenced their service by singing, "We're travelling home to heaven above," from Richard Weaver's old hymn book. Doubtless attracted partly by the novelty of the situation, a large number of persons assembled. This was our young evangelist's first attempt to address such a gathering.

After giving out his text—John iii. 16, William was unable to say more. Then his brother George (who, by the way, has just returned from Australia, where he has been doing good service as a preacher), being eighteen months younger than William, ventured to speak. He could go no further than read the first verse of a chapter in Isaiah. There was a pause, and the crowd got closer. Bursting into tears, the lad lifted up his heart, and said, "Lord, I cannot speak to the people—You speak to them!" And the Lord did. As the result of that service, several souls came forward and confessed Christ, and the local chapel, where a mission was being held, was that night crowded to overflowing. Night after night the band went preaching at various street corners, and such an awakening took place that in some cases it was computed that over a thousand persons assembled to hear these Christian lads, and some of the most notorious sinners in the district were converted.

That was the starting point in the spiritual life of William Grove as a preacher, and after four or five years' service of this kind he gave his life up entirely to the Lord's work, and has continued therein ever since. His first great mission was held at Walworth, where his life, before and after conversion, was well known. Next he went to Poplar, and then to Woolwich, where in thirteen weeks it is said that over a thousand persons professed to find the Saviour. Since that time he has visited many large towns and cities in England, Scotland, and Ireland, especially in Belfast, where last year he had the privilege of working in connection with the Torrey-Alexander Mission, particularly in addressing overflow meetings and gatherings of men at their dinner hour. Hearing that many poor mothers were hindered by domestic ties from coming to the meetings, Mr. Grove laboured among them from house to house. The Lord was pleased to convert a notorious drunkard, who had no sooner lost her burden of sin than she went among her neighbours, and, after the manner of the Samaritan woman, told them of Jesus, inviting them to the meetings, with the result that in a short time twenty publicly confessed Christ, forsook their evil living, and at the close of the mission were photographed as a memorable group of converts.

MR. WILLIAM GROVE.

Mr. Grove has laboured with some of the best-known evangelists of the day, including Henry Moorhouse, Richard Weaver, Dr. Harry Guinness and Dr. Barnardo. He was also in association, in mission work some years ago in Scotland, with the late Mr. William Quarrier. While our friend has been termed the workingman's evangelist—and he loves to labour among working men—many a pastor now doing work for the Lord was brought to Christ through his ministry, and other persons of attainments and culture have reason to bless God for his labours as a preacher of the Gospel.

Lady Workers in Dublin.

THERE has been for many years a long felt want of a Residence House for Lady Workers in Dublin. We would like to draw the attention of your readers to the fact that such has now been provided. So many existing agencies in Dublin in connection with parochial and mission work are needing help, especially from honorary workers, that we feel, were this fact known, and also that every home comfort and congenial companionship could be obtained, several who are free to engage in such service for the Master might like to make further inquiries by applying to the hon. Lady Superintendent, 16, Granby Row, Dublin.

World-Wide Evangelization Prayer Union.

ABOUT the beginning of 1897, my mother, Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe, invited friends to join a union to pray for the advancement of our Lord's Kingdom throughout the whole world, without restricting the members of the union to time or place. From many far away countries warm and loving acceptances came, and the chain of prayer thus formed almost surrounds the globe.

On April 30, 1899, my beloved mother was called to enter the presence of the Saviour, whom she loved so well. Since then I have had the privilege of trying to carry on the Prayer Union, "In Memoriam, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe," and our numbers, now registered, are 765. About twelve months ago, the Keswick friends, Mr. Albert A. Head, Rev. C. G. Moore, Rev. F. Paynter, and Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., being the hon. secs., formed "the circle of prayer for world-wide revival;" and as the object is the same as our Prayer Union for world-wide evangelization, and they are quite willing to receive us as a branch of their Union, to be called "The Reginald Radcliffe Branch," I recommend that we merge our Union and thus link ourselves with thousands who are also praying for world-wide evangelization.

It would be a great help and encouragement if friends would send me a line saying how God is answering prayer, and giving me any special incident. Dr. Torrey said about a year ago: "I am glad now that I am living in the year 1903. I believe that you and I have crossed the threshold of one of the greatest epochs in the history of the Church of Jesus Christ on earth. I believe we are going to see one of the greatest revivals in all the world's history. Revivals in those old days (Whitfield, Wesley, Finney) meant something more circumscribed; but a revival to-day with railways and steamships and telegraphs means a revival round the globe. The dawn has broken in Japan, the daylight is coming; the dawn has broken in India."

The dawn has brought delight in Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania. Soon the light will burst upon England, our own country. How bright that light will shine depends upon you and me. We all of us have our part to do in prayer. Will you do yours? Will you spend as much time as you ought in prayer? Will you do all you ought in personal work? God help us each to do our best.

May this amalgamation with the larger Keswick Prayer Union bring to each of us an increase of faith and courage to go forward in the grand work of winning precious souls.

Faith, mighty faith the promise sees
And looks to God alone,
Laughs at impossibilities,
And cries, "It shall be done."

Potmen's Tea.—Through the kindness of friends, Mr. J. J. Browne (one of the City Missionaries to Public-houses) held his twelfth annual tea meeting last week at the Primitive Methodist Church, Camden Town, N.W. Nearly 150 potmen and their wives, with shoeblacks who sit outside public-houses, sat down. Mr. H. Marnham gave a Gospel address with lantern illustrations, and among those who took part in the proceedings were Captain Thom (superintendent, London City Mission), Rev. W. Mincher, and Mr. West. Several persons were impressed by the messages delivered, and it is believed that some were brought into joy and peace.

A Great Home Missionary.

THE LATE REV. J. HOOD WILSON, D.D.

"THE Prince of Home Missionaries" was the description given of Rev. James Hood Wilson, at quite an early stage of his career, by Dr. Thomas Guthrie—himself in the very forefront of the battle. As we stated in our obituary notice, this much-beloved worker, lately taken to his rest, was a native of Duns, where he was born in 1829.

On his mother's side he was connected with Dr. M'Crie, the well-known church historian. Having been educated at the school of Duns, he proceeded to Edinburgh University, where, after a distinguished career, he graduated as Master of Arts. He had been brought up in the Secession Church; but his heart being deeply stirred by the enthusiasm kindled at the Disruption of the Church of Scotland in 1843, he joined the Free Church, and prosecuted his theological studies at the New College. On completing his course of study, his first ministerial work was as assistant to Rev. Dr. William Cousin, Irvine. Subsequently he returned to Edinburgh, and, at the request of Dr. Candlish, undertook, in 1853, the charge of the mission which the congregation of Free St. George's had just established in the Fountainbridge district, as part of Dr. Chalmers' territorial scheme for overtaking neglected localities especially in the great towns and cities.

In making this change, Mr. Wilson was only returning to the district in which he had first been inspired with a love for home mission work. In 1851, while a student, he had conducted a weekly meeting in a house in Thornybank, and carried on a Sunday-school in a dairy. When he resumed his work as a licentiate, the services were carried on in an old candle-house, until, in January, 1854, the church was opened by Dr. Candlish.

In those days, said Dr. Wilson recently, the Fountainbridge was "a wild place," but the passing of the Forbes-Mackenzie Act, for the closing of public-houses on Sabbath, and earlier during the week, effected a marked improvement, which was increased by the strenuous Evangelical work in which the young minister was the leader.

Mr. Wilson soon gathered round him a number of hearty supporters. Impressed with the too great conventionality of the lines on which Christian work was then carried on, he was among the first to branch out in new directions. One of his most successful efforts was the introduction of Sabbath evening services for people in working clothes, none more fashionably attired being admitted. These were carried on for nine years; and Dr. Wilson, even at the end of his long ministry, regarded these as his most fruitful years, attended as they were by incidents "as romantic and heart-stirring as anything to be met with in the pages of fiction." Special gatherings were held for butchers, for canal boatmen, for coal-heavers, for carters, and once a week in the dinner hour for the employés of the North British Rubber Works. Open-air meetings formed another feature of Mr. Wilson's ministry; and he also put a new emphasis on the place of the children in the sanctuary, by preaching a special sermon to them every quarter. People in spiritual or physical distress knew that Dr. Wilson, who lived in the manse adjoining his church, was at their call by night or day.

The success which attended Dr. Wilson's preaching and other labours ultimately resulted in the overcrowding of the Fountainbridge Church; and in 1865 he became the first minister of the Barclay congregation, with which his name has been identified ever since.

The surroundings of the new place of worship were different as regards outward circumstances, but Dr. Wilson's heart was in aggressive work. Mission halls erected at Grove Street, and new congregations established at Warrender Park and Gorgie, are standing proofs of the spiritual earnestness and industry which characterized alike minister and members of the Barclay congregation. One friend, long resident in London, recalls how the tireless activity of this true messenger of God to those in the highways and byways earned for him the soubriquet of "the Gospel Postman," and still pictures him as he was to be seen hastening about Leven Street and Tollcross, with long stride, on his Master's business.

Many have reason to remember the important part which Dr. Wilson took in connection with the memorable visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Edinburgh in 1873. It was he, along with Rev. John Kelman, sen. (Leith), who carried to Newcastle the invitation to the evangelists to proceed North. When the opening day of the mission arrived, Mr. Moody was temporarily indisposed, and Dr. Wilson took his place as speaker. Very many of the services were held in the Fountainbridge and Barclay churches, and a rich blessing was received in those districts in which the soil had been so thoroughly prepared.

From Photograph by Mr. J. Moffat, 125, Princes Street, Edinburgh.

Dr. Wilson's sympathies went out to all faithful workers in the Gospel, by whatever name they might be called; and many undenominational agencies in Edinburgh have lost in him a warm friend, as well as a valued adviser and a practical helper. To the foreign mission field another large share of his prayer and attention went out. His earnest advocacy of the claims of the heathen arrested the interest of hearers, on whose attention work among the Jews was also pressed. He acted for many years as convener of the Free Church Committee for Jewish Missions. No fewer than thirty missionaries went out from his pastoral charge to various parts of the world to minister in the Gospel.

As lecturer for several years on Evangelistic Theology, Dr. Wilson made good use of the opportunity afforded him of influencing the coming ministers of the Church; and it is noteworthy that among the assistants who gained much of their early experience of ministerial work under his guidance, were the late Rev. George H. C. Macgregor, Dr. Charles G. M'Crie (Ayr), and Professor Stalker. About five years ago, it was found that the entire charge of the great congregation was too heavy a burden for Dr. Wilson's somewhat failing powers; and he has since enjoyed the help as colleagues of Rev. W. M. Clow (since removed to Glasgow), and Rev. R. Sangster Anderson (formerly minister at Tayport and Paisley).

Known as a specialist in hymnology, Dr. Wilson rendered valuable service to his own denomination as a hymn-book compiler; and early in his career he brought out "Songs of Zion," which was one of the first books of praise specially designed for the use of children. He enjoyed little of the leisure necessary for literary work, but even in the midst of manifold labours he found time to send forth several volumes of sermons to young people, and "The Lord's Prayer Explained and Illustrated." Later in life he gave to his brethren, and those who come after, the benefit of much of his experience, in a retrospect of "These Forty Years." His Doctorship of Divinity was conferred by his own University of Edinburgh.

When elected in 1895 to the Moderator's chair of the General Assembly of his church, Dr. Wilson made characteristic use of the opportunity to propose a special mission scheme for the mining districts of Scotland, the neglected state of which in spiritual matters had been deeply impressed on his mind. He had the pleasure of seeing the new work properly set on foot within a few days.

Dr. Wilson was a man of deep personal piety, to whom the spiritual things were very near and very real. As an evangelist, he had seen many instances of the awakening of sinners through the working of the Holy Spirit, and he prayed with the faith of a little child. The Word of God was his bulwark, his test being what it had proved in his own experience and in that of others. He was a tower of strength among young believers, not only in his own congregation, but all through the city of Edinburgh. Workers from many quarters owed much to his counsel and advice, having found him a true and wise friend in times of perplexity and difficulty. He stood for the old truths, and ever spoke and wrote with a clear accent of certainty born of personal conviction.

When referring to his removal, Rev. Dr. C. A. Salmond said:—

> He was a man of apostolic simplicity and fervour, of large heart and bright intellect and boundless energy, who consecrated all his gifts, without stint or weariness, to the service of the Master. His was in the highest sense a spiritual ministry, but for that very reason it became a dynamic force for the social uplifting of many lives and homes in our city. Few men have fulfilled the real ends of the Gospel ministry so well. He did a great day's work before entering into rest, and he will have many jewels in his crown.

Such was the feeling entertained by very many in all parts of Scotland, and by others now resident in other parts of the world.

Theological Lawlessness.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

A SIGNIFICANT incident in which the Bishop of Worcester and Canon Hensley Henson play a prominent part has brought the subject of breaking the "fences" into prominence. It is no business of mine to discuss here the immediate points at issue as to Rev. W. C. Beeby and the action of his Bishop in relation to him. I am here concerned with it only in so far as it affects the question of a clergyman's right to put a private interpretation of his own on the obligation which he has contracted by his voluntary act of subscription. Canon Henson is very severe on the Bishop for the strength of the letter which led to the resignation of Mr. Beeby, and thought it necessary to express this feeling at a Sunday morning service at St. Margaret's, Westminster.

Whether it was wise or fitting to use his pulpit on a Sunday morning for the purpose of criticizing the action of a Bishop in another diocese is a point on which as an outsider I have neither wish nor capacity to pronounce. Still less am I desirous to speak on the more delicate question raised by the Canon as to the bearing of this criticism upon that of personal friendship. One point, and only one, affects me here, and that is the view which the Canon propounds as to the position of an Anglican clergyman. The Canon does not profess any agreement with Mr. Beeby's opinions. But he complains of the Bishop's conduct as being, if not legally ultra vires, contrary to the best traditions of the Church of England.

His plea, in short, is for liberty for the individual clergyman. "It is not" (he says) "a question of approving Mr. Beeby's opinions; he approaches the questions at issue from another standpoint than mine, and sees them in a different perspective. But when I am asked, as you and I, together with all other English Church folk, are asked, to hound Mr. Beeby out of the Anglican ministry because, while honestly accepting the Creed as a whole, he cannot conscientiously affirm the traditional sense of a particular clause of it, I conceive myself honourably bound to say publicly that, in my judgment, he is being treated with great unfairness."

Any judgment pronounced on the position thus taken by the Canon must be determined by our estimate of the exact difference between Mr. Beeby's interpretation and that which the Canon regards as the traditional one of the Church of England. An examination of that point would lead me much further than is possible here. My business is simply with the view of the liberty claimed on behalf of the individual clergyman.

THE CLAIM OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

The Canon has not started any new theory. He has simply set forth in strong and eloquent terms an idea which is extremely prevalent, and his advocacy is all the more significant because his claim on behalf of the individual clergyman must be pressed to a considerable extreme before it can be made to shelter Mr. Beeby. The breadth of interpretation must be very wide indeed if such teaching as this is permissible under it. I will venture to put the case as it presents itself to my own mind. The present constitution of the Anglican Church was determined by an Act of Uniformity passed in 1662. By that Act hundreds of devout and excellent clergymen were expelled from their livings simply because they could not, and would not, accept the terms which were laid down by that Act. It is still in force, and we as Nonconformists are still suffering from the disabilities under which it places us. We, at all events, can hardly be expected to view with any approval the notion that, having once subscribed to its terms, the clergy are henceforth justified in putting on its clauses an interpretation which, if it does not vitiate them altogether, at all events gives that impression to the vast majority even of intelligent people who receive them in a natural and not in a merely ecclesiastical sense.

Is it easy to conceive of anything more damaging to the ethical sense of a people than a theory like this? It is against such a view that the Bishop's letter to Mr. Beeby is directed. His construction of that gentleman's teaching may or may not have been severe; but, at all events, the principle which he lays down as regulating his judgment is sound, and stated with equal frankness and strength. He writes:

"I am not now concerned with any question of truth at all. What I am now going to say would hold if the doctrine were assumed to be untrue or to be improbable. I say, then, that every clergyman holds his position as an officer of the Church of England on condition of the constant public recitation of his personal belief that the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, and that He rose the third day from the dead. . . . Now, consistently with public honour, a man cannot hold his official position in virtue of constantly saying, 'I believe such and such a position to be true,' unless he do believe it."

Where is the flaw in this as a broad statement of principle, of principle essential to the right conduct of public life? I altogether fail to see the justice of Canon Henson's criticism of it. A clergyman may reasonably say of the Athanasian Creed—it is a hard saying, who can bear it? But by his own act he has rendered it impossible for him to take that position. It is said, indeed, that there has been a great change of thought since the Creed was imposed. Unfortunately for the clergyman, however, there has been no change in the law. That remains in its stern and unbending severity. The sneer at the "orthodox" interpretation, and the suggestion that the clergyman must exercise his own liberty in the sense he attaches to his confession, are alike out of place. Let it once be suggested that words have one sense when used in the pulpit, and another in the common business of life, and

THE POWER OF THE PREACHER IS GONE.

The position of a Congregational minister does not seem to me essentially different. The conditions vary, but the principle at stake is the same. It is true that he has not contracted so distinct a legal obligation, nor does he enjoy a public position in virtue of his formal acceptance of a creed; but the moral obligation is sufficiently distinct and imperative. He is chosen by a Church to be their leader. Is it too much to say that there is an understanding, not the less distinct because it is not put into any legal form, that pastor and Church together are to advance on the well-understood lines of Congregationalism?

He has surely no right to forsake these, and to build on others of an entirely different character. He is not in any sense a lord over God's heritage. As a man of honour, is he not bound to remember that his people are reposing a large measure of trust in him, and that it is for him to take care that it is not abused? The legal restraints upon him are but few, and are not easily enforced; but, with a high-minded man, as a Christian minister ought to be, that should only be another reason for the exercise of the most scrupulous care. He cannot be justified in introducing another Gospel from that which the Church has received, and for the preaching of which it exists.

It may not be so difficult as might at first sight appear to change the entire theological character of a pulpit. Congregations are not made up of theologians, keen in their scent of heresy and eager to seize upon the first indications of a wandering from the old faith. They have an affection for their minister, and they are content to follow his lead. What is more, they are not versed in theological controversy, and provided the work be done "by little and little," may be led away from the old paths to an extent of which they are absolutely unconscious. But is it right that a preacher should take advantage of the opportunities which thus lie at hand to insinuate a doctrine which is altogether contrary to the traditions of the denomination, which is condemned by the trust-deed in which are specified the objects for which the building was raised, and which would be repudiated by all the experienced members of the Church, at least if they understood the real goal to which the teaching was conducting?

It is surely no answer to say that it is in harmony with the spirit of the age. Congregational churches have not been called into existence for the purpose of reflecting the spirit of the age. Rather might it be said that they exist for the very purpose of influencing the spirit of the age by permeating it with the Gospel of Jesus Christ. If in former times the interpretation of that Gospel has in any way or to any extent been so distorted as to create prejudice against it, by all means let it be corrected. To a certain extent an age has its own lines of thought, and its own dialects of expression. But whatever be the variety in these, there can be no change in the Gospel itself. Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. In our next article we propose to treat more minutely some of the ways in which the breaking of the fences is being carried on.

The Turn of the Year.

"He abideth faithful."

One backward glance let memory bestow—
One backward glance, that grateful hearts may know,
Of love and faithfulness the ceaseless flow.
Then cheerfully the onward path pursue,
To prove the love and faithfulness anew.

Lucy A. Bennett.

A Retrospect, 1903.

"My song shall be alway of the lovingkindness of the Lord" (Psa. lxxxix. 1—Cranmer's "Great Bible").

My song shall be alway
The lovingkindness of the Lord;
He hath strewn my path with blessings,
According to His Word;
It was steep and rugged ofttimes,
Yet to heights it upward led,
Where fresh springs of living waters
Flowed from out the Fountain Head.
There have been long days o'ershadowed,
When no sunlight ray appeared;
But the skies were bright at even,
And dispelled the clouds once feared.
There were nights of gloom and darkness,
Raging storm, and piercing blast;
Yet the stars shone forth as heralds,
And the morning broke at last;
Earth was never seen more lovely,
Heaven's far-off gates so plain,
As when God gave His clear-shining,
In the first hour after rain;
And the calm that fell was perfect,
When His voice the tempest stilled;
While hushed hearts breathed Alleluias
For His promises fulfilled.
Thus shall be the lovingkindness
Of the Lord my song always,
For His angels—Goodness, Mercy,
Still shall follow all the days. J. H. S.

The Open-Air Mission.

A STRIKING TESTIMONY.

AMONG the most delightful experiences that fall to the lot of the committee and workers of the Open-Air Mission, is the reception of testimonies from those who, through its labours, have been gathered into the Saviour's fold.

Open-air preaching is constantly, but most mistakenly, being referred to as a purely seed-sowing enterprise, in which the harvest cannot be expected to appear till "after many days." This is far from being the case, so far as the Open-Air Mission itself is concerned. The harvest is continually being reaped, and souls are gathered in at practically every mission taken by its evangelists, and sometimes the number is large.

For instance, after a week's mission recently held outside the Park Gates at Leicester, in co-operation with workers from Melbourne Hall (Pastor W. Y. Fullerton's church), nearly fifty precious souls professed conversion, including a large number of dear young people, who have since been gathered in classes, and are being shepherded and taught in the way of God.

A letter from a young lady, one of the number referred to, is so beautifully clear, simple, and striking, that it may well be quoted in full:—

Leicester, October 16.

Dear Sir,—I received the large Card safely this morning, and thank you very, very much for it.

Would you like to know the story of my conversion? I will tell it to you briefly. I have often wanted to be different, but I can see now that I always went the wrong way to work. I used to try to be good before I went to Jesus.

I always used to listen at the Sunday evening service outside the Park Gates before I went into the Park, not that I derived any good from doing so, I am sorry to say, but to see and to be seen.

Well, one particular Sunday night there were some strange gentlemen from London there. These were the missioners of the Open-Air Mission, and I paid more attention than usual. At the close of the service, a paper was handed to me, saying that the services would be continued every night during the week. I don't know how it was, but every night found me outside those gates. It was not now from mere curiosity: I began to see what a miserable, wretched sinner I was, and yet I could not go forward and fetch a Card (the "Convert's Cards" offered to anxious souls at the close of every meeting). Something held me back.

On the Saturday night, a gentleman came to me and asked me if I was saved. I said, "No." He then told me that if I was not with Christ I was against Him, and he said what an awful position that was to be in. I told him I had been trying to be good, and he told me to leave off trying and to trust Jesus, as with all my trying I should never be good. After the meeting, he fetched me a marked Testament and a card, and turned the page down at John iii. 16, "God so loved the world," &c.

After the Mission was all over, I felt miserable, I could not rest. I tried to think no more about it, but it was no use. I tried to comfort myself with thinking that I was as good as anybody else, but, alas! I knew within myself I was worse than anybody else. Then I tried to pray, and nobody knows but God Himself what I went through.

At last I signed the Card, "Being convinced that I was a sinner, and believing that Jesus died for me, I accepted Him as my Saviour." But after that I was not quite happy. All the sins which I had done before, at different times, seemed to come into my mind until I used to think that they could not possibly be forgiven, they were so black.

Then I prayed to God to give me the assurance that they were all forgiven, and the words came to my mind, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." I knew it was meant for me, and now I am quite happy, and I would not go back where I was before for the world.

I used to think that all Christians had long faces, and went about and never smiled, but I have found out the difference now—that it is just the opposite, and that it is the Christian who goes about with a smiling face, taking things as they come, and with a kind word for everybody.

I do now, and always shall, pray to God to bless the Open-Air Mission and all those connected with it, as it was through it I was brought to Christ.

Hoping you will excuse the liberty I am taking in thus writing to you, and again thanking you very much for the Card, which I shall treasure,—I remain, yours sincerely, K—— S——.

It is such a work as this, purely spiritual and soul-winning, that the Open-Air Mission has carried on throughout our country, and during all the year. Racecourses, fairs, fêtes, encampments, seaside resorts, great factories and workshops, park and highways, villages and hamlets, are all being evangelized, and God is richly blessing the work.

Clergymen and ministers who have received the evangelists, write in the warmest terms of appreciation. For instance, one vicar of a large working-class parish in Leeds, after a week's mission there, wrote: "Many of us will thank God to our dying day that you were led to come to Leeds. We praise God, and we thank you and the Open-Air Mission."

More than 900 towns and villages in our land are the scene of the Society's labours every year. This jubilee year is a time for calling renewed attention to it, and of seeking for it a far larger income. The Bishop of Durham's warm letter of appeal on its behalf waits a far larger response than it has yet received.

The secretary is Mr. Frank Cockrem, 11, Adam Street, Strand, London.

Ogle Mews Ragged School.

IN the unavoidable absence of Mr. R. Melville Beachcroft, L.C.C., Mr. John Kirk presided at the annual meeting of this institution a few days ago, when there was a full attendance. Founded in 1843, the school is one of the pioneer efforts of the Union; and it still maintains a day school of eighty pupils, which is well reported of by the Education Department. Having completed sixty years of service, Friday evening's gathering represented a kind of diamond jubilee. The report showed that the different operations were well maintained day by day. The penny dinners were continued, and were much appreciated by needy children. The Sunday-school, Band of Hope, the girls' sewing-class, the Bible-class, and the Dorcas Society were all in a prosperous condition.

A statement of accounts, as read by Mr. Arthur Thwaites, showed that the income had been adequate for the year's operations. Rev. F. S. Webster, rector of All Souls Church, testified to the harmony which existed between his own workers and those of Ogle Mews. He emphasized the need of agencies to correct the indifference and wickedness which prevailed. It was also necessary to maintain personal interest with the outer world, such as was possible in voluntary schools, as contrasted with the School Board system, which was in danger of becoming mechanical.

Mr. Sandall Green, superintendent of the Sunday-school for forty years, referred to phases of that work. The report was adopted, and the committee for the ensuing year was elected; but the chief crying need is for more workers.

Dinners for School Children.

IN forwarding the annual report of the London Schools Dinner Association, Mrs. Anna Pennington calls attention to the present need.

Pathetic testimony is borne by friends at various schools to the timely relief afforded by the Culloden Street special school reports:—"The money which the London Schools Dinner Association has provided so generously for our afflicted little ones has been of immense benefit. Through its means we have been able to give each child some hot milk and a biscuit every day. A very large proportion of our children come a considerable distance to school."

From Alton Street school a friend writes: "I beg to thank your committee very heartily, on behalf of both teachers and parents, for the valuable help you have afforded us during the winter months. The children were greatly benefited by the warm and wholesome food. They frequently come with little or no breakfast, and in too many cases the dinner given them at school is the only good meal of the day. From the ravenous way in which they eat, it is only too plain that they get little elsewhere. A large number are in a state of chronic poverty." The above are illustrative of the work of the Association, by means of which great numbers of hungry little ones are fed. Mrs. Pennington quotes two experienced teachers on the present need: "As to the coming winter, there is every sign here of much and increasing poverty, already keenly felt." "The outlook in this district is worse than for some years, so many men are losing their employment or are working short time." Mrs. Pennington's address is 16, Crossfield Road, London, N.W.

New Year Appeals.

Mr. B. Headlam (71, Rectory Grove, Clapham) writes on behalf of the work at the Tent Mission Hall in that district.

Rev. John W. Atkinson ("Claremont," Cawley Road, N.E.), is arranging to give "some thousands of Christmas dinners to the suffering poor of East London."

Mr. H. A. Punnett, who labours among the poor of Deptford, hopes to give free teas during the winter months. Address: 119, St. John's Road, Deptford, S.E.

Mr. Alfred H. Roe (92, Blake's Road, Peckham, S.E.), appeals for help to provide free meals to the needy children of the district. Some thousands of meals were given last year.

Mr. C. H. Connor appeals on behalf of needy little ones attending the Chelsea Children's Mission. "Nothing but the Word of God is taught in our school." Address, 25, Church Street, Chelsea, S.W.

Many thousands of young women have been welcomed to the Homes of the London Female Guardian Society, and freely supplied with food, clothing, and a long residence, for training, of eighteen months. Mr. W. E. Page, Secretary, 191, High Street, Stoke Newington, N.

Rev. A. L. Fillingham, 28, Archbold Terrace, Jesmond, Newcastle-on-Tyne, writes: "We are giving many of the poor barefooted children of this northern city a breakfast, and early in the New Year the old folk will get a treat. We are in need of clothes, food, toys, and hospital letters."

Rev. D. M. Cameron, Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth Road, S.W., says: "We have a long, deserving list of widows and aged poor, mostly people to whom, as usual, we would like to supply with a good substantial dinner, and to the most needy a warm garment or blankets." Address, 32, Larkhall Rise, Clapham, S.W.

Kensal Town Medical Mission and Dispensary provides the poor of the district with medical advice and medicine free. The average attendance is over 100 a week. In the maternity branch 114 cases have been attended during the year. There is a small Home of Rest at Herne Bay connected with the work. Miss Emily Thompson (Hon. Sec.), The Cottage, Gospel Mission, Kensal Road, W.

Mr. Herbert H. Jennings (secretary) appeals on behalf of the Chelsea Hospital for Women, Fulham, S.W. "In accordance with the purpose of its foundation, it draws its patients from those in reduced circumstances as well as from the very poor. Their number continues increasing, as, unfortunately, is only to be expected when so many more women are called upon to stand the strain of business life."

Union Hall Mission, N.W., is well known as a centre of good work. The present distress is more acute already than for several years. In connection with the Women's Meeting, with a weekly attendance of nearly one hundred, the heart is often touched by the cases of destitution brought to light. Before relief is given, however, each case is visited. Treasurer, Mr. Joseph Trumper, 22, Sumatra Road, West Hampstead, N.W.

Appealing on behalf of the Robin Society, Mr. W. Barnett (Hon. Sec.) says: "For many years past it has been the privilege of our Society to provide Robin meals for the very poorest children in all parts of the Metropolis. Last season we were able to give 13,514 meals. This season opens with a larger number of applications for help than ever, and we have already arranged for over 10,000 meals. Address, Robin Society, 419, New Cross Road, S.E.

Mr. John Hawkey (East London Mission) writes of some poor districts: "The people who can migrate to the suburbs do so, but the poor remain. Many of whom have large families, and are compelled to pay heavy rents. When at work their wages are low, and during the winter they are often on short time, or out of work, and, with the additional expenses of fuel and light, their case is distressing." Many benevolent efforts are being made. Address, 53, Cawley Road, South Hackney.

The National Society for the Employment of Epileptics, by means of its Colony for Epileptics at Chalfont St. Peters, assists a class of sufferers whose lot is a particularly sad one. It is computed that there are 40,000 epileptics in England, and a very large proportion of these, though naturally intelligent and capable, sink into insanity from the lack of proper care and treatment in the earlier stages of the malady. The London office is at 12, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C., and Mr. G. Penn Gaskell is the secretary

"Stolen Goods."

THE other day a policeman was found guilty of robbing the houses upon his "beat" that he had been set to guard while the occupiers were away on holiday. The stolen property amounted to over £1,500 in value, of which £800 worth he took from one house.

Naturally the owners thought it was the work of burglars; but I suppose suspicion fell upon the real thief because the robberies were all upon his beat. So he was sentenced to ten years' penal servitude; and I fancy most of you will say, "Serve him right too!"

(1) Now why is it worse for a policeman to do such a thing than for an ordinary burglar? "Oh," you say, "because of his position. He had been unfaithful to the confidence that had been placed in him." Exactly. But as we look back upon the "goods"—that is, the privileges, blessings, and opportunities—that God has placed in our care during this past year, I am afraid we shall be bound to admit that we, too, have often not been true to our trust; but have used them for our own selfish or sinful purposes.

Now we are not heathen children who never heard of God or of His goodness; nor are we "street-arabs," allowed to run wild with no knowledge of our duty. We live in Christian homes, and in an atmosphere of religion. We know quite well what God expects of us, and yet how far we have come short of the obedience and love for which He asks! "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed Me," was His charge against the people of Israel (Mal. iii. 8). Can He bring the same accusation against any of us? It is sinful enough in the case of a heathen Chinee or a Hindu, but how much more so in us!

(2). Having obtained his plunder, the policeman parted with it for much less than its proper value, in order that he might dispose of it more readily. That, I think, is a very common sin with most of us—to let go the spiritual "goods" I am speaking about without at all realizing how much they are worth. This is true of the opportunities that we have of honouring God and of doing good to those around us; true also of the too-little use we make of our Bibles and the spiritual privileges which we ought to appreciate more than we do; true, too, in some of us, I am afraid, of the blessing of salvation, and of Jesus Christ, who loved us and gave Himself for us. We give them away, so to speak, for pleasures and sins that are worth less than nothing in comparison, and set so little value upon them that we yield all too readily to Satan's tempting offers. Is it not so?

(3) The policeman has had to pay the penalty of his wrongdoing, and his Christmas in prison must have been anything but a happy one. We may blame him or pity him; at least let us pray for him. But let us not forget that it is true of each of us, as of him—"Be sure your sin will find you out." Here we are at the end of another year, and our thoughts, perhaps, are rather mixed as we think of all the opportunities we have used, of those we have missed; and a feeling of sadness comes over us as we realize how far we have failed of what we hoped and meant to be when the year began.

The close of the year is always a solemn time, because it means one more milestone passed on our life's journey, and one less to come. Whatever we make of the future, we cannot recall a single day, nor undo a single deed, of the past.

There are a good many blots and errors on the pages that were so clean and white a year ago, and no amount of rubbing or scratching can make them pure again. What is said, is said: what is done, is done. And though you and I may have forgotten a good many of those actions and words (which, indeed, we should be ashamed to remember), yet, perhaps, the memory of them is still making other hearts sad—those of companions, parents, friends, who cannot forget them so easily as we have done. Nor does God forget, for all we do and say is recorded in the books of Heaven for judgment.

We have been thinking during these past few days of Jesus especially as the little Child, weak and helpless, born at Bethlehem. But we dare not tarry long at the manger; we must hasten to Calvary, for it is there alone that we can find pardon for all the wrong that we have done, and for all the good that we have left undone. Therefore, let us not allow this season, with all its happiness and joy, to hide from our thoughts the more serious side of life.

(4) The policeman, when indulging in his own sinful desires, did not think, perhaps, of all the sorrow he was bringing upon his wife and family. There is one special sense in which I want to apply this thought. I expect some of you have been wishing for frost and snow, sliding and skating, which makes you feel fresh and keen for healthy outdoor fun. But the cold weather which you welcome so gladly brings hunger and misery to thousands of other children and their parents. Try, therefore, and think of them, and if you have been disappointed, you may at any rate cheer yourselves with the thought that the mild Christmas has given great satisfaction to those less fortunately situated than you are.

I hope, too, that you will not spend your holidays entirely for your own pleasure. Try and make someone else happy. A little girl I know spent some of her Christmas pocket money to buy two dolls for a little bedridden cripple boy and his sister, and their happiness at receiving them was hardly greater than her own at the sacrifice she had made.

Last year, in response to an appeal I made to you, you very generously sent me more than £70 in sixpences and shillings for the poor out-of-work people about whom I told you. Is it too much to ask, that in gratitude to God for your comfortable and happy homes, you will do the same this year?

God bless you, dear boys and girls, and give you in the best and truest sense a very happy new year.

Uncle Tom.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

30th Prize Competition.

September to December.

RULES.

Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following rules is strictly observed, especially Nos. 5, 7 and 10? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions, if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right twelve times out of seventeen.
2. Competitors are divided into Four Divisions:—
   I. Those under ten years of age.
   II. Those over ten and under thirteen.
   III. Those over thirteen and under fifteen.
   IV. Those between fifteen and eighteen.
3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "Prize Competition," and the Number of the Division to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom," as usual.
4. At the top of your paper write very clearly your Division, your Full Name and Address, and Age last birthday.
5. The questions must be answered in the Right Order. The answers must be written on either Foolscap or Quarto size sheets, and on one side of the paper only. Number your Answers exactly to correspond with the questions.
6. Every paper must be signed by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.
7. No Concordance and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. Competitors must not help each other.
8. The last day for answers to reach the office is Wednesday, January 13. The results will be announced on January 21.
9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, &c, the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.
10. Chapter and Verse must be given wherever possible.
11. No papers can be re-examined. And don't forget Rule 5!

Any seniors who are over Eighteen years of age may do the Competition, and have their names included in the lists, but will not be eligible for rewards.

Personal.

Many thanks for the box of toys, dolls, and books; also a parcel of infants' dresses, several scrap-albums, &c., which have arrived. They have given much delight to some poor children for Christmas.

If any used Christmas and New Year cards were sent to me I could find some folks who would be very glad of them.

ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.—You may not compete this term; you require to be correct twelve times in order to be eligible.

ELSA BANFIELD, ARTHUR STRUTHERS, CONSTANCE BOWES.—You have been correct nine times this term. FRANK BOWES.—Your name appears ten times.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

Sunday, January 3, 1904.

BECAUSE YE BELONG TO CHRIST (Mark ix. 38-42; 1 Cor. vi. 19-20; 1 Pet. i. 18-23).

THE fact that we have been bought, not with corruptible things, as silver or gold, but with the precious Blood of Christ, lies at the very foundation of all consecration. In consecration we do not make ourselves Christ's, but recognise that we are His by an unalienable right. One of the worst and ugliest features of slavery is that of the market, where men, women, and children are sold like cattle, but this institution is selected by the inspired writers to set forth the first step in our devotion to the service and person of Jesus Christ, the Lord who bought us (2 Pet. ii. 1).

Does not the imagery suggest that we have been bought from previous slavery to some other master? Slaves pass from one master to another. Among the Hebrews an Israelite would often sell himself into slavery until the year of Jubilee, or until one of his kinsmen redeemed him. So, by His blood our kinsman Christ bought us back from sin, and guilt, and condemnation, from the slavery and power of our lusts; from the slavery of blame and praise; from the power of darkness. He says, as He buys us, "Ye shall be for Me, ye shall not be for another."

Notice that our Lord's claim upon us is built on His own supreme sacrifice. "He gave Himself for us," says the Apostle Paul, "that He might purchase for Himself a people." He founds His Kingdom, not on His divinity, but on His sufferings. His Cross is His throne. He bowed His head in death, that our heads might bow to Him; He gave His heart to the spear, that our hearts might beat for Him; He gave His hands and feet to the Cross, that He might secure for Himself the use and service of our members; He gave Himself up to death, that we might reckon ourselves dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God.

Throughout the Epistles, the writers perpetually speak of themselves as the slaves of Jesus Christ. Ignatius Loyola, the founder of the Jesuit order, demanded from his followers so complete an obedience that they were to be like a corpse, or a staff in a blind man's hand. No man has the right to require such abject submission from his fellow-men, but our Lord has established the right to claim these rights, and happy are they who absolutely submit themselves.

The owner of the slave may set him to any work he sees fit. So our Owner assigns to us each and all the work that we can do best. There should be no distinction of large or small things in the great House of the Church, everything is important which is assigned to us by the Master. Some of us are called to work for Him in the high places of the field, and others in lowly and obscure nooks.

The slave lives in the hut on the little patch of ground which his master indicates, and all belongs, not to him, but to the one who has bought him. If he obtains any revenue for the cultivation of the land, it is his master's. He is entirely subordinate to secure the profit of his master in every act of handicraft. Would that we might live like this, counting nothing as our exclusive property, but believing that all has been given to us to use in trust for the Master.

At the commencement of the New Year I would urge my young brothers and sisters to take up this position towards Christ. I never shall forget the moment when I entered into the first realization of the ownership of the Lord, it was so good to know that one was His "chattel," that one had no longer any option or choice for one's enjoyment or emolument, but that everything was under His control for the securing of the ends which were clear to Him, though hidden from my eyes. I will say that the life which was commenced then has been one of perfect freedom, for this is the enigma of His service, that His slaves are alone free, and that the more absolutely they obey Him the more completely do they drink of the sweet cup of liberty.

The Preaching of John the Baptist (Matt. iii. 1-12).

Golden Text (Matt. iii. 2).

SIX months before Jesus left Nazareth for the work of His public ministry "a burning and a shining light" flashed out on the hills of Judæa, and the herald's "voice" proclaimed in the wilderness the coming King. Fifteen months contemporary with the Lord, twelve months in prison, and John the Baptist was beheaded one year before Jesus was crucified (Matt. xiv. 1-12).

John the Baptist—Whence? Who?

Of Aaronic descent, by human relationship second cousin to the Lord. A Nazarite. Filled with the Holy Ghost from birth. Child of prophecy and prayer. Trained and divinely commissioned. "Sent of God."

1. A man of faith, working in faith (John i. 33; Luke vii. 19).
2. Sterling, staunch, stedfast, self-denying.
3. Earnest, rugged, searching, fearless.
4. Bold as a lion against sin, shams, and hypocrisy.
5. "Great in the sight of the Lord."
6. Small in his own eyes, and humble, therefore he could exalt the Christ.

What did the Lord say of him?

1. "My messenger" (Matt. xi. 10).
2. "Much more than a prophet."
3. "There hath not risen a greater."

What did the people say of him?

1. "They counted him a prophet."
2. They sought his advice on the "fruits meet for repentance."

1. People were to show brotherly kindness and unselfishness to each other.
2. Publicans were to be honest, just, and truthful in their business.
3. Soldiers not to use their weapons for violence, to learn discretion, charity, and contentment (Luke iii. 10-14).

The Condition of Israel.

1. Entangled in worldliness and idolatry, or dead formalism and false security.
2. Restless under Roman military rule and taxation. Anxious for a Deliverer from the yoke of the foreigner, rather than for the kingdom of the promised Messiah and freedom from the tyranny of sin.

The Forerunner of Christ.

Verse 3. In many parts of the East the roads are repaired only, and always, when a royal procession has to pass over them. How did John the Baptist "Prepare the way of the Lord?"

1. Proclaimed the kingdom of heaven.
2. Pointed out the King already in their midst.
3. Called to repentance and holy living.
4. Warned the Pharisees against sham repentance, false excuses, worthless hopes.
5. Declared the near certainty of the judgment of God against sin.
6. Proclaimed the power of Christ to baptize with the Holy Ghost, as John had baptized the people with water.
7. Witnessed to "the Lamb of God," for John was prophesied in Luke i. 77, 78 to preach the Gospel of John iii. 16. Remission of sins through the mercy of God in Christ Jesus, and John iii. 36.

Special Points.

1. John the Baptist preached by his dress and manner of life, as well as by his voice, against the sin of waste and self-indulgence in time, thought, and money. He had the right to wear the robe of a priest's son, but he chose the garb which would help him in his work, like Elijah (2 Kings i. 8).
2. The fruit trees in Palestine were all taxed, so that one which bore bad, or no fruit, was an expense to its owner and was cut down. Fruits of repentance must be genuine (10).
3. John the Baptist gave his "voice" for the Master's service, and he used it. Jesus wants voices for His use on earth now. To sing, to speak kind and gentle words, comforting words and true. Shall he have my voice?
4. Where can any "flee from the wrath to come"? To Jesus, He is the safe refuge. (1 Thess. i. 10.)
5. John could baptize with water, but only Jesus can baptize with the Holy Ghost (v. 11, 12).

PREPARING THE KING'S WAY.

When the German Emperor visited the Holy Land a few years ago, the roadways throughout the country he was to use were carefully prepared and made straight by the Turkish authorities. Around Jerusalem, especially, a wonderful transformation was made, and many of the inhabitants were at a loss to understand its meaning. It may be added that in various instances the roads have now been allowed to lapse into a state of disrepair. They were, however, made ready and put in good condition at the time, because the great Kaiser was to pass that way. So in the days of our Saviour, the way of the Lord was prepared and His paths were made straight (v. 3).

GOOD NEWS NOT APPRECIATED.

It was a private soldier, an orderly, of the Army Medical Corps, who, while serving in India, found out that wounds, kept constantly sprayed with carbolic acid solution, did not fester. He told his captain, who passed on the information to several of his colleagues. In the end the news reached the ears of Dr. Joseph (afterwards Lord) Lister, and he, after a long series of exhaustive experiments, announced to a wondering world the discovery of antiseptic surgery. So was it with the good news of our Saviour; John, like the private soldier, was not appreciated. His voice was as one crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord" (v. 3).

From Our Readers.

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

DEAR SIR,—With reference to the letter in your issue of December 17, signed by "Senex" and answered by Mr. Eugene Stock, I am sorry the latter thinks it unnecessary to explain the three, so-called, "pin-pricks" mentioned by "Senex." It seems to me, and I expect to many others interested in the above Society, that some explanation would be advisable. I admit they are, by themselves, small matters, but are they not the thin edge of the wedge which needs to be jealously guarded against in these days?

We find on all sides Roman Catholicism gradually creeping into the Church of England, and we must expect our truly Evangelical supporters to withdraw their help when they see the signs of this, however small, creeping into the missionary work. We cannot be too severe on this point.

I was under the impression the C.M.S. were appealing for a number of men for the mission field. Surely this will not encourage those whose aims are strictly Evangelical in every sense of the word to offer themselves.

Tunbridge Wells. Harold Tessier.

From Brigade-Surgeon Trehane Symons, "Trevalga," Cheltenham.

WE earnestly hope that definite notice will be taken, and some further action, concerning the answer given by Mr. Eugene Stock to the able and temperate letter signed "Senex," in a recent number of The Christian. Mr. Stock tells us to leave the Church of England if we don't like the doings of the Bishops!!! The letter seems to show which way the wind blows, at least.

December 18, 1903.

 We have received several other letters to the same effect as the foregoing.—[Ed.]

DEAR SIR,—Your readers will doubtless have the opportunity of seeing the exact text of the Memorandum issued by the C.M.S. concerning joint meetings. Copies may be had from the C.M.S. House, Salisbury Square, E.C. I trust that many Evangelicals will be reassured when they learn on undoubted authority that the C.M.S. at headquarters (whatever any of their supporters in the country may have done) have never taken part in any "joint meetings" properly so-called of the C.M.S. and the S.P.G. What they have done is to accept invitations to diocesan gatherings for missionary purposes, to which different societies have been invited by the Bishop.

As long as the C.M.S. is part of the Church of England organization, it seems to many of us impossible, or, at any rate, very difficult, to decline invitations of this kind, and I, for one, would submit that it is surely a case for liberty among brethren. It is impossible for all Evangelical Churchmen to see eye to eye on this matter, which is complicated by the fact that, while the S.P.G. in its constitution is open to all members of the Church of England, a large proportion of its missionaries at present are undoubtedly extreme Ritualists. May not the principles underlying Rom. xiv. 1-12 rightly apply here; and should not those who feel it right to unite in diocesan gatherings of this kind be allowed liberty to do so, while those who decline to go should also have their liberty recognised?

As one who has had the great privilege of attending the C.M.S. Committee for the last five or six years, and has had other opportunities of coming into close contact with the inner working of the Society, it seems not only unnecessary but almost ludicrous to bear testimony to the absolute faithfulness and loyalty of the Committee and officers to the old paths of Evangelical and Protestant truth. But I feel that I ought not to refrain from calling attention to the Memorandum, as embodying what I believe to be the true line to be adopted, and I sincerely hope that in face of all the needs of the C.M.S. and the present crisis in its history, the Memorandum now issued may allay uneasiness and reunite brethren in furtherance of God's greatest purpose, the evangelization of the world.

May I also add that whenever any of the friends of the C.M.S. consider they have a proof of unfaithfulness, or, at least, a case for inquiry, they should write at once to Salisbury Square direct. Our dealings with a Christian society should not differ from those with an individual brother according to Matt xviii. 15. "Senex" will be glad to know that this was done by a member of Committee concerning one of his three "pin-pricks," and the matter was at once explained.—Yours, &c.,

W. H. Griffith Thomas.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

DR. HENRY and Mr. Armon Jones have just concluded their autumn campaign. Since the first of September they have conducted 158 meetings, with a total attendance of more than 125,000 persons, and taken over 11,000 new pledges, while large numbers have made open confession of Christ as Saviour and Lord.

In all places the moral and spiritual have dominated the great gatherings. Every month of the campaign demonstrates more powerfully than before the vital relation between the deeper aspects of the temperance problem and a genuine revival of religion. Scores of men and women who have signed the pledge on a previous visit of the missioners have gladly confessed the pledge as a stepping-stone out of self into Christ. The work among young men has been remarkable. In one meeting, out of sixty-nine pledges fifty-five were men, and nearly all these young fellows, many of whom were already the victims of drink. During the progress of one mission, a young woman, employed in a factory, got ninety of her companions to take the vow of total abstinence. Two publicans who failed, declared in court that their failure was due to "Dr. Henry's mission." In many instances employers of labour have borne the highest testimony as to the influence of the missions upon their employés.

The closing mission was at Alloa, where "the trade" dominates almost everything. The result is spiritual death and moral stupefaction. The meetings grow in interest and power to the end, when the fine Town Hall was excessively crowded, and many decisions for Christ were secured. In all communities visited great indignation prevails over the proposed compensation scheme. They are hot against the recognition of the principle of compensation, in any form whatsoever. But nearly all seem to recognise that temperance and Christian people are but ill prepared for a contest which appears imminent. Very little has been done to organize temperance and Christian voters for such a struggle. Burke said, "When the evil combine, the good must associate." Surely the hour has come for more effective and practical work in the realm of "clean politics."

Messrs. Torrey and Alexander.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

Missions in Scottish Towns.

GREENOCK (Dec. 12-14).

AFTER the Sabbath services in Greenock already reported, the meetings were continued in the Town Hall, where at three o'clock Dr. Torrey addressed a goodly company of Christian workers. Mr. Alexander aroused the interest of all by calling for the recitation of favourite passages of Scripture. One after another arose and repeated various precious promises from God's Word with much feeling. Dr. Torrey's address was listened to with deep interest throughout.

The meeting in the evening was well attended, and though the large audience entered with great earnestness into the "song service," at the close of Dr. Torrey's impressive address and fervent appeal only two or three responded and stood up to signify their acceptance of Jesus Christ. When an opportunity was given for those who wished to leave the hall, an unusual sight was witnessed. Hundreds flocked to the doors and hurried out of the building as fast as they could, leaving only a handful of people for the after-meeting. Yet although this second meeting was small, God's Spirit was present in mighty power, and a blessed time was experienced. Dr. Torrey urged the Christians to further prayer and effort, and spoke words of encouragement which seemed to come from God Himself.

At the afternoon meeting, on Tuesday, Dr. Torrey delivered a very practical and instructive address on soul-winning, the results of which were seen at the close of the evening meeting. Christians, who had hitherto taken no active part in urging the unsaved to come out on the side of Christ, moved round among the audience, and induced many to come forward and confess the Lord.

At the evening meeting, a time of great blessing and power was experienced. The address had a wonderful effect upon the audience, and at its close scores of men and women and children were dealt with about their souls. Although the meetings in Greenock did not produce as much fruit as those in other towns, seed has been sown which will bear fruit in many a day to come, and Christians have been awakened to an earnestness and activity in the Master's cause which cannot fail to bring good results.

PAISLEY (Dec. 16-18).

On Wednesday afternoon the first meeting in connection with the three days' campaign in Paisley was held in the Clark Town Hall, and was attended by nearly 2,000 people. It was very evident that great preparation by prayer and personal effort had been made for these meetings, for from the very outset God's Spirit seemed to take possession of the speaker and audience. Mr. Alexander lost no time in becoming acquainted with the people present, and before many minutes all entered with great spirit into the service of praise. Many Christians were awakened by the earnest, stirring appeal of Dr. Torrey during his address on The Secret of Success in Prayer.

In the evening the hall was crowded with 2,500 people. A body of singers from Greenock occupied seats on the platform. After some time had been spent in learning a few of the hymns, Dr. Torrey proceeded with his powerful address on Thoughtlessness, at the close of which about a score of people found their way to the front seats.

The meetings were continued on Thursday, the afternoon meeting being held in the Abbey Close U.F. Church. Despite the inclemency of the weather, a large number attended and were rewarded with much blessing. In the evening such were the crowds that two meetings had to be held: the first at seven o'clock in the Abbey Close U.F. Church, and the second in the Good Templars' Hall at eight o'clock. The latter meeting was crowded to excess. At the close of the address about forty people confessed their acceptance of Christ.

The closing meetings of the mission were held on Friday, and consisted of three services—at 3.30, when an address was delivered on the Holy Spirit; at 5 p.m., when the hall was crowded with children; and at 8 p.m., when all the sitting and standing room was occupied. The children's meeting was owned and blessed of God, and at its close upwards of 300 young people went into the inquiry room.

The meeting in the evening will long live in the memories of many. It was, without doubt, the best held during the present Scottish tour, for at its close considerably over 100 men and women, boys and girls, of all classes, confessed Christ and their determination to live for Him. One layman, who has lived in Paisley and has taken part in all the religious movements in the town during the past thirty years, said that Friday night's meeting was the most wonderful he had ever attended. "Never," he said, "have I seen such an abundant response after so short a mission."

At Thursday afternoon's meeting, Rev. J. Cables related a very pathetic incident in connection with the song "No, Not One." He said at their morning prayers in his home that day, his family sang, "No, Not One." After singing it, a man came and asked him to visit a young lady who was dying. He went, and after sitting with the dying girl and repeating the words of this hymn, she asked him to sing it. This he did. When the song was finished, he was enabled to speak to her definitely about her soul in a way it had never been possible for him to do before, and received the assurance that the dying girl was trusting in Christ. That afternoon she went to be with Him.

DUMBARTON (Dec. 20-23).

Encouraged by the splendid results realised at the final meeting in Paisley, the evangelists began their four days' mission in Dumbarton greatly cheered, and with eager anticipation for a time of blessing. On Sunday morning a fine company assembled at the Burgh Hall, at a meeting for Christian workers, when Dr. Torrey delivered an inspiring and helpful address on "Personal Work." At the close the doctor outlined the methods on which he conducts after-meetings, and gave one and all to understand the value and importance of dealing properly with the anxious inquirers.

At the morning service in the High Free Church, Dr. Torrey discoursed on "Prayer," and at five o'clock, in the Parish Church, he addressed several hundred women. At the later meeting a large number signified their intention of accepting Christ. Following this, a large meeting for men was held in the same building. Mr. Alexander conducted the praise portion of the service and engaged the attention of the men very well, as he taught them many favourite choruses. The sermon by Dr. Torrey was with power, but at the close the men refused to yield to his earnest appeal for decision for Christ, though great uneasiness prevailed among a large number of them, and it was evident that a deep impression was made.

On Monday afternoon the evangelists journeyed to Helensburgh, where in the West Free Church a meeting was held. The attendance was very good, despite the inclemency of the weather, and a blessed time was experienced. Dr. Torrey spoke with great directness on "Why Prayer is Without Power," and was listened to most intently. Mr. Alexander's solo, "I know my Heavenly Father knows," was much appreciated, and brought comfort to many.

In the evening the Burgh Hall at Dumbarton was filled, and a good meeting followed. At the close, when inquirers were being dealt with, Lord Overtoun and others were active in the work of leading anxious ones into the light. A large number of names were taken.

Another afternoon meeting was held at Helensburgh, on Tuesday, and was well attended. Dr. Torrey gave a practical address on "Soul Winning." The evening meeting in Dumbarton was largely attended, and was one of power and blessing. The singing went with much more spirit than on any previous evening, and the general tone was better. Greater ease and freedom marked the utterance of both speaker and singer, and the presence of God's Spirit was felt as never before. Dr. Torrey's address carried conviction, and led many to a definite acceptance of Christ as their Saviour.

The closing meetings were held on Wednesday. The Free Church at Helensburgh was crowded for the afternoon meeting when the doctor spoke on "The Holy Spirit." The Burgh Hall was crowded at night, and was by far the best meeting of the series held in Dumbarton. A large number of decisions were made, and thus ended a most profitable three weeks' tour during which nearly 2,000 conversions were recorded. R.

Interest Spreading.

The brevity of these Scotch visits affected to some extent the influence of the meetings, but in every place in which Messrs. Torrey and Alexander conducted any meetings there were good results. So much had to be compressed into a short space of time that they felt the strain rather more than when they are settled in a city for three or four weeks. But it was delightful to see the spiritual enthusiasm awakened immediately they arrived, and especially in the case of Paisley was there a remarkable ocular demonstration of the Spirit's power to convict men and women. All over Scotland the interest in the work has been kindled, and in each place the evangelists were conscious of the widespread prayerfulness for a revival which aids all their speaking and singing.

Birmingham will be the next scene of their work, and the mission there will be on a large scale, befitting the importance of this midland centre of influence. Recalling Messrs. Moody and Sankey's wonderful work in Birmingham, there is reason for hopeful anticipations of a similar revival under God's blessing. Dr. Torrey is resting with his family, after his constant exertions during the past two years; and Mr. Alexander, who has not been very well lately, is also glad of a brief interlude before the mission in Birmingham.

Impressions from Manchester.

A friend who was at the centre of the Manchester Mission writes to the evangelists a letter giving his own impressions of the work accomplished in that city. "It has been a matter of great interest to note," he says, "how many workers have had relatives converted. Having been associated with the Noon Prayer-meeting almost from its start, I was glad to find among our best workers some who come often to pray. Among the churches, mission halls, or schools named by converts I could not but notice that the high water-mark of interest in the mission had been rewarded by the greater number of conversions." This is nearly always the case. The church or mission which takes most interest in a mission receives the largest number of converts. This correspondent continues: "That many rose in answer to your appeals was gratifying of course; but infinitely better was it to see some come to the front when all was silent in the hall and workers were employed. I noticed that some came then without being urged, and this to my mind was proof that the work was not man's—more so, as many of those who came forward knelt down without being spoken to, and some of these were in tears. Manchester did so much need your visit, and so much has been achieved, that one is bound to hope and pray that you may be sent to us again; but whether you come again or not, your coming here has been owned by the Lord. While many sinners have been converted, the Church of God in these parts, in all the different sections of its membership, has been quickened and blessed."

ECHOES FROM DR. TORREY.

If I did not believe in the doctrine of the new birth, I would give up preaching.

A minister of the Gospel should always have his soul on fire, and his eyes watching to lead a soul to Christ.

The secret of holiness, spiritual discernment, and power with God in prayer, is in absolute surrender to God.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Mr. George Clarke at Bedminster.

MANY will have cause to bless God for the mission which Mr. George Clarke conducted at Zion Chapel, Bedminster, Nov. 29 to Dec. 14, and which was organized by the Free Churches of South Bristol. Previous to its commencement earnest prayer meetings had been held for several weeks, and many of the workers felt a revival of true religion was taking place in their own hearts, so the time of blessing was quite expected and it came to waiting souls.

Though the meetings on the week nights were not crowded at the beginning, there was evidence that God's Holy Spirit was at work in convincing of sin, and when the mission closed, 203 had given in their names as wishing to love and serve the Lord Jesus Christ. The Sunday services were very crowded. Sunday afternoon, December 6, witnessed an unwonted sight; the chapel was crowded with hundreds of men, mostly young, many of whom were footballers who had been invited by the workers distributing invitations at the football ground. There has been a great revival in the Sunday-school at Zion; ninety have professed conversion. The Bible readings conducted at Redland Park Church were well attended, and a great source of blessing. E. F. E.

Mr. Henry Varley in Berlin.

Pastor Rohrbach met me at Charlottenburg, and welcomed me to the Mission House, at 28, Krumme Strasse. The first visit was paid to Miss von Blucher of Berlin, whose devoted life has been so signally owned of God in that great city. Surrounded by fellow-workers, she represents one of the principal missions in Berlin. On three occasions I had the joy of preaching to crowded audiences in her hall, beside giving a Bible Reading in the drawing-room to a large and interested company.

The Free Churches of Berlin and Charlottenburg are scarcely recognized by the State (Lutheran) Church. I was pleased to notice the goodly character and quality of the Baptist, Methodist, and Mission Churches. In nearly all of these I preached Christ Jesus the Lord. The congregations were good, and intense interest prevailed. The people would stay as long as we chose to continue the addresses, and though all had to be translated, there was no sign of inattention or weariness. The expressions of gratitude, the bright faces, the hearty hand shaking, all told how really the Spirit of Christ had diminished the difficulties of speech. Increasingly I see how the working of the Lord by His word secures real success.

The meetings with the ministers and mission workers were greatly valued, and it is true to say that our fellowship in the Gospel was "a living, bright reality." Testimonies poured in, telling of blessing received, of quickened and revived lives resulting from the setting forth of Him of whom Paul wrote; "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord." It has been a memorable time, and of the twenty-eight meetings held, not one failed. A strong desire was expressed that I would at an early date return to Berlin, and spend some weeks visiting the Free Churches.

Berlin is a wonderful city. I had no conception of its magnitude. The grandeur of its buildings, the splendour of its palaces, the beauty and stability of its street architecture. It is a modern city, and in a hundred ways quite up-to-date. Its avenues have groups of magnificent sculpture, one of these illustrating German history from 1100 A.D. onward, comprising thirty-two massive groups in white marble. I was not surprised to hear that thousands of the youths from the public schools and University spend hours in learning German history from an object-lesson the like of which I have never seen.

Scarcely any of the buildings in the wide streets common to the whole city are less than from four to six storeys high. The frontages are very elaborate. The University is a sight to behold. For elaborateness of structure the Technical School at Charlottenburg surpasses everything I have ever seen. British statesmen may well visit Berlin, and note what is being done for the education of the youth of Germany. My chief object in writing is to impress upon brethren in the ministry the exceeding importance of visiting Berlin and other German cities in order to preach and teach the Lord Jesus Christ. I am persuaded that large numbers of Germans are more than tired of being in the shoreless sea of a dark and cold materialism. Berlin is a splendid centre for true and strong presentation of the gospel of Christ. Men will hear. Brother Pastor Rohrbach rendered me admirable service as interpreter, and very heartily do I commend his work in Berlin to the fervent prayers and practical sympathy of Christian friends.

Henry Varley.

A Wesleyan Temperance Mission.

At St. John's Square, Clerkenwell, E.C., Rev. John E. Wakerley has conducted a week's Temperance Mission with very gratifying results. Different methods were employed to get the people of the neighbourhood to attend the meetings, and these methods were successful in securing the attendances of those for whom the mission was held. This was specially noticeable on the Monday and Friday, when midnight meetings were held. For an hour before the services an illuminated procession, with the brass band, led by Rev. John E. Waverley and Mr. Charles Barnett, paraded the street. No small stir was created by over one hundred men and women with music, lanterns, and bills announcing the meeting. The public-houses were visited by workers, who brought many of "the right sort" to the chapel. At every meeting pledges were taken, and some sought the Saviour. There have been some remarkable cases of conversion, and at one of the love feasts striking testimonies was given. One hundred and eighteen signed the pledge.

A six days' mission has been conducted by two Wickliffe preachers at the Masonic Hall, Aldershot, and resulted in an increase of zeal in the Protestant cause. B.

Rev. Cecil R. Blunden (Bildeston, Suffolk), writes of a remarkable awakening at the village of Battisford, Suffolk. Many have been won for Christ, and many more are under conviction of sin.

Mr. Henry Thorne has just concluded a ten days' mission at Union Church, Luton. Some years ago he had a successful mission at the same place, and the old converts gave him a good welcome. Good has been done, and fruit is expected for many days to come. Mr. Thorne has also conducted a seventeen days mission under the auspices of the Bath Y.M.C.A. The first week was for young men and the second for young people, and the meetings were held in the Association's large hall, concluding with a very large meeting in the Assembly Rooms.

An interesting "Evidential" Mission has just been held at Penrith, by Mr. W. T. Lee, lecturer of the Christian Evidence Society. The lectures were well attended. Mr. Lee's thorough knowledge of the subjects, and the spiritual tone, took away all harshness from his treatment of controversial questions.

The United Mission conducted by Rev. J. Lyall, in Kandy, Ceylon, closed on November 7, when the Methodist Church was filled in every part by an earnest, enthusiastic, and representative audience. An opportunity for praise and testimony was given, in which many took part. Altogether 170 names have been handed in of those who have decided for Christ.

A three weeks' mission by Mr. A. W. Smart, of the Evangelization Society, has just concluded at Queen Street, Paddock Wood. Despite the unpropitious weather, and the dark and muddy roads, the people attended surprisingly well, especially the young men of the district. God's word, spoken most earnestly and faithfully, laid hold upon many, and was the evident means of not a few deciding for Christ. A. Havergal Shaw.

At the Baptist Chapel, Prickwillow, Ely, Mr. W. Collard, the sailor evangelist, has concluded a sixteen days' Gospel mission. Considering the scattered character of the population, and the state of the fen roads, the gatherings were very encouraging, especially on Sunday and Wednesday evenings, when our brother gave lectures on his life story and his experiences in mission work. A deep impression has been made upon all. P.

At the Tabernacle, Whyteleafe, Surrey, Mr. Thomas Payne recently concluded a mission. We have had powerful meetings, and some real cases of blessing, and the Lord's people have received an uplift. We are thankful for the faithful ministry of this servant of God. In spite of his recent illness (followed upon his accident at Caterham, when he broke his leg in two places), he preached with much fervour and spiritual force. G. R. C.

At the Cross Mission, Kilmarnock, Mr. Jas. Cumming has concluded a fruitful mission. An esteemed correspondent writes:—"Sunday night's meeting was the largest ever held in the hall. The platform itself, usually reserved for the choir, was packed with people. The total number of decisions was seventy-two." Among those who took musical part were Miss J. Johnstone, of Darvel, and Miss M. H. Adams (Fisk Jubilee Singers).

Miss Huxtable's fourteen days' mission at the Railway Mission Hall, Bath, has been a refreshing time. We have indeed seen that "the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, neither is His ear heavy that it cannot hear." Souls have been won, backsliders have come back to the Saviour, and timid ones encouraged. At the Railway Mission there is a band of earnest Christians. To their prayers Miss Huxtable feels that much of the blessing is due. To God be all the glory! Irene S. S. Price.

Mr. Max Isaac Reich has been preaching nightly at Mr. William Vellacott's Iron Room, West Thurrock, Essex, where his words have been "in demonstration of the Spirit and in power." There has been much spiritual teaching. As a converted Jew, Mr. Reich seemed particularly happy in his demonstration that the Messiah pictured in the Old Testament Scriptures was the Son of the living God as Peter saw Him, who made a full atonement for man's sins at Calvary. A. D.

We have been favoured, in Wiltshire, with a visit of five weeks' duration from Rev. J. Sprunt. Marlboro', Overton, and Pewsey were visited, and at each place the work was owned of God. We feel sure that Mr. Sprunt's clear and forceful presentation of the plan of salvation, as also his sweet Gospel songs, cannot have been given in vain. The lantern lectures on "John Bunyan" and on Gawin Kirkham's picture, "The Broad and the Narrow Way," were most interesting. Mr. Sprunt's visit has been a great blessing. H. P.

Messrs. B. H. Angel and F. B. Marks have just concluded a three weeks' mission in Jersey. Night after night great power was felt in the meetings through the Word preached and sung, God's children testifying of great blessing they had received. Backsliders were restored, while seventeen persons openly confessed Christ as their Saviour. Four of these converts had banded themselves together before the mission, and were determined not to be saved; but the evangelists had the joy at the close in taking tea with fifteen of the converts, these four being included. P. L., Supt.

Mr. William Thomson, jun., has closed a three weeks' mission in the Vale of Leven, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. From the first it was evident that God was blessing the work. The meetings continued to increase, and no night passed without anxious ones coming forward to be dealt with. At the close some 500 cards were received with the names and addresses of those who professed to decide for Christ. At a subsequent meeting for converts, nearly 500 assembled. Some of us will never forget the scene, as one after another told in earnest words how the Lord had saved them. Christians have been greatly blessed, and the work in all departments has been revived. T. Collins.

Rev. Jesse Mayo, missioner of the National Free Church Council, has just concluded a successful fortnight's mission, conducted under the auspices of the Hertford, Ware and District Free Church Council. The first half of the Mission was conducted in Hertford, Mr. Mayo spending the second half in the adjoining town of Ware, much interest being manifested in the effort. The tactful way the meetings were handled issued in most desirable results—quite a number were led to decision and confession of Christ. The afternoon Bible-readings were an interesting and helpful feature of the effort, being much appreciated by those able to attend the same. The mission has undoubtedly issued in much spiritual blessing to the churches directly concerned. Rev. Martin Ashby.

The Hope Mission Hall, Merton High Street (superintendent, Mr. P. Headley), is a centre of Christian activity, and is, indeed, a beacon light in a district noted for its apathy and indifference to the eternal verities. The hall, which a few years ago was found ample enough to accommodate the worshippers who attended, is now filled every Sunday to its utmost capacity, many, indeed, being compelled to turn away for want of room. A few weeks ago "three ambassadors from Brighton" conducted the services. The missioners who were heralded by the above title were Messrs. Taylor, Pannell, and Finnegan, each of whom is an active leader in aggressive Christian work in Brighton. The week-end visit of these brethren had been looked forward to with pleasurable anticipation, and we were not disappointed, as much blessing resulted therefrom. It was found necessary to engage the Masonic Hall, Kingston Road, for the afternoon and evening services. It was crowded on both occasions. An after-meeting resulted in many young men and women taking a decided stand on the Lord's side. T. A. W. M.

The Coming of the King

A Story of the Time of Charles II

By Joseph Hocking, Author of "A Flame of Fire," etc.

CHAPTER I.

THE history which I propose writing will, I believe, be of value for various reasons. It will clear my name from various aspersions, and it will enable me to explain what to many seem events of an extraordinary nature. For I have done nothing which makes me fear the light, neither have I any desire to offer excuses for the action which shall be here set down.

Moreover, I think it is well that many of the happenings of the time of which I write should be recorded, for surely the days of my youth were strange days, full of intrigue, full of mystery; and more, they were days in which one of the greatest battles ever known in our land was fought.

I had a peculiar training, even for youths of that period. For, from the time of Archbishop Laud to the coming of King Charles II., nearly every family of note took sides in the great struggle through which the nation passed. Either a man was a Royalist or a Parliamentarian, a believer in the supreme and unquestionable rights of the king, or a supporter of the new order of things. There seemed no half-way house wherein a man might rest. Thus the nation was divided into two great camps, and if a man was not in one of these camps, he was in the other. But I was trained to hold myself aloof from both, and to distrust them equally.

The reason for this can be quickly told. During the great struggle between Cromwell and the king my father fought against the Ironside General. Indeed, he gave of his substance freely. He impoverished himself to replenish the king's coffers, and he armed his family retainers in order to keep him on the throne. In the early days of the war, moreover, he was an enthusiastic supporter of the king, and trusted in his royal word implicitly. But after the Battle of Nazeby, when the King's papers were taken, and it was made known that Charles had deceived on every hand, my father lost faith in him, and declared he would never trust a king's word again. Not that he threw in his lot with Cromwell, thus following the example of many others. Rather, he cut himself adrift from public affairs, and sought to live in seclusion.

But here a difficulty faced him. His resources were much diminished by what he had devoted to the king's cause, and, added to this, so much of his estates were taken away from him in the troublous days which followed, that while he still kept the old home near Epping Forest, he was scarce able to maintain it. He was a country gentleman, bearing an old name, who could barely afford to keep the horse he rode, or the servants who waited at his tables. This (for my father was a very proud man) embittered him much, and caused him to lose faith in friend and foe alike.

"I trust neither party, my son," he would often say to me. "I gave my blood and my fortune to the king, and he deceived me by lying promises and false statements. As for this Puritan crew, they have robbed me of my possessions, until I, who at the time of the Short Parliament was a rich man, have not the means of giving my only son either a good horse to ride or money to put in his purse."

"I will gain both, father," I said, for in those days I was ardent and hopeful, believing that everything was possible to a brave heart and a strong arm.

"But how?" cried my father. "The king's cause is dead, even if it would have benefited thee by fighting for it. As for these canting Puritans, no man can gain aught from them unless he will quote Scripture, and cry, 'Down with the Prayer-book.' In truth, there is no cause which an honourable man can espouse, and thus carve his way to fortune."

"The opportunity will come some day," I replied confidently.

My father shook his head.

"WE PLAY FOR HIGH STAKES, MASTER RASHCLIFFE—NOTHING LESS THAN THE THRONE OF ENGLAND."

"It cannot be," he said.

"I know," he went on, "that many hope for the death of Cromwell. Well, that may happen any day; and then, what shall we see? In all probability, Oliver will make provision whereby his son takes his place. But even if he does not, and Charles were to come back, would such as I be benefited? Would the new king see to it that my estates were restored to me? The new King Charles would be the son of the old King Charles. The new king would be a Stuart, and never again can I trust a Stuart!"

"Is there no hope, then?" I asked desperately, for the constant repetition of such speeches had made me believe that no man was to be trusted.

"There is no hope, except you can get men in your power," replied my father.

"In my power?" I repeated, for I scarce knew what he meant.

"Ay, in your power, Roland. There is a secret in most men's lives. If you can find that secret, you are a force to be reckoned with. You then have the means whereby you can fight your way into position. Look here. Charles Stuart is now in France. Supposing Oliver Cromwell were to die, and the people, tired of Puritan rule, were to welcome him back to the kingdom. Do you think he would remember that I, Philip Rashcliffe, am impoverished by fighting for his father? If I went to him and said, 'Sire, I have scarce a horse to ride on, scarce a crown to put in my purse, I have lost all through fighting for your father's throne,' do you think he would cause the Rashcliffe lands to be restored? Nay; he would say aloud: 'Master Rashcliffe, we will look into this matter, and you may trust us to see that justice shall be done.' But to himself he would say: 'What is there to be gained by doing aught for this man? He is plain and blunt, and I shall gain naught by troubling about him. Besides, there will be a hundred others who come with the same tale. Let me to my wine.' Ay, but if Charles discovered that I knew something which affected him deeply, then would he, for self-preservation, desire to do me justice."

"But that would be blackmailing," I cried.

"Nay, it would not. It would be simply using the means at my disposal for getting back my own."

"Know you of aught, that you say this?" I asked.

At which my father shook his head.

It will be seen from this that I was taught to trust no man or party. Moreover, as the years went by, my father influenced me by his own desponding views, so that I, unlike most youths, felt no ardour for any cause, and believed but little in any man. As to women, I knew nothing of them, for beside our kitchen wenches and servant maid, scarcely a woman ever entered Rashcliffe Manor.

Presently Oliver Cromwell died, and I thought my father seemed to be possessed of new hope; but when Richard, his son, was chosen Lord Protector in his place, he simply shrugged his shoulders like a Frenchman, and said that the country was not yet tired of Psalm-singing. During the months that followed he went often to London, in order, as he said, to find out what Monk and Lambert were doing; and when, at length, Richard Cromwell ceased to be Lord Protector, he grimly remarked that we "should soon see gay doings."

A little later the whole country was in a state of excitement, Charles was recalled to England; the Royalists were jubilant, while the Puritans looked forward with dread to the dark days which they felt sure were near at hand.

"We will go to meet the king," cried my father.

"What!" I cried, in astonishment; for my father had declared that he would never again have aught to do with a Stuart.

"Ay, we will go and meet him, Roland. You and I will ride together. There are still two good horses left in the stables, and we will dress ourselves in a way befitting gentlemen, and we will go to Dover, and shout 'God Save the King!' with the rest of the crowd."

"But why?" I asked; for I felt no love for the man whom the people were already calling "His Gracious Majesty King Charles II., the Lord's Anointed One."

"Ay, and that you shall know before the sun goes down," he replied.

I looked at him in astonishment, for he had cast off the old look of hopelessness and indifference, so common to him, and seemed to believe that brighter days were coming.

About Books.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

In addition to its popularity with Christian Endeavourers, The Golden Rule has many claims on the attention of young people. There is a full complement of stories, poetry, and pictures, with articles that will enlist the sympathy of readers in good causes, and others to awaken longings after a full Christian life. (2s. Sunday School Union.)

Three annuals that will be found useful in the spread of Evangelical truth are The British Messenger (1s. 6d.), The Gospel Trumpet (1s.), Good News (4d.). Gospel readings, stories, and poems, have all the same end in view—the making known of Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord, and this is done in an attractive and effective manner. (Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling; Partridge.)

Books and their writers are well kept before the readers of The Young Man (5s. Horace Marshall & Son), while by portraits, character sketches, and articles, leaders in different spheres become as friends. There is less fiction than in recent volumes and more contributions that will probably have a permanent value. Papers on politics, by Justin McCarthy; on European travel, by W. Victor Cook; on more religious topics, by Rev. E. Griffith Jones, and many more, will act as genuine contributions to the true furnishing of the mind. Amid a great deal that may appear to touch only the social and intellectual, papers are introduced emphasizing spiritual things in a way calculated to appeal strongly to the special constituency addressed.

Hymns and Choruses of the Church Army, with music (2s. Publishing Office, 14, Edgware Road, W.), contains 440 pieces, with sixty-five choruses, a short form of service, and a congregational communion service in F.

The first two volumes of "The Crown Imperial Series"—Danesbury House, by Mrs. Henry Wood, and The People's Christ, by C. H. Spurgeon—are good value for the money both in quality and quantity. (6d. each net. Hodder & Stoughton.)

The "Pettman" Popular Stories have always served a useful purpose, and have undoubtedly been the means of awakening in many hearts a longing for holiness of life. No. 146, A Modern Grievance, is a stirring Protestant story for the times. (1d. Bateman, 27, Paternoster Square.)

The story of the progress of the Medical Missionary Association for the past twenty-five years is told in brief but deeply interesting fashion in A Silver Birthday, by Annie R. Butler. Now that the ministry of healing is so fully recognised in missionary work, it is instructive to trace the steps by which the church of God has been led in this matter. Numerous photographs will make the booklet doubly welcome in missionary circles, (2d. Morgan & Scott.)

It is a happy thought to gather out of the past volumes of the "Girl's Own" and "Boy's Own" selections of the excellent original recitations which have appeared there from time to time, with others well chosen from the best sources. The respective editors have compiled the Girl's Own Reciter and the Boy's Own Reciter (2s. 6d. each. Religious Tract Society), which will be popular in many homes. That there is a field for something which is more than a reproduction of extracts from more or less well-known authors is well known to all who have anything to do with children's gatherings. These volumes are fresh, bright, and attractive in every respect.

In a book, charming alike as regards subject matter, typography, excellent illustrations, and binding, Miss Sophia G. Wintz tells the inspiring story of Miss Agnes Weston's work, under the title, Our Blue Jackets. (2s. 6d. net. Hodder & Stoughton.) The sunshine of Divine Grace filled her soul when she was sixteen, under the ministry of Canon Fleming (then at Bath), combined with the influence of Christian friendship and the continuous prayers of her parents. From small beginnings she has, in the good providence of God, been led into a position of marvellous influence for the extension of the Kingdom of God among men. The secret of her singularly useful life is found in Miss Weston's continuous remembrance that to the Lord alone she owes all that she has been enabled to do among seamen and marines.

To the young people who read The Kinsfolk and Friends of Jesus, by Rev. R. C. Gillie (6s. A. & C. Black), the men and women of the New Testament will become almost like personal friends, and will be once for all lifted out of hazy remoteness. The facts of each life are gathered together, and the story admirably told in such simple and clear, yet forcible, style as will constitute the book its own best recommendation in Christian families. The Lord Himself is ever kept in evidence as the central figure, and the manifest purpose of every chapter is to point Him out as the Saviour who can meet every need. The well-executed illustrations are reproductions from well-known paintings, with, of course, a prominence given to the nimbus to which some friends may take exception.

The Sunday School Union has anticipated the needs of superintendents and choirmasters who are looking for new music, by publishing a series of sacred selections. For the juveniles we have Song Wings and Sunbeams of Song, which, both in words and music, are bright and inspiring. They comprise antiphons, marches, two-part pieces, and unison songs of hope and gladness, trust, and courage, such as boys and girls always delight to sing. (Part I., containing twelve, 6d.; or in leaflet form, 3s. per 100, assorted, both notations). For senior choirs and church festival use, the "Minster" Verse-Anthems and "Pilgrim" Anthems will be found of great service. They are the work of leading composers, such as Sir John Stainer, Gounod, Arthur J. Jamouneau, &c., and are not beyond the capacity of the average choir. (3d. each).

By making an exhaustive "historical inquiry into their political influence," Mr. Walter Walsh, F.R. Hist. S., has brought together in his new book, The Jesuits in Great Britain (7s. 6d. net. Routledge), a mass of information about the Society of Jesus which will be of the highest service to preachers, teachers, and other workers engaged in the conflict with Romanism. Those who believe that, much evil as the Jesuits have wrought on the Continent, their influence has been comparatively harmless in this country, will have their eyes opened once for all if they will read this book. One of the greatest troubles in this controversy is the necessity of continually reminding Protestants that they must not credit their opponents with always acting even honourably, and Mr. Walsh has issued one more warning of the need to be perpetually alert to guard against the most insidious attacks on our liberties. The volume has a distinct and high value alike as a contribution to history and as a controversial manual.

The Sunday School Union is publishing quite an array of requisites for teachers. Chief among them is Notes on the Scripture Lessons, 1904 (2s. 6d. net). This volume comprises expositions of the Morning and International Lessons, with an abundance of helpful matter, throwing much light on the subjects dealt with. Maps and illustrations are numerous. The Sunday School Teachers' Pocket Book and Diary (2s.) will be welcomed by workers among the young. The information is exhaustive and up-to-date. The International Lesson Pocket Notes (1s. net) is designed for the busy teacher, who will here find within the compass of a book small enough to be carried about during the week all the material from which he will be able to work up his lesson. In the Class Register (1d.), the teacher is provided with a commendable method of keeping a record of events and engagemeuts in connection with his work, and information concerning his scholars. Motto Cards (½d., 1d., 2d.) and the Sunday School Almanack (1d.) are among other requisites which teachers will be glad to possess. The New Century Teacher (1d.) is a monthly which takes account of the teacher's equipment, and furnishes, besides lesson helps, articles of a highly instructive nature. It supersedes what has been known as "The Sunday School Teacher."

Mr. D. C. Joseph has compiled an attractive sheet almanack for 1904, for the use of Jewish readers. Some of the daily readings are in English, others are in Hebrew. (1d. The Author, 138, Clifden Road, Clapton, N.E.)

As a Scripture exercise for families and Sunday-schools, the BIBLE CLOCK has served a useful purpose. Texts committed to memory in this way will profitably occupy the mind in future years. (6d. packet. Baldwin, Tunbridge Wells.)

Workers among French immigrants, and many others, will welcome a block calendar — CALENDRIER A EFFEUILLER. 1904 (post free, fcs. 1.75, J. H. Jeheber, Geneva)—in which a daily Bible reading is prescribed, a text printed in bold type, with a short meditation from an Evangelical author, all in French. We heartily commend the publication.

THE CHURCHMAN'S BIBLE SEARCHING CALENDARS. The texts in the first series are to be found in the first lessons, Epistle, and Gospel for each Sunday. The second series gives texts on special subjects to be found in the daily second lessons and Psalms. The profits on the sale of these calendars are devoted to foreign missions. (1½d., post free. Miss Monck-Mason, Cheriton Road, Folkestone

Those who knew Miss M. J. Leader, and many more, will welcome a series of six "In Memoriam" booklets—(1) A CHRISTMAS THOUGHT, or Home-Keeping Hearts, (2) ON THE BATTLE-FIELD, (3) A NEW YEAR'S MESSAGE, (4) ARE YOU "FULLY" AND "SWEETLY" TRUSTING IN GOD'S WORD. (5) ARISE! SHINE! A New Year's Message, (6) "I AM QUITE SURE I CAN TRUST YOU." The tenderness and pathos of the Gospel message is brought out in a beautiful way, and the fact that the writer has since been called home adds much to the force of charming messages (½d. each, 7d. dozen. A. E. L., 60, St. Augustine's Avenue, S. Croydon.)

Church Notes.

Rev. Hamilton Watts, M.A., after three years' happy service at Edith Road, Stratford (Baptist), is resigning the pastorate there, having accepted a call from the church at Jesmond, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Mr. Watts has thrown himself heart and soul into evangelistic work and the instruction of his flock in Divine things. He hopes to conclude his labours at Stratford in the middle of February.

The annual meeting of the Young People's Mission, Walthamstow, has been held, Mr. William McCall presiding. Many children attended the services during the past year, and much solid work is being done by storing the young memories with portions of God's Word learned by heart, and then repeated at the week-night services. Helpful, encouraging, and suggestive addresses were given by the chairman and other speakers.

A Singhalese Christian who recently died, had only two earthly possessions to dispose of—a bull and a cocoa-nut tree. His last request was that the bull should be sold and the proceeds divided between Rev. J. G. Garrett's work, and that of Miss Karney, of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society. The cocoa-nut tree was to be left, so that any hungry persons might help themselves freely; if any fruit remained it was to be sold for the Church Fund.

Pastor William T. Float is relinquishing the oversight of Union Chapel, Gosport, at the beginning of February next. While retaining his connection with the church as honorary pastor, he will be glad to help forward the work of God in any locality during the next few months, by Sunday services, Bible-readings &c., as far as time and strength permit. His address is, 2, Queen's Road, Gosport. Rev. Arthur Price, of Liverpool, has accepted an invitation to take up the work at Union Chapel in February.

Though the number of missionaries employed by the London City Mission (460) is the same as in 1885, the expenditure on account of the rise in house rent, &c., has so considerably increased that of late years the reserve funds have had to be drawn upon, with the result that the Society is now indebted to its bankers to the extent of £4,100. Unless help be forthcoming, thirteen of the poorer districts will be deprived of their missionary—and this in such neighbourhoods as the New Cut, Lisson Grove, and Drury Lane, is almost too serious to entertain.

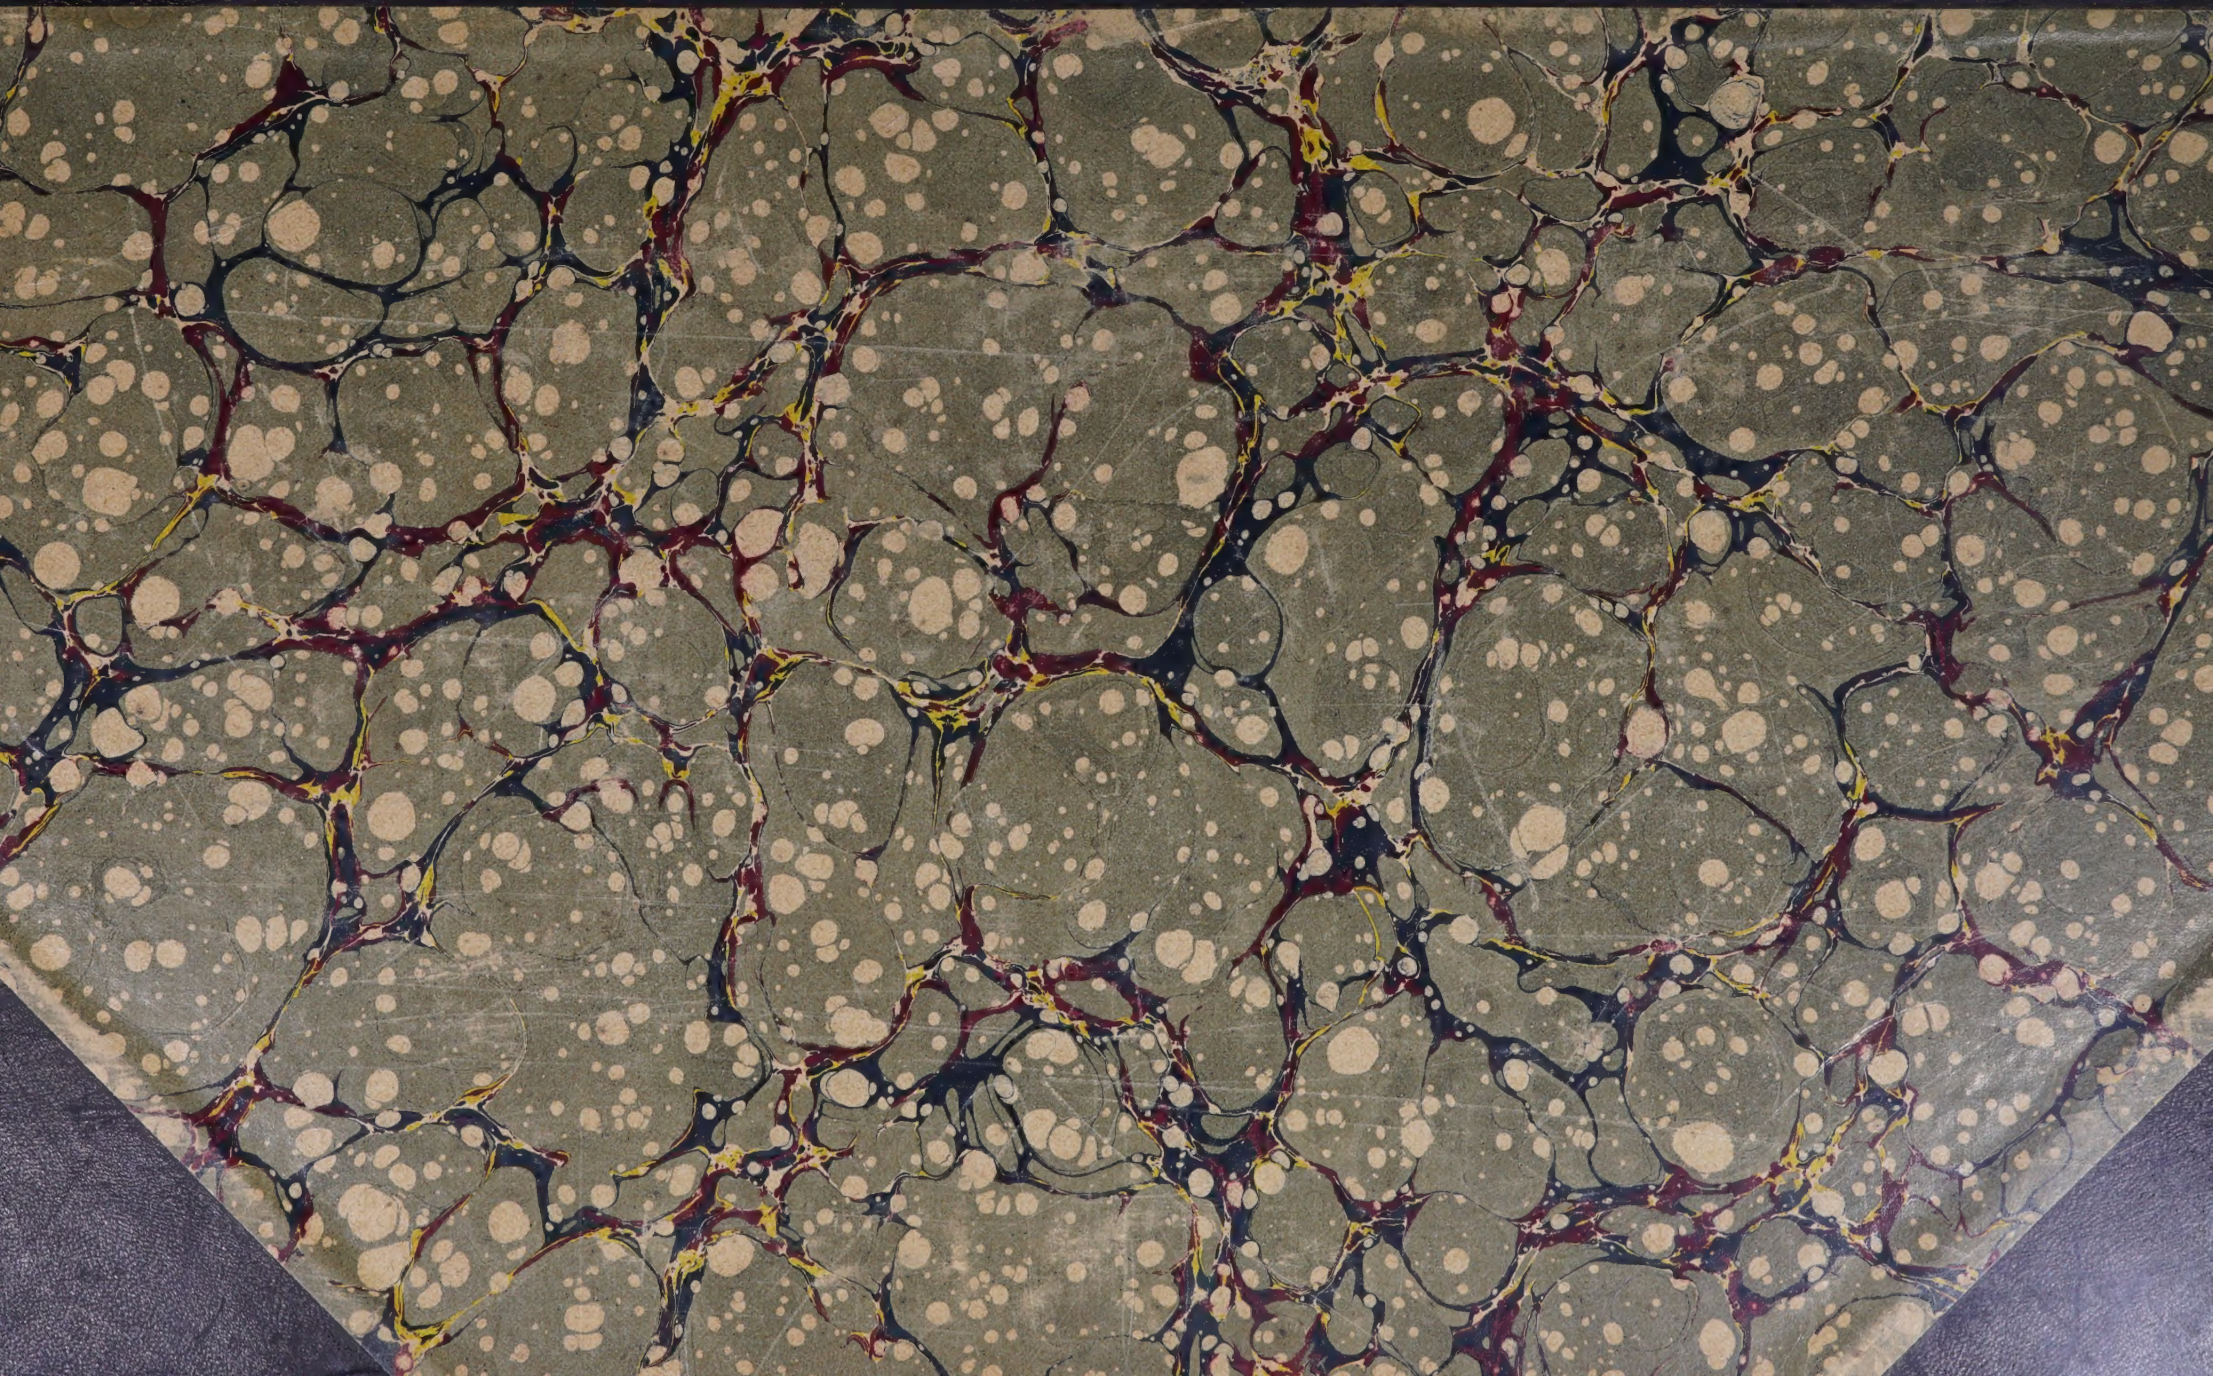
The Evangelical Lay Preachers' Association (Islington District) has now completed seven years' useful work, during which period over 2,000 addresses have been delivered by its members, invariably without fee. In addition to Islington the Committee are prepared to supply efficient speakers in East and South London, and would welcome applications for membership from lay preachers resident in the northern suburbs. The association is thoroughly evangelical, and has the support of local ministers. Address, Hon. Sec., 99, Balfour Road, Highbury N.

The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (Earl Dudley) recently paid a Vice-Regal visit to the shipping centre of the North Wall, Dublin. The occasion was the re-opening, on behalf of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, an enlarged Sailors' Rest. In the speeches reference was made to the kind help of the London and North Western Railway Company whose sailors, with other seamen, frequent the Rest in large numbers. His Lordship said this was but one of a large number of such buildings opened by the Society in the chief ports of the world, and deserved the generous support of all interested in the best welfare of all classes of seamen.

The Preaching Station Society, in connection with New College, has just issued its report. The Society undertakes the charge of small churches or mission rooms in places where the congregations are unequal to the responsibility of supporting a settled minister. While thus serving the churches the students are afforded opportunities for pastoral work. Several of the churches under the Society's charge have recently become strong enough to support a resident minister, and the Society is therefore prepared to help other churches. Two new stations have been undertaken during the last year, and a new mission has been started in Paddington.

Two young ministers sailed on December 17, by the Runic from Liverpool for service in connection with the Colonial Missionary Society—Rev. John Smith for West Australia and Rev. Tom Downham for Rhodesia. Mr. Smith was ordained on the previous Tuesday at Kilmarnock. Revs. Profs. Simpson and McNair of the Edinburgh Theological Hall and others officiating. Mr. Downham took part with Rev. D. B. Hooke in a missionary meeting on the 16th at Salem Chapel, Bradford, when he was commended in prayer to God by Rev. E. R. Barrett, who presided. His closing days were spent in Belfast, where his addresses were greatly owned by God.

Rev. L. B. Sladen has just been instituted to the living of Selly Oak, Birmingham. The Bishop of Worcester, in the course of an address, referred to the work which Messrs. Cadbury were doing in the district in which the new vicar would have to labour. He said he knew in the whole of England nothing which stirred him more deeply than the magnificent example set by a firm of great employers in that district—an example almost without parallel, and having nothing to excel it. For whole-hearted and generous recognition of what was meant by the relations between employer and employed there was nothing better in the country than was to be found at Bournville, in the institutes which studded the districts, and in the early morning schools.

A gathering consisting of leading representatives of the Methodist New Connexion, the Bible Christians, the United Methodist Free Churches, and the Wesleyan Reform Union has met in London, in consultation with a dozen representatives appointed by the last Wesleyan Conference, to make mutual inquiries concerning the constitutional, financial, and other conditions of the various Methodist Churches desiring union. The Primitive Methodists did not see their way clear on this occasion to join in this inquiry. Dr Rigg was chief spokesman on behalf of the Wesleyan Methodists. It was evident from his opening statement that the constitutional difficulties were such as to render impossible at present any organic union.


Industrial Evangelistic Mission of Northern India.—A letter just received from Mr. Lavalette (who is in charge of the work at Pilibhit, India, during the absence of Rev. J. C. Lawson, superintendent) shows the need there to be very great. The orphans had no meat or rice for two whole months, and were much in need of food. This is caused by lack of funds, and an earnest appeal is made to the Lord's people to remember the starving in India as well as at home at this Christmas season. The Secretary is Mr. Charles W. Cotton, 6, Colonial Avenue, Minories, E.
